Now a vegetable garden needing to be weeded is rare as are cows and chickens that need to be fed and watered. Peas and cherries come in cans rather than being hand shelled and pitted. The automatic washer not only washes the clothes but dries them as well, and the vacuum cleaner makes quick work of the dust. Whole meals come frozen, ready to pop into the oven to be heated just before dinner is served. And can you imagine any shared confidences while the electric mixer beats up a box cake?

THE CHILD FINDS himself with a big commodity on his hands which he does not know how to use. He has time, which must be occupied so it does not drag and become bore-some. When the child wants companionship, or to ask a question, or just wants to talk, his parents who must rush off to work too often say, "Some other time," "Run along now," or "Hurry up, what is it you want to say?"

A child thinks slowly. His experience with words is new. His vocabulary is small. He finds it difficult to express the thoughts of his mind, the feelings of his heart, and the longings of his soul. While the child has an excess of time, his parents are confronted with exactly the opposite problem, that of having very little time. One of the greatest needs of the modern child, who has so much time of his own, is the time of someone who is mature. Time Is Most Essential.

Against the whirr of the mixer, the hum of the vacuum, the hullabaloo of the TV or radio, the child is no match. He succumbs to outside elements and bottles up within him that which should burst forth. No one has time to listen to him unburden himself, except perhaps other children who are not equipped to share his problem. As a result the child has mental tensions, pent-up feelings, smothered ideas, unreleased emotions, misunderstood taboos, and stifled imaginations. All of these are bottled up, corked tightly, and the slightest added tension may cause the inevitable explosion. Then people wonder what happened when the child attempts to find release for the tempest within him.

It is easy for us of two or more generations ago to say, "When I was young, he'd have been taken on a trip to the woodshed." However, just as we are a product of our generation, so also is the modern child a product of his. None of us would really want to go back to the old way of rearing children, when—right or wrong—father's word was law enforced by the hickory stick or razor strap, any more than we would want to go back to the cistern pump in the kitchen and outdoor plumbing.

What can we older women do about the situation? We can say, "We must do something," and be agreed. However, except for preachers and editors who mean "I" when they say "We," the ordinary person who says "we" generally means "we" as the other person. So we will not say, "We must do something." I point this straight at the "I" that is in each of you.

YOU HAVE YOUR OWN grandchildren. You love them. You want for them all the things you did not have and could not even give your own children. And you, as grandmothers, tend to create a problem for your own grandchildren by your very concern over these things. You tend to spoil them properly. Yes, you love your grandchildren, and you want to "feed" them, but you cannot stop with them. Jesus did not say to Peter, "Feed your lambs." He said, "Feed my lambs," which includes all children.

All of us are surrounded by children—our own, our grandchildren, the neighbors' youngster. Many of them need desperately to be fed the food of life of which Jesus was concerned.

Perhaps we ought to consider first that which you, the older woman, cannot do concerning children.

First: You cannot give the children lectures on proper behavior, responsibility, honesty, and the like. No one likes to be lectured, and lecturing the youngsters will only earn for you the title of "the crabby old woman up the street."

Second: You cannot make decisions for them and their families. You cannot decide whether or not the mother works, what time the child should leave for school, or make other decisions concerning family life.

Third: You cannot tell the parents how to rear their children. You cannot even tell your own offspring how to rear your grandchildren. The best you can do is to give advice when it is asked for, and even then it is absorbed in very small doses. And to try to tell a neighbor how to rear her child is but to invite the moniker of "old busy body."

Fourth: You cannot ignore children as though they did not exist. They are with you and they will make their presence known. Too often people put a fence around the yard to keep children out when they ought to put a plate of cookies on the porch and invite them in.

Sometimes the older woman has not many pressing duties. She has time to grow flowers, time to make afghans, time to piece quilts, time to crochet tablecloths, time to visit, and time to just reminisce. She is blessed with experiences, with stories of "way back when," and "long, long ago." She has an understanding of God and of the universe. She is able to look back over her life, see God at work, and know that many times even misfortunes were blessings in disguise.

I HAVE SEEN OLDER people spend hours in gardens, producing iris, roses, and peonies. They find pleasure in watching a tight little bud unfold to the beauty of a rose which blooms for a few days and then fades. Sometimes I wonder at all the work they put in on a few flowers.

Now I have no quarrel with anyone who follows these hobbies, for didn't Jesus say, "Consider the lilies of the field?" But he also said, "Lovest thou me more than these?"

I present to you older women the challenge of the thrill to watch the life of a child—a lamb of the Master—unfold and bloom. Just as we know the mess and confusion of a garden for which God alone has cared, so is the life of a child with none but God to care for him. And God loves them, every one.

Cultivating a child to the blooming stage is a long, long process. But we don't expect a rose to bloom overnight. We expect to fertilize, water, and cultivate it, even to baby it a little. We loosen the earth around its roots periodically and prune it carefully. All this takes time and loving care. Of course, results are seen in a season, whereas the cultivating of a child takes a generation. But I am wondering how God sees time. As we see the seasons in our lifetime and watch the growth and ultimate blooming of a rose, I cannot help thinking that in such a way God looks upon the lifetime of a child as just a season in eternity.

Before us lies all the things we value in our lives. And Jesus says to us, "Lovest thou me more than these?" The request, "Feed my lambs," brings the protest quickly, "But children make me nervous!" Of course they do. Their overabundance of energy shows you up. They make you nervous because—if you will really admit the truth—you are selfish and think first of yourself and your own needs and wants rather than of the needs and wants of the child. Children make you nervous because you don't love them. When you really love people they don't get on your nerves. You understand, you sympathize, and you share when you really love.

OFTEN I HAVE HEARD people testify that they want to do "all I can" for the Master and his work. Do they really mean it? Do they truly set out to find out what they can do for the work? The work of the Master is going to depend, a generation from now, upon those who are children now, and if these lambs aren't fed the time will come when there will be no sheep!

Do you love the work enough to give some time-starved boy or girl some of that which you have in abundance—time—which is not required for the pressing things of life?

Do you love the work enough to give fifteen minutes a day, or an hour a week to cultivate, to fertilize, to prune the life of a child so it may bloom into the richest, most colorful, most beautiful maturity?

Consecration Service for South Crysler Church

IN the fall of 1944, several members living southwest of the boundaries of Independence, Missouri, city limits, petitioned President Frederick M. Smith to start a new congregation in that fast-growing community. Results of a survey showed 135 members residing in the area.

In January, 1945, forty-four adult members met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. C. White for a discussion of the survey results. It was agreed to organize a new (then the thirteenth) congregation in Zion. The grounds and building committee members were Roy A. Thrutchley, chairman; O. C. White, J. Harry Paxton, L. Z. Pritchard, Harry W. Blake, and Russell E. Resch.

On March 4 an organizational meeting was held at the Roy Thrutchley home with twenty-four members present. Elder Glaude A. Smith, representing the Stake Presidency and Bishopric, presented the names of Roy A. Thrutchley for pastor, O. C. White for bishop's agent, and Lela B. Eskridge for women's leader. The vote was unanimous to install these members to head the new South Crysler congregation.

Brother Thrutchley stated that three lots had been purchased for the church site at Thirty-first and Crysler, at a cost of $1,980.00, by the bishopric. Brother White added that $800.00 had already been subscribed toward repaying the bishop. Shortly thereafter three members of the building committee and the women's department each contributed one fourth of the amount needed to buy the fourth lot adjoining on the south.

A large open-air shelter was erected at the rear of the grounds for preaching services and other gatherings. Many projects to raise money were carried on by the women's department. A number of family contributions and anonymous donations were also received.

When cold weather came in the fall of 1945, services were moved indoors to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Thompson, who offered their recreation room for use.

On Sunday, August 11, 1946, President Israel A. Smith led the group in ground-breaking ceremonies at the building site. Some materials were already on the grounds for the foundation of the building. Construction continued through the fall, part of the work being volunteer labor.

On Sunday, June 8, 1947, in the basement of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thrutchley, adjoining the church property on the south, regular church services were started, beginning with the first church school, at which fifty-nine persons were present.

In October, 1947, the lower level auditorium—including a large kitchen, a regulation size gymnasium, and an upper floor with eleven church school classrooms, including an assembly—was completed. Soon after this the congregation moved into the building. Equipment for the kitchen, enough to serve three hundred guests at one time, was donated anonymously. This included cooking utensils, dishes, silverware, linens, tables, chairs, and other necessary fixtures.

Meanwhile, there was an increase in baptisms and attendance, and more members complied with the financial law and increased payments to the General Church.

In January, 1947, a loan of $26,800 was received from the General Church, which provided for the first stages of construction. In December of 1953, this debt was completely paid, and the congregation was free to turn its attention to the completion of the sanctuary.

More than $71,000 was raised for local needs from January, 1954, to December, 1957. Of this amount, $44,852 was raised for the building fund alone. At this same time, $74,000 was contributed to the General Church. During 1957 more than $45,000 was raised for both local and general needs. This achievement came not only from direct contribution, but also from the efforts of the Zion's League and women's department.

In the spring of 1955, more than two hundred seats were obtained from a Topeka, Kansas, theater. These were installed in the basement section, where worship services were held over the construction years.

Today the congregation has a new sanctuary, an excellent kitchen and gym, a new font, a pastor's study, a fine pipe organ, adequate class space, and a beautiful edifice representing an investment of more than $182,000.

Plans for more classrooms and additional parking space are already being made. The Saints hope that the O. C. White Memorial fund will continue to increase until a carillon can be placed in the tower.

Pastors have included Roy A. Thrutchley, 1945-1949; Samuel G. Balsler, 1949-50; Arnold E. Ellsworth (deceased), 1950-51; Orville L. Hiles, 1951-54; and H. Grant Dobson, pastor since 1954.

Assistant pastor at present is Reginald Smith. Counselors are Floyd W. Hirst, Roy Thrutchley, and Gilbert D. Gordon.

Other current officers are Kyle K. Conway, church school director; Leo Taylor, junior church pastor; Charles Church III, music director; B. C. McFadden, institutional representative; Stanley Withee, youth leader; Elsie Townsend, Zion's League supervisor; Edward R. Williams, director of home ministry and recorder; Ernest Rauh, missionary co-ordinator; Beulah Pimblott, girls' leader; Merrill G. Phillips, Boy Scouts; James W.

Fairbanks, Cub Scouts; Roy Thrutchley, custodian; Maxine Pritchard, vacation church school principal; Phyllis Carlson, women's leader; John and Wandeen Willis, young adult leaders; Majel Smith, secretary; Virginia Phillips, publicity agent and historian; John and Ann Abreo, adult leaders; Marion Pike, Daughters of Zion leader; James Chadwick, book steward; Charles Horne, assistant; Cliff Smith, supervisor in maintenance of grounds and building.

Building committee members were Charles V. Graham, Harold Cackler, Grant Dobson, Alvin Heaviland, Lloyd Soper, Ruth Blake, Cliff Smith, Floyd Hirst, James Van Biber, Kenneth Pearson, Reginald Smith, and Roy Thrutchley.

The Half Has Never Yet Been Told

Did you know that:

The Boy Scout program was launched fifty years ago by Sir Baden-Powell.

Forty-eight years ago the Scouting movement in the U.S.A. was formally incorporated by an act of Congress—February 8, 1910.

Forty years ago W. O. Hands, of the Stone Church, became the first Scoutmaster west of the Mississippi River.

Forty years ago the first brochure on Scouting in our church was prepared and printed.

Thirty-eight years ago Scouting was approved by action of General Conference as the official program for boys—April, 1920.

One of our church boys, Dudley Smith, established many years ago a record for starting fire by friction—that record still stands.

At the present time there are 591 Scouts, 617 Cubs, 200 Scouters, and 110 den mothers under church leadership in Center Stake alone.

Our church was among the first to put into operation the God and Country program and have such approved by the national organization.

These and similar facts are of great significance and interest. But what happened during those years is even more significant. Much of that history has never been told, and when it is, it will undoubtedly reveal stories of devotion to the church, to Scouting, and above all, to the boys of the church. Stories of leadership, stories of sacrificial devotion, stories of heroism, stories of honors achieved and awards granted, of achievements that remain to this day unrecognized and unheralded.

Information Needed

Now we propose to tell the story. In this we shall need the help of Herald readers.

We shall need the names and addresses of church men, including appointees, local administrative officers, pastors, and departmental leaders who have made a significant contribution to the Scouting program of the church. This list will undoubtedly include church men who have been Scout leaders and officials, who out of their devotion to boys and their sense of responsibility to their communities, have given years of sacrificial service in promoting Scouting. Such a list would also include church men who, as a part of their responsibility to the church and to the boys of the church, have come to recognize the work of Scouting as a legitimate and most important aspect of their ministry.

Such a list would include the names and addresses of church boys with a story of their achievements, of honors and awards earned, merit badges. Also those who have become Eagle Scouts, and those who have achieved the God and Country Award.

We shall therefore welcome any information which our readers feel will help us in getting an accurate and interesting history of Scouting in the church.

Nominations in Order

It would be helpful if you would nominate Scouters and Scouts whom you know to have made a significant record in Scouting, so that we may prepare and publish a roll of honor of Scouts and Scouters in our church. With your nominations we should be provided an account of the activities of the individual thus nominated, which in your opinion justify his name being placed upon the honor roll.

Finally, we would like to receive copies of pamphlets, brochures, newspaper and magazine clippings, pictures, programs, and the records of successful projects carried forward under the inspiration and leadership of the Scouting program in our church.

Please mail all such information to Youth Division, Department of Religious Education, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Memoirs of Clara B. Stebbins

ONCE I HAD A LESSON that served to remind me that it is better not to boast. Sometimes, if Brother Stebbins urged me to be on time for an appointment, I would say, "Well, I never have been late at Sunday School, and I never missed a train."

Then one morning in Burlington we were to take the seven-thirty train from the union station. We walked over from my sister's home to my cousin's where we could get a streetcar that would take us to the station. Cars left that corner at fifteen-minute intervals. We were in good time, but as we waited I found that I had left my handbag at my sister's. My husband went back for it. We took a later car that might just get us down in time for our train. When we left the car we walked hurriedly through the station and out to the yard just in time to see our train pulling out. It was not important that time, for we could take a later train, but I could never again say, "I never missed a train."

I received my patriarchal blessing in 1908 during the time I was writing for the Exponent and the Herald Home Column. A certain amount of copy was due at a stated time each month. At times when I was writing, my mind would go blank. I couldn't remember what I had thought or what was to follow. I would lay down my work, go to my room, and on my knees pray for help. Each time my mind would clear, and I would finish my work before the deadline. As these experiences were repeated I thought they might result in a breakdown. I mentioned it to no one, but I thought the Lord knew if I ever needed a blessing it was then.

I fasted and prayed and I asked Brother Joseph Lambert to give me my blessing. He came to our home, knowing nothing of my condition. From the first I felt that he spoke by the Spirit of the Lord. After the opening paragraphs he said: "I bless thee that thou mayest continue thy work. When thou hast been weak in body and weak in mind, He has quickly answered thy petitions because of thy desires to do good. . . . He will sustain thee until thy work is accomplished."

This has helped me to realize more and more as the years have come and gone how our every thought and desire is known and recognized of the Lord. His Spirit is always present with us.

I kept on without more trouble with that writing until the Exponent was discontinued, and other changes made my work unnecessary.

My blessing also contained this promise: "In the darkest time that will come He will not forsake thee, but . . . will lead thee lovingly, wisely and safely."

IN 1918 I had the flu. This was followed with slight paralysis of my left side, and my heart was affected. I could move slowly about the house, but I could not leave home. As this condition continued I saw it meant the end of my Sunday school and women's work. This was a heartbreaking realization. One night as I prayed and wept I said aloud: "I guess there will be no more leading," for the work in which I had been led was gone. Then the Lord, in an audible voice said, "Has he forsaken you?" I said, "No." "Then will he lead you?" I said, "He surely will. If one part is true, the other must be, too."

Then I was made to feel the melting tenderness of the love of God. I was gently reminded of the verses that had been given me, and as I said them through, the words, "And so this tender Shepherd, I'll trust what'er betide," added to the wonderful comfort already received, and I slept in perfect peace. And now I can say, I know that God lives and that he cares for his children.

*This God is the God we adore,
Our faithful, unchangeable friend.*

A short time before this when I had questioned whether I had received the abiding Spirit promised, the Lord made me realize the presence of his Spirit so

I knew he had not forsaken me, but nothing has ever equaled that realization of the love of God.

After I found that I could not serve away from home, I prayed earnestly that if there were anything I could do, the Lord would show me and help me to do it. Then one day Brother Kueffer came to our home. I had not met him before this, and I was surprised when he asked me to write the stories for the hymns of the Reorganization. He said he had read my writings in the church papers and he had talked with Sister Salyards who had recommended me. I gladly agreed to undertake the work. Here was something I could do at home. Here was the answer to my prayer, and I was blessed in doing this God-given work.

My husband had been failing in health for quite a long time, but at the last he was sick only four days. I was alone the first days, but friends came in and were kind. Relatives were here, and Brother Luff came from Independence. Henry had preached many funeral sermons. A young man who had heard him often remarked after one of his sermons, "Someday there will be a big funeral when he will not preach." And it was so. The church was full, and his voice was silent. Brother Luff preached (and now Brother Luff is gone).

Henry had many friends because of his interest in them and the help they felt he had given them. He was always ready, night or day, near or far, to go to administer to the sick, and many were healed under his hands. He always noticed the boys in their homes or on the streets. Sometimes he would stop and talk with them.

After his funeral service, an unusual scene occurred in front of the church where the hearse was waiting. A number of small boys gathered around and waited until the casket was placed within and carried away for burial. This was a silent tribute from his young friends.

We went again to Rose Hill, and now the earthly tabernacle of the father of my three daughters lies there with them, and I am left alone without his love and thoughtful care. I turned to the Lover of my soul, and He has been my unflinching support.

AFTER HENRY'S death, church support was continued for me. In 1931, with the Civil War pension and some other income, I felt that I no longer needed the help from the church. I wrote Bishop DeLapp and asked him to stop my allowance. He did this and he wrote asking me to let him know if ever I felt I had need.

In 1954 I wrote him reminding him of his offer. I said that now with less income I should be glad if I might receive fifty dollars monthly from the church. He willingly agreed. So now, once more, my name is on the allowance list. It was Henry's wish that our home property should finally go to the church. This has been arranged in accordance with his desire.

I HAVE held sacred my stewardship in the use of money and have counted it a duty and a privilege to comply with the financial law of the church. As a rule, I have considered carefully and conscientiously each expenditure, and yet in some instances I have been beguiled by unprincipled salesmen into investing in something that proved unsatisfactory. Naturally trusting, I accepted what seemed a good opportunity to be seized at that time, when calmer thought with prayer would have saved what I saw later as the Lord's money unwisely spent. This caused me unhappy periods of repentance.

My last error of this kind was in buying a small hearing aid to replace a larger one which was not satisfactory. The new one seemed to be exactly what I needed, and I felt it was justified. The agent did not come back, and try as I could with competent help, I could find no batteries for it. The money was spent in vain. Then followed real repentance and deep regret for not having sought the guidance of the Lord.

After my husband died I had different people staying with me. One was Hallie Gould, then proofreader in the Herald Publishing House. We became fast friends and since have been regular correspondents.

In 1924 Brother and Sister Fred Shepherd came from England; finding a room in my home, they lived with me for three years. The latter part of the time Fred was working in Chicago. Their first baby, Malcolm, was born while they were with me. When he was eight months old he with his mother joined his father and they still live near Chicago where his father works.

My cousin, Emma Lacey, was a brave, intelligent, spiritual woman. We were like sisters, so I knew her struggles with sickness and other misfortunes. She made the best of trying circumstances and gave of herself in many ways to others. I believe she came through as one of the purified, ready for celestial glory. Her daughter, Ethel A. Lacey, has lived with me ever since her mother's death in 1933. We recognize this as an ideal arrangement because of our common church interests and our mutual needs.

ETHEL had to give up secretarial work in the railroad office in Burlington because of cataracts. She had the cataract removed from one eye, after which she was able to serve as stake secretary here in Lamoni. This work was interrupted by the need for a change of glasses too long delayed, and then by neuritis in her arm. Just as her eyes were recovering, an accident broke open the scar from the cataract operation, leaving her practically blind. She has only slight vision in the other eye from which the cataract could not be removed.

Question Time

Question

At Christ's coming what happens to the wicked that are alive?
Ohio

C. E. P.

Answer

The voice of prophecy, as recorded in the Book of Malachi, pictures at Christ's second coming a time of judgment on the wicked and a time of blessing on the good. This, however, is not to be confused with the final judgment. We read:

For behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.—Malachi 4: 1-3.

The Master defines the position of the wicked during the millennium in his parable of the faithful servant. In it man's responsibility is delimited in terms of his knowledge of right and wrong, his possibilities, and his responses. We take note of the infinite love and wisdom of Christ in his purpose to rehabilitate and save in righteous judgment. We read:

And that servant who knew his Lord's will, and prepared not for his Lord's coming, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not his Lord's will, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few.—Luke 12: 56, 57.

We are told in latter-day revelation that Christ in his second coming will come in a cloud with power and great glory, that all nations shall tremble, and that great destructions await the wicked (Doctrine and Covenants 33: 1, 2). The revelation in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 30 indicates that, while the power of Satan will be bound during the millennium, there will be those persons who will not respond to the gospel of Christ but will choose a way that leads inevitably to commensurate suffering or lesser glory. There will still be need for the cry of repentance during the millennium.

JOHN R. DARLING

Question

Will there be children born during the millennium?
Ohio

C. E. P.

Answer

There are various New Testament scriptures which indirectly support this position, and latter-day revelation gives a direct answer in a description of the millennium:

And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; and it shall be tolerable for them; and Satan shall be bound that he shall have no place in the hearts of the children of men. And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.

JOHN R. DARLING

Matthew 24: 33, I. V., seems to conflict with Matthew 24: 18 "no, nor shall ever be sent again upon Israel." From verse 33 it appears that these things will come again upon Israel.

Also, with Daniel 12: 7, I. V., and "when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

Is this a contradiction?

S. W.

Ontario

Answer

Not necessarily, though it is possible that certain emphases intended to be made both by Daniel and by the Lord Jesus have been lost through language changes and the handling of the Scriptures. This quotation being from the Inspired Version suggests to us that the answer is not to be found in such changes but in the reconciling of the texts.

Jesus does not say exactly what is involved in the "great tribulations on the Jews, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem" in Matthew 24: 18. We know that what actually happened was not only the "abomination of desolation" in which the temple was desecrated, but world-wide persecution and indescribable tribulations.

It is entirely possible that something similar to the desecration of the Jews' religious center could occur again, without the extent and severity of the former tribulations being repeated. In such a case there would be no conflict between these passages.

The Migration of the Yemenite Jew

THE recent political alignment of the small nation of Yemen with the Egyptian-Syrian federation recalls a story that has come out of the Near East concerning some of the Jewish people who until recently populated Yemen. Many centuries ago, probably during the days of King Solomon, a number of Jews became residents of the area now Yemen. It was the traditional home of the Queen of Sheba, and probably these Jews had been sent there to work on products to be used in building the Jewish empire and temple. When the glory of the Hebrew kingdom faded, these Jews became lost from their homeland. For thousands of years, and despite pressures and periodic persecution, they maintained their religious identity. Their Torah contained only the five books of Moses, which suggests that their departure from Israel preceded the time of the prophets.

Then came electrifying news to them: the state of Israel had been established again. To the Yemenite Jews this meant that the "Messiah" was at hand. This was the long-awaited sign. The news filtered quickly across the countryside, and a mass movement unparalleled in modern times began. Jews from all over Yemen trekked for miles across desert and mountain to Aden, a British protectorate and the nearest point of civilization. There they found Israeli airplanes waiting for them. The flight was dubbed "operation magic carpet." The Yemenite Jews accepted the planes without question, for hadn't the Bible described how God had borne the children of Israel on "eagle wings" (Exodus 19: 4) and could he not do so again?

Although death had taken a heavy toll of these undernourished refugees, over 50,000 Yemenite Jews migrated to Israel. Planes normally carrying 47 passengers carried as many as 127, and scarcely a plane landed without a number on board having died en route. The average weight of an adult was only about 70 pounds.

The typical response of Yemenite Jews upon landing in Israel was to fall on their faces and kiss the "sacred" soil. Their tradition produced great devotion for the Holy Land. Today these Yemenites are settled in a new life in Israel.

The Mormons
by Thomas F. O'Dea

University of Chicago Press, 1957

Price, $5.00

The Mormons, written by Thomas F. O'Dea, associate professor of sociology at Fordham University, is the first complete treatment of the subject of Mormonism on the historical, philosophical, and sociological levels. It will be read with special interest by persons desiring a deep insight into the values and social meaning of Mormonism.

The extensive bibliography attests to the thoroughness of the non-Mormon authors' preparation for his writing. The 289-page book traces the development of Mormonism from a small embattled sect to a substantial American denomination and community. References to the Reorganized Church are few but fair and highly significant. He refers to the court decision support of the claim of the Reorganization to true succession and says, "The latter still maintains its claim to revelation in a form reminiscent of the first years under the Prophet Joseph." Reorganization members will not appreciate the author's undocumented assumption that Joseph Smith was a polygamist.

The first seventy-five pages of the study deals with the history of the church to the time of the exodus from Nauvoo. The remainder of the book is devoted to the history of the church in Utah with an examination of the Mormon beliefs and values and the Mormon ecclesiastical and community structure. It is unfortunate that the author did not extend his research into a closer examination of the Reorganization movement. He could have rendered a service to students of Mormonism by contrasting the diverse trends that have taken place in two movements having a common origin. These differences are undoubtedly rooted in sociological factors and reflect the influence of the personalities of their leaders, Brigham Young and Joseph Smith III.

Experiments of the Mormons with the United Order and other co-operative efforts designed to give practical application of Zionism ideals are reviewed. The period from 1890 marked a change in emphasis characterized by compromise and integration into the Gentile community and withdrawal from social experimentation. This trend is described as reflecting a growing conservatism characterizing an aging leadership that was enjoying the fruits of financial success. That the tradition of co-operation remained alive in the Utah church is evident in its recrudescence in the depression years of 1936 in the Welfare Plan.

The pin-pointing of the sources of strain and conflict in Mormonism today is revealing. A laissez-faire economic philosophy based on an agrarian system must be accommodated to the complexities of modern industrialization. The greatest problem is the influence of modern secular thought, and the suppression of liberal interpretations. Utah Mormonism is described as providing a basis for a satisfying life to the great majority of its followers. Only the questioning intellectual is unhappy.

The author is generally optimistic with respect to the ability of the church to adapt to the demands of a new age but is doubtful of this being accomplished without loss of the sense of security that conservative Mormons now enjoy in their literal interpretations of latter-day revelations. We do not commend the book for its historical accuracy but rather for the author's penetrating insight into the significance of historical events and his analysis of present day events and problems.

Indians of the Southwest

by Mary Jourdan Atkinson

Harper and Brothers

Indians of the Southwest, by Mary Jourdan Atkinson, will probably appeal to those persons who are more than superficially interested in Indians, who are willing to spend some time learning the cultural variations among the tribes, yet who have only a nodding acquaintance with Indian lore. The book is interestingly written in nontechnical language for the most part. However, it contains a wealth of detail—as much as could be expected in a work that tries to discuss so many tribes.

Reorganized Latter Day Saints should not expect the book either to support or to refute the Book of Mormon. The period of time it covers is roughly from Columbus' arrival to the late 1800's. Only oblique references are made to those cultures and times with which we have been more concerned, the Aztec, Maya, and Inca civilizations. The barely initiated R.L.D.S. layman will probably find these values in reading the book:

It gives information on peoples we have generally neglected in our thinking.

It shows dramatically the complexity of Indian culture and warns us not to make hasty generalizations. Indians differ from each other as much as do the English and French, for example.

It stimulates thought by presenting factually based hypotheses somewhat at variance with those suggested by other authorities in and out of the church (for example, the source and function of the plumed serpent).

It provides a springboard through its facts and theories for further thought, reading, and research.

Notice of Motion General Conference 1958

WHEREAS, The sanctity of the home is universally acknowledged by all believers in Christ as essential to the molding of Christian character and to the perfecting of the kingdom of God on earth, and

WHEREAS, Our church, prior to 1900, did address itself by General Conference Resolutions to the interpretation of church law pertaining to certain aspects of the problem of divorce and remarriage (see General Conference Resolutions 66, 272, 412), and

WHEREAS, The intervening period has brought to light new knowledge, information, and insight concerning the marriage relationship and the problems of divorce and remarriage; therefore, be it

Certification of Delegates

The "Rules of Order" (Section 26) provide that:

Delegates shall be entitled to act upon registering with the Credentials Committee. This Committee should be supplied with a certified list of delegates, bearing the signatures of stake or district president and secretary; or bearing the signatures of the branch president and secretary if they represent branches in unorganized territory.

The Credentials Committee shall certify delegates to General Conference, up to the number to which the stake, district, or branch is entitled, in the order in which delegates are registered with the Credentials Committee.¹

Some question has arisen concerning the meaning of ". . . the order in which delegates are registered . . ." We are therefore advising that stake, district or branch officers reporting to the Credentials Committee concerning selection of delegates shall list these delegates in the order of the votes received by each of them when they were selected.

At the General Conference of 1958 it is our purpose to recommend that the statement on Certification of Delegates above cited shall be amended by the insertion between "delegates" and "bearing" of the words "arranged in the order of the votes cast for their selection." The sentence involved will then read:

This Committee should be supplied with a certified list of delegates, arranged in the order of the votes cast for their selection, bearing the signatures of stake or district president and secretary; or bearing the signatures of the branch president and secretary if they represent branches in unorganized territory.

OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

For All Engineers and Architects

We are happy to announce that the Engineers and Architects of the Church are getting together to organize a professional association. The first question that may arise in your mind when you read this is "What will be the purpose of this association?" Well, at first there were numerous ideas as to what our purpose should be. But, through much thought and counsel, we have consolidated all these ideas into these four basic purposes:

1. To define, evaluate, and implement the basic relationship of the architectural and engineering professions to the aims and basic program of the church.
2. To enrich the spiritual and ethical values of our church members in the architectural and engineering professions.
3. To build mutual concern and fellowship between people of like interest.
4. To explore the possibilities of our professions in the church as related to the gathering.

By working together as an active professional group, we can provide several distinctive services. One such service would be to compile and distribute a directory of our members. This directory can serve the members and the church in many ways. One way would be to provide contacts for employment information in various parts of the country. Another service that our professional association will provide is to give guidance and counsel to students and to the church administrative officials when such professional needs arise. Of course, our organization is very young, and we are open for new and constructive ideas.

In an association of this type there always arises the controversial question of who should be permitted to participate in a professional group such as this. We have given much thought to this question and have had the opinion of many of our charter members. These members have voted to list the qualifications as follows:

Graduate of recognized school of engineering or architecture; registered professional architect or engineer; responsible engineering position and ten years of experience, such as engineering design or chief engineer, supervising at least five employees; or chief draftsman; and others as the membership committee may approve.

We plan to meet as a group at General Conference. There will be an informal banquet the Saturday before Conference and a meeting during the week. Be sure to look for the time in the Conference Bulletin.

LAWRENCE F. SMITH
Publicity Chairman

This group expects to share a booth with several of the other professional groups. Anyone desiring more information may write to the R.L.D.S. Professional Engineers and Architects, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

The following has been received from Elder W. E. Connell at Peshawar University, Pakistan:

We recently had letters from the Gideon family in Delhi. Brother John wrote, "We thank God for the wonderful fellowship we had with you and Sister Ruby. Our only regret is that it was too short. If we had a reading room, a prayer room, and a small press in a big city like Delhi or Agra we could attract people. People here are fond of reading newspapers and magazines. What do you feel about it?"

"We need the prayers of Saints so that with God's help we may extend his kingdom among the four hundred million people in India.

"We are anxious to have a regular place of worship in Delhi. We are spreading the Restoration message by personal contacts and by lending pamphlets which you gave us."

Gene Was the Man . . .

whom I went to as a shy eight-year-old to ask for baptism and confirmation into Christ's church restored, who came and with another of God's servants placed his hands upon a mother's head in a time of need, and offered supplications to One above for her life and the life of her newborn, who offered kind and diligent support through the growing years of a young child and youthful woman, as a pastor, a friend, and a counselor, whose memory lights a bright candle in the mind's eye, and makes the day a gladder one, who will live forever in the hearts of those who knew him for what he was and for the good he did.

Recommendations to be presented at General Conference

Book of Mormon Committee to Finish Work

THE committee to consider the possibility of a "reader's edition" of the Book of Mormon has about finished its work, according to Evan A. Fry, chairman.

A resolution passed at the 1956 General Conference requested the First Presidency to appoint a committee to "consider wherein and if its [the Book of Mormon] language and wording may be improved."

The First Presidency appointed a five-member committee to make such a study: Evan Fry, Russell Ralston, Leonard Lea, Mrs. Elva Oakman, and Herbert Scott.

An advisory committee of the following members was also appointed: Melvin Fowler, Garland Tickemyer, James Wardle, Roy Cheville, Evan Shute, Mrs. Alice Edwards, Maurice Draper, Charles Hield, and Roy Weldon.

The five-member committee has met eight times. The advisory committee has received copies of the minutes of each meeting and has corresponded with committee members.

Brother Fry said the committee members expect to meet together one more time before Conference, probably in September when Sister Oakman has returned from Germany.

"We have made no attempt to go through the Book of Mormon word by word or comma by comma and make a revision," Brother Fry said. "Rather, we have taken samples of various kinds of revisions which indicate the forms or methods that could be used in printing a 'reader's edition' of the book."

Brother Fry indicated that by "reader's edition"—a term the committee has used—he means an edition of the Book of Mormon that would contain corrections and helps which would make the book easier to read and understand today.

The committee has interpreted its commission as a request to study the advisability of such an edition, not actually to prepare a revision. Even this type of study is difficult, Brother Fry pointed out. Although the committee members have met only eight times, he said, they have each worked many hours in studying the problems involved.

The committee will have a definite resolution to present to the Conference, Brother Fry said. The resolution will probably recommend the continued use of the authorized edition of the Book of Mormon and also the provision of a new committee and an appropriation to prepare the actual editorial work of a reader's edition.

Brother Fry said that if such a committee is appointed it will need to be a full-time committee and the work of preparing a new edition of the Book of Mormon can be expected to take years.

"It will be up to the Conference to decide if the church wants to spend that kind of money and effort for a new edition," Brother Fry said.

The Letter of Instruction

concerning "the position, privilege, and duty of the Quorum of the First Presidency in its several parts contingent upon the death or deposition for cause of the President of the Church, denominated in the law as the President of the High Priesthood."¹

EARLY in 1912 President Joseph Smith III sent to "a considerable number of the leading minds of the church"² a request for "their personal views upon the topic presented"¹ in twenty-eight questions listed by him. He asked that those consulted should answer "without consultation or discussion with anyone"² and said that his inquiries were preliminary to the preparation of an "article for the Herald a sufficient time prior to the ensuing April Conference for the subject to be understood by the members of the church who take the official organ, in order that the ex officio members and delegates to Conference may be prepared for action should action be required . . ."²

The article which President Smith had in mind appeared in the Herald of March 13, 1912, and was reprinted in the Heralds of March 10, 1915, and September 6 and 13, 1954.

This "Letter of Instruction" was considered by the Quorum of Twelve, and the Quorum adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That while we do not commit ourselves to the terminology nor all the conclusions contained in the 'Letter of Instruction' referred to, we concede and pledge ourselves to the following cardinal points involved in this question:

"To uphold the surviving members of the Quorum of the First Presidency who shall act in conjunction with the Quorum of the Twelve in caring for the interests of the church in such emergency contemplated in said Letter of Instruction, until such members are released in a lawful manner by the church in conference capacity.

"That whenever it may be necessary for the church to take action in this matter, the Quorum holds it to be the inherent right of the Conference next ensuing the event alluded to, to so act observing all the customary amenities pertaining to such action . . ."³

When the time came to consider the successor to President Joseph Smith III, Apostle Francis M. Sheehy addressed the General Conference (1915) and began: "According to the instructions of the Quorum of Twelve, I have been designated to formally make this motion, following out the Letter of Instruction from the late President covering procedure of this kind . . ."⁴

No action was taken by the Seventy as a body in reference to the Letter of Instruction. However, the Council of Presidents of Seventy accepted the letter as "opportune counsel"⁵ and their action was approved by the First Quorum of Seventy⁶ and the Second Quorum of Seventy.⁷ A Third Quorum of Seventy, with only ten men present, considered the resolution but took no final action.

In a letter addressed to the First Presidency under June 26, 1958, and signed by Elders Z. Z. Renfroe, senior president to Council of Presidents of Seventy, and Elder Russell F. Ralston, secretary of this council, the brethren say:

"Inasmuch as there were only ten men present to act for the third quorum of Seventy and these did not take action to disapprove the resolution of the Presidents of Seventy, and inasmuch as the Council of Presidents of Seventy, the First Quorum of Seventy, and the Second Quorum of Seventy did approve the resolution, we feel that we can justifiably say that the majority of the Seventy did accept and adopt this resolution as their position in relation to the 'Letter of Instruction' presented by President Joseph Smith."

General Conference has never taken formal action on the Letter of Instruction. This is probably because so much of the language used is explanatory, and avoids the usual terse phrasing of Conference Resolutions. Nevertheless President Israel A. Smith properly presented the situation when the "Letter" was published in 1954. He wrote:

"This 'Letter' has been accorded general recognition as a correct statement of the law as to the selection of a successor 'in the case of the death of a president of the church, or his removal for cause,' and has guided the procedure and action of general church officers and the General Conference . . ."

President Smith concluded:

"I remember clearly that the author of this 'Letter,' in his last illness, expressed his satisfaction that he had anticipated the need of the church for such instruction."⁸

Report on Auditorium

While all reports for the Auditorium income are not in for the month of July, those that have been received indicate that we will reach our goal and that the money for seating will be in hand when the seats are installed and the contract completed. This will include the organ (which, however, cannot be installed until after Conference).

There are many additional needs looking toward completion of the building. The ramps and lower auditorium are yet to be finished; stonework and finishing of the office wings are still ahead of us. We are proceeding to have plans and specifications drawn for the completion of the ramps and lower auditorium. By the time of General Conference, we will have fairly accurate figures as to the cost involved for the additional work yet to be done.

We ask for the continued support of our members to meet the quotas assigned for the year 1958. We appreciate the splendid support given in the past months which has made possible the completion and seating of the General Conference Chamber.

The total number of reports received in the first half of 1958 is 2,289 which is 176 less than were received in the same period last year.

Stakes and districts from which the five highest total number of baptisms were received in June are Center Stake—45; Central Michigan District—31; Maine District—23; and Lamoni Stake and Southeastern Illinois District—each 21.

Branches and missions reporting the five highest baptismal totals in June are London, Ontario—14; Beals, Maine; Council Bluffs and Des Moines, Iowa—each 13; and Escatawpa, Mississippi—11.

The enrollment of the church as of June 30, 1958, is 168,589.

It is here reproduced in part, the sections omitted having no bearing on our present situation,

Introduction and Premises

In presenting the following letter of instruction to the readers of the Herald, I have deemed it advisable to do so by a series of questions, having in consideration the subject matter of the position, privilege, and duty of the Quorum of the First Presidency in its several parts contingent upon the death or deposition for cause of the President of the church, de-nominated in the law as the president of the high priesthood. In answering the several questions the following premises should be remembered and observed.

First: Priesthood, delegated authority, is conferred for the expressed purpose of accomplishing, by human means, the work of the divine mind for the benefit of mankind.

Second: Office in the priesthood is intended to designate the general and specific work that the individual called, chosen, and ordained to the office is to do.

Third: Office in the priesthood is not conferred to increase the importance of the individual or as a means to self-aggrandizement or personal emolument.

Fourth: All offices in the priesthood are equal in honor before God, the honor of each as to the individual holder resulting from the manner in which the duties of the office are performed.

This is evident from a consideration of the statement made by the Apostle Paul: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: . . . That no flesh should glory in his presence" (I Corinthians 1: 26, 29).

Fifth: It is equally essential to remember that in using the terms "called," "appointed," "chosen," and "ordained," referring to any person chosen and ordained by the body to any office in the priesthood, the worthiness, fitness, and qualifications to act in such office should be understood and conceded without a constant repetition of these terms.

Sixth: It is the axiom of the church that persons ordained to office in the church are so ordained because they are called of God by revelation.

This follows the injunction of Paul to the Hebrew brethren, "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God" (Hebrews 5: 4).

Questions and Answers

1. In the case of the death of a president of the church, or his removal from office for cause, what would be the position of his counselors?

To reply to this question intelligently it is necessary to ascertain to what office they have been called and ordained. Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11 reads thus:

"Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church."

In Section 17: 1, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were called and ordained apostles. In Section 87: 3, it is stated that Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams¹ were equal to the president in "holding the keys of this last kingdom."

By provision in Section 99: 6, the three high priests who were chosen as the Presidency of the church are rated as equal in authority to preside over the high council. In Section 68: 2, these three presiding high priests are distinctly authorized to officiate in the ordination of those who are called and appointed to act as bishops in the church, either of the order of Aaron or by virtue of holding the office of high priest.

In the church articles of incorporation, Article 1, in the government of the church, there is provision made that the church should be presided over by a First Presidency, consisting of a president and two counselors. We have already seen how these counselors are chosen.

From what is given from the authorities cited above, it is clear that in authorizing the organization of the church the Lord provided an ample safeguard against imposition upon the people from the improper aspiration of any of the leading authorities of the church, by establishing three quorums as checks and counter checks upon each other, the three being equal in authority in matters of importance, neither one of the three being paramount to overriding the authority of the other two. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that in case of a vacancy occurring in either of the quorums, unless such vacancy was of such a character as to reduce the membership of the quorum below the permissible majority provided for in Doctrine and Covenants 104, where it would be impossible to secure an undivided quorum, such quorum in which the vacancy occurred would still hold its unity of power, a majority existing, providing there was a unity in the remaining members of the quorum. Or in other words, that a quorum broken by death or by deposition, providing a majority still remained, would hold its quorum authority intact, and could not be deprived of its quorum authority and privileges unless it should be overruled by a unanimous decision of the other two quorums. It would not therefore be reasonable to suppose that the Quorum of the First Presidency would be so completely broken by the death or removal from office for cause of the president of the high priesthood that such quorum would cease to exist, as a quorum, or its duties to the body as a quorum cease upon the death or removal of the president. The provision is an ample and wise one, as anyone can see by examining the proposition devoid of prejudice, the result of wrongdoing in the past.

It would then seem clear that the members of the First Presidency who would survive the death of the president would still hold the office of presiding high priests over the high priesthood and be authorized to act in such duties of the presidency in a similar manner that they may do during the life of the president, restricted only by the exceptions found in the law, the most important of these perhaps being the restriction as to the right of receiving revelations and presenting them to the church for the government and guidance thereof. It would further seem reasonable that, as these officers were high priests, those whose priesthood warrants the belief that they might receive revelations from God, it would not be impossible that the Lord might speak through one of those who remained in the quorum after the death of the principal, or his removal from office for cause, as it is the privilege of the Lord to speak through whom he will. There could be no danger of the church being misled by such revelations, these revelations being subjected to the same scrutiny by the quorums as those given by the president himself.

2. When would their term of authority cease, and what would be the extent of their duty pending the appointment of a successor?

Their office as counselors merely would cease at the death of the president, for obvious reasons; but their office as members of the First Presidency to which they had been ordained after being called and chosen would not pass until a successor to the deceased or deposed president was chosen, upon which choice properly made by the body a reorganization of the Quorum of the Presidency would be requisite, their office passing at their report and laying down their office, awaiting the action of the body.

3. Would their right to act as presidents cease at once upon the death of the president or would they be authorized to continue to act as presidents until a successor was chosen?

Being chosen and ordained as presidents of the high priesthood forming a quorum, and not as counselors only, they would be authorized to continue to perform the perfunctory duties of presidents until a successor was chosen or other provision made for an acting presidency. This is agreeable with Doctrine and Covenants 107:39: "I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and first presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church."

This shows clearly that the intention of the Great Organizer was to create a quorum, and not simply to institute two men as counselors with no responsibility attaching to them, in case of the absence by death or deposition of the president. It would seem that divine wisdom would not so loosely form a threefold cord, like that made by the three quorums, the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, that one of them would cease to exist if one of its members was to be removed, leaving the other two intact to perform quorum duties. It is safe to assume that when these three forming the Presidency were appointed by revelation, and chosen and ordained "as three presiding high priests," they would be qualified to perform the necessary duties attaching to their office as members of a quorum, with equal authority under the law.

4. Should they report the death of their principal officially to the Quorum of Twelve through the presiding officer of that quorum?

Yes. They should not only report to the Quorum of Twelve, but also report to the Quorum of Seventy through its president, these quorums holding concurrent jurisdiction in matters of decision. This they should do, not only as a matter of courtesy but as a matter of right.

5. Or should they report to the next ensuing session of the Annual Conference and continue to act as presidents until such Conference convenes and their report be made?

They should report to the next ensuing Conference and should continue to act in their office as presidents of the high priesthood until the successor of the deceased president should be chosen, and the First Presidency as a quorum reorganized. They should consult with the presiding officers of the two quorums, Twelve and Seventy³ and if upon such consultation it would be deemed advisable to call a special session of conference, they should make report to such special conference, in conjunction with the officers of the quorums referred to.

6. Would either of them be eligible to be chosen as president to succeed their principal by virtue of their holding the office of the high priesthood to which they had been ordained as counselors?

Yes. The same as they were eligible to be chosen as members of the First Presidency when such presidency was formed by their accession to it.

7. If the death of the President should be reported by these counselors to the Twelve, would it be the duty of that quorum to at once assume the care and direction of the affairs of the church?

The Quorum of Twelve would not be authorized to traverse outside of their duties as "a traveling, presiding high council," and take absolute direction and control of church affairs, if the remaining members of the Presidency were in agreement and showed no disposition to assume arbitrary control, without proper recognition being given to the two other quorums holding concurrent jurisdiction in matters of decision. Should there be disunity among the remaining members of the Quorum of the Presidency, and confusion and strife as to authority arise between the counselors, the Quorum of Twelve should then be recognized as authorized to secure a proper unity of action in the church in connection with the Quorum of Seventy, holding equal authority in matters of decision. It is not in accordance with sound reason that either quorum would have the right of absolute dictation over the authority and jurisdiction of the other two ruling quorums, these all three having been made equal by organic law. The assumption of arbitrary power and control by either one of these three bodies, declared in the organic law to be equal, would give rise to opposition and active protest, and confusion would inevitably result.

8. Or should they await the sitting of the next ensuing Annual Conference to which report should be made by the counselors and then assume the direction of affairs and proceed to secure nomination and election of a president to fill the vacancy created by the death or removal from office for cause?

www.LatterDayTruth.org

They should await the action of the ensuing Annual Conference unless by agreement referred to above an earlier conference is called, at which report of the death of the president should be officially made, when their right to assume temporary control should be accorded them through their presiding officers, subject to voice and vote in the usual form of opening Conference.

9. What should be the course of procedure in securing such choosing and sustaining of one to fill such vacancy?

Conference should be opened in the usual manner by choosing a president pro tempore and the necessary secretary, by nomination and vote,⁴ whereupon the report of the remaining members of the Quorum of the Presidency should be presented by them, and the Conference proceed to act upon said report, or to set an hour on that or a succeeding day, at which the report would be taken up and acted upon. The setting of an hour, as suggested, would give time for the appointment of credentials committee and the hearing of their report,⁵ that the Conference might be fully prepared to vote viva voce or by a yea and nay call of delegates. There would be no need for friction, if there was a disposition upon the part of all to grant the courtesy and rights to others that they would make demand for themselves, in the spiritual understanding that it is not for the purpose of self-aggrandizement or self-laudation that they are met, but to do business which will conserve the safe interests of the entire body.

10. Should the Quorum of Twelve by one or more of their number by virtue of their office preside at the Conference next ensuing after vacancy in the Quorum of the First Presidency occurred?

No person has the right, either in custom or law, to demand the prerogative and rule of authority to preside over the Conference of the church when met for business, at a stated period, and arbitrarily assume control without the choice of the assembly obtained by nomination and vote.

11. Or would it be legal or expedient for the Conference to choose some one to act pro tempore by usual nomination and vote?

It would be lawful for the Conference to choose by nomination and vote any qualified person holding the Melchisedec priesthood to preside pro tempore, but Paul's adage, that "all things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient," would be in force in such instance, and the wiser and safer course would be that the president of the Quorum of Twelve or some one of the quorum, or other, whom he might suggest, should be chosen to preside until the First Presidency as a quorum was reconstructed.

12. Could one of the counselors be so chosen by nomination and vote and preside until the vacancy referred to was filled?

Yes. The rule of expediency suggested in the answer to the preceding question would be of force and value in this issue. The remaining members of the Quorum of the First Presidency would be persons directly in interest in the pending business of choosing a successor to the removed president, and the same propriety that causes a presiding officer to vacate the chair when matters in which he is in interest are being considered would suggest that neither of these counselors would desire to preside, under the circumstances governing in the case. If adverse criticism or opposition be made touching the work of these counselors during the interim between the death of the president and the convening of the Conference, they should be left free from presiding responsibility, to meet such conditions free from other responsibility. It would seem safe to infer under such conditions that the counselors would decline to accept the duty of presiding, while the matter of succession was being considered.⁶ Not until the Quorum of the Presidency is reconstructed would the position of these remaining members be definitely ascertained, as they may or may not be chosen to succeed themselves, and the will of the body may otherwise dispose of them, as to their office.

13. Would it be considered imperative that such vacancy in the Presidency should be filled at the next ensuing Conference after such vacancy has occurred?

It would not be imperative, but the rule of expediency would require that if such vacancy could be filled in the spirit of peace and good will it should be done. It would be advisable that the church should know as soon as practicable who should assume definite control of the affairs of the church, for if there should be friction, by reason of contention between individuals as to rights and prerogatives an interim without the choice being made would only serve to sow distrust and disaffection in a wider field. In this as in many other things, precaution is the parent of safety. It is safe to presume that under the ordinary circumstances of church work the conference assembly would be as prepared to act at such ensuing session as they would be at any succeeding period of time, and the risk of unavoidable difficulties occurring would not be incurred.

14. If not, would the Quorum of Twelve in their organized capacity direct and administer in the care of the church until such time as a successor was chosen?

The office of the counselors as members of the Quorum of the Presidency not expiring until the quorum is reconstructed, they would continue to act as stated in answer to question two, and the Quorum of Twelve justly could not take arbitrary control of the affairs of the church outside of their office work as a traveling high council, except upon agreement between the three quorums involved, accepted, and acquiesced in by the voice of the Conference. If such agreement was reached and the Quorum of Twelve so installed the counselors would at once cease to act, leaving the quorum vacated, as if their office as counselors expired at the death of the president, they could not hold office as counselors to either a president pro tempore or to the Quorum of Twelve. If they did not exist as a majority of the Quorum of the Presidency their identity as active officers would be lost to the church, except they should act by sufferance or by courtesy. Strenuous contention as to the rights and prerogatives would be out of place and incongruous under such conditions, and the church has a right to expect that such will not occur.

15. Does the statement, your priesthood hath remained with Christ in God, as given in Doctrine and Covenants 84:3, given to the elders of the church by revelation, taken with other passages of Scripture and the revelations found in Doctrine and Covenants, justify the belief in the right of the sons of those acting in the offices in the priesthood to succeed their fathers who have been or are acting in offices of the priesthood?

The clear understanding of this passage is that the priesthood had remained latent, "hid with Christ in God," but the office in such priesthood depends upon the manner of call by revelation, choice, and ordination. Call, choice, and ordination presume worthiness, fitness, and qualification.

16. Does the law of primogeniture inure to the first born?

Yes. The church, however, is dealing with living entities and the eldest living son is, so far as church work is concerned, to be considered eligible as the first born.

17. Are such first-born sons eligible to be chosen to succeed their fathers, other qualifications of fitness to act in the office being equal and satisfactory to the church?

Yes, without question.

18. Do the terms occurring in Doctrine and Covenants 104:18, wherein the office of patriarch is mentioned, refer to the priesthood as other officers included in the priesthood called Melchisedec, the words being, "This priesthood was conferred to be handed down from father to son"?

The words "this priesthood," occurring in the section referred to, apply to the Melchisedec priesthood and not to any office in the priesthood. The patriarch is an office or an order in the priesthood. There is a division of labor under different offices in the priesthood, but no division in the priesthood is created when a person is ordained to an office. One of the earliest teachings of the church, and most substantial, is that there are but two priesthoods. The multiplication of the offices could not create an additional priesthood.

19. Is this priesthood referred to in this paragraph the same as that which appears in Section 104:3, wherein the provision for the choosing of a president of the high priesthood is given?

Yes. The quotation referred to makes it clear and decisive that the priesthood from which the presiding officers are to be chosen is the Melchisedec priesthood, and not from any specific quorum or office in the priesthood.

20. Is there just reason for believing that the words designating the class and number of such class of officers refer to and include only the members of the apostolic quorum?

The value of this question will be seen when it occurs to the reader that there is an organized body professing belief in the priesthood as given by revelation to the church, who construe the language occurring in Doctrine and Covenants 104:11, designating the class of officers from among whom the three presiding high priests constituting the Quorum of the First Presidency are to be chosen as applying to the apostolic quorum only, assuming that the words "three presiding high priests" mean only those who have already been chosen and ordained as such presiding high priests. Acting upon this interpretation of the language, they have assumed the right to confine the choice and ordination to the Presidency to those who have previously been ordained apostles of the Quorum of Twelve.⁷

The term "three presiding high priests" who were to constitute the Quorum of the First Presidency applies to the three chosen and ordained after such ordination has taken place to the office of three presiding high priests over the Melchisedec priesthood, and by no means indicates that the appointment by revelation from God, and the choice and ordination by the church, are to be confined to the apostolic quorum only.

21. Or is the number there referred to inclusive of all the members holding and occupying in offices of the high priesthood?

The choice by revelation is at the disposition of the Lord. He has the right to designate whom he may choose; but when the matter is left to the action of the body, those holding the high priesthood, known as Melchisedec, whether members of any quorum or not, would be eligible.

22. Do the revelations given in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants justify the belief that a son of a president of the church, duly called by revelation and ordained and sustained by the church, is eligible to succeed his father as president, other qualifications of fitness being equal, with other members of the high priesthood? Do such revelations justify a belief that such a son should be chosen to succeed his father as President?

Following the legendary teaching of the eldership and the precedent established in the reorganizing of the church, based upon the revelations which were accepted and on record at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the eldest living son of a president of the high priesthood acting as president of the church would be eligible under the considerations named in the question.

Unless such action was contravened by revelation directing otherwise, such son should be chosen. This would be in harmony and consistent with the precedents of history and the legendary teaching referred to.

23. Do the revelations point out with sufficient clearness that such a son is appointed by revelation as the proper one to be chosen and sustained as successor to his father, his father having died in office while being sustained by the faith, confidence, and prayers of the church?

Yes, unless such action upon the part of the church is prevented by revelation directing otherwise.

24. Or do such revelations require that such a person to succeed should be appointed or named by the incumbent prior to his death in order to justify the church in making such person their choice of successor?

In the absence of direct revelation otherwise the church would be justified in choosing and ordaining such a person to succeed a president removed by death under conditions named in the question.

25. Would the church be justified in choosing and electing such a person under the direction of present and existing revelations or does the spirit of revelation and wisdom in the various quorums and members of the priesthood sufficiently point out or designate such person as should be chosen to fill the vacancy in the Presidency caused by death, without such previous designation being so made by the existing incumbent in the office of president?

In view of the subject thus presented, as shown by the precedent, established in the choosing of a president of the church in 1860, it would appear clear that the church would be so justified; for the reason that the spirit of revelation and wisdom as manifested to the one chosen in 1860 and to the members and officers of the church then in partial organization, there was sufficient coherence as to justify the action of the church upon that occasion. There is now, as there was then, evidence of a supervising Spirit working upon the different members of quorums and workers in the church, pointing to such a consummation, should the occasion arise demanding action upon the part of the church.

26 and 27. By whom should the nomination for the choosing (and electing) of a successor to fill the vacancy in the Presidency by death at the Conference meeting to choose such successor be made? Would such nomination be confined to the Quorum of Twelve in their capacity as a quorum under the provision of the law which says, "They shall regulate and set in order," etc., as found in Doctrine and Covenants 104, on priesthood?

When the Conference has assembled and has been duly called to order, and the business properly stated, the common rule would permit any member of the assembly entitled to voice and vote to make such nomination; but a custom of courtesy having been established in the church, a priority of privilege should be cheerfully accorded to the one holding highest office by ordination; and if there should be two or more holding office alike in this regard, seniority in point of age should be considered, and by common consent he be privileged to make such nomination. If, however, the question should have been considered in quorum capacity by the leading quorums of the church and an agreement reached by such quorums as to the person to be nominated, it would be proper for such nomination to be presented by the Quorum of Twelve by the president of that quorum, by consent of the quorum or by some person to be named by them, either from among their own number or one from either of the quorums holding the Melchisedec priesthood.

This course of procedure in nominating would prevent any disturbing question of right or priority from occurring, the end to be reached being the good of all and not the gratification of any personal self-interest.⁸

1. The original publication had the name of Oliver Cowdery at this point. This does not conform to Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3 nor to the facts of history. In the Herald of March 20, 1912, President Joseph Smith explained that the name should be Frederick G. Williams. Unfortunately the error was repeated in the republications of 1915 and 1954.

2. Official reports of the death of President Israel A. Smith were sent on June 16, 1958, to the Presiding Evangelist, the President of the Council of Twelve, the Senior President of Seventy, the Presiding Bishopric, and the President of the Quorum of High Priests.

3. This consultation was had in a council of the First Presidency, Presiding Evangelist, Council of Twelve, Presiding Bishopric, Senior President of Seventy, and President of the Quorum of High Priests held Wednesday, June 18, 1958. The Council concurred in the recommendation of the First Presidency that General Conference dates remain as already announced—October 5-12, 1958.

4. In 1915 the remaining members of the First Presidency were chosen to preside. President F. M. Smith being absent through illness, President E. A. Smith "suggested that others be associated with the Presidency as presidents of the conference to act until the arrival of President F. M. Smith." The President of the Quorum of Twelve and the Presiding Evangelist were so selected (General Conference Minutes 1915: 1948). In 1946 "The First Presidency and the President of the Quorum of Twelve [were chosen to] preside over this Conference in all of its meetings, and have power to complete the organization," (Saints' Herald, April 27, 1946, page 7; see also Rules and Resolutions, page 14, paragraph 18).

5. The report of the Credentials Committee is now available at the opening of General Conference and is usually adopted without delay (see General Conference Resolution 617).

6. In 1915 President E. A. Smith surrendered the chair to the President of the Quorum of Twelve while the President of the High Priesthood and of the Church was selected (General Conference Minutes 1915: 2049). In 1946 President I. A. Smith stated: "In harmony with the law and precedents of the church, at this juncture [during the selection of the President] we turn the Presidency of the Conference over to the Quorum of Twelve in the person of President Paul M. Hanson."

7. Since 1844 six counselors in the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have served without prior ordination to the Council of Twelve, as follows: John W. Young, John R. Winder, Jedediah M. Grant, Daniel H. Wells, Charles W. Nibley, and J. Reuben Clark, Jr.

8. The remainder of the "Letter" is chiefly concerned with matters of history and has no significant bearing on the present situation in the Church. It is omitted so as to conserve space but may be studied in the complete versions already referred to.

Nashua Congregation

Nine Years Old

APRIL 10, 1949, was a day to live long in the hearts and memories of church members in the Nashua area. That beautiful Sunday nine years ago marked the beginning of the Nashua congregation as well as the dedication of its little white church home.

Nashua, Missouri, a small community located in Clay County, is situated in the angle between Highway 169 and 71 by-pass about twelve miles north of Kansas City. At this point 71 by-pass constitutes the line between Kansas City Stake and Far West Stake.

Late in 1948 Kansas City Stake purchased the old Baptist Church in Nashua to make a church home for members scattered throughout the area. The property was secured for $1,400.00, and an additional $1,600.00 was spent for remodeling the building and installing a new furnace.

Since no organized group existed in the area at that time, the purchase was made from the Kansas City Stake building fund and presented debt free to the Nashua congregation by Kansas City Stake Bishop L. Wayne Updike at the time it was officially organized.

Prior to this time a number of Saints had incorporated in buying land to form a community near Nashua. Havenwood, established with Zionistic ideals in mind, was composed of members from various congregations in Kansas City Stake. They, as well as other members living in the area, continued to drive to the individual churches they had attended before moving out of Kansas City. Some went to Bennington, others to Grandview, Kansas; Malvern Hill, Quindaro, Van Brunt, and Liberty, Missouri. The need and desire to meet together in a common local group had begun to be felt and discussed when the Baptists voted to build larger, more modern facilities and offered the white frame building for sale. It certainly seemed to the Saints that the Lord was extending his hand to provide the desires of their hearts at this time, and as soon as the transaction was completed they made enthusiastic plans for remodeling.

Stake President J. D. Anderson and Bishop Updike frequently conferred with the members as they met night after night to reconstruct the interior. On one occasion Brother Updike remarked, with reference to the local community, "You know you can't drive darkness out of a room by fighting it, only by bringing in a light."

The members themselves did nearly all of the work of remodeling, and gradually through their loving, consecrated efforts and the blessings of God as all worked together, the interior of the old building was transformed into a place of worship, beautiful in its simplicity.

Mr. David B. Runnels, well-known Kansas City architect, generously gave counsel and advice on several aspects of the work, and the church members gratefully acknowledge their appreciation for his help. It was at his suggestion that a system of indirect lighting was installed to replace the ceiling lights of former years.

The walls were finished in pale green, which was set off beautifully by the natural finish wood paneling across the front and back of the chapel and along the rostrum. Wood paneling also covers the lower half of the entrance hall. More recently the ceiling has been refinished with ivory insulating tile. Pews of various shapes and sizes were remodeled to fit the seating arrangement. All were refinished to give the appearance of natural wood; the piano and organ were given the same treatment. All painting was under the direction of Brother Cecil Ainsworth, who is a painting contractor.

Upon entering the auditorium one's attention is drawn immediately to the large print of Sallman's "Head of Christ" that hangs on the wall behind the rostrum. Maroon velvet drapes and pale gray center carpeting add finishing touches.

Working steadfastly in this common effort drew the members together in close bonds of fellowship that could have been achieved in no other way. Surely the Master was made glad to see the spirit of joyful devotion that prevailed.

Finally all was in readiness for the opening service April 10. Stake President J. D. Anderson made the formal dedication, and the opening sermon was delivered by Radio Minister Evan A. Fry to the crowded church. High Priest David France was appointed by the Kansas City Stake to supervise the work of this new group, and Elder C. S. Hawker was chosen to be his associate. Other members of the priesthood were Elder J. W. Dunagan, Priest Ivan E. Bird, and Deacon Cecil Ainsworth. Thus a new congregation was added to Kansas City Stake. Although it had a small beginning with only twenty-four members in 1949, the group has grown steadily through the years until now the enrollment totals one hundred and forty four members. Recently the growth has been more marked, due in part to the rapid increase in population in this vicinity.

As the congregation grew, the need for additional classroom space became more acute. In 1954 plans were approved for an addition to the church to provide the necessary space. Again the work was undertaken by the men of the congregation; it was finished in 1956 at a total cost of $7,500.00.

The new addition provides a junior auditorium, a well-equipped kitchen, and rest rooms. Many of the kitchen utensils, cutlery, utility tables, a high chair, and a play pen have been acquired by pooling the savings stamps received by members of the congregation. At present all available space is in use for church school classes, and it is apparent that the group may again be faced with the need to expand facilities.

Through the years Nashua has had a number of ordinations, baptisms, blessings, and weddings, as do all active, growing congregations. There are now sixteen priesthood members, with another ordination to take place soon. David France served as pastor from 1949 to July, 1956, when he was released from heavy local responsibility to give his time more fully to the work of the stake high council, of which he is a member. The present presiding elder is Ivan Bird, and his associates are C. S. Hawker and Emil Dunagan.

The Good Things of Zion

A grandmother I know went to visit her son and daughter-in-law. When she arrived at the house there was nobody home except her small grandson. She told the boy, "You probably don't remember me, but I'm your grandmother on your father's side." He replied, "Well, I can tell you right now that you're on the wrong side."

The bickering and marital strife which motivated the little boy's remark is one small example of the evil and destructive things that go on around us and within us. We need Zion to help us get rid of these evil things, but we need Zion even more because of the good things that it will make happen in our lives. Here's a partial list of the good things that Zion will bring to us.

1. Good Companions

We will have the chance to become very well acquainted with other people who put Christ and his work first. These people will be interesting and lovable. Living in the same community with them will be a pleasure.

2. A Christian Education for Our Children

Our children spend very little time in Sunday school classes. Most of their education comes from teachers who have no knowledge or concern about Christ and his church. In Zion children will have the chance to learn about Christ in school as well as at home and church.

3. Inspired Leadership

Economic and political decisions in Zion will be made by men who live close to God. These men will be given divine help in their planning. We can expect God to provide the spiritual gifts of discernment and prophecy to both the residents and leaders of Zion.

4. A Closer Personal Relationship with Christ

In Zion we will be working directly with Christ in his job of helping all people to become worthy to live with God. Every worker in Zion will have added dignity and will feel greater satisfaction because his job is essential in Christ's plan.

A Joint Venture

We Latter Day Saints talk a lot about Zion. Our fervent desire for a Christian community here and now is one of the big things that make us different from other church groups. Zion is the way God has chosen for teaching large groups of men how to live with him.

We Need Zion Now

This means much more than the negative righteousness of refraining from doing evil deeds. Zion is a joint venture between God and man. He needs us just as urgently as we need him.

A minister visited a farmer in his cornfield and remarked how well God had made the corn grow. The farmer replied, "Don't forget that I had a hand in it, too. This field was just a patch of weeds before I came along." The fine corn crop was a joint venture between God and the farmer. God provided the raw materials of soil, water, air, and sunshine. The farmer selected and planted the seeds and then cared for the plants. We would have Zion now if church members would learn to co-operate with God as well as the farmer did.

Three Delaying Compromises

There are many kindly and righteous individuals in the church, but we still don't have Zion. Here are three compromises that keep us from living together in a community under Christ's direction.

1. We Compromise with Money and Material Things

Like the rich young ruler, we obey all of the commandments, but we decide not to follow Christ because we are too concerned with money and material things.

2. We Compromise with Prestige and Social Position

Like Nicodemus, we come to Jesus only secretly. Nicodemus was a wealthy and powerful man among the Jews. He was a good man who recognized Christ's power and had sense enough to go to Christ with his question about salvation. The whole history of the church might have been different if Nicodemus had sacrificed his prestige and social position and openly followed Christ. One of the reasons that we don't have Zion now is the compromise that good men today make for the sake of prestige. We come to Jesus only after a busy day of striving for more social approval.

3. We Compromise with Ignorance

Both Nicodemus and the rich young ruler were good men who went to Jesus to ask questions. Both decided not to follow him. But most people then and now don't care enough to even ask the questions. We don't take the time and trouble to find out what following Christ means. We could find out by Scripture study and by a close prayer relationship with Christ, but we don't. When we stop compromising and begin to follow Christ, we will have Zion. The first step is getting in touch with Christ through prayer and Scripture study.

FEED MY LAMBS

Part II

OFTEN it is just little things which cause a child, upon reaching the fork of the road, to take the road to the right rather than the one which leads to degradation.

Last winter when I was in California I was disturbed by a little pushmobile auto that stood in the yard next door to where I was staying. In childish writing—probably using fingernail polish—such names as “Sally, Judy, and Diana,” and such phrases as “Hi there, baby,” were scrawled all over the body, fenders, and hood of the little car. Though I did not see the boy during my ten days’ stay, I learned he was about nine years old. I could readily foresee that some ten years from now he would probably be driving a well-decorated hot rod down the streets of Los Angeles, unless some other influence entered his life from the outside. Apparently this tendency he was displaying was encouraged, or at least condoned, by his parents.

Who might have an influence which would cause this potential hot-rodder to take the turn to the right at the fork of the road? And a nine-year-old is getting pretty close to the fork of the road! Might a neighbor, who takes an interest in him, be the one to guide him aright?

If you were his neighbor, what might you do for him? To begin, a plate of cookies and a glass of cool milk would invite him over on a hot day. If the cookies are good, he’s likely to hang around for an extra one, and one or the other of you has to say something during the process.

You could pray for him, his parents, and his companions. You could pray that you might have the wisdom, knowledge, and understanding to help in some way to guide him toward the right fork in the road.

Perhaps after a few casual visits there will be opportunity for a story, a “way back when,” or a “long, long ago” story. All children love stories, and they are particularly enthralled by true stories of an earlier day, of the wilds of pioneer times, of the time when “this part of town was way out in the country.” Then there are the hero stories of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and church history, which can be adapted for use even with the child of nonmember parents.

You could do things with him. You know, some of the things you did for your own children. What modern child has ever made a corn husk doll, corn cob bubble pipes, newspaper hats, willow slip whistles? Yet you as a child knew how.

Sometime invite him in to help make a batch of cookies. It is a fallacy to believe that boys are not interested in cooking. A lot of talking and exchanging confidences can be indulged in while waiting ten minutes for each batch of cookies to come out of the oven.

AS THE CHILD becomes interested and better acquainted, you may relate your own experiences with God. Such stories should always be within his understanding and related only as they maintain his rapt attention. Never force such experiences upon another unless he is anxious to hear them. Only as the child has understanding and confidence in you can he accept stories of your relationship with God whom he cannot see and perhaps does not even know.

Teach him the joy of service. Would he go with you to carry a basket of fresh bread to a shut-in? Then while there, forego the usual “old-lady” chatter and give him some attention. Let him see the joy of the recipient. Let him feel the glow of doing something for others. Open other opportunities of service. Be appreciative of every little thing he does for you. Help him to learn that the greatest happiness comes in making others happy.

Talk over current events, particularly those involving teenagers. Discuss the problems which were caused, for example, by the fourteen- and sixteen-year-old couple who eloped, and were gone more than a month before they were found. How did the parents feel? Was it fair that the taxpayers had to stand the expense of the month’s police investigation? Why was it necessary for the police to be in on the situation? Help him to see—through the problems of others—how the thoughtlessness of youth can cause untold difficulties. Perhaps with such a background of knowledge he may think twice before he does some such stunt.

Listen to him. Don’t do all the talking. Listen to him as you sit on the porch crocheting, or piecing quilts, or as you weed your flower garden. Let him get the pent-up feelings off his own chest. The most valuable confidante is the one who is an active listener.

As a listener you must never be shocked at anything that is said; you must never criticize, never blame—just listen. As the child talks, gradually he will come to wonder if he has done the right thing, and then to criticize and blame himself.

He will come to look upon you as a confidante, and adviser, someone pretty special. He is most likely to bring his pals around for you to know, and to know you, because you are not “the crabby old woman up the street” but the “nice old lady who understands.”

THEN YOU BEGIN to enlarge your influence. Perhaps you can branch out into a weekly story hour for his friends and the neighbor children. You can set up a simple little worship center, consisting of a picture and the Bible, with a few flowers from your garden. Or you may get one of the children to help you prepare this worship center.

You can find ways of illustrating your story, using pictures cut from magazines, flannelgraphs, or pipe cleaner figures. You may invite other of your friends, perhaps even your minister, to tell of their experiences from time to time.

And do the children make you nervous? Oh, no, you look forward to the hour you spend with them, because you are concerned for them, because you have prayed for them, because you love them. While they will tire you, it is a tiredness that brings joy you never before knew as you attempt to comply with the Master's summons, "Feed my lambs." There is a special little heaven right here on earth for those who look into the rapt faces of children and see trust, confidence, and love.

You might even find yourself jotting down your own experiences and perhaps even sending them in to the editor of Stepping Stones or Zion's Hope. Then you may find you need some training in writing, and you go on and on from one step to another, as one door after another is opened to you to serve in the work of the Master you love.

Berde Rooney did not really begin to write in earnest until about the time she reached the "social security" age. Because of her love for children, her earnest desire to do something for her Lord, in her declining years she became one of the important writers of children's stories in the church. She became a storyteller known by nearly all the children of Independence, as she never said "No" to a request to tell a story at church school worship, at junior church, at reunions, or just to the child next door. Because of her humility, her anxiety to "do all I can," in her senior years she became a loved personality who touched the lives of many of the Master's lambs.

The next time you have a problem concerning a child, when one drops a bottle in the middle of your sidewalk, drives his bike through your iris bed, or throws a ball through your window, when you want to shout, "There ought to be a law . . ." will you stop for a minute? Will you consider that standing close by your side, striving to get your attention, is the Master and Savior, Jesus, calling you by name and saying, "Lovest thou me more than these?" As you humbly answer, "Yes, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee," realize that the Lord is saying to you, of that particular problem child, "Feed my lamb."

Will your actions prove to the Lord that you do love him more than you love "these things"? Will you honestly be able to repeat and mean the words of this prayer? (It may be sung to the tune of "O Master, Let Me Walk with Thee.")

The Master walked beside the sea, Questioning Peter, "Lovest thou me?
If you love me," the Savior said,
"See that my little lambs are fed."

The Master calls in words so clear,
The summons falls upon my ear,
"This day a shepherd thou shalt be,
Go, lead my little lambs to me."

O Lord, that not a lamb should stray
Far from the straight and narrow way,
Help me that I may know each need,
That I thy little lambs may feed.

Give me thy patience, Lord, I pray,
Teach me what I should do and say.
I'll heed the call that's come to me
To bring the little lambs to thee.

The Family Prays Together

EXCEPT a man and woman pray together habitually and often they will lack full achievement of the kind of marriage, home, and parenthood that is possible for them. For without doubt success in this highest and holiest task of life depends on the presence of Christ in the home; he is the all-important third member of the marriage covenant. For marriage, especially to those of our faith, should be a covenant with each other and with God, one of the sacraments of the church. That God has made man and woman only a "little lower than the angels" is perhaps most evident when they are working together with God to meet the great challenge of Zion's home and parenthood. The potentiality of good Latter Day Saint motherhood and parenthood cannot be overestimated.

If a family prays together, first a family altar must be set up. This involves deciding on some definite time and place to have family worship. If it has started with the first days of marriage these problems of how, when, and where become very simple. And as years go by adjustments and changes to meet varying situations and a growing family are made without much difficulty. Out of the daily worship period in the home come the intensely interesting and exciting developments of teaching the child to pray and helping him to experience God firsthand for himself. So the family goes on from faith to faith. Family worship is not just a beautiful sonorous Scripture and prayer but a real experience of Divine Presence, not a wholly adult service but a family service.

One young mother asked, "How can I teach my children to pray when I've never prayed aloud in my life?" Such a mother needs to begin at once practicing the art of vocal prayer. She soon finds that if her heart and mind desire something earnestly of the Lord—and especially for her family and her church—it is not too hard to articulate that desire. The Lord admonishes, "I command thee that thou shalt pray vocally as well as in thy heart; yea, before the world as well as in secret; in public as well as in private" (Doctrine and Covenants 18: 4 a).

So the members of a family grow together and grow up to higher levels of prayer and spiritual life. They learn out of this mutual worship experience to "pray in faith and pray unceasing." Children, youth, and parents share their experiences of answer to prayer. They seek earnestly together for wisdom and power to do those things each day which need to be done by them. Children and young people see more clearly their school problems and assignments and are enabled at times to do two hours work in one hour. They find doors opening in high school and college to fine opportunities to go on in their learning and study.

In times of financial loss or stress the praying family finds reassurance and comfort in their united faith and prayers. And often in answer to their prayers, God gives them food, clothes, healing, and protection from disaster.

Family worship can stabilize the home and the lives in that home as they become anchored in the sure faith of Jesus Christ.

The Author in 1930

ETHEL does wonderfully well caring for herself and the house and for me. She needs some help from one who can see, and this help I have been glad to give, as for instance in making her checks and in keeping the bank account. It is a joint account, but I keep two books. She has been able to type her letters, but at Christmas time she wrote too many and her arm warned her to do only a little at a time. She has written for Daily Bread as she has been able. I proofread for her to catch an occasional bit of "pi." I read to her as my eyes permit. They are not very good. I have need of her answering the telephone and to hear at other times when I cannot hear.

Mabel Shepherd's mother died in England after she came over here, and she calls me her American mother. While she was living with me our Australian friends, C. George Mesley and George Lewis, were attending Graceland College. We had them over for an English dinner on Christmas Eve. This was the beginning of a lasting friendship with them and their wives.

Mabel has visited me once or twice each year, and I hear from her by letter and through my niece Edith Alden, who is secretary of the Burlington Railroad. Both wrote me of the approaching marriage of Mabel's daughter, Barbara, born when Malcolm was four years old. Mabel used to bring the children with her while they were small when she came to see me. Later they were away at school or working, so I have not seen much of them. Malcolm was married in the fall of 1953.

I began with a bay window full of house plants; but I kept reducing them until now I keep only ferns. The first fern we had was a gift from Sister Yarrington's "fluffy ruffles" fern when Ethel was in the stake office where Brother Yarrington had a fern. From this one we started others, and every now and then we could divide with someone. My ferns, two or three of them grown large, form a background for my chair where I have had to sit so much of the time in later years. They bring a little freshness into the house, and they keep in mind our lasting friendship with the Yarringtons.

Our good friends, Gene and Judy Closson, have cheered us with lilies at Easter time and poinsettias at Christmas time. These have been brought to us by one or the other of them or by one of their sons, keeping up the family feeling of friendship. My niece, Edith, and other friends have sent potted plants. Some have come from my college daughter, now Mrs. Edith Peterson of Beaverton, Michigan.

Bishops McGuire and Carmichael helped me with financial matters after the death of my husband. Other bishops who have given financial counsel have been Brethren Yarrington, J. F. Wildermuth, and T. A. Beck.

Ministrations through the years by E. J. Gleazer, Jr., J. A. Gunsolley, and L. G. Holloway have been much appreciated. More recently I have profited by the counsel of Bishop Earl T. Higdon and Evangelist Roy A. Cheville. Robert S. Farnham has given encouragement in pastoral visits; Wilbur Prall and David Gamet as assistants to the branch president have given most acceptable service.

Our doctors, E. E. Gamet and G. W. Swanson, have given double service as servants of God administering to the sick as well as being physicians for the body.

In the fall of 1951 I was able a few times to go to our group prayer meetings, the first in years. In 1952 I attended the Communion service in the new church, also a union prayer service, and I have been present there at three weddings.

Through trying sick spells, and during other needs, we have found Sister Luella Campbell a devoted friend and helper to whom our gratitude is due.

We had many fine spiritual visits at Lone Rock in the country home of Brother and Sister Charley Jones and their family. He was famous for his readiness to talk gospel under any and every condition where there was an opening or where others might see no opportunity.

When their son, Charles, was a young child, the family with Brother Holloway and others witnessed a very remarkable case of healing when he was restored after being at the point of death.

Once when Brother Holloway was preaching in a northern state, he saw Brother Jones in his Missouri home, on his knees, praying for him. Brother Holloway was feeling great need of help from the Lord. The petition was answered with liberty in his preaching.

EACH YEAR for a number of years I had one or two college daughters whom I remember with pleasure. Some of them remember me with letters or cards at Christmas time. Our interest in Graceland students brought many of them, both boys and girls, to our home where we took pleasure in serving them with occasional meals or between-time lunches. It is with regret that because of the frailties of age and other health conditions we are no longer able to do this, but we welcome any from the college who call on us.

I remember the first time I met Sister Lester and her two daughters, Carrie and Martha. It was the day before our baby Ruth was born. Carrie was a shy little girl. Martha was a few years older. We were friends through the years. Carrie married Randall Robinson and they have three sons with families of their own. Martha prepared herself for teaching, and became our famous fourth grade teacher. Recently she was honored at the fiftieth anniversary of teaching the same grade. Parents and grandparents of her present pupils who had been in her classes joined in the celebration. And still she goes on teaching. She is a member of the Robinsons' household.

Randall was a son of Brother and Sister W. P. Robinson who for some years were the highly appreciated superintendent and matron of our Children's Home. A recent visit from their daughter, Helen Robinson Knight, has given us much pleasure. She was here to attend the funeral of Clarence Lester, brother of Martha and Carrie.

Roscoe and Grace Faunce have been our faithful friends in sickness and at other times, and their youngest son Billie has been our stand-by for odd jobs. Each Christmas Eve they have come in with the whole family, three boys and Janice, to sing carols for us. As shut-ins we have been favored by many carolers from the college, the high school, and the grades. At some other times a whole roomful of children would come to sing for us.

Our group, Number Two, always remembers us at Christmas with a basket of fruit and some caroling. One cold time they all came into the house to sing around the decorated dining table. The juniors, primaries, and beginners are sometimes brought into our home for talks and singing.

The neighborhood children have given us much enjoyment with their brief visits. The children of Brother and Sister Deam Ferris have come often. We have had some serious talks with Tary who likes to talk about her spiritual life. We have been pleased when she has told us of times when she felt the influence of the Holy Spirit.

THE LAST prayer meeting I attended in 1952 was in the new home of Brother and Sister William Gould that replaced the frame house where Bishop E. L. Kelley and his family lived before they moved to Independence. The following week the meeting was in the Chevillie home, and we were planning to go.

I had a pan of bruised peaches that I wanted to prepare for canning the next day. They were the last that fell from a tree of fine large peaches that would be picked the next day, and I wanted to get done with the bruised ones. A little after five o'clock as I sat down to work with them there came to me a gentle prompting of the Spirit to let them wait until the next day. I thought, "I have plenty of time to finish these and rest awhile before getting ready to go to the meeting."

I had eaten no supper; I would eat some of the bruised peaches and let that be my supper. The doctor told us later that that fruit on an empty stomach would cause nausea, but I did not know it then. And how little did I realize what I was doing in not heeding the kind advice I had received.

I finished the peaches, put them in the refrigerator, and put away the work things. I sat with Ethel long enough to have our Daily Bread lesson and prayer. Then I lay across the foot of the bed till I thought it was time to be getting ready for the meeting. When I arose I became dizzy and fell, bumping my forehead. I got up, reached for the camphorated oil, and rubbed the lump that already was forming. I lay down again and Ethel came to care for me, for the nausea was severe. When that was over, she helped me undress and get to bed where I stayed for six weeks or more. It was three months before I left my room.

The blow caused severe pain in the back of my head, neck, and shoulders, which gradually grew less, but left some effects for a long time. At times I cried with the pain, but that was not as hard to endure as the suffering in my mind and heart. I thought, "Oh, what have I done to my dear Savior and friend?" I had been so assured of acceptance with God, and so happy in the comfort of the Spirit. My blessing tells me that the directing influence of the Holy Spirit will be given me "more and more." This that I received was in fulfillment of that promise, and I failed to heed. In a moment, by my fall, I saw my nothingness. How dared I prefer my own judgment? Perhaps I was too confident to sense my danger. How could I ever ask to be forgiven? I found that the Lord can and does forgive, but he cannot save us from the consequences of our wrong choices.

MY WRONG choice this time involved not only myself, but my cousin, Ethel, who was constant in her attentions; Nellie Newlin, our faithful helper; and my niece, Edith Alden, who came from Chicago to help care for me. With night travel she came seven successive week ends, and others at longer intervals, going into office work at once when she got back Monday morning.

I was weighted down with remorse. One day I read in the Psalms: "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven." I wondered if mine would ever be forgiven. I had received evidence that I had not been "forsaken," but though I truly and deeply repented, it was hard for me to believe that I had been forgiven, and the remorse continued. When I read the Twenty-third Psalm I prayed that the time might come when I could say, "He restoreth my soul."

After I was able to leave my room I sat with my cousin to resume our Scripture talks. We read one day that after giving faithful service one's whole life through, one is still an unprofitable servant. We wondered how this would accord with "Well done, good and faithful servant." We reasoned it out to our satisfaction.

The next morning I awoke early and in the light of these Scriptures I was going over my problem. I wondered if any kind of approval could ever be spoken to me.

As I pondered I was conscious of sweet music filtering into my brain. It was not in the room. I was not hearing with ears. As it kept on I got the tune and then the words:

The sweetest voice e'er known
Says, Child, am I not with thee,
Never to leave thee alone?

That was the end—just the message to me. When the music stopped, the Spirit remained in a measure. I had feared I might never again receive it. When it receded, as I tried to take in what had been given to me, I said, "He restoreth my soul." This was the answer to my prayer. The shadow was lifted and Ethel said I had a different look from that time on.

O hope of every contrite soul,
O joy of all the meek;
To those that fall, how kind thou art,
How good to all who seek.

HOW COMFORTING this experience was, and how gracious to me what I had lost. Oh, the happiness that would have followed my compliance with the heavenly direction. The weather was beautiful all that fall, and I might have been in the group prayer meetings if I had not fallen. I did not walk far, but I had walked across the street and on to the church entrance for forenoon services. I had attended three afternoon weddings in the church and one evening union prayer meeting.

Soon after getting around this time I took the flu and had three months more in my room. Now I move about very slowly in danger of falling from weakness. This may not be strange at my age (I write in my ninety-fifth year). Still I think it partly the result of my one hard fall. I tell this story of my loss in the hope that it may cause some others to be very careful to heed the promptings of the Holy Spirit. I am sure they are always given in wisdom and love.

Question

I have a historical account of the opening of the far west entitled Men to Match My Mountains by Irving Stone. This book states on page 219 that Brigham Young married a widow of the prophet Joseph Smith whose name was Augusta Adams, and the following year married a second of his widows, Olive Frost.

What does our church have to say about such a record?

California

MRS. E. D.

Answer

Both the Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine, Volume 11, page 54, and Pictures and Biographies of Brigham Young and His Wives list Augusta Adams as married to Brigham Young on November 2, 1843. If this date for her marriage is correct, then she could not have been the "widow" of Joseph Smith, who lived until June 27, 1844.

Both this date and her marriage to Joseph Smith are highly questionable. Augusta Adams was born in Massachusetts in 1802. There is evidence that during her residence in Nauvoo she was married to a man named Cobb. She was still known by the name of Cobb in Utah, being listed as Augusta A. Cobb, a native of Massachusetts, age 49, in the 1850-1851 United States Census of Utah. At this time she had a daughter, Charlotte, age fourteen. In the 1860 Census she is listed among the wives of Brigham Young residing at his home with her daughter, then age twenty-four. This would indicate that the marriage to Young was performed some time after 1851, rather than in 1843 as alleged.

In the Nauvoo Neighbor for November 8, 1843, there is an obituary for a child named Brigham Cobb, age five months and twenty days. The obituaries of this issue are for people who had died during the week ending October 30, 1843. Presumably this was Augusta's son. If so, it is hardly likely in those days of formal mourning periods that she would marry Brigham Young less than a week after the death of her son, especially since Brigham had returned to Nauvoo from a four months' absence on October 22, 1843, less than two weeks before his "marriage."

Information about Olive Grey Frost is still more meager and contradictory than in the case of Augusta Adams. Andrew Jenson, historian for the Utah Church, includes her in a list of Joseph Smith's wives but gives no date for the marriage. Brigham Young's Pedigree Chart in the Genealogical Archives in Salt Lake City lists Olive Frost as one of Young's plural wives, with a notation, "Probably married to Andrews." Olive Grey Frost was in Europe with her sister and brother-in-law, Parley P. Pratt, between the fall of 1840 and April 12, 1843, and was still single at the time of her return to Nauvoo. The date of her marriage to Brigham Young is given as February, 1845. The Nauvoo Neighbor for November 8, 1843, carried an obituary for a Mr. J. A. W. Andrews, age thirty-three. Whether this was the husband of Olive Andrews is not clear.

I can find no clear evidence as to whether Olive Grey Frost and Olive Andrews were the same person or two different persons, except that different birth dates are given and that Olive Frost died October 6, 1845, while Olive Andrews is reported in the Nauvoo Temple Record (a Utah document) to have been married to Joseph Smith "for eternity" and to Brigham Young "for time" in January, 1846. The book Pictures and Biographies of Brigham Young and His Twenty-six Wives, authorized and published by him in Salt Lake City, does not list an Olive Andrews and gives the date of Young's marriage to Olive Grey Frost as February, 1845.

On such fragmentary, inconclusive, contradictory evidence as this we are asked to believe that these women were the "wives" of Joseph Smith.

Question

I have noticed that many churches have dedication ceremonies for every article of furniture or equipment placed in their building, ranging from Communion equipment to heating systems. What is the attitude of our church in regard to this? Is a pastor remiss in placing anything, say a Communion tray, in circulation without first dedicating it?

Australia

D. H. J.

Answer

There is nothing in our church law nor in the customs of our people that would require dedication ceremonies for every article of furniture or equipment placed in the building. If such were the case we might find ourselves in the position of not only requiring dedication of a Communion tray but of also dedicating serving glasses purchased to replace broken ones. Whether or not an item of equipment should be dedicated is a matter for local officers to determine. Normally, it would include only major items such as new pews, a new organ, a new pulpit, or any other addition representing the product of special efforts of the congregation. It might include something to which sentimental value is attached, as in the case of a memorial to some individual whom the congregation desires to especially honor. Even in the case of special gifts, however, donors should not feel that their gifts should be dedicated. A simple statement printed in the bulletin or orally expressed, acknowledging the gift, will usually be all that is necessary. Such gifts may also be

Question

Where in the Scriptures does it state specifically John the Baptist's authority to preach and to baptize?

H. N.

Alabama

Answer

While the actual ordination of John the Baptist is not recorded in the Bible there are several references indicating his authority to preach and baptize. John was of priesthood lineage since his father was "of the course of Abia" and his mother "being of the daughters of Aaron" (Luke 1: 5). His authority was first announced to his father, Zacharias, by an angel who said, "Thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John. Thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth; for he shall be great in the sight of the Lord" (Luke 1: 13-15). Luke 1: 58-78 of the Inspired Version gives additional information concerning John's authority which is not in the King James Version.

His authority to preach and baptize is related in the writings of Mark: "As it is written in the prophets. Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" (Mark 1: 1-3). Jesus recognized the authority of John: "and it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan" (Mark 1: 7).

The exact time that John was ordained to this authority is not recorded in the Bible. However, we should keep in mind the above Scriptures which indicate he did have authority.

The foregoing approach to the question has been from the Bible only. In Latter Day Saint thinking the term "Scriptures" includes the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants as well as the Bible. In Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4e we read "for he [John the Baptist] was baptized while he was yet in his childhood, and was ordained by the angel of God at the time he was eight days old unto this power."

Girl Guide officers congratulate June on her receiving the Gold Cord

R.L.D.S. Girl Guide Receives Gold Cord Award

Fifteen-year-old June Northey of Ottawa, Ontario, recently received the Gold Cord achievement award. Officials in this district of the Girl Guides Association believe she is the only girl in Canada to be awarded the Gold Cord who holds a blue first class certificate.

Left with partial paralysis in her left side following meningitis at the age of two-and-one-half years, June was not able to obtain certification in swimming and three other standards in the criteria for a first class certificate. Other qualifying tests, equally difficult, were offered her as alternatives, and she passed them successfully. The award of a blue first class certificate signified her ability in skills for which she is not handicapped.

Most of her badges were earned in home craft and outdoor activities. She proudly wears the Religion and Life badge on her tunic.

June is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Northey whose philosophy includes the wisdom that God gives one compensating factor for another and whose cheerful devotion to June and her small brother, Bruce, Jr., has won the admiration of all church members in Ottawa since their arrival from Guelph, six years ago. June joined a Brownie pack at the age of eight years in Guelph, Ontario. At twelve years she became a Girl Guide. Now a company leader, she has served two years as a patrol leader and camp group leader. After she is sixteen she hopes to teach and test little Brownies, adding wistfully "perhaps some day in our own church."

Elder Calvin Carpenter, pastor of the Ottawa Branch, was asked to speak at the ceremony which took place at City View United Church. A meeting of the women's department was canceled so that members could accept June's invitation to attend.

PHYLLIS GRAVELEY

Such authority is passed from one to another by ordination. Read Hebrews 5: 4; Numbers 3: 10 and 27: 18-23; John 15: 16; Doctrine and Covenants 17: 12. Therefore it is safe to postulate that John the Baptist had been properly ordained and thus possessed the authority to preach and baptize.

Plan for Church Building

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.—The Nashville mission continues to grow in size both by baptisms and by members moving to the city.

Recently the group purchased a lot for a church building. The lot is located in a new subdivision of Woodbine, a suburb of greater Nashville. Plans are under way and are nearing completion for beginning work on the building.

The group has been hard at work to add funds for the building of the church. The women's department, with the co-operation of the Zion's League, has been quite successful with sales of various kinds. The most outstanding of these projects was the sale of handmade stuffed toy animals. Local department stores have been receptive and co-operative with the projects.

Responsibility for Sunday evening church services is being shared. Commission chairmen from the Zion's League have been responsible for some very fine services. The music director has directed the group in learning new hymns.

On May 25 Brother Gene Music was ordained to the office of priest by Elder H. E. Jennings, mission pastor, and Elder Jack Wyatt, missionary for the Memphis District. Also on May 25 the mission was visited by the district president, Elder Thomas Gough, who spoke at the Sunday evening service.—Reported by ROBBIE SALMON ning of July 16 eleven Latins were baptized into the church. The decision of five others had been given, but they were unable to participate in this service for various reasons. They will, without doubt, be baptized in the very near future.

Of those baptized and of those who have given their decisions to be baptized, ten are able to speak both English and Spanish. Nine of them are students in either high school or grade school. The occupations of the adults baptized are those of farmer, housewives, store owner, and salesman. Two of those baptized live in Matamoros, Mexico, and are related to members of another family who were baptized at the same service and live near Weslaco.

Ten other Latin-American people have been baptized into the Weslaco congregation before this date and since the first of this year. We are very happy that we have been able to participate in such experiences as these.

Some of those already baptized, and those with whom cottage meetings are being held, were contacted through church members and by a letter-writing and visiting program. A series of three or six tracts and accompanying letters were sent to about a total of eighty Latin-American homes. A follow-up visiting program was carried on by the two appointees assigned to the Latin-American work. We feel that this method of approach helped us to meet the people on a better basis than just a door-to-door program. This idea was not original with us but was patterned after a program similar to one planned for the Gallatin, Missouri, congregation by Brother William Rounds.

We sincerely feel that the Lord has "given the increase," and that he has opened up many doors of opportunity for the Latin-American work near the area of Weslaco.

Paying Tithing

The other day I was challenged more than I have been for some time in regard to paying tithing.

I called upon an aged sister in her ninety-first year. She is one of my responsibilities as a minister; when she leaves this world of things, I shall have the funeral service. Quite suddenly she took double pneumonia and the doctor did not give her much chance of recovery. I was at Port Elgin Reunion and advised of the situation by long-distance telephone. We had special prayers. As soon as I returned I called on her. She was too weak to talk much, but she wanted to tell me something. I suggested that I come back again when she would be stronger, but she insisted on talking.

She said, "I am so thankful I had my tithing paid up until the end of August." The dear old soul! I did not think she owed any tithing. After coming through this severe illness, she rejoiced that her tithing had been paid up to date. There were tears of joy in her eyes as she told me. Struggling for more breath she said, "Why doesn't everyone pay tithing? It would mean so much to the individual, and the church would go ahead so much faster."

I go to minister to this sister quite frequently, and God has been good to her, but she also ministers to me. I hope I shall never forget her gospel fervor and her firm faith in God.

Honest Dollars

I wish to mention some things that we as workers and businessmen, in order to gain friends and make more money, are prone to do which we would be much better off if we did not do.

These are such things as joining organizations which involve us in unchristian conduct; overinsuring for security; overbuying on installments; the production, use, handling, or selling of detrimental things such as liquor, tobacco, questionable literature, toy pistols for children, and games involving chance; speculation leading to lotteries and gambling; things involving unnecessary Sabbath labor; and the putting of large fruit on top of the basket, or other schemes to get extra money. Even if the income is used for tithes or offerings, such practices are not good.

I wish to bear my humble testimony born of experience and deep conviction. The fellow who will avoid these things, continuing in good works, will be rewarded a hundred-fold within reasonable time; he will not lack in his share of friends and customers or necessary money to pay for every essential requirement according to his circumstances in life. The Lord will protect him from many expensive losses and disasters and in other ways make his honest dollar go as far as ten dollars of ill-gotten gain.

One in Spirit

I may be among the very few church members who feel led to claim three church homes. The Dow City Branch has been my home congregation since my baptism in 1914; here I find joy and contentment and inspiration. Here is where I found solace and true friendship when I lost my companion in 1956.

Since then I have spent some time in Missouri with my daughter and her family. Each time I visit her I enjoy associating with the Saints at Mansfield mission. Leave-taking always brings regrets, and I look forward to returning.

Last winter I spent two months with my youngest daughter and her family in southern California and attended the Anaheim Branch. I soon became a part of it and enjoyed the same cordial greetings from old and young alike. When I left for home, there were expressions of regret.

The uplift I received by attending the mid-week prayer services in these two places cannot be overestimated. I was especially helped by the prayers and testimonies of the young people. Attendance was not large, but God's spirit was there. This commonality of purpose can be observed throughout the church, whether it be in a branch on the west coast or a mission in the Ozarks.

Book Review

Riverside Sermons

by Harry Emerson Fosdick

Harper and Brothers,

I am amazed at Mr. Fosdick's ability to interpret the Scripture and make practical application to daily living. In a larger sense this work attempts to prove that the gospel will meet every human need. Clarity, relevance, and conciseness are marked achievements in his approach to human needs, needs of the church, and the individual relation to both.

Those familiar with the message of the Restoration will be impressed with his concept and approach to the social gospel. His treatise of "man's deepest need, the sense of community" reminds me of our own ideal of Zion. He points out that the gospel is for all men; peace, security, and brotherhood can be achieved only as men learn that brotherhood comes through sonship.

Mr. Fosdick indicates that human life is caught between two contending currents: unifying forces that create proximity and disruptive forces that prevent community. How great distances once seemed between nations! Now, how countless forces crowd us together! Thrown together by some forces, disrupted by others, we cannot unscramble ourselves. We cannot go back to isolation. Our only hope is to go forward into community.

A missionary of our Lord Jesus once said, "if there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, seek after it." I believe this book to be praiseworthy.

State Board Examinations

Thirty senior student nurses spent July 24 and 25 in Columbia, Missouri, taking State Board Examinations. Every graduate professional nurse must pass these examinations to secure her license to practice and her legal title of R.N. (Registered Nurse).

Fellowship Service

The student nurses held a special fellowship service on July 21 to honor the senior class. The evening began with games and sports on the East Lawn under the leadership of Lucresha Swetnem of Hardy, Arkansas. Supper was served out on the lawn under the management of Dorothy McCown of Benton City, Missouri. The fellowship service around the campfire was led by Marjorie Doig and Mildred Carter of Independence, and Sharon Sturgeon of New Albany, Indiana. Chaplain Farnham talked to the group. Prayers were offered for peace and calmness to be with the seniors as they approached the State Board Examinations.

New Residence Supervisor

Miss Gladys Duffey of Independence has joined the staff of residence supervisors. She is on the night tour of duty. Student nurses, their guests, and alums find Miss Duffey a gracious hostess at the Nurses' Residence during the evening and night hours.

Dr. Saunders Entertains

Many alums of the School of Nursing will read this item with a feeling of nostalgia. On July 16, Dr. and Mrs. Everett Saunders entertained the senior class with a lawn supper. This has become an annual event to which student nurses look forward with anticipation.

And Finally...

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR TEN-AGERS

1. Trust and obey your parents.
2. Don't let your parents down—they brought you up.
3. Be humble enough to obey; you may be giving orders yourself someday.
4. Don't shove off when driving. If you want to race, go to Indianapolis.
5. Choose a date who would make a good mate.
6. Go to church faithfully. God gave you seven days, give him one.
7. Choose friends carefully. You are what they are.
8. Avoid following the crowd. Be an engine and not a caboose.
9. Even if you get off the track, be your own engine.
10. Remember that love, faith, and works are the pillars of Zion.

TROUBLEMAKER

Keep your nose to the grindstone. The shorter it is, the less trouble it will get you into.

"A BEAUTIFUL NAME"

It has been said that the name which sounds sweetest is your own. Yet I have known a few people who did not like their names. They insisted on nicknames, or even had the courts change their names. Uncle Sherm used to say, "I don't care what they call me, unless they call me 'Too-late-for-dinner.'"

Many of us have been bothered with the length of the name of our church. It seems so much simpler to have a short name such as the Methodists or Lutherans have. The members of the dominant church in Utah have with increasing frequency referred to themselves or have accepted the term "Mormon" for the same reason no doubt.

At the 1956 General Conference considerable time was spent discussing a change in the name of our church. The point at issue was raised by those who thought the term "Reorganized" should be changed to "Restored." Just before the vote was taken to keep the name we have, a rider was tacked on deploring the shortening of the name or use of initials, R.L.D.S.

All of this leads up to an observation made by a Methodist pastor in England. Members of the women's department of the Wigan Branch had presented a Mother's Day program in his church. Mrs. M. H. Siegfried relates that the pastor complimented them on their program and added, "You have a beautiful name for your church," as he invited them to come again.

Think it over and say the name, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, reverently and softly. It is poetic, and it is beautiful. C. B. H.

INSTRUMENT OF COMPASSION

Paderewski, in Carnegie Hall, at the close of World War I, declared: "We shall save the world, not with passion but with compassion." The world's largest instrument of compassion today is the United Nations with its magnificent programs for children, health, food, labor, and research.

Justin James and Elder Connell

Elder W. E. Connell Looks Forward to Baptism of Second Pakistani

JUSTIN AZIM JAMES, the first convert to the Reorganized Church in Pakistan, was baptized June 9 in a canal near Peshawar by Elder W. E. Connell.

The baptism came after a two-year period of friendship and instruction during which Brother Connell conveyed the message of the Restoration to Justin.

Brother and Sister Connell and their family are living in West Pakistan while Brother Connell is teaching at the University of Peshawar as an exchange professor. Their home was formerly Fort Collins, Colorado, where Brother Connell was on the faculty of Colorado A and M College.

When they arrived in Pakistan nearly two years ago, Mrs. Connell started a Sunday school class for the five kindergarten-age American and Canadian children who lived on the Peshawar University campus. Brother Connell began teaching an adult Bible class with five or six persons attending. One of the members of the class was Justin James, a university student who was already a Christian.

"We spent many hours on Sundays and evenings talking about the kingdom of God and the Restoration," Brother Connell recalls. "Justin's religious background was Roman Catholic, but he soon accepted the full gospel of Christ."

On the day of the baptism the Connells, Justin, his mother, and two sisters, drove to a large canal where Justin was baptized. The party then returned to the Connells' home for the confirmation service.

"We felt the presence of the Spirit during this service, and I noticed Justin wiped tears from his eyes as he took his seat after the confirmation prayer," Brother Connell wrote.

First Pakistan Member Baptized

The next Sunday Justin partook of his first Communion emblems in the restored church.

Brother Connell also reports that Justin's cousin, Elwin Iftikhar James, also desires baptism but is now working at a distant city and could not be present for the first baptismal service.

Justin James has been accepted as a student at Graceland College for the fall term of 1959. He hopes to be able to attend through the assistance of the Graceland World Fellowship Fund. He has had an article published in Stride (October, 1957), which was a testimony of his regard for Brother Connell and the church. Justin has also translated the tract "The Great Restoration," by Elbert A. Smith, into the Urdu language.

The first baptism in Pakistan came just two months after Brother Connell drove to Delhi, India, to baptize six members of the Gideon family—the first native church members in India (see the Saints' Herald for June 23, 1958, page 8).

God's Will and Common Consent

The first in a series of editorials concerning General Conference

AT THE HEART of General Conference lies our concept of common consent.

To exercise common consent it is necessary to have a method of expression—a Conference. Legislating the business of the church through common consent is the central purpose of General Conference.

This year as the delegates and visitors gather to Independence on October 5-12 for Conference there is good reason for them to do so in a spirit of expectancy and confidence. There are important things to be done. Yet we can expect guidance through the gift of the Holy Spirit. Because of our concept of common consent we can also expect harmony and unity in what is done.

Perhaps our best instruction on how the business of the church is to be conducted is found in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section 27:4c: "neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith."

IT IS important to note in this revelation given to Joseph Smith in 1830 that there are four points to observe in conducting the church's business:

1. Nothing shall be done that is contrary to the law previously received by the church.
2. All things must be done in order, as prescribed by the law of the church, of the land, and the dictates of saintly conscience.
3. All things must be done by common consent in the church.
4. Prayers of faith are to help us discern what is to be done.

Through this revelation and the others that mention common consent—and still others that refer to it indirectly—it is plain the Lord made an effort to guarantee that the church conduct its business through the exercise of democratic principles.

The term "theocratic democracy" is frequently used to describe our church's government. The term is correct in that it means God stands at our head and we look to him for active leadership. Conference Resolution 849 reads: "This church, as defined by the late Joseph Smith, is a theocratic democracy—not man-made, but of divine appointment and origin."

God has affirmed and reaffirmed the need for common consent. We have no reason to assume common consent was put into the church law as a courtesy. God gave us the principle to use.

COMMON consent involves sainthood. To use the principle in the spirit in which it was given we must remember that God gave it to his church for the transaction of his business. Therefore it must be used in his spirit. That is the spirit of love and divine purpose.

Common consent involves our whole way of life. It can be made effective only if the members of the church have grown accustomed to living in the spirit of unity, co-operation, and consent to the will of God and to the will of the majority of their brothers and sisters.

Common consent implies compromise as well as co-operation. Every effort is made to arrive at God's will in a spirit which will permit the support of all. In democratic action there is the right of the minority to try to become the majority. However, that right fades when the vote is taken. When the issue in question is passed it ceases to be an issue. It becomes the law of the church and should receive the full support of all until General Conference takes action.

We believe God works with this church today through the power of his Holy Spirit and that a share of his divine wisdom rests with each person that seeks him.

If members of the Conference and the church attend to their responsibilities and seek God's will, and if their actions are in harmony with the law and all safeguards have been utilized to insure the will of the majority, we can expect the Conference legislation to be in harmony with God's plans. It is then logical to expect the consent and support of the church at large of the Conference actions.

If our concept of God's will and the principle of common consent are correct, then the legislative process of General Conference should be the highest expression on earth of God and men at work together.

Olson on Way Home

Bishop DeLapp reports that a dispatch from Carrol Olson in Sydney, Australia, says that he leaves on August 8 to return to America. His condition is much improved, but it was thought that a stop in Tahiti now was not advisable. He will be in the States August 18 or 20.

OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

The following document is a copy of the resolution adopted by the Board of Trustees of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital at its July 23 meeting:

President Israel A. Smith gave many years of service to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital, having served as a member of the Board and as secretary-treasurer from June 16, 1920, to January 30, 1925. He served again at a later period from November 2, 1938, being elected president of the board May 1, 1946. In this office he served until the time of his death, June 14, 1958.

The excellent contribution that he made in this capacity has had far-reaching effect in the life of the institution and certainly in the lives of every member of the Board of Trustees, the administrator, and all who came in contact with his gracious personality. He served with efficiency, with dignity, and always with an appreciation of the services of the members of the board, the administration, and all those who make up the personnel of this institution.

We of the Board of Trustees pay tribute to him and express our sincere regret in the great loss which has been felt in his death. We wish to express our sympathy to his son Don, and family, and to his brothers and sister.

Reports of outstanding reunion experiences are being received from areas through the United States and Canada. Elder Charles Graham, president of the Center Stake, reported a total of over twelve hundred people attending the two reunions of the stake. He adds, "We feel that as a result of our fine experience at the reunions this year the work in the Center Stake certainly should go forward with greater acceleration and that our reunion experiences will pay great dividends in our work here in the months that are ahead."

Apostle D. O. Chesworth reported that the Port Elgin, Sanford, and Detroit International Stake, reunions were excellent experiences with excellent teamwork among the members of the staffs.

Elder James Daugherty wrote concerning the Spokane, Washington, Reunion, "There were over two hundred registered. All seemed to feel it was a lovely experience."

Elder Fred O. Davies, president of the Kansas City Stake, reported that six hundred and forty people attended that stake's reunion. He adds, "We had a group of loyal and co-operative workers, and the general reaction seemed to be that 'It was a wonderful experience.'"

Apostle E. J. Gleazer recently returned from his mission reporting that Memphis, Tennessee; Brewton, Alabama; and Arkansas-Louisiana reunions were of high quality.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Seventy Allen Breckenridge writes from Tahiti, French Oceania:

On the evening of July 18 the Saints here conducted a reception in honor of both Apostle Hield, who was leaving the next Sunday morning, and Bishop Donald A. Alberts, who had arrived that same afternoon from Australia. They were well received by a large assembly in a characteristic Tahitian manner. As usual there were a number of welcoming addresses and songs by groups from the various branches and missions.

Over the years the people have become rather well acquainted with Brother Hield and have a deep appreciation for his ministry and devotion to the work. There were many genuine expressions of regret that he must leave at this time.

While the Saints are not yet acquainted with Bishop Alberts, they appreciate the fact that he has come to assist them in the construction of their new church building.

GENERAL CONFERENCE HOUSING ACCOMMODATIONS BULLETIN

1. Prospective visitors to the 1958 General Conference are again urged to make private arrangements for rooms if at all possible.
2. The Housing Committee advises that final assignments to Independence homes will be mailed to applicants beginning with the week of September 8.

Theocratic Responsibility

GOD'S PURPOSE in man is clearly and simply stated in Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23 b: "This is my work and my glory, to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man."

God's greatest privilege granted to man is the right to choose whether or not to share that eternal life with God. This fact is plainly stated in Doctrine and Covenants 12: 3 a, b: "Seek to bring forth and establish my Zion. Keep my commandments in all things; and if you keep my commandments and endure to the end, you shall have eternal life; which gift is the greatest of all the gifts of God."

It should be noted that while eternal life is God's greatest gift to man, the terms on which this gift is given are provisional. In other words, man can enjoy this gift only in proportion to what he does to earn it. The above quotation clearly lists three such provisions:

1. Seek to bring forth and establish my Zion.
2. Keep my commandments.
3. Endure to the end.

Then, and then only, can God's greatest gift of eternal life become available to man.

In order to make these provisions most effective in man's life, God gave him the freedom to choose for himself what he would do. The story of this is best told in God's explanation to Moses recorded in Genesis 3: 1-5, I.V.

And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning.

And he came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor.

But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine for ever.

Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him; and also that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten I caused that he should be cast down; and he became Satan.

Yea, even the devil, the father of all lies, to deceive, and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice.

The Great Difference

It is interesting to note here the difference in attitude in Satan and Christ toward man's agency. God had given Satan the right to choose what he would do. He had also given Christ the same right to choose his course of action.

Yet Satan would in turn take away from man his right to choose. He (Satan) would force man to be "saved." He would guarantee to bring all men into a saved condition, whether man wanted it or not. Then he would demand all the credit for a 100 per cent job by insisting that all honor and glory be given to him for his accomplishment. Here we see the evidence of his self-centered thinking.

As against this we see Christ's willingness to recognize God's will first and to protect man's agency so that man could have the full benefit of making voluntary choices to do God's will. His thinking was God-centered.

Here is an expression of the difference between the wrong method which would force man to react in one way only in the exercise of his right to choose, as shown by Satan, and the right method which allows man to express his right of choice in following the divine plan, as shown by Christ.

Divine Yardstick

In the expression of his God-centered thinking, Jesus established a divine yardstick which man would be well advised to use in his own expression of the God-given right of choice.

Man has failed almost constantly to make the proper use of his yardstick.

Christ came as a man among men to set up the machinery (his church) through which and with which man could more easily and effectively share in God's purposes. Man, because of wrong choices, permitted God's church to go into complete decay. Man could have averted the Dark Ages if he had been willing to make right choices.

When the gospel was restored there were many beautiful and wonderful experiences for those who sincerely tried to recognize their theocratic responsibility. But because too many were concerned more for their democratic rights to gratify personal desires, the leaders were taken and the members were scattered with loss to all. It then became necessary for those who were trying to choose correctly to reorganize the Restoration movement.

The Responsibility of Right Choices

Man's refusal to use his agency to make right choices brings continued darkness. In other words, the right of choice carries with it the responsibility of making right choices. This is plainly indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5 c: "Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man, because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive not the light."

The analysis of this by President Edwards in his Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants is enlightening:

Every man possesses something of the light of truth. By this intelligence men are able to discern between right and wrong. If they could not discern this difference they would have no actual choice, for one way would seem as good as another. Since men know the difference between right and wrong, they become responsible for their choice of one or the other, and herein is their agency manifest. The condemnation which rests upon the world is that men, knowing the light, so frequently chose darkness.

The responsibility to use his agency has been put squarely on man's shoulders. This is clearly shown in Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6 c, d:

For, behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant; wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves.

President Edwards' comment on this, too, is very significant:

There had been a tendency among the Saints to inquire of God regarding trivial things, and this wore out Joseph, cheapened the idea of revelation, and tended to vitiate the self-reliance of the Saints. This instruction was therefore extremely timely. The Saints need to remember that no man is justified in asking for divine guidance until he has made full use of the intelligence which God has already given him.

"But Ye Would Not"

God and Jesus have been patiently waiting, and unfortunately still find it necessary to wait, for slothful man to make up his mind to choose to do those things which will build the kingdom of heaven. Jesus expressed his disappointment in Matthew 23: 37: "O Jerusalem! Jerusalem! Ye who will kill the prophets, and will stone them who are sent unto you; how often would I have gathered your children together, even as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

Three times in the Doctrine and Covenants the Lord has expressed hope that man would choose, and expressed disappointment that he has not chosen, correctly or fully. There is promise in Doctrine and Covenants 3: 15 e: "I will gather them as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, if they will not harden their hearts; yea, if they will come, they may, and partake of the waters of life freely." This promise is repeated in Section 28: 1 a: "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the great I AM, whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins, who will gather his people even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, even as many as will hearken to my voice, and humble themselves before me, and call upon me in mighty prayer." And then his disappointment is shown in Section 43: 6 b: "O, ye nations of the earth, how often would I have gathered you together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not."

True, these statements are addressed to the world at large, but they are applicable to us today, in our own little spheres. The application is obvious.

Inescapable Responsibility

If we as a church, but particularly as individuals, had always exercised our agency correctly we would be much nearer our Zion goal. Section 140: 5 has probably been quoted more frequently than any other since it was received.

a. The church is admonished again that all movements toward Zion and the gathering and temporalities connected therewith are within my law, and all things should be done in order,

b. the advice and counsel of the elders and of the Bishop and his council be sought and honored when received, as before enjoined, though of necessity their counsel when given is not intended to dictate or to deny any man his agency.

c. The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies, d. but my word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.

It definitizes responsibility now, today. Zion will not be, nor will the kingdom of heaven be built on earth by us unless we choose correctly. Paragraph "a" emphasizes the need to do things in order; "b" protects man's agency; "c" tells us that Zion conditions are no nearer than we make possible; and "d" emphasizes again that God's plans will not fail.

If I fail to be a part of those completed plans it will be only because I have neglected or refused to make right choices on how I minister to others in my area of work. I can't escape that responsibility.

The Church

Jesus said, "I will build my church," and with the help of his disciples and a continuously increasing number of followers he did build his church. But because men failed to choose to invite the Spirit of God to continue to work in their lives Christ's church gradually became a man-made institution until, in self-defense, the Spirit fled and left man to his own devices.

Many men, openly dissatisfied with what they felt was the lack of God's directing force, made frequent and varied attempts to bring back a church which could be God's church.

Then when a young man, sincerely desirous of learning what should be his relation to his God, asked for light the answer came in the restoration to earth of Christ's church.

Theocratic Democracy

Just what is Christ's church? The answer to this question is most clearly given on page 9 of the 1957 edition of Rules and Resolutions, "Rules of Order," as follows:

The church, as defined by the late President Joseph Smith, is a theocratic democracy—not man made, but of divine appointment and origin. It was brought into being by command of God, is guided and administered by his authority, is sustained by the light of his Spirit, and exists for his purposes; but notwithstanding the primary rights of Divinity in his church, our heavenly Father has committed to the Saints an important share in the responsibility of governing his church.

"Neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants, for all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 27: 4 c.

The government of the church is by divine authority through priesthood. It should be noted that the government of the church is through priesthood, not by priesthood. The distinction is important. Ministers must first of all be disciples. They must learn the will of God and make this their own. In no other way can their claim to divine authority become rich and meaningful.—Rules and Resolutions, page 9.

"Theocratic democracy" is not listed as "democratic theocracy." Theocratic democracy means a divine plan originating in and coming from the divine Mind. God suggests, but he also gives man the democratic right (agency) to accept, reject, or substitute the divine suggestion. It is therefore not difficult to see that theocratic responsibility does take precedence over democratic rights in putting first things first.

Common Consent

The use of the words "common consent" in the previous quotation from Doctrine and Covenants 27: 4 c suggests that we should thoroughly understand what they mean. Webster tells us that the word "common" means "1 a. To communicate or make common; to impart or share. b. To confer or converse about; discuss. 2. To have something in common. To enjoy or exercise a right in common."

And the word "consent" is defined as follows: "1. To agree, to be in harmony or concord, especially in opinion, statement, or sentiment, to be of the same mind. 2. Voluntary accordance with, or concurrence in, what is done or proposed by another."

The second definition of "consent" should be more fully understood in our church affairs. Since it specifically means "voluntary accordance with, or concurrence in, what is proposed by another," there should be no hesitation on our part to ask branch and district officers to suggest plans or grouping of personnel for administrative work. Our "common consent" right to concur in or make changes in such suggestions gives us full protection of our democratic rights.

Leaders are in a better position than others to know who will fit in where, to keep administrative work in balance. When we recognize this we also recognize the importance of our theocratic responsibility.

Choice and Consequences

Theocratic responsibility is more important than democratic right, but man has the privilege to choose to give his democratic right priority over his theocratic responsibility if he desires. However, the freedom to choose carries with it the responsibility of his choice as well as its consequences.

Jesus faced this choice when he faced the cross. He had the democratic right to refuse to go on. But he had a deeper feeling of theocratic responsibility to which he yielded. He chose to fulfill his mission.

What have we done? Would it have been necessary for God to rebuke the world by saying, "How often I would have gathered you," if men had always chosen to put theocratic responsibility ahead of democratic right? Would it have been necessary for him to warn us, in his own church, that "Zionite conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies," if we in the conduct of our own lives as well as in the conduct of our church business had always been concerned to put theocratic responsibility ahead of democratic rights?

Yet often in our insistence on our democratic rights we blunder along, holding up progress Zionward. Sometimes this is because administrative leaders prefer not to suggest plans or personnel, and sometimes because we insist on our democratic rights instead of being first concerned about our theocratic responsibility.

Democracy in Action

A good example of our democracy in action was shown in a branch business meeting at which a certain vacancy was to be filled. I nominated a man for the job, and then the presiding officer advised that this would conflict with other duties of this man. We then asked the members of the branch presidency to make a nomination. They were in a position to know who could best fill the job, and getting together on the platform they agreed on a man who was now ready to take his share of branch work. It was a fine choice, and we exercised our right of common consent by supporting this nomination unanimously.

Our democratic rights were fully protected in the privilege of expressing our common consent by agreeing to that which was suggested by those who were in the best position to make an intelligent nomination. In this action we were more concerned about our theocratic responsibility than in our democratic rights.

At another time in a district business meeting I supported a motion of another man to sustain all district officers for the coming year. His purpose was to save time-consuming actions of nominations, motions, and voting. But there were certain complications which made such a move unwise without previous planning and notice.

It did give me a good chance to bring out the principle that in such common consent our democratic rights would be fully recognized and protected. As arguments against the motion developed, however, it became more and more evident that many were more concerned about their democratic rights than their theocratic responsibility. The motion was voted down of course, as it should have been, for other reasons than democratic processes, but there were some who thought it was necessary to vote down the motion in order to protect their democratic rights.

What would have happened to the world if [at Calvary] Jesus had been more concerned about his democratic rights than his theocratic responsibility?

The Right to Say

A fine example of what I am trying to say here, I believe, was the action of the delegates at General Conference in 1956 in setting up the permanent Women's Department organization. Members of the Presidency had been instructed at the previous Conference to present the new plan with nominations for members of the council. In presenting the plan they left one nomination open, apparently for the purpose of obviating any criticism.

In the resulting action the delegates spent one hour and thirty-five minutes in right-arm calisthenics and an attempted rearrangement of the alphabet just to prove their democratic rights. After all that time loss the plan was adopted with only one incidental change. A good friend of mine after the session said he hoped they would never again permit the delegates to waste Conference time in the selection of members for the women's council. What he failed to recognize was that the action of the delegates was entirely legal. They had the right to do with the nominations whatever they chose. It reminded me of the statement of Voltaire who, referring to the views of certain individuals, said, "I don't believe a word they say, but I'd fight to the death to protect their right to say it."

In that Conference action the record shows that the legal expression of their democratic rights by the delegates did disrupt the entire balance of the Conference program. If they had been more concerned about their theocratic responsibility in the situation than in an expression of democratic rights much valuable Conference time would have been saved and the accomplishments of the Conference would have been greater.

Our understanding of correct expression of democratic rights does need clarification. For instance, I have seen many people who seem to resent some suggestions from administrative leaders suddenly change to an insistence that that same leader can do no wrong when he presents names for ordination.

For Greater Effectiveness

In the district business meeting I referred to I saw that sudden change of attitude. First it was a rather noisy insistence on protection of democratic rights. Then, when the presiding officer suggested the time had come to present names for ordination, an immediate hush came over the congregation. We were about to hear an expression of the divine will through properly constituted representatives in the selection of men to assume priesthood responsibility. But after these men have been set apart, and one of them is selected for administrative responsibility, there are some who seem to believe that their democratic rights must be given precedence if the presiding officer attempts to suggest who should be chosen for the group administrative team. Isn't it reasonable to assume that if the divine Mind can properly direct the selection of a man, his Spirit can also direct the mind of this man in any planning in connection with his specific responsibility?

We do have much to learn to make our church work more effective. As ever, it is necessary to use a dependable yardstick for our decisions. And what better yardstick can we find than Jesus? I wonder what would have happened to us and to the world if, when Jesus was faced with the decision of what to do when his time had come, he had chosen to be more concerned about his democratic rights than his theocratic responsibility?

Yes, I wonder.

The Empty Chair

THE EARLY PART of March, 1946, found me engaged in a series of meetings at Lansing, Michigan. The presiding elder of the congregation was Edward Carter, and I was his house guest for the two weeks' series extending over three Sundays. Brother Carter was blessed with a wife who was a devoted companion, a consecrated member of the church, and a gracious hostess. It always was a pleasure for me to visit at the home of this couple.*

After the first Sunday morning service, at which I was the speaker, we returned to the Carter home for dinner. After dinner we retired to the living room and talked about the thing we loved dearly, the church. The indebtedness which had curtailed our activities was gone. The war was over, and young men were entering the services of the church. There were still problems connected with Zion and the Gathering, foreign missions, and church administration. When we touched on Zion and the Gathering the conversation took on a serious nature. Though world conditions were improving after the war was over, the Saints were looking toward Zion more than ever. We wondered if there would be a setback to the hopes of the people at the forthcoming General Conference, or a more definite step taken toward the Gathering.

Brother Carter is a good conversationalist. Between Ed and me, Sister Carter had no chance to say a word. We were seated in a triangle, Brother Carter and I on the davenport and Sister Carter in a chair facing us. As the conversation came to a sudden stop I took a look at Sister Carter and found tears in her eyes. At first I thought that we might have said something in the course of our conversation that had offended her kindly nature. Then Brother Carter looked at her and said: "What is wrong, Mom?" She noticed our concern and said: "Nothing, nothing wrong; I just have had the most beautiful vision. It was wonderful." As we listened to her she related what she had experienced.

She saw Brother Carter and herself in the Auditorium at Independence. There were many people assembled, and they were all talking as they waited in anticipation for the opening of the meeting. Immediately she discovered that it was General Conference, but the two o'clock customary time for opening the service had passed. Those who usually occupy the rostrum were there. The only one who was missing was the president, and the chair he usually occupies was conspicuous in its emptiness because the two chairs of his counselors were filled. The commotion which associates itself with a large gathering had subsided, as they saw the time for opening had passed. The eyes of the people were focused on the doors to the sides of the rostrum to see when the president would come in, but he did not appear. Then suddenly Sister Carter looked toward the empty chair and saw an unknown individual standing behind it with his hands placed on its back. As she took another look at the stranger she discovered that he was Christ.

As Sister Carter related her experience I felt the sacredness of the vision as it was confirmed to me. Both Brother Carter and I came to the conclusion that the forthcoming Conference would be an outstanding one. We felt that whatever problems we had as a church would be solved, and the prophet would be able to receive divine instruction to set the machinery moving for the accomplishment of the tasks yet ahead. It was a moving and marvelous experience.

One evening toward the last of the second week as we were sitting down to eat dinner we heard the sad news over the radio of the passing of President Frederick Madison Smith at Independence. The news came as a bolt out of a clear sky. The president had not been well for years, but no one suspected that he was seriously ill. I don't remember whether we had church that night or not, but the news was confirmed by two other persons as they listened to it over the radio. One thing, however, I can remember very clearly was my sadness and concern.

I loved Fred M. as a father. He would always write or say a kind and encouraging word to the younger men whenever the occasion required. I felt lonely that night. My concern came over the one to succeed him. Who would it be? As I thought of those who might succeed him I drove sleep away. It was after midnight when I finally went to sleep. The next morning I woke up with the thought of Sister Carter's vision on my mind. Immediately I discovered that Brother Carter and I had interpreted it wrongly. The president never came to his chair, but Christ was behind it to fill in the vacancy.

As we sat at the breakfast table I told Brother Carter of how wrong we were in our interpretation. He, too, was able to see it. It was a comforting and strengthening experience. My sadness and concern were removed. Christ is the president of the church.

I relate this outstanding experience because so recently we received the news of the passing of Israel A. Smith, the successor to Frederick M. All of us were shocked by the manner of his death and saddened at his departure. His successor has been named. He is one whom we have learned to love and respect. There could have been no better choice. Certainly Christ is still standing behind the chair as he was in 1946.

Progress of the Church Under President Israel A. Smith

EVERY INSTITUTION is what it is because good men and women have given their lives to it. Even the church, which bears primarily the marks of the hand of God and the imprint of the personality of Christ, also bears ineradicable marks left by those who have served it.

While we mourn the tragic death of President Israel A. Smith, our grief would be fruitless if it were grief alone. At this very time we can find comfort in appreciating the contribution he made personally and as a leader to the development of the church, its institutions, and its people.

As with many another leader, President Smith's life in these later years ceased to be simply a private matter and ran a parallel course with the current history of the church. What he did, too, was no longer a course of personal endeavor. His value to the church lay not so much in any thing or group of things that he did; his significance lay in what he led others to do.

So as we view his career we must enumerate many things in which he had a share but in which were involved also the labors, the hopes, the plans and the sacrifices of many other officials and members of the church. We say nothing of personal credit; we are remembering what we did together, with his help and encouragement.

Under the guidance of President Israel A. Smith the church has enjoyed during these last twelve years a period of peace and good will. It has been a time of harmony in which the church had a climate and a framework where men could go ahead and do the work they were fitted to do and make the contribution to the church for which they obviously had been called into its service.

During this time the church carried on an accelerated building program that has brought splendid results: In the Auditorium, the completion of a beautiful foyer, the Council Chamber, the Music Room and all of its associated technical equipment, the expansion of offices and improvement of facilities, and finally, the finishing of the General Conference Chamber, of which we can already see the outlines of beauty and which will be ready for the use of the coming fall General Conference. The pity is that he who cherished this project so much is not permitted to be here to enjoy its use with the people.

Also parts of the great building program of the church in this period have been the erection of Resthaven, the added buildings at Graceland College, and the construction of many beautiful houses of worship in this country and in others. The recent important additions to the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital have been effected through the Board of Trustees of which President Smith was chairman.

Among the progressive achievements of the church must be counted the great development of the missionary program, missionary literature, and the development of the Audio-Visual Department which has contributed so much new help to the missionary effort.

In harmony with our world-wide mission, the church has made significant progress toward strengthening its forces in missions abroad. The work has been opened in Alaska. Full-time ministers have been assigned to Scandinavia, strengthened in New Zealand and other countries of the world. The quality and number of ministers has shown significant growth.

We have seen great progress in education in the following lines: in the development of religious education and its literature; in the School of the Restoration; and in the continued service and development of Graceland College.

The development of the priesthood program, allied to the field of education, with its intensive training efforts and meetings, has brought great good to the church in the study and improvement of worship in the congregations.

In this time the church has gone forward also in the development of its music, its musical literature, and its encouragement of study programs for young musicians. Along with this there have been other cultural advances in the church.

Important progress has been made in studies and management of church institutions and properties. These have been established upon the best known principles of management and science for the conservation of church resources and the protection of the interests of the people.

Important studies have been made in church law, court procedure, and administration, for stakes, districts, and branches as well as for the General Church. A body of literature on these subjects of permanent value has been produced and is being increased.

Naturally we wish that Brother Smith might have lived to see, in these coming weeks, the completed work on the General Conference Chamber, and that he might have been with us at the fall Conference. This great happiness is denied to us and to him by an accident that seems to us both cruel and useless. Yet we recognize that we cannot know all things nor fathom the ways of destiny.

But as we see the work and the contribution of President Israel A. Smith, we have no feeling of incompleteness, no observation of anything left undone. Little things—chores and tasks—remain, of course, and staff members take care of such things.

This period of church history is rounded out. We are ready to enter into the next stage, and the new Presidency will be ready to take up the expanded work of the church as it comes. We are thankful, in the midst of such conditions, for God's blessings, and we believe as we work together that we can feel the touch of His hand upon ours and the warmth of his Spirit in our hearts.

Taking Stewardship into the Home

By David Judd

The author discusses "The Abundant Life" in a church home

On September 12, 1956, the General Church launched the stewardship emphasis program which has been titled "The Abundant Life." A great deal of time and thought have gone into the development of the material for this program, and we are pleased to report that approximately 75 per cent of all the stakes and districts of the church have been covered. It was intended that every home be visited and the material presented which has been developed to teach the principles of stewardship in the home. Possibly this has been the most extensive church-wide program to be developed; a great deal of planning was necessary in order to organize this work in each of the various districts. Several men have spent a good deal of their time working on this program. The increase in filers speaks well for the work of these men and of all the priesthood members who have participated in this church-wide program.

In January, 1957, David Judd accepted full-time church appointment, and his initial assignment was to assist in carrying this stewardship emphasis program into many of the stakes and districts of the church. We felt that it might be of interest to have a firsthand report from Brother Judd, as he has traveled many miles and visited many homes in connection with this program.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

Traveling Ministry

Almost a year and a half ago we began our work for the Presiding Bishopric, taking the stewardship education program into the various stakes and districts of the United States. This work has taken us into several hundred congregations in many different parts of the country—from Ohio to California, and from Florida to Chicago. During this time I have visited almost two thousand homes and been in more than half of the forty-eight states, which involved more than 40,000 miles of travel. What have we been doing? Let me try to explain.

The Stewardship Education Program

At the General Conference of 1956 it was felt that we should make some concerted effort throughout the entire church to visit every home and teach some of the basic facts of stewardship and the financial law. Many good men worked together on this project and came up with some excellent material. Our responsibility was to take it out onto the job. The most important "tool" prepared is a small educational chart entitled "The Abundant Life for You"—named thus because of our firm conviction that our heavenly Father desires that all of us enjoy a more abundant way of life. All his laws exist for that reason.

A motion picture was also produced to be used in conjunction with this chart. Entitled "The Center Place," this movie portrays vividly the efforts that have been made thus far to build the earthly kingdom, beginning at the place designated by divine revelation as the Center Place for all this activity.

Shirley, my wife, has helped in every way she possibly could. It has been good to work together as a "team" in this way. Quite often she has operated the projector for the showing of the movie, and she has spent many hours preparing "kits" of materials for men of the priesthood to use in their home visiting. I appreciate very much her excellent co-operation and support. We have come to think in terms of "us" and "our work" rather than "me" and "my work." Our experiences have been many and varied, but we have appreciated very much this opportunity to view our church work in various parts of the domestic field. We have met many fine people and feel that we have benefited greatly from our associations with them. It has been the kind of experience which should prove most helpful and which should give us a broader view of the over-all work of the church.

Stewardship Education in the Homes

The actual taking of the message of the "Abundant Life" into the homes is by far the most important and effective part of the program. Time and again it has been our experience to work with men who have never done this kind of visiting before. This leads me to feel that the area of ministry in the home is perhaps the most neglected in the entire ministry of the church. As we have gone into homes, the comment has frequently been, "This is the first priesthood visit we've had in eight years." One lady told me it was the first visit she had received in twenty-five years! Why this neglect?

Sometimes our members feel that unless the pastor himself visits them, they haven't been visited. This is unfortunate, and these folks need to understand that pastoral ministry comes from many men as they function in their callings. However, it is probably also too true that many of our ministers have been very lax in this area, and most of them are aware of it. These are the men who appreciate receiving this kind of material such as the "Abundant Life" chart. They have gone to work with great interest and enthusiasm and have enjoyed it.

It might be interesting to note that some places have recognized their weaknesses with regard to ministry in the home and have therefore taken this opportunity to institute a regular home ministry organization with specific topics selected and prepared for presentation at each visit. The very fact of having a topic chosen and having some material prepared seems to help tremendously. Thus, men who previously felt that they lacked the necessary confidence or know-how have taken this "Abundant Life" chart and made a very effective presentation. This seems to verify something which I have felt for a long time—that home visiting is probably the best way we can bring ministry to people at the point where it will help them most. Such ministry is also rewarding, and many who could never be outstanding preachers or public ministers can be particularly effective in the homes.

The Need for Education

The response to this message as it has gone into the homes has been very good in the majority of cases. Numerous families have told us that this was the first time anyone had talked to them about this particular aspect of their duties as members of the church. Apparently, many of our missionaries have not said much about tithing and stewardship in the past, although this is usually discussed before baptism these days. Even now, however, there are still some men who hesitate to mention anything having to do with the pocketbook, when really anyone who is fully converted to Jesus Christ wants to give all he can. This leads me to believe that our main problem is simply one of education. That, of course, is the purpose of the stewardship education program. Most members are anxious and willing to do all they can. Our goal is to understand more about stewardship and to have more of our people know about it.

Stewardship is a wonderful concept, and I am continually amazed and impressed with the beauty of this teaching. It is one of the distinctive teachings of the Restoration movement and can make a tremendous difference to one's attitude toward life. It is an interesting subject for much more investigation and exploration.

Compliance

Perhaps something should be said about compliance with the financial law of Christ's church. As far as I can see, our two worst enemies are laziness and procrastination, and those are closely related I suppose. It is too easy, even with the best of intentions, to put things off until a later time. Here is something that is closely connected with the exercise of agency, too. It would be much easier to just tithe one tenth of income, and quite likely we would have a higher percentage complying if this were our practice.

To me, the most appealing thing about the tithe of increase is the right of agency which is involved. Each steward must make his own decisions about which expenses are necessary and which are not. Yet many of us have a tendency to shy away from decision making and would rather be told what to do, or have some cut and dried formula to follow. This would hardly fit into the eternal Father's plan for our individual growth. He knows that we grow by decision-making, and he expects us to use our agency and figure some things out for ourselves.

Sometimes we become very concerned about which items are necessary and which are tithable. We must not forget that all we have is a sacred trust and stewardship. The nine tenths remaining after our tithe is equally as sacred a trust as the first tenth we return to God as a tithe. Out of this nine tenths come many things, including our offerings. Our compliance is not limited merely to the payments of tithes. All of the Scriptures indicate that we should give tithes and offerings. Notice the connecting word—it is "and," not "or." There is also the matter of consecration of surplus.

Accounting

Some folks readily accept tithing (it is abundantly clear in all the Scriptures) but will not accept the principle of accounting (although this too is clearly shown in the Scriptures). There is sometimes a hesitancy to accept the authority of a bishop to receive the accounting. It would appear rather inconsistent to accept the authority of other offices (for marriage, baptism, administration to sick) and yet deny the authority of the holy office of bishop.

But so much for the problems. I personally have felt greatly encouraged by the excellent response of our people all over the country. Of course, a complete overnight revival cannot be expected. On the contrary, this is a matter of education, and education can be a slow process. But it is rather amazing to think that ten years ago the percentage of members filing their accounting was less than half what it is now. We should be agreeably surprised to see what happens after say five years of educational ministry such as we are trying to make available now.

Perhaps I may be permitted to make some observations regarding other points I have noted in my travels. There are three matters which stand out as pressing needs today.

Areas in which the stewardship education program has been presented

First: The church school hour is not always as productive as might be. It could be said that church school is the church at school. Thus it ought to be a place and time of learning. Some excellent materials are available, but careful stewardship of time by both teachers and students will enable them to provide more time for study and preparation. Some places have experimented with written examinations or tests, and these can provide an excellent incentive as well as help the individual student to evaluate his strengths and weaknesses.

Second: Our church music still needs attention in many places. Perhaps I am particularly aware of this because of having worked in this field for many years. Generally speaking, I feel that our congregational singing could be far more evangelistic and much less somber—that is, with more spirit and fervor. Good leadership, especially at the piano or organ, helps tremendously. Here is the challenge to further effort in the area of stewardship of talents, to qualify through cultivation of the needed skills and abilities. In many places I have met people who are struggling along under great difficulties. Always there is the demand for further preparation.

Perhaps more time could be devoted to "hymn sings" and learning new hymns. Many congregations might also benefit greatly by singing without piano or organ for some hymn-singing sessions.

Third: Despite great improvement in the last few years, we still have a long way to go in improvement of our church worship. Many times we act as though we have met together to visit each other, rather than to meet our heavenly Father. One church we visited had a sign suggesting that worshipers talk to no one but God, and pointed out that conversation with him could be silent, thus avoiding the likelihood of disturbing other worshipers. Improved architecture (cry rooms, foyers for visiting) contributes to improvement in this matter.

My Testimony

I should like to testify briefly about my convictions arising out of what I have seen in these travels. I believe that we are moving ahead. Although some areas may have lost ground, the over-all picture suggests growth and development and continued effort to press forward to the accomplishment of our task.

The stewardship education program is playing a significant role in our movement, and I am extremely happy to have been able to help on this venture. I look forward to further church-wide educational programs, and with you, I look forward to the realization of the goals which lie before us.

Edward R. Carter

ON December 12, 1934, I left Escanaba, Michigan, by train for a business trip to Lansing. After retiring to my berth I spent some time in studying the Doctrine and Covenants and was blessed with an outstanding spiritual influence. This same spirit was with me when I awoke the next morning and continued to be with me after I changed trains in Chicago. This train was crowded, and people were standing in the aisles. I thought it strange that no one took the seat beside me. Continuing my study I felt impressed that there was a personage at my side; the Spirit of the Lord was with me in abundance.

On arrival in Lansing I went to the Kerns Hotel, where I had stayed many times on trips to that city. I was assigned to a front room on the third floor. Because of an affliction with my ear, which was impairing my hearing, I called Elders Gordon Brown and John Luce to come to my room to administer to me. During that administration the Spirit rested with each of us, and we were greatly blessed. After retiring for the night I spent time studying the Book of Mormon, and the same spiritual influence was present. About five a.m. I was startled by my bed being shaken. As I awoke there stood between my bed and the wall a personage in white, and the room was filled with a bright light. This personage said, "Take your books and leave the room quickly." As I looked about me, I saw that the floor of my room was on fire. A terrible commotion was in the halls; persons were screaming, and I was aware that the entire building was on fire. I prayed God to save my life, and there flashed in vision before me my wife and young daughter in the front room of our home in Gladstone. The personage spoke again, "Leave the room." I dressed hurriedly and took my books to the window. As the smoke cleared I could see that firemen had a net below my window and were calling for me to jump. I threw my book satchel out and jumped, for the flames had already ignited my clothing. As I jumped I felt myself being carried out over a railing and turned about. I landed in the net unharmed.

Two weeks following this experience I met my old seatmate of the Legislature in the House. He had not known that I was in the burning building and had begged the firemen to move the net to a window where another friend was being burned; the firemen seemed to be frozen in their places until I landed. I was the only person saved in a net that night; thirty-seven persons burned to death.

The day following the fire I returned to my home and found my wife and daughter in the front room, just as I had seen them in vision in that burning hotel room.

Many times during my travels I had prayed that God would spare my life and that I might not die away from home. Certainly the Lord was with me on this occasion. This experience increased my desire to be more faithful and diligent in my preparation for greater service to the Master. Some years following I was ordained to the office of high priest and later to the office of evangelist.

My testimony today is that God continues to walk and talk with men, guiding and directing his servants in every unit of his church where preparation has been made for divine expression.

I Had an Experience

Question Time

Question

1. Genesis 50: 25-29 talks about a seer being raised up like Moses, which I thought meant Joseph Smith. Others tell me that it is a Joseph yet to come (see verse 33). Please explain.

2. Also, verse 25 says that the Messiah will be made manifest unto them in the latter days. Is this the time that Christ visited America following the ascension or does it refer to the present day?

J. S.

Pennsylvania

Answer

These questions are answered as we read this Scripture and consider the chronology of events noted.

Verse 25 speaks of a portion of the seed of Joseph being broken off and "carried into a far country." (See also, Genesis 49: 22.) This undoubtedly refers to Lehi and his descendants who came to America just prior to the Babylonian captivity. In the promise concerning the Messiah the terminology, "in the latter days," refers to the era of time in which we live. It is significant that the Scripture reads, "He shall be made manifest unto them." This indicates that he would be revealed through another rather than manifesting himself unto them. The reason for this manifestation would be to bring them out of darkness and free them.

Verse 26 promises that a "choice seer" from the fruit of the loins of Joseph would be raised up. Verses 27 and 28 tell us that this "seer" would be given commandment to do a work for the seed of Joseph and that he would bring them a knowledge of the covenants God made with their fathers. Verse 29 states that this "choice seer" would be great and compares him to Moses.

The verses thus far refer to Joseph Smith, Jr., through whom God restored the church and the gospel. The Book of Mormon is ample evidence of this, for it is specifically "to shew unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off for ever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ" (page iii, Book of Mormon).

Joseph Smith, through the Restoration, did bring light into a world of religious darkness and made it possible for men to be freed from the ignorance of apostasy. Early in this work the command was given specifically to take this message and the Book of Mormon to the descendants of Joseph who had come from Jerusalem so many centuries before.

If there is still any doubt that this "choice seer" was Joseph Smith, Jr., this blessing given him through his father who was the presiding patriarch of the church should remove it. I quote, "... and in my turn, my father anointed my head, and sealed upon me the blessings of Moses, to lead Israel in the latter days, even as Moses led him in days of old" (Millennial Star, Volume 15, page 620).

It seems evident that this "choice seer" was Joseph Smith the martyr. However, beginning with verse 30 we have another seer introduced. This one is not Joseph Smith, Jr. This seer is to be given power "not to the bringing forth of my word only . . . but to the convincing them of my word which shall have already gone forth among them in the last days." This seer will reveal new truth but also bear witness and convince men of the word already gone forth. Since the word had not gone forth in the last days prior to Joseph Smith, Jr., this seer would have to be one who would come later; it could not have been he.

Verses 31 and 32 refer specifically to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, its relationship to the Bible, and its purpose. (See also Ezekiel 37: 15-20, and Isaiah 29: 30-32.)

Verse 33 further describes this "seer." From this description it seems clear that this refers to Joseph Smith III. Certainly his name was Joseph "after the name of his father." We also sincerely believe that the Reorganization of the church and its quorums, the return to the City of Zion, etc., which took place under his leadership are evidences that the thing the Lord brought forth by his hand "shall bring my people unto salvation."

In summation we can then say: (1) Joseph Smith, Jr., was the choice seer referred to in Genesis 50: 25-29, (2) Joseph Smith III was the seer referred to in Genesis 50: 30-33; and, (3) verse 25 speaks of the Messiah being made manifest to these people in the last days or the era of time in which we live.

RUSSELL F. RALSTON

Question

In the ordinances of our church we do not accept the other faiths on religious baptism or blessings of children, yet we accept the authority of the ministers to marry. Why? Isn't this a sacred ordinance of God, too? What is our stand on the authority of a justice of the peace?

Mrs. K. B.

Indiana

Answer

In marriage it is the relationship between a man and a woman that is sacramental in the sight of God. It is not the exclusive province of the church to be involved in this covenant relationship. On the other hand, the church is always involved in the ordinances of baptism, blessing of children, and confirmation. Therefore, the authority of the ministers is of primary importance in these.

The church is vitally interested in marriage, however. For this reason the church strongly recommends that a marriage be solemnized in a "public meeting, or feast prepared for that purpose" and that a priest or elder officiate. Supporting the belief that such "church" weddings are preferred but not demanded is the statement that we should not prohibit "those persons who are desirous to get married of being married by other authority" (See Doctrine and Covenants 111).

We recognize any legal marriage whether by our ordained men, ministers of other churches, or by a justice of the peace. It is an added spiritual help when such union is made under proper church ministry. Nevertheless, when a marriage union is made, such union is sacred and binding between the couple and God regardless of how seriously the persons involved may take it.

Question

In the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah (Inspired Version) the poetry and eloquence which is a distinguishing mark of this book is notably missing from verse 11 to 25 inclusive, which is the portion mainly interpolated by Joseph Smith. The remaining verses have the literary excellence of the Authorized Version, but the interpolation is more reminiscent of Book of Mormon language. Why?

D. H. J.

Answer

The literary excellence of the Authorized Version commonly referred to as the King James Version, is not of necessity a reflection of the literary excellence of the original writer but, in the process of translation in the hands of the direction of the King of England, the language would of the very nature tend to reflect the "literary excellence" of the scholar.

mals took their parts also. It was a mid-summer night's dream in reality.

Summering with the Church in Europe

WE SEEMED TO HAVE much the same itinerary as did President F. H. Edwards, for we met him again in Birmingham, where a special service was held one evening in honor of Apostle E. J. Gleazer of Independence (who was the speaker) and of President Edwards who introduced him, and whose youth had been spent in Birmingham. Apostle Gleazer was born in Ireland; Jean, his wife, is English by birth. The three were visiting their childhood locales as well as the church abroad—a treat for all concerned.

President Edwards was visibly affected to be spending time in his home branch and with his relatives. The church building itself was new to him, a rather recent purchase, so we were equally interested in its potentialities, sizable grounds, neighborhood, and devoted, thriving membership.

Not far from the church live Seventy T. E. Worth and family, with whom we spent part of a day. They occupy a church-owned home, half of a large two story frame house with spacious grounds, trees, and gardens which had been overgrown from long neglect when they took possession. Brother Worth's home-comings between travels had been the signal for Betty and their three boys to be ready to lose no time co-operating in the use of paint, garden tools, and carpentry. Rampant trees, shrubbery, and grasses had been disposed of. An Englishman's pride and joy is to beautify the earth around him, and no doubt this home will continue to be a beauty spot in the neighborhood. The indoors is a model of quiet good taste in neatness and use of color—an example of their personal "do-it-yourself" prowess for the most part.

Before we reached England, we had traveled from Switzerland, Germany, and France to Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. In Copenhagen we met President Edwards again. We had mutual friends there—Sister Orla Tinning (formerly Ellen Larsen, sister of Edward Larsen of Independence) and her genial husband. Edward married a daughter of President Frederick M. Smith (Lois), as did President Edwards, whose wife is Alice. We spent a week in Copenhagen. (My mother's father, when a youth of twenty-two years, emigrated from there to Zion.) I doubt there is a finer host than Orla Tinning. He chauffeured us around the countryside every day but one. Ellen and their "one and only," a charming teen-age daughter, Lotta Lisa, came too. Our pleasures were doubled because the Tinnings speak English.

That one day alone found us taking an hour bus ride to Frederickssund to witness the Viking pageant, "Amlid," which was being presented every night during Viking Festival Week, June 15 through 28. The Danish "Amlid" precedes the Shakespearian "Hamlet" in age, we were assured. Suffice it to say that the treat was a rare one. We sat in the open and feasted our eyes on authentic costuming and acting. A Viking ship sailed into the distance and unloaded its cargo of shouting warriors. Sometimes whole rooms would glide from behind heavy greenery onto the lawn stage, propelled in some way from one side of the amphitheater or the other, housing the characters in spirited action. Live ani-

President Edwards had a room at our hotel for his one day and night in Copenhagen, and we all had dinner the one evening together. One of two especially enjoyable drives with the Tinnings took us to their summer home in a rural lakeside locality. They have landscaped with special plantings of trees, shrubs, and flowers. A brook rustles through the grounds at the foot of the slope, atop which sits their spreading low-roofed cottage. Winter finds them in their apartment at Gudenaave I, Copenhagen. Ellen's health has not been very good, but she has been helped through administration and with the summers in their cottage. She loves the Latter Day "work" passionately and has fond memories of her one visit to Independence.

The Tinnings have only one Latter Day Saint family to "neighbor" with, Brother Jan Blume, bishop's agent for Denmark, and his good wife, Karen. Both once lived in the States in the central west. They own a farm about twenty-five miles out of Copenhagen. We spent a day with them—the other special drive with the Tinnings. We roamed their gardens and rock farm buildings, enjoyed watching the herd of beautiful fat cows and Lotta Lisa driving the tractor! We did not see another home like this one. It was built in 1804. The roof is heavily thatched. All the buildings are joined, including living quarters, and reach around four sides of a great court. A wide arch through one side gives entrance to the court yard, where our car was parked and where we were greeted at the vine-draped library door. The Blumes have a guest book in which we read the names of many of our missionaries and church leaders, past and present. Such contacts are "food and drink" to the isolated. This was a wonderful week, full of bewitching experiences, thanks again to saintly Saints.

Orla, Lotta Lisa, and Ellen Tinning of Denmark

Elder and Mrs. Jan Blume, also of Denmark

En route to Oslo, Norway, we noticed that several cars of the long railroad train were full of children from Germany on their way to the north countries for holidays and summer training in home and field arts. (The same custom prevailed in Iceland we learned during our stay with friends there at the beginning and end of our journey.) A motherly woman was in charge of every five or six children. There seemed to be a group led by its nurse, always in the aisle, going from car to car. We toured the train and pitied the tired little ones napping, and the sober, thoughtful teenage boys. More resourceful were the larger girls, who cuddled and "combed" the little ones. Groups with their nurses were dropped off here and there as we traveled through Sweden and Norway.

In Oslo there were no church services at this time nor any hotel rooms because of an international temperance convention being held in the building in which our church rents space. However, we were scheduled for the youth camp that week end, which experience came and went all too soon. We did have a delightful home, however, most unexpected and highly appreciated—a furnished apartment which had been readied for the coming missionaries, newly married Richard and Wanda Andersen of Independence. James and Ardis Everett were enthusiastically awaiting their arrival. Ardis and Wanda had been girlhood friends and would be located only a five-minute walk apart.

The women of Oslo were organized over thirty years ago when Seventy V. D. Ruch and Sister Ruch (Zella) revived the work there. However, then the families were included in the gathering and a member of the priesthood taught the lesson. There were entertainments and refreshments after class, "always lots to eat—and the eating hasn't changed a bit," I was informed. In 1955 the group was reorganized, this time trying to conform to the standards set up in the General Council of Women's Handbook. (Prior to 1955, during a lapse period, the women met only occasionally for a "talking-strengthening" session.) Their meetings are weekly and at night. They have studied "I Witness for Christ," and "The Woman Beautiful." Every fourth meeting is "hobby night." Last year they were planning to make a sacrament cloth and to have a Christmas bazaar. They made the flag which was used at the youth camp last summer, a three-cornered purple one featuring NORSVEDAN in gold letters, church colors. "Norsvedan" means Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. The women also furnished much of the food for the youth camp, including cookies and more cookies!

The officers are Mrs. Olav Kristiansen (Edith Fossum), leader; Karen Stople, assistant; Anita Hoff, secretary; Martha Karlsen, treasurer. Sister Inga Kristiansen is the oldest member of the group—just in her seventies—and is lovingly described as "a very sweet lady who can really bear her testimony for the church." She and her son Olav are the only ones of her family who have been baptized. The youngest member of the group is Karen Stople's daughter, twelve-year-old Ellen. She sings well and is used as a soloist at church and at women's meetings. Karen plays a unique instrument called the citar. It is flat, wooden, and about two feet square, having twelve sets of strings (three in each set). It chords much like a guitar but has deeper tones. With it Sister Karen accompanies the singing when meetings are in homes where there is no organ or piano.

We were happy to meet a number of the church folk, among them Brother Olaf Fossum, present and long-time pastor of the flock in Oslo, and his wife, Sister Mimmie. They are well known to us through the Herald and otherwise. Their daughters Ragnild (Ronnie) and Edith spent two years at Graceland, and we were happy to meet them again at the youth camp where Ronnie interpreted for Mark when he addressed the group. Ronnie is in Independence now for a year to learn more English and more church in order to be a more efficient teacher and translator when she returns home. She has been an interpreter for the missionaries in Oslo and also has translated our materials for church school and for women's work.

There were campers from Denmark and Sweden at the youth camp. To reach the site we rode a bus along a scenic fiord, forest, and resort route for one and one-half hours, then walked down a winding road to a lake where a skiff awaited us. We were rowed for a half hour past water lily fields and swamp grasses, in and out, then away out in the middle of what seemed to me a great lake, but the natives called it "the pond." Tall timber edged the pond, casting lovely shadows into the clear depths. A footbridge connected the camp proper with a neighboring pine-covered slope. Its trees hid the playground clearing beyond. The camp buildings are rented and are right at the water's edge—all most lovely. Paths through the brush lead to the worship and lecture clearing on a back shore. There are logs to sit on and an improvised cross to mark the speaker's stand. A serene water view greets the young campers as they listen and ponder. The waters are deep, but the children swim well; there are boats which they handle well also. I saw a little girl skimming away alone in one. And often I think of the husky boy who had to forego the hike-swim party and return for repairs. Someone had stepped on his ingrown toenail. The toe was swollen and red and his eyes glistened suspiciously as the teen-age camp doctor bandaged the bleeding toe. We were leaving the camp soon and the lad felt privileged to help row our skiff, to moor and secure it, and to help us onto the shore—compensation to a brave soldier.

We met Bishop Anton Compier again at this camp. We had been together at the Hannover Conference. He was interesting to watch, both as a temporal and spiritual adviser to youth and as a physical laborer about camp. Sister Compier ("Jo") has written me of the women's work in Rotterdam. We attended church there in 1951, and I can still see the Saints worshiping in their little rented quarters. They have an active women's department with Sister M. Van Erdel as city-wide leader and Sister A. de Wild as local president. They have a good nonmember attendance at church school and at church. They study the Book of Mormon in class, and occasionally they have a church history lesson taught by one of the priesthood. They have a cradle roll department and a visiting program for the sake of the sick and the absentees. They have their own collection "bag" into which extra money is placed. At the end of the year the bag is opened and the money is used to purchase something new for their church. They also have fun at disposal sales among themselves.

The future should bring a splendid success story from Oslo. It is a beautiful, fascinating city that is fast becoming a modern metropolis. We owe lasting gratitude to missionaries James and Ardis Everett who organized a wonderful week for a couple of "old folks."

Now comes parting time again, for I seem to have just returned from the three months with the church overseas. When mail began to reach us, we were amazed to read, "Thanks for the visit" . . . "thanks for the visit"! Then we became doubly thankful for this evidence that the "satisfying Spirit" had enveloped us all in our effort to serve each other.

DELMAR GOODE AND HIS WIFE, Anita, have kindly taken us to the reunion and to group meetings. A musical family, they and their children, Louita and Denny, have sung favorite hymns for us.

Three young girls from Norway, students at Graceland, came to see us and sang very sweetly for us. They had a book of hymns in the Norwegian language; the words were fitted to the familiar tunes of our hymns. This translation was made for their people by our missionary, V. D. Ruch. These girls attended our 1953 reunion. With tears they said they wished so much to bear their testimonies, but they could not do it in English.

At different times Brother and Sister Wilbur Prall have taken us to the reunion. We deeply appreciate his service as assistant pastor of the Lamoni Branch, and his wife Beth, his assistant.

In 1950 I attended some of the meetings of the Lamoni Reunion, sitting in the car drawn up near the big tent, by the kind permission of the pastor. I did not feel able to sit in the tent.

One morning near the close I woke early with a strong impression of the Spirit that I was to bear testimony before the close of that reunion. That morning it was rainy and the car could not come up near to the tent. I waited and the next day Brother Farnham, the pastor, was at the house. I told him about my impression about the testimony, and he said, "I will arrange for you to give it." Sunday morning he sent the microphone to the car, and Brother Shedd, in whose car we rode, held it while I gave the following testimony:

COMING INTO THE CHURCH I believed with all my heart that this is God's Church, restored by the angel, and I wanted to do his will. I went along for a time seeing as "through a glass darkly," but I believe the Lord was watching over me, awaiting my development.

I read in Doctrine and Covenants, "The Holy Spirit is given in answer to prayer," and I made that my prayer. I was uncertain whether I had received the promised gift because I could not distinguish between my own good feelings and the influence of the Spirit, but this was made plain to me later on. I had faith in the promise, "Seek and ye shall find," and I want to say to the young people, "Do not be discouraged. Keep on seeking. The promise is true. It has been fulfilled to me." The Lord says, "I will be found of them that seek me," and he is true and faithful.

I received my patriarchal blessing in 1908. I was writing for the Sunday School Exponent and for the Herald Home Column. A certain amount of copy was due at a stated time each month. At times when I was writing, my mind would go blank. I couldn't remember what I had thought or what was to follow. I would lay down my work and go to my room and on my knees pray for help. Then my mind would clear, and I finished my work in time. This experience was repeated. Each time the Lord came to my help. I thought this might be unwise, and if continued it might result in a breakdown. I mentioned it to no one, but I thought the Lord knew that if I ever needed a blessing it was then.

I fasted and prayed. Then I asked Brother Joseph Lambert to give me my blessing. He came to our home, knowing nothing of my condition. I felt from the first that he spoke by the Spirit. After the opening paragraphs he said: "I bless thee that thou mayest continue thy work. When thou hast been weak in body and weak in mind, he has quickly answered thy petitions because of thy desires to do good. . . . He will sustain thee until thy work is accomplished." This has helped me to realize more and more as the years have come and gone how our every thought and desire is known and recognized of the Lord. His Spirit is always with us. I kept on with that writing without more trouble until the Exponent was discontinued, and other changes made my work unnecessary.

My blessing contained this promise, "In the darkest time that will come, he will not forsake thee, . . . but will lead thee lovingly, wisely, and safely."

In 1918 I had the flu. This was followed with slight paralysis of my left side, and my heart was affected. I could move slowly about the house, but I was unable to leave home. As this condition continued, I saw it meant the end of my Sunday school and women's work. This was a heartbreaking realization.

One night as I prayed and wept I said aloud, "I guess there will be no more leading," for my work in which I had been led was gone. Then the Lord, in an audible voice of his Spirit, said, "Has he forsaken you?" I said, "No." "Then will he lead you?" I said, "He surely will. If one part is true, the other must be too."

Then there followed the melting tenderness of the love of God that filled my soul. I was gently reminded of the verses given me some time before:

And so this tender Shepherd
I'll trust whate'er betide;
In death I'll fear no evil;
He'll still be at my side.

I was filled with peace, and now I can say, I know that God lives, and that he cares for his children.

MY LIFE HAS SHOWN a succession of marvelous evidences of the goodness and power of God to help in times of extreme need. All this calls for praise beyond my power to express. Another case of healing has been added to the long list: Preceding my ninety-fifth birthday, I had an attack of the virus prevalent here at the time. The effect was in my right arm and hand; I could not hold my pen. This was relieved. My eyes and ears were affected, and I suffered in various ways. I began to improve, and it seemed I was getting well. Then a reverse set in; the doctors reported I was gradually getting weaker, and it seemed the end was near.

My cousin, Ethel Lacey, has been my constant attendant, and Nellie Newlin has given us faithful service. Kind neighbors and friends have given night help.

As Ethel watched my breath growing fainter and my voice weaker, she called Brother Higdon who administered. She had asked the doctor if she should call my niece, Edith Alden, from Chicago. He said, "Yes, but tell her not to be disappointed if Callie is not here when she gets here."

But by morning I was wonderfully revived, and I knew my niece when she came.

Ethel said she could not pray selfishly for my recovery; but in accord with the word of the Lord, she asked that my life be spared "if it be expedient." She said she was amazed at the change that took place, as was everyone else who saw it. Our good doctors, Gamet and Swanson, said I embarrassed them, my sudden recovery being so contrary to their prediction, but all knew it was the marvelous work of the Lord. I was beyond exercising faith at the time, but I had placed myself in the hands of the Lord to do with as he knew would be for my good and his glory, and this was his answer.

LYING SO LONG made me too weak to stand alone, but I can walk when supported. I have had much time to think, and in my mind I have revised some of the hymns. I love the one beginning, "Jesus, the very thought of thee with sweetness fills my breast." But I say of Jesus not "my only joy," but as another hymn has it, "my chiefest joy, enhancing all the rest." Then I go on thinking of him as my healer, my teacher, my abiding comfort, my Redeemer and my Lord. With all his power and glory, how can it be that he cares for a humble child like me? And yet I know he does, and he invites me to put my trust in him so he can bless me.

These thoughts lead to a review of his earth life, his love, his wonderful sacrifice for us, his continued love, and the assurance that "because he lives, we, too, shall live."

THE LAMONI REUNIONS for 1953 and 1954 were housed largely in the Graceland buildings. The general prayer meetings and the preaching services were held in the Student Center Building. In 1953 I was able to attend. Delmar and Anita Goode took us with them in their car. The following year Edith was here. She and Ethel rode with Beth Prall in the morning and with the Goodes in the evening. I was mostly confined to my chair. Knowing I could not be at the prayer service, I wrote my testimony. Our pastor, Robert S. Farnham, brought the tape-recording machine, and I recorded my testimony.

It was read in the prayer meeting on Tuesday. The theme for that day was "He has given me a testimony of the gospel." The spiritual gifts are part of the blessings of the gospel. Of some of these I have had testimony, and of much else.

Healings are listed with the spiritual gifts. James tells us to send for the elders, and the prayer of faith shall save the sick. The prayer of faith has saved me.

I have had the rare experience of receiving the gift of faith for the removing of a tumor. When Doctor Gamet examined my breast he said he thought he could remove the tumor. I said, "Yes, but I think I have the gift of faith that it will disappear." After some days there was a little softening in the edges of the wide-swollen part. The gift of faith was with me unwavering for months while the imperceptible but sure lessening of the tumor took place. When only a little of it remained Dr. Swanson told Ethel that I had received a wonderful blessing. To me he said that the little of it that was left would never bother me. I said: "Maybe not, but I look for it to be completely removed. The gift of faith assures me of this." And the process continued.

THERE IS FAITH that comes by hearing; there is faith that must be nurtured from a very small beginning; there is faith that seems natural, as if inherited; and there is the gift of faith listed with spiritual gifts.

After referring to my faith for a long time as the gift of faith, I wondered if I could be mistaken. Then one day I received the witness of the Spirit that I was right in calling it so. It was indeed "the gift of faith by the same Spirit" as the other gifts.

I have held as a very choice bit of Scripture Philippians 4: 6, 7, 8, and 9. To a cautious person the first words, "Be careful for nothing," may seem unreasonable; what this means is "be not filled with care." Taken with the advice that follows, it is recognized as wholesome counsel. "Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God."

If we do as this tells us, not failing to give thanks for the good we have received, "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." What a reward! And it is sure. I have tested it at different times of anxious care.

Then when the mind is free from anxiety it is ready to think on more profitable things, as reasoned by Paul.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. . . . And the God of peace shall be with you."

DURING MY SICKNESS friends came at night to watch over me. Ethel usually stayed close by too. After I was able to sit in my chair in the living room, Ethel had Nellie's half day of help. She started with me in the morning things Ethel couldn't see to do, getting me up, giving me the bath and alcohol rub, then she was free for work in my room and to do other housework until noon.

Ethel says I am her stewardship, and that there is nothing else she would rather do than take care of me. Sometimes her own physical condition makes it difficult, but she is brave about enduring the pain. I could not have a more dependable, loving helper than she has been.

My cousin, Edith Jarvis Alden, resigned as secretary of the Burlington Railroad in May, 1954. She spent more time with me than usual that summer.

During the following fall and winter she was with us part of one week in each month when the weather permitted. She always gave us wonderful help wherever we needed it.

My deepest desire for God's children is that each of them will test his promise, "I will be found of them that seek me." It has been true for me.

GOD'S CREATION

I think all men feel small
Within the vastitude of earth;
Unlimited the sky—the waters—
The myriad phenomena of birth;
Yet men are little less than angels
At creation's cycle-wheel,
Dominion written on their brow
And fang of serpent at their heel!
Sensitivity to good or bad,
To beauty or neglect,
To freedom or to bondage,
Pursues the men elect,
For in their hands, reflecting,
Hangs the balanced scale
That weighs their own life first
With merciless travail.
And if, in this soul-searching,
Exposed are feet of clay
God's man in judgment on himself
Will turn his face away
From all the graces he may know,
The beauty of his soul—
The well-framed body, cultured mind,
That was creation's goal!

Birmingham, Alabama, Church Officially Opened

On Saturday, April 12, at 7:30 p.m., a reception for members and visitors from parts of Alabama, Florida, and Georgia, marked the official opening of the first Reorganized Church in Birmingham. Later in the evening there was group singing. Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp spoke following the singing, giving high lights of his world tour.

Sunday activities began with a well-attended prayer service at 9:30. An inspiring message from Bishop DeLapp was delivered to an overflow crowd at the morning worship hour. A basket dinner was served at noon by the women's department to local members and visitors from Montgomery, Mobile, McKenzie, Decatur, Auburn, and Tuscaloosa, Alabama; Milton and Pensacola, Florida; and Atlanta, Georgia.

A second preaching service was conducted at 2:30 p.m., with Patriarch A. D. McCall of Milton, Florida, as speaker. Other visiting members of the priesthood who assisted in the consecration services were Seventy J. H. Yager, Pensacola, Florida; Elder H. Hale Vickrey, Montgomery, Alabama; and Elder E. P. Farmer, Decatur, Alabama.

Brother Yager prepared for a missionary series with contacts in the area. He visited in the homes of members from April 13 to 19, then held a missionary series April 20-27 with a baptismal service at the close.

The educational building houses an auditorium which seats one hundred and fifty. There are also classrooms, a social hall, a kitchen, a soundproof cry room, a choir niche, and a baptismal font. The sanctuary will be added at a later date.

The Birmingham group was first organized under the direction of W. D. Bullard on December 14, 1924. It started with a membership of ten and functioned under the leadership of Presiding Elders C. J. Clark, Verne R. Chandler, and Marvin L. Salter.

The first church in Birmingham was organized October 7, 1951. Meeting places were at various community centers and more recently the YMCA. The presiding elders during the period were J. Henry Porter, James W. Odom, and Marvin L. Salter. Brother Salter is the pastor at the present time.

Book Review

Dynamics of Christian Adult Education

By Robert S. Clemmons

Abingdon Press, New York

Adults—fifteen million of them—have joined forces in the educational enterprise of the churches. They are "seeking a new quality to their lives." They will not be satisfied with more gadgets; "they want to be something, more mature Christians." To meet this challenge the church is summoned to the task of developing men and women to their full maturity as spiritual beings.

This book is a "how-to" book. It concerns itself with practical ways and means of guiding adults as they seek to achieve spiritual maturity—"the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Methods and procedures of achieving this objective, according to this author, are based upon certain basic principles:

1. Adults are to be considered "dynamic—in motion, changing, capable of self-determination." As such they are to be guided, not merely manipulated.

2. "People change as they participate." Remaining inactive they do not change.

3. Such growth involves new disciplines. Adults must be self-disciplined.

4. Requisite to this growth in spiritual maturity is "a living relationship between man and God, between man and the deep recesses of his soul."

5. Reliance must be placed upon the Holy Spirit to guide growth.

6. The adult group in the church school must "become a laboratory in which we test the power to create the good and to redeem human life."

Successive chapters of this splendid little book deal in turn with these basic principles and with ways and means of applying them in putting into operation the program of Christian education for adults.

Of special interest in connection with our renewed emphasis upon evangelism is the chapter which discusses "Communicating the Gospel." We communicate the gospel not so much by talking about it to others as by sharing its insights and practicing its relationships among those we live with and those we would reach and win.

This excellent book is recommended for those who are responsible for providing leadership of adults—certainly one of the more difficult and vital areas of religious education.

And Finally...

BE KIND TO YOUR PASTOR

Pray for your pastors; don't pray at them, pray for them. You have a right to expect moral and spiritual leadership from them, but has it ever occurred to you that they are human, often lonely, often defeated, often overworked, sometimes over their depth? They don't need criticism as much as they need understanding and support and prayer. I don't believe that any minister who is truly prayed for by even one small dedicated group in his congregation will either fail his people or fail his Lord.

Helen Smith Shoemaker, "Power Through Prayer Groups" (The Fleming H. Revell Company)

REMEMBERED IN PRAYER

Not until one is brought under the weight of affliction in which more than human help is needed does he learn the spiritual depths in the souls of his friends.

While some say merely, "Too bad!" and a few are content with "Hope you get better!" there are still numbers who say, "We will remember you in prayer."

It is wonderful to know the number of people who believe in and practice prayer.

There are multitudes of them in the church, of course. And among friends of other faiths there is also this generosity of heart, this spirit of concern, to pray for others in need.

Knowing this, one feels the protection of larger and larger circles of prayer and protective love that help to hold him close to God.

In these times of international peril, we may be frightened, and some may be overwhelmed by the power of evil in the world. At the same time, when we consider the spiritual resources that God has given to the human race, it is just as easy to be overwhelmed by the divine mercy and to be awed by the goodness that he has planted in human hearts.

DEACONS BY APPOINTMENT

One of the most important functions of priesthood at our larger public meetings is performed by those who look after the seating and comfort of the congregation. It is an office which calls for good judgment and courtesy. Not enough respect is paid to these servants of the Lord.

Ushering is but one of the functions the deacon performs and is incidental to his priesthood ministry. Often the deacon will need help in ushering or taking the offering and he will deputize nonpriesthood young men who like to be helpful. The pastor frequently introduces the worship of the offering by prayer and announcing, "The deacons will now come forward." Since some of them are ushers and not deacons, this ineptness of speech has a tendency to downgrade the deacon's office.

This story is told of an ambitious lieutenant who was about to receive a command from a confused major. "Captain Miller, . . ." The quick thinking lieutenant cut in with "Of what company, sir?"

Wouldn't it be discreet for presiding officers to quit making deacons by appointment?

Joe Allen Serig

THE new appointment list last April carried the name of Joe A. Serig. He will begin his assignment late this summer as missionary in the Miami-

Pittsburg District (Oklahoma and Kansas).

Brother Serig is married to the former Beverly Joan Wilson. They have a young daughter Deborah, born last May.

The Serigs have been living in San Jose, California, where he has been a student. He received his M.A. degree in education this summer.

At Graceland he was an all-conference guard on the football team, a member of the student council, and a pastoral group leader. He has served as president of the church student group at San Jose and has worked in the local branch as missionary supervisor, secretary, and counselor to the pastor.

Joe's honors are many. Among his scholastic achievements are membership in the Lambda Delta Sigma honor society at Graceland and Phi Kappa Phi national honorary scholastic society at San Jose. He was graduated from San Jose "with great distinction."

"God has always seemed to be a very real and loving Father throughout my life," Joe said. "My desire to serve him and his church grows out of this sense of companionship with him and his Son. It is my desire to serve him and his people to the best of my ability."

Book stewards receive over $20,000 in commissions on books and supplies

HERALD HOUSE has paid $20,022.53 in commissions to its 566 book stewards during the past year.

Kenneth L. Graham, manager, said the figure shows the value of the book steward program to both Herald House and the branch.

Book stewards are local representatives of the church publishing house. They are appointed by the pastor and authorized to take orders for all books, tracts, periodicals, study materials, and supplies sold by Herald House. A commission goes to the book steward based on his sales. Ordinarily the steward passes the commission on to the branch for its building fund, missionary fund, or other worthy projects.

Lamoni, Iowa, topped the list of local book stewards this year with a commission of $398.63. Columbus, Ohio; Warrensburg, Missouri; Wichita, Kansas; and Des Moines, Iowa, were close behind.

In some instances, one book steward serves a whole stake or district with an assistant working in each congregation. Center Stake led this group with a commission of $2,405.33. Kansas City Stake and Detroit International Stake ran second and third.

Kenneth Graham said church members are urged to support their local book stewards. "They are a vital part of Herald House and its service to the church," he stated.

"The local representatives of Herald House are stewards in the truest sense," Brother Graham added. "The book stewards work hard keeping attractive displays and accurate accounts. They receive no reward other than the satisfaction of performing a service to the members of the congregation and contributing their commissions to the branch. They are real stewards in the field of church literature and supplies."

The book steward program was initiated by Herald House over ten years ago. It was unique among church publishing houses with its new sales service. The program has grown steadily. During the past seven years book steward commissions have tripled. The book steward program represents about 50 per cent of Herald House sales each year.

Preparing for a World Conference

The second in a series of editorials concerning General Conference

IN the late 1800's there was little or no detailed preparation for a Conference. The date was set, and when the time came the body chose who would preach and preside. All the business was presented, decided, and the Conference adjourned.

For the last fifty years, however, General Conferences have been so large that prior planning was necessary. Today planning for a Conference begins soon after the previous one is over. Six months before Conference there are hundreds of persons working on more than a dozen committees and projects preparing for the world gathering.

Responsibility for planning a Conference rests with the First Presidency. It is a big job. It involves thousands of details. These are some of the committees that help get the job done:

Registration—has responsibility for accumulation of materials needed by delegates, registering delegates and visitors, collecting registration fees.

Credentials—receives and processes the names of delegates from stakes, districts, branches in unorganized areas, and missions abroad, approves delegates, seats delegations, reports to Conference.

Music—has responsibility for music ministry, chooses leaders and makes hymn selections.

Press—makes arrangements for the accurate and immediate dissemination of Conference news to all of the local newspapers and major press services.

Radio-TV—implements Conference coverage by these mass media.

Administration to the Sick—provides place of worship and ministry for those desiring administration. (Last Conference more than 300 persons utilized this service.)

Ushers—enlists and instructs the many men needed to assist in the handling of equipment, preparation of Communion emblems, and ushering.

Housing—lists, inspects, and assigns housing to Conference visitors who request help in finding lodgings; utilizes both commercial and private facilities.

Decorations—takes care of the floral and other decorations for the major worship centers.

Messenger Service—organizes and directs the Boy Scouts and Orioles who serve as messengers.

Communion Service—enlists priesthood and directs the service of Communion to the members in the huge General Conference Chamber.

These are not all the committees. There are others that arrange for such things as nursing care, automobile parking, and of course there is the Laurel Club with its mammoth task of feeding the thousands of Conference visitors.

In all this the First Presidency works closely with the presiding bishopric in making the physical facilities as ready and enjoyable as possible.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY'S great responsibility is determining what should be accomplished at Conference and then assigning the responsibilities to see that the goals are achieved. They do much of this work through the office of Charles Neff and Duane Couey, assistants to the First Presidency.

Much planning and work is also put into the special programs that are presented at General Conference. Two evening programs are now being planned for this year's Conference. On Tuesday evening the church's three educational institutions will present "We Believe in Learning." The program will reflect the ministry of Graceland College, the School of the Restoration, and the "San" School of Nursing. "The Kingdom in the World" will be the theme Thursday evening when the professional associations and special ministry groups present their program.

DURING the 1905 Conference an earlier resolution was rescinded making it possible for "musical entertainment" to be offered at Conferences. That year the conferees enjoyed a concert by the Graceland College Choral Society. This presentation was followed by a collection to purchase a piano for the college.

This year the Independence Symphony Orchestra and the Radio Choir will provide a program of music during the first Sunday afternoon. The orchestra will be under the direction of Franklyn Weddle. Frank Hunter will direct the Radio Choir. A new anthem by Stanley Leonard of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, will have its initial performance. Donald Henrickson of Conklin, Michigan, will be vocal soloist.

The daily preaching services, the many classes, the legislation preparations sessions, all require planning. These are the things that require hours, days, and weeks for preparation in the months before General Conference.

Preparation that is not so apparent, perhaps, is the thought and prayers given daily by the church officers and members all over the world. It is important to remember at this time, just a few weeks before Conference begins, that all the elaborate plans and committees in the world cannot make a successful Conference if the Saints neglect to approach the meetings in humble prayer and thanksgiving. This is a preparation in which we can all help.

The Atonement of Jesus

A CONCEPT of the atonement made by the only begotten Son of God is certainly basic to true Christian religion. It broadens our understanding of many fundamental doctrines but also requires that we comprehend something of these doctrines before we can appreciate it. To better understand the atonement we must first consider the nature of God and his purpose in creating man and the world.

God Is Supreme

The dictionary tells us that God is "the one Supreme Being, the creator and ruler of the universe."¹ To those who have communed with him and known his spirit, this characterization falls far short of adequately explaining or describing God. Yet this short statement represents the basic truth about God. It is the point at which a person would almost have to start in explaining God to someone who had no concept of deity.

At the time Moses was sent to lead the children of Israel out of Egypt, the Hebrew people had been in bondage for four hundred years. They had been enslaved by a people who worshiped many gods, and consequently the ideas which the children of Israel held about God had become narrow. They had become accustomed to many gods and had even lost the concept of one supreme ruler of the universe. They expected God to have a name as did the other gods. Therefore Moses asked God this question, "Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them?"²

In answer God said, "I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you."³

In these words God was saying, "I am more than just another god whose name you can add to your already long list. I am the essence of all things. I am the creator of the world. I was before it, and I shall be after it. I am, and all things are important only as they relate to me."

In modern revelation we have the following words with a similar meaning. "Behold, and hearken unto the voice of him who has all power, who is from everlasting to everlasting, even Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end."⁴

God's supremacy is basic. He is supreme by definition. We are also told that God is love. We are told of his mercy, justice, and other characteristics. However, these qualities tend only to describe God rather than to define him. A man may have great love. He could develop the quality of love to such an extent that we could say he is love in es-entially the same way that God is love. However, we could never say that a man is supreme. Similarly, a man can be just and merciful, but not supreme.

The Nature of God's Supremacy

The supremacy of God arises from his intelligence, or from his knowledge of all truth.⁵ A corollary of this statement is that God acts in accordance with established laws, that he does not change laws capriciously, that indeed he cannot change basic truth.⁶ He maintains his supremacy through complete knowledge of the truth and by abiding by it. Thus he is able to use it to accomplish his purposes.

In Section 90 of the Doctrine and Covenants, we are told that truth was not created. We are also told that truth cannot be created. This is the reason why God is unchangeable. His every action is governed by his knowledge of the totality of eternal truth. If God were changeable, it would be necessary for truth to change or God would be deviating from it. Similarly, if truth—that which determines what is—were changeable, then God would have to change with it if he was to remain supreme and perfect.

God would not be supreme nor perfect if he deviated even in the least degree from eternal truth. Truth is the basis of all power, might, and majesty. It is through the application of truth that all things are accomplished. By the application of falsehood to a particular situation, the desired end can never be achieved. If God knows all things, then he would never apply falsehood to any situation. To do so would be foolishness.

We might insert here the thought that men have often gained power by either intentionally or unintentionally teaching and circulating falsehood. Indeed, such is the method which Satan uses to obtain power. However, the real source of this power is truth—the truth that men may be deceived into believing falsehoods and frequently may choose to be led by falsehoods rather than by known truth.

This type of deception, whether self-deception or otherwise, is also basic to the power arising from the coercion of people—the power of the police state, the racketeers. People submit to this type of power because of fear which they should not have. Jesus said, "And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them who kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do."⁷ People frequently believe that the freedom to live is more valuable than other freedoms. True men of God have never been deceived in this way. Consider Jesus himself, most of his original twelve apostles, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Abinadi, Daniel, and others.

Although the fact that this power of Satan and unscrupulous men arises from the application of truth in the utilization of falsehoods and ignorance, it is nevertheless a limited and imperfect power because the truth from which it comes is not integrated with the totality of truth. For this reason the designs of Satan and self-seeking men are doomed to failure. Among the many ways in which these persons fail to conform to eternal truth is the basic departure in which they seek to maximize their selfish enjoyment by emphasizing self, when it is eternally true that maximum individual satisfaction can come only to those who lose themselves in attempts to benefit others.

The Purpose of God

We have said that God is supreme because of his knowledge of all truth and therefore is able to accomplish his desires. What can we expect God to seek to accomplish through the application of truth?

We know that God knows both joy and sorrow.⁸ Because of his ability to experience these emotions he is motivated to act. If he were completely aloof, detached, and neutral, he would have no reason or desire to do anything. But he does act, and he seeks to achieve joy and satisfaction for himself. Throughout the Scriptures God implores people to do those things that will be pleasing to him. We feel little hesitation in stating that God's basic purpose is to achieve joy for himself. Certainly that was his purpose in the creation of the world and mankind.⁹ But joy is a quality that is attained in peculiar ways.

What Is Joy?

Joy is the antithesis of sorrow, pain, grief, and displeasure. It is an emotion, a quality of the mind. It is said that joy is the "agreeable emotion which accompanies the possession, acquisition, or expectation of that which is good or greatly desired."¹⁰ But the word "good" has meaning for us only if we are able to contrast it with the concept of evil or that which is bad. Likewise, in order for the concept of desirability to have meaning for us we must also have the concept of undesirability. Likewise, too, we are unable to comprehend or experience joy unless we also comprehend or experience sorrow, displeasure, grief, or pain. Lehi spoke of these things when he said,

For it must needs be that there is an opposition in all things. If not so, . . . righteousness could not be brought to pass; neither wickedness; neither holiness nor misery; neither good nor bad. Wherefore, all things must needs be a compound in one; wherefore, if it should be one body, it must needs remain as dead, having no life, neither death nor corruption, nor incorruption, happiness nor misery, neither sense nor insensibility. Wherefore, it must needs have been created for a thing of nought; wherefore, there would have been no purpose in the end of its creation.¹¹

Men often speak of the pride of workmanship and the joys of creativity. This pride and joy stems from the fact that they have been able to overcome the tendency to make mistakes. (This is a tendency which is strong, indeed, among men. Those who overcome it have accomplished a great deal.) They have been able to foresee and circumvent all pitfalls, and the goal of their efforts is accomplished.

If then joy results from the ability to overcome or displace the tendency to experience sorrow, grief, or frustration, how is God to experience joy? He is of infinite wisdom and therefore has infinite power to carry out the desires into which his wisdom directs him. He, of himself, has no tendency to make mistakes, nor to experience sorrow or frustration. He knows what will bring him sorrow and is able to counteract it before it ever occurs. According to our definition, this should bring him some joy, yet this could not be a great stirring emotion because it requires such a small effort on the part of him who is infinite. Therefore, because of the nature of joy, and also because of the nature of God, it was necessary for him to create a situation that had the potentiality of causing him great sorrow in order that he might have the opportunity of experiencing great joy.

The Source of God's Joy

It was through the creation of mankind that God provided this situation. It seems that the rest of creation (at least that part with which we are most closely associated) was subsidiary to man, and was created in order to provide the proper environment in which man could live and have an opportunity to develop according to the plan of God.¹² The rest of creation has no agency—no opportunity to make choices. It is what it is and functions as it does because that is the way God created it. It cannot do otherwise. Through its many wonders it speaks of the providence of the heavenly Father—his wisdom, power, and majesty. In that way it praises him; however, it has no other choice. It cannot displease him.

But man is intelligent. He is an agent unto himself. He has the potential ability to distinguish between good and evil. If he chooses to receive truth—the commandments of God—and abide by it, he is rewarded in that he gains new insight into reality. He gains power to control things, others, and most important, himself. He gains additional understanding of the true values to be sought in living. He begins to move with the universe rather than against it.

If a man chooses to disregard truth he is frustrated at every turn. His personality and intellect remain undeveloped. He becomes a slave to his own fears and passions, and because of this others control and manipulate his life if they so desire.

This is, of course, an oversimplified description of the situation in which man finds himself, and yet it is basically true. Truths could be classified into a number of different groups. For example, we customarily refer to various subject matter fields such as botany, geology, psychology, philosophy, economics—and we would not want to exclude the workaday truths of everyday life. Many of these truths are understood relatively well by many people and are certainly important in contributing to their well-being.

The truths revealed in the commandments of God are usually of a more general nature, having to do with the relationships of man to man and of man to God, and also with the ways in which truths from the specific subject matter fields should be applied in real life situations. Through his acceptance or rejection of God's explanation of how his life should be ordered, a man can either rise to the heights of human experience where he comprehends God and all truth¹³ or descend to the depths of human debauchery where he has only the capacity to desire the most selfish satisfactions of sensual appetites.

Thus while God made no mistakes in the creation of man, he did bring about a situation that could cause Him great sorrow or great joy. God's sorrow arises from the fact that some of these men whom he created "a little lower than the angels,"¹⁴ in his own image, and within whom he created the possibility of becoming a son of God¹⁵ should not choose to accept the light (truth) that is freely given but should choose that darkness which is sin and the cause of all the misery that is in the world today, or ever has been, or ever will be. God's joy is in seeing some of these same men recognize him for what he really is, and therefore accept the truth he teaches and develop into the type of beings they were created to be.¹⁶

We can now concentrate attention a bit more directly on the atonement itself. Nephi writes one of the briefest and yet clearest descriptions of the purpose and necessity for this sacrifice. He says:

For as death hath passed upon all men, to fulfill the merciful plan of the great Creator, there must needs be a power of resurrection, and the resurrection must needs come unto man by reason of the fall; and the fall came by reason of transgression; and because man became fallen; they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement; save it should be an infinite atonement, this corruption could not put on incorruption. Wherefore, the first judgment which came upon man must needs have remained to an endless duration. And if so, this flesh must have laid down to rot and to crumble to its mother earth, to rise no more.

O the wisdom of God! his mercy and grace! For behold, if the flesh should rise no more, our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the eternal God, and became the devil, to rise no more. And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself.¹⁷

Creation and the Fall

God created man and placed him in the Garden of Eden an innocent being. He was without sin and was incapable of sin, for he did not have the ability to distinguish between good and evil. In this condition man lived in the presence of God and walked and talked with him. In this condition man was good, not because he chose to be good—indeed he was not good in a positive sense, he was only innocent. He was worthy to be in the presence of God in much the same way as a beast or a tree is worthy to be in the presence of God.

But God gave Adam one commandment and with this commandment came the opportunity of either obedience or disobedience. This commandment was: "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but remember that I forbid it; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."¹⁸ Adam's transgression of this commandment brought two important consequences. First, he became subject to sin in all its many aspects, because now he had the ability to know whether he did good or evil. Because of this it became impossible for any man to be entirely free of sin.¹⁹ Through sin man separates himself from God or becomes "cut off from the presence of the Lord," because no unclean or corrupt thing can dwell in his presence.²⁰ This was the first judgment of which Nephi speaks.

The second consequence was that man became subject to physical death. God brought this death upon man in order that he, man, might not forever remain under this first judgment of separation from God.²¹

Through sin man corrupts himself. This corruption is of a lasting nature. It separates him from God and there is nothing which he of himself can do to overcome this imperfection in himself. (This is true regardless of whether a man sins ignorantly or not. It is the atonement which nullifies the consequences of sin resulting from a lack of understanding.) Man would have to bear the consequences of this sin and the misery it brought forever if it were not for the grace of Jesus Christ of which the Apostle Paul was so well aware.

The passage quoted from II Nephi seems to indicate that our deliverance from sin and from Satan comes about simply because our bodies will be raised again. However, our resurrection and our release from the bondage of sin both come as a result of the sacrifice of Jesus, as a careful reading of the passage along with other Scriptures will indicate. In speaking of this sacrifice Nephi says, "Wherefore, it must needs be an infinite atonement."

The Atonement Was Imperative

At this point we could very well ask, Why could not God simply forgive man his sin and through his almighty power raise man from the dead, incorruptible? Why was it necessary for Jesus to live, and then to suffer and die on the cross? In short, why is so much significance attached to the atonement?

First of all, it is necessary to consider a different aspect of the creation. Creation was the act of God, and it has been previously indicated that God, in order to remain supreme and thus remain God, must abide by eternal laws. One of these laws is that the responsibility for any given act devolves upon the perpetrator of that act. The acceptance of this responsibility is one form of justice. Therefore, when God created within man the possibility that he might become a sinful, degraded, miserable being, it was imperative that he accept some of the responsibility for this sin and misery. Not all, to be sure, for while the potentiality lies within man he does not become sinful except by his own free actions. If God did not bear some of the consequences of man's sin he would be less than just; he would be disobedient to eternal truth and therefore less than the infinite God that he is.

Second, if it is eternally true that man must bear the remainder of the consequences of his sin, God cannot say, "Well, I'll just forgive the sin and forget all about it." To do so would again be going contrary to eternal truth. While it is common to think of sin as being sin against God, it is more basically sin against truth. Any sin is a sin against truth because, according to my definition, sin is disobedience to eternal truth. If God has enlightened men concerning this truth and given them definite commandments to follow it, then their disobedience would be sin against both the truth and God. God could, in justice, forgive a man for disregarding what he, God, had told the man. But he could not in justice nullify the consequences of the disobedience to eternal truth unless he could in some way bear those consequences himself.

To use a homely example: Suppose I told my child not to touch a hot oven, but she disregarded my advice. I could be quite willing to forgive her for not obeying me, but no matter how much I forgave her I could not change the fact that her hand was burned and that she would have to bear the consequences of her disobedience to truth. Or, to take another example, suppose a father commands his son to be careful when playing ball and not to let the ball break any of the neighbors' windows. But suppose this does happen. The father may forgive the boy for his disobedience; however, this does not absolve the boy from the responsibility of the broken window, and the father cannot forgive the boy for it unless he, the father, agrees to accept that responsibility himself.

Our conclusions are these. First, God has made himself partially responsible for man's sin and, therefore, according to the laws of justice he must bear his share of the consequences of that sin and relieve man of that part of the burden. Second, even then he cannot forgive men their sins and sanctify them from corruption to incorruption, unless he himself is able to and willing to bear the consequences of man's disobedience to eternal truth. Third, if man should remain unforgiven he would be in a state of sin and misery similar to that of Satan. This would bring great sorrow to God and frustrate the basic purpose of creation.

These conclusions point out clearly why it was necessary for Jesus to bear the sins of the world. It also indicates why an infinite sacrifice was necessary. Only by bearing pain in the most extreme degree could it be said that Christ did indeed bear all the consequences of the sins of the world. Of course, in his death on the cross Jesus did bear the sin of the world and made the infinite atonement.

The basic sin of the world—the sin from which all the sins of the world arise—is the failure to recognize and accept God and Christ for what they are. Men are sinful because they fail to really comprehend that God and his commands are the source of all that is good and true and desirable. It was this basic sin which Jesus bore. He bore it fully—to the fullest extent possible. He bore it alone.

The physical pain and death which he bore was probably mild compared to the mental anguish that must have been his. Here was the Creator not only of man and all the myriad wonders of the earth, but also the infinity of the heavens and worlds of which we have no knowledge. He was walking among his own creatures who were miserable, downtrodden, and dejected because they had chosen to disregard the truth that he, his servants, and his Spirit had been trying to teach them for centuries. He walked among them doing nothing but good, ministering to their immediate needs and trying to teach them the eternal truths that would lead them to the perfect life. But they, in their ignorance, hated him. They laughed at him who had given them life. They spat upon him who had perfect knowledge. They publicly beat him who had loved them and healed their sick. They crammed a crown of thorns on that head which knew the depths of their hearts and every detail of their beings. They nailed him, as they would a thief, to a cross—he who was the begotten Son of God. They presumed to destroy that which is from eternity to all eternity! He who, in the twinkling of an eye, could turn the whole of creation into dust patiently, sorrowfully, yet willingly bore the utmost that sin could do to him.

The Victory Is Christ's

Having literally borne the sin of the world, Jesus stands ready to remove the weight of responsibility for sin from the shoulders of all men who will recognize their wrongdoing and go to him with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Truly he "hath redeemed us from the curse of the law."²² He is our advocate with God who administers eternal truth and must insist that it be obeyed. In his own words: "I am Christ, and in mine own name, by virtue of the blood which I have spilt, have I plead before the Father for them."²³

Standard of Living -- Redefined

THE "STANDARD OF LIVING" is a foremost topic of conversation among some people of America today. Economic and political crises have spurred thought in this vein. Wherever and whenever we have entered these discussions, we have soon discovered that "standard of living" did not cover the same area of meaning for the participants. So divergent were views and definitions that the term had to be defined anew.

Consider some history of Christianity. As the Reformation developed more fully, missionaries were sent to the "retarded" areas of the earth. These missionaries in most every case took with them Western civilization. All their gospel teachings were set in a Western framework. The results were varied. People became in various degrees westernized; their culture lapsed and decayed; a glimmering of the gospel of Christ was theirs to the extent they could mimic their missionary teachers. In fact a Negro in the Belgian Congo put it this way, "When the white man came, he had the Book and we had the land. Now we have the Book and he has the land."

The purpose of Christ was not to destroy cultures but to enrich them. His kingdom is a kingdom of spirit and equity (Romans 4: 17). Nowhere can I read into the Scripture that the gospel is geared to Western ways.

This all points up a warped outlook on the purposes of life. "Standard of living" to many people means how large a house, how many cars, how big an annual income—economics. To others it means the degree of formal education that is obtained. Here is the crux of the difficulty. We see in these meanings no standard. To us, "standard of living" is Jesus Christ. He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life—he is the standard of life. We of the Restoration ought not to agree to any lesser definition.

With this in mind, we should take our standard of living to all the world—not to destroy cultures but to enrich them. We of the Restoration must not be guilty of pressing the mold of our civilization onto other people and calling it the gospel of Christ. We, of all people, should not want to raise the standard of living for "backward" people. Rather, we should take to them a new standard—that standard is Jesus Christ. We must preach him crucified and risen unto eternal life.

Love Him or Deny Him But Never Ignore Jesus

JESUS CHRIST claims to be the Son of God, the physical revelation of Deity, the creator of the earth, the redeemer and judge of the race. In view of his tremendous claims we should take a good solid look at him. Then, reflecting on what he did for us in dying (which makes what he said about himself believable), we should either love him or deny him—but never ignore him.

Ingratitude is a serious flaw of character. One of the charges we of the present generation will surely have to face on judgment day will be the way we simply ignore the Christ. "Yes, he lived, died, rose, and ascended, and so what?" might be one way of expressing the attitude of many of the present inhabitants of this planet. We just plan our lives without him. Attention given him is too often momentary and casual. We do not deny him—we know better than to do that—but we do not take time to know and love him for who he really is and for what he is doing for us every day.

For Emergencies Only

There is a story told of a sailor who had been on the seas for many years. He was rugged, independent, and quite honest. One day the worst storm of his entire career came up and began to toss the ship back and forth. The old sailor at first held his composure, but with each crack in the beams and main structure of the vessel his calmness faded until finally in utter desperation he dropped to his knees and began to pray.

"God," he prayed, "I haven't bothered you for twenty years, and if you'll save me today I won't bother you for another twenty." He hadn't denied the existence of God for twenty years—openly at least—but neither had he bothered to develop any kind of affection or appreciation for his God. This attitude is much too familiar to human experience for it to be "just a story."

Maybe it's because we don't really know how good God is and that we exist only through and of him that causes our apathy toward him. Maybe we don't want to know, so as to be free of any obligation. One of two things generally happen, however, when we get a glimpse of the God of love and power (most dramatically revealed in Jesus). Either we are moved to greater love and appreciation and consequently become devoted to him, or we move in the other direction and become more confirmed in our rebellion and sin. The world needs the revelation of truth which shines brilliantly from the cross so as to turn man toward salvation or damnation.

The Problem of Goodness

Surprising as it may seem at first, goodness can actually get in our way sometimes. We are not really bad fellows in the eyes of each other. Most of us haven't been drunk recently or committed any serious crime. Really we are quite decent compared to the standards of the little pocket of the universe we inhabit. This nicety, however, very often gets in our way and actually prevents us from seeing our final goal and what God is desiring to make of us. If our "goodness" encourages the present "paralysis of the soul" toward not sensing the need for Christ, then it can be a real detriment.

Many well-meaning folks, perhaps unawares, hide behind the service they render the community through some club or fraternal order to which they may belong and fail to make a full surrender to the Crucified One. Many times people say in a tone of self-defense, "If you live up to the rules of this or that organization you will certainly be a good person." The many wonderful service organizations throughout the world do an amazing amount of good in varied ways; however, God seeks not just "good people" but "new men."

Jesus never asked anyone to be good. He did ask us to do something much greater and promised us his strength to do it if we would follow him all the way. If we hide behind our good works as an excuse for not viewing the cross and its implications for our own surrender, then our "goodness" will eventually be our own undoing.

God Deserves Our Love

We need to stand up and love Christ more than we do, or to soundly deny him and be done with him forever. Something strange but real in us causes us to know better than to deny him as an impostor, or even as an unfortunate misguided young preacher. The problem before us then is this, Just how do we enlarge and expand our love for him as our Lord and Savior? How can it be so hard and yet so easy?

God, as the creator, naturally deserves our loyalty. God, as the power that sustains the universe and everything we see, would likewise deserve our complete obedience to him and his laws—even though this obedience might be given unwillingly through fear or from a selfish motive (seeking special favor). However, when God breaks through upon us and we see him as the dying redeemer also, he then deserves the greatest love, the deepest expression of affection and loyalty we are capable of giving. God deserves our love.

Love and worship are close together. We love our children and in a sense worship them. It is easier to love what we are best acquainted with if it is lovable at all. Can you imagine loving anything in the deepest sense unless you had some idea of what it was like? As we gradually come to know Christ, we understand God—and love for him just “happens.” Somehow our ability to worship God is tied up with our feelings of love, appreciation, respect, admiration, and those spontaneous emotions that come from the bottom of the wellsprings of the soul.

Learning to Love

When we try to love God, we learn rather soon that these deep feelings cannot be generated by the will alone. We can make ourselves do some necessary things in life, but we cannot force ourselves to love. We can force ourselves to show up at church on Sundays, to quit smoking and drinking, and to use good language, but the secret flow of “love” cannot be turned on and off by a conscious effort of the will. However, even though love cannot be generated by forcing out so many prayers or getting a perfect attendance button at church or going through some outward sign of worship, let us be quick to remind ourselves that all these things will begin to happen the minute real love of God enters the heart. The difference is mainly inside but will eventually show up outside in some form. Being religious for any other reason than out of love for God will break down eventually.

“Sour” Christians

Usually when we think of religion we think of a lot of commandments; but it’s interesting that the One we want to love put it this way: “If a man love me, he will keep my words.” Have we possibly been going at this procedure a little backward? “If we keep all his commandments, we will love him automatically,” is the reverse approach, though better than no approach at all.

This procedure of “converting people to a formula” may be what produces the so-called “sour Christian.” These are they who have obeyed all the rules of religion but have a mean disposition. They have very little patience with others who have not obeyed all the rules they have managed to conquer sometime at great personal efforts. These are they who are very quick to tell about their sacrifices for the kingdom and any personal victories they’ve achieved. Usually the “sour Christian” is easily offended, and he exerts much influence of a type at business meetings. It isn’t easy for him to forgive. It isn’t Christ so much as the rules of religion that count with him, and these rules have to do much with outward signs of righteousness. Jesus said that if we would relax and put down our defenses and love him we would automatically keep all his commandments. We need to know more about the man than the rules but both are important.

To Know Him Is to Love Him

Because we do not usually love what we do not know, it is simple deduction to see that if we are to enlarge and deepen our love for Christ, we have to become more intimately acquainted with him. This is the opposite of ignoring him. In one of our hymns we sing the words, “By looking to Jesus, like him thou shalt be . . .” It takes looking at him a good deal more than we have been accustomed to doing. With our adult minds we need to reread the Gospels often. We must come to know this man, Christ Jesus; then we will either deny him or be drawn to him in a closer bond of love and devotion. If we stand close enough to a fountain of water spraying up in the air we are sure to get wet. When we stand close to Jesus we cannot help getting “touched” by the divine flow of love that radiates from him continually.

The word “lukewarm” was the adjective God used to describe people who have no deep feelings one way or the other, and they come in for a stinging condemnation. In the talent parable it was the man who did nothing that was condemned. Note he did nothing bad but had no feelings to move him into action. If the crucifixion of Christ does not evoke some kind of active response from us we are in a dangerous position.

A Three-dimensional View

We in the restored church of Jesus Christ are especially fortunate in having the three records of Christ and his ministry. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants give us a three-dimensional view of Christ and a more nearly complete picture of his ministry. We should be more familiar with the Christ and better able to interpret him to the world than any other people. Events in his earthly ministry ought to come close to us as we read and reread the records with the same spirit that inspired the writers. Our three Books of Scripture may be used for various purposes, but one of the basic reasons for their preservation is to bear testimony of Jesus Christ.

How can we do a better job of getting across to our children and nonmembers friends who this Christ is? One of the first steps would be to come to know him better ourselves in a personal way.

It is fairly easy to get people to spend fifteen minutes a day doing exercise to trim the body down if a doctor so advises. Others unhesitatingly take ten minutes out of each day to increase their vocabulary, or learn a foreign language, or to train their minds in some fashion. However, when we come to the most essential part of us—the soul—we are the most ready to neglect any daily training or exercise or refreshing intake of spiritual food. If we would spend ten minutes each day in silent, meditative, serious contemplation on the holiest life ever lived, we would be amazed at the transformation that would come over us. We are entering here into something that is difficult to talk about or describe. It has to be experienced. The mainspring of worship is loosed somehow when we look at Christ and his crucifixion and think on him consistently. We are changed in his presence.

Formula for Spiritual Growth

Without changing our daily pattern of living too drastically, let us include more “looks” at Jesus. We can keep on making a living, caring for the family, and building up the cause of Zion in our own place, but we should be including all along more “glances” at him who lived among us for a while. Unconquered habits, unfinished jobs, delayed decisions—all will take care of themselves. In short, we will begin to obey more and more of his commandments when we begin to look at, learn about, and love the Son of God.

Reminiscing in Kirtland

Part I

By Pearl Wilcox

THE WESTERN RESERVE, lying along the southern shores of Lake Erie in northern Ohio, was known in history as the gateway to the West. Carved from this domain of primitive wilderness was a tract of land known as Geauga County, and since 1840 as Lake County. It is the smallest county in the state of Ohio but the richest per capita.

The history of this locality has been crowded with colorful and significant events. It was here in 1831 that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints established its first "Stake of Zion"; for seven years Kirtland flourished as the headquarters of the church.

Since then great cities have sprung up and commerce has laid busy hands on the surrounding lands, but Kirtland has been spared much of its native beauty.

In order to properly appreciate the efforts made by those devoted Latter Day Saints as they were establishing an outpost for the future Zion that was to be built in Missouri, we must consider the times and general surroundings leading to the events of 1831 when Kirtland became the utopia of the Saints.

Travel over the concrete ribbons of highways today is vastly different than those first pioneers experienced as they left their established homes in Connecticut, New York, and Pennsylvania. They loaded a selection of goods on wagons, preparing for a two or three months' journey of anguish, often losing their goods and cattle while fording or swimming the creeks and rivers. They realized it would mean a few years of hardships and loneliness, which they were willing to endure. They brought with them only the necessities of life, just the simple articles, the plain implements of home industry that are now cherished "relics" of this age. There was the spinning wheel, the swift, the reel, the hatchel, the flax wheel, the swinging knife, and the rifle (which was a flintlock in those days), the tin oven, the charcoal footstool, the keg and canteen, a plow, a minimum of bedding and clothing, a few iron or pewter utensils, and a faithful dog.

A treaty was made with the Indians that stimulated the early colonization of the Western Reserve. This entire land of the Great Lakes and Ohio valley was first claimed by those dusky sons of the forest, the imprint of whose moccasins had been planted over and over again on every square rod of this land.

In this 120-mile stretch of wilderness that comprised the Great Western Reserve a few families were located miles apart in clearings hacked out of the woods; these people were isolated, lonely, and trying desperately to keep alive.

Turhand Kirtland, the first general agent and surveyor of the Connecticut Land Company, came to the Reserve with his surveying party in 1798. It was because of his kindness and just treatment of the Indians that peace was established between them and the whites in his region. This was especially shown in the case of the killing of an Indian by a white man. Judge Kirtland called in the Indian chiefs and, after thorough discussion, the chiefs decided that the killing was in self-defense. Thereafter the Indians had implicit confidence in Judge Kirtland.

Turhand Kirtland was one of a group of shareholders at a public drawing of lands in township units offered by the Connecticut Land Company in 1796. His group drew Township 7, Range 7, which is now Burton Township. In order to equalize the many swamps in Burton, there was added about 5,500 acres of Township 9, Range 9, which is now Kirtland.

Since Turhand Kirtland was about one-sixth owner of the equalized township of Burton, he secured a share that represented approximately nine hundred acres in the present Kirtland or one eighteenth of the township. His purpose was to start settlement in the two townships in which he was personally interested.

Pearl Wilcox

Mr. Kirtland's diary, which I viewed in Columbus, Ohio, contains some of the incidents of that spring and summer. The settlers, camping in the center of their township, first burned over a small area, plowed it, and planted a garden to furnish food for the party. For meat they caught fish in the streams, snared wild pigeons, and caught an occasional fawn in the woods. They did not waste ammunition except on an occasional prowling bear or wolf. On one occasion they killed a large rattlesnake and cooked it. Mr. Kirtland records, "I can say with greatest candor I never ate better meat." Other diary entries read: "We cut a road into Chardon [now Willoughby] and was delighted when we found a good spring and a warm place for a garden." "Being out of bread and flour was obliged to give up surveying this day. We went and explored the land for our farm to settle on, and cut the road two miles." Much time was spent in locating millsites on the Chagrin River and other streams. On July 16 he wrote of exploring Township 9, Range 9, the present Kirtland, the town that bears his name. In many ways he contributed to the general welfare of the settlers in the Western Reserve and Geauga County and was certainly one of the leading citizens, if not the leader among the inhabitants.

The town of Kirtland bears the name of a family that came to the first colonies only fifteen years after the landing at Plymouth Rock, a family that gave distinctive service in military affairs, in education, and in civil offices.

In the New England states rumor spread from village to farmhouse of the rich land where all was considered a luxury. It was said the livestock could winter outdoors in the woods of black walnut, hickory, chestnut, and sugar maple. The geography of the region was ideal; there were mountainous sections and level plateaus, broad valleys, extensive plains, rich fertile open prairies. There were two great drainage systems, the Ohio River with its many tributaries on the south and the Great Lakes on the north; these afford the best facilities for transportation.

Christopher Crary and his family left their New England home in 1811 for the wilds of the New Connecticut, as it was then known, and became the first permanent settlers along the Chagrin River. Later this location was to be known as Kirtland Township. When the Crarys reached the Chillicothe road, they found that it had been scarcely traversed, except by wild beasts. After fording the Chagrin River, they supposed their worst fears were over, but their wagon broke as the night was closing around them. Their way then was dark and tortuous, and the canopy of branches above, which had recently been so beautiful, now hid the light of the stars, but they were cheered by the ceaseless music of the katydids as they slowly wended their way to their pioneer home.

The old Chillicothe road that passed in front of the Temple, known today as Route 306, was first projected by Turhand Kirtland in 1801, beginning at the Lake Shore road in the middle of Range 9, going due south, thus through the village of Kirtland.

The second known pioneer to follow Mr. Crary was John Moore; then Isaac Morley came from Massachusetts and made his clearing on the river flats. He returned to his native state, married, and with his young bride began life on his improvement. Peter French arrived from Mentor and bought farm land, with John Parris locating at the south of the others. Thomas Morley, with his family, acquired large land holdings in 1815, and early the following spring Titus Billings built his cabin in the Flats. Then came Thomas Fuller, a millwright, who dressed out several stones from the granite boulders found in the locality.

The township now settled very rapidly, Mr. Card and Mr. Holmes built the first gristmill, and James Boyden erected a cloth-dressing and wool-carding establishment. Warren Corning built a distillery, and Isaac Chatfield started a blacksmith shop. Clauding Stoddard bought all the middle tract west of Chillicothe road and divided it into small farms.

In the early years of settlement the country was rough and wild. The roadway which had been cut through the wilderness was still lined with tangled brush, hemmed by overhanging branches, and abounding with mudholes. Wolves were plentiful and made the nights hideous with their howlings. On one occasion Mr. Crary was advised by Mr. French not to go home until in the morning as there were so many wolves in the swamps.

The first log schoolhouse, erected in 1814, was used for meetings, elections, and all public gatherings. Miss Estella Crary, the teacher, used the persuasive arguments of Dilworth and the birch whip in teaching the twelve barefooted urchins. She received for her service twenty-five cents a day. In 1819 a frame school was built at the Flats, with Josiah Jones as teacher. Then some years later, a teacher by the name of Moran was hired to give twenty-four evening lessons in grammar.

On Sundays the preacher came to occupy the schoolhouses in the neighborhood; he usually received for his services his Sunday dinner and "hoss feed."

The influence of education and religion was bringing refinement and culture to this settlement that was forming on the "hairpin" turn of the Chagrin River, named Kirtland Mills in honor of Turhand Kirtland.

By 1819 the little settlement could boast of ninety-seven male citizens who were eligible to vote. The town was becoming a primitive industrial center of harness and saddle shops, boot shops, tinware shops, and other businesses. The first general merchandising store was established by N. K. Whitney in 1823, though we learn that O. A. Crary brought a few goods to Kirtland prior to that date.

Mr. Whitney's store was in a small log building the first year; then he moved it to a new frame building where he continued in business until the dispersing of the Latter Day Saints from Kirtland. Mr. Whitney was also commissioned postmaster in 1825, with the post office in the store. Mail was received once each week.

Workers Together with God

SOME years ago I was told by inspiration to go to the home of Brother Sandy Weiderholt in Saginaw, Michigan. He had been plastering with lime, and some had fallen in his eye, but he was in a hurry to finish so he could go to a funeral. As a result when he went to the doctor he was told that three holes had been burned through his eyeball and he would lose his sight. He was kept in total darkness for two months. The doctor told him infection had developed behind the other eye and he might lose the sight of it also. I told him the Lord had directed me to come to him, and the same Lord who had sent me there could heal him if he had faith in Him. His reply came quickly, "I know he can heal me, if he will." I administered to him and in two weeks he was back to work with both eyes normal.

On another occasion I was directed to go to another home. I started out walking and was taking a short cut when the Spirit said, "Don't go this way," but I went on for a block when I was directed to go back. When I arrived at the home the sister came from her room praying the Lord to send whom he would. Previous to that she had asked for a certain one. After talking for a while I was directed to ask her to go with me to another home. There I asked for a period of prayer, and following the prayers I was directed to take the hand of the sister of this second home and place it in her husband's. I counseled them in the sanctity of the marriage covenant. Later I learned that both marriages were to be broken up, but were saved because the couples were made conscious that God loved them.

On another occasion I had baptized a Sister Coffin. She had been a Catholic and was concerned about her children. I had loaned her daughter, Kathy Chinnery, The Call at Evening. As a result of reading this book Kathy became conscious of her need of God and went back to the Catholic church and paid the price to become a good Catholic. Sister Coffin came to me with tears in her eyes and asked, "What shall I do?" I told her to give her one year and continue to pray for her. About a year later I was impressed to go to her home and talk the gospel to her. Kathy was sick and requested administration; at two different times she received a wonderful blessing of healing. One evening when I came to her home she greeted me with "Brother John, I am going to make a change." I later baptized Kathy and her son, and a mother's prayers were answered.

I had baptized a Sister Maude Mastros whose mother-in-law had come to live in her home after having a stroke. Sister Maude was trying to live an exemplary life, and as a result her mother-in-law sent for me. I asked her if she was looking for a sign or did she believe God would recognize her desires and bless her through the ordinance of administration. She answered in the affirmative, and so through the ordinance she was healed of the paralysis. A few months later I was directed to call on them. I stopped by the home of Brother Nate Carrich and asked him to go with me, telling him I was impressed that I should go but I didn't know why. When we came to the house the children were gathered around their mother expecting that any minute would be her last, so we stayed at the door.

Finally the daughter stepped back and came to me and said, "I think Mother wants to see you." I went then to the bedside of Mrs. Mastros; she could not talk, but I asked her if she wanted to be administered to and she blinked her eye. That was all the strength she had left. We had prayer and administered to her; she went to sleep and slept peacefully. All sat down then and exclaimed or nodded assent, "My what a difference, what a wonderful blessing!"

Later when I was called to her bedside her son said, "Mother has been gradually sinking, and I think she will last but a few minutes longer." After administration she arose from her bed and sat on a chair. Later she called her children around her bedside and, waiting for them to be seated, said, "This is my testimony, and I want you to listen carefully. I know that the church Brother John belongs to is the true church of Jesus Christ on earth, and he is a true representative of that church." She lived but a short time after that.

As a result of this experience I conducted funeral services for five generations; blessed babies, officiated at weddings, and helped many to a better understanding of their God.

As director of religious education of central Michigan I used to visit the branches and try to help them. One Sunday I was impressed to go to West Branch. After having gone about twenty miles I was made to know that the district president would be there, so I was about to turn around and go elsewhere when I felt I must continue on.

The first thing I saw was Brother Byron Doty's trailer house at the church, so I visited the church school. Just before time to start, the pastor came to me and said that Brother Doty wasn't feeling well. Since he had to preach a funeral service in the afternoon and preach again at night he asked me to give the morning address. As I had been prepared for this I was blessed in trying to help.

I have had many similar experiences since coming to Independence. Recently I was impressed to go to a home and talk about finances. I had ministered to some of the needs of this family but kept putting this off until one Sunday morning I was told in a dream that I must go and discuss the financial law. The people laughed at me, and I felt very inadequate, but I knew God had sent me and would help me somehow. At prayer service that week I heard a testimony that they were going to change their ways and work more in harmony with the church.

If God is for us, who can be against us?

Reflections from General Conference

WOULD you like a truly out-of-this-world experience? One that lifts, refreshes, and invigorates the soul to strive for greater heights of spirituality? An experience that carries over for many months and generates the spirit to a degree that it would seem easy to go out and convert a dozen or so people without any trouble at all? Then attend General Conference!

Our long-standing dream had come true. Here and there, among clusters of people, could be heard happy exclamations as they viewed the beautiful facade and foyer of the Auditorium. Seeing such splendid results had an electrifying effect upon people; it gave them a sense of pride in accomplishment, knowing that the best in materials and workmanship has gone into this great symbol of Zion. We caught our breath at the expanse of glass and blazing lights as we looked across one evening from the Stone Church at this beautiful structure, worthy to be seen by thousands of visitors touring Independence every year. This is but the beginning as the church moves out to take her rightful place in establishing Zion.

So large a gathering of our own people is awesome—especially for those coming from the small mission or struggling branch in the more remote areas. Several parking lots and two large fields were required. A special assignment of police and Boy Scouts courteously and efficiently directed the parking of cars.

Equally stirring was the emptying and refilling three times of the great Conference chamber on Communion Sunday in order to serve 18,000 members; and this was done in a quiet, orderly manner—more evidence of astute planning.

What a thrill it was for us to witness the opening of General Conference with the singing of the national anthem as the flag was carried down the aisle by Scouts and Orioles. The prophet then arose to give the signal to unfurl the flags of all nations from the balconies and to give us his welcoming address. Hearing the beloved hymn "Redeemer of Israel" sung by thousands was something never to be forgotten.

We had wonderful classes to choose from; our only difficulty was that we wanted to take advantage of all of them. We were lucky to have friends who shared like feelings so that we could trade notes.

The purpose of the women's department once again was made very clear to me. It shares the total teaching mission of the church. It needs the help of other departments of the church in teaching the good life—the more abundant life—by the development of knowledge, attitude, and skills. Women have a special calling under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to look beyond themselves and fit themselves by faithful living and loyal enlistment to the cause of Christ by demonstrating a more practical righteousness to relatives and friends. They must help create a richer and more meaningful way of life—going beyond what is required—by their living example. For them obedience to financial law should not be a feeling of duty but a highly privileged way of life.

Some Alabama delegates who had never seen snow had their prayers answered. Thousands sloshed through snow to classes in the new Education Building, the Stone Church, and the Annex, intent on getting everything possible from their classes. The reception for women fell on this day too, giving us a chance to meet members of the General Council of Women and others whose names we had often seen in church periodicals, among them the author of that best loved missionary book, The Call at Evening. Balmly spring weather was enjoyed the rest of the week.

Zionist Marriage

A friend whose wedding anniversary was drawing nigh observed that she believed it would be a good idea to renew the marriage vows—to refresh her mind of the covenant signed and the promises made. This coincided perfectly with the class on "Zionist Marriage, a Supreme Challenge," in which we were told that our responsibilities and privileges as wives and co-partners call for a distinct appreciation of the partner as a person of worth, to make the partnership what God designed it to be. Basic in marriage is the further undergirding of the strength of the structure: the beginnings are usually happy, but we are concerned with the living together afterwards of these partners. There is no phase of the social unit known as home which can replace this partnership. We sometimes hear the statement, "A good mother but a poor wife." A Zionist wife needs to demonstrate by daily, practical living a happy harmonious relationship with her husband. She does not minister to the whole world and neglect her husband. Her husband, family, church, and community follow in that order. She will not take her husband for granted, leaving him to feel unimportant and neglected. Apostle Hanson has said, "Where there is divine love, there is divine sensitivity."

Do we have women in our church who point out mistakes in their husbands' priesthood activities? Do they criticize, wallow in self-pity, and express disappointment in having to sit alone in church? There is no excuse for such an attitude. The wife of a priesthood member can feel equally close to him in spirit sitting in a pew alone while he is working up in front as when he is sitting beside her. She should count her blessings if her husband serves in the priesthood. She should support him, be a part of the service he gives, remember him in her prayers. Leaders know the value and strength that comes through prayer.

A woman felt inadequate to do a certain job and confided this to her husband. He took the matter to God in prayer. The day arrived and she accomplished her task successfully. Returning home afterward, she was met at the door by her husband. His first words were, "How did you get along?" All she could say was "Thank you for praying for me!"

We often hear of the nonmember husband's lack of interest in the church. In one such case the wife began to take an interest in things that were of interest to him, not indulging in anything unbecoming a Christian, and he noted certain experiences in her life that awakened his interest—a change in her manner of behavior toward him. Suddenly he decided they should attend church together. The day came when he was converted to the restored church. A woman's religion isn't worth very much if her husband isn't the better for it. We need to witness this way to our husbands all the time. Who has the responsibility of making the marriage Zionitic? The one who has the knowledge, the greater sensitivity. The Latter Day Saint wife should support her husband by attitude, behavior, prayer, love, understanding, sympathy, and encouragement. A Zionitic marriage is indeed a supreme challenge. Husbands of nonmember wives can use the same tactics.

Conference Concert

Hearing our own Conference concert sponsored by the General Church Music Department was another special treat. Soloists of great skill and ability, accompanied by the symphony orchestra and the Messiah Choir, gave us a tingling feeling of gratitude mixed with humility that we are so blessed as a church with artistry of this caliber. It was a richly soul-satisfying evening.

Missionary Emphasis

Every day brings with it opportunities to help others. Never has the need been so great. People have all sorts of problems, real or imaginary; the tensions and "whirling dervish" existence of the times bring a multitude of disastrous results to many. We who are warned must warn our neighbor. The world is starving for what we have.

During an evening missionary rally the lights suddenly went out, leaving the Conference chamber in pitch blackness. As we wondered what had happened, a light appeared high above the choir section in the balcony; standing in the light was a white-robed figure. A hush fell over the assembly as the light extended to a man climbing the stairs toward the personage. This man represented a reasonably good church member who had passed on and was standing before the judgment bar. The light flashed to include a third person—the neighbor of the church member. Following interrogation it was revealed that although they had lived on earth side by side as neighbors, the church member had never told his friend about the good news of the Restoration. Now he, too, had crossed to the other side and looked at his friend with anguish, crying out: "Why didn't you tell me?" No excuse could erase the despair—it was too late. This poignant bit of drama served to waken many to the necessity of seizing their opportunities while there is yet time.

Particularly appealing were the missionaries as each came with affirmations from missions around the world. One said: "The Three Standard Books brought them great hope" (speaking of the German Mission). The splendid young men giving their lives to this most noble cause serve to remind us of our responsibilities in keeping the financial law and being about our Father's business on the home front. Missionary kits were distributed to each person present.

Health in the Home

A wealth of good advice and counsel was given by the church physician as he addressed a women's class on health in the home. Knowing how to acquire reserves of health and vitality are essential in our role of guiding and directing the health program in our homes. Certain vitamins are not retained in the system and must be replaced daily—we must be wise in our choosing of foods. We should seek competent counsel and shun incompetent counsel. Having foresight in achieving health in the home is very necessary. Sin is nothing more or less than lack of foresight. A sinful act brings no joy, but it does bring sorrow and pain. The consequences of today's doings are in tomorrow's reaping.

Women's Department Symposium on Family Worship

What a difference in the families that take a little time to plan their morning devotions and evening worship together! Family worship brings a closer unity than any other one thing. Doing things together and recognizing things of value when a child is quite young are extremely important. There is no better time. It may not always be possible to have worship together every day, but every family should try to establish some good habits. Grace at the table can be said with members of the family taking turns—even a two-year-old will respond to this and feel an important part of the group. Older children go through phases of rebellion and deep questioning. If the youth feels that all the family is in tune but him, it can result in permanent injury. He should feel loved and needed; he must find security and peace in the home. Some of the best all-family experiences have been on special occasions—at Christmas or on vacation when pressures were off. As members of a family stand on a rocky point under the sky filled with stars they are lifted up. Nothing can draw a family closer than family worship.

It can be a problem at times to arrange for precious minutes to be alone with a daughter. She may be bursting with "I've waited all day to tell you this, Mother." No mother should miss these opportunities. Many a wonderful experience has come while sitting on the edge of the bathtub listening as daughter puts up her hair!

Social and Cultural Events

All work and no play makes for a poor schedule, consequently there was no lack of entertainment in the Conference planning. There were dramas by the White Masque Players; a pageant showing "Brides through the Years" with original wedding gowns worn by history-making women in the early church (modeled by young women—some direct descendants); receptions for elders and their wives, writers and artists, and Graceland Mothers' Club. Then there were the happy, unexpected meetings of friends; the wonderful fellowship at mealtimes. The comfortable lounge in the lower auditorium was a popular place to meet friends, write letters to home folks, or browse in the Herald Book Shop, the Snack Shop, Women's Bazaar, or Graceland booth.

A Unique Experience

There are many conventions and conferences of course, but this particular Conference of people of like mind coming together from all parts of the world for the purpose of conducting the business of the church is unique. It is so because it is instituted of God; there is no other system like it in all the world.

What Happens to "San" Students

Where do they go? What do they do?

By Vida Butterworth, R.N.

THE Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing has graduated 568 professional nurses since it started in 1910.

To help in evaluating the school for the resurvey by the National League of Nursing for National Accreditation, a six-page questionnaire was sent to the Alumnae. Forty-seven per cent of the questionnaires were completed and returned. The purpose of this questionnaire was to determine how adequately the individual nurse had been prepared to meet her professional obligations in her work.

Some of the interesting facts gleaned from these questionnaires follow:

The present marital status shows 80 per cent married, 14 per cent single, 4 per cent widowed, and 2 per cent divorced.

The "San" graduate has an average of one and one-half children—that is the 253 graduates who answered the questionnaire had 185 boys and 188 girls.

Among these nurses 75 per cent are members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; 14.2 per cent are active in churches of other denominations; 10.8 per cent list no church affiliation.

The graduates from the San School of Nursing are registered in thirty-three states, Alaska, Canada, and Hawaii. Some of them are living in Japan, France, Germany, and New Zealand.

Of the 253 graduate nurses who answered the questionnaire representing nurses from 1914 to 1956, 64 per cent are employed as professional nurses at the present time; 35 per cent report that they have been able to support their family by working as a nurse; 56 per cent supplemented the family income; 24 per cent have financed additional education for themselves; 20 per cent have helped finance additional education for their husbands; 17 per cent have helped finance education for their children.

The nurses answering the questionnaire are employed in many fields in nursing and the health area. The following fields are listed by the nurses:

1. Administration
 - Educational director
 - Director of nursing
 - Health nurses
 - Hospital superintendent
 - Supervisors in nursing specialties
2. Allied health fields
 - Anesthetist
 - Medical records librarian
 - Medical technologist
 - Physical therapist
 - X-ray technician
3. Clinic nurse
4. College nurse
5. Doctor's office nurse
6. General staff nurse
7. Industrial nurse
8. Missionary nurse
9. School nurse
10. Teaching nurses in specialized fields
11. Visiting nurse
12. U. S. government service
 - Air Force nurse
 - Army nurse
 - Navy nurse
 - Veterans' Administration nurse

Within the communities where they work these 253 nurses have been active professionally on off-duty time in helping with baby clinics; teaching Red Cross first aid and Red Cross home nursing classes; manning the bloodbank; caring for sick neighbors; acting as consultants in times of neighborhood sickness and emergency; participating in civil defense and disaster programs; assisting with or acting as leaders for Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, Brownies, Girl Scouts, and 4-H Clubs; assisting with immunization clinics for polio, Asian flu, typhoid fever, diphtheria; acting as nurses at school health clinics; maintaining first-aid stations at large community gatherings.

As private citizens "San" graduates have carried on the usual citizenship activities of voting; serving on the election board; paying taxes; keeping up their homes; being active in or leaders of P.T.A. organizations; participating in women's civic clubs; helping with such drives as Community Chest, Red Cross, polio, cancer hospital; acting as foster mothers for delinquent or dependent children.

Religiously the "San" graduates seem to have been active in attending church. Many of them have served particularly as church school teachers, women's leaders, branch secretaries, Oriole leaders, youth or Zion's League leaders, junior church leaders, members or directors of church choirs, church pianists, teachers or nurses in vacation church school, camp nurses at reunion and church youth camps.

All in all, "San" graduates seem to be living worth-while, useful lives as wives, parents, church members, and private citizens.

Question

If the elephants, cureloms, and cumoms helped the ancient Americans in placing those huge stones in the temple now in ruins, for whom and when did they do it?

A. H. C.

Colorado

Answer

The only reference we have to the use of animals in ancient America is Ether 4: 21 of the Book of Mormon, referring to Jaredite times. It is a brief statement to the effect that elephants, cureloms, and cumoms were of more especial use to them than were horses and asses which they also had and used.

It was believed at one time that elephants had not lived in America. Then, after the discovery of their skeletal remains, until recently it was thought they dated no later than 8000 B.C. Now, the carbon dating shows them to have existed down to at least 4000 B.C. and probably later, which confirms the probability of their having been used in Jaredite times. (See U.A.S. Newsletter Number 4, January 20, 1952.)

It is believed by modern students of Mesopotamian archaeology that the fall of Babel was at least 2800 B.C., shortly after which, according to the Book of Mormon, the Jaredites arrived in America. Therefore, the use of elephants by the Jaredites would, of necessity, have been somewhere between 2800 and 600 B.C., the closing scene of Jaredite times. Also it would have been in proximity of the Land of Cumorah, where the Jaredite bones and records were found.

Knowledge of the use of the animals in question before Jaredite times, would, of necessity require further discoveries by archaeology and/or the discovery of records revealing their uses. The Book of Mormon does not preclude such possibilities.

If these animals continued into Nephite times (but we have no mention of them by the Nephites nor attestation of archaeology) we must look for their achievements in approximately the same area and farther south in Central America.

We must be careful not to ascribe to Book of Mormon achievements any ruins which are known to belong to periods outside of Book of Mormon times. For later Nephite accomplishments we must look among what scientists call "pre-classic" ruins (before A.D. 400) and for earlier Nephite times "early pre-classic" or "archaic." Jaredite times, 600 B.C. back to 2800 B.C., would be classified as "lower archaic."

Far more numerous, as would be expected, are the ruins which were constructed from A.D. 400 and after, called the "classic." These were built after the Nephites had become nationally extinct.

In light of all these facts, we can but conjecture as to what part was played in the building program of ancient Americans by elephants, cureloms, and cumoms.

Question

Does the "spiritual meat" and "spiritual drink" mentioned in I Corinthians 10: 1-4 refer to Communion?

H. B.

Kansas

Answer

In a sense, yes. Paul was using here a teaching known as typology, which became common in the early church. The whole point of this particular teaching is the bold application of the story of the travels in the wilderness, the baptism in the cloud, and the enjoyment of miraculous food in the Christian situation in Corinth. Paul speaks first of the cloud and the sea denoting the presence of God over them and the water of the Red Sea on either side of them, this being a type of baptism which is, first, deliverance from the bondage of sin, and entrance into a new life; second, discipleship to Christ and union with him. Paul goes on to point out that the Israelites also had a type corresponding to the Lord's Supper. This is the first time in Christian history that the two sacraments are linked together. The spiritual meat here referred to was the manna eaten in the wilderness, (Exodus 16); and the spiritual drink was the double narrative of the water which gushed from the rock at Horeb (Exodus 17: 1-7), and Kadish (Numbers 20: 1-13).

The point of these illustrations is clear. The reception of miraculous food in the wilderness did not save these Israelites, who were favored of the Lord. All had received the benefits, yet most had been destroyed. The Corinthians have the sacraments, but sacraments alone will not save them. Even the strongest are in danger of the forces of heathenism about them. Paul, the teacher, sums up this exhortation in I Corinthians 16: 13, 14: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. Let all your things be done with charity."

Question

Is Satan able to discern our thoughts as God is?

D. R.

Illinois

Answer

I do not believe Satan is able to discern our thoughts as does God although upon occasion it would almost seem to us that he can. When Satan enters into the heart of a man, that man becomes a servant or subject of Satan, and his hopes and his aspirations are subject to Satan. Satan is very cunning and wily and able to deceive us and draw from us the thoughts which we have within our hearts, if we are not on guard. But we note that Ammon said, "The heavens is a place where God dwells. . . . Yea, and he looketh down upon all the children of men: and he knows all the thoughts and intents of the heart: for by his hand were they all created from the beginning" (Alma 12: 108, 110). Thus we learn why God is able to know our thoughts. We are his creatures, and the power to discern thoughts is given by his Spirit. Alma, speaking to Zeezoram, said, "For behold, he knows all thy thoughts; and thou seest that thy thoughts are made known unto us by his Spirit" (Alma 9: 4).

It is inconceivable to me that God would give this power to Satan. Nowhere in the Scriptures do we find he has received such power.

Satan does have power over his own dominion, because men have given themselves over to him. Therefore he is able to accomplish his evil designs by putting his evil desires in their hearts. Deception and hypocrisy give the adversary power in our lives (Doctrine and Covenants 50: 3 a), but the power to discern the thoughts of men lies with God: "There is none else save God, that knowest thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart" (D. and C. 6: 7 b).

In James 4: 7 we find, "Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." It is thus we may overcome Satan.

Church Opened

at Atkinson,

Nebraska

A SMALL GROUP of people (twenty-five to be exact) have accomplished a herculean task of building construction in the north central part of Nebraska. On Sunday, May 18, special services and an open house introduced the church to the community of Atkinson, Nebraska. Approximately three hundred people from the community and surrounding towns attended the opening.

Construction of the church was begun last fall under the direction of a building committee. Most of the work in the building was donated by the members of the congregation. The site of the building is adjacent to U.S. Highway 20 in the northeast part of Atkinson. Since the congregation anticipates growth the chapel has pews for seating 110 people and it will accommodate about 150 with the addition of chairs. One wing of the L-shaped building will house the church school department.

District President Arthur F. Gibbs was in charge of the opening service, and Emery Jennings, president of Far West Stake, was guest speaker. The mayor of Atkinson, Willard S. Linville, presented a brief welcome in behalf of the community. Ralph Schrunk, the mission pastor, offered the invocation at the service. Other members participating in the opening service were John F. Schrunk, Jr., Fred R. Horne, Jr., Mrs. Vera Paddock, Mrs. Lois Ries, and Miss Verna Pruss.

The building committee which spearheaded construction included Roy L. Ries, Charles R. Peterson, Fred R. Horne, Jr., Vera E. Paddock, and Ralph Schrunk.

A Triumphant Faith

RECENTLY an eighty-four year-old cousin of mine died. She was a granddaughter of a man who in 1840 became a member of the church in Lancashire, England, and with his family came to Nauvoo early in 1841. He paid little attention to anything religious after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, taking no stock in the leadership of Brigham Young. And so his children grew up without religious training, as did also many of his grandchildren.

I believe this cousin who recently died made no religious profession during her life, as was the case with other members of her mother's family.

My grandmother, the youngest sister of this grandfather, was baptized in England and came to Nauvoo with other members of the family at the same time. She was married to my grandfather Richard Lambert, in the home of this brother at Nauvoo in 1843, spending practically all her life in Hancock County, Illinois, where she passed away in 1902. They had no use for Brigham Young. But they were active church people all their lives, raising a family of six boys and six girls; my mother was the oldest girl. In their home in 1863 the branch of the Reorganization in that community was formed.

When this cousin died I wrote her daughter, a grown woman, a very personable soul. Among other things I said I hoped her Christian faith was such that she could find at least some of the consolation I had found in mine, reminding her that my faith led me to have an abiding conviction that eventually truth would triumph over falsehood; that right would prevail over wrong; and that at last life would triumph over death.

I am happy that, though my grandmother could not leave to her children the amount of property her brother left to his children, she did leave to her children and to her children's children a consoling faith that is not to be compared with material things. Of her six sons, one was an apostle, one a bishop, two were elders, and one was a teacher.

"Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."—Galatians 6: 9. My grandmother had a triumphant faith. It still lives unto the fifth and sixth generations.

Briefs

Women Hold Institute

ONSET, MASSACHUSETTS.—An institute for women of Southern New England District was held at Onset June 21. Florence Sinclair, district women's leader, was in charge and the theme was "In Search of Spiritual Power through Prayer, Study, and Service."

The morning meditation prepared by Elder Ralph Power of Attleboro stressed these goals through recorded hymns, Scripture, poetry, and prayer. Guest teach was Ethel Squire of New York, General Women's Council member. Jean Hallgreen of Providence was in charge of the buzz session. Audrey Hardy of Boston gave a resumé of courses of study available through the School of the Restoration. Church Dedication

LOGAN CREEK, MISSOURI.—Sunday, March 30, was a happy day for the Saints of Logan Creek Branch and Southern Missouri District, for they shared in the dedication of the church as they met for district conference. Apostle D. T. Williams preached the dedicatory sermon. Branch President W. A. Kuntz and District President John G. Wight were associated with Brother Williams in the service.

During the past year, the Saints worked hard to install a lovely hardwood floor, redecorate the interior, point up the exterior walls, and erect a new fence along the parking area in front of the church.

Brother W. P. Bootman was the first missionary to come into the area. In due time he and Brother A. M. Baker were privileged to organize the group into a branch in 1911. For many years the branch met in a schoolhouse. In 1936 the present building was begun on a lot donated by Brother and Sister A. J. Ferguson.

The present size of the congregation is no indication of the real value of the work, for many have moved from the area to obtain employment in and around St. Louis. A good share of these have become stalwarts of other congregations in the district.

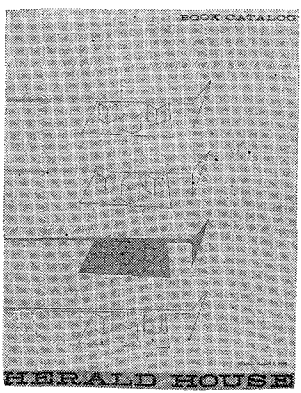

Three men have served as branch presidents during the life of the branch. Richard Counts served in 1912, J. D. Keathley from 1913 to 1929, and W. A. Kuntz from August, 1929, until the present.

Among other priesthood in the branch have been Harry Counts, priest; Frank Randolph, teacher; and W. A. Counts, priest. Many visiting ministers have preached in the branch, among them J. T. Davis, Brother McFadden, John Nunnally, A. V. Closson, Henry Sparling, John Cunningham, J. C. Chrestensen, J. W. Paxton, W. E. Haden, J. Charles May, J. T. Riley, William T. Guthrie, Bill Williams, and many others.—Reported by JACK G. WIGHT

Participation in Church Services

The editorial of June 30, "Congregational Participation in Church Services," brought to mind some ideas I have on this subject.

I believe that more hymns before the preaching service would be a wonderful way to stop people from talking to one another as they often do during an organ prelude. I do not believe responsive readings are the answer; they are too much like routine—too many people read but do not feel that they are reading. Printed readings do not let deep feeling come from the heart. Singing is different, I believe.

Limiting a preacher to thirty minutes is not good, for he may worry too much about the time limit. When I am very absorbed in a service time means absolutely nothing. At such times, people cannot help feeling the Spirit's influence, even if they have never felt it before.

Sunday evenings are a wonderful time for class study or discussion. Question and answer series instead of sermons give people, especially newcomers, a chance to secure answers to questions they have regarding the church and the gospel. Also, if more people would take an active part in lesson study and class sessions during church school, they could have the participation they seem to want.

Here in San Francisco we have a class on the tracts of the church. I have learned much in this class; the discussions are many and varied. I hate to miss even one Sunday. Many find these discussions a real help to missionary endeavor.

These are some of my thoughts. I believe that today we are in too much of a worldly routine and not enough different because we seem to want to be similar to others and not get too far off the beaten track of other churches' worship programs. We are different. Let's let the world know it!

Letter of Appreciation

I was happily attending the Kansas District Reunion when suddenly I lost my balance, fell, and suffered a broken hip. I was taken by ambulance to St. Joseph Hospital in Wichita. I regretted so much having to leave that lovely spot and the fellowship of my brothers and sisters who are so very dear to me. They all went to our heavenly Father in my behalf, even the little juniors. Each held me up before the throne of grace with his thoughts and prayers.

Immediately after the accident, the reunion doctor and nurse were there to give me first aid. The doctor said he was sure I had a broken bone. I believe it was wisdom in our heavenly Father to permit me to have this experience to teach me many things I needed to know. Before, I had had no deep feelings for others who were sick. It seemed to me that I was being thoughtful to ask about my sick friends, send a card, or maybe visit them once and feel satisfied with what I had done. Now I know there is more I can do. I know, too, how attentions from friends and loved ones can contribute to the happiness and well-being of an ailing person.

How wonderful and attentive the elders were and great were God's blessings to me through administration. The doctors and nurses were kind and helpful. My family stood by with many words of love and encouragement. I am sure the Great Physician was over all to give direction.

I am making a speedy recovery at home. I wish to express my thanks to every person who has helped me this far along the road by stating that my goal for the future is to live a life of service for my heavenly Father, my brothers and sisters my neighbors, and all who helped me in the dark hours.

I fell I have learned many things through my suffering. Pray for me that I will keep the faith and continue to have this love in my heart that I feel at this time.

MRS. JAMES C. RHODES

Note of Thanks

I am deeply grateful for the prayers offered in my behalf during my recent hospitalization. I feel that the surgeon's hands were divinely guided. I am now well on my way to recovery.

And Finally...

FOOTPRINTS

I glanced over my shoulder, and there my small friend was following in my footprints along the sandy beach. I smiled to myself. My strides were long, and he was stretching to place his prints in mine. Then I thought of Jesus as he walked the shores of Galilee. The men who followed him were stretching to meet his marks, too. Today men are still stretching to reach his mark.

THE CURTAINED WINDOW

The smallest room on the second floor back wasn't needed for anything else, so there was no opposition to the proposal to make it into a study. Painted in soft colors, equipped with bookshelves, desk, chair, and couch, it became a snug harbor for rest, reading, and writing. Heavy cafe curtains at the windows insured privacy.

All it lacked was a view. A window is good to look through if there is something to look at; it is a frame—the picture must be supplied. The curtains were kept drawn.

Meanwhile, the "deep tangled wildwood," so attractive in song and so unsatisfactory in a back yard, was brought under control. Trimmed trees and shrubs, lawn and garden, even a small regiment of vegetables, appeared.

One day came an impulse to push the curtain back. There was the view. From above, the yard made a modest but attractive scene. In this little area peace and quiet reigned.

Perhaps there is some quiet area in your life that you have overlooked, some place where you can find peace and a bit of beauty. You cannot clean up the whole untidy world, but you can landscape one yard. Then push back the curtain and look at your own retreat. You may find a blessing waiting for you there.

WHAT YOU DON'T SEE

Much has been written and said recently to indicate that the Saints are conscious that God requires our best as he sees all we do. The old philosophy, "What you don't see won't hurt you," is not for us.

I remember a home-talent play in which a man was sweeping when a knock came at the door. He got a laugh by hurriedly sweeping the dirt under the rug.

As I walk to work each day, I pass a corner house where only one side of the yard is used. That has flowers and shubbery. The grass is trimmed at the edge of the walk, and the snow is cleaned in winter. The yard and walk on the other side of the house has been neglected for years. Tree branches ride the ground; dirt, grass, and snow remain on the sidewalk; it is under the rug so far as this man is concerned.

This reminds us of Anthony Euwer's famous "Limerick":

As a beauty I am not a star
Others are handsomer far;
But my face—I don't mind it
Because I'm behind it;
It's the folks out in front that I jar.

Perhaps Anthony could not afford a mirror and did not have an electric razor. Then there are those who just don't care how much they make other people suffer.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

William Wallace Strong

W W. STRONG was born and reared in the church. However, when he attended college and began his career as a teacher he was unable to attend services at his own church, so he taught Sunday school classes in the Baptist and Methodist churches.

During a summer session at the University of Kansas Brother Strong went before an examining board for his Master's degree.

"I was asked, 'Who was the greatest teacher?' I answered, 'The Christ.' Other questions followed concerning religion and what I believed. Finally the chief examiner said, 'Christ was nothing but a propagandist. You have very little knowledge about the Bible and what you believe. What little you think you know someone has told you.'

"This statement left me with the wind knocked out. Later I became furious. I resolved to study and know something about my church, the Bible, and what I believed. This experience happened in 1937 and was a turning point in my life."

In 1943 Brother Strong was ordained a priest. The next year he was called to be an elder. He became a high priest and a member of the Kansas City Stake High Council in 1956.

During the past seventeen years he has been a science teacher at Shawnee Mission high school in Merriam, Kansas. He has done graduate study past the Master's degree at the University of Kansas and at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

In 1927 he was married to Lauretta M. Weeks. They have three children: Ardyce, William Wallace, Jr., and Daniel.

Districts Can Exchange Old Slides for New Ones

A NEW SERIES of color slides showing the latest progress in the completion of the Auditorium is now available, according to Jack Boren, assistant to the Presiding Bishopric.

The first set of slides showing the present work at the headquarters building was released last spring. The new slides will bring viewers up to date on the work in the General Conference Chamber, the religious education offices, the east and west porticos, and other areas.

Many of the districts have already received the new slides, Brother Boren said. Persons who received copies of the first set have been asked to send in their slides and they will receive a revamped set with the new slides and a new script.

The next big step in the Auditorium project is the laying of the carpet and installation of the new seats. Brother

Conference Business Concerns You

The Third in a Series of Editorials Concerning General Conference

THE CHURCH'S BUSINESS is the member's business. Because of this it is important for each member of the church and each delegate to the Conference to concern himself with the business to be presented and the manner of its disposal.

This year's Conference will be held October 5-12 in the newly completed General Conference Chamber of the Auditorium in Independence. The scene will be greatly different from the humble surroundings of the church in 1860 when it met in the rented Mechanics Hall in Amboy. However, the chief item of business will be the same: the selection of a new president for the church.

When the Conference opens its first business session on Monday afternoon at 2 p.m., the first item will be the organization of the Conference—the choosing of presiding officers and the seating of delegates.

At this juncture the First Presidency will make a formal announcement of the vacancy in its quorum by the death of the late Prophet Israel A. Smith. The president of the Council of Twelve, or his representative, will then be asked to take the chair and preside over the Conference, as the Twelve constitute the Second Presidency of the church. After the Conference has chosen a new president and he has been appropriately installed, the President of the Council of Twelve will retire in his favor, and the permanent organization of the Conference will be perfected.

After this, other items of business are likely to seem anticlimactic. However, the business which will fill the remaining daily business meetings will be important to the church and to the individual member who is part of the whole.

Many of the things that were handled by the General Conference in the past are now handled in stake and district conferences and in the meetings of the councils and quorums of the church. Types of business that are now generally considered to be within the jurisdiction of the General Conference are

1. Selection and sustaining of General Church leaders
2. Approval of revelations to the prophet of the church
3. Consideration of reports from General Church councils, quorums, departments, and institutions
4. Legislating General Church policies and appropriations
5. Approving the creation of new organizations within the General Church, such as stakes

It is important to remember that in consideration of these items the General Conference has strictly a legislative function. The two other functions of democratic government—administrative and judicial—do not belong to the Conference. It is the Conference's business to dispose of the business placed before it.

The items of business that come to the attention of General Conference delegates originate in several places. Much of the business stems from recommendations of quorums, councils, and departments of the church. These are such things as ordinations, appointments, appropriations, and policies.

Appropriations are one of the most interesting illustrations of this channel of business. The basic work on the appropriations is done by the leaders in every department and area of the church. These groups submit requests for appropriations for the coming year to a "pre-appropriation committee." The committee consists of a member of the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and Council of Twelve. Their recommendations are reviewed and reported on by the Board of Appropriations. This board is made up of the First Presidency, Council of Twelve, and the Order of Bishops. Their report is submitted to the General Conference as one of the chief items of business.

It is also likely that business will come to the Conference that has been initiated in stake and district conferences. These channels are the most democratic sources of business available to the church. Any member has the right to initiate an item of business in his stake or district conference with the proposal that it be presented to the General Conference for approval.

Still another method of presenting business to the General Conference is from the floor. This channel is open to delegates and ex-officiis. It is helpful to file the motion with the First Presidency beforehand and then gain the floor during a business session and move for its consideration. Customarily there is a deadline placed on the presentation of new business from the floor. This has usually been 3 P.M. Thursday. The deadline allows time for new business to be printed and considered by the delegates. The ruling is imposed by action of the Conference but does not apply to new business coming from the quorums and councils.

All of the business that comes before the General Conference affects the entire church. That is why it is presented to the General Conference rather than some stake conference or quorum meeting. As a result, these items of business affect each branch and member of the church.

All church members and Conference delegates have a stewardship before God to be informed of the issues confronting his church and to exercise the privilege of common consent with intelligence and devotion. To do less is to shirk one's personal responsibility in the Church of Jesus Christ.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Official

General Conference Chamber to Be Dedicated

A special worship service, in which the newly completed Conference Chamber of the Auditorium will be dedicated, will be held Sunday, September 21, at 7:00 p.m. All members and friends of the church who can find it possible to attend are urged to do so.

The service will include considerable congregational singing of our hymns, and a number of brief statements from church and civic officials. President F. Henry Edwards will preside, and President W. Wallace Smith will deliver the dedication message. The Independence Messiah Choir will sing.

The dedication of this beautiful sanctuary and Conference room will be an important milestone in the development of the world headquarters building. A great deal of sacrifice, toil, and prayerful attention has gone into this project. The beauty and dignity, coupled with utility aspects, make it a chamber worthy of our sacrifices and a justifier of our pride.

It is important, for purposes of acoustical testing and sound system adjusting, that the Conference Chamber be well filled for this service. We trust that adequate numbers of our people in the central areas will participate.

Attention, Elders and Priests

The elders and priests who will assist with the Communion services at the forthcoming General Conference will rehearse at the Auditorium on Friday, October 3, at 7:00 p.m. It is important that all men participating in this activity be on hand for the rehearsal session.

Men who desire to serve in this important work and who do not live in Independence should write to William Worth, Jr., 1440 South Osage, Independence, Missouri, making reservations for places to serve. This contact should be made immediately.

It will be necessary for serving priests and elders to be available at all three Communion services on October 5.

Tithing Statement Filer Count

During the month of July, four more districts exceeded the total tithing statement count for the full year of 1957. These districts were Chicago, Northern Michigan, Columbus, and West Virginia. Twenty-two districts now exceed their total count for the full year of 1957.

The total of 21,312 filers in the first seven months of 1958 reflects a gain of 1,099 over the corresponding period of last year.

The Olsons Return

Brother and Sister Olson arrived home on August 20. On their way they stopped at Honolulu six days, and at Los Angeles two days. In California they visited the Southern California Reunion near Redlands. They stopped also at Denver for three days and visited the reunion at Palmer Lake.

Brother Olson was hospitalized in Australia for almost three months. He says the Saints there were very kind and thoughtful of him and he is grateful. The doctor has instructed him not to return to work before the middle of September.

Across the Desk

Two significant events in Kansas City Stake have recently been called to our attention. Both took place on August 3.

In the morning of that day the Grandview, Missouri, congregation held a mortgage-burning ceremony marking the clearing of a long-time debt. Participating in the ceremony were Stake President Fred O. Davies, Bishop Walter N. Johnson, Stake Bishop J. E. Baldwin, and Seventy A. A. Scherer.

In the afternoon, the Meyer Boulevard congregation broke ground for its new sanctuary. Participating were President W. Wallace Smith, Bishop Walter N. Johnson, Stake President Fred O. Davies, Stake Bishop Joseph Baldwin, Seventy A. A. Scherer, Presiding Elder Vernon Cornish, and other representatives of the congregation. The new building will feature curved walls and a diamond metal tower. It will seat two hundred and fifty.

Fishermen and Shepherds

AS YOU HAVE SAT in the quiet of your church sanctuary, have you ever thought how remarkable it was that the Christian church came into being? It is taken so very much for granted today because there are churches everywhere, or church agencies reaching out to the few areas where they are not found. It is easy to forget by what a slim thread the life and purpose of Jesus Christ held those first few followers who were to become his church. That narrow link can best be understood, perhaps, by thinking of the picture which John gives in the closing chapter of his gospel.

The Picture

It is some time after the resurrection of Christ . . . seven of the disciples are at the Sea of Galilee, back in their old familiar haunts, around home. I would imagine that coming back has not been easy, for the village gossips have taunted them. The folly of their discipleship has been carelessly discussed and bandied about the market places and the inns. And I would also imagine that this has not been as hard to take as has the uncertainty in their own minds. The horror of Calvary, intense and bitter as it had been, was overshadowed by their experience with the risen Lord. I am certain that his words still ring in their minds and memories, calling them to high service for him and for the world. But back here in Galilee nothing was happening . . . day dragged on after day. Had it all been a dream? Their perplexity grows and with it their restlessness until Peter in his impetuous way could take it no longer; with others following, he was soon back at the boats and the nets. Sails are hoisted and the fishermen of Galilee are once more at their long-deserted tasks. It could well be with alarm that we watch that narrow ribbon of water as it widens between shore and departing boat—alarm and concern, for if these men are caught into the old life again, will there be a Christian church at all?

The rest of the story is simple and strange. They fish all night and catch nothing. And in the gray light of dawn a stranger hails them from the shore. But it is no stranger—it is Jesus the Christ. There is a great haul of fish, followed by a breakfast on the shore, and Peter whose heart still aches because of his having denied knowing Jesus finds himself restored in his discipleship.

Continuing Responsibility

What was John, the gospel writer, trying to tell in such a story? Was he not giving us an insight into how the purpose of Jesus passed over with power from his own life into the life of the community gathered around him? I think so. As in the days of his ministry, Jesus unfolded to his followers his own sense of mission and purpose. Even now, by his risen presence in their lives, he is recalling them to the high challenge of being God's representatives in the life of that community. It is through the response which they make to this challenge that the Christian church is born. The fishermen do not turn their backs up the great adventure of becoming fishers of men. The farmers of Galilee do not settle down, distrustful of human nature, returning to the sheepfold and the pasture now that the shepherding of souls has been laid upon them. Truly, it is remarkable that the Christian church came into being at all when we consider that its coming rested upon the human loyalties of men and women like ourselves. For we are the descendants of those fishermen and shepherds. And though we may not sense it, the church's continuance—indeed its real life—rests in the vitality of our response to the imperatives which God, through Christ and his Church, lays upon us in these the latter days.

The Real Purpose

Young people sometimes say to me, "We enjoy being in this church . . . everyone is so friendly and seems so concerned over our well-being, but we're not quite sure what it all means. We're not sure we know what the real purpose of our church is." And this thinking is not wholly confined to certain young people; adults also often have difficulty in stating in simple terms the purpose of Christ's church. Oh, we champion our church in terms of personal preference, or in terms of its educational program, or its accent on people—especially the youth of our time—but to state its purpose is not always easy. In final analysis, the simple language of Jesus the Christ himself furnishes the most intelligible key to his own purpose and to that of his church.

In John's story about the appearance of Christ at the Sea of Galilee, there are three statements in the simple language of Christ which help us in our thinking about the church's reason for being—three commands, by obedience to which the fishermen and shepherds of Palestine became the Christian church, the same church in whose life and purpose we share.

In reading the testimonies of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, we find that the first story which tells of Jesus speaking directly to a man is in Mark where Jesus says to Simon and to Andrew, "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men." The last record in these gospels of Christ's speaking directly to a man is this final word to Peter, "Follow thou me." Isn't this the key to our understanding of what the church is and what it asks of us?

A Personal Matter

Religion is not a formal, external thing which we pick up or let alone as mood and whim dictate. It is a personal, inner, spiritual relationship with Christ. The true purpose of his church is best served by personal faith and loyalty, by love and tolerance, by humility and service—service to God and to man. Always the challenge which Jesus presented was individual and personal. When a man once needed to be healed, he was reminded that his faith would make him whole. When another let material things stand in the way of God's kingdom, he was advised to sell all that he had and give to the poor. It is always a personal matter!

So, the increase of the love of God and neighbor is not some vague ideal toward which the whole community in general moves. It is the confronting of persons in actual situations in life. Love has to do with my attitudes and actions, with my rejoicing in the presence of the one loved, with gratitude, with reverence, with loyalty—always in personal terms with a conviction that this really matters to me! The increase of love of God has to do with my heart, my soul, my mind. The increase of love of neighbor has to do with the way I think about and act toward not simply those who live in the houses I can see from my house, but also every single human being whom I meet or of whom I read or hear or with whom I work. In Christ's church, Jesus comes to me, saying, "Follow thou me." I must never forget that Christianity means what it does because individuals have been stirred by its challenge, intrigued by its possibilities, but most important of all, attracted and won by the call of Christ!

Casting Our Nets

Not in quite the same category of importance as a command of Christ, but one which figuratively states his mind, is his word to the fishermen, "Cast the net on the right side of the ship." Something about it reminds us of his earlier words, "I will make you to become fishers of men." The picture of the casting of the net serves as a suggestion that the true purpose of the church is found in a witness by which others are drawn into the understanding of God's claim upon our life. We are to cast the net of our personal influence, example, and witness. This matter of discipleship and church loyalty is not a sentimental individual response. It is witnessing in a variety of ways. It is affirming Christian conviction in the face of indifference and opposition. It is making evident, by what we are and what we do, our belief that we are accountable to God and that our stewardship is among our first responsibilities, and that faithfulness is at the heart of things.

True, we don't go out and buttonhole the man on the street with the question, "Brother are you saved?" but we will find many ways to cast the net. And we do it not to maintain or increase our numbers merely for the sake of statistics, but because we feel that upon us rests the mandate of our whole Christian heritage: our church exists to present Jesus Christ to each succeeding generation. Do we not believe that we can see God's will for man more clearly in Jesus' life and teachings than anywhere else? Do we not believe that Jesus saw more deeply into the life of man and the heart of God than any other person in history? Do we not believe that Christ made God more human yet no less divine than he had ever been before? Jesus made faith in God believable and powerful. He did this by the simple witness of his life and teaching.

We Must Share

This is our mandate, our responsibility, if we share the conviction that the increase of the love of God and neighbor is the goal of our church. And how shall we let the world know it if we do not cast the net? That is why we need to love and feel at home in our church which is dedicated to the task of interpreting Jesus' message to our life and times. That is what we really are trying to do in our church school, in all our church services of worship, in the performance of its several ordinances, in our study and the fellowship groups—to interpret Jesus' message to our life and times as it is revealed to us in the Three Standard Books.

I can remember as a boy hearing a rather common parting word which friends used as they left each other: "See you in church." I wondered about it because usually these were people who were never seen in church, at least I never saw any of them there. Then later in life I came to understand that they really were poking fun at the church, joking about it. They were the self-avowed pagans of that age. The church was the last place on earth they would expect to see each other. Yet there is something very sound in that phrase, "See you in church." We may be well advised to use its idea in our witnessing. I don't know that we need to go around saying just these words; but the point is, we could exhibit to others our own confidence in and love for our church and thus cast the net of our personal witness which may draw others into a closer love of God and neighbor.

Feed My Sheep

Jesus put a threefold question to Simon Peter in a seaside conversation. "Simon, lovest thou me more than these?" Three times an affirmative answer came back and for each response, a command, "Feed my lambs . . . feed my sheep . . . feed my sheep." What have these imperatives to say to us if not simply stating that the true purpose of our church is served to the extent to which our faith becomes evident in fellowship and service? This of course has been implicit in all that has been said; one cannot be obedient to the command "Follow thou me" without being led into areas of concern for all sorts and conditions of people. The idea behind the words "Cast the net" is an outgoing awareness of the common needs all men share for faith and hope and love. There is an urgency about the words "Feed my sheep."

The increase of the love of God and neighbor is an uphill struggle in this world. Churches, generally, may be flourishing, but do we not also see wickedness thriving and spreading over the land? It shows itself in countless little ways, each of which is like a wisp of a cloud over the sun in this heyday of the church's expansion and growth. It is our greatest challenge. Behind practically every case which comes before the juvenile courts of our country is a story which, reduced to its simplest terms, says "Nobody cared." The disintegration of family life in our times, which leaves its blight upon urban and suburban areas alike, can in nearly every individual case be traced to the lack of an adequate spiritual basis upon which to build understanding and love and forgiveness. "Feed my lambs . . . feed my sheep"—these are not idle or unmeaningful phrases recorded by John. They call us to the serious business of making Christian education and Christian fellowship the groundwork upon which our stability as a people must be built. Kingdom-building is a serious and meaningful business, and "Zion conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies."

Knowing what we believe about God and man, knowing that God cares, that people care—these things we must learn as little children and keep forever uppermost in our minds and hearts all through life. It is the continuing challenge of the world to the church as it is the continuing command of our Christ to those who would follow him: "Feed my sheep." Tend, feed, shepherd the little ones in our midst—those who have to cross through troubled waters, those who need the inspiration and help of green pastures, those who are called to pass through the valley of the shadow. Here is where the love of God and the love of neighbor become of greatest concern. Here is where our service counts most.

The responsibility for guidance and fellowship rests upon us all. Indeed, it reaches out beyond the life of our branch, the life of our church. The home, the school, the community—here as much as in church and its classrooms our unity under God and our concern for one another must find expression and be strengthened and deepened. Children need to feel it in their own ways and in terms of their own experience. And every man and woman needs to heed its demands in terms of his or her own situation in life.

Let the church be admonished that the times are portentous and demand faithful adherence to the faith and work of the church, that mankind may be blessed by and find peace in those religiously social reforms and relationships which have been divinely imposed as a great task of achievement.

Remember and keep the commandments, be alert to keep out of the church and from its members those forces which make for disunity, and in harmony and saintly accord be about the task of freeing Zion from her bondage.—Doctrine and Covenants 137: 6.

We never know who is doing the greatest work for God. A member of the priesthood may preach to multitudes, and yet in the end all he does is to keep the church effort from lagging. And there is a woman, poor and uneducated, of whom only few are aware . . . but because she is loving and devout, she sows the seed of Christian life in a child entrusted to her care who grows up to be a missionary pioneer or Christian statesman, shaping the thought of generations or the history of nations. We never know who is doing the greatest work for God. We know only that it should be our goal to have the shepherd's heart.

The Same Commission

Our story began with a narrow ribbon of water widening between the shore and the departing boat of the fishermen. We leave the story where it stops. It has no ending. We leave it in the gray mists of that morning long ago, and out of that Galilean dawn there comes to us, as there came to those disciples of old, these words: "cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find . . . feed my sheep . . . follow thou me."

Personnel Survey and Land Use Program

The following is an article which we asked Bishop Earl T. Higdon to write for the Presiding Bishopric regarding our Land Use Program. We thought this would be of interest to our "Herald" readers.

G. L. DELAPP

Introduction

The church owns and operates a little more than 8,000 acres of land in or near Jackson County, Missouri. The Presiding Bishopric is concerned with the management and operation of this land for the church. The purchase of this land is in keeping with divine instructions to the church to buy land in Zion. The land has been purchased with money from the General Fund, the Ministerial Reserve Fund, and the Stewardship Endowment Fund. The purchase of these lands brings the responsibility of development of a Land Use Program that is projected toward the socioeconomic objectives and in turn the spiritual goals of the church. The Land Use Program, therefore, is a major concern of the Presiding Bishopric.

Evaluation of Land Use Program

As of February 3, 1958, the Presiding Bishopric, with the approval of the First Presidency, appointed a Farm Management Committee to act in an advisory capacity on problems of church land management. This committee is also giving some study to the long-range objectives of our Land Use Program. One of the objectives sought in the organization of this committee is to expand the participation of interest in the operation of church-owned land. With this idea in mind, the Bishopric has also started a survey of church members who have collegiate training or successful experience in the field of agriculture. A file is being developed which might well be called "agricultural correspondents." It is thought that various aspects of the Land Use Program might be shared with these people who have training in this specialized field.

While the survey has just begun, we present here some interesting data regarding those who have responded thus far to our inquiry.

We expect to hear from many more members who have special training or experience in the field of agriculture. We need to know where our trained personnel are and what their training is. If you are one of this group who has not written to us, please do so.

Effective Stewardship

It would seem that we ought to hold ourselves responsible for effective vocational leadership in the world in which we live. The Christian spirit is felt in economic life as Christian-motivated men and women work creatively and productively in the business of satisfying the physical needs of humanity.

By mobilizing the personnel resources of the church and focusing the best thought obtainable on our problem, it is our hope that we shall develop a program that will not only be a credit to the church as an organization but will be helpful to church members and others as individuals. We feel that we have an outstanding opportunity to

1. Develop good stewards of the land.
2. Improve current methods of agricultural production.
3. Take our place as creative workers with God in improving the lot of mankind.
4. Develop the economic resources of the land of Zion.

Latin-American Ordination at Weslaco, Texas

By Clair Weldon

PEDRO CARDONA, a citizen of Mexico, of Spanish-Indian ancestry, was ordained to the office of priest at Weslaco, Texas, on June 22, 1958. Officiating in the ordinance, in the Spanish language, were Seventy Clair Weldon (right) and Elder Wayne Jackel, president of Southwest Texas District. It was the first ordination of a Latin-American member at the Weslaco Branch, which is the headquarters of the General Church's developing Mission to Latin America. The calling of Brother Cardona, who speaks only Spanish, was made known through the Weslaco Branch pastor, Elder C. E. Bowden, who speaks only English. Missionary Elder Robert V. Turner interpreted as Elder Bowden talked with Brother Cardona about his calling.

Pedro was born thirty years ago at Concepción del Oro, in the state of Zacatecas, Mexico. He became a member of the Roman Catholic church. Part of his ten years of education in Mexico was spent in a Catholic seminary, and he would probably have become a Catholic priest had he not resigned because of feelings of dissatisfaction. Pedro came in contact with the restored Church of Jesus Christ when he crossed the border into the Rio Grande Valley of south Texas and worked on the farm of church members Otis and Georgia Mae Stuart near Weslaco. Through the ministry of Seventy Wayne Simmons, Pedro and his wife Lydia accepted the gospel enthusiastically and were baptized in November, 1952. They now have United States residence passports and live at Weslaco, where Pedro is an attendant in the local hospital. Pedro is now taking an active part in ministry in the uniquely bilingual, bi-cultural Weslaco Branch. Sixty-four Latin-American members, who comprise over one third of the branch, are now enrolled with their Anglo-American brothers and sisters. Services and church ministry are provided in both English and Spanish. Both languages are intermixed in joint services such as the Lord's Supper and baptismal and confirmation services. In monthly "bilingual prayer services" English and Spanish participation blend together beautifully under the blessing of the Spirit of God which transcends the barriers of language.

Pedro shares in the Spanish missionary work at Weslaco, making contacts, assisting the missionaries, and holding cottage meetings of his own. He has a humble, earnest desire to be used of the Lord in declaring the gospel fullness among his people.

The Saints at Weslaco are rejoicing in the calling of Brother Cardona as a standing minister for Christ. The waiting harvest there and in Mexico is very great, and the laborers are few, but the Lord of the harvest has heard the faithful prayers of many humble people. Brother Cardona's ministry is a testimony that the Lord is raising up men to be his servants and sending them into his vineyard.

Witnesses

Often we see advertisements which picture a celebrity holding a product in his hand. With a smile he testifies, "I use _____ because it's best."

It is important that the celebrity prominently exposes the product so readers will recognize the trade name. It is equally important that the celebrity assures us that he uses it himself. Otherwise there wouldn't be any inducement to follow his example.

God asks us to hold up his gospel and his church so that others will come to recognize it. He desires that we endorse his product and tell our associates about his message.

Will Our Church Succeed?

I HAVE BEEN a member of this church for eight months now. It has changed my life. Previously I didn't believe in God; now I rely upon him. I used to be tired and had little enthusiasm for anything. Now I lack no energy for doing anything I make an effort to do. Everything I used to do was designed to create in others some impression about me. I still do this occasionally, but I am learning to listen, and I am learning to be humble and considerate. I do twice as much with my money. I eat less and am healthier. I don't drink or smoke any more—habits which I gave up shortly before joining this church and to which I might have gone back had God not protected me from myself. I live my life less for kicks and get more of a kick out of it.

People who once pitied my confusion and unhappiness now envy my composure. Those I once sought to emulate now tell me how drab their lives seem and how tired they feel when they come home from work. I am not happy to hear this. This reversal has not come about through competition with them, and I don't feel that at last I have "the better of them," as indeed I often used to try to do. Their lives are a testimony of what mine was a short time ago and of the changes that God and I have been making in it since then. No one who knows me, including some who are highly critical of this church, can deny that I have changed considerably since I became interested in it, and that I am a better and stronger person because of it.

Added Testimony

I have a testimony about the world around me also. I see the futility of so many lives that are lived, and I understand somewhat why unhappy people feel compelled to continue as they are. At the same time, I see in our church a plan and a medium through which these lives might be raised up to purposefulness and joy.

On an even larger scale, I see men of all nations moving toward war in the name of peace. No nation, not excluding our own, exhibits much trust for any proposals other than its own. Each wants to criticize the conduct of others. None dare to enter upon a workable compromise or make the first truly friendly gesture. Unrest and rebellion are manifesting themselves at all corners. All signs seem to point to a war of great destruction. Old prophecies seem on the brink of being fulfilled.

This church has taught me that such is the law of God. If man insists on suspicion, strife, and immorality, destruction will follow. I have also learned that God can show mankind the way to peace. I have been interested in many viewpoints of philosophy and history and have heard most of the different types of hope currently being expressed for world peace. Our Zionite plan seems the most sensible and the most likely to work. I believe that God, through us, can teach the world how to live peaceably.

The Big Question

Now the question is this: Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints the medium through which God will work to bring purpose and joy to the lives of men and teach peaceful living to the whole society of mankind?

I know intimately how this church works in the life of an individual. I believe it is the best plan for the salvation of mankind. I believe in God and have met his Spirit in our Scripture and at our meetings. My answer ought to be a quick "Yes." Instead it is "Maybe."

I am not familiar enough with the Spirit of God to claim any help here. I have no credentials. I am not in the priesthood. I have not been a member of this church long enough nor have I studied enough to claim a thorough knowledge of its teachings. There is no reason to respect what I say because I am saying it. But I am very confident of this answer. And I think it is important to this church. I think many, if not most, members look to promises for the future as excusing them from work which has to be done today.

Chosen People Can Fail

Consider the question carefully. God has always made promises and kept them. But they did not prevent him from justly allowing the "chosen people" of the past to spoil their opportunities. Is it foreordained that we shall succeed? I think not. It is up to us. And I think we must soon consider very carefully the possibility that if we do not look in the mirror and make changes, we might fail.

God spoke once through a high priest at a Communion service I attended. Among many things told us at that time was that we must not criticize, that criticism would ruin us. I felt the spirit of that prophecy and believe it. To tear down our past or present efforts is dangerous and can accomplish nothing. I shall try to avoid this.

But this does not mean that we are not to examine ourselves closely and find ourselves wanting. This is at the heart of our belief. It is one thing to find fault with our efforts and another to point out that we haven't made enough effort or brought in results. For example, to blame the Presiding Bishopric for not collecting enough money to accomplish the church's purposes would be not only criticism but unfair; but to point out that last year 70 per cent of our people did not file any tithing statements would be just plain fact. Will God establish Zion if only 30 per cent of us file statements? No! At least, not for 70 per cent of us, he won't.

Sweet words will not save us. We have facts to face before we are going to build any kingdom. God has said ". . . joint responsibility is laid on all." All must face these facts.

Slow to Grow

It is a fact that our church is not growing as fast as many other churches. Our answer to people who point this out is that the entrance requirements of many of these churches do not require much of a man. But this answer is no good. It is a fact that millions of people are leading futile, unhappy lives. Our church can help them change their lives, and they in turn can grow to help others. Our responsibility to these people is not lessened by the inadequacy of the efforts of others. If we are the ones who can help these people, we must see that they come to us.

Some members claim we can't have as good a missionary program as other churches because we don't have as much money. This is just plain bunk. The fact is that enough aren't witnessing and those who are, aren't witnessing effectively enough.

Everywhere I go I hear of the need for missionary outreach. But around here I don't see much reaching out. We must reach out.

The Seventies can't do it. There are too many people who need us and too few Seventies. Deep interest and friendship are needed to help each person into our church. Who, then, shall do our missionary work? We must. Besides, if we leave the telling of the "good news" to others, what justification have we for our existence in the gospel-spreading body? Each must make an effort to bring salvation to those around him or his own salvation is in grave danger. Each must do more than just approve of our work. Each must make his own personal effort. It is a fact that many people who believe themselves dedicated to this church are not making more than a token effort to do its work.

Personal Examples

Mahatma Gandhi was perhaps the greatest missionary of pure and dedicated living this century has known. Gandhi said, "I have known only one way of carrying on missionary work, viz., by personal example and discussion with searchers for knowledge." Gandhi was not a Latter Day Saint, but many of his views were remarkably similar to ours. He believed in Zionism social principles and set up separate communities in India and Africa for himself and his co-workers and dedicated these communities to the perfection of pure and religious living. He kept a daily record of his expenses and in other ways had a concept of personal stewardship like ours.

He says in his autobiography, "I understood the Gita teaching of nonpossession to mean that those who desired salvation should act like the trustee who, though having control over great possessions, regards not an iota of them as his own." He followed the "inner light" of God. He is history's second best practitioner of the Sermon on the Mount. He evangelized those principles solely by the method he outlined and, though he was not particularly well educated and at first so shy he seldom opened his mouth in the presence of more than four or five people, he was enormously successful.

We know, as a church, more than Gandhi did. There are no gifts which God gave to Gandhi which he has not made available to us, and he has given us gifts of considerable stature which he did not give to Gandhi. Gandhi followed Christ's example. If we will permit Christ to do so, he will lead us personally.

Quality Counts

Yet we must use the same missionary formula that Gandhi did. Men have agency. They will not let us—and it would not be right if they did—force or beguile them into accepting our views. We can teach only those who are curious and will respect us enough to investigate what we have to say. We can arouse their curiosity and gain their respect only by leading lives of such quality that they will stand out no matter how humble we are.

It is a fact that many of our people do not lead lives of this kind. If they did there would be stupendous results. If we do not make our lives of such quality that they are remarkably different from the lives of those around us, we shall not have these results.

This is God's way. Consider the fairness of it. What right have we to invite people to make dramatic improvements in their lives if we are not making dramatic improvement in ours? How dare we invite someone to meet the challenge of his responsibility to others if we ourselves are not serving—actively, energetically, frequently? Who are we to ask others to serve more than themselves and their families if we serve only ourselves, our own families, and our own church community?

Service in and out of the Church

It is a fact that many of our most active members serve only our church. This is worth while, and it is defensible. "Why should I devote my efforts to others when our own people need us?" is the defense. But it is a fact that our own people should not need us so much that we cannot help others. If our religion is working, we should be giving ministry to people of greater need, rather than absorbing all the time of our priesthood with our own needs. Much of our priesthood ministry is devoted to trying to reconvert our own membership or to exhort members whose spiritual level has been persistently low for many years. Many of our children are leaving the church and much time is spent trying to redeem them. If our church homes were of the right quality, perhaps this effort would not be necessary.

This problem with our own membership is a serious one. A nonmember does not want to devote his life to the service of a small group of people who call themselves Reorganized Latter Day Saints. The desire to serve that can be aroused in him applies to all of society and is likely to express itself in helping the people who need help most. A church wrapped up in its own problems can't be very interesting to "outsiders." If it ceases to bring new members in to broaden its fellowship, these problems become ingrown and increase no matter how much attention is paid to them.

A church with problems is like a person with problems. If it extroverts itself to those around it, its own internal problems will to a large extent go away.

Real and Imagined Blessings

Where God is at work, things are happening. His Spirit is in evidence. Changes for the better are taking place.

I know many Latter Day Saints who are very staunch in their beliefs and their testimonies of blessings whose lives do not seem to me to be particularly blessed at all. Their testimonies are frequent but vague. Sometimes I suspect these people of imagining the good that just comes with the bad to be their special blessings. I wonder if they do not exaggerate the blessings they do receive in order to be able to testify.

I suspect these people because I don't see the change in their lives which God would be working if their blessings were truly significant.

Some of these people have considerable church responsibility, but either this responsibility has increased little over a number of years or their attitude has been one of felt duty or approval-seeking rather than a sincere desire to accomplish something. Many of these leaders would like to accomplish something but do not in their hearts believe it is possible. Either way it is the same. Their results are small, and their enthusiasm is dull. They do not radiate the optimism and spiritual exuberance that growth and increasing service under God bring to a person.

Seen and Unseen Results

People frequently tell me that many of the results of our efforts are not apparent. I am sure that this is true. I know many people have given me valuable ministry without ever knowing it. But I am equally sure that if we increased our efforts, results we never looked for would become strikingly evident.

I think this principle is easily apparent if we visit various branches. The active ones receive relatively frequent public gifts of the Spirit. They add to their buildings. They baptize people. Everyone talks of the things the branch is going to do next. It is easy to see that God is at work.

There are other branches where the opposite is immediately apparent. Some churches are well kept and well attended; their members gather frequently for skits, parties, trips, and other social activities. But the Spirit is only faintly apparent at their meetings. There are few public gifts. Their missionary activities and baptisms are almost entirely confined to their own families, and then in a small way. The same priesthood members preach in regular rotation. Everything seems to have settled into a routine. The branch has bitten off only what it thought it could chew and is satisfied with it. No one talks of the things that should be done. Everyone clucks about inconsequential blessings. No one is repentant. Whatever dissatisfaction is expressed becomes hopeless complaining which eventually becomes backbiting.

Repentance Needed

Everyone with whom God is at work changes, whether a newly baptized eight-year-old or a wise apostle with years of devoted service behind him. That is the wonderful way of God. A person, a branch, or the church as a whole, if it is not growing notably in both stature and accomplishment, needs to look inward with honesty and move outward with energy, asking God to help it repent.

"The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed . . . which indeed is the least of all seeds, but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs" (Matthew 13:30). If we are to make the tremendous changes implied in building this kingdom, our repentance must be great, and it cannot stop. When we have God as a partner, a small result is no accomplishment.

God First

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls, who, when he had found one pearl of great price, he went and sold all that he had and bought it" (Matthew 13:47). This is no joke. We cannot say "One for me and one for you" to God and still build his kingdom. We cannot hesitate to decide what is most important. Taking the gospel to the millions who need it and establishing Zion are most important, and we must stake all to get them, else they shall not be ours.

If you hired a man to tutor your children and he busied himself in his room with his own affairs and left your chil-

I Had an Experience

OCCASIONALLY THE OLD-TIME Bible story of the good Samaritan actually comes true in our lives. I had such an experience which I hope will never pass from my memory.

When I was about twenty I was attending the Kansas City Art Institute. Every morning I hopped into my old 1935 Plymouth and headed for the big city from Independence, Missouri. One morning the old car repeated its habitual ailment of coughing and sputtering around until completely stopping with a plugged gas line. The only thing that could get it started again was to disconnect the gas line from the motor and blow it free; but after all this, I still had to have a push.

Forty Highway is a busy thoroughfare, especially in the morning when folks are going to work. Cars and trucks of every kind passed me. I tried my best to beg a push from someone. Time was passing, and I realized if I didn't get help soon I would be late for school. I suppose I looked just like another hot-rodder asking for a favor. Who would stop to help an unknown youth in blue jeans and a T-shirt with an old "painted-up" car with red wheels? Finally, I gave up and started to get back into the car and fret a while. Just then a car pulled up behind me. An elderly but well-built man stepped out and said in a kind voice, "Could I be of some help to you, young man?" I was stunned for I recognized this man as one whom I had seen many times and had for some years respected in his position. However, this was the first time we had actually met. He was president and prophet of my church, Brother Israel A. Smith.

Of the hundreds of vehicles passing by, who would have thought help would come from this source? For a moment I just stood there speechless. Then I said, "Yes, sir, you sure can help me; I need a push." For some reason I did not tell Brother Smith that I was a member of the church; nevertheless, I treasured the experience in my heart. To me it revealed the true quality of a prophet of God helping a stranger by the wayside.

Yes, I received that push all right. Brother Israel may never know what his kindness did for me. It not only got my car started but also was one of the major factors in getting me started personally on the right road of life.

Christmas Tea and Bazaar

WHEN THE WOMEN of the Southern California District meet together in a class, sometimes they discuss ways and means to earn money to be used in financing their particular branch or mission. At our district conference last October, a few minutes were used for just that purpose. The women's leader of the Ventura, California, Branch said that her group for the last two years had given a Christmas tea and bazaar which netted more money than probably any other single project it undertook. The project also had its rewards in other ways.

Upon hearing this, I thought, If those women can do that, we in Redlands can do it also. Subsequently, at our next meeting I presented the plan to the women. They received the idea with enthusiasm, for in this way we could increase our finances and acquaint people with our church in this area. This was in the middle of October, 1957.

The planning committee, consisting of five women, met together immediately to make the necessary arrangements and to appoint committees, for the time was very short and we had very few bazaar items on hand. First of all we listed each thing we wanted to sell at the bazaar. On our list we had Christmas fruit cakes, candies of all kinds, cookies, nut breads, popcorn cakes, pies, aprons (both fancy and utility), small leather baby moccasins which we put together ourselves, stuffed toys (Raggedy Ann and Andy dolls, clowns, octopi, Mickey and Minnie Mouse dolls, dogs, animals of various kinds), sachets, felt Christmas stockings, Christmas corsages, Christmas mobiles to be hung as decorations, pillowcases, Christmas cards and stationery.

For each article mentioned we chose a chairman to be responsible for obtaining it from the other members of the group and having her things ready by December 5 and 6 when we would have our Christmas tea and bazaar. For instance, the women in charge of the aprons had to have women alerted to sew aprons so we would have enough when the time arrived. We immediately gave each woman her assignment; then two weeks later everyone met together in one home for a small briefing and sewing session together. Some of the articles were finished; the women could vision the end result and worked thereafter with a vigor and zeal that was outstanding. (We feel this session was very necessary at the beginning to give the women the needed stimulus to go ahead with their work.)

At the time we appointed the committee chairmen, an advertising chairman was appointed also. It was decided that we would send out two hundred formal invitations by mail to our friends and place a paid advertisement in the paper. The formal invitations were to be sent out about one week prior to the dates of the tea, and the advertisements were to be placed in the paper just two days ahead of the time. Needless to say, we worked diligently for the next six weeks—sewing, baking, crocheting, knitting, using every talent we possessed that we might make this endeavor a success. We even employed our husbands and children in jobs they could do. A few of the girls who had typewriters wrote the in-itations and distributed ten to each of the women. We procured the regular formal invitation blanks and envelopes from a printing company that, incidentally, gives a discount to all church organizations. This is the form we used in printing our invitations:

Each lady who sent out an invitation, in order to make it seem more personal, signed her own name at the bottom right-hand side. We also issued a blanket invitation to each of the five branches and missions of the church in this area that they might come to see how we presented it. Perhaps they could do the same in their branches the next year.

We purposely planned to have the event on a Thursday and Friday two or three weeks preceding Christmas, since we felt people would be more apt to purchase at that time and wouldn't be so involved in their own Christmas activities.

On the Monday before the tea, the advertising chairman called the society editor of the local newspaper to inquire as to whether she would like a picture and a story concerning our tea and bazaar for the paper. The editor advised that because it was interesting and open to the public, she would be very happy to have the picture and the writeup. A date was set with their photographer, and a picture was taken. Three of the women—Mrs. Clifford McGuire, local women's department leader; Mrs. Lloyd McKeenan, a group leader; and Mrs. Keith N. Kinart, Southern California District women's leader, met and posed for a picture which was in the paper the following day along with a writeup telling of this event. (On Wednesday, much to the surprise of each of us in the picture, from one of the local men's shops each one of us received in the mail a note of congratulations on which was pasted our individual pictures, telling us how pleased they were that we were a community asset in giving time and good thinking as laywomen in our church.)

On this same day, the newspaper from a neighboring town which serves our area with its paper also, sent its society editor and photographer to take a picture and obtain a story. This time we had two of the children in our group pose under the Christmas tree—the little girl hugging all the stuffed toys and the little boy eating cookies out of the jars we had painted and filled with cookies to sell. This appeared in the morning edition of the paper on the first day of our bazaar.

Since we wanted this to be a personal contact with our friends and neighbors of our community, and we do not have a church building of our own here in Redlands, we wanted to have our tea and bazaar in the home of one of our members. The members of our branch here come from several surrounding communities (as is often the case). For this reason we felt we should use a home here in the town where our church held meetings. We chose a home that had sufficient space in the living and dining rooms to contain the bazaar goods plus the tea table, which we decorated in the Christmas motif. Outdoors, on the entrance porch, we placed a lantern and evergreen garlands with a Christmas mobile (one we had for sale) hung over the porch railing extending from the porch ceiling. Inside the house we had the Nativity scene set up on the low china cupboard, and the Christmas stockings we had made to sell we hung on the fireplace. One of the ladies had a six-foot synthetic green Christmas tree which we placed near the fireplace. On this tree we tied the little sachets, tiny moccasins, Christmas corsages, and small candy canes that we gave as favors to the little children who accompanied their mothers. Underneath the tree were the stuffed toys. Needless to say, we had to rearrange the furniture in the home to give space for moving around and to accommodate the people who came.

On the Tuesday night before our opening day, all the ladies of the church met in a home just a few doors away from the home in which we would present our project. We all brought our bazaar items that evening plus the candies, cookies, and cakes, so we could spend the time wrapping and preparing them for sale. We ironed all the aprons, and pillowcases and hung them on hangers. At the sale, we would place the hangers on a clothes dryer rack to conserve space and to display them to the best advantage. We put the cookies and candies in aluminum pie plates and enclosed them in saran wrap. We displayed as much as we could in saran wrap that it might be kept fresh and clean in this way. On the day of the bazaar, we placed our popcorn cake on a glass cake plate decorated with holly and put it on a small table by itself. We sold it for ten cents a slice. (Incidentally, this was a special attraction and all were interested in it; they wanted to know how to make it and desired to taste it.) With the Raggedy Ann and Andy dolls we purchased twenty-five cent books of their story and included them in the price. We tried to display each article in such a manner that it would attract attention and the people would be interested in buying.

In the dining area of the room we had our tea table. We had set it up most attractively with our best linen, china, and silver services, for we wanted to impress our friends with our hospitality and friendliness. We had picked committees of women to work on the two days and evenings that we would be open to sell. We planned not to have more than two or three women to work at one time—one to greet the guests at the door and to help them remove their wraps (which we hung in a closet close by) and to usher them into the room where we offered them tea or coffee and cookies. (The cookies we served were samples of those we had for sale.) Then they were free to wander around to make their purchases and to stay as long as they liked.

We had many opportunities to talk about the church and to tell the gospel story. Many of the women accompanied their neighbors and friends to the tea and bazaar, thus giving them a more personal contact with us. We felt we made many friends for the church, and one of the outstanding things we derived satisfaction from was that we had two nonmember women work with us as diligently and fervently as any member of the group. They enjoyed working with us and were pleased to bring their friends and relatives to the tea and bazaar.

The monetary reward we received for our labors was gratifying, but we felt the evangelistic reward was just as great. Our plans for the future are to have another Christmas tea and bazaar as one of our main projects for the year, and because we have done it once we feel that we can make the next one even more successful. Perhaps we shall reach some new neighbors and friends we didn't have the last year.

If your group is interested in this project, we wish you much success. As you work at it, you will be inspired in many ways to make it successful. This is a time-consuming task, but it is a lot of fun and you will find the women enjoy tremendously working together in a venture such as this. It is something the older women of the group can enjoy as well as the younger ones, and it is that which you can share with your friends and neighbors.

It has been suggested that tracts could be arranged on a table in the entrance hall to form an attractive display. If so, perhaps this would lead to a follow-up ministry with some of the guests.

Woman of Faith

ONE OF THE GREAT examples of positive thinking and acting is in II Kings 4: 17-37.

The Shunammite woman's young son has gone out to his father among the reapers and becomes ill and is carried home. His mother holds him in her arms until noon when he dies. What would be the normal reaction of most mothers? Calling in grief-stricken tones of anguish for the father?

Not so with the Shunammite woman who says nothing to her husband of her beloved son's death. Instead, she quickly but calmly carries him to the upper room used by the prophet Elisha during his visits, and places him upon the bed.

Then only does she call to her husband, telling him she is going to Elisha. Her husband does not understand her sudden desire to see the prophet of God, but she merely says, "It shall be well."

Upon reaching Elisha and hearing his question as to the welfare of her child, again she makes a positive reply. "It is well." Not one negative expression passes her lips.

Elisha's deep spiritual insight tells him that all is not well and with his servant, Gehazi, he goes with the Shunammite woman to her house. There is no account here, as in many places in the Bible, of the sorrowful wailing of the bereaved.

When the child is brought back to life, the woman shows great humility and gratitude as she bows before Elisha. Then, as though she had expected nothing less, she takes up her child and goes out.

Reminiscing in Kirtland

Part II

By Pearl Wilcox

Sidney Rigdon

IN THE EARLY nineteenth century the American people were filled with religious unrest, a spiritual fervor that was swayed by all forms of fanaticism, the like of which had not been seen before. It was the first days of the "jerkings, the rollings, and the fallings," and the camp meetings. The Shakers were founding their settlements in northeastern Ohio, and William Miller was preaching the Second Advent; his followers dreamt of an ascension into heaven without death. These odd sects and others had taken root near Kirtland and were classed in history with another odd sect soon to follow, called "Mormons."

Community religion, however, did not wait for organizations or buildings or ministers; the Sabbath saw friends and neighbors gathered at log cabins, where hymns were sung and Scriptures were read.

The Methodists were more numerous in Kirtland during this early period than any other denomination. Their meetings first were held in the homes until they erected a small log building in the present cemetery grounds near the Temple; later they were held in a frame building. The Presbyterians were organized with twelve members in the home of Thomas Morley, Sr.; they erected their first meeting house in 1822. The Congregationalists were organized here in 1818; they met in homes until 1824 when a log meeting house was built on Chillicothe and Eagle roads; this building burned in 1828 and was replaced with a frame structure which was turned on its foundation in 1842 by a tornado. Later it was restored; today it is known as the Old South Church of Kirtland. The Church of the Disciples, more commonly called the "Campbellites," was preaching that the fragmentations and the division in the churches were weakening the causes of the kingdom. Alexander Campbell, who proposed to unite the divergent sects on the simple plan of the New Testament church, won many converts to his beliefs.

In the fall of 1826 Sidney Rigdon became an employed minister and regular pastor of the Disciples Church in Mentor, Ohio, preaching sometimes in the near-by settlement of Kirtland. Rigdon was gradually presenting his ideas concerning the common ownership of property. He devoutly believed in verses 44 and 45 of the second chapter of Acts which reads: "And all that believed were together, and had all things in common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need." Alexander Campbell did not want this adopted, but Sidney Rigdon was in favor of it and broke with Campbell over the issue of communal property. This idea did not appeal to the people of Mentor, but it soon got a foothold at Kirtland, where Pastor Rigdon founded the first colony of communal ownership, presumably on the Isaac Morley farm.

Among Rigdon's converts was a young man of twenty-three named Parley P. Pratt. Immediately he was touched with the vision and became a zealous missionary. He went to New York to spread this gospel and traveled around the regions of Palmyra, where he found the vicinity already kindled with spiritual excitement. While visiting an old Baptist deacon by the name of Hamlin he was informed of a very strange book, which had just been published, known as the Book of Mormon. Pratt borrowed a copy and spent all his time reading between preaching appointments. In a few days he inquired about Joseph Smith who, he was informed, lived in Pennsylvania. He was introduced to Joseph's brother, Hyrum, and spent the night at the Smith home where he heard the Restoration message. Early the next morning Pratt hastened away to fill another appointment of preaching. At the close of this appointment, he did not feel satisfied with the authority he now held to represent Christ as a missionary. He returned to the Smith home, after which he and Hyrum walked the twenty-five miles to Fayette, talking of the gospel message as they traveled.

They were made welcome in the Whitmer home, where Pratt met other members who were assembled for a conference of the church. After listening to their testimonies, he became convinced that the principles which this church taught were of God. He was baptized by Oliver Cowdery in beautiful Lake Seneca and was confirmed at the evening meeting.

Brother Pratt lost no time in returning to his home in Amherst, Lorraine County, Ohio, to tell his friends of the new faith and doctrine of the restored gospel. In the fall he returned to Fayette, where he met the Prophet for the first time, and was chosen as one of the men with Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, and Ziba Peterson to go on the first long mission of the church.

In the fall of 1830 the four missionaries came to Ohio, in the vicinity of Mentor and Kirtland. Parley Pratt had a great desire to win his pastor, Sidney Rigdon, to the new faith. The missionaries remained for seven weeks, preaching every night in various places. Most Latter Day Saints are familiar with the history of the conversion of Sidney Rigdon and most of his congregation in Mentor to the Restoration.

Two miles from Elder Rigdon's home a group of his followers lived "commonly" under the plan known as "the family," which had been organized in February, 1830. The new missionaries were introduced to this group, and their efforts were well rewarded when seventeen were baptized. In the town of Mayfield, five families were operating under the same plan. Also on the Chagrin River other families under the leadership of Lyman Wight, Sr., Isaac Morley, and Titus Billings were laboring together with great peace and union; they were soon to be joined by eight other families. Brother Wight states: "Our labors were united both in farming and mechanism, all of which was prosecuted with great vigor. We truly began to feel as if the millennium was close at hand."

Other families lived in Kirtland who were to play an active part in the destiny of the church. Frederick G. Williams, who owned a farm near Kirtland, practiced medicine and was widely known in the community. After he was converted he abandoned his practice to become a missionary. Edward Partridge had been living near by in Painesville since 1828; he was a "hatter" by trade. John Johnson and family were farmers and large landholders. Also there were the Murdocks. A young man, Orson Hyde, had been living in Kirtland since he was fourteen years old; he stayed with his foster parents and worked as a clerk in the Gilbert and Whitney store. Lyman Wight had lived here since 1826 and was baptized into the Rigdonite faith in 1829, associating himself with Isaac

Morley and Titus Billings in what was called the "Common Stock Family."

Kirtland, before the arrival of the Latter Day Saint missionaries from New York in 1831, was already developed into a community of homes, schools, churches, stores, grist and saw mills. It was a center for farmers to trade, for the people of the community were nearly all farmers or closely tied to the soil.

A circulating library association between the near-by villages had been formed as early as 1819, when reading matter was at a premium. Just what happened to this library is not recorded; it went out of existence in a few years.

A newspaper was in circulation as early as 1822, known as the Painesville Telegraph. E. B. Howe, editor, was never in sympathy with the Saints.

Mail and stagecoach service was instituted as early as 1823, with the official post office designated as Kirtland Mills; it served a population of 1,018 inhabitants in 1830. A Temperance Society of Lake County (Geauga) was organized this same year in Kirtland with 230 charter members.

At the first annual meeting the society voted that no member would dispose of grain to the distillers of whisky. There were several distilleries in the vicinity of Kirtland Flats; these made a good market for corn but did not increase the cash receipts. It brought in some inhabitants but did not improve the morals of the place. The stills were causing many hardships among the families as one old record book shows. One man had worked for 50 cents a day to the total amount of $9.09. He traded out $5.22 in whisky during the time, leaving $3.87 for family support; this he spent for a bushel of corn meal, 44 cents; wax candles, one cent each; 37 cents for meat, 50 cents for a hat, and received 12½ cents in cash.

This Temperance Society made a practice of buying out the distilleries on the condition that the buildings would not be used for this purpose again. As a result of their activities over a period of five years several stills were discontinued for the want of patronage.

With the advent of the Latter Day Saints and the conversion of so many prominent families, interest and excitement became general in Kirtland, and the adjoining regions. Meetings were held in different neighborhoods, and multitudes came together—some to be taught, some for curiosity, some to obey the gospel, and some to dispute. The membership during the first year rapidly increased to more than one thousand in Kirtland and the near-by vicinity. The settlements continued to grow and prosper, despite the constant sending of key men and families to Independence, Missouri, to foster the work there. A boom always arouses enmity and envy in neighboring towns whose growth is less spectacular. Kirtland's progress was raising the inevitable political problems; these are mentioned in a letter to the Painesville Telegraph on April 7, 1835, by a citizen of that community.

The writer complained that the Mormons were already "nearly a majority in the township and every man votes as directed by the Prophet and his elders." This letter reflected in a fairly typical manner the deeply grounded American suspicion of any minority whose vote can be "delivered" in a package at the will of leadership.

Question Time

Question

What should the Saints do in this atomic age? Should we build bomb shelters? In case of an attack should we leave the city or remain where we are? Has the church had any light on this?

I. N. C.

Missouri

Answer

The task of the Saints in the atomic age is the same as it has always been—that is to build up the kingdom. This process involves furthering our knowledge in all fields and being as helpful and co-operative as possible with our fellow beings, always basing our contribution to society upon the distinctiveness of our beliefs.

Bomb shelters would no doubt be of some help in the case of armed attack, but this is a matter for self-determination based upon the recommendations of civil defense authorities. In times of attack and disaster we should follow the principle that as law-abiding citizens we would co-operate with civil authorities and do all that is possible to contribute to the common good. We would presume that the benefit of discipline and spiritual insight accruing to those who are fully obedient to the gospel would stand them in good stead under such emergencies.

The church has received no specific instruction relating to the particular exigencies of the atomic age.

Question

Since childhood I have had the personality of Jesus Christ presented to me as one that was perfect from the beginning. Such pulpit and church school presentations have implied that while he spent thirty years in preparation for his ministry and was tempted by Satan, in no wise did he revert to the type of growth through repentance we find ourselves connected with each day.

This concept conflicts with mine regarding Christ as an example for righteous living. The passage from Hebrews 5: 8, 9 which states that he learned obedience through suffering seems to parallel life more realistically. In your opinion, is my concept sound?

R. G. K.

Missouri

Answer

Your concept is sound and is not a contradiction of the presentation of the perfect Christ; but it must be held that neither is the concept of the perfect Christ a contradiction of Hebrews 5: 8, 9. The problem centers in a definition of terms, and any seeming conflict is resolved through both faith and logical reasoning. We build on the premise that Christ was free from sin and therefore at no time needed more than his first chance to learn obedience—his life witnessing to the perfect expression of faith and works.

The problem for the finite mind is that of coming to the realization that the learning of obedience does not necessarily require sin, suffering, and repentance. The finest concept defines obedience as resistance to "even the appearance of evil," sacrificial suffering, and submission to the will of God. We note the struggle and decision of Jesus in the wilderness as evidence of the ultimate in long-range vision, the withstanding of evil, and continued steadfastness and oneness with God.

Whenever man avoids the path of least resistance and walks in a measure of this same affirmative repentance, i.e., overcoming evil with good, in that regard he walks in the spirit as did the "real and dependable Christ."

Will Our Church Succeed?

dren ignorant, would you reward him and continue to keep him, or would you dismiss him? We must do the work God has commissioned us to do before attending to our own affairs, else our contract with him will be voided and others will be raised up to take our places. God himself has recently answered the question asked in the title of this article:

The work of preparation and the perfection of my Saints go forward slowly, and Zion's conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies; but my word shall not fail, neither will my promises, for the foundation of the Lord standeth sure.—Doctrine and Covenants 140: 5 c, d.

And again, let me repeat in context the revelation quoted from before:

Each should strive prayerfully for sustained and greater devotion to the work whereunto he is called. My servants should not become weary of well-doing. The adversary is quick to discourage and thus destroy their effectiveness. The church is admonished again that joint responsibility is laid on all. Properly and equally borne, this responsibility will insure success, the consummation will be glorious, and all will share in that glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 141: 7 b, c, 8.

This is the just and wonderful heritage left to us on the death of our most recent president and prophet, Israel A. Smith.

Going Home

IT HAD BEEN a wet spring. I decided a strawberry patch had to be cleaned out before I went to reunion. This required hand pulling of all the weeds. I cleaned out the strawberry patch, but I didn't go to reunion. My heart said that was enough, and I spent reunion week in bed.

My daughter spent her vacation taking care of me. One day I left my body. I was conscious of many things on my trip. The autumn woods in Michigan always stirred my soul deeply with their beauty. The last time I was in Michigan I had the opportunity of taking quite a trip through the woods country. I mentioned to the personage with me that I hadn't seen so much beauty in my life. My friend reminded me that I had seen the fall colors since I was a child. Yes, I had, but only in small patches. I had never driven for half a day with rich colors on all sides. On this trip my spirit looked down on the autumn wood—miles and miles of it at one time. It was indescribably colorful.

I had worked in a drugstore once and one year the sample Christmas card book contained pictures of dark pools and scenes. I did not sell many of these, either because they were so different or because they were expensive, but I loved them. On this trip I was taken to a scene that at first looked so dark and forbidding that a feeling of fear stabbed me. If anyone thinks to save his punishment for the world beyond, thinking that it will be easier then, let me say that such an idea is a mistake. The fear that streaked through me was worse than anything I ever felt in my life in the body. Problems should be settled in this life.

Then I began to see the sparkles and recognized the picture so much more beautiful in reality. The high lights were almost hidden, yet they illumined the scene. These things may seem trifling, yet I was happy at the time with them. Perhaps if I had had my thrills in life on higher planes this trip would have been even more meaningful.

I knew I was leaving earth. I thought about how my daughter would feel when she came into the room and found that I had gone. I thought about the mild excitement it would stir up at reunion, but I felt at rest. I was conscious of going farther, although I had no feeling about how I was traveling.

Then suddenly I remembered the two grandsons I was caring for. I thought, Oh, I can't go now. Then I remembered two stories I had been working on for years. I just had to finish them.

And here is something that puzzled me a little. There was no talking. I seemed to know that I had a companion, although I did not see him. When I wanted to communicate I had only to think, and as soon as I wanted to know an answer, it came to me as though I were reading his mind. I am not a great talker, but sometimes I enjoy trying to put my thoughts into words, and I love to hear others talk. I wonder if there will be complete silence in the next world. It doesn't seem to me I would like that, and yet I am sure things will be arranged for our pleasure.

I have wondered since then, too, about writing. I love to read, and I have spent my life trying to learn to write. Will all that be lost? I heard a friend of mine say in a lighter tone that she did not think she would go into heaven. She thought she would stay in the anteroom with her typewriter. What will a writer's heaven be like?

Anyway I was made to understand that I had waited almost too long to make my decision—a little farther and I would be beyond the bounds and couldn't return.

I waited to see what would happen to me. The next thing I knew I began to stretch in my bed. I thought, "I did get to come back." It seemed such a natural experience that I didn't even think of telling any one about it until months later. I never have told the whole story.

I have not been able to care for anyone much since then. The two stories I was concerned about are still in cold storage. I have about decided that when the Lord says it is time to come home it is time. I have tried to make the best possible use of this extra time that has been given me. I have suffered some, and also I have been very happy.

Why I Belong . . . to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This book is a compilation of 12 reasons why Apostle M. L. Draper is a member of this church.

Each chapter gives a specific belief of the church which contributes to the author's conviction of its divinity.

This book has been a steady seller since its publication early this year. Its continued support by the public is convincing proof of its fine testimony.

Church at Imperial, Nebraska Dedicated

The dedication service at Imperial was held April 18 at 8:00 P.M. The invocation was by District President S. F. Bullard, and the dedicatory prayer was by Apostle D. Blair Jensen. The history of the branch was read by Elder Harold Fitzwater, and the sermon was delivered by President Israel A. Smith.

A lovely service of music was conducted. There was an organ prelude by Agnes McCurry. A special number was sung by a trio composed of Agnes McCurry, Goldie Smith, and Velma Smith. Jerry Goddard also sang a special number.

Services were attended by 117 persons including those who came from Imperial and neighboring branches.

A reception was held in the lower auditorium.

The church building, an abandoned schoolhouse, was moved from south of Lamar, Nebraska, to Imperial, a distance of about twenty miles. A lower auditorium and a foyer were added. First services were conducted February 19, 1956.

The branch was organized June 4, 1926, by Apostle D. T. Williams, at Lamar. Ward A. Hougas held services in 1922 in the Lamar locality. Meetings were held in various schoolhouses, a lodge hall, and an old pool hall.

In 1930 a church building in Imperial was purchased and moved to Lamar, where it was dedicated June 7, 1931. Later the branch activities were moved to Champion, Nebraska, where the branch occupied an unused high school building. There was a membership of sixty-three. The branch again moved from Champion to Imperial, the present location. There is now a membership of eighty.

There have been four branch presidents: Ward A. Hougas, Ben Peters, Harold Fitzwater, and Bill McCurry.

Letters

Note of Thanks

I wish to express my appreciation to all who remembered me during my recent surgery. I have received hundreds of messages, phone calls, visits, and cards, and it would be impossible for me to acknowledge each one personally. My heartfelt gratitude goes to all those who remembered me in their prayers, both in and around the Center Place as well as in Los Angeles Stake. It is a source of comfort to know that so many are concerned about my welfare. I am recovering nicely. That God may bless each of you is my prayer.

Servicemen at Reunion

I read with interest a short time back the letter from someone who preferred to remain anonymous. Later, another letter appeared in the Herald referring to the first letter. Now I want to add my comments. I shall try to come to the defense of both the serviceman and those who attend reunions.

I have attended several reunions. All were about the same in respect to what I got from them. Each time, on the first day, there was a little unintentional coolness toward strangers, because people were so busy greeting old friends that they did not take time to speak to those they didn't know. However, I could always find something to do that would help me to get acquainted.

This year the nearest reunion to me is two or three thousand miles away—in Hawaii.

If I were close enough to attend I would certainly do so. Perhaps all the people would be new to me, but I would find the Spirit there, for I strongly believe what I heard a man say in a sermon once: "God feeds the birds, but he doesn't throw the food into the nest."

I would like to hear from the one who went unnoticed at reunion. I know what it is to be away from home and from branch associations.

Memories of the Prophet

The latter part of July, 1957, six members of my family enjoyed a vacation in the West. On our return, at Denver we separated—my sister and her husband and grandson driving to their home in Texas and we taking the train to our home in Independence. Having quite a long wait until train time we went into the gift shop and were surprised to see the familiar face of our beloved President Israel Smith, who was engrossed in reading a book. I walked over and placed my hand on his arm and spoke his name before he looked up. Then I was pleased at the look of happy recognition on his face. He shook hands with us and asked about our health and our families. We told him of our recent parting with our loved ones, Grace and Earl Moore and their grandson, Cal Boardman, and explained that we were waiting for our train. He expressed a wish that he could have seen the Moores. Then he told us that his mission was farther west where he was going on a family matter. As we exchanged good-bys he said he would see us in church again soon.

Many times in the year following I met Brother Smith on the east walk of Stone Church following the early service. He would greet me as I hurried to the Education Building to teach a class. Two weeks or so before his death he stopped me and, as we shook hands, he recalled the incident of the preceding summer, asking if I remembered. He then inquired about each member of my family. I am sure that he was aware of the great need I had that morning for ministry, and in his kind, gentle way answered that need without asking the cause of my discouragement.

I shall ever be grateful for the memory of that morning. Besides giving me another personal testimony that God does work through his servants, it renewed within me a keen desire to become more aware of the needs of those about me. I hope that I, too, may be able to serve those who are in need.

Attendance Ministry

EDITOR'S NOTE: If the response is sufficient, we could prepare a reprint of this editorial for local distribution at $1.00 for one hundred. Please write the editors if interested.

I believe L. J. L.'s editorial on "The Ministry of Attendance" (Saints' Herald, July 14), is one of the finest I have ever read on this subject. May I suggest that article be reprinted in pamphlet form and made available among the membership. The subject is timely, and we do need something to stimulate church attendance.

A Candle against the Darkness

"Why I'm a Jungle Medic," by Thomas A. Dooley, M.D., is published in the June, 1958, Think, the monthly periodical published by International Business Machines Corporation, New York, New York.

This article is written by a young medical doctor who might well be referred to as the second Dr. Albert Schweitzer, since he too is engaged in humanitarianism.

Dr. Dooley, formerly a junior-grade lieutenant in the U. S. Navy, was stationed in the port city of Haiphong in north Vietnam. This is about four hundred miles due east of Nam Tha, as the crow flies. Here in 1954 he and four Navy corpsmen worked in a huge refugee camp caring for the leftovers of the eight-year war. They cared for beaten adults, "... for the crushed feet of young men, for children who had chopsticks rammed into their ears. We cared for the miserable and the frightened who were fleeing the godlessness of communism. We grew to know them. We grew to love them. Their blood was splattered on us. We saw a need."

To get to the point, upon their discharge from the Navy Dr. Dooley and his staff decided to return to Vietnam. With the royalties from Dr. Dooley's book, Deliver Us from Evil, and the financial help from friends they formed their own private mission and returned to Southeast Asia. There are nearly three million people there with only one bona fide doctor. Drugs and equipment were donated by Pfizer, Mead Johnson, and A. S. Aloe. In July, 1956, at the request of the Prime Minister of Laos, they built a hut hospital in Nam Tha; fifteen beds and about thirty mats were all it would accommodate. There was no electricity, no X-ray, no plumbing, no fancy electronic physiotherapy paraphernalia, and no nurses in white uniforms. St. Patrick's, name of the hospital, does have the essential thing that all hospitals should have—compassion.

It was independent of church or state. These were merely a group of men who want to help those who "ain't got it so good."

On October 7, 1957, they returned to Vientiane, where the Prime Minister gave the hospital a charter and the assurance that it would be maintained and stocked from the Laos Public Health warehouse and supported by the coffers of the Ministry of Finance. They had trained natives to take over. Although those in charge are not qualified to render the same type service, it is superior to the methods used by the witch doctors who administer cow dung and then perform their special dance. The Prime Minister asked Dr. Dooley if, after he had had a vacation in America, he would return and build another hospital. "Yours is the kind of aid we need badly. Our people know and love you."

Back home, under the auspices of the International Rescue Committee, a well-known voluntary relief organization, and with the help of Dr. Peter D. Comanduras of George Washington Medical School, they started a new program called MEDICO, which means Medical International Co-operation. The purpose of MEDICO is to offer direct, person-to-person medical service to the villagers of foreign lands. As a nonsectarian, nongovernment group, members will build, stock, supply, and train small hospitals along the iron and bamboo curtains. Then, after sixteen months, they will turn it over to the government concerned and move on to another area and build another hospital.

Since the inception of MEDICO in November, 1957, it has received hundreds of thousands of dollars in medicine from pharmaceutical houses and tens of thousands of dollars in donations. It also has three hundred medical volunteers who are anxious to work under its auspices. "Next month six tens will be sent out. I shall take one back to Laos and build St. Patrick's II."

The philosophy of Dr. Dooley can be summed up in a brief statement: "It is better to light a single candle than to curse the darkness."

Religion and Faith in Latin America

By W. Stanley Rycroft

Westminister Press
Philadelphia

$3.75

One's first reaction to this book of 177 pages might be, Why does it cost so much when it is so small? From the opening pages, however, the book proves its worth to anyone interested in the progress of Christianity in the lands south of the Rio Grande. The author is now chairman of the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America and has been a missionary to Latin America since 1922. He speaks not only for Presbyterian church missions but for Protestant work generally throughout both Central and South America during the past thirty-five years. This book sets forth many of his experiences, but more particularly it seeks analysis of the Indians of Latin America, with their pre-Columbian religions and their veneration of Roman Catholicism. It deserves place on the bookshelf of any student who has a serious interest in converting the Lamanites in Spanish-speaking America.

The author's analysis of Latin-American people and their response to Protestantism is carefully set forth. He begins in the examination of Latin America today, calling attention to the fact that the population increase there is phenomenal—2.4 per cent annual increase. This is more than double the world's population rate of increase. In 1920 there were 91 million Latin Americans; in 1956 there were 172 million—a number exceeding the population of the United States. In fifteen years Latins will number 321 million, according to present trend.

A substantial portion of the book is devoted to a description of the early religions of the Mayas, Aztecs, and Incas. The author is convinced that the Indians of the Spanish-Americas are still primarily influenced by such religions, rather than by Catholicism. He notes that their sick still seek out tribal wise men rather than physicians or the Catholic priest. He states that Catholicism has been an accommodative religion, adapting itself to the idolatry and ceremonial forms of their pagan worship. He also believes that Catholicism is losing a battle in winning these people who give only outward-form service to its ceremonies. Despite the fact that Catholic churches stand on the sites of the old temples of these peoples, incense and festal offerings are still brought to the sites of these buildings to give homage to Quetzalcoatl, Kulkulkan, or Itzamna.

The title of the book is drawn from a conviction that religion as contrasted to faith is a system of dead forms and ceremonies. His book sets forth the best analysis of Protestantism I have yet seen.

As a missionary for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, I value and recommend the book for its wealth of data and for the apparent accuracy of the author's analysis of problems in South American and Central American missionary life. It offers a challenge for our church to move in and bring an even greater light, and for the reader who longs for the day when "the Lamanite shall blossom as the rose."

They Teach Us to Pray

By Reginald E. O. White

Harper and Brothers
Publishers, 1958

Price $3.00

This book introduces the prayers which grew out of the spiritual experiences of a number of the great men of the Bible. When face to face with testing situations those men illustrated how a life of prayer gave them the contact with God that brought spiritual victory.

The author introduces each of these men as having a different approach to prayer born out of the varying events facing each. The subtitles immediately arouse interest: "Abraham: The Argument of Prayer" (illustrating how this great man interceded for Sodom and Gomorrah); "Gideon: The Daring of Prayer" brings agreement that "True prayer is not the refuge of a cringing spirit, but the armory of mighty men of valour." Thus we see the prayers of Moses, Joshua, Jabez, Samuel, David, Solomon, Asa, Elijah, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, Habakkuk, Jeremiah, Daniel, Nehemiah and Jesus each growing out of climactic events. The prayers of Jesus, illustrated by "The Quality of Prayer" and "The Reward of Prayer," are fitting in spiritual quality to end this writing.

This book will fit well into our homes as it does give us greater insights into the prayer lives of spiritually successful people of old and challenges us to achieve new spiritual heights in our communion with God.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Phillips of Cisne, Illinois, observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Sunday, April 13, with a family dinner and open house at their home. Approximately three hundred friends came to congratulate them. Mrs. Phillips, the former Mabel Knapp, was baptized into the Reorganized Church on July 29, 1903, and has been an active member ever since. For many years she was women's leader of Southeastern Illinois District. Dr. Phillips was baptized in November, 1909, and has served in the offices of teacher and elder (to which he was ordained in 1947). He has been a physician for forty-four years and has brought more than 3,000 babies into the world. Since their marriage at Brush Creek Church on April 12, 1908, "Doc and Mabel" have become well known and well loved not only in their home town of Cisne but also at Flora Branch (where they hold membership) and in the surrounding district.

They have two daughters: Mrs. Marie Henson and Mrs. Mildred Fehrenbacher, both of Flora, Illinois; four grandsons; and four great-grandsons.

Introducing . . .

ROBERT G. FISHER, New York City (page 9), is employed by an advertising agency and attending Columbia University night classes. Brother Fisher seems to have grasped considerable of our church's doctrines, traditions, and practices in the few months that he has been a member.

He was born in New York in 1934, and was baptized in the Norwalk Branch last October. He is a graduate of Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, and expects to get his bachelor of philosophy degree next June.

His initial interest in the church grew out of his interest in one of our Latter Day Saint girls. He was trying to learn why she felt so strongly that her church was important in her life, so he read the Book of Mormon and Fundamentals to learn what he could. He attended a Graceland Youth Conference and had an experience which changed his life.

And Finally...

GENIUS IS RARE

Some people object to being put in the class of "just an average man." There is no disgrace about it. Actually there are as many below average as above it. Therefore to have an average mind and body is to be greatly blessed.

Last Saturday I decided to install a twenty-one-inch window fan. I made careful measurements and decided that I needed to attach two blocks to the window sill so as to raise the fan above the cranks which open the windows to the outside. After spending considerable time in equalizing, planing, sanding, and screwing down the blocks, I set the heavy fan in place and discovered that I did not need the foundation blocks at all. This set me to wondering how one could avoid such false moves. Is such trial and error learning necessary?

If I can speak for the average man, without being presumptuous, I'd say that trial and error is an essential part of the learning process. A proverb frequently quoted during my youth affirmed that "Experience keeps a dear school, yet fools will learn in no other." Perhaps Franklin went to the extremes in this witticism. No man inherits a built-in skill which requires the co-ordination of brain and eye and hand. Even the experts do quite a bit of fashioning and fitting to get a satisfactory end product. Edison told of thousands of experiments before announcing the invention of the battery and of the incandescent light.

One who never makes a false move nor has to correct errors in calculation as he works is a rare genius. So rare, in fact, that the species is now extinct. He is "out of this world."

C. B. H.

READING HABITS

Keeping in the habit of learning often determines whether one will rise or hit the skids during the second half of life. A survey by Harvard Business Review showed that executives who had the best positions did the most nonfiction reading. Other executives, perhaps because they were too easily pleased with themselves, did little serious reading. Learning and reading go hand in hand. Reading to keep up with the world and one's vocation is one way to keep the habit of learning.

—Christian Booksellers' Advance

WHO SAID THAT?

It is surprising where our odd sayings and slang originate. "I am escaped with the skin of my teeth" sounds like part of a Shakesporean plot, or like Napoleon's salutation to St. Helena. It is neither. This classical utterance came from the one and only, "a perfect and upright man," the meek and patient Job (19:20).

C. B. H.

ATONEMENT?

We know that Eve led Adam out of God's presence. However, many church congregations are predominately feminine. Could it be that women are instinctively struggling to lead men back into God's presence?

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Curtis A. Vernon

CURTIS A. VERNON has two big interests—building homes and building congregations.

Since 1951 he has been engaged in developing an area in Independence known as Virginia Heights, a quality homes section in the south part of the city.

Also since 1951 he has been a high priest and a member of the Kansas City Stake High Council. Previously he had served as pastor of the Malvern Hill and Grandview congregations in Kansas City Stake. "My special interest," he says, "is seeing people wholeheartedly comply with the gospel."

In 1922, the same year he first moved to the Kansas City area, he was married to Edith P. Flinn. Both are fourth-generation members in the church.

Brother Vernon's other interests include gardening at his home in Virginia Heights.

Investigation Shows Interest in Service to Church Is High

GRACELAND COLLEGE recently surveyed alumni who were graduated during the years 1948-1957 to help determine the effectiveness of the school in the lives of its graduates.

The survey was conducted by mail. More than 50 per cent of the questionnaires were returned—an extremely high return for a mail survey.

The 987 graduates who replied showed a high degree of interest in the church. Of the 533 men represented in the return, 366, were priesthood members. Of the 437 women, 192 were wives of priesthood members.

Replies indicated that 556 persons in the sample devote all possible time to service and attendance in the church. On another question, 639 replied that they have some responsibility in a department of their branch. A huge majority of the 987 who replied—722—said they contribute money regularly to the church.

There were only twenty-eight persons who said they are now inactive in the church. Of these, twenty-two were non-members.

Twenty of the returns showed some responsibility in municipal, county, state, or national government. Many participate in civic organizations (248 in P.T.A.) and donate to community fund-raising drives.

Graceland Surveys Graduates

The survey also showed that the Graceland graduates sampled participate in government by voting. Six hundred and seventy-six said they voted in national elections. Nearly eight hundred of the graduates said they keep abreast of national and international affairs.

A high positive answer of 869 was received on a question that asked, "Have you increased your interest in such areas as science, religion, international affairs, the arts, since you left Graceland?"

Nearly all (913) of the graduates answered "yes" when asked if they considered themselves to be happy persons.

Democracy at General Conference

The fourth in a series of editorials concerning General Conference

I DON'T KNOW WHY they bother to have business sessions at General Conference. The business is all cut and dried." That was the attitude one church member voiced in a recent conversation.

Are General Conference business sessions a farce?

Do the delegates really decide the issues?

First of all, one thing is clear: God intended that the business of his church should be legislated by the exercise of democratic principles. If it is ever done otherwise, it is wrong.

Church law and custom dictate that the legislative process at Conference be as democratic as possible. This is insured two ways: (1) by encouraging a free and open forum for the discussion of the issues at hand, and (2) by taking an accurate representative vote on all business placed before the body.

The first democratic safeguard for a free discussion of issues is, of course, an informed membership. This function is fulfilled in two ways—by printing conference news and business daily and holding daily discussion classes for delegates and priesthood members.

On the Conference floor delegates are urged to present their views concisely so that as many as possible have an opportunity to speak. The motion for the previous question is not sought as long as delegates observe this rule of good taste.

The presiding officer at the business session is obligated to yield the floor to the first delegate on his feet. If two or more delegates rise at the same time during a period of debate, the chairman observes the custom of attempting to choose a delegate who will probably represent a view opposing the one just stated or who will represent another group.

BECAUSE OF THE SIZE of the Conference Chamber and the number of delegates, it is sometimes difficult for the presiding officer to determine clearly who will have the floor. However, the chairman's job is always to do the best he can in the interest of fair debate.

The vote at General Conference business sessions is usually by voice or show of hands. The votes of elected and ex officio delegates each count as one vote. The difference in elected and ex officio votes is significant only when a ye and nay vote is taken. An elder or high priest is automatically an ex officio member of the Conference whether he is an elected delegate or not. When a ye and nay vote is called for, the various delegations meet separately to discuss the issue and take a vote. When the whole body reassembles, the roll of the delegations is called and a chairman reports the number of ye votes and the number of nay votes in his delegation. Then the roll of the ex officio is called and each ex officio votes whether he has voted in his delegation or not. Thus it is possible for him to have two votes on a single issue at hand. The majority vote carries the issue.

The selection of General Conference delegates is one of the church member's vital responsibilities leading to effective church legislation. It is not a responsibility to be taken lightly. However, it would probably be embarrassing to the majority of church members if they were examined and asked to name the delegates from their local area.

DELEGATES REPRESENT STAKES and districts. In unorganized areas they represent branches. Each area is permitted one delegate for every one hundred members. Branches with enrollment less than one hundred in unorganized areas are still permitted one delegate. Each delegate must be a church member in good standing.

The persons chosen to fulfill delegate responsibility should be of the type who will take their responsibility seriously and use it wisely. Delegate responsibility has two sides. One is representing the group at General Conference. The other is representing the Conference to the group. This means the delegate is not only sent to vote for the group but also to report back and interpret the actions of the Conference.

Conference delegates are chosen by the vote of the majority in their home area. They do business at Conference by vote of the majority. As uncommitted delegates they vote according to the dictates of their conscience and their own intelligence. This is democratic procedure—the rule of the people.

Nothing is cut and dried at Conference. All things are done by common consent, as God has commanded. Even the will of God, when expressed, must pass the test of majority vote.

This is a daring method for governing God's work on earth, but it works when members of the church exercise their freedom prayerfully and intelligently.

Anticipating General Conference

One of the well-accepted innovations at the last General Conference will be repeated this time. Legislative preparation sessions will be held daily, Monday through Saturday, at the 8:30 A.M. hour. The high priests and seventy will meet together in the White Masque Playhouse (former Kansas Street Chapel), the elders in the Education Building, and the delegates in the Conference Chamber. Pending Conference business will be the primary subject for discussion, the purpose being to help prepare the delegates and ex officis for the business sessions.

The health class will meet each day at 7:30 A.M. Dr. Chas. F. Grabske, Sr., physician to the church, will preside. The general theme will be "The Health of the Saints—A View of Our Needs Now and in the Years Just Ahead." Speakers will be Drs. Paul M. Edwards, Elmo E. Gamet, J. E. Andes, Vance E. Link, James VanBiber, and Wallace Shute.

Classes for the elders will be held in the Education Building daily at 9:45 A.M. and 11:00 A.M. The earlier one, presided over by Elder L. Wayne Updike, will explore the theme "Enriching Spiritual Life," and the following speakers will be featured: L. J. Ostertag, Charles D. Neff, Rigby Leighton, Clifford A. Cole, J. C. Stuart, and L. W. Kohlman.

The eleven o'clock sessions will be built around the theme: "The Larger Areas of Stewardship." Elder Duane F. Couey will preside, and the speakers will be Dr. Harvey Grice, Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., Dr. Evan Shute, Dr. L. O. Brockway, Dr. Lloyd Young, and Clifford A. Cole.

The Conference concert will be held Sunday, October 5, at 2:00 P.M., immediately preceding the sermon by President Edwards. Featured in the forty-five-minute concert will be the Independence Symphony Orchestra, the Radio Choir, and Donald G. Henrickson, soloist.

Religious education classes will include sessions for youth leaders, children and youth workers, adult leaders, and those interested in the use of church school materials in the graded curriculum. These will be held in the Education Building at various hours during the morning.

Youth camp leaders will have opportunity to share ideas and gain a new insight into certain phases of camping in a daily class in Room 201 of the Education Building. Elder Carl Mesle will be in charge, and each session will begin at 9:45 A.M. C. D. NEFF plication to the Housing Committee would be greatly appreciated.

2. Other trailer parks in the immediate vicinity which are offering space to the Conference visitors are as follows:

Ralph Snell Trailer Court
40 Highway and Carl Road (8 miles from Auditorium)
Mailing address: Rt. 4, Box 580, Independence, Mo.

Rates: $5.00 per week plus lights
Blue Ridge Mobile Home Trailer Park
19th and Blue Ridge (3 miles from Auditorium)

Mailing address: 736 Lewis, Kansas City 25, Mo.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE
HOUSING COMMITTEE

Across the Desk

From French Polynesia Seventy Alan Tyree writes of a good response to the showing of the film "Other Sheep":

Our procedure in presenting the film was as follows: (1) an initial showing to the members of the local men's club to get their comments, ideas, and support for public showings; (2) a second semipublic showing at our Central District conference, at which we encouraged the members, now having seen it for themselves, to invite their friends to three later showings; (3) public showings on three consecutive nights as a part of a program of entertainment. Our gross attendance for the three nights was approximately 1,100, with 300 to 400 repeats.

There has been a great deal of interest and comment throughout the city as a result of the showing. We advertised over the local radio station. We had translated and tape recorded a synchronized sound track for the film.

Moral Agency-Its Consequences

PROBABLY EVERY HUMAN being who has studied and believes the story of Adam has thought, "If only our first parents had obeyed God, we would still be in Edenic paradise and would have escaped all the troubles we now have to endure! And why penalize all humanity because of Adam's failure?"

Then follows conjecture after conjecture as to how we would have fared if Adam had not fallen. And where do these conjectures take us? Exactly nowhere! The answer is simply beyond our ken. God has not revealed it to man as yet, so far as we can discover.

Yet the question is somewhat enticing to the inquiring mind and there also comes a desire to justify our belief and faith in God in whom resides all virtues. The Great Creator, being what he is, just could not be unfair in any event, so there must be good and sufficient reasons for the provisions he set forth in the Garden of Eden. Whether we understand it or not, faith and belief must be the vehicles of our hopes and desires until they are superseded by absolute knowledge which will come when the Lord decides to reveal it.

In the meantime perhaps a line of reasoning will bring not only some temporary comfort but also provide some thoughts which might be useful to those who may feel somewhat bitter or contemptuous about the whole story.

To begin with, the Scriptures proclaim for the Great Creator, among other attributes, the faculty called foreknowledge (Isaiah 42:9; 44:6, 7; 46:9, 10). Because of this faculty he can never be surprised. He always knows what will happen under all conditions. He knew Lucifer would rebel. He knew man would fall. It was not a case of his having a gospel plan in reserve "just in case" man might fall! this plan was all in readiness—and the Savior was appointed "from the foundation of the world" (Revelation 13:8, I.V.; John 1:12, I.V.; Mosiah 9:44; I Nephi 3:28; Doctrine and Covenants 36:9; 49:2)—because God knew it would be needed. That little word "if" just doesn't belong to the planned and orderly works of our heavenly Father! This suggests predestination to some, but foreknowledge, we believe, is involved here.

Foreknowledge and Predestination

Differentiating between foreknowledge and predestination seems to bring difficulties to some. Predestination usually means to consign or compel future behavior or condition. No choice is possible in such cases. Foreknowledge, on the other hand, does not prohibit choosing. It simply brings sure indications of what the choice and results thereof will actually be. For example, we can decide to drive a horse through an open gate. He is predestined to go through because we will see to it that he does. But if, instead of driving the horse through the gate, we just leave the gate open and let the horse choose whether or not to pass through, we may have foreknowledge that he will choose to do so if the pasture (or other things appealing to horses) is more attractive on the other side of the gate. Of course, the scope of our very limited foreknowledge is in no way comparable to the absolute and unlimited foreknowledge of Almighty God. The Scriptures plainly show that God does not violate the principle of free agency or right to choose (Genesis 2:21; 7:40, I.V.).

The Great Favor

At this point another question arises: "If God knew that Adam would fall why didn't he put up safeguards so that Adam could not possibly fall?" Well, for one thing, this would have robbed Adam of his agency. Moreover, since God is all-wise and perfect (Deuteronomy 32:4), it stands to reason that he permitted Adam to make his own choice and abide by the results because He knew it was best for Adam to have this actual experience. Do children accept all of their parents' advice in their efforts to protect them from needless suffering? No! Children must learn some things the "hard way," because they just will not learn these things in any other way. But the teachings of bitter experiences resulting from wrong choices bring the most marked and lasting impressions. In other words, it was desirable that he experience the results of his choice.

Adam and Eve seemed to agree with this idea as shown by their testimonies found in Genesis 4:10, 11, I.V. Keep in mind the fact that they expressed themselves thus after having experienced the actual Edenic conditions. No one can rightly doubt their authoritativeness in this matter! It is evident that Adam had this much protection against Satan by his Creator: Satan was not permitted to destroy Adam, just as in Job's case (Job 2:6), and, too, God insured Adam's right to make a choice (Genesis 2:21, I.V.). Certainly Satan himself would never have permitted such a thing. The very nature of Satan is to enslave and destroy (Genesis 3:1-7, I.V.). It seems clear then that God was doing Adam and Eve a great favor when he gave them the right of free choice even though they did fall as a result of the choice they made.

The Responsibility of Having Agency

Now, just what do we find by conjecture as to what would have been the result had Eve chosen to obey God and reject the glib sales talk of Satan? For one thing, Eve would not have obtained at that time the power to discern between good and evil. Who today is without this power? No one but babies and those adults who are deficient in mental powers.

What does this special power of discernment do for us? Does it bring an absolute and perfect knowledge of what is good and what is evil just as soon as we leave our babyhood? By no means! There are normal adults practicing things they call good, but adults with a different background of training call those same things evil. Many savages call an expedition against their enemies for predatory purposes a good and wholesome venture. Christian adults who are just as mentally normal call such a move the very essence of evil. Clearly the difference here is in training and indoctrination. Babies and the mentally deficient in either type of society would never be able to carry on consistently the policies of their own group because of their inability to respond to any form of sustained training or doctrine.

What, then, is this power of discernment between good and evil? It seems we must conclude that it is the power to develop a skill in the use of certain standards of measurement according to a particular system of belief so that we can judge what is in harmony with that system and what is contrary to it. Without any such standard of evidence or measurement, man must stand without ability to make a decision one way or another unless the very spirit of light shall come to his aid.

The Perfect Standard of Comparison

This was the dilemma in which Joseph Smith found himself as a boy trying to determine which church he should join. He had no way to decide this matter by his own powers. The next step, the attempt to apply the only standard of evidence he knew (the Bible), also proved unavailing, for it seemed incomplete. Men who were supposed to be experts in the use of this standard of measurement failed to agree. They all got different answers; therefore confusion and conflict were the result. The one salient and saving point indicating the way out of the confusion is found in the above mentioned standard in James 1:5, and to this ray of light Joseph Smith appealed with all the faith he could muster. There seemed to be no other recourse.

It did not occur to him that the churches were all wrong, for he felt there must be one that was right. The God-given intelligence of the normal human says that where all members of any group differ in their profession of full compliance with a standard (as the Bible), they cannot possibly all be right, but they can all be wrong or fail to measure up completely to that standard. At this point can we not say that man's inherent knowledge of good and evil is not effective; therefore man does not have power of himself to decide between contending basic issues? Does he not indeed require a perfect standard of measurement of comparison whereby he may arrive at an accurate conclusion between that which is false and that which is true? And does it not follow that confusion resulting in the use of a standard proves either the inadequacy of that standard or of those using it? Moreover, if millions had attempted to arrive at the whole truth by the use of that standard, with the result that not one had succeeded completely, would one not naturally suspect incompleteness in the standard itself? The need of God's help as suggested in James 1:5 was sensed by many before Joseph Smith's time (as an example, see Acts 8:26-38). Here a man of authority and intelligence searched the Scriptures and saw that he needed help. The Scriptures and his native judgment were not enough. All of this seems to prove that the power to know good and evil as acquired by Adam and Eve was limited to the ability to compare and analyze.

Judgment after Evidence

Referring back to the case of Joseph Smith, we find his testimony to be that, on compliance with the advice of James 1:5, he experienced contact first of all with a dark, destructive power that seemed on the point of taking his life. An appeal to God in the name of Christ brought relief; this was succeeded by a bright vision of the Almighty and his Son who gave the desired information and more, too. Here indeed was a startling experience in contrasts! The difference between good and evil was so strikingly manifest that it would seem no special power of discernment was needed to realize it. It would seem very elementary indeed to be able to brand a power of darkness by its right name, especially if it sought the life of one in contact with it! And the succeeding power, full of light and intelligence and love, should certainly be just as easily recognized for what it is!

However, elementary or not, mortal man did certainly have the power to discern between these two forces and chose, in this case, to accept light and truth. Likewise in the case of the eunuch and Philip (Acts 8:26-39) the former was aided by the spirit of inspiration operating through the latter to see the truth clearly. His discernment enabled him to obtain a knowledge of truth as opposed to confusion and darkness, and he happily chose the way of salvation. In Section 22 of Doctrine and Covenants we have a case where Moses told Satan that he could, by his own powers, judge between Satan and God. Now, in summing up the matter, can we not say that the power attained in the gift called the "knowledge of good and evil" simply means that it is the power of discernment to judge what is good and what is evil after all the evidence possible has been brought to notice concerning the whole matter involved?

God Intended Man to Know Good from Evil

After this power of discernment is acquired, any evil deportment will bring a feeling of guilt, while activity which is in harmony with that which is good will bring a feeling of peace with one's self. In other words, that little spark called "conscience" can operate where the power to judge between good and evil exists, but it cannot have place where there is innocence or ignorance. An adult without this power has no standard of behavior of any consequence. He is just a grown-up child—innocent, perhaps unmanageable, undependable, and a blessing to nobody! He could never be a profitable servant to God or man.

This was the original condition of Adam and Eve concerning which the Book of Mormon is quite plain (II Nephi 1:113). It therefore seems that in order to become of any use to God and his fellows, man needed to acquire that judgment which came from partaking of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And, God being what he is, it seems a surety that he intended man to partake of this fruit sometime.

A support for this opinion comes from the fact of God's expressed desire to reason with man (Isaiah 1:18; Doctrine and Covenants 45:2), and also from the situation described in Genesis 4:4-8, I.V., wherein Adam obeyed God in blind faith, thus establishing his complete loyalty to him. After having thus proved himself, however, Adam was not left to continue in darkness on the subject, but, perfect parent that he was, God sent an angel to enlighten his now proved loyal son, thus elevating him a step higher in his earthly progress toward a final complete accord with the Father of all. (The very spirit of this episode is expressed in John 15:15, I.V.)

From all this it would seem that the fall of Eve came not because she partook of the wrong kind of fruit so much as the fact that she forgot her loyalty to her Creator because of her desire for personal benefits whetted to a keen edge by

Satan's guile. The whole matter rested on blind obedience to God versus desire for personal gain as intensified by Satan's salesmanship. (Aren't the majority of evil doings inspired by that same selfish interest fired by Satan's influence?)

Timing Temptation

We as yet have no answer for the question, "If man had not disobeyed God, when would Adam and Eve have been commanded of God to partake of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil (since it seems so certain that they should partake of it sometime)?" But we do have these facts to consider as we attempt a summation:

1. Adam and Eve (and especially Eve) were innocent and without guile as are babes (II Nephi 1: 112-115).
2. Satan was full of cunning and deceit and desired their destruction and downfall (Genesis 3: 1-7, I.V.).
3. God appealed to the loyalty that our first parents undoubtedly felt toward him (just as babes instinctively look to their parents for everything). They would, therefore, have obeyed God without question had Satan stayed out of the picture, for at this time they had no idea what personal advantage the forbidden fruit would have given them. That is where Satan came in. He indicated the personal advantages in truth and added a lie, thus concocting that poisonous mixture of truth and error which has been so potent throughout man's history in the promotion of evil. From all this it would seem that since Eve disobeyed God after listening to Satan, who supplied knowledge of personal advantage, she might have disobeyed also in case her knowledge of personal advantage in disobedience had been supplied by God himself. But supplying this knowledge was simply bringing temptation into the picture, which (in my opinion) God would never do, for he does not tempt men (James 1: 13).

The Power to Become

From all the foregoing one fact stands out. The experiences of man which call forth and fortify reasoning power make of him a person of greater power in every way than he would have been had he continued as he originally was in the Garden of Eden, wherein he merely existed without any particular purpose in life but to drift along day after day like a puppet on a string—no challenges to meet, no constructive development to engage in, no new powers to acquire, and no power to become a son of God! No parent worthy of the name could be happy in seeing his children fail to grow into men and women of strength and maturity in every legitimate avenue of development possible. Parents know that children must learn some things the "hard way." They must suffer in many ways. But to see them make of these experiences a solid foundation on which they build great and wonderful characters, useful to God and man, brings the grandest satisfaction possible.

Is our heavenly Parent any the less interested in all of his created children? Hasn't he said, "Come now, and let us reason together" (Isaiah 1: 18), and, "I will reason with you . . . as unto men in days of old" (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 2)? How could he reason with babes and puppets? It is true that when the work of creation was completed as described in the book of Genesis, God called it "good." This doubtless applied to all the physical creation covered in this account. And physical man shared in this flawless condition without a doubt. But man is a dual creature, and spiritually he was a babe. His basic gift of intelligence needed to have opportunity to grow and expand. A character of godly strength needed to be forged from striving with grim reality in the great war between good and evil already begun in heaven. Man's spiritual potential was beyond all human understanding; with such a creature God might indeed reason in time to come.

God even invited men to become his sons (Genesis 6: 71). Is there any higher attainment possible anywhere? Can babes and the immature reach such a lofty attainment? Hardly! But a willing and determined effort to strive for the necessary power and growth to stand in such close accord with the one and only omnipotent God should bring to all mature thinkers an incentive more powerful than any other enticement in all the world.

Essentials and Nonessentials

After striding over a great deal of territory, some scriptural knowledge and information, reasoning from the known to the unknown, we still must admit that on many points we can only guess. We need not be disturbed because we cannot as yet know everything. What we do have is so grand and comforting that we can well afford to swallow our impatience in the wonderful and essential truths that are so generously given to unworthy man—truths that we do not yet have the decency to live up to as we ought.

In our musings and blunderings if we will only separate the essential from the nonessential, the known from that which is not yet given to us, much bitterness and dissension will be avoided. Many souls can be turned back into the kingdom who now think to madly dash themselves on the "rocks along the shore" because of mere differences of opinion on that which is not essential to our salvation. Hobbies and pet theories are dangerous playthings unless we know how to label them and classify them as essential or non-essential—completely revealed or as yet shadowy. It is well to keep that type of open mind which says in effect, "It looks this way to me at present, but perhaps some evidence to come will change the picture." With this attitude perhaps we might express some pertinent ideas:

1. The decision of Lucifer to rebel against God proved that the principle of free agency or the right to choose operates in God's heaven, and that sin or evil cannot remain in the presence of God (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 5). Hence Lucifer's transformation to Satan and his expulsion along with his cohorts (Luke 10: 19, I.V., Revelation 12: 1-7).
2. This rebellion came because Lucifer's covetousness was excited by the great glory in prospect in connection with the salvation of the then proposed new creature, "man" (Genesis 3: 1-7, I.V.). This new creature was a great development in God's eternal work and consisted of a spirit housed in a material body which was thus capable of a fullness of joy (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5). Through obedience man was destined to a state of glory beyond comprehension. This would be the most desirable condition that any spirit could attain (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 5).
3. This rebellion, which started in heaven, is continued on the earth among the flesh and blood of humanity and will last till the end of time.

"All Things Are Done in Wisdom"

It would seem that the fall of man was inevitable. Our first parents enjoyed perfect physical conditions at the time of temptation. These ideal conditions left man with no excuse from this standpoint. There were no enticements of proffered wealth to supplant poverty, as the latter did not

Elder William John Cornish

A FEW MONTHS AGO there appeared the following brief notice in the Herald:

Cornish—William John, son of J. J. and Mary Jane Stratton Cornish, was born October 14, 1878, at London, Ontario, and died August 6, 1957, at Macklin Hospital, Saskatchewan. He was married October 24, 1901, to Clarissa Atkinson, who died in November, 1917. . . . He was baptized into the Reorganized Church on October 23, 1892, and ordained an elder on July 10, 1912. He served as pastor of Artland Branch from 1914 to 1938, and as president of the North Saskatchewan District for many years.

To the average reader it was a statistical report, but to the lonely Saints living in the bushlands of northern Saskatchewan, to the dwellers on the prairies, to those in small villages it marked the loss of one who brought renewed hope, encouragement, and rich blessings of ministry. Like Paul of old, he endured many hardships, made long journeys on foot, slept in hovels, waded through mud and snow, traveled without purse or scrip, and shared the often meager pioneer fare of his people.

"On the Trail"

For thirty years Brother Cornish made a semiannual two months' tour of the province. The doctrine of stewardship was explained, babies were blessed, couples united in marriage, the sick healed, the indifferent aroused, the erring sought out and labored with. When he felt the need of divine direction, he would climb to the crest of the highest hill and there seek his Lord in humble prayer. There he could look down upon the divine handiwork and look up to the Giver of all good gifts.

In obedience to the teaching of the Scriptures he started "on the trail" as he termed it, without purse or scrip, upheld by the certainty that the Lord would provide. On one occasion when he was without funds he received divine direction to start on a journey. He boarded the train confidently. When the conductor began collecting the tickets he felt directed to ask a stranger for the loan of his fare. The latter responded cheerfully.

When he was seventy-six years of age, Brother Cornish was determined to visit a family who lived a distance of twenty-five miles in the bush country. The only means of travel available was a tractor. The day was bitterly cold, and he wore only a thin fall overcoat and cotton gloves. "Surely," some might say, "it was not wisdom to undertake such a journey." But as always, this frail little man of God forgot self and remembered only his brother's need.

"A Little Direction"

For nineteen years he was nonresident pastor of the Saskatchewan District. One day Brother Cornish asked a member of the priesthood to accompany him to a certain home. "We're needed there," he said. "How do you know?"

Clarissa and Will Cornish

queried the other." "I've had a little direction," replied Brother Cornish.

When they stopped the team in front of the house, they saw the sister at a window shading her eyes with her hand. When they came to the door she told them she had been praying all day for an elder. They found her little girl near death lying in a bedroom. When they administered, the child's temperature dropped at once. The next night the mother and little girl walked into the schoolhouse where services were being held and seated themselves in the audience.

A Helping Hand

During the last nine years of his life he was the recipient of old age pension—a boon he appreciated mainly because he could share it. At intervals the good sisters of Saskatoon have given him articles of new clothing only to learn later that their gifts were given to those whose needs he believed to be greater than his own.

Brother Cornish believed in following the teaching of the Doctrine and Covenants to rise and retire early, and like Paul he insisted on giving what help he could in the home that sheltered him. For over thirty years, while in Saskatoon, he called the Diggle residence home. In the days of coal and wood furnaces he cut stacks of kindling and in summer mowed the grass and trimmed the hedge. During reunions we usually gave shelter to nine or ten Saints. For many years I was district director of music. Each meal as we arose from the table he would say, "Now, Sister Lottie, you go and attend to your music and I will look after the dishes."

Following the example of his father, J. J. Cornish, he kept the Word of Wisdom as far as lay in his power. He drank no hot drinks, refused meat in hot weather, and ate wheat foods when they were available. Sister Anna Morgenson brought us a gift of two chickens "for the missionaries." On two separate days they were served to several appreciative members of the traveling ministry, but Brother Cornish refused even a mouthful.

In the first quarter of this century there was little teaching on stewardship, but the Cornish branch members were known as tithepayers and year after year, although they lived among the arid sand hills of western Saskatchewan, they seemed to be blessed materially. Prayer meetings were called in times of drouth and when miraculously the rains came, another "thank you" service was held.

Brothers

Will and James Cornish, who were both elders, had been inseparable since boyhood. When they first arrived in Saskatchewan as young family men, Will filed on two homesteads located just across the road from each other.

"James, you take the one you want, and I'll take the other," offered Will.

Thus all through the years they lived in peace and harmony within a stone's throw of each other. Whether calls came to administer to the sick in the depth of winter, in pouring rain, in busy harvest time, or even when rain threatened to destroy their much-needed hay, these two consecrated servants of the Lord dropped everything, hitched up the team, and went in haste to the one in distress. Many are the stories of miraculous healings which are told and retold in that locality.

In the drouth-ridden and money-scarce thirties, Brother Will and Elder Sigrid Erickson were anxious to travel a day's journey to visit scattered Saints. Unfortunately the gas tank was almost empty, but they decided to trust in the Lord. All day long they traveled; when they returned late at night and measured the amount of gas they found exactly the number of inches with which they had started.

Possibly it was on this same visit that a brother who was given to much hilarity and many jokes spent the evening at the Erickson home. Brother Cornish, who had a keen sense of humor and some of his father's wit, added his quota of fun. After they retired, Brother Will, who was bedded on the kitchen floor, saw in a vision the face of Christ gazing at him with infinite sadness. "I realized," he told us later, "that our thoughtless hilarity had been displeasing to our Lord."

No Unturned Stones

A few years ago when preparing to start out on his tour of the district, Brother Cornish sought his Lord for direction. In a burst of spiritual fervor he promised, "I'll not leave a stone unturned, Lord."

One afternoon he decided to visit a certain home, but just before he came to a turn-in at another Saint's home, the Spirit manifested to him that he should go in. He thought of several legitimate excuses for not doing so.

"I thought you were not going to leave a stone unturned," came the sharp admonition.

Needless to say, Brother Will obeyed that voice and accomplished in that home a remarkable work for his Lord.

Divine Assistance

He often related in our home three separate occasions when he believed he was visited by a Nephite. One cold winter night he arrived by train at a village where two elderly Saints lived. No one was in sight; it was three o'clock in the morning, and he had no idea where these people lived. As he crossed the road, a man seemingly appeared from nowhere and without waiting for greeting or inquiry, said:

"I will take you where you want to go."

As they approached the house the man explained, "Knock on the side door. They sleep at the back and won't hear you from the front."

The next year when he again visited the same couple and was ready to return, the Supercontinental train, which thunders through from coast to coast and only stops at intervals to take on water, drew up long enough to permit him to entrain for Saskatoon. Once again the Lord seemed mindful of the need of his servant.

Several years ago Brother Cornish was lying in bed meditating on the kingdom when a personage dressed in peculiar clothing came through the walls of his bedroom in front of him, approached his bedside, smiled at him, and passed out through the opposite wall.

"I thought maybe he had come to take me," he told me.

"I rather think he meant to show you the Lord was pleased with you," I replied.

A Time of Trial

Will Cornish and his wife Clarissa enjoyed close companionship and much happiness in their home. Their children were taught obedience and the truth of the gospel. Then one sad day this mother of eight small children was called to a higher sphere, leaving her husband bereft and the little ones in desperate plight. Loneliness, bitterness, and despair weighed heavily upon the husband and father. He could neither understand nor find comfort and felt that no other person had ever been so hardly dealt with.

"I almost lost my faith that time," he told us many years later.

One day while traveling on a train in the northern states he talked with a grieving man whose wife had deserted him and his children for another man. Here, indeed, was a burden greater than his own. Brother Will was brought back to a realization of God's infinite wisdom and goodness. He was granted a revealing dream of his dear one in paradise, saw her working with little children, and her happiness in her heavenly status was revealed to him also. From that time forth he continued to labor to bring others into the kingdom and so live that one day he might be worthy to meet his beloved.

A Vision

Quite recently, while in vision, he was given a view of paradise. There he saw his wife, his father, J. J. Cornish, and his sister, Annie Atkinson. The later's burden on earth had been very heavy, but he beheld her as one in perfect health and lovely young womanhood. From her countenance all strain, suffering, and weariness had disappeared. His father, who was seated on a beautiful chair, turned to him with his old familiar smile and said, "Willie, I want to show you something."

A personage carrying the Three Books came through one door and went out through another.

"That proved to me," declared Brother Will later, "that the Reorganized Church was truly the Church of Jesus Christ."

A Lesson in Patience

Early in December, 1956, he left Saskatoon for his home in Artland. Although he was in good spirits and fair health for a man of seventy-eight, it was revealed to his son, Myron, elder and pastor of the home branch, that his father had gone out "on the trail" for the last time. Before long, an internal cancer developed and for the first time in his life he was a patient in a hospital.

"Say," he declared, "I never realized before how much people need ministry when they are sick."

As the weary months dragged on he often wondered why the Lord did not take him when he was ready and anxious to go. Then one day it was revealed to him that the one thing he needed to learn before being fitted for the kingdom was patience.

"You know I have never been a patient man," he admitted humbly; yet not one of those to whom he ministered for three decades could ever see a fault in their beloved nonresident pastor. In their eyes he was humble, tender, understanding, and self-sacrificing—one who represented Jesus Christ in word and deed, one who kept the faith to the end.

Phi's Farewell

Photos by Blanchard

Phi, who is the daughter of a Baptist missionary in Vietnam, enjoyed playing hymns at the home of her town mother, Mrs. O. L. McKevit.

BEFORE FLYING HOME to my beloved Vietnam from the school where I received my training and growth in nursing education during the past three years, I wish to express my feelings and thanks toward my friends.

I wish to heartily thank the members of the faculty at the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital School of Nursing, who instructed me and helped me become a nurse.

I will never forget the favors, the understanding and rich hearts of the very experienced doctors who helped me.

To my friends in the class, those with young, rich, loving hearts, I say, "Look at the globe of the world. You will note that Vietnam is far away. I will be far from you, but anywhere I might be my heart will never be far from you. Before I leave I want to wish that you receive God's blessings with a happy future."

To my friends and the many persons who still do not understand about medicine and who want to become a nurse tomorrow, I say, "Don't hesitate; sign your name and enter this school immediately. Useful hands, clear-sighted intelligence, and a loving heart for your friends will not be useless anywhere. You should remember that those years in this school will help you grow spiritually and intellectually. It will help you to become a helpful person to humanity as well as being an educated person in society. But someday you might complain, saying: 'Too many lessons to study, too many tests . . .' It is really that way, but the period is not at all long, and afterward you will see the value of the lessons which you studied. Moreover, you should be happy to rise and thank God that you were born in America, a country most civilized in the world. You don't have to go very far from your home, or learn a strange language to pursue a course of study."

One of Phi's first friends at the Nurses' Residence was Mrs. Vinnie Hatch, director of the residence. "Mother" Hatch was in the group that met Phi at the train when she arrived in Independence.

Soon I will leave the school for Washington, D. C., to greet the staff of International Co-operation Administration and the Public Health Service—the people who helped me a great deal in the matter of finance and morale. From there Phi's pleasant bedside manner made her a favorite with patients. Mrs. Donald Oatis of Independence appreciated Phi's nursing service while she was at the San.

I'll return to Vietnam via the Pacific. Before leaving America I'll stop off in California to see the beautiful places that I haven't yet had the occasion to visit, the West of the United States. After that I'll pass through Honolulu, Hong Kong, Tokyo, and Saigon.

Finally when I am at home, the government of Vietnam will gain one more fully qualified nurse to help out in the vast program presently underway in my country. I will be carrying a heavy responsibility on my shoulders. Remember me in your prayers.

And one day, when dawn approaches, putting on a white dress, and on the shoulder a new responsibility, I will ask myself: "How did I become as I am?" Then all the faces of my friends who helped me become a nurse—the many friends whom I came to know and love—will appear in my memory again.

If any friends have the opportunity to go to the Far East, please stop in Vietnam. It is a small and pretty country. There you will find many sincere hearts always ready to welcome friends.

Once again, in these few lines I wish to show my gratitude and to greet all of you. I pray our Lord to stay with you now and forever, and I sincerely trust that God's richest blessings shall always be yours as you give your life in service for others.

Common Consent - A Divine Principle

ON APRIL 6, 1830, in accordance with direct commandment of God, Joseph Smith met with five of his brethren in the Whitmer home to formally organize the restored Church of Jesus Christ. Church history records that momentous occasion in these words:

Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father we proceeded (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by unanimous vote.—Volume I, pages 76, 77.

Here in the very first meeting of the church we find a most important principle outlined. We note that God not only set the exact date and commanded Joseph Smith to organize this church but also stipulated that Joseph should do so only after the brethren present had "consented" or given their approval to the act and signified their willingness to accept and support Joseph as their spiritual teacher and leader.

So it has always been and must always be. In the beginning God granted unto man his intellect and his agency; and although the Lord appoints and calls men to high and responsible positions, he also recognizes the rights of the people and shows no disposition to force upon them a man they are not willing to accept. And even though he gives direction to all his people through his servants, he instructs the servants not to carry out those directions until they present the same to their brethren for endorsement. This marvelous principle of condescension upon the part of God is in strict accord with our concept of him. Having called men to be collaborators with him in this business of building the kingdom, he must recognize their agency and their right to a voice in the things done. Such is the principle which we have come to know in the church as the principle of common consent. It can be effective only when those who wish to be co-workers with God work in the same spirit in which he works and with the same motives and desires to activate them.

Of course it would have been disastrous to reject the counsel of God in 1830, just as it is in our day; but should not the body have the right to accept those consequences if it chooses? Yes! And certainly it also has the right and the responsibility of determining whether or not the direction actually is of divine origin. This idea of responsibility points up a vast difference between common consent and common assent. "Con" means with or together, while assent is often a mere acceptance. You don't get common consent just by a vote. Too often that is only assent. Real consent can come only when the members of the church family speak freely and reason together and prayerfully arrive at a genuine meeting of the minds. Common consent involves both of the great gifts that God gave to man: (1) intellect or knowledge and (2) agency or the right to use or not to use that intellect (See Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7).

In this area, as in many others, we find ourselves distinct from all other religious movements. Some groups greatly stress the supposed voice of God through his infallible representative and completely ignore the voice of the people. Others trust in the voice of the people altogether, and everything is done by the vote of the congregation. Contrast such man-made systems of church government with that instituted by God; with the voice of God through his divinely called priesthood, but always subject to the consent of the members as they develop and use their intellect and their agency and so consent or reject.

Let me point out again, though, that rejection of the true will of God always brings its penalty, just as it did to Adam, Cain, Jonah, and the people in Noah's day. Similarly, the acceptance of what is not God's will brings a penalty today, just as it did in the days of Brigham Young. Either course of action can be disastrous to individuals or to a church.

Let us cherish this right of common consent which God has granted us, but let us use it as he intended. Let us be certain that we have the same motives and desires to activate ourselves that God has before we reason together and exercise this privilege of accepting or rejecting the things presented to us by the servants God has chosen. Such is God's method of governing his church.

Turn Aside and See

*And Moses said, I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not consumed. And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called . . . Moses, Moses.*¹

TODAY, IN THIS MOST critical time of the world's history, it is of paramount importance that we "turn aside and see." As a church we have a very great and grave responsibility. We have been called to a specific task; the accomplishment of that task becomes more imperative as the calamitous condition of our world points to a war of utter extinction. How urgently are we turning aside to see? How urgently are we working in the cause of Zion? How earnestly do we seek our heavenly Father? Even as the Lord called Moses when he turned aside to see the power of God manifested in the burning bush, so he calls those of us who have covenanted with him.

We are truly humbled as we sense the great task to which we are called. We are small in numbers, but the early disciples were few in number also. Of themselves they had little power, but when commissioned by the Master and inspired by his spirit, they went forth and became the leaven that permeated their world. Their testimony of what God had done for them and through them still stirs and challenges the Christian world.

The church as a whole can move no faster than the urgency of its local endeavor. Each one of us contributes to the effectiveness of the work as a whole. Our concept of God, our understanding of and commitment to the challenge of the cause of Zion determines largely the progress of the church in the fulfillment of this responsibility. In our hurried living we occasionally have sudden and disturbing moments of insight into the need of evaluating our lives. We are made sharply aware of how very fleeting are these "days of probation." At these moments we feel as did the two blind beggars who stopped Jesus on his way from Jericho to Jerusalem, "Have mercy on us, O Lord, Son of David.

Jesus stood still and called them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you? They say unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened."²

Just how do we "turn aside and see" today? Our greatest need is to know our heavenly Father more fully, to learn more of him and his purposes through a study of the Scriptures, through prayer, and through a commitment of our lives to him. We are advised to "Search the Scriptures; . . . they are they which testify for me."³ "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then shalt thou have good success."⁴ We are further assured, "If thou shalt ask, thou shalt receive revelation upon revelation, knowledge upon knowledge, that thou mayest know the mysteries, and peaceable things; that which bringeth joy, that which bringeth life eternal."⁵

GOD CALLS to each woman of the church. The challenge came to Emma Smith to "lay aside the things of this world, and seek for the things of a better"—another way of saying, "Turn aside and see." The revelation continues, "And verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my voice to all." Our lives do not tend toward having time for meditation. Life is complex; there are many calls, many responsibilities, many distractions. We must make time for searching the Scriptures, for prayer, and for meditation. As we come to Him in these moments we will find serenity, strength, and peace. As we read the Scriptures and all good books we will find our values and standards raised; we will have no place nor time for the cheap and the tawdry in literature or in the arts.

IT IS SAID: "Educate a man and you educate an individual; educate a woman and you educate a family." The spiritual and cultural standards of the mother largely determine the spiritual and cultural standards of the home. She spends much of the money, and her values are apparent in the way that money is used. She is with the family through the day when the father is absent, and her influence is great in shaping the character of the children. If she had a firm spiritual foundation she can witness effectively. "We do not doubt our mothers knew," was the inspiration and the sure anchor for the faith of the two thousand young men of Helaman. Of Timothy's early instruction Paul wrote, "That from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in the Christ Jesus."⁶

Even as the Lord told Moses, "The place whereon thou standest is holy ground," so can our homes be holy ground. Occasionally in a patriarchal blessing are the words, "May you so live that the Holy Spirit will be an abiding comforter in your home. May those who enter your home sense there a love for God and a love for each other that is not had in many homes today." As we seek to worship him in spirit and in truth in the many ways he has ordained, his Spirit will be with us and will make our homes hallowed ground. All that we do will be done "unto the Lord."

As we grow in an understanding of spiritual things we will have a greater urgency to learn more of him; we will want to search the Scriptures diligently and will find in them joy, peace of mind, counsel, and direction. We will want to pray, for prayer at its best is communion with our heavenly Father. We will find it natural and right to turn to him at all times, to sense his presence and to learn his will. We will find the things which "belong to our peace."

God is constantly calling us by every means to come and learn of him. He wants us to have the abundant life, to live up to the high privileges which are ours as his sons and daughters. As we incline our hearts to him, he responds to our slightest move. In A Commentary on the Doctrine and Covenants (1938 edition) President Edwards writes: "It is for God to bestow the light; it is for us to open our eyes and our ears to the truth which is available for us. . . . He does not work in such a way as to save us from the trouble of using our faculties, but he seeks to persuade us to use mind and heart and spirit in a constant endeavor to understand God and his purposes for us." He further states that ". . . the ability to see and to understand the things of God is not an extraordinary faculty communicated to a man and apart from what he is. This ability is related to man's entire self—his mind, his heart, his life—and is the finest fruitage of a personality reconciled to God."

As we search for God through study, we must study with faith and with prayer, for only then are the Scriptures opened to our understanding and made alive by the power of the Holy Spirit. As we discipline our lives and so organize our days that we make time for the things of the Spirit, we gradually come to know within our hearts that these are the most important and the most rewarding hours in the day. God blesses us as we try to put first things first in our lives and the rest of the day works out to better advantage in every way. God has every reason to bless us as we place the things of the kingdom first. He has promised that "all these things shall be added unto you" and other things fall into their rightful place in our lives. He further promises, "And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."

A BRAHAM RECEIVED God's word as he covenanted with him that the blessings were not for him alone but "in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Latter-day revelation comes to us; "Let the church be admonished that the times are portentous and demand faithful adherence to the faith and the work of the church, that mankind may be blessed by and find peace in those religiously social reforms and relationships which have been divinely imposed as a great task of achievement."⁷ Zion is not for us but through us that the world might "turn aside and see" the way to peace. When we hear and read of the anxieties and fears of this atomic age it is well to remember that "The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught." As we try to align ourselves with his purposes we will sense the meaning of the words, "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power and of love, and of a sound mind."⁸

The challenge to "Bring forth and establish the cause of Zion" makes us realize our great need that the divine Spirit direct, enlighten, and strengthen. Phillips Brooks has written: "Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers. Pray for powers equal to your tasks. Then the doing of your work shall not be a miracle—but you shall be a miracle. Everyday you shall wonder at the richness of life which has come to you by the grace of God."

As we move out and try to share with men and women the great love of our heavenly Father and of Jesus Christ, his Son, our souls will be filled with love for them. We will want to help them to "turn aside and see" the great plan of God to bring men back into right relationship with him and with each other. With the Apostle Paul we will say, "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God. Now unto him that is to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, worlds without end. Amen."⁹

A TEACHER MUST SEEK TRUTH

Generally speaking, the basic purpose of the teacher is to awaken the mind and heart, to stimulate self-activity, and to guide children toward the discovery of truth.

As we reflect on these purposes, we realize that God is seeking the fulfillment of this same basic purpose in the life of each of us day by day also.

The discovery of truth, around us and within, demands a close alliance with Him, the source of all truth.

It is good that teaching demands I closely align myself with God and his purposes in his children, for in such a relationship I grow.

The teacher has daily opportunity to assist children in evaluating the scattered and confused bits of knowledge which they acquire from various sources, and in so doing to seek for and find truth.

A child's security rests upon the answers he discovers to his persistent questioning.

Who am I?

From whence did I come?

Why am I here?

What am I to do?

How shall I choose and why?

Whither will I go?

In his "living book" (his teacher) he discovers many of his answers, and either accepts or rejects what he sees there.

The teacher teaches what he is.

For the child's sake, he must love and seek truth.

And finding and using the truth has its own rewards.

It really solves problems. It makes possible the obtaining of further truth. It gives that sense of power and liberty and joy that God has said is his desire for all his children.

The teacher teaches what he is.

For his own sake, he must love and seek truth.

Reminiscing in Kirtland

Part III

By Pearl Wilcox

WHILE DRIVING along the road, approaching Kirtland from Willoughby, Ohio, I saw to the southeast over the woodland and valley the white cupola of Kirtland Temple. This building of unique architectural and religious interest is known to the world as the "temple," but to the one who gave the divine command, it is known as the "House of the Lord," and has stood as a lasting monument of that command. It was the first temple built in the name of the Lord since ancient times. It is said that the character of the building, its size and architecture, was stamped on the minds of those in charge through divine favor.

The object of this building was fore-shown in revelation as early as 1830—that those appointed to preach the gospel in this age should be endowed with power from on high, as were the apostles of old (See Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7; 43: 4). The Temple stands today as a symbol of loyalty, consecration, and sacrifice, and is evidence of the heroism and undaunted courage of the early Saints who had been called upon to face these untold hardships as they hoisted the great beams while singing hymns, and sent up prayers at night on the unfinished walls.

The Saints were compelled by pressure of prejudice and intolerance to leave Kirtland and northern Ohio for other regions, but the Temple has come back to us, cleansed and rededicated by many pentecostal meetings, assuring the divine favor of power and grace to the ministry and the members of God's church.

My sight-seeing first took me high in the cupola of the Temple with Brother Earl Curry and Brother Ernest Webbe, who pointed out the surrounding landscape. Those who climb the one hundred and twenty-five feet to the belfry will admit that the panoramic view is one of the most inspiring that can be found anywhere. Looking toward the north, in the far distance I could see Lake Erie and the location of the Fairport Harbor where Mother Lucy Smith and her little band of pilgrims from New York set foot for the first time on Ohio soil en route to join her family in Kirtland.

In the east I saw "Little Mountain," which the Indians regarded as a sacred shrine; this was the site of many of their religious ceremonies. Also located northeast is Painesville, the present county seat of Coke County.

Looking toward the south, I could see the low hills and rolling landscape of the Gildersleeve Mountains. In this natural location are many highly developed estates that have attracted millionaires. Very few of these estates are self-sustaining. One gentleman farmer, I am told by Brother Webbe, describes his life as a habit of "working hard in town to meet the payroll on the farm."

Looking toward the west, I saw the large industrial center of Cleveland, spined with columns of smoke; it is only ten miles from the eastern limits.

As I looked down upon the closer surroundings, I was reminded of the statement made by Brother Gomer Griffiths when he arrived in Kirtland in 1883 and looked out over the landscape. To him the many foundation ruins and gaping wells, and cellars, were mute testimony of the first gathering of the Saints. As I left the Temple, I wished that the great thick walls, could articulate and tell us the stories that have not been written, leaving us to wonder what happened in many gaps of history.

Traveling three long city blocks from the Temple to the intersection of Highways 306 and 615 brought me to about the center of the old town of Kirtland Mills. In the middle of the road was the village well with its watering trough which remained until 1910, where neighbors would linger to visit. I could visualize the early settlers in their ox carts or horsedrawn vehicles who had left home early in the mornings for the trip to town; if all went well they would be back home before dark. I recalled an incident I read concerning the Saints after they left Kirtland. Martin Harris had continued to live here until he was a very old man; he always felt that his mission was to remain in Kirtland. In late life he became destitute, poorly clothed, feeble, and burdensome to friends. Plans were being made to take him to the poorhouse when his son came in 1870 and removed him to Utah. As they were driving from the town, he asked to stop at the village well, where he gazed far and wide over the hills and said: "Shall I ever see these hills again? Yes, I shall see them in the spirit." With a sad heart he left the place of so many memories, to die in Utah in 1875.

In the "Flats" I observed the brick home that was erected by the Minnie M. Schuppe family on the site of the old Kirtland Bank. After the Saints left Kirtland, the bank building was used for a tavern and later operated as a "farmers exchange," a clearinghouse for grain and produce for the farmers. About 1900 fire put an end to the old bank building when a boy hung up his coat with a lighted cigarette in the pocket, according to Mrs. Dora McFarland who is still living in Kirtland. In the modern residences are a few of the old reclaimed bricks manufactured in Kirtland brickyards and first used in the bank. In the Western Reserve Museum of Cleveland I saw the bank safe, with its interdigitate knob combination. By knowing the rights knobs to move one can release the main knob over the keyhole so the key may be inserted for opening. As I viewed this safe I was reminded that the closing of the bank was the death knell of the church in Kirtland. It was not the whole cause or even the principal cause, but it was the final notice that the Saints were no longer wanted in the community of Kirtland.

The Gilbert and Whitney store on the northeast corner of the intersection has been used as a country tavern for many years. It was once used as a general merchandise store, and the upper rooms for a short time were the temporary home of Joseph, Jr., and his wife Emma, before they moved "up the hill" to their new home.

Newell K. Whitney and his wife were members of Sidney Rigdon's Church of the Disciples, and Mrs. Whitney relates an experience that reveals their sincerity in religion. She had a vision in which "my husband and I were in our house at Kirtland, praying to the Father to be shown the way, when the Spirit rested upon us and a cloud overshadowed the house. It was as though we were out of doors. The house passed away from our vision. We were not conscious of anything but the presence of the Spirit and the cloud that was over us. Then we heard a voice out of the cloud saying, 'Prepare to receive the word of the Lord, for it is coming.' At this we marveled greatly, but from that moment we knew that the word of the Lord was coming to Kirtland."

In front of this store, about the first of February, 1831, a sleigh containing four persons came to a halt. One of the men, a young stalwart person, alighted and, springing up the steps, walked into the store and exclaimed, "Newell K. Whitney, thou art the man," extending his hand cordially as if to an old friend.

"You have the advantage of me," said Mr. Whitney as he took the hand, "I could not call you by name as you have called me."

"I am Joseph, the Prophet," said the stranger smiling. "You've prayed me here, now what do you want of me?"

Newell K. Whitney, astonished but no less delighted, conducted the guests across the street to his home on the northwest corner from the store. Joseph and Emma remained guests in the Whitney home for several weeks and received every kindness and attention which could be expected.

Old-time missionaries have written of a large stone in front of this house with the name "Whitney" engraved on it. This served as a name plate for many years. The Whitneys never lived over their place of business; they always lived in the home across the road from the store.

The firm of Gilbert and Whitney became dissolved, and the business in Kirtland was conducted under the name of N. K. Whitney and Company while Brother Gilbert became keeper of the church store in Independence. In Kirtland the store came under the control of the church.

Where Joseph and Emma lived after the several weeks at the Whitneys we do not know. They moved to Hiram, Ohio, and lived there from September 12, 1831, to March 25, 1832, with the Johnson family. Then on April 1, 1832, Joseph and Newell Whitney started for Independence, and Emma went to the Whitney home again. Because of objections of Mrs. Whitney's aunt, she left within a few hours, going to the William Cahoon home for a short time, then with Joseph Smith, Sr., and then with Brother William (probably William Smith).

As soon as Joseph returned from the land of Zion in July, 1832, he immediately secured living quarters for his wife. While they were in this location, their son Joseph was born on November 6, 1832, in the upper rooms over the store of Newell K. Whitney.

Since Joseph had no permanent office at this time, it could have been in these upper rooms on Christmas Day, 1832, that he received the revelation predicting the Civil War. This was a daring prophecy to make so many years before it happened. No one but a prophet of God could have prophesied concerning this political trouble that would start in South Carolina, bringing a division between the Northern and Southern States. He clearly told how the Southern States would call upon Great Britain for help and what the outcome of the war would be.

Standing on the east fork of the Chagrin River, I was reminded that this rippling little stream could be a witness in the great day of eternity of the many baptisms that were performed here by the Kirtland Saints below the old mill dam.

Today there is no evidence of that early mill which remained here with its silent wheel for several years before it was dismantled and cleared away. Then about 1930 the driver dam was dynamited to destroy the influence of all-night swimming parties which were becoming a nuisance to the community.

History tells us that the first sawmill was erected close to this river site about 1819. This may be the location that the Prophet Joseph spoke of in 1835: "The board kiln had taken fire, and on our return we found the brethren engaged in extinguishing the flames. After laboring about one hour against the destructive element, we succeeded in conquering it, and probably saved about one-fourth part of the lumber."

It was near the vicinity of the sawmill that James Boyden erected his cloth-dressing and wool-carding establishment in 1818. I read in the Painesville newspaper he was still doing business and soliciting the patronage of the public as late as 1830 with the assurance that all wool entrusted to him for carding should be done in faithful and workmanlike manner. I can visualize the mother on horseback coming to the mill with a sack of wool strapped to the rear of her saddle, in some cases the bundle rising higher than her head, with maybe a baby in her arms and a tot capering ahead, and two or three dogs following amid a cloud of dust or in a bog of mud.

A good description of how the early settlers dressed and how they secured their clothing was given by one of them about 1819 and quoted in an early newspaper:

For many years all of our clothing was manufactured at home; the women spun and wove the flax for our shirts, sheets, and pantaloons for summer wear; it was generally half wool and half flax, called linsey-woolsey. For very nice dresses it was all wool, striped or checked and finished and pressed by Boyden the clothier. For footwear we used but little in summer; most of the men, all of the children, and some of the women going bare-foot. In the fall of the year we procured a side of sole leather, one of cowhide, and sometimes of calfskin. A shoemaker came to the house with his kit of tools and made up the shoes for the family.

Several places of business in this commercial center of that early day are spoken of in history, but the accounts only leave us to guess as to their locations. In 1835 a fire broke out in the shoemaker shop owned by Orson Johnson, but the flames were soon extinguished by the brethren. At this same time Joseph Smith, Jr., spoke of attending meetings at the schoolhouse on the Flats. In 1836 Elder Joseph Coe suggested to Joseph that he hire a room at the John Johnson's Inn to exhibit the Egyptian mummies. Then Young Joseph, as a little boy, remembered peering through the cracks of the wagon shop at a little wagon that was being made for him by Alexander Badham.

In the many shops that composed this center in the Kirtland Flats were fabricated or sold all the necessities of life. But we cannot tarry here longer; there is much more to see in the historic old town up the hill.

Correction

In Part I, page 804, the middle of the first paragraph should be "Other diary entries read: 'We cut a road into Chardon and was delighted when we found a good spring and a warm place for a garden.' Willoughby was formerly known as Chagrin not Chardon. On a map printed in 1797 it was Charlton."

Question

Is it necessary for one who is unable to attend Communion service because of an invalid husband to notify the pastor each month in order to have the emblems brought to the home?

MRS. L. H.

Iowa

Answer

Perhaps you might have an understanding with your pastor that, under the circumstances you mention, you would like to have the emblems brought to your home each Communion Sunday unless you advise him to the contrary.

It is quite the usual procedure for the branch administration to feel that the member who is unable to attend should indicate his readiness and worthiness to partake of the emblems by a specific request each month. A great number of members do not partake regularly. Some stay away intentionally, and some may be away from home. I think it should be assumed that the Communion will not be taken to the homes of absent members unless specific arrangements have been made.

Question

What is the meaning of Doctrine and Covenants 108:6a, which tells about people in the north country who shall come with their prophets as the ice flows down at their presence.

Mrs. M. B.

Missouri

Answer

There has been much discussion about the "north countries" and the people of the "north countries." But no one has ever to my satisfaction identified either the countries or people concerned.

It seems to me that there are two possibilities, at least, as to what this passage means. One is that it is figurative language describing the kind of unusual and glorious events associated with the gathering of the "elect" and the second coming of Christ. The other is that it pertains to actual events, still in the future (note that this passage is dealing with final events in association with the second advent of the Master), and the meaning of which will not be known until the event comes to pass. In this latter case the purpose of the prophecy would be confirmatory rather than to instruct us as to future events before they occur.

The whole subject is so ambiguous that I suggest an attitude of reserve judgment until more is given by revelation or events themselves enlighten us.

exist. Power and influence over one's fellows was also nonexistent as a temptation because there were no other people to be victimized. As already indicated, it was just a case of personal desire whetted to a keen edge by the tempter versus pure loyalty to God's command. Man's failure here made it impossible for God to allow man to continue to enjoy physical perfection. Hence the loss of the Edenic conditions of living. Man must first attain full and complete accord with God before he can be trusted with a perfect physical way of life, for the natural man would, under the influence of Satan, abuse such powers.

Surely our gropings and musings have brought this much light and knowledge: we can no longer rightly feel "T'aint fair!" Instead we can acknowledge that though we have but a meager amount of light on the subject herein treated, we do have reason for a faith and belief in the wisdom and love and power of him who is the great Creator and Father of all.

In the words of an ancient prophet, "But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things" (II Nephi 1:114); and from the Bible: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him (I Corinthians 2:9).

Straight or Strait?

I RECENTLY RECEIVED an inquiry from a Book of Mormon student who desired to know why the 1955 edition of the Authorized Version of the Book of Mormon had made certain changes in the use of the words "strait" and "straight." I thought that others might be interested in knowing the results of my research on this question.

In the following passages, "straight" has been changed to "strait" in the 1955 edition: II Nephi 13: 25, 27; II Nephi 15: 10; Jacob 4: 16; Helaman 2: 26; III Nephi 6: 25, 26; III Nephi 13: 11.

I checked each of these eight verses through the 1830 Palmyra Edition, the 1837 Kirtland Edition, the 1842 Nauvoo Edition, and the 1874 Plano Edition which was later reprinted from the same plates in Lamoni. In every edition, and in every verse noted, the word was spelled "straight."

I then turned to the photostatic copies of the original manuscript, and found that in every instance the manuscript contained the word "strait."

At this late date it is of course impossible to determine exactly what happened, but we may assume that either an editor or a typesetter (or perhaps both) decided that the word was misspelled on the manuscript and undertook to correct it. That "correction" has been perpetuated in every edition published by the Reorganized Church up to 1955.

It is interesting to note, too, that the committee consisting of William H. Kelley, Alexander H. Smith, and Thomas Smith which reported on the variations between the manuscript and the Palmyra Edition in the Herald, Volume 31, pages 545 ff. (1884) makes no mention of these discrepancies. Joseph Smith III also sat in with this committee, since David Whitmer, then the owner of the manuscript, would consent to have it examined only if Brother Joseph was present.

It would be reasonable to assume, perhaps, that the editor who made the change was Joseph Smith, Jr., himself, in view of the fact that he made a similar change in the inspired Version of the Bible in Matthew 7: 13, 14 (I.V., verses 22, 23) and the parallel passage in Luke 13: 24. It is not likely that the change in spelling could have been made by Oliver Cowdery, whose pen wrote most of the Book of Mormon manuscript, and who spelled the word "strait" correctly in the manuscript. (Incidentally, the spelling was changed back to "strait" in the 1944 edition of the Inspired Version.)

A study of the origin and meaning of the two words indicates quite clearly that "strait" should be the proper spelling. "Straight" is derived from the Middle English verb "strecchen," which later became "streccan" in Anglo-Saxon, meaning "to stretch." "Strait" came into the language from the Latin, through French influence. The original Latin verb is "stringere," meaning "to draw tight." The past participle is "strictus." From this same word root we get such words as "strict," "constrict," and "restrict."

Through "strait" was a perfectly good word in the days of the King James translation of the Bible, it is now regarded as archaic, except when used in geography to refer to a narrow strip of water between two confining masses of land, such as the Straits of Magellan, or Mackinac Strait. Paul states in Acts 26: 5 that "after the straitest [i.e., the narrowest, strictest] sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee." We find the same word in straitjacket. We sometimes speak of being in straitened financial circumstances. Other than these few uses, the word "strait" has passed into almost total disuse.

Few of the modern translations of the Bible use the word "strait" in the two biblical passages cited. They prefer to use the synonym "narrow." For example, in Matthew 7: 14 the New World Translation says: "Narrow is the gate and cramped the road . . ." Revised Standard Version: "The gate is narrow and the way is hard . . ." Moffatt: "The road that leads to life is both narrow and close . . ." J. B. Phillips: "The narrow gate and the hard road lead out into life." Emphatic Greek Diaglott: "How narrow is the gate of life! How difficult the way leading thither!" Twentieth Century: "Small is the gate and narrow is the road . . ."

Obviously there is no point in talking about a "straight" gate, i.e., one that is not crooked. The point is that the gate is small, narrow, drawn tight, constricted—not ten miles wide—and that it leads onto a narrow and difficult way. Even the way may or may not be "straight," but it is always "strait." The contrast is clearly brought out when these two statements of Matthew 7: 13, 14 are placed parallel with each other to form two pairs of opposites, thus:

"Wide is the gate and broad is the way . . ."
"Strait [narrow] is the gate and narrow is the way . . ."

The Book of Mormon Concordance, which was compiled from the 1917 edition of the Authorized Version, of course does not list "strait" as appearing in the eight verses cited. No doubt the next edition of the Concordance will carry this correction to agree with the correct spelling in the 1955 edition.

Church Dedication at West Branch Michigan

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH was first established in West Branch in July, 1902. Early pastors of the local group were James D. Duncon, William Fisher, and Joseph Priddy. All are now deceased. Elder Fred West, now residing in Rialto, California, was pastor until 1941, when Elder Ben H. Ouderkirk became pastor.

The little group first worshiped in the homes of members. In 1931 a lot on the corner of First and Ripley Streets was donated to the group by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gussman. A little church was constructed, but in a few years it became evident that a larger building would be necessary.

A large lot on Houghton Avenue was purchased from Mrs. Augusta Gussman on April 8, 1950. The purchase of this lot marked the first step toward the ultimate goal—a new church.

A drive for funds was set in motion; bazaars, bake sales, dinners, and other projects were sponsored by the women and children. The men spent many hours in the woods getting timber to be used in the new building. When actual construction began, men, women, and children worked together on the building.

The basement was started in May, 1953, and on January 1, 1954, the group moved into the new basement. The next two years were spent improving the basement and accumulating funds for the upper auditorium, on which construction was started September 7, 1956.

Through the able assistance of Mr. Alfred Roe, the plans for the new building were drawn; he also assisted in constructing the new church.

The building is thirty-two by sixty-four feet. The main worship area has mahogany paneling in the front portion, with the remaining wall surfaces painted white. There are ten pews on each side of the center aisle; these will hold two hundred people. The cry room and basement areas are equipped with a public address system. When necessary, the lower auditorium which will accommodate two hundred people may be used to hold overflow crowds. Both upper and lower auditoriums were used for the dedication services.

Palm Sunday, 1958, the completed church was consecrated by Elder Ben H. Ouderkirk. All services have been held in the new building since that date.

On May 25 the church was dedicated in special services presided over by President Israel A. Smith.

Dedication services were opened by a fellowship at 9:30 a.m., in which District President Jay Doty was in charge. President Smith spoke at the 10:45 a.m. service and also gave the dedication address in the afternoon. Evangelist John R. Grice spoke at the evening service. A total of 639 persons attended the meetings held throughout the day. The completion of this church and its dedication to the Lord's work in West Branch is a reward well worth the sacrifice of those who built it.

Education That Is Christian

By Lois E. LeBar

Fleming H. Revell Company
Westwood, New Jersey

Price $3.75

The major thesis of this book is that there is a distinctive Christian system of education. The author leads the reader through the process of teaching methods used by Jesus and those used in the Old Testament wilderness school.

In her chapter on "The Teaching-Learning Process" she vividly demonstrates that good Christian education is more than imparting knowledge. In it she makes the following statement:

"Somehow, in the process of the development of traditional education, the roles of the student and the teacher have become the reverse of what they should be in participative education. The student should be the primary participant. In traditional education the teachers do what the students should do and the students act as disinterested observers of the process. . . . This topsy-turvy condition is well evidenced by a kind of job analysis of the teacher activities. The teacher robs the student of each of these vital experiences: he sets the goals for the students, formulates the questions and problems, evaluates progress, organizes the experience of the student, 'integrates' the curriculum, plans the course and the lectures, thinks about the course problems outside of class hours, and does most of the talking. In short, the teachers are the students, the learners, the participants in the educative process."

While this book is interesting and should be helpful to the members of the church interested in religious education, it has one major limitation: the author is limited by her belief in the infallibility of the biblical Scriptures. How much greater her work could have been if it had not been limited to revelation contained in the Bible alone. Regardless of this the book is worthy to be read.

Man's Estimate of Man

By E. H. Robertson

John Knox Press,
Richmond, Virginia

Price $2.25

In this "decisive moment" of history man is faced with power which he cannot control and with anxieties which he cannot resolve. The old question raised by Job and the Psalmist David appears in a new form today to demand our attention. The author asks: "Who is this creature standing amidst his triumphs and afraid of himself?"

In the day of his greatest achievements, man's greatest problem is himself—"he is desperately afraid of losing his destiny." His basic anxieties must be resolved. There are, according to the author, "the anxiety of guilt . . . the anxiety of death . . . the anxiety of meaninglessness." Some of the greatest minds of modern philosophy have attacked this problem. Briefly and clearly the author reviews certain of these theories. The Freudians "have tried to meet the problem of guilt by rejecting the idea of morality," to them "guilt is a disease of the mind."

The Existentialists have "advanced the concept of man as a plaything of events, unable in his weariness to distinguish right from wrong."

The Marxists "meet the problem of guilt by compelling men to become replaceable parts in a collective whole and thus lose the capacity for personal guilt."

Drawing support from the Scriptures as well as from the words of several of the great theologians of the present day, the author contrasts these with "the Christian concept of man—a creature at once free and responsible." According to this Christian faith man comes to "see himself as potentially a child of God—a being who has eternal significance." Accepting "undeserved forgiveness" he resolves the anxiety of guilt. In Christ he finds the way through death.

Man's estimate of man has proved inadequate. Only the Christian doctrine will suffice.

For those who desire to clarify their thinking as to the import of the gospel of the Restoration in the solving of the perplexities of man in this most disturbing period of history, I cannot recommend this little volume too highly. F. M. McDOWELL

Fathers of America

By Elizabeth Logan Davis

Fleming H. Revell Company, 1958

Price, $2.75

This little book gives some intimate glimpses into the background and home life of a number of famous and successful men in our land. The material deals chiefly with incidents from the childhood of these men that show how the influence and teaching of their fathers helped them to become outstanding in their fields.

The fathers of presidents, statesmen, authors, doctors, ministers as well as others are included. There are fifteen chapters in all, each dealing with a different father and a different home. From Norman Vincent Peale whose father advised him to "just tell the people that Jesus Christ can change their lives," to the Menninger Brothers whose father guided them into the field of psychology that resulted in the establishment of their famous clinic, the subjects of this book become real and alive to the reader.

The main emphasis of the book is upon the religious training and Christian principles found in each of these homes. The heritage of faith granted each of these famous men appears to have acted as a beacon and guiding light in their lives in leading them to the positions of prominence they occupy today. RICHARD M. Overseas Visitors to Reunion

BRITISH ISLES MISSION.—At the annual reunion held August 1-5, the following men gave ministry: Apostle Arthur A. Oakman, High Priest Frank A. Fry, Bishops Anton Compier (Holland) and J. Franklin Schofield (British Isles); Dr. Lawrence A. Brockway, Seventies Eric S. Rowe and Thomas E. Worth, and Patriarch Arthur Munslow.

The reunion began on Friday evening, and was followed by a full day's activity on Saturday. The business meeting was held on that day, and at its commencement telegrams bearing greetings and good wishes from Doris and Channing Oakman and from Apostle Don Lents and family were read. Fifteen delegates to General Conference were selected by ballot vote.

Brother Fry, who by action of the joint council remained mission president, nominated (with one exception) the mission officers who had served during the past year, and these were approved en bloc.

George Barrington, church school director, resigned because of ill health. Violet Worth was then elected to that office.

Sunday's services began with Communion, after which two counselors to the mission bishopric were set apart. They were Elders William Isaac of Enfield and Arthur Mayne of Northeast Manchester. Bishops A. T. Trapp, A. Compier, and J. F. Schofield officiated.

Speakers on Sunday were Brothers Brockway, Rowe, and Oakman, and Brother Oakman also preached on Friday and Saturday evenings.

A song service was arranged and conducted by Elder John Holmes.

On Monday evening, Elder Fry was the speaker.

Sister Elva Oakman taught women's classes. Sister Worth arranged children's classes. The men's and young people's classes were taken by various men of the ministry.

Reunion closed with a dedication service at which time Apostle Oakman gave counsel to the Saints.

Overseas visitors were Piete Labon of Holland; Alene Walters and Ed Guy of the United States; Sister Brockway; Jim Shute of London, Ontario; and Mr. and Mrs. C. Cockroft and family of the U. S. Air Force, stationed in Norfolk.

At the youth convention held from Tuesday to Friday of the week following reunion, attendance was increased over the past two years. Most of the reunion ministry remained to assist. Roy Oakman and James Barrington, Jr., were responsible for planning the convention.—Reported by LILY E. A. OAKMAN

TRACT REVIEW

Succession in Presidency and Authority

For a number of years we have been needing a brochure that adequately discusses the differences in authority existing between the Reorganized Church and the Mormon church with headquarters in Utah. At last one of our missionaries who has spent a number of years "on the firing line" in Utah has compiled this information examining both the spiritual and legal aspects of this authority.

Seventy Russell F. Ralston, during his several years as missionary and administrator in Utah, heard most of the arguments offered in support of the church in Utah. After much research and study he now presents the "proofs" of Mormon authority compared with the viewpoint of the Reorganized Church.

This sixty-four-page booklet cannot be fully appreciated without a serious and lengthy study of its contents. The main divisions of the pamphlet deal with the question of "succession" of presidents in the two churches and a discussion of the "fruits" of the two, but the contents page indicates how these in turn are divided into numerous sub-topics covering many additional points of controversy. A summary of conclusions appears on pages 60 and 61.

A careful study of this tract will do much to boost your faith in the position of the Reorganization. Copies may be secured through your book steward or directly from Herald Publishing House. Single copy price is 25 cents.

DIFFERENCE

There's a mighty big difference between good, sound reasons and reasons that sound good.

—Burton Hillis

CONCENTRATION

An important aspect of learning and mental growth is increasing the attention span. This is limited to a few seconds in a small child and increases with maturity. Genius seems to be closely related with ability to concentrate on selected aspects of a problem or subject. Most of us have not increased our original attention span notably and indulge in "day-dreaming" and "woolgathering." James (1:6,8) warns that a double-minded man is unstable in all his ways like "a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed."

The Scriptures lay on each of us the obligation of concentration. We are to work with an eye "single to the glory of God." Our love for God is to be with all our heart, soul, and mind. It is childish to say, "I can't keep my mind on the job." It is wicked to say, "God has required the impossible in such concentrated devotion."

We make our own mental road blocks. We can select that to which we shall give our attention. A man I knew was fond of saying, "I can resist anything but temptation." A good sailor can tack his boat into the wind. Our prayer should be for strength to match our tasks rather than for easier loads. The Inspired Version makes a significant contribution to the affirmation, "with God all things are possible," when it declares (Mark 10:26), "With men that trust in riches, it is impossible; but not impossible with men who trust in God."

TO THE POINT

It is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed, the deeper they burn.

—Robert Southey

BELATED

Regret is insight that comes a day too late.

—Wochenpost

PREPAREDNESS

Keep the faculty of effort alive in you by a little gratuitous exercise every day. That is, be systematically ascetic or heroic in little unnecessary points, do every day or two something for no other reason than that you would rather not do it, so that when the hour of dire need draws nigh, it may find you not unnerved and untrained to stand the test.

—William James

MEMO TO ALL NATIONS

We believe that all of the nations of the world, for realistic as well as spiritual reasons, must come to the abandonment of the use of force.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

David R. Hughes

AFTER YEARS OF ACTIVE service in the Christian Church, my companion and I, being students of the Bible, felt we were feeding on husks. In 1914 we began to search for a church that was in harmony with the Bible. We searched among the churches, including the Catholic and religious cults," said Brother David R. Hughes.

"Finally God led us to this gospel. Here we feasted on food divine.

"I was overwhelmed to read of the social program in the Doctrine and Covenants. I felt urged to sell my business and move to the Center Place. After consulting President Fred M. Smith and Bishop McGuire, we purchased land near Atherton, Missouri, and have lived there since 1918.

"We had a part in the Atherton Stewardship program which was one of the high points in our experiences in church work."

Brother Hughes is now a member of the Central Missouri Stake High Council. In the Atherton congregation, which he helped build up, he has been pastor and church school worker.

Before moving to Atherton, Brother Hughes was in the brick and cement block business in Illinois. He held a partnership in the Beardstown Concrete Construction Company.

In Atherton he has been active as a Boy Scouter and in the Atherton Levee District.

He was married to Sadie Thompson in 1905. They have two children, Ocie David and Muriel.

Two Elders Visit Blumenscheins

TWO ELDERS LEFT Independence August 29 to visit the Blumenscheins in Honduras after reports of Dr. John Blumenschein's serious illness.

The two—Jim Christenson of Independence and Edwin Browne of Lawrence, Kansas—are both close friends of the Blumenscheins. They traveled at their own expense and with the help of some friends.

The trip was made because of reports that a former illness of Dr. Blumenschein's had reoccurred and his condition was quite serious. The Blumenscheins have been on a self-supported medical mission to Honduras for over a year. They are holding church services there as well as treating the sick.

To get to the Blumenschein mission the two ministers had to travel by train, airplane, bus, boat, and then cover the last few miles afoot.

They took with them a tape recorder and cameras to record the visit with the medical missionaries. They also took some food and medical supplies for the use of the mission and some church school supplies for the classes taught by Mrs. Blumenschein and daughter Beth.

"We also want to survey the need of the mission and its success," Jim Christenson said before leaving. "A work car-van group is planning to visit the Blumenscheins later in the year, and we hope to determine if such a project is advisable. We also want to see if it would be desirable for anyone else to attempt the same type of project as the Blumenscheins have undertaken.

"The church and the church people have given us wonderful support and encouragement in this trip," Brother Christenson added, "and we appreciate that very much."

Good Information Means Good Legislation

The fifth in a series of editorials concerning General Conference

THE POWER OR WEAKNESS of any attempt at democratic government is determined by how well the membership is informed on the issues it is required to approve or reject.

Our church vouches for its faith in democratic procedures every two years when it meets to legislate its business by common consent. A great stride toward insuring an informed membership was made at the 1956 General Conference when the "legislative preparation sessions" were begun. These daily sessions were held to give all delegates and ex officii the opportunity to hear, discuss, and question, the business which would appear in the Conference business meetings.

The 1956 legislative preparation sessions were successful. They gave the delegates a better opportunity to be informed and to discuss the issues at hand than was possible in the larger meetings on the General Conference floor.

The main goal of the sessions is a better informed and more thoughtful delegate. The sessions have no voting function. Issues are explained and discussed so the delegate will understand them better when they are presented in the business sessions and he is asked to cast his vote.

This year the legislative preparations sessions will be repeated. The elders will meet in one group, high priests and Seventies in another. All other delegates will assemble in still another. These will be presided over by members of the Council of Twelve and an assistant of the First Presidency. Various general officers will participate throughout the week to share information on pending legislation. The sessions will be held for one hour each morning.

Early in the week the delegates and ex officii will discuss such things as rules and customs for doing Conference business; the next two days they will consider church appropriations, the budget, institutional operation, and reserves. Members of the Presiding Bishopric will visit the sessions and answer questions. Thursday and Friday the sessions will concern Conference business which has been presented or is expected to be presented. It is planned that on the last day members of the Joint Council will visit the various sessions and help discuss "The Basis of Appointments and Assignments."

A new method of disseminating information proposed by the Herald management and agreed to by the Presidency will be introduced this year at General Conference. A General Conference Bulletin will replace the former Conference Daily Edition of the Saints' Herald.

The new Bulletin will be a "newsletter" type of publication. It will be issued eight times during the Conference week and will probably be either four or six pages 8½ by 11 inches.

A pre-Conference issue of the Bulletin will carry all available Conference reports in one cover. This issue will probably run about sixty-four pages and will provide a wealth of information for the Conference delegates.

In making the change to the new Bulletin the First Presidency stated two goals: (1) complete and concise coverage of General Conference business sessions including official minutes and other activities, and (2) faster delivery to subscribers.

The daily issues of the Bulletin will contain no advertising, just straight news reporting. The new format will permit the reports to be mailed either first class or air mail. Previously the dailies were mailed second class. Subscribers who do not attend Conference this year should receive their daily issues as soon as they would a letter from a friend at Conference. Delegates and registered visitors at Conference will receive their pre-Conference reports and Daily Bulletin subscription as part of their registration packet.

The Daily Bulletin and the legislative preparation sessions are designed to help the delegates and members be informed of the issues before the Conference. However, the informed delegate will need a knowledge deeper than these channels are likely to provide. The book Rules and Resolutions, the Doctrine and Covenants, and other sources will provide such knowledge—the background to interpret and understand church business and how it is handled.

Now is a good time for all Conference delegates and all other church members to "bone up" on General Conference procedure. They will want to explore Rules and Resolutions and go through the Doctrine and Covenants references to General Conference (there are many—some interesting ones to start with are 17: 13, 17; 27: 4 c; 107: 46 c; 120: 1 c, 2 d; 125: 7; 126: 16).

Another valuable reference for study before this particular Conference is the Saints' Herald issue of August 11. It carries the "Letter of Instruction" written by Joseph Smith III in 1912 concerning succession in church presidency. (If you save your Heralds, you will find some valuable writings on General Conference by President F. Henry Edwards in a series of six editorials running from October 10, 1955, to February 6, 1956.)

Believers in the Church of Jesus Christ must also believe in their kingdom-building responsibility. This involves participation in church government. Know how that government works and be an intelligent, informed participant.

Official

Graceland College Day

Sunday, November 9, has been designated as Graceland College Day in keeping with General Conference action as well as established tradition of the church.

All branches and congregations are urged to keep the needs of Graceland College and its present and future students before the people during this day. These needs include both spiritual and financial matters. Therefore it will be appreciated if the people will present their prayers and offerings in behalf of our church institution which has a responsibility in training the young people for future service to the Master both through church work and in their chosen profession.

We commend the observance of Graceland College Day to all the church members and their friends, inviting them to contribute as they may be able to assist in this worthy cause.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Invitation to Visit Graceland

Graceland College officials have asked that an invitation be extended to all General Conference visitors to visit the college in Lamoni, Iowa, on their way home from General Conference. This will be an excellent opportunity for those who have never seen the college campus to stop by and inspect our church college.

Nursery Facilities at Conference

A nursery will be provided for children, two years through kindergarten age, at the General Conference. Because of space limitations it will be impossible to care for younger or older children with this service. The nursery will be located in the Stone Church Religious Education Building and will be open daily except Sunday, 8:15 a.m. to 12:00 noon, and from 1:30 p.m. to the close of the business sessions.

Milk and cookies will be served mid-morning and afternoon. A charge of fifteen cents a child each half day will be made.

Small babies may be cared for by mothers in the baby comfort room which will be provided. As no attendant will be on hand in this room, it will not be possible for mothers to leave their babies. This facility will be located on the lower level, immediately west of the stage.

These facilities are arranged and managed by ladies of the Center Stake women's department.

Confession and Forgiveness of Sins

Because of my early training in the Roman Catholic church, I have frequently been asked about the doctrine of forgiveness of sins by the priest in the confessional. I am asked to explain the promise of John 20: 23 which says, "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

In this article I am using the New Catholic Edition of the Bible which was copyrighted 1949-1950. The references may also be found in the version chiefly authorized among most Protestants, the King James Version, and in our own authorized version, the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures. In each case where the Bible is quoted the meaning is identical.

The Doctrine of Confession

The doctrine of confession and the forgiveness of sins is one of efficacy which was instituted in the church by the Lord himself and one which Latter Day Saints and many Protestants accept as of divine institution. The confusion is on interpretation rather than on scriptural injunction. In order to approach this matter with fairness to all convictions, we must trace the views of different generations leading to our own. We can then come to a clearer understanding of what our Roman Catholic neighbors believe as well as knowing what the Scriptures teach and what we believe about this subject.

Basis for This Belief

The basis for the Roman Catholic belief in auricular confession is found in John 20: 21-23, in the words of Jesus after his resurrection,

"... as the Father has sent me, I also send you." When he had said this, he breathed upon them, and said to them, Receive the Holy Spirit; whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them; and whose sins you shall retain, they are retained.

A further reference is in Matthew 16: 19, "And I will give thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (Matthew 16: 20 in Inspired Version). Again in Matthew 18: 18 this reference is almost identical.

Of particular significance are the following quotations of Roman Catholic authors:

Keys, a symbol of authority. Peter has the power to admit into the church and to exclude therefrom. Nor is he merely the porter; he has complete power within the church. "To bind and loose" seems to have been used by the Jews in a sense of "to forbid or to permit," but Matthew 18: 18, as well as the present context requires a more comprehensive meaning. In heaven God ratifies the decisions which Peter makes on earth, in the name of Christ.

(Note particularly that God ratifies only those decisions made in the name of Christ.—A.M.P.)—Footnote in New Catholic Edition of the Bible, Matthew 16: 19. A similar footnote explaining Matthew 18: 18 states, "To the apostles as a body is given a part of the power granted to Peter."

They believe that the power to forgive sins has descended through succeeding generations. "Beyond question the power to forgive sins did not and should not die with the apostles. Thus they insisted!"—Sins Are Forgiven in Confession—The Paulist Press, 1934, page 15.

A Great Controversy

Through the centuries the question of forgiveness and its nature, as well as what sins were and were not forgivable, has been a constant source of great controversy to the extent that it even contributed to the earliest schisms within the church. These were the Novatian of Rome and the Novatus of Carthage in A.D. 251. Novatian was a priest in the church at Rome in the third century who opposed Pope Cornelius in his decision that apostates could be absolved after due penance. Novatian believed they should be burned at the stake. A number within the church shared his views, and three country bishops chose and ordained him a bishop; he became the first anti-Pope. He was condemned in the Councils of Rome and Carthage and died a martyr's death between A.D. 254 and 260. The Novatians continued to refuse absolution from all grievous sins, demanding rebaptism of converts to their views and spreading from Spain to Asia Minor and North Africa under the name of Cathari or Puritans. They became just about extinct by the sixth century.

History of Repentance and Forgiveness

1. The pastor (A.D. 150) declared that "some teachers maintained no other repentance than that which takes place in descending the waters of baptism." However, he pleaded for one more opportunity for repentance following baptism.

2. Though very unpopular, his beliefs became gradually acceptable, first by Dionysius of Corinth, then by Clement of Alexandria. Still they held to the belief that although one could be forgiven a second time, three sins were unpardonable in this world: (1) murder, (2) apostasy, and (3) adultery. They urged the need for repentance and admonished those who were guilty of any of these three sins to pray for forgiveness and mercy, but they left them altogether in the hands of the Almighty, claiming no power to forgive these sins in the church.

3. Tertullian in A.D. 204 affirmed that there was only one more chance for forgiveness after baptism, but that no third opportunity for repentance was available.

4. Pope Callistus (A.D. 208-222) absolved adulterers and adulteresses but still refused absolution to apostates and murderers. He was severely criticized by Tertullian the Montanist for being as liberal as to forgive this sin to bring unpardonable sins down to two in number.

5. Origen (A.D. 184-253) declared and taught the doctrine of confession to priests, absolution, and renewal through repentance.

6. St. Cyprian in Council at Carthage (A.D. 251) recommended the reinstatement of apostates upon the necessary repentance. This was approved by Pope Cornelius, leaving only the sin of murder as unpardonable. This started the Novatian and Novatus schisms that declared apostasy unpardonable. Cyprian's recommendation was later turned down by Pope Stephen who argued that to reinstate apostates was against the traditions of the church. Yet Pope Stephen ordered the recognition of baptisms performed by heretical ministers as long as it was done in the name of the Trinity which Cyprian strongly opposed. Stephen further threatened Cyprian with excommunication. Pope Stephen's decision was ratified in the Council of Arles (A.D. 314) and in the Council of Nice (A.D. 325).

7. Pacian (fourth century) argued in favor of repentance, penance, and forgiveness through bishops. He was supported in his arguments by St. Ambrose, St. Augustine, and Gregory Nazianzen. These and others remind us of the difficulty to fully define this aspect of theology down through the years.

History of Confession

1. Probably the first historical evidence of public confession we have is recorded in Scripture: "And many of those who believed kept coming, and openly confessed their practices" (Acts 19: 18). This, however, was the bringing forth of fruits worthy of repentance as John the Baptist had required from the repentant (Matthew 3: 8; Matthew 3: 35, I.V.). The confession of their practices involved the burning of their books of magic according to this reference.

2. Most other biblical references to confession mean "to bear testimony of" or "to witness" and call upon the Christian to confess the Lord Jesus Christ before the world. However, there are two more Scriptures of importance that mention the confessing of sins. "Confess, therefore, your sins to one another, and pray for one another that you might be saved" (James 5: 16). And "If we acknowledge our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us" (I John 1: 9).

3. The Didache, an ancient Christian work (A.D. 120-150) speaks of public confession during the first half of the second century. This would be much like that mentioned in the preceding scriptural references.

4. Roman Catholics claim that St. Clement of Rome, whom some historians believe to be the same Clement mentioned by Paul in Philippians 3: 4, is attributed to have written a letter urging the saints to confess their sins to the priesthood in order to be reconciled to God, because there could be no confession or forgiveness in another world according to the second chapter of Ephesians.

5. The historian Gibbons states in his book, The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, "It cannot be denied that confession was one of the principal doctrines of Christianity for the first four centuries." However, Gibbons does not claim any interpretation of the doctrine of confession. Latter Day Saints agree that it was taught and that it should still be taught.

6. The first indication we have of auricular confession, as taught by Roman Catholics, is in the teachings of St. Cyprian in the year A.D. 250. Cyprian believed in and recommended confession to a priest. Yet his recommendation did not find widespread response.

7. History and Roman Catholic theology establish the favor of auricular confession at around A.D. 391. Not much is said about it before this date, including nothing being said about it by Jesus or the earliest apostles. Indeed, not much is clear about the doctrine until the thirteenth century.

8. The Fourth Lateran Council (A.D. 1215) commanded annual confession as the minimum and as essential. Still more was to be said to more clearly define the church's stand through intervening years.

9. The Councils of Trent (A.D. 1545-1563) were called upon for two specific purposes: to define the teachings and doctrines of the church because of the growing pressures of Protestantism, and to legislate against the heresies and abuses creeping in among the clergy and laity. This nineteenth ecumenical council of the Roman Catholic church attempted a definition of auricular confession and absolution and (1) required confession of all mortal sins (the greater sins of the spirit which lead to eternal condemnation) and (2) advised the confession of venial (lesser) sins which were committed after baptism or since the last confession. Their decrees were confirmed by Pope Pius IV on January 26, 1564, by the Papal Bull, Benedictus Deus. Remember, this was as late as the sixteenth century!

Roman Catholic Admissions

1. Roman Catholic theologians admit that the modern doctrine of penance is an evolution of the words of Jesus in John 2: 20, 21-23). Penance to a Roman Catholic is a sacrament which involves repentance, confession to a priest, contrition and penitential satisfaction, a firm desire to amend one's life, and absolution or priestly and divine forgiveness. Following the confession there is generally some act of penance demanded.

It is a grave injustice to Roman Catholics to say that they must pay the priest for forgiveness. In most of my lifetime as a Catholic and my many visits to the confessional, I never was asked for payment for absolution nor do I know of any who have been in our time. Perhaps this is confused with the sale of Tetzels' indulgences in 1514. However, the church does not accept this as a practice today, although it still believes in indulgences as a part of the doctrine of penance.

An indulgence is a sacrifice for purgatorial sins and generally takes the form of repeating part of or all of the Rosary or certain prescribed prayers at the time of confession. Sometimes the Rosary is repeated by the confessor a number of times, depending upon the intensity of his sins and the intention of the priest who hears the confession. Others spend a lifetime at this sacrifice in cloisters and monasteries suppressing the desires of the flesh that the spirit within man may be elevated to a place of divine communion and approval. Others have been known, mostly in years gone by, to punish and even torture their bodies or each other in the meeting of the requirements of an indulgence. Present day Roman Catholics may also receive an indulgence of three hundred days for at least one fourth hour of reading the Scriptures, according to a decree of Pope Leo XIII. Earlier in their history Catholics burned at the stake any who would read the Scriptures or even possess a copy. An indulgence of three hundred days represents the amount of days one shall be free from the mythical purgatory where he must often spend up to thousands of years to be purged of all his sins. A further definition of an indulgence would be too extensive a study for this article.

2. Roman Catholic theology further declares, "Sins are only forgiven according to the merits and disposition of the penitent" (Sins Are Forgiven in Confession, page 20).

3. "The priest can neither forgive nor retain unless he knows whether or not you are worthy."—Ibid., page 20.

4. "Sins can only be forgiven when there is a contrite and humble heart, a firm purpose to avoid such sins in the future, and a promise to avoid the occasions that lead one into such sin."—Ibid., page 21. (These last three points are a far cry from the old medieval concepts once held by the same church and reported earlier in this article. Indeed, it is commendable growth in theological thinking.—A.M.P.)

5. However, much of the growth of this modern concept is driven into oblivion by the shallow thinking that "every Christian considers he has the power to forgive sins in the sacrament of baptism. For instance, let a man be sick unto death. He wishes to be baptized. Any man or woman has the power to baptize him. The words are said and the water poured. What happens? Every Christian believes that the sick man's sins are forgiven him and if he should die then, he goes straight to heaven" (Ibid., page 18). (Indeed, not every Christian knows that, nor does every Christian believe that this statement is doctrinally sound and scriptural.—A.M.P.)

The last quoted reference, or conditional absolution as Roman Catholics refer to it, does away with two very important and scriptural teachings: (1) the many references to baptism by immersion, which Catholic theologians admit was the practice of the early Christian church, and (2) the many references to the need for the authority of priesthood and its divine call (Romans 10: 13-15; Hebrews 5: 1-4; John 15: 16, and many others). The Scriptures are clear on the condemnation for usurping of priesthood authority which is what would be done if anyone were to baptize the dying believer to grant conditional absolution. It appears that all the fuss about the priestly authority to forgive sins is made void by this doctrine which has no scriptural authority no matter how much the Scripture may be twisted out of proportion. Why repent and receive priesthood ministry if one is permitted to have absolution at the time of death from anyone who is a Christian?

We are not here arguing against confession and forgiveness of sins but are supporting it as divinely instituted. We have attempted to trace its history through to the shallow belief which presently drives all that is beautiful and efficacious into oblivion by the lack of need for divine authority at the time of death. It is difficult to believe in such a conditional doctrine. Indeed, the Scriptures are clear that the condition by which one comes to Christ is only through the condition of repentance. We now move into the Latter Day Saint viewpoint concerning this very important question.

Latter Day Saint Views

Penance comes from the Latin word paenitentia, and it means repentance. In the light of this definition we believe in penance. However, not in the light of Roman Catholic complications.

To "bind" and "loose," as recorded in our basic Scripture, is a formula for rabbinical theology meaning to "prohibit" and to "permit." It is both legislative and judicial in nature. Roman Catholics agree with this according to the New Catholic Edition of the Bible but proceed to interpret it in a different light, and admittedly, for a more comprehensive meaning. They have to, or they will lose much of their authority. We accept it as it is defined in its original formula, believing that the power of godliness is manifest in the ordinances and in the authority of the priesthood to perform these ordinances and sacraments (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3). Further, we believe that the judicial power of the elders, bishops, stake high councils, and the Standing High Council in courts are essential to fulfill the law which states that if the person refuses to repent he shall be cast out. These judicial courts exist chiefly to bring ministry to the erring, not excommunication; although that is sometimes necessary, but it is only the last resort. These courts are entered only with much prayer and earnestness to do the will of the Father. Although we accept the fact that they have the power to bind or to loose, we believe also that all forgiveness rests with God and that these priesthood members have power to act only as they do so in his name and in his Spirit. Any injustice surely would not receive divine ratification.

Baptism

There is the power of forgiveness within the church. Its sacraments reveal such as the case. Note Peter's reply to the inquirers on the day of Pentecost, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins" (Acts 2: 38); Ananias' reply to Saul of Tarsus, "And now why do you delay? Get up and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on his name" (Acts 22: 16); and the words of Jesus, "He who believes and is baptized shall be saved, but he who does not believe shall be condemned" (Mark 16: 16; Mark 16: 15, I.V.). This authority to bind or loose is resident in the sacrament of baptisms. Catholics will agree with us, though many Protestants disagree in spite of all the Scripture we quote.

The Communion

This power of forgiveness continues in the extension of the baptismal covenant or in the Communion of the Lord's Supper. There is controversy in the religious world about the efficacy of the Lord's Supper. Let us quote it from Matthew 26: 26-28 (Matthew 26: 22-24, I.V.):

Jesus took bread and blessed and broke, and gave it to his disciples, and said, Take and eat; this is my body! And taking a cup, he gave thanks and gave it to them, saying, All of you drink of this; for this is my blood of the new covenant, which is being shed for many unto the forgiveness of sins.

(The inspired Version stresses that it is shed for as many as believe on his name.) Surely, if one remembers the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, there will be renewal unto repentance and forgiveness in proportion to repentance. One cannot really look upon the cross of Christ without repenting. Where there is true repentance there is forgiveness. Again the "blood which is shed unto the forgiveness of sins" is effectual. There is no need for controversy, merely a need for self-examination and genuine repentance. We believe that the priesthood have the authority to bless and serve the emblems of the Lord's Supper (Doctrine and Covenants 17:22, 23) and that priesthood authority is essential in this sacrament, but we do not accept the principle of Roman Catholic "transubstantiation" which says the emblems actually become the living and transformed body and blood of Christ to the partaker. We do not sacrifice him anew on the altar of Communion but remember his sacrifice made so many years ago in his atoning death.

Administration

The ordinance of administration to the sick can carry forgiveness also. Here again priesthood is essential; the ordinance carries with it the power of godliness only as it is done in his name.

Is any one among you sick? Let him bring in the Presbyters of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith will save the sick man, and the Lord will raise him up, and if he be in sins, they shall be forgiven him.—James 5: 14, 15.

Very definitely there is within the church the power for forgiveness as ordained of God. We believe that he has endowed the members of his priesthood with no powers unto themselves, but that he does recognize all that is done in his name, by his authority, and in his spirit, supported by Scripture, and in the calling of men to the priesthood according to the gifts and callings of God unto them. Contemporary revelation suggests, "all shall be fulfilled, whether by mine own voice, or by the voice of my servants, it is the same; . . . the truth abideth for ever and ever" (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8).

Repentance and Reconciliation

The Holy Scriptures outline the process of repentance and reconciliation when we consider the Scriptures as a whole rather than fragmentary. Note the process as outlined in Matthew 18: 15-20:

But if thy brother sin against thee, go and show him his fault between thee and him alone. If he listens to thee thou hast won thy brother. But if he do not listen to thee, take with thee one or two more so that on the word of two or three witnesses every word may be confirmed. And if he refuse to hear them, appeal to the church, but if he refuse to hear even the church let him be to thee as the heathen and the publican.

Note that the steps involve the following:

- (1) Going to talk over the problem with the offender.
- (2) Taking witnesses if he refuses the first attempt at reconciliation.
- (3) Appealing to the church and its priesthood who possess the authority of priesthood if the offender refuses the first two attempts at reconciliation.
- (4) Separating the offender because of his lack of desire for reconciliation.

We follow this injunction explicitly. The democratic process of reconciliation is again underscored in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 22, 23, and again in Mosiah 11: 111-117 of the Book of Mormon. All three scriptural authorities of the Latter Day Saints agree. This is not just a coincidence, but the order of Deity manifest to every generation that would hear his voice. These Scriptures reveal clearly the nature of repentance, the priesthood's jurisdiction, the responsibility of each member and the assurance of forgiveness on the condition of repentance. Yes, we believe in a continued forgiveness of sins.

Forgiveness

Unlike Tertullian of A.D. 204, who would go no further than allowing a second chance for repentance and forgiveness, Latter Day Saints follow the admonition of Jesus, in response to Peter's question, "Then Peter came up to him and said, Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? Up to seven times? Jesus said unto him, I do not say to thee seven times, but, seventy times seven" (Matthew 18: 21, 22). In Luke 17: 3, 4 this same admonition is given with the stipulation that you shall forgive when there is repentance.

Further, we believe that the Lord has made provisions for forgiveness as often as there is genuine repentance and that the only sins for which there is no forgiveness in this world or in the world to come are murder (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 6) and sinning against the Holy Spirit (Matthew 12: 31; Matthew 12: 26, I.V., and Doctrine and Covenants 83: 6). There is no forgiveness for these sins and for the sin of accepting and then completely denying the priesthood, for to do so would indeed be to sin against the Holy Spirit. Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7 suggests that where there is repentance for all sins but these unpardonable ones there shall be forgiveness, but where there is no repentance "they are to be cast out."

Repentance and forgiveness of sins are essential in becoming a member of the Church of Jesus Christ as recorded in many scriptural references, particularly Mosiah 11: 136-141:

Therefore, I say unto you, that he that will not hear my voice, the same shall ye not receive into my church, for him I will not receive at the last day. Therefore I say unto you, Go; and whosoever transgresseth against me, him shall ye judge according to the sins which he has committed; and if he confess his sins before thee and me, and repenteth in the sincerity of his heart, him shall ye forgive, and I will forgive him also; yea, and as often as my people repent, will I forgive them their trespasses against me. And ye shall also forgive one another your trespasses: for verily I say unto you, He that forgiveth not his neighbor's trespasses, when he says that he repents, the same hath brought himself under condemnation. Now I say unto you, Go, and whosoever will not repent of his sins, the same shall not be numbered among my people: and this shall be observed from this time forward.

Further reading of this reference reveals the outcome of compliance to this admonition, "And they began again to have peace and to prosper exceedingly in the affairs of the church; walking circumspectly before God; receiving many, and baptizing many" (Mosiah 11: 147).

Conclusion

In the final analysis only God is judge, and all judging authorized in his church must be in his name and toward the establishment of his purposes that man may become "immortal and have eternal life" (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 23). Upon no man is placed the authority to be the eternal judge, "And when he has come, he will convict the world of sin" (John 16: 8); "Revenge is mine, and I will repay them in due time" (Deuteronomy 32: 35); "Man shall not smite, neither shall he judge; for judgment is mine, saith the Lord, and vengeance is mine also, and I will repay" (Mormon 4: 25); "For those outside God will judge" (I Corinthians 5: 13).

That he has placed among us the power of forgiveness is underscored in the Lord's Prayer in the words, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us." We are indeed happy and grateful that God has made possible so many scriptural supports to the authenticity of his church and that there is very definite provision made for continued penance or repentance, confession, penitential satisfaction, and absolution or divine forgiveness. The fact that so much of the confusion still exists reveals another reason why he moved to restore his great eternal church against which the very gates of hell cannot and will not prevail.

"The truth abideth for ever and ever."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8.

The Car Pool

Newspapers report that the owner of a New York village taxi company offers free transportation to any church for anyone in that community.

On Sundays many of us attend church in half-filled cars. If we checked with people who cannot attend church because of distance or old age, we'd find many of them willing to accept a ride. In some instances nonmember neighbors would be willing to attend our church if we offered them the chance.

Advocating the utilization of empty car space in order to increase church attendance is not new, but it is still important. It may be the means of gaining new members for your branch.

First Older Youth Missionary Caravan

Photograph by Bill Clow

THE FIRST OLDER YOUTH Missionary Caravan left Independence, June 28, for Columbus, Nebraska. After a short worship together, the Caravanners headed toward their destination. Plans were made for a few stops at historical spots such as the Mormon Bridge at Omaha, Winter Quarters, and the Mormon Pioneer Cemetery. The well-known Boys' Town was also toured.

A fine fellowship was enjoyed with the Saints at Fremont, Nebraska, where the young people stopped for supper. A ministry of music was given through informal singing.

Arriving in Columbus, the Caravanners were most graciously and heartily welcomed by the Saints. Homes were opened for the girls to sleep in; the boys stayed in the church basement. Meals were prepared and served in the basement by the Caravanners themselves. Dorothy Gibbs and Lynda Yarrington were cooks.

The first Sunday's services—opening worship, all church school classes, and the eleven o'clock service—were conducted by the members of the Caravan. Brother Herbert Lively, music director for the Caravan, was the speaker.

Canvassing began that afternoon, and the young people got a taste of missionary work in the church by inviting the citizens to the first sermon of the series that night. Brother Arthur F. Gibbs, district president and missionary for the Nebraska District, was the series speaker. "Hear Our Story" was the theme of the illustrated lectures.

Each day was filled with morning and afternoon canvassing, chats, devotionals, recreation, the nightly illustrated lecture, and fellowship with the Saints. The Caravanners participated in the services through music, prayers, being in charge, hostessing, and caring for many other details. Each had a major responsibility to carry out in the Caravan.

Special activities of the week included swimming, a district picnic, a special Caravan prayer service, a cookout, an outdoor fellowship service with the branch, several mixers during the week, and a "This Is Your Life" program for Brother Gibbs Friday evening after the sermon. On Saturday a car-wash project financially helped the branch. The afternoon was spent in preparing the church for Sunday.

Saints from Fremont, Grand Island, Lincoln, Norfolk, and Clearwater were invited to attend on specific nights to help support the series.

The film "Other Sheep" was shown on a Lincoln television station late Sunday night, June 29. It was also shown Thursday evening during the series. Twenty-two nonmembers were in attendance on that night, which was the high for the week. During the follow-up work after the caravan left, the members of one family expressed their desire to be baptized.

Several favorable contacts were made in the community. All in all, both Caravanners and congregation found a good portion of the Spirit as they worked together to make the week's work a success. Members of the branch supported the series enthusiastically each night throughout the week.

The last Sunday was filled with good experiences. The day started with a baptismal and confirmation service; Communion and the regular eleven o'clock preaching hour followed. Christ's spirit of love and fellowship was present in abundance as the Caravanners started on their return journey. All were strengthened to new convictions in the joy and divinity of the work of the Church of Jesus Christ.

Those participating in the Older Youth Caravan were Berneice Anderson, Barbara Brown, Cliff Carpenter, Fred Clark, Bill and Sandy Clow, Pam Caviness, Arthur, Dorothy and Judy Gibbs, Herbert Lively, Rogene Rawlines, Wilma Redfield, Virginia Rose, Roger and Lynda Yarrington.

Our Church

WHAT BETTER WAY could I begin this address than by quoting a statement made by one of the great men of the Christian Church, Alexander Campbell? He said:

Do not . . . the practical result of all creeds, reformations, and improvements and the expectations and longings of society—warrant the conclusion that some new revelation, or some new development of the revelation of God must be made, before the hopes and expectations of all true Christians can be realized, or Christianity save and reform the nations of this world? We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things.—The Christian System (1839).

Members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints believe that their church has this old gospel, sustained by the ancient order of things—in fact, we believe that our church represents the same organization and has in it the same offices that Christ had in his church when he was here on earth.

Before we start our discussion of my church, let me tell you how much I appreciate this opportunity to talk to you. I am not a minister by profession; my field is in the development and training of management. In the sense that I have a job whereby I earn my living, working with my church is an avocation; but, in reality, it is much more than a hobby.

To say that religion has great meaning to me is not an unusual statement to you men—you who recognize the place of religious conviction in a busy, sometimes uninterested world. Many of you undoubtedly hold offices in your local church, serving in a manner known as "laymen."

However, it may surprise you to learn that the majority of the administrative and pastoral responsibilities of the church to which I belong are held by men who earn their living in the business world much the same as you do—as doctors, lawyers, salesmen, factory workers, engineers, and the hundred and one other occupations by which Americans earn their livelihood. These are men who believe that working for Christ is important enough to give almost every spare moment of their free time to furthering the cause of Jesus Christ according to their best abilities.

Here tonight are representatives of the great religious movements of the day: Protestants, Catholics, and Jews. The group I represent is part of the "miscellaneous" percentage of religious statistics. We are a small group (our membership totals approximately 160,000), but our beliefs are held to so strongly that perhaps the whole religious movement in the United States has been affected in one manner or another. Henry Wallace, former vice-president of the United States, once said when referring to the impact of the Book of Mormon (one of the books we believe helps, along with the Bible, to explain God's purposes for us), "It reached perhaps only one per cent of the United States, but it affected this one per cent so powerfully and lastingly that all the people of the United States have been affected." We will talk about some of these beliefs.

The Gospel Restored

Religious history is divided into these periods for us: the time when Christ's church was actually organized (when he was here on earth), then the Apostasy (when Christ's church was taken from the earth), the Reformation movement (as started by Luther and others when they "protested" practices within the Catholic church and which developed into modern Protestantism), and then the "Restoration," the time when Christ's church was established again on earth.

You may feel that this statement is a bold claim. It is. This is probably the best point at which to begin a discussion of our religious beliefs.

We believe that our church is the church that Jesus Christ established when he was here on earth and was "restored" in the nineteenth century, known to us as the "latter days." Christ did have a church, you know. His statement, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matthew 16: 19), is but one of the several biblical references to a specific religious organization. Christ was the chief cornerstone of the church, and he still is today. No mortal man has ever attained the perfection which would enable him to claim the powers of the son of God.

Many Protestant movements have within their organization deacons, teachers, and elders. But can you think of one that has all these officers: prophets, apostles, bishops, high priests, evangelists, seventies, elders, patriarchs, priests, deacons, and teachers? Christ's church did. And these offices continued in his church after his death, resurrection, and ascension. We have these offices in our church today. The general term we use to refer to them is "priesthood." These offices are mentioned in the King James Version of the Bible as part of Christ's church.

You probably are wondering how this church was "restored" as we claim it to be.

The Work of Joseph Smith

A young man, Joseph Smith, decided to take literally a statement in James 1: 5, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." While praying he was instructed by a divine personage that he was to be instrumental in restoring God's church to the earth again—the church which had lost its authority at the time corruption, evil, and greed crept into it. This is known to us as the period of "apostasy."

If you have doubt about Joseph Smith's hearing a voice, let me remind you of some of the men in biblical history who needed—and received—the revelation of God: Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Samuel, John the Baptist, and Paul. Different men in different times heard a voice from heaven. You and I accept the experiences of these men as part of our spiritual heritage.

The Doctrine and Covenants

Who of us, believing that Jesus lives, would presume that he could not make himself known today if he wished to do so?

This is another of our distinctive beliefs: present day revelation. But God doesn't speak to us while we are in a trance, or while dancing madly about or screaming at the top of our lungs. We feel that God works in an orderly fashion—just as he has throughout all history. We seek him in an orderly way and are answered in like manner.

Just as the Bible is a record of the religious, political, and sociological events of days of old, our Doctrine and Covenants is a record of the significant religious and moral events of our day. In this book are the legislative actions passed on in the theodemocratic manner we use to guide us all in our actions as a church body: approval by a majority of the church electoral body. It also contains a record of significant modern revelations received for the guidance of the church and its people.

The Book of Mormon

One of the fundamental books we use to aid us in the understanding of God and his purposes for us is the Book of Mormon. This we believe to be a record of the activities of the ancient inhabitants of America, just as the Bible is a history of the ancient people of Palestine and the neighboring lands. The Book of Mormon tells, in much the same language as the Bible uses, of the happenings to three colonies that came at different times from eastern Bible lands to the Western Hemisphere. Just like the Bible, the Book of Mormon tells of the migrations, settlements, civil wars, kings, judges, prophets, and priests, their ups and downs, and the eventual decline of these groups. The high point of the book is the visit of Christ to this continent after the completion of his ministry in Palestine.

Our belief in the Book of Mormon is the one outstanding thing that separates us from many of the other religious denominations in the world. Our belief in modern day revelation, though considered blasphemy in 1830, is widely accepted today.

Where did Joseph Smith get the Book of Mormon? From the plates on which the ancient records of the inhabitants of this hemisphere were written and which were hidden in the ground. Joseph Smith was told by a heavenly messenger of their location. The records were written in a language he did not know, and it was only through the inspiration of God that he was able to translate the book into the English language.

That sounds like a fantastic statement, does it not? Many people continue to be amazed when we tell them that God's Spirit enabled a mortal man to look at the lines of a book written in a language he could not read and then dictate the literal translation of it in English. The Book of Mormon is not written in the beautiful literary style found in the King James Version of the Bible. But fifty-four of the ablest scholars of their day did not spend three years translating and polishing the Book of Mormon into the language of the day as was done with the King James Version of the Bible. If a literal translation had been made of the manuscripts of, say, Peter the fisherman, undoubtedly the writings would have been those of a crude and rough person—for though he was a man of God, he was, first of all, a man.

As more and more information is discovered about the ancient inhabitants of this continent, the more plausible the story becomes. As a matter of fact, as the archaeological and sociological history of the ancient inhabitants of this continent unfolds, it becomes increasingly apparent that these people actually were visited by a white divine person, who promised to return at a later date. The ruins which are being unearthed point to a type of religious organization comparable to that of the church Christ established when he was in Palestine.

The Reorganization

When the restorer of Christ's church, Joseph Smith, was assassinated by a mob, the growth of the church was temporarily retarded. At this time several factions broke off from the original group and started churches of their own. The most well known of these is the colony established by Brigham Young, the individual who taught the doctrine of polygamy. This group departed from many of the basic beliefs of the church and, as a result of a number of court decisions, has been legally separated from any binding connection with the original group. The original group given title by law to all records and properties is known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This church has never preached nor taught the doctrine of polygamy.

In order further to distinguish the church from those who had departed from its original teachings, the prefix, "reorganized" was added to the name of the church. It is God's church restored in the last days.

The Financial System

We also adhere to the principle of tithing, based on a belief that we are stewards of the gifts given us by God, including time, talents, and physical assets; and that we are accountable to him according to the manner in which we use these gifts. We make what we call a "First Tithing Statement," which, in a sense, lists all our basic assets. After that, we pay to the church only a tenth of our increase, over and above this first accounting, after deducting all necessary expenses. For instance, a man who earned fifty dollars, but who used up forty dollars for necessary expenses, would pay only a tenth of his increase, or one dollar in tithing. Of course, we will accept larger donations, and our members also contribute to the support of their local branches. The monies given in tithing payments go to support the operation of the General Church with headquarters in Independence, Missouri, and our missionary efforts throughout the world.

Principal Beliefs

In summary, these are the distinctive beliefs of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: our organizational make up; the fact that our full-time ministers are not paid a salary commensurate to that received by other religious denominations but are paid a minimal family allowance, and our other ministers are not paid at all, serving voluntarily without thought of receiving pay; our belief in present day revelation; our practice of recording many of these revelations in a modern journal—our Doctrine and Covenants; our belief in the use of the spiritual gifts referred to in the Bible; our belief that the Book of Mormon is a record of the ancient inhabitants of this hemisphere, and that this book helps us understand the workings of God (it does not replace the Bible but supplements our understanding of it); our unique understanding of the law of stewardship; and our belief in a Christ-headed society, "Zion," which we believe will result when the spiritual lives of people the world over are ready for it.

This has been a hurried trip through the beliefs of our church. I trust that it has been informative. Thank you for your attention and for this opportunity to exercise two great American beliefs not restricted by code or creed—the freedom to speak and the privilege to worship God in a manner each individual must determine for himself.

The Day the Devil Smiled

The story is told that the Devil was selling his tools to the highest bidder. They were on display with the price marked on each item—all except one. This tool, by far the best looking and most expensive, contained no tag. The Devil was asked why this was not like the rest. He replied, "That tool is discouragement. I use it on those who are trying to do good. It is priceless. It is not for sale because it is my best tool. With it I win those who work for God."

LUCIFER FROWNED. He was unhappy and bored. There was plenty of sin in the world, and there were sufficient sinners to handle all of it. Hate, greed, selfishness, intolerance, brutality—all of these vices were in abundance—and it was easy to entice followers, yet, he was bored. There was nothing to challenge him, nothing to test his skill. He was tired of merely the sinners sinning. He needed stimulation.

Recollections finally brought to his mind a man. Now what was his name . . . oh, yes, Job. Now there was a challenge! That job took plenty of doing. Then he remembered unhappily that he had lost him. Too bad, because he did a beautiful job on him. However, maybe today was different. People's way of living had changed greatly since the days of Job. The tensions, the frantic paces which men sought to keep—all these were added fuel to his fires. Well, he thought, there surely must be someone somewhere in the world who can challenge me to do my best, get me out of this rut, end my boredom. I still have one tool, that never fails to work. I'll call a meeting tonight of my staff and see what can be done."

Then he sat back and rested awhile, still frowning.

IN POASTHEIGHTS, ILLINOIS, the day had been hot and humid—one of those early September days when fall seemed far away. Now and then clouds would appear in the sky, full of promising showers, but to the dismay of all they would just as suddenly pass on, and the heat would return.

At 10 Carver Road, Reverend Able Smithers sat at his desk, his head resting on his hands. Today had been full of problems. First there had been the phone call in the early morning hours. Mrs. Cassidy had called him to come right over. Her husband was drunk and a family brawl was in progress. As he had walked into the lovely home and seen the terrified look on the faces of the children, anger marked his countenance. "Aren't you ashamed for behaving like this, when the Lord has given you such blessings?" he had admonished them. After two hours of talking, the couple had quieted down, agreed to try again. The pastor had prayed with them and left.

Then came the hospital visits. Folks made such vain promises to God when they were sick and needed a physical blessing, only to throw them aside when health returned. He grew weary of hearing them.

The afternoon was unusually full of office work, correspondence to be answered, decisions to be made, phone calls to answer, complaints to be heard, counseling to be given. Underneath it all was the world condition. Nations stood on the brink of another total war. He wondered if brotherhood and peace ever would come. Had religion actually gained a foothold in the world, or had the idealistic dream of world peace been only the fool's dream down through the years?

Reverend Smithers was discouraged. Anticipation warmed Lucifer's heart as he thought that maybe here was a man to challenge him. Maybe, just maybe, he wasn't as strong as Job!

AT SEVEN THIRTY in the evening the board members met to discuss the budget and financial needs. All were present. Warily the pastor faced them. "Let's get this over in a hurry," one spoke up. "I've promised to take the family to a movie tonight." The other nodded agreement. It was evident that the meeting was a bother to them all. The pastor struggled to keep his temper. Well, he thought, if the church business was so trivial why bother? Outwardly, however, he remained calm and proceeded with the business at hand.

It was not an easy task trying to keep the church out of the red financially, especially when the members expected so much for so little. He doubted that tonight would be any different from the other meetings when they had bickered about meeting the budget, repairing the parsonage, raising the fund for the poor. For nearly ten years now he had tried to do his very best to preach stewardship, to teach tithing and the giving of offerings. He had preached love and brotherhood and pointed to Christ as the living example for all men. He had given generously of himself as he labored among the people, visiting with them, praying with them, marrying their young and burying their dead, trying always to comfort and uplift the fallen. But somehow he had seen the wall of pride and selfishness build up around those to whom he ministered.

This last week had been unusually bad. Members who had always been so faithful had strayed. Gossip and bickering were much in evidence among them, especially the ladies, and the young people had become rebellious and hard to handle. He felt a complete failure, but somehow he could not discover where he had failed.

As he had felt they would, the board members rejected his new proposal, and one by one they left the room. The meeting was over. As he sat there, tears of futility filled his eyes. He felt completely dejected and alone. He was so very tired. The pressure and tensions of daily cares and burdens poured over his soul, and underneath it all ran the still small voice, "And for what?"

FINALLY HE ROUSED himself to leave the church. Quietly he opened the door to his home. In the stillness he heard sobbing and pausing beside the bedroom door, he knew that his wife was giving vent to her feelings. She, too, was tired—tired of trying to make ends meet, of stretching the food budget, of being pleasant and kind to all regardless of her own personal feelings, of correcting the children, of teaching them to be such shining examples that somehow the people always expected ministers' children to be. He knew that he should try to console her, to comfort her, to pray with her. But tonight his very being was crushed, and he could do nothing.

He entered the guest room and readied himself for bed, feeling more and more the load upon his soul. Finally, as he turned off the light, his eyes closed wearily, and with fatigue covering his body, he slept. He couldn't even pray! And the Devil smiled.

Nauvoo in Perspective

FLYING FOURTEEN THOUSAND FEET above historic Nauvoo, Illinois, gives perspective to places and events of one hundred and fourteen years ago. A unique horseshoe bend in the Mississippi River is the setting for the most populous city in Illinois in 1844. As our plane traveled from Chicago, Illinois, to Dallas, Texas, it flew to a point east of Burlington, Iowa, then turned south paralleling the famous river. So distinctive is the setting of this city that the eye of the observer is drawn to a sharp prominence of land which diverts the mighty Mississippi River from its southward course and forces it into a nearly one hundred and eighty-degree bend before the land contour again permits it to resume its course toward the Gulf of Mexico.

Nauvoo lies in the center of the land as the river flows in an arc around it. Such was the beautiful setting for a God-fearing city. Carthage appears close to Nauvoo from this height. It seems difficult to believe that a gulf of animosity could arise between peoples who live in such close physical

Praise Him Continually

Psalm 34: 1

There were two sisters who both loved God and were busy in the work of forwarding his kingdom. Although they worked and strove seemingly for the same goal, yet there was a difference—a difference that only God could see, for God can see the heart. Their friends would say, "Isn't it wonderful, the work they are doing for good? Surely their reward will be great."

But one day a great tragedy came to the community. Two boys were lost in a near-by lake; they were the sons of these two good women. It was indeed a sad day, and many sought to comfort the stricken parents.

In the darkness of that night, two women knelt to pray. One said, "O God, Almighty One, thou knowest my poor heart. Grant me the comfort of thy hand that I may continue to give thee praise." And the Spirit of God entered her heart and soul and gave her the strength to rise—renewed and ready to carry on. Even in sorrow she praised her God.

The other woman knelt and raised her voice in anguish, "O God, why must this sorrow be mine? I have worked for you—how could you let this happen to me? What have I done to deserve this?" When she arose, God's hand was there, his Spirit near, but no comfort filled her heart. It was too full of bitterness.

proximity. Quincy and Keokuk are in easy view. But travel was difficult in those days. Slowness of travel and communications and misunderstanding of the ideals and goals of a righteously striving people may have contributed to the fears of those who should have been good neighbors.

We live today in an age of rapid travel and communications. Let us work to the end that we promote understanding of righteous ideals at a pace in keeping with our times. Our "neighbors" beyond rivers and oceans can be reached in the same length of time today that it took young Joseph to make that last arduous journey from Nauvoo to Carthage when the mode of transportation was with a horse. In this age of rapid travel, let us not forget our commission to "warn [invite] our neighbor" no matter where he or she may be.

The Women of the Church Prepare for Conference

Eric, Nancy, and David help their mother, the author, prepare food.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of 1958 is just around the corner. The finishing touches are being put on the beautiful Conference Chamber. You stand in awe as you step through the doorway and view its beauty and immensity. You think, Surely this is a worthy tabernacle for the dwelling place of the Spirit of Christ.

You no longer enter the Conference Chamber through crude, unfinished doorways. At the last Conference, you thrilled at the sight of the beautiful front foyer as it glistened in its splendor of polished stone and glass. This year, both the east and west entrances have been completed in becoming beauty. As I write this article, the men of the Auditorium crew toil in the hot Missouri sun to landscape the entrances that they may add to the beauty of the building.

How fortunate are we who live in the day that the church moves ahead in the completion of this magnificent structure! We are challenged by the thought that it has been made possible through the sacrifices of past generations, and that we, too, must make our sacrifices that the Auditorium may be completed in its entirety—that its beauty may shine forth from Zion.

Other preparations are under way to complete the plans for Conference. The officers and the department heads breathed a sigh of relief as they completed the agenda of the Conference program and saw it go to press. Now they are at work on the details of each service.

The women of the Laurel Club are busy working over Conference menus and advance preparations to serve the many thousands of guests from October 5 to 12. And the good hostesses of Independence are busy scrubbing and scouring, waxing and polishing that your stay in their homes may be comfortable and relaxing.

As I make preparations for Conference this year, I cannot help remembering the lovely Hawaiian guests we had in our home last Conference time—Sister Amelia Directo and her daughter, Louise Clark, of Wahiawa, Oahu. They revolutionized my cooking habits! Both are excellent cooks, and Louise specializes in the preparation of freezer meals. Having a husky husband and five children for whom to cook, Louise found that she could spend most of her day in the kitchen, just preparing meals for her family if she did it the old-fashioned way. But with today's modern conveniences of home freezers, automatic ovens, and instant heat on the four top burners, why should we do it the old-fashioned way?

Why not go on a big cooking spree one day a week, filling the freezer with wholesome home-cooked meals? It's surprising how much time this leaves during the rest of the week for other phases of home and community life.

Before Louise left Hawaii for Conference, she prepared enough freezer meals to last her family the six weeks she was to be gone. She even prepared enough sandwiches for the children's lunches for the entire time she was to be away. So helping me to prepare freezer meals for a week of Conference guests seemed an easy task to her.

It is said that many hands and happy hearts make any task light; and so it was with our food preparation at Conference time. Sister Directo, Louise, and I cooked for two days, turning out enough delicious meals to share with many guests during Conference week. We sang the songs of the church as we turned out dozens of chicken and meat pies, fruit pies, cakes, meat loaves, and casserole dishes. We also prepared roasts, sliced them, and poured spicy meat sauces and gravies over them. We barbecued chickens, made Swiss steaks, using the bones and fatty trimmings to make vegetable soups. We froze the soup and cut it in chunks of individual servings and stored them in plastic bags. It took only a few minutes to prepare them for a quick lunch along with a frozen fruit salad and dessert. I didn't have to miss a single service to stay home to prepare meals for my Conference guests. This year I am planning to do the same thing, but I have had to start much earlier since there are fewer hands to assist in the project.

If I could take a glimpse into your homes just now, I would see many of you making last-minute preparations to attend Conference. Perhaps you are doing your last-minute washing, ironing, and mending before you pack to leave. If you are leaving some of your family at home, perhaps you, too, are putting up freezer meals for them to enjoy while you are away.

Even if you are not planning to attend the Conference this year, I know your thoughts are here and your prayers are mingled with mine for the success of the Conference. The physical preparations are important; but even more important are the spiritual preparations of our people. In that phase of the Conference, all families of the church can participate.

Do you recall the words of our late prophet, Brother Israel, when he said at a recent Conference, "Zion is no further away, nor any closer, than the spiritual condition of her people"?

Whether yours is a family of new converts as are the Gideons of faraway India, or a fifth-generation Latter Day Saint family, as is ours, you can influence the success or failure of the Conference by the preparations you make in your home.

May we, in our prayers each day, uphold the leaders and officers of the church upon whom rests such great responsibility. May we ask God's guidance in these momentous times and be willing to follow his will as revealed through the leaders of the church in our day.

A Child's Faith

THE ALTON family was temporarily stationed on an island just off the coast of Florida, because of Mr. Alton's job. It was a very beautiful island, a green and lovely mass sitting in the turquoise ocean.

It didn't appear as beautiful to Martha Alton, though, as she carried her clothes basket to the line. Instead, she failed to notice the warm ocean breeze and poinsettia bushes. Martha was worrying. She had had this problem on her mind for some time, but today it was an especially heavy burden to her. She was even beginning to lose her faith in God. His beautiful creations around her did not give her the assurance she needed, and she was growing more and more depressed.

Suddenly her son, Carl, interrupted her thoughts, "Mother, how much longer do I have to take care of Dougie? I want to go swimming," he begged.

"Now, Carl, remember our bargain. You watch Dougie until noon, then we'll all go swimming," she promised.

"And have conch fritters on a stick for picnic lunch, too, Mother. Remember, you promised," he called.

"Yes, Carl, I remember," she returned. "Now you be patient until I can finish the washing!"

Carl was nine and felt too big to have to look after his little brother, but Martha was very busy today and she needed him to help her. However, as the sun grew warmer and warmer Carl became more and more anxious to stick his feet into that cool rippling water. It was just a little way to the ocean. Maybe he could just run down there and wade for a minute, then come right back.

Carl looked at Dougie who was happily scooping up chunks of wet sand and dumping them into his bucket. Then, when he thought Dougie wasn't looking, he slipped across the yard and down the street.

Sometime later Martha came out and called, "Carl, bring Dougie and come here!"

No answer.

"Carl, Carl, where are you?" she shouted.

Then she ran between the clothes drying on the line and over to the sandbox. But the sandbox was empty! Martha gasped.

"Carl! Dougie!" she began to shout. "Carl! Carl!"

Martha ran about the yard looking and calling. She was frantic when she remembered how badly Carl had wanted to go swimming. Perhaps he had taken little Dougie to the beach. She hurried down the street. She passed the great piles of empty conch shells, then went down the steps beside the pier. Sure enough, there in the water stood Carl with a big stick, poking in the sand.

"Carl, what did you do with Dougie when you came down here without my permission?" she demanded.

"I just left him in the sandbox for a minute, Mother," he stammered.

"He's not in the sandbox, Carl, and I looked all over the yard!"

Martha's face was white and her first thought was to be angry with Carl for disobeying her. She started to speak when Carl, looking very frightened, said, "Mommy, I think we should say a prayer to help us find Dougie."

Martha stopped, and her wrath fled from her. What she had taught her children to do was what she should be doing. Her heart melted when her little boy said those words. So she took Carl's hands in hers and said, "Help us, God, to find little Dougie, and please keep him safe from harm."

Then they started up the beach. Martha shaded her eyes and looked as far as she could see up and down the beach. There was no one in sight. They started toward the steps which led up to the street. Dougie might have gone down the street. They were on the first step when they heard a funny sound.

"Blub, blub, bubble, bubble, plink," it went.

"Mommy, that's Dougie!" shrieked Carl.

They looked about and there underneath the old pier sat Dougie hidden from view behind a piling. He was playing with a sea shell and sand, murmuring to himself.

"Dougie, Dougie," Martha shouted as she ran to him and scooped him up in her arms. The baby just gurgled and laughed as if nothing had happened, but Carl looked very guilty.

"I guess he must have seen me leave and followed me. I promise I'll never do that again, Mother," he vowed sheepishly. "But I am glad God was taking care of him."

"Only God could have kept him from harm when he crossed that street and crawled down these steps by himself," Martha reflected.

Only God—the words stayed in her mind as she became more collected. Maybe this has been a lesson for me. I should call on God more often in my problems, she thought. Promptly she began to talk to God in her heart, and it was not many days until her problem worked itself out.

McFarland's Iron Working Shop (formerly the Wagon Shop)

By Pearl Wilcox

Part IV

Reminiscing in Kirtland

I RETRACED MY STEPS up the hill, which I am told was a much steeper climb before the present road was graded and laid. Then a team of oxen or horses pulling up the hill would stop several times at convenient road gradings for rest before reaching the top.

In the Messenger and Advocate published at Kirtland Oliver Cowdery stated: "Our streets are continually thronged with teams loaded with wood, materials for building, provisions for the market, people to trade or parties of pleasure to view our stately and magnificent temple."

Near the brow of the hill stands the McFarland Iron Working shop that has been in operation by the same family over sixty years. It was originally a wagon shop and was located at the foot of the hill before the McFarlands moved to this location. In that early period the proprietors were dealers in carriages, surreys, and phaetons, with special attention given to repairing and painting.

Across the Chillicothe road from McFarland's stands the home of Joseph Smith, Sr.; this was used as a rooming house until Joseph, Jr., decided it was too much of a responsibility for his parents to keep a public house. When Father and Mother Smith first arrived in Kirtland from New York they stayed with Brother Morley for about two weeks; they then moved to a farm which Joseph had purchased, with the arrangements that they were to cultivate the farm, and from the fruits of their labor were to receive their support. All over and above this was to be used for the comfort of strangers and brethren who were traveling through Kirtland.

Near the corner of the driveway entering the Joseph Smith, Sr., home I could see the gaping cellar foundation of "Grandma" Dayton's home. Rebecca Dayton with her friend, Electra Stratton, did much to preserve the Temple property after the Saints left Kirtland. In the years before the reclaiming of the Temple they took possession of the keys and kept it locked from strangers; only with their presence could it be entered. Early in 1875, when the branch was meeting in the Temple with thirteen members, Electra Stratton wrote a rejoicing note to the Saints' Herald:

We have had a famine in Kirtland for years, but it is not so now. "The Spirit of God is like fire burning," and we do feel truly to rejoice in the Lord, and thank him that our prayers are answered. It seems like days that have gone by when we used to meet in the Temple in the days of your father [Joseph, Jr.], when we used to enjoy the blessed gifts of the gospel, when your grandmother sang Moroni's Lamentation in the gift of tongue.

On a grassy spot north of the Temple stood Kezia Turk's home. In the early days of Kirtland she was known as Miss Jenkins, who taught in the little red schoolhouse beyond the cemetery. Mrs. Turk died many years ago, willing her property to Sister Martha Brockway, who in turn deeded the property to the church. Today it is a part of the Temple square.

I entered the cemetery through the back gate. A book could be written of these valiant pioneers who have laid down their lives and are at rest. I see many quaint headstones of the sturdy old New Englanders who gave so much to build the stately house of God where they worshiped. I paused in front of a modern monument that bears the inscription: "To the memory of two who symbolize the abounding faith, courage and fortitude of the pioneer women of the church."

This monument was erected in honor of all pioneer women who made the sacrifice and also to the aged grandmother of Joseph Smith, Jr., who came from New York in 1836 and died within a few weeks. Here also is the grave of Jerusha Smith, the wife of Hyrum Smith, a woman everybody in Kirtland loved. In the same line with these graves is where the baby Joseph, one of the Murdock twins that was adopted by Joseph and Emma, lies. Walking through the cemetery and reading the names on the stones brings many memories of these people and a feeling of the kindred spirit that is always manifest among the Saints.

In 1880 there was still a Methodist Church located on the cemetery grounds. The congregation had died out, and the building was purchased by the Grand Army of the Republic and moved to a lot adjoining the present town hall on Chillicothe road. Later this building and grounds were purchased by Bishop E. L. Kelley and used for a meeting house for the Saints, as services could not be held during cold weather in the Temple at that time.

On the corner of Maple (Temple) and Cowdery streets remains the home of Elder Gomer Griffiths, who returned here in the early 1880's to take charge of the Temple and church branch. It was through his efforts that the lot south of the Temple was obtained. On this lot still stood the old office of Joseph Smith that was now being used for a dwelling by an elderly couple who had paid taxes on it for twenty-one years, thus giving them legal ownership according to the Ohio law. Brother Griffiths acquired the property; the ground he deeded over to the church and the house he moved to his property where it became a part of his home.

A large barn can be remembered by the very old-timers standing on the temple square about one hundred and fifty feet south of the Temple and about one hundred and fifty feet from the Chillicothe road line. In later years the timbers of this barn were used in the construction of a house by Brother Ernest Webbe and is the present home of Paul Webbe and family. It was near this location that the printing building was erected, provided for in revelation as early as May, 1833.

In October the elders of Kirtland held a council meeting and decided that they should discontinue the building of the Temple during the winter months for the want of materials and start immediately to put all their efforts into erecting the printing house. The first floor was to be used for a school of the prophets that winter and the upper story for the printing press. Then my memory passes over the pages of history to 1838 when Joseph the Prophet said that he was glad "to escape mob violence, which was about to burst upon them under the color of legal process." Then two days later the printing house and all its contents were sold by the sheriff, and the next night it burned to the ground.

West of Chillicothe road on Joseph Street remains the home of Hyrum and Jerusha Smith. When they lived here there was a road, then known as Smith road, that passed in front of the house; this connected with the old Chillicothe road farther to the south. In the early years this was part of a large farm that belonged to Elvers Metcalf and then later became the property of Mr. and Mrs. Cliff McFarland. Now the house and lot belong to the church. The old home still retains the general "lines" but has been patched up without sympathy for historical values. As I viewed this home I was reminded of the great love Joseph, Jr., had for this brother. While living in Kirtland he said, "I wish in my heart that all my brethren were like unto my beloved Hyrum, who possesses the mildness of a lamb, and the integrity of Job, and in short, the meekness and humility of Christ; I love him with that love that is stronger than death."

West of the Hyrum Smith home was located the Western Reserve Teachers Seminary that was first conducted in the upper rooms of the Kirtland Temple in 1839. Because of the inconveniences of heating the Temple, ground was bought from the Metcalf farm where a new school was erected.

On the corner of the present Chillicothe road and Joseph streets (now a filling station site) stood a Baptist Church. Although its members were active and prosperous at one time, the church was eventually sold to the Grange. Later it burned.

While I was staying in the home of Brother Ernest Webbe and wife, a block south of the Temple, he very proudly brought forth his property abstract and assured me that I would be sleeping in the old Joseph Smith, Jr., home. He hoped that I would not be haunted by the Egyptian mummies that were kept on display here for a time. The abstract does show that this property of two and one half acres was purchased by Joseph Smith, Jr.; that being the case, many important events transpired within these old walls. It would have been here that the highest court of the church, known as the Standing High Council, was organized on February 17, 1834. This Council settled not only important difficulties arising in the church but also minor troubles of the homes. Reynolds Cahoon was brought before the court because he had failed to do his duty in correcting his children and instructing them in the way of truth and righteousness. He agreed before the Council to make a public confession for his lack of duty. It is thought that near this home was located the Storehouse, operated by Reynolds Cahoon and Reuben McBride as the "Ozonda" of the United Order (Enoch).

Question Time

Question

What is the belief of our church in regard to predestination?

A. A. S.

Missouri

Answer

Predestination is generally thought of as that doctrine which originated with John Calvin and is set forth in his monumental masterpiece, "Institutes." This is his own definition of this doctrine, to which he devotes an entire chapter for proof: "Predestination we call the eternal decree of God, by which he has determined in himself what he would have to become of every individual of mankind. For they are not all created with a similar destiny; but eternal life is fore-ordained for some, and eternal damnation for others."

There is something awe-inspiring in Calvin's doctrine of predestination because of the religious earnestness of some of its devotees as well as the realization that it came forth in a day when priestcraft had made salvation a matter of arduous penance, grants of indulgence for a price, and the whim and caprice of the priest. His logic was that God is independent and sole cause of everything that takes place. Since he is independent, all events have a last cause in that God wills them. Because he so wills, some men must come to him and thus attain eternal salvation. Others must stay away from him, and thereby are lost. Men cannot have the free decision for or against God for this would militate against his honor, holiness, and primacy. He cannot wait to see how man decides before he acts.

The first revolt against this doctrine was found in Arminianism in the seventeenth century when certain individuals stood for the universality of grace: the possibility of the response of the person to conversion and regeneration, thereby attaining sanctification through God. Original Arminianism had a great effect on the message of John Wesley and his co-workers, who had as their rallying call Acts 16: 31, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." As far as I know, this doctrine has never been a point of controversy in the restored church, for Joseph Smith epitomized our beliefs in the following words, "We believe that through the atonement of Jesus Christ, all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel." This, to me, is one of the most important beliefs of the church, for it means that we may become the elect of God by choosing Christ, responding to his sacrifice, and obeying his commandments. This is the doctrine of agency or free moral choice.

We should look to two Scriptures to further elaborate. First, the predestinarian points to Acts 13: 48 which in the King James Version says, "And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." The Inspired Version quotes this, the same Scripture, as being, in the last phrase, "and as many as believed were ordained unto eternal life." This agrees with the passive voice of the Greek, from which the New Testament is translated. It is not surprising that the scholars of King James made this transposition of meaning, for they lived when predestination was popular religious thinking.

Another Scripture used by those who believe in predestination is Romans

8: 28-30, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called."

We believe the correct interpretation of this Scripture is that, as God knew beforehand that some would obey, he bound himself by a promise, predestinated, that those who believe and obey will become Christlike.

Finally, it is helpful to know the development of the idea of salvation. Ancient Israel believed in racial salvation, "We be of Abraham's seed" (John 8: 33). In the early centuries after Christ, salvation was thought to hinge absolutely upon church membership and the reception of the sacraments: "Whosoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven" (Matthew 16: 19). The reformers put their trust in faith and declared, "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3: 16). The Restoration gave each of these concepts proper stress and emphasized the gospel as the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Romans 1: 16).

Church Man in the News

Bennett Enfield

Prepares himself to help those behind bars

BENNETT ENFIELD of El Reno, Oklahoma, has been leading a very busy life for some time. He has spent most of his working hours for the past fourteen years as an employee of the Federal Reformatory at El Reno, and his spare time doing college work, partly by extension and night school attendance. He began doing clerical work at the reformatory more than eighteen years ago, and his college studies began in 1946.

Twice he has taken "time out" to serve with the Armed Forces. Following World War II, Bennett returned to his work, only to be called into service again during the Korean war. The first time he was with the Transportation Corps in western Europe; in the last war he served as a court reporter with the legal department of the Air Force. This, however, was not his first experience with courts, for he had worked as a freelance court reporter for twelve years.

In 1955 he enrolled at the El Reno Junior College, transferring to Central State in January, 1957. He had to work nights and commute eighty miles a day to study sociology, business, and history.

But his hope of helping the inmates has made the work rewarding. "We spend months training one of the boys for clerical work, then he leaves," Bennett points out, "but this is one place where we don't mind the fast turnover." He adds that most inmates leave the institution to lead normal lives, but the ones who don't seem to be the ones who make the headlines.

Upon graduation this summer from Central State College, Brother Enfield had the highest grade average for the full four years among the men graduates, and led his class members as they received their diplomas on July 20.

Bennett, born November 21, 1914, in Peoria, Illinois, was baptized in 1923 at Knob Noster, Missouri, by Elder R. E. Burgess. He attended and was graduated from Knob Noster high school. He married Lavone Goettel on November 25, 1938; they are the parents of two daughters, Benita, eighteen, and Nancy Kay, sixteen.

Brother Enfield holds the office of teacher and is an active member, having served as church school director at various times as well as teacher of adult and youth classes.

He is a member of the Oklahoma Peace Officers, VFW, American Legion, and American Federation of Government Employees.

He says, "I feel it is extremely fortunate to have been born the son of a mother who was baptized into this church as a child, and who at seventy-six years of age is still a very active member at Knob Noster, Missouri. Good fortune again came my way when I was married to my companion, an active worker in the church at Pittsburg, Kansas. Since we were of the same faith, it was a natural consequence that both our children be inducted into the faith of their parents. We are indeed happy to see our daughters active in the work."

He feels it was an act of providence that he was able to return from two wars "without a scratch."

He enjoys the ministry of music. Daughter Benita is a fine accompanist, and Kay a good soprano. Lavone helps with junior choir work.

Says Brother Enfield, "My conviction as to the divinity of this church has never been questioned. My keenest desire is to serve the church all the days of my life."

PRAYER PLEASE

For the want of some rain a crop may be lost.
So the Saints pray for rain, and God sends it.

For the want of a prayer a man may be lost.
Do you think the good Lord intends it?

Have you ever heard, on a prayer meeting night,
A Saint praying hard for a sinner?

He prays for the things that are nearest his heart,
While the hopes for the lost one grow dimmer.

We're commanded to love every person on earth,
And to pray for all men—every one.

Do you think you could still love the Saints just as much
If the man who was lost were your son?

New Group Is Active

SYRACUSE, INDIANA.—A group of Saints has been meeting since February 9. Several cottage meetings have been held in the home of Arthur and Hesper Folger, and the group was able to get the Union Hall in Syracuse. This hall is just across from the Pickwick Theatre. On March 1 the film "Other Sheep" was shown. Brother Donald Cole of the Fort Wayne group has been appointed pastor.

The first Communion service was held in the home of Reather Hooper on April 27. A Communion set was purchased, and regular services are now held.

Cary Harper Peck was blessed March 2, and during a missionary series, Becky, William, and Wayne Oesch were blessed. They are children of Mr. and Mrs. William Oesch.

The women's department was organized on May 25. Hesper Folger is the leader, with Ruth Penland as assistant. Olive Oesch is secretary-treasurer, and Carol Cole is ways and means chairman. The women plan to meet once a month until the new year begins.

June and the first week of July were spent in preparation for a missionary series by Ed Barlow. On June 12, the young people from Wabash, South Bend, Mishawaka, and Fort Wayne met in Syracuse and distributed pamphlets and literature. A swim and lunch followed. There were twenty-four young people present.

The Wabash Saints have provided music, and use of a portable electronic piano. Average attendance at the series was thirty-five and at two meetings forty-six persons were present. At the close of the meetings, the group decided to meet weekly.—Reported by RUTH PENLAND

Begin "Crusade" Series

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—On August 8, the men of the Chicago District met at Brainerd Church for a ten-dollar a plate dinner. More than sixty men attended, the majority priesthood members. The purpose of the dinner was to raise funds for the coming evangelistic series with Brother Al Pelletier as the speaker.

The "Crusade for Christ" series began September 7. It was held at the Calumet High School, located near Eighty-third and Throop Streets.—Reported by ELBERT R. SERIG

Improvements to Church Building

NEVADA, MISSOURI.—The Nevada church has made advances this year. Vacation church school was held for two weeks, the first of June. A new Gulbranson organ was purchased and paid for. The church has been redecorated by the members, and much finishing work has been done in the lower auditorium.

District women's meeting was held March 18. The women's departments have held bake and rummage sales several times, and also ice-cream socials.

Many members attended reunion in Racine. Two were baptized while there. They were Georgia Jane Pyle and Marion Earl Nickles. Marion Earl was confirmed by Elder W. D. Stukesbary the following Sunday morning. Georgia Jane's confirmation was by Elder James Jones on August 17.

E. M. Curtis was ordained an elder on August 17 by Patriarch E. E. Gamet.

Many attended conference at Butler on August 10.—Reported by MRS. LURA LASHLEY

SIXTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. William Shotton of Peoria, Illinois, observed their sixtieth wedding anniversary on July 5 with a potluck dinner at Bradley Park, followed by a reception in their home. The Sunday prior to their anniversary, Elder Raymond Wrigley gave a special sermon for them. Elder C. Ed. Miller gave a brief tribute to them at the dinner.

William Shotton and Lillie Barker were married on July 5, 1889, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, by Elder Miller. He was present on their fiftieth as well as their sixtieth wedding anniversary. Both are active members of the Reorganized Church. At present Brother Shotton is visiting elder of the Peoria Branch. They had ten children; seven are living and were present for the anniversary observance. These are Mrs. Russell Hill of Chandlerville, Illinois; Mrs. Herbert Hubler of Coffin, Illinois; James A. of Bartlesville, Oklahoma; Wilfred of Lodi, California; Mrs. James Lawler, Mrs. Frank X. Smith, and Robert, all of Peoria. They also have twelve grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. Two of their sons are members of the priesthood.

THE LANGUAGE OF THE BOOK OF MORMON

This material was originally printed in the Saints' Herald in 1942. Its author, the late President of the church, Israel A. Smith, had carried out an intensive study of the archaeological studies of the Book of Mormon with relation to its language. The tract form, appearing for the first time, is now available for 25 cents. This is a valuable study which compares actual characters from the plates with transcriptions from non-Mormon works of Egyptian writing of similar age. A fine reference work.

Answered Prayers

Last December 17 while driving home from work I was seriously injured in an automobile accident. I have been told (the injury affected my memory so that I cannot recall what happened) that I caught my left rear bumper on the right rear bumper of another car, then side-swiped still another car and crashed into a tree. The car was demolished, and I believe that only through prayers and administration was my life spared. I know the members of my branch fasted and prayed for me, and I was told that during administration Brother A. H. D. Edwards, Sr., saw the angel of death fly out the window. I was unconscious for two weeks and only semiconscious the following three weeks. But I can now stand and testify that I am a living witness that God does hear and answer prayer.

I have always had great faith in the principles of the gospel. After reading With the Church in an Early Day I felt very small and insignificant. However, I read there that if people would write their testimonies down, they might be of value to others, so I am writing mine with the hope that it will be of benefit to someone who reads it.

I will appreciate the continued prayers of the Saints that I may someday get my memory back.

What Happens After Death?

Another billfold-size tract is now available, thanks to George Knotts, the creator of the first one, I Will Build My Church. We feel sure that you will find a great deal of use for this compact little tract.

George, professionally, is an artist; so the illustrations used in the tract are his design. But also George is a missionary; so the script was developed by him, too.

We have other tracts which tell the same story as this one, but they are in much greater detail. This one is a fine summary to be given away following a cottage meeting or church service in which the subject has been more fully discussed. It is a guide to Bible study and includes a visual chart (on an inside page) that gives an over-all view of the sequence of events.

The single copy price is 2 cents. This is reduced to as low as 1 cent in quantities. Secure the exact prices on quantities for your 1958 Tract List. The Tract List is free; write for one if you do not have it.

LAND OF ZION

A young Englishman, visiting in the Jackson County area, was reported to have said: "This part of the country is as green and beautiful as England, so I do not feel so very far from home." Truly, the frequent rains of the summer have kept the lawns and trees, and indeed all greenery, in excellent condition. Homeowners even protest that they have had to mow their lawns twice as frequently as in other summers. But the general beauty of the place at this time is beyond question.

Things grow here—things that will sustain life. Every acre, every square foot of this land has a productive capacity for the good of man. Deserts have their beauty, and the barren mountains are glorious at sunrise and sunset; but theirs is a beauty of death.

The beauty of the prairies is a beauty of life. It makes a home for man where he need not be afraid of perishing for lack of food and water. Residents of Independence and the surrounding area have been happy and proud to be able to show to all visitors a land so fair, so rich in resources for the support of life.

THE STOP LIGHT

Most sermons have some inspiration in them though the channel through which it flows is clearly visible. Careless preparation can never be concealed by a generous use of words. Poor terminal facilities are tolerated by too many preachers. The red stop light showed plainly when the speaker began to repeat. But he was either color blind or looked the other way. Words fitly spoken are like "apples of gold in pictures of silver," but there is quite a difference between an immortal speech and an everlasting message.

James E. Lancaster, Jr.

A NEW CHURCH statistician is beginning his duties at church headquarters this month. He is James E. Lancaster, Jr., of Detroit, Michigan.

Brother Lancaster was formerly employed as a statistician with Michigan Bell Telephone Company. He completed work for his B. S. degree in mathematics at Wayne State University in 1955 and received his Master's degree in mathematics from the same university shortly before coming to Independence. He is also a graduate of Graceland College.

His scientific turn of mind includes his hobbies. He is an amateur astronomer and has built an astro-camera. He enjoys reading science fiction and ancient history.

During the Korean war, Brother Lancaster served as an artillery officer in Hawaii and Korea.

In 1956 he was married to Beverly Ann Moore.

Brother Lancaster's church activities have included a wide range of responsibilities from church school teacher to missionary co-ordinator. He was ordained an elder in 1955.

"It would be difficult to put my finger on one particular experience from which I draw my desire to serve the church," he said. "In looking back, it seems that due to the good influences of my home and parents I have always recognized a responsibility toward serving the church.

"I believe that in serving his Creator a man is engaged in the most worth-while purpose for which this life can be spent. I feel happy that under General Church appointment I will be able to serve to a fuller extent in the building of the kingdom."

Small Building Will Serve Music Faculty and Students

A New Building for Graceland

A NEW BUILDING is going up on the Graceland Campus. It will temporarily be used by the music department.

The structure will be all steel. Its dimensions will be forty by one hundred feet. The building was started in July. Due to excessive rain, early construction work was slow. The building will probably be finished in time for the second semester.

Included in the building will be a tiered practice room to be used by the band, orchestra, and choirs, a classroom, and four or five studios for private instruction. There will also be several music listening rooms, storage, and rest rooms. Members of the music faculty will occupy the music studios and use them for instruction.

Marietta Hall, which was formerly used for music instruction and practice, will still be used for individual practice sessions.

Graceland's campus plan for future development includes a large fine arts building which will provide for all music activities. When that building is erected, the small building now under construction will be converted into a much-needed storage building for the buildings and grounds department. With this in view, the new building is being constructed adjacent to the heating plant area, just east of the tennis courts.

The new music building is being constructed by a local contractor.

Recommending Remedies

HAVE YOU EVER HAD an ailment and been told of a "sure cure" which has been "in the family for years"? Perhaps the testimony comes from a fine, intelligent, and honest person whose grandmother got this choice remedy from a neighbor whose source was an "Indian medicine man." Or it may come from some person whose sympathies are outrunning his judgment. He really wants to be helpful; so you name your trouble and he has the remedy.

Even more dangerous are the well-meaning people who have personally discovered some choice remedy for your chronic complaint. They may even claim some dream or inspiration aided them in its discovery. How can one resist trying out this remedy, especially when it is recommended with positive testimonials about "cures" obtained by others who had "exactly the same trouble"?

There is a law which prohibits practicing medicine without a license. The common practice of medicine is generally that of diagnosis and giving a prescription. The person who says that the symptoms described are "exactly the same" as he had, or as his aunt Julie had, is diagnosing. It is inadequate and unscientific; it is merely guesswork based on fancied comparisons of superficial symptoms, but in effect he makes a diagnosis. Upon this fragile basis for judgment he then prescribes the remedy, his time-tested remedy which is a "sure cure" for the trouble.

All this is done with the best of intentions, you understand, but it is none-the-less pure quackery. The fact that no money changes hands, since it is all done on the basis of friendship, keeps a lot of people out of jail. But the practice of medicine on this nonprofessional level is dangerous as well as unlawful. The "remedy" may produce harmful results and aggravate the disease, and also cause a delay in seeking proper care. It is an awful thing to lay on the conscience of any man the charge of bringing another to an untimely death as a result of recommending home remedies, but such a charge under some conditions seems valid.

From a booklet entitled "Facts You Should Know about Health Quackery," put out by the Better Business Bureau, the following is quoted with permission.

Unreliable Testimonials

Testimonials, to be of value, must be both honest and competent. Few lay persons are qualified to testify on medical matters. In so far as testimonials ascribed to physicians are concerned, it is important to know the standing of those physicians and their qualifications as authorities on the type of product endorsed.

Government agencies generally place little confidence in testimonials from laymen. An official of the Food and Drug Administration who has investigated thousands of such testimonials has stated that they were practically worthless. He points out that some testimonials are given for pay of one kind or another; that others are given because people like to see their names or pictures in print; and that still other testimonials are furnished with honest intent by people who think they have been benefited when, in fact, they have received no benefit at all. Many have died of the disease of which they claimed to have been "cured."

In post office investigations of medical frauds, it has been found that well-meaning but ignorant laymen have given testimonials stating that a preparation consisting of a little sugar, salt, and water had cured them of almost every known disease and condition including bowlegs and diabetes. In another case, blind persons actually testified they believed they were growing new eyes by means of a vegetable compound consisting of olive oil, water, and alcohol.

Perhaps at no other time is a person so much in need of help and comfort as when he is sick or afflicted. The hope and help the gospel affords is good news to many at such a time. Jesus gave his disciples "power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases" (Luke 9: 1).

James's Epistle conveys the apostle's concern for the distressed. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction" (James 1: 27). "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up" (James 5: 14, 15).

A latter-day revelation (42: 11) adds this instruction: "And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy."

An enemy in this sense could be one who is not skilled in the use of herbs and foods. Best to leave the nourishing to doctors, nurses, and dietitians who have training and a Christian conscience. C. B. H.

Conference Resolutions

Individuals and groups are sending in formal resolutions which they wish to have considered by the General Conference. This is good as it shows forethought and facilitates the handling of business.

However, this does not bring the resolution before the assembly. It must be called up by some member of the Conference who will move its adoption. If

From Lester I. Tacy:

The month of August proved to be an eventful one. The Southern New England District Reunion was an outstanding spiritual experience. I believe this was made possible by the excellent spirit of co-operation in the ministry as well as among the people themselves.

There were thirteen baptisms during the reunion and five more the week following reunion. According to my figures, this makes a total of thirty-two baptisms during the first eight months of 1958. We are "pushing" for fifty baptisms this year.

From Wichita, Kansas, comes the report of a successful three weeks' series led by Evangelist Harold I. Velt. Attendance was excellent—an average at-seconded it will be considered at the proper time.

tendance for each service of the series was 246. The religion editor of the Wichita Eagle attended the closing service and commented: "We worshiped Sunday morning with a congregation that completely filled the sanctuary." There were two baptisms at the close of the series and a number of fine prospects were added.

Conference Chamber Ready

The seats are all installed in the gallery as well as on the main floor of the Chamber and the aisle and platform carpeting has been laid. A dedication service has been planned for Sunday, September 21, which will give the seats and the public address and acoustical equipment a test in advance of Conference.

OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

From Harry W. Black, president of Kirtland District:

The past four years have been good ones in Akron Branch. Without going into specific detail, I'd like to list a few of the many blessings these years have brought. From 1935 to 1955, a period of twenty years, 81 persons were baptized. From 1956 to 1958, to date, 88 have united with the church. Since the congregation has moved into the new church building, attendance has increased from an average of 70 or eighty to 145 up to 160. Average attendance at prayer service has increased from eight to forty-four.

A Society under God's Laws

The people were all converted unto the Lord, upon all the face of the land, both Nephites and Lamanites, and there were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another; and they had all things common among them.—IV Nephi 1: 3, 4.

The "golden age," recorded in the first chapter of the fourth book of Nephi, is a period of two hundred years which had so little in the way of history that it is covered in two pages. There is no similar time in the history contained in the Book of Mormon, nor in any other history that we know, when such a long time could be described in such a short space. I have been greatly impressed with one of the basic reasons for the peacefulness and the progress and the prosperity of that people. That basic reason was repeated four times in the space of two pages which records the history of two hundred years. Some of you may have noticed one word repeated more than any other—the word "contention." The record says that there were no contentions and no disputations among the people.

Truth plus Love

I couldn't help thinking of the many evidences that we have of contention among people today, even contention among the members of our own congregations; for we have in common with many groups of people a strong tendency to find fault with each other. Most troublesome is our tendency to look upon other people among ourselves with some measure of delight when we can criticize them, forgetting that the admonition to "speak the truth" is accompanied by the condition that it be "in love." People who live under the laws of God will be marked by this trait, among other things, that they do speak the truth but only when it is accompanied by love. The bald or naked truth has no virtue in it, for the purpose of truth is to be found in the motivation for which it is spoken.

One of the very finest gifts God has provided for us is the right to be individuals; we may choose what we may become. There is no rigid pattern of conformity impressed upon us; we have the dignity of free men in choosing to serve and to worship God. And it is this dignity which makes human freedom precious! The right of choice is accompanied by the responsibility of self-discipline, for there can be no such right as the freedom of choice without the responsibility for the consequences of that choice. That responsibility includes especially the responsibility of disciplining ourselves in such ways that we take full advantage of the other gifts that God has made available to us.

The Search for Understanding

The extension of the love of God in its many ways calls from us the search for understanding him, to try to know and see why it is that such gifts should have been made available, to try to find what place there is for us in God's scheme of things.

There have been conditions set for this search for understanding. In the first place, we have to ask. Again and again in the only records that we have of the dealings of God with men there is the admonition that men shall ask. There must be volition, the desire: "Ask, and it shall be given; seek, and ye shall find." Also we are admonished that our asking shall be done in faith—that is, believing that we shall receive—for the idle questioner would not know the answer when it came. We have been admonished further that when we desire of God we should first turn over that desire in our own minds and then ask if it be right; we are specifically admonished against asking when we have taken no thought.

In another place, in the Book of Mormon, we are told that this asking must be with real intent, with the intention at least of doing something with the understanding when it comes. There is no reason that we should in any way disparage good intentions; the main trouble with good intentions (which pave the road to hell) is not found in the pavement but with the small amount of traffic "carrying through" in the right direction. Without good intentions there would never be any good performance. The failure to perform according to intention is not the fault of the intention; it is the failure to follow through. So it is that when we seek understanding of the purposes of Divinity for us and for other human beings and for this earth, we cannot expect any usable answer except we seek in faith with the intent to make some use of that answer.

The other basic condition, "faith" has been stated in another way in one place: "Ask in faith, nothing wavering." The proof of the goodness of the intention is found in the use we make of what we already have—that is, in living as well as we may, according to the small measure of understanding that we already have.

Petitioning with Purpose

It is pointless to ask for more if we don't use that which we already have. When I was a small boy back in Kansas, there was a lady in my neighborhood who was famous for the tremendous stock of goods with which her attic was filled—and this was an unusual attic. Many an attic is filled with junk, with the accumulation of worn-out articles that any household gets, and for which it needs at least three moves and a fire to dispose of. Hers was different; her accumulation was of new things. Sometimes with her permission and sometimes without it, the small boys of the neighborhood went up there to look around, for this woman had the compulsion to attend every sale that was offered by the merchants in town. She had to buy anything that was sold at less than the usual price, far beyond any need that she had or any ability to use. She bought, accumulated, and stored; and the attic was a wonderful but weird and pointless place. So it is with us when we go shopping before God; there is no need to go asking, looking for more, except we have some understanding of the purposes for which we ask, except we have put to use some of that stock we already have from him.

These, then, are the conditions for the successful search: that we be willing to make an honest experiment in the use of what we shall get, and that we prove this by using what little we already have. Such a search with an eye single to the glory of God, to the fulfillment of his purposes in us, promises enlargement of soul. That search will cause us to have a responsive love toward God. When we see how much trouble God took to get this place ready for us, when we see the almost infinite plans and care that he took to provide this kind of world for us to live in, to provide us the place where we might grow as we choose and become what we choose to become, when we appreciate the infinite capacity of men who live under God, the unlimited capacity (and I mean that literally), then we must necessarily feel a responsive love toward him. That he took so much trouble to prepare this place, and to prepare and endow us, calls forth the most worthy love that we have.

One World with God

He has asked in return that we should love him with all of our heart and might and mind and strength. The curious thing is that as we undertake to live for him with heart and might and mind and strength, we find all of these things enriched and renewed within us.

Men who have begun to appreciate even in a small way the gifts of God and his purposes in giving them, and have felt love for him well up within their hearts, can in no way refrain from loving each other. They begin to feel a kinship with each other, a brotherhood, if you like, although that word has been somewhat worn out because it is so frequently misused. This is not the brotherhood of men who have banded together in order that they may force someone else to yield to them, but rather a kinship, a relationship with all the creatures of God. We find ourselves, then, living in a new world—not worlds which have me or you at the center. We are finally willing to merge our worlds into the same world with God at the center. It is this which makes us related to each other.

All of the men in a world which has God at its center are inescapably and unavoidably related to each other; and this is perhaps the first characteristic of a society of men who understand God. They feel this relationship to each other. They cannot live at cross-purposes; for if they acknowledge the goodness of the ways of God, they necessarily find that they are living among brothers. It is no wonder that the world of men described in the golden age of the Nephites should have had no serious contentions in it because for this period of two hundred years they lived under the influence of the teachings of Jesus.

I would like to suggest two other things about these men which flavored the society in which they lived. One of them you will have noticed: the disciples of Christ performed many mighty miracles. Although the record spoke specifically of the healing of the sick and afflicted, even the raising of the dead, I would venture to suggest that the range of miraculous things that were accomplished by the disciples of Jesus Christ were by no means restricted to the alleviating of illness or to the strengthening of a broken arm or the restoring of physical life. I am sure that men and women who lived according to the description that is given there found powers of accomplishment within themselves that went far beyond the physical things that spring to mind when these miracles are mentioned. There were miracles of spiritual healing and of the strengthening and nourishment of life, although they were not described in detail here. I'm sure of this because these people had learned the greater obedience.

Men who love and have tried to understand God in any measure will find that there are two levels or stages of obedience. We recognize the lower level or stage in our own smallest children when we demand obedience from them. We teach them to be good and to be kind and to be true; but we teach them also to do whatever we tell them to do. We tell them, "Now don't run in the street," and because the measure of a small child's understanding is not great enough to comprehend the perils of modern city traffic, we don't try to tell them all about the behavior of the internal combustion engine which is guided by a fool. We simply say, "You stay out of the street." This is one level of obedience: You do what I tell you to because I know what is best for you. Men with only a small understanding of God look upon him in the same way—I must do this because God says so. This is a form of obedience which may be good for me, but the true goodness of obedience is to be found only when it leads me to a more complete understanding of the purposes of God, to an appreciation of his reason.

This suggests a higher level of obedience. "Take My gifts and endowments, use them to develop the power of a godly personality; acquire special skills of the spirit and mind and body for dedication to the kingdom, and join Me in the creative work of the abundant life."

Many suggestions from the printed Scriptures lead us to believe that it is a commandment of God that we should choose the use of his gifts that will make us grow into powerful personalities, finding satisfaction in the use of skills that we have disciplined ourselves to acquire, and feeling then a true companionship with God. In contrast is the servant who obeys only because he has been ordered and without the sense of companionship of friends who understand each other.

Knowing All Things

The second distinctive quality of the men of the "golden age" was their capacity for understanding the ways of God. Let me suggest two places in the written Scriptures which discuss this kind of understanding. In the fifteenth chapter of John, Jesus, speaking to some of his disciples, says that from that time forward he calls them no longer servants but friends. He has explained to them what his heavenly Father had taught him, and they are therefore expected to understand the purposes of his heavenly Father and to put those purposes to use according to the interpretation that they must make. Friends, companions, who share in some degree an understanding of their mutual purpose and who voluntarily choose to put those purposes into active exercise—not master and slave, not lord and servant, but companions joined together in an enterprise—bring joy and achievement and satisfaction to all the members of that companionship. What a contrast this is to what we find in the expressions of some of our own friends, and occasionally in our own life, when in periods of despair or despondency we look upon this life as something to be endured and to be escaped from as quickly as possible. Perhaps our own despair does not reach that depth frequently; how much more often it may be that we find our life dull and boring, without sufficient purpose that we feel guided. The great danger of boredom is the almost complete escape from any kind of self-discipline to which this boredom inevitably leads. How very different this is from the picture Jesus held forth to his disciples.

The other Scripture is found in some words quoted from the teachings of John in the Doctrine and Covenants, Section 90. One phrase reads like this: "He that keepeth his [God's] commandments receiveth truth and light until he is glorified in truth, and knoweth all things." This is one of the finest phrases to be found anywhere in the Scriptures. Just think what "all things" include. I have some students who would feel delighted if they could know all things about even a small part of chemistry for one day, or physics or economics or mathematics or sociology or any of the departments of life into which our formal instruction is divided. The passing of any one group of courses at the end of a semester is not a purpose in itself; it serves a greater end. It is intended to build certain skills which may then be applied to the building of a life—to know all things and understand the relationship of things to each other, to understand that most complex thing called human living, to be able on the basis of this understanding and knowledge to gauge my own performance, to manage myself in such a way that I fit into the pattern of godly living and am able to serve in some truly significant way. Just think what it would mean to know all things! This promise is unequivocal; it is conditional but unequivocal: "He that keepeth the commandments of God shall know all things."

The Infinite Reach

This is a condition or a mark of obedience that we just never quite reach, and yet it is not equivocal at all. If we find ourselves short in our knowledge and understanding of things, then in some way we have failed to obey the commandments of God. I do not believe that a full knowledge of things is handed over as a reward of merit for a blind obedience to God; it is not a little gold star that is placed on a record card. The knowledge of things is the result of a use of the gifts and riches of the spirit and of the mind and of the body that God has endowed us with the growth and development of these gifts through use until we find that gradually our capacities have extended themselves, and we are able to think and act in ways that we couldn't before. This is what makes me speak of the infinite reach, the unlimited capacity, of men who live after the ways of Jesus Christ. When our lives have become truly a part of the way of God, then we have available to us resources that we can scarcely dream of, except through the search for understanding of God.

What kind of society is it that this kind of man would live in: men with infinite patience, mercy and tenderness, and yet firmness, not yielding in the face of the suggestion that "we had better provide for ourselves while there is time . . . we should take care of ourselves first"; men who love each other, who are as much devoted to their mutual welfare as they are to their individual welfare? I would try to sum this attitude under the phrase, "a social responsibility," or "a social conscience"—the feeling that I cannot be happy or content when those among whom I live are in any way less fortunately situated than I am. We use another phrase in our church for this consciousness. We call it "stewardship." It is an attitude of accountability to God for what we do with these gifts that he has given us. A society of men who worship God and live under his laws we might call a society of stewards. They live with an awareness of the great debt that they have to their heavenly Father and recognize that the only channels which are open for the discharge of that debt are the channels of service to each other. No wonder the Nephites of the "golden age" had no serious contentions, for they knew that all they had and all that they could be was a gift from God—not something they had earned.

A Society of Stewards

Did you ever stop to think that the gifts of God are not "paid"? They are not a reward of merit or virtue. If the opportunities and the goodness of life that you have were measured according to what you had earned, surely you have been overpaid! But God measures out not according to what a man has earned, but according to what he might be able to use well if he so chose. Men who begin to understand something of the munificent abundance that has been laid before them by God appreciate that there are purposes in the giving—a string attached, if you like, although it is more like a cable or strong rope by which all men are tied to the love of God. These gifts, so much beyond anything we have earned by our merit or virtue, are given that through them we might bless and serve other people. I think this is the reason we find in another place in the Scriptures the phrase, "In nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things." This phrase is found in a verse which describes the abundance of physical things which God has made available to men, and it is accompanied by the admonition that these things have been given for the benefit and use of mankind, to be used neither to excess nor extortion.

So it is that a society of men who have come to understand a measure of God are most of all characterized by their consciousness of their equal and joint rights before God. They have this sense of social responsibility and guide their several lives in the light of the social need, not according to the needs of one family alone and surely not according to the needs of one man alone, but according to the needs of the community or society. One of the major responsibilities that such men have is to demonstrate for men of less understanding the joyful features of life in that kind of group. We think of this kind of living as a demonstration of the kingdom of God on earth. The society which is living under the laws of God will attempt in the fullest possible way the demonstration of what the kingdom of God would mean if and when men choose to try its ways. A society of men who recognize their accountability to each other and to God for the gifts that he gave and for the use of them will move into a demonstration of what human life can be when it is balanced by all the qualities of love and intelligence and the anxious concern for mutual welfare. They will also demonstrate the creative ways of living that are open to such people. The results of life in such a society are to be measured by the kind of people that it develops.

It has been suggested that the value of a church organization is to be measured by the kind of people that are in it. I am not in full agreement with that statement, for I believe any church organization that is doing its business will have "bad" people in it. It must, because any church has as its basic purpose the serving of people who need help, who are in trouble; and if you call people who are in trouble "bad people," then the church must have bad people in it. It is true that the quality of a church organization can be determined by its success in finding people who need help and in helping them, and in giving them in turn the opportunity to help other people. So it is that a society which is living under the laws of God will have in it people of vision, people who can testify as did the men of old—"Whereas I was blind, I now see." It will have rich people, and I mean rich in temporal things—"Ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good." It will have people of learning—"He that keepeth his commandments, receiveth truth and light until he is glorified in truth, and knoweth all things." It will have people of wisdom—"Those who fear me, . . . and serve me, . . . their wisdom shall be great." It will have people of nobility, people whose characters show forth the high and clear and good quality of their purposes in living. These traits—vision, riches, learning, nobility, wisdom—add up to just the conditions upon which it may ever be possible for the kingdom of God to be manifested in the lives of the people of this earth. This is, then, a small sketch of the kind of living that we have been called to, for which this church stands, and it constitutes the very fabric of the church.

I pray that somehow we may be motivated by the desire for understanding of the purposes and ways of God, for in that understanding lies the way to the most abundant riches, far exceeding anything we have dreamed of. In this we may find satisfaction, contentment, joy, and peace; without this, we shall know only misery, suffering, and remorse. In the name of God—in the name of his Son—may we desire to understand him.

David A. Russell

And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth.—John 1: 14.

THE HIGH POINT of the church year for military personnel stationed in Europe is the annual Reorganized Latter Day Saint servicemen's retreat held at the United States Army Religious Retreat House in Berchtesgaden, Germany. The European Command founded the religious retreat house in 1954 "to provide a suitable place and additional opportunities to develop a personal and intense awareness of the fundamental truths and significant qualities of character which are of value in moral and spiritual growth." It would have been difficult to have a better spot to accomplish this. Nestled in the midst of lofty Bavarian Alps—a setting such as would inspire a latter-day psalmist—one's thoughts naturally turn to God and man's relationship to him, and these words from the one hundred and twenty-first Psalm become appropriate:

*I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills,
From whence cometh my help.
My help cometh from the Lord.
Which made heaven and earth.*

In addition to nondenominational retreats for men, workshops, and conventions conducted by the Chaplain's Division of the European Command, provision is made for denominational retreats. We are very fortunate to have the Religious Retreat House available to us in light of the fact that it is set up to accommodate about 160 people whereas we average only about forty in attendance.

The 1958 religious retreat, held June 30 to July 4, used the theme, "Jesus Christ—Our Heritage and Our Hope." The staff this year included Arthur A. Oakman, apostle in charge of the European Mission; Dr. Lawrence O. Brockway, on a sabbatical leave from the University of Michigan; Anton Compier, bishop of the European Mission; and Vern Webb, leader of the German Mission. Theirs was an inspired ministry.

Serviceman's Retreat in Europe

The first session of the retreat was an orientation and theme presentation. Thereafter, the daily schedule began with a prayer and testimony service conducted by High Priest C. R. Taylor, followed by classes taught by Brothers Oakman, Brockway, and Compier. Afternoons were set aside for sight-seeing. Of the many guided tours available, three were chosen: a boat ride on the Koenigsee, a visit to the Eagle's Nest, and a trip into Salzburg, Austria. The Koenigsee is an emerald green, crystal clear lake which stretches between some of the steepest mountains in Germany. The Eagle's Nest, built as a birthday gift for Hitler, perches atop the peak of the 5,274-foot Kehlstein mountain and is a feat of engineering which required 3,000 laborers nearly three years to complete. Intended as a conference hall, not a residence, the Eagle's Nest offers on a clear day a magnificent view of the surrounding countryside which includes Salzburg, Austria. Salzburg, visited the third afternoon, is famous for its old-world charm, the Hohensalzburg Fortress dating back to 1077, the Salzburg Cathedral, and the home of Mozart.

In the evenings, round-table discussions were conducted to sum up the thoughts of the day. The traditional campfire, led by Dale and Marian Swall, ended each day's activities.

Excellent room accommodations and delicious meals at nominal cost were planned for the convenience of the retreatants. The total effect was conducive to worship, meditation, and relaxation.

Ours was a heterogeneous group. Of the 41 persons in attendance, there were 17 servicemen, 12 of whom are single; 4 civilian Army employees, including a general's secretary and three schoolteachers; 3 church appointees; 2 appointees' wives; 4 servicemen's wives; 7 children; 3 American tourists; and one German guest. Military rank ranged from private to captain, including a Canadian Air Force officer. Every section of the United States was represented. Members of the group at present are stationed or are living in five countries: Germany, France, England, Holland, and Turkey. We had two things in common, however—the church and military employment; these were what brought us together.

It is easy for service personnel stationed in foreign countries to feel cut off from the church and its ministry. The extent to which servicemen on isolated posts feel the need for ministry was illustrated by George Vickerman, stationed with the Air Force in Turkey, who flew hundreds of miles to attend the retreat. Others who are not stationed near our church groups in Germany or England experience almost the same degree of isolation. Because of this, it was our high privilege to partake of the spiritual ministry of Apostle Oakman, who ministered to us in our loneliness and separation from the church. Brother Oakman reminded us, however, that physical separation from the church need not be separation from God. Brother Brockway, in his first class, brought a realistic approach by pointing out that the serviceman's problem is basically the same as that of the member of a large congregation—each must decide where he stands in relation to God and mankind and what his own particular contribution shall be. To the serviceman, these considerations merely assume a greater sense of immediacy. As one member who has been assigned to Paris for ten years pointed out, one really gets down to the fundamentals when one is isolated from family, friends, and branch life.

The stimulating classes and discussions provided us with much to think about in the days ahead. Brother Oakman, in his class "Fundamentals of Christian Theology," began by saying that the church is an extension of the body of Christ, that theology begins with a clear recognition in faith of the existence of God. The initiative, however, in knowing God rests with Him. The only thing we can contribute to our own salvation is the sin from which we need to be redeemed. We believe that God is. That he is the primary, inescapable fact of existence. That he is personal. That he is the Creator. We further believe that man was made with agency. In a later class, Brother Oakman said that the damnable characteristic of our age is that man takes a part of the truth and mistakes it for the whole. We need not more science and art, but a new spirit with which to view reality—the spirit of Jesus Christ. The church offers a point of view—new eyes, new ears, a new heart.

In a subsequent discussion, Brother Brockway stated that every successful life must operate out of three basic affirmations: 1. God is. 2. With design he created men. 3. The only ultimate satisfaction lies in trying to understand God's purpose in him and striving to fulfill that purpose.

In the Communion service which closed the retreat, Brother Oakman said, "It was in the self-same intimate surroundings and the self-same spirit we feel here that our Lord partook of the last supper with the twelve . . . The primary question there was 'Lord, is it I?' . . . Each one of us from time to time asks himself the same question." This service was for several their first opportunity in many months to observe the sacrament of the Lord's Supper and was a fitting climax to five days of spiritual renewal, illumination of mind, deep and personal communion with God.

It would be impossible to adequately describe or evaluate the religious retreat in terms of individual lives. Intensity of feeling, degree and kind of need, background and experience vary with each individual. It is not enough just to say that it was good to be together after long months of separation. Beyond this, there was a general feeling that once again the gospel had met human need. There was a sense of fulfillment and an awareness that ours had been a unique worship experience. Growing out of this was a newer and greater sense of challenge, of the greatness of God and the work he would have us do. Perhaps this statement best summarizes the five days spent at Berchtesgaden: "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

In attendance were Apostle and Mrs. Oakman, Dr. and Mrs. Brockway, Stella B. Omohundro, Bishop and Mrs. Compier and son Kees, Vern Webb, Vernon Cline, Jr., Norwood Oliver, PFC and Mrs. Gordon Wheeler, John and Carol Weir, Lt. and Mrs. Clifford Taylor, Barbara, Roy and Terry Taylor, George Vickerman, Ronald Romer, David Russell, Mr. and Mrs. Dale Swall, Harold Kirbyson, Alene Walter, Elbert Brown, Sgt. and Mrs. Lyle Fletcher, David Woodson, Richard Segner, Loyd Nail, John Pennington, Cecil Soper, Louise Weathers, Sgt. and Mrs. Kenneth Storms, David and Angela Storms.

What About Herald House?

By Paul A. Wellington

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE was established by leaders of the church early in the history of the Reorganization. It was to be the publishing arm of the church—the means of producing literature for missionary and educational purposes.

Through the years this task has been performed with varying degrees of efficiency and success—usually conditioned by personnel and financial status of the institution.

What about Subsidy?

Always, during its nearly one hundred years of existence, the publishing house has been dependent on its own profits for survival. Many an "old-timer" can recall the frantic pleas in the columns of the Herald for people to pay for their subscriptions so the publishing house could buy more paper or pay salaries. It was generally a "hand-to-mouth" situation.

During the past fifteen to twenty years, management has usually (primarily because of "boom times") stayed a little further away from the "hand-to-mouth" method of operating. But still Herald House continues to exist only because it stays solvent and operates within small profits from the sales of books and pamphlets and subscriptions.

In other words, the publishing house has been established to operate without subsidy from other church revenue. Not one dollar of tithing or other offering goes to buy any paper or machines or to pay the salaries of employees. The publishing plant has to pay its own way.

What about Prices?

Frequently, people who haven't really thought it through complain that Herald House prices are too high. Admittedly, prices are high—but not when compared with all other products on the market today. As has been pointed out before, you can buy a full year's subscription to the combination offer of the Saints' Herald and Daily Bread for the same cost as one full tank of high octane gasoline. During a year, most people buy over fifty tankful of gasoline without batting an eyelash—the equivalent of fifty of the combination subscriptions referred to above. The same tankful of gasoline would buy two full-year subscriptions to the youth magazine, Stride, or nearly three full-year subscriptions to Guidelines to Leadership. Actually, in a subscription you get a "heap" of good reading for a very small amount of money, comparatively.

Books nowadays generally sell for about 1¼ cents per page. In other words, a book of 200 pages would usually sell for approximately $2.50. Can you find any better bargain in anything else you buy? Or can you find a first edition book by any publisher for any less? And tracts of thirty-two pages usually sell at about ten cents each, seldom more than fifteen cents. Of course, if you decide to give away 1,000 of them, that price is cut in half. Expensive? Can you buy a message or card of any quality for a friend for any cheaper price? Count up the costs of Christmas cards this Christmas and you'll discover you spend dozens of times more money for them than you spend on tracts in a whole year.

And how do Herald House prices compare with other religious printed materials? Arm yourself with some Herald House prices one of these days and go visit a Baptist, Methodist, or Catholic bookstore and see how they compare. Of course, we're not any cheaper. But we aren't any higher, either. And Herald House is "small stuff" compared to the larger religious publishers, and it doesn't have the volume sales that bring down unit costs. Why? Because as a church we're still small. Our materials must be distinctive to meet our own church's needs. And because they are distinctive, other churchgoers don't buy our material. We are dependent on our own members for our sales. We cater to meeting their needs.

What about Books from Other Publishers?

There are many books on subjects of interest to Latter Day Saints that are published by other publishers. So church leaders have established a committee to screen all books that might have value for us and then assign a limited number of them to reviewers. If a reviewer (usually an appointee or a member with specialized training in the field discussed in the book) favorably reports on the book, a few copies are purchased for sale. If members show a continued interest in the book, it is stocked on a rather permanent basis.

Some people feel that if there is anything good to be said we ought to say it, and if there is anything good to print we ought to print it. That may be all right ideally, but practically it isn't. We haven't that many writers, neither do we have the sales potential to do it. Because of the production of many fine books on the Bible and other general subjects by other publishers, we can specialize on more distinctive teachings.

God has commanded us to study "all good books." By culling the publications of the religious field, we are privileged to select the "best" and make them available along with our own publications.

What about Progress?

Herald is always in the process of trying to improve its service to the church member. Sometimes you may feel the opposite is true. During the past year we have converted over to a faster, more efficient method of addressing subscriptions to magazines. In the process of conversion, the work load became tremendously heavy and very complicated, and many members were irritated over delays in renewing subscriptions and starting new ones. But that period of conversion is now about over. The future should be much better in this area of service.

Another improvement that should be noticed by customers is earlier delivery of the Saints' Herald. With the new addressing machinery and a stepped-up schedule of printing, the Herald now leaves Independence thirty-six hours earlier than was previously possible.

The business and shipping departments have seasonal loads that sometimes almost bury them. Just before the beginning of a new quarter, the church school orders naturally are high—and around Christmas, the gift rush joins with the new quarterly orders to provide even greater sales. To some extent this can be alleviated by part-time help, but,

Help to Organize New Hope School for Retarded Children

Lois and "Ted" Campbell

NEWSPAPER READERS in Sarnia, Ontario, have read a lot about "New Hope School" in the past two years. Two names that have often appeared in the stories describing the growth of the school are E. B. and Lois Campbell.

Elder E. B. Campbell and his wife were charter members of the parents-sponsored Sarnia Association for Retarded Children when it was formed two years ago. In fact, Brother Campbell, who goes by the nickname of "Ted," was the association's first president, and Sister Campbell was chosen corresponding secretary.

The "New Hope School" for retarded children opened with nine pupils and one teacher in February, 1956. Soon a waiting list had developed. Now the school consists of thirty-one students and four teachers.

Brother and Sister Campbell give their time freely to this service project. Ted is regularly employed at Mueller, Ltd., a plumbing materials supply company in Sarnia.

The Campbells stress that they are only two of the many persons who helped to get the school going. One of the prime movers of the organization was Frank B. Froud, public school inspector. The service clubs in Sarnia have been very generous in helping the school get a start.

Brother Campbell's duties as charter president and now as vice-president of the association include mostly administrative work and public speaking in the school's behalf. He estimates that he has spoken to about forty service groups, enlisting their aid for the school. The school idea has caught on very well, he says. It is now receiving regular support from a number of groups and is one of the organizations that receives financial assistance from the Community Chest.

The school is temporarily housed in one small building and parts of two other buildings. The association hopes for a new building in 1960. It has one school bus—donated by a local service club—and expects to have another this fall.

According to the many news stories concerning New Hope School (the name was Sister Campbell's suggestion), its success is a blessing to the community and its retarded children. A good share of the credit belongs to Brother and Sister Campbell.

"We believe in the work the school is doing," Brother Campbell said. "We have been guided by the Scripture, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

No One Walks Alone

IN THE last few weeks the eyes of the nation have turned away from pressing domestic problems to the troubled areas of the Middle East. Earth satellites and the recession have been shoved into the background in the face of a possible world crisis. With our attention centered on the Arab nations, it seems a good time to re-examine our attitudes toward different racial and cultural groups than our own.

A recent article by Pearl Buck appearing in Reader's Digest contained many ideas bearing out the need for real brotherhood in the world. The article, centered around an adoption program for children of mixed racial parentage, pointed out how hundreds of Americans are throwing prejudice aside in favor of the warmth and happiness that a new baby—any baby—can bring into a childless home. She tells of a young Presbyterian and his wife still at a church seminary who applied for a half-Korean child. It was made clear to them that the adoption of this child might have an influence on what kind of pastorate they were offered after graduation. It did. The young preacher received a letter from a growing congregation informing him that the selection committee for their church had debated and discussed future ministers until only two were left. When the applications were surveyed for the final choice, the young minister and his wife were invited to accept the offer because they had adopted the little Korean boy. "There are Christians and there are Christians."

A World-wide Program

As members of a Zionite movement, we Latter Day Saints often fail to face up to the implications that are involved in any world-wide effort or program. The day will surely come, if we accept latter-day Scripture, when the church is taken into the four corners of the earth and established among all nations and peoples. This will necessarily involve a white minority—as almost two thirds of the world's people are dark-skinned. The children of Lehi, who are to have such a significant role in the building of the Jerusalem, are themselves a dark-skinned people. Racial prejudice is a questionable luxury that Latter Day Saints cannot afford. This is true for the dark-skinned Saints as well as the fair.

Jewish Success

The Zionist movement among the Jews, which has made such historic progress during our lifetime, is a good example of problems that we must someday face. The Jews of northern Europe, particularly from Germany, brought to Palestine a rich heritage of great scientists, musicians, and merchants. Through intermarriage and conversions they also brought the blond hair and blue eyes not often encountered in Semitic peoples.

This background contrasted rather sharply with the exiles returned from the Arabic and oriental countries where technical progress had not spread. Centuries of living in Christian-based cultures also contrasted greatly with those Jews who had planted their roots in Moslem and Oriental religious cultures.

The Jews, to a marvelous degree, overlooked many obvious variances in their backgrounds and worked together and fought together to establish once more the Star of David in their promised homeland. Their ancient belief in one God and their convictions that they were a chosen people set apart enabled them to accomplish many goals that would have been impossible had negative differences taken preference over common hopes and yearnings for the future of Israel. They still face difficult problems in human relations as well as in law and religion. The solving of these problems will depend, to a large extent, on whether God or the whims of man is placed first.

To Love and Understand

We Latter Day Saints can anticipate facing these same situations in our own Zionite movement and missionary work. We must learn not only to love racial groups different from our own but also to understand the religions and cultures that constitute the life of many of the peoples we are seeking to evangelize. It is comforting to know that those people dedicated enough to volunteer for missionary work in foreign lands will probably have the love and desire for understanding necessary to reach the hearts of these brothers. Somehow, before the world-wide gathering to the New Jerusalem takes place, this love and understanding must be planted in the hearts of all the Saints. We must come to understand that the Lord made all nations of one blood, that we must love our neighbors and our enemies as ourselves. These things are prerequisites to the successful completion of our Zion-building task.

The Will to Discriminate

In a sermon recently, a young scientist-elder, Dr. Bill Higdon, told of an interesting conversation with an associate of his. His friend suggested that all the races in the world intermarry and intermingle until there was only one hue of skin in all the earth. Then, with this homogeneous skin color there would be no more prejudice against a light or dark-skinned race. The elder explained how false such a plan would be even if it were possible. If all men had the same color of skin and the "will to discriminate" were not destroyed, there would continue to be just as much prejudice and discrimination as before. The color of a man's eyes or the shape of his nose would be singled out to set him apart from the majority. As long as people feel the drive to push someone below them they will find reasons for doing so.

Only a concept of God as the Father of all can bring about the realization by mankind that all are "brothers under the skin." This is a selling point the Latter Day Saint must make in his evangelizing the world process. The point is easily made if it is practiced in the congregations of the Saints, if no man anywhere can point to a Latter Day Saint Church and say that it is closed to anyone because of his national or racial background.

The Spirit of Brotherhood

Obviously, because of centuries-old tradition, we have not reached this stage in our own country—the land of Joseph. In many of our southern states, stretching from Virginia to Texas, we will not reach these goals for many years. This isn't so important as the fact that we need to be concerned about bringing this spirit of Zion—the spirit of brotherhood—into all our branches. If we can demonstrate the cohesiveness brought about by belief in a restored gospel as the Jews have done by uniting around their religious goals, then our acceptance of each other as fellow laborers with Christ will outweigh non-acceptance because of skin color or social background or other learned prejudices.

The Ever-present Help

We cannot love God and hate and reject our fellow man. If we follow teachings found in our Scriptures and articles of faith we will ever look for these things which are beautiful and true and of good report in the people around us. Differences in people are what make them interesting. It will take a good deal of courage on the part of many Saints to go against local prejudices for the sake of the cause of Zion. The heartening thing to remember is that no one walks this road alone. Besides the dedicated Saints striving daily in all parts of the world for true brotherhood, there is the ever warming presence of a crucified and risen Lord leading the way—just out of view, but coaxing and encouraging until the final destination is reached.

A Plea Addressed to "Satisfied Customers" of Camping

SURPRISING as it may seem, this summer marks the thirtieth anniversary of youth camping in our church. The first youth camp was held in Nauvoo in 1928. It was just one camp with fifty campers. This year we have eighty camps and six thousand campers. In 1928 there were a half dozen leaders; in 1958, more than a thousand leaders. In 1928 there were no camp alumni; now there are many thousands scattered throughout the church.

This phenomenal growth is no accident. It is the product of courageous and sacrificial pioneering on the part of a few who were prompted by an unyielding faith in and devotion to young people—a faith and a devotion which accepted no defeat but carried on despite limited experience, equipment, and support.

We think this story should be told. "By all means, why not do it," you say. Well, to tell the truth, we are working at it but we need help—the personal testimonials of "satisfied customers." Available to us are innumerable written reports and clever camp logs. These are invaluable. The real story of camping, however, cannot be found in such. For the most part, it lies concealed in the hearts of the many hundreds of campers who can speak with a conviction born of experience.

Many of you readers of the Herald will have had one or more years of significant experience in one or more of the church camps for young people. Perhaps you, as a pastor or district president, have observed the results of camping in your area as evidenced in the lives of your young people who have attended such camps. Or, as a parent, you have sent one or more of the young people from your home to camp. Perhaps as a youth leader or teacher in your congregation, you have watched members of your group or class have this privilege. Or, better still, you can speak as a young person who has attended one or more youth camps in recent years. If you have, why not tell us about it. A testimonial growing out of such an experience might be most helpful.

What has been your experience with camping—as a camper, as a staff member, as a director? What have been the effects of the camping experience in the lives of young people of your acquaintance? What did camping do for you? What did it do for members of your family, members of your branch? Have you yourself evidenced or have you observed others who evidenced a genuine spiritual renewal as the result of such experiences shared at camp? Have there been those who thus seem to have discovered themselves, discovered the church, discovered a way of life? Have you observed that lives are often actually changed as the result of a week at camp? Perhaps as a young person you have attended camp for one or two or even three years. If so, surely you can write for us a convincing, soul-stirring testimony concerning your experience. What it did do for you? What did it mean to you? Why not pick up a pen and a sheet of paper at once and send us a personal testimony growing out of your personal experience and observation with camping in action?

It would be most helpful if you would conclude your statement with the following information: Your name and address, an indication of the number and location of camps that you have observed or in which you have shared, your relationship or connection with such camps. Do you write as a pastor, parent, youth leader, teacher, a member of the camp staff, a camper, an official visitor, a camp director, a business manager? Did you serve in any other capacity? If so, what? Indicate the number of years in which you have thus served. Your testimony may well take something of the following form:

"As a [check which] pastor, teacher, leader, staff member, camper, I have observed and participated in youth camping for.....years. Concerning this experience I am happy to report the following. I have observed in myself and in others the following beneficial results of camping....."

"I would suggest the following changes or improvements in camping programs and procedures for the coming years."

Tell us just how you feel about the youth camping program as now conducted by the church. Please mail your statement at an early date to F. M. McDowell, the Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

Yours for Camping,
CARL MESLE,
Director of Youth Camping

Tribute and Memorial

By Mrs. S. A. Burgess

Mrs. Slasor

THERE WILL BE an empty chair as members of the General Council of Women assemble at General Conference time around the council table. Already we in the Women's Department office miss her sparkling personality, her wise and thoughtful comments, and her enthusiastic response to new issues and new projects in the women's work. Life seems duller and less radiant without her vigorous and happy support. This sense of loss extends to hundreds of church women in Detroit Stake and surrounding districts who for more than fifteen years have looked to her for leadership, inspiration, and encouragement. She was loved by all who knew her and stood out as a woman of stature, a guiding light to those who were privileged to partake of her ministry of teaching in institutes and reunion classes.

I shall always treasure the memory of the day I spent with her at the 1957 Detroit Stake Reunion. In spite of her failing health, she spoke to the women's class with her customary zest and sweet persuasion, urging her listeners to new heights of faithfulness and endeavor. Her morale, her courage, and her unflinching faith that God could and would do what was best for her and her family were continually expressed in our hours of intimate talk together. She comforted me and her friends and family, instead of seeking reassurance from us.

Sister Ena Slasor was a fourth-generation Latter Day Saint, though her childhood and youth were lived in isolation from any regularly organized church group. She treasured stories of the church told to her by her grandparents and especially recalled her Grandmother Coffman's oft-told experience of meeting Brother Joseph at the Woodbine Reunion in Iowa in the early years of the Reorganization. Among her most thrilling early memories were the times when missionaries stopped at their pioneer home near Wagner, South Dakota, and they would "have church" at her grandfather's house.

She was born in Wagner, where she attended school; and later she was graduated from Springfield Teachers' College at Springfield, South Dakota, and taught school. On June 25, 1925, she was married to Otto W. Slasor, and in 1933 they moved to Detroit, Michigan, where it gave her great joy and satisfaction to be able to attend church regularly and to rear her children in the faith of the restored gospel.

Four of her five children, Jo, Robert, Jeanne, and Howard, are Graceland College graduates, and Pam, the twelve-year-old daughter doubtless looks forward to her turn in the church college.

After moving to Detroit, Sister Slasor became active immediately in the women's work, first in the old Central Church at Fourth and Holmes Street, and later in the Highland Park Church when her membership was transferred to that branch. For a number of years she was women's leader for the Detroit Branch of the Metropolitan Detroit area; then in 1949 she became Women's leader of the Detroit-Windsor District. In 1950 she accepted leadership of the newly formed Detroit International Stake, where she served until after she became a member of the General Women's Council. Then she continued to function on the stake women's commission as an honorary member; her presence and counsel there were often sought and found very helpful.

She was community minded, interested and active in civic affairs. She worked with the Red Cross Volunteers during World War II and was for many years an active worker in the Parent-Teacher Association. For the past few years she served as president of her local Parent-Teacher group.

She served under the leadership of Apostles D. Blair Jensen and D. O. Chesworth, when they were in charge of the work of the church in the Detroit area, as well as under the present stake president for the past twelve years. She had great vision for the goals of the church and has been an inspiration to the appointee ministers and their families throughout all this time.

In an article in Guidelines (January, 1957), Sister Slasor wrote:

"When planning activities for our department, we should know where we are going and why. The statement has been made, 'The women's department is the church at work in her women.' If this is true—and I think it should be—our department should take the position and place women normally occupy, that of helpmate. The women's department should be the stabilizing influence of the church, having the interest and welfare of all at heart. The church is the great family of God, so we should be guided by our love for all members and concern for meeting their needs regardless of age or ability and in spite of any infirmities. We seek the best for the whole family; therefore we would not try to run our course alone, with no regard for the whole family, or we would destroy the family unit and open the doors to dissension and failure. Whenever we are in doubt about our department work or plans, we need to think of our place as women in the home. A good leader as a good mother tries to understand the present need and help fit the rest of the family into a program which meets that need."

Her article in the Home Column of the Saints' Herald (September 2, 1957), "Women in This Atomic Age," was particularly expressive of her progressive and lively appreciation of women's stewardship in the church and world today. She wrote:

"At one time we believed if we didn't kill or steal, if we went to church on Sunday and didn't hurt our neighbor, we were all set for eternity. We know better now. We don't live for our generation alone as the ultimate any more than the atom remains the smallest particle. Unlimited power has been discovered in the atom, and unlimited power awaits to be discovered within ourselves. Within our very hands lies the power to build the kingdom—or destroy civilization. Which will we choose? . . .

"This power within us is not new; it has been here since creation. It is so simple, and often so unglamorous, that few people have ever tried to use it consistently. This power, which is our tool, is love—godlike love. It is the kind of love that Jesus talked about and manifested. . . .

"We should put more into the work we do in order that others may get more out of the church. That is how our good work goes on and on. If we want this great power—this Christlike love—we must aim for it. If our hearts are filled with it, it will mean Christian love for the unlovely and the sinner, the neglected ones, those who spitefully use us, even those we don't like. It will mean a full program that teaches and lifts all with whom we come in contact to a better way of life. It will mean a broader Zionite vision which will carry us beyond the confines of our own little circle, our own congregation, yes, our stake or district, to the ultimate goal of the church. Such organizations are necessary and we need them, but they must serve us if they are to succeed. They must never become our whole sphere of action. . . .

"This is a wonderful age—the atomic age, the age of limitless power to be used for good or for destruction. But no power, anywhere or in any age, can withstand the power of the love of God as manifested through his Son Jesus Christ, and it cannot be used for destruction—only for good. Let us recognize our needs, use our opportunities for united effort, carry our responsibilities as women of the church to be helpmates by learning to use this great power resident within us to promote the cause of Zion. Let us help to build the kingdom in this atomic age."

On May 1, about ten days before her passing, Sister Slasor dictated to her daughter Jeanne Fitzpatrick the following farewell note to the women of the General Council:

"Dear Alice and Council Members:

"I have wanted so long to send a note of appreciation to you.

"In recent weeks the memory of my association with you has deepened and increased and I have felt a wealth of strength as I read your cards and notes.

"I have felt so close to all of you, although for some reason our time together is not to be for long. I am sorry about this inasmuch as the work is so important and I have loved it so much. I am sure this is a feeling shared by you in your efforts to serve God.

"Our work is so important because as we can help or guide or give counsel we are building better women. From these women will come better homes and people and, consequently, better Latter Day Saints.

"What better work to be engaged in? This will bring the church triumphantly through. This is the goal set before us.

"So press on and weary not in well doing is my last counsel.

"Very sincerely and lovingly,

"ENA SLASOR."

As we contemplate Sister Slasor's life and personality we are impressed that her bright spirit will still linger with us who knew and loved her—and the inspiration of her vision and devotion will bless us. Even as through Isaiah the Lord sought "to comfort all that mourn . . . in Zion; to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called Trees of righteousness, The planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified" (Isaiah 61:2, 3, I.V.).

Reminiscing in Kirtland

Part V

By Pearl Wilcox

The John Johnson home in Hiram where Joseph and Emma stayed and where Joseph worked on the Inspired Version

THE EARLY SAINTS of Kirtland had very humble homes, according to Sister Dora McFarland. She relates coming to this historic spot as a schoolgirl. When she crossed the little wooden bridge at the foot of the hill, she saw the large gray House of the Lord standing like a sentinel at the top of the hill; it was a contrast to the smaller dwellings and other buildings that comprised the total village. A note of sadness crept into her voice as she recalled the dear old people who had for the most part been born or were brought here by their parents due to the gospel of Christ; and then there were the close neighbors who were not church members. She mentioned John and Nancy Wells, Royal and Polly Green, Nelson and Susan Makepeace, Asa and Charley Bump, George and Lucy Manley, Charles and Jeannette Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. George Frank, George and Adelaide Metcalf, Ezra and Mary Bond, George Russell (father of Dr. George C.), Kesia Turk, Marie Vandeusen, Sabre Long, Mary E. Bond, Electra Stratton, Parley Harvey, Sarah Sanborn, Enos and Elversa Metcalf, Lavina Judd, Ed and Laura Sanborn, Hyman Moore, Mrs. Millikin, Ann Roddick, Richard and Cornelia Johnson. These were among the families she recalled living there around 1890.

Ira Bond had remained near Kirtland from 1834 to 1887 and was one of the one hundred and nineteen who worked on the temple. The builders were poor, and the men could devote but a portion of their time to its construction, as their families must be supported. The Bond home remains today near the Sidney Rigdon home and is being used as a children's day nursery at the present. During the Conference in 1883, after the title had been cleared on the Temple property, some were worried and asked for police protection, but they found that the name Latter Day Saint was held in good repute in the neighborhood because the Bonds kept the name honorable.

In a very prominent location across from the Temple stands Rigdon Hall; this pretentious home of today was not so large when Sidney Rigdon lived here. Then he lived only in what is the center portion with the porch and columns. The wings have been added, and the original angles of the roof changed. During the division of stewardship in 1835, Sidney Rigdon (Pelagoram) was to retain his house and the tannery.

In searching old histories I find that most tanneries were located in the woodsheds of these early pioneer homes. Today this home is divided into different units. One unit of it houses Elder Kenneth Green and family, minister for the Kirtland Branch. The hundreds of people visiting this historic place of prominence keep Brother Green and his aides busy in guide service and alert on church doctrine. The majority know nothing of the true beliefs—only the misrepresentations that have been made to them. When they come they are in a frame of mind to listen and are soon disarmed of their prejudices.

The Kirtland auditorium building on the north was erected on the site of the old barnlike hotel that was operated here for many years. It serves for mass meetings, entertainments, special programs, classes, commissary, and meal service.

Driving south on Route 306, or Chillicothe road, I passed a large, beautiful home that formerly served as the Saints' home for the aged. A short distance beyond are the large barns and buildings of the late Dr. Russell whose father was a pioneer settler here during the early period of the church. The lands have been divided into small tracts. Brother and Sister Earl Curry own a tract of this land on which they live and operate their ceramic business.

I passed the disputed site of the Martin Harris home and farm, then driving west from the main road for about a half mile I found the principal stone quarry, known by the young as the "old swimming hole"; it is from four to eight feet deep. Parallel with the highway are other traces of stone workings. According to early writers, the stone for the Temple came from two different quarries. There was the Stannard quarry from which a superior, durable quality of sandstone was taken, and the Russell quarry which contained a finer grained stone of color inclined to the shade of purple or slate. This stone was not quite proof against wind and weather, as it has faded to the uniform color with the coarser grained sandstone. The finer stone was used for the trim of the doors and windows of the Temple. This property of which the quarry is a part is located on the eastern slope of Gildersleeve mountain and has been bought by a wealthy neighbor and turned over to the State Forestry Conservation as a public memorial; it is known as Chapin's Forest.

East of Highway 306 in the same locality is claimed to be the old Thayre property. According to various sources it was from this farm that much of the timber was cut that was used in the Temple. This lumber was hewed and sawed by the old-fashioned whipsaw, with muscle as the motive power. I sensed the greatness of these trees that were felled as I sat in the quaint pews of the Temple and noticed that some of these boards averaged about twenty inches after they were dressed. The lumber that has been identified in the building came from a variety of trees—white oak, white wood, walnut, and wild cherry.

Mr. Crary, pioneer settler, leaves us this account:

On my return from the South in 1831, I found the Mormons located in Kirtland. Four or five of our prominent citizens had joined them—Isaac Morley, Titus Billings, N. K. Whitney, John M. Burk, and Jotham Maynard. I sold them some $200.00 worth of lumber, much of it for the Temple. I also sold them my farm, took $275.00 in notes, signed by President Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, payable in 30 days after demand, which they redeemed without delay of 30 days, much against the will and determination of Rigdon.

Before I left Kirtland, my friends took me to the quaint old college town of Hiram, Ohio. It was a beautiful drive along Highways 82 and 44. From the ridge could be seen the rich farm lands in every direction. We traveled the distance of thirty miles much more quickly than Joseph and Sidney Rigdon did when making the trip back and forth on several occasions. They needed a quiet retreat, as Kirtland was simmering with activity of inquiring visitors, converts, and people buying land, among many other problems. The revision of the Scriptures had to be completed, and they found the quiet they needed in the John Johnson home.

This large two-story frame house is now owned by the Utah Saints and is the oldest and the least changed of any in the neighborhood. It was in this home that John Johnson and his wife Mary were the hosts to the Prophet Joseph Smith and Emma, with their two adopted children, during the winter of 1831 and the spring of 1832. The Smiths lived in the rooms at the rear of the house. Sidney Rigdon and his wife lived across the road in a log house that also belonged to the Johnsons.

A young boy greeted us at the door and before we could say a word he asked, "Do you want to see the revelation room?" I knew that there were many revelations received through the prophet in this home, but the title placed on the upstairs office room came as a surprise. We found that the people living here at the present time knew very little of the history that transpired at this place, and we were left to our own thinking. We talked of the wonderful spiritual vision that the men witnessed in February of 1832 when their "understandings were enlightened, so as to see and understand the things of God; even those things which were from the beginning before the world was, which were ordained of the Father, through his only begotten Son" (Doctrine and Covenants 76:3). It was in this home that they stated, "We this day finished the translating of the Scriptures, for which we returned gratitude to our heavenly Father."

The cause of the outburst of violence that took place here on the night of March 25, 1832, when Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith were dragged from their beds by a mob and coated with tar and feathers, is related in Hayden's Early History of the Disciples. A general store had been opened at Hiram, and the Saints were planning to organize a branch of the church in the settlement. The conversion of Reverend Ezra Booth, a Methodist, and Symonds Rider, a Disciple elder, seemed to offer a good opportunity. But both men shortly apostatized and became bitter opponents. This influence, with the violent opposition centered in rival denominations, provoked the citizens to mob violence.

Site of the quarry where rock for the Temple was cut (later known as "the old swimming hole")

This was perhaps the only physical violence that ever marred the Kirtland episode. It occurred six years before the mass exodus when the leading men were beginning to observe the changes that were taking place in Kirtland.

In June, 1837, W. A. Cowdery, editor of the Messenger and Advocate, wrote:

The change of times, and circumstances, and the almost entire revolution in the monetary affairs of our country, have sensibly affected this our community as well as all others. With a few exceptions, a sullen, we can almost say, a desponding gloom hangs over us, sufficient at least to show a striking contrast between this and last year. One year since and our village was all activity, all animation—the noise and bustle of teams with lumber, brick, stone, lime, or merchandise were heard from the early dawn of morning till the gray twilight of evening. The sound of the mechanic's hammer saluted the ear of the sluggard before the rising sun had fairly dispelled the sable shades of night, and the starting up, as if by magic, of buildings in every direction around us, were evidence to us of buoyant hope, lively anticipation, and a firm confidence that our days of pinching adversity had passed by, that the set time of the Lord to favor Zion had come, that we might almost rejoice when the world around us mourn, laugh at its calamity, and mock when its fear comes; but we too feel the pressure, occasioned by the derangement of the currency, the loss of credit, the want of confidence, or by overtrading; either the whole combined, or a part of these causes, have contributed to produce the state of things that now exist.

As time passed, trade and traffic seemed to engross the Saints. They became rich on paper. Many had given notes for more money than they could raise. Also there were dissensions when members of the church failed to harmonize; factions withdrew, letting the enemy without and the apostates within unite in their schemes.

The Evidence of God in an Expanding Universe Edited by John Clover
 Monsma
 G. P. Putnam's Sons
 1958

What evidence of a living God in an expanding universe can science provide? This symposium, by forty leading scientists, clearly combats the common error that science tends to undermine faith. Here, in clearly defined manner, science and religion are allied in united testimony to the existence and presence of a personal God. In every form of creation, from the nucleus of a microscopic cell of life to the limitless expanse of our star-studded universe, they have found confirmation for belief in a supreme, creative Intelligence. Here a biophysicist, probing the mystery of life in a molecule of protein, finds evidence of an Infinite Mind at work in the design of creation. A research chemist reveals the work of divine Intelligence in the atomic structure of water. Through astronomical research a scientist finds verification of the biblical account of creation. The epilogue to this work, by a physiologist, presents "The absoluteness of the certainty of God's existence."

To classify this study as either a scientific treatise or a theological dissertation would be to ignore its true nature and purpose. It is a skillful blend of both into a pattern which affirms the existence and action of a personal God. Science has presented to some a serious challenge to a faltering faith. To others, science has become a foundation upon which to build an atheistic, materialistic belief. This book, wherein science and religion find a common meeting ground, should be of value to both.

What about Herald House?

with new workers unacquainted with procedures, errors creep in and the customer service department has extra letters to answer and problems to clear up. One of the greatest helps to Herald House by customers would be "ordering early"—a month and a half ahead of the beginning of a new quarter, and "do your Christmas shopping early." Another great help would be to write orders and editorial correspondence on separate sheets of paper instead of mixing them together on one page. It would eliminate a lot of confusion and mistakes at Herald House if each member followed this procedure of dividing his correspondence.

During the past six months (and continuing for the next two and one half years) the editorial and production departments have been and will be busier than usual publishing the new curriculum materials for the church school. They are trying to assist the Department of Religious Education producing attractive lessons and manuals that will be an asset to every local church. The load is heavy, but the printing presses are grinding out tons of new materials every day. There is good reason to feel that the job will be a quality job, completed on time.

What about Employees?

One thing that every member of the church can be sure of: the people who work at Herald House are conscientious and desirous of offering good service to the church. They are not getting rich financially by staying on the job at the publishing house, but they are receiving rich satisfactions from making their contribution of service. They are as concerned as you are that progress is made at Herald House, that the results of their stewardship will materially assist the progress of the General Church in its job of evangelizing the world and building the kingdom!

Anaheim Mission Has Church Home

The Anaheim mission of Southern California District moved into its newly acquired church home in July, 1957. The Saints purchased the remaining estate of an orange ranch in the heart of the orange and oil country, Orange County, California. The large house contains nearly 3,000 square feet of floor space on the first floor, and has been divided into a main sanctuary, large classrooms, kitchen, and nursery.

The house is situated on five medium-sized lots. Remodeling on the house began immediately, so that it could accommodate an average attendance of eighty.

Purchase of the church home has been responsible for increased attendance, service, and ministry. In September, the mission became a branch.

Officers elected at that time were as follows: pastor, Elder James A. Campbell; counselors, Elders Charles Hender-shot and Manford Ralston; director of religious education, Elder Robert J. Paton; women's leader, Fern Parsons; secretary, Caroline Johnson; treasurer, Albert Fields; book steward, Lovona Davis; custodian, Guy Waller; drama, Verdine Armstrong; music, Eileen Rice; auditors, Manford Ralston and Don Armstrong; building committee members, Lee and Fern Parsons, Cecil and Mabel Huston, Don and Verdine Armstrong.

In October an anniversary dinner was given to celebrate two years of operation as a functional congregation. The fund-raising dinner was a success. It was attended by local members and friends; special guests included Patriarch and Mrs. Ostertag, District President and Mrs. John P. Davis, and Saints from Santa Ana Branch who helped start the Anaheim mission.

With the turn of the year, a recapitulation of the achievements of the group showed that the women's department had made consistent and faithful contributions. A vote of thanks was extended to them for having raised an unsolicited $1,200.00 for the new church.

Many new members have been added over the months, and the priesthood has increased 100 per cent. There have been seven baptisms.

Those baptized were Mrs. Mattie Campbell, Mrs. Marjorie Short, Cecil Huston, Jimmy Campbell, Clifford Fields, Patsy Payne, and Danny Brown.

James A. Campbell, Charles Hender-shot, and Robert J. Paton were all ordained elders. James R. Farley, Harold L. Short, and Guy Waller were ordained priests. Rollin Postlewaite was ordained a teacher. —From material prepared by HAROLD L. SHORT

Question

In the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah (Inspired Version) the poetry and eloquence which is a distinguishing mark of this book is notably missing in verses 11 to 25 inclusive, which is the portion mainly interpolated by Joseph Smith. The remaining verses have the literary excellence of the Authorized Version, but the interpolation is more reminiscent of Book of Mormon language. Why?

D. H. J.

Australia

Answer

The literary excellence of the Authorized Version commonly referred to as the King James Version, is not of necessity a reflection of the literary excellence of the original writer but, in the process of translation in the hands of the scholars under the direction of the King of England, the language would of the very nature tend to reflect the "literary excellence" of the scholar.

It is not surprising that this is true. Any translation from one language into another must of necessity have a certain degree of freedom in order for the ideas to be transferred. This takes on the color of the vocabulary of the individual who does the translating.

Any change in poetic eloquence in the Inspired Version, verses 11 to 25, from that of other verses within the book can easily be understood in the light of Joseph Smith's vocabulary and capacity to express himself.

Book of Mormon language, in view of the fact that Joseph Smith did the translating, took on something of the color of the translator. It is not surprising, therefore, to find that interpolation in the Inspired Version also would have something of the same literary tone.

Question

What is the purpose of our assignment to a tribe in our patriarchal blessing?

Mrs. D. R.

Michigan

Answer

This practice is understood through the background of thinking that gave rise to it. For several years members of the church were quite interested in assignment to a tribe of Israel when they received their patriarchal blessings as an expression of specific reception by God. It is likely that the foundation for this kind of concern lay in the pattern of thinking set forth in Paul's epistle to the Romans. He was speaking of non-Jews who became believers in Christ as coming into the heritage of the Jews. They were as branches grafted into the main stock. It also appears that Jesus often thought of specific locations of the several tribes in the kingdom. John carries out this picture in the celestial city of Revelation. In this sense converts who were Gentiles would be thought of as being assigned to one of these Hebrew tribes. This was used when members in a patriarchal blessing wanted assurance of their place with God.

Today, there is relatively little interest in this tribal assignment. Saints are concerned with their relationship with Jesus Christ and their acceptance by him, rather than with specific assignment to a tribe. This outlook on communion with God supersedes anxiety over advantage and security and specific placement. As a rule unless there is some reason for indicating this tribal assignment, the matter is not mentioned. I consider this a mark of spiritual development in our people.

Question

A man who doesn't have the gospel commits a robbery and murder. Does he have a chance of forgiveness in the sight of God? What is our responsibility toward telling him the gospel?

M. L.

Missouri

Answer

There is ample evidence to indicate that those who are ignorant of the laws of God are not held accountable by God for the wrongs which they do in their ignorance. Persons who commit robberies and murders, however, are often partially, at least, aware of the evils of these crimes, even though they may not have heard the gospel.

Any such person who later learns of the gospel and accepts it and unreservedly repents of his error is a fit candidate for forgiveness by God. This would be true if the sin committed were robbery and murder as well as if it were some other sin.

Those who have accepted Christ are always under responsibility to witness of him. They should teach the gospel to all those who have not heard it and bear their testimony of the divinity of Christ and his church. Those who have accepted the gospel have the responsibility to witness it to all people, without regard to the previous sins these people may have committed.

Tract Review

Making Your Decision for Christ

Making YOUR Decision for CHRIST.

This new tract is authored by Donald D. Landon, research assistant for the Missions Abroad Research Committee. He is also the author of the tract How the Book of Mormon Confirms the Message of Christ which has been revised and renamed, The Book of Mormon Is Christian.

This tract was developed from a sermon that Brother Landon once preached. It is an appeal to the non-Christian to seriously consider the need for choosing a new way of life under Christ's direction.

The opening paragraphs use an illustration which points up the need we all have for checking the perspective we have toward the "important" things of life. Often we discover that some of the simpler things of life are more important than those luxurious things we now hold dear. He puts it: "Man has to decide how to assure a future for that part of himself which was designed for a future."

The topic heads which outline the contents of this tract include "Man Confesses His Need," "Christ or False Christ?" "He Can't Be Ignored," "Meeting Ourselves," "Choosing Him and All That Bears Record of Him," and "A Decision to Triumph."

Brother Landon admits that "a decision for Christ is complicated by the presence of many churches claiming to represent Christ, yet teaching conflicting doctrines." So he points out that a decision for Christ "involves more than just accepting him." He suggests things that the searcher for truth should watch for in deciding which church truly represents Christ.

This tract sells for 10 cents a single copy.

Honor Roll

The office of the educational director of the School of Nursing has announced the five top ranking students in the first year class for the summer quarter. These honor students are Mildred Carter, Marjorie Doig, Kay Pinson, and Barbara Thoman of Independence and Shirley Worthington of Alpena, Michigan.

"San" Students Honored

Kay Sheehy of Louisville, Kentucky, and Doreen Carpenter of Fulton, New York, have been elected to student council officers by their eighty-five fellow affiliating students at the St. Louis State Psychiatric Hospital. These eighty-five students represent ten schools of nursing in this area. Kay is the student president and Doreen the treasurer.

Watermelon Feed

Mr. and Mrs. Helmut Land again opened their home to students at the School of Nursing on September 3. The first fellowship of the new school year was held on their lawn. This was a combination of welcome to the forty-two new freshmen and a watermelon feed. Chaplain Robert Farnham was in charge of the service.

Student Nurses Entertain "Town" Families

The student nurses chose the evening of August 21 to show their appreciation for the many kindnesses rendered them by their "town" families. These Independence families have opened their homes to the girls who are away from their own homes. The student nurses had a watermelon feed to show their appreciation of these fine people. Activities for the evening were under the leadership of Betty Burkhead of Fairbanks, Alaska; Phyllis Phillips of New Canton, Illinois; and Joy Carlile of Independence.

Library Moved to New Quarters

The student nurses will have adequate library space this fall. This is really a progressive event in the school's history. The library has been housed in three very small rooms adjacent to the student lounge. The moving of the cafeteria to the new addition of the hospital has made it possible to move the library to the space vacated by the cafeteria on the third floor of the Nurses' Residence.

The library is now a cheerful, attractively furnished place to study. Mrs. Myrtle Quit-myer is the librarian. Student nurses on the library committee are Meredith Cornell of Minot, North Dakota, and Shirley Worthington of Alpena, Michigan.

Freshmen Entertained

Freshman class members were entertained by their nutrition instructor, Mrs. Marion Beining, on August 27. A chili supper in August may sound strange for Missouri, but the cool evening made such an occasion very enjoyable. Lynda Brundige, class president, took advantage of having the class assembled and conducted a class meeting in which final plans were made for welcoming the new "little sisters," the freshmen who enrolled September 1.

THE CONFERENCE CHAMBER

These are busy days in the Auditorium, particularly in the General Conference Chamber where skilled workmen are engaged in setting up the seats. Two great church seals are in place at the back of the platform, now covered with carpet. A truly beautiful scene will await Conference visitors when they come.

Part of the cause of delay in getting the seats in place has been the policy of ordering nothing until the money was on hand to pay for it. Everything on this job has been paid for with cash. When the General Conference meets in October, the delegates will have no debt to think about.

The new walks and porticoes will be great conveniences to Conference crowds in getting into and out of the buildings. They are beautiful, and some excellent pictures of them have been taken by church photographers.

Orville Guy Helm

ORVILLE GUY HELM has been a high priest and a member of the Kansas City Stake High Council since 1938. He is well qualified for the work. His record includes thirteen years as a pastor in the stake.

He was baptized when he was twenty years old. "It brings pleasant memories when I recall those who took a personal interest in me in those days when I was a new member in the church," he said. "From pastors and others I learned much which was helpful in later years."

Brother Helm left high school to work when he was a young man. Later he returned to school and was graduated when he was thirty-one years old. He worked for the post office department for over thirty years and retired in 1956. He now works with a son-in-law in a printing business.

He married Mary E. Stobaugh in 1917. They have two daughters, Mrs. Dorothy M. Rideout and Mrs. Irene L. Settles.

One of Brother Helm's chief interests is a collection of tape recordings which he has been building. The tapes include mostly organ and vocal music. He has frequent use for these in church, reunion, and youth camp meetings.

The Little Flock

VERY RECENTLY it was a privilege to visit a church congregation that might be called a "little flock" to whom it has been God's good pleasure to give a foretaste of his kingdom.

This apparently has been possible because the people of this little flock have made it their good pleasure and their devotion to give back to God a living example of his kingdom among themselves. The giving has been more than a one-way matter.

In a private conversation the pastor explained: "There is no division among our people—neither among themselves nor between them and me. There is no division between us and God, so far as I know. In a spirit of love we have tried to be one because we have wanted to be one."

It was a beautiful experience to visit in the home of the pastor and his family, and to find there the same spirit that prevailed at the church. In that home, too, there was a purpose to give back to God an example of what one small corner of his kingdom should be. God gave something wonderful to these people, and they are giving something wonderful back to him.

If we really understand, we are thankful to God for the great gifts that he sends to us. Is it not reasonable to believe that he is appreciative of the gifts his children offer back to him?

There are several other indications that the kingdom of God has been at work among the members of the little flock.

Their church school classes have a good attendance, with lively interest and discussion. Young people are generously represented. Their chapel is well filled with worshipers at the preaching services, with many families, and again many fine young people.

Finally, the Wednesday evening prayer meetings are unusually large and very active. This is wonderful, since the prayer meeting is by some considered as the spiritual barometer of the branch.

This little flock has a prayer list that is an item of major concern for the people. Intercessory prayer is at the very heart of their faith. They pray for the sick of their own congregation, but they also include many who are members of other congregations, many isolated ones, and friends who are far away. They really maintain a circle of prayer. And this is one of the marks of a kingdom-minded people.

This congregation has special problems that do not trouble the ordinary branch. It is located in a university community. It provides not only a spiritual home for the resident group but also a temporary, friendly church home for the young people of the church who are in residence to study. The resident group includes families, with parents, older people, business and professional persons, and many children. Some of them are members of the university faculty. The others are students working for their degrees.

Each commencement sees a number of students move away; each fall brings a new group. It takes something for the pastor and his helpers to provide a ministry that will give the necessary spiritual life and inspiration to both groups. Yet they manage to do an excellent work all around.

The task is made easier by the fact that nobody acts selfishly, everybody is willing to help for the sake of others, and newcomers are quickly welcomed into the circle.

It would appear that the success of these people in their efforts has come from the fact that they have kept in mind the importance of the spiritual foundations of the kingdom of God.

Everything depends upon the character of the little flock. Littleness, of course, is only incidental; it is not the key to success. But quality is important. There is no substitute for it.

All the branches of the church could learn something from the little flock. And, if the people wished it, every branch in the church could do what the little flock does and become the kind of group that the little flock is.

Expenses of Delegates to General Conference Deductible as Charitable Contributions

RECENT Internal Revenue Rulings now make it possible for persons attending General Conference as delegates to deduct their actual, unreimbursed expenses as a contribution to a charitable organization.

Internal Revenue Ruling 56-508, C.B. 1956-2,126, holds that out-of-pocket expenses incurred by individuals for transportation to and from a local hospital or a local church for the purpose of rendering volunteer services to the American Red Cross or to the church constitute contributions within the meaning of section 170 of the 1954 Code and are deductible in computing taxable income. However, the cost of meals, unless such meals are necessarily incurred while away from home overnight in the course of rendering the volunteer services, constitutes a nondeductible personal expense.

In view of the foregoing, it is held that the actual unreimbursed expense incurred by a lay member of a church in attending, as a delegate, a church convention, the unreimbursed expenses incurred by a member of the American Legion in attending, as a delegate, an American Legion Convention, and unreimbursed expenses directly connected with and solely attributable to the rendition of such volunteer services by them to the church or to the American Legion, constitute contributions within the meaning of section 170 of the 1954 Code and are deductible in computing taxable income to the extent provided therein. As to situations where the cost of meals and other personal expenses are nondeductible see Rev. Rul. 56-508 supra.

I.T. 1988, C.B. III-1, 198 (1924), which holds that the expenses of a delegate to a church conference or to an American Legion Convention paid by himself are not charitable contributions but personal expenses and, therefore, not deductible, is hereby revoked.

As indicated, the cost of meals for those traveling to Conference and staying overnight are deductible, also the cost of transportation and lodging. It would be advisable for delegates to keep some evidence of these expenses so that they can take full advantage of this ruling in filing their 1958 Federal Income Tax.

Across the Desk

From Apostle D. Blair Jensen:

On August 3, in the company of H. O. Plumb, president of the Joplin District, I organized the Neosho, Missouri, Branch. Brother Robert Lynch, mission pastor for the past year, was elected branch pastor.

The purchasing of property and the moving out of an upstairs hall a year ago have been very helpful to these people. They have been able to reach out some distance in the surrounding areas and bring some members into rather regular attendance with them.

On Saturday evening, September 6, assisted by Springfield District President Harry Doty, I organized the Mansfield, Missouri, mission into a branch, and Brother Kenneth Cady was continued as pastor.

From Elder Calvin V. French, president of the Philadelphia Metropolitan District:

This year we have baptized the largest number ever recorded in a comparable period during the past five years. . . . More people have kept the financial law in the district this year than in any other year in its history. Philadelphia was one of the first districts in the church to surpass their total for 1957. . . .

The past year has been the best in the expansion of our physical plants. Hadonfield purchased a building one year ago, and in two weeks the dedication and burning of the mortgage will take place. First Church and Chapel have raised close to $25,000 during the first six months of 1958 toward a building program. Delaware County and Levittown missions have worked diligently on their building funds with the goal of expanding soon to their own facilities. Members of the Allentown group have recently discussed increasing their efforts toward a building fund program. . . .

Since last September, eighteen men have been called to the priesthood. This makes a total of twenty-eight men that the Lord has called during the past two years. This has added tremendous spiritual strength to our district.

RESTORATION WITNESSES

By Roy Weldon

IT IS MY PURPOSE in this intermittent series of articles on Restoration witnesses to examine problems of our day and age in the light of the Three Standard Books of the Restoration movement. Much that has been published in the religious world about problems of our age is based upon the King James Version. This needs reappraisal in terms of the Restoration Scriptures.

In the last installment I dealt with the amazing, dove-tailing agreement between the prophets of the Doctrine and Covenants, the Book of Mormon, and the Inspired Version of the Bible. I am well aware that books have been written claiming there are disagreements and disunity between the writers of the King James Version. I have recently perused one of these, Thomas Paine's The Age of Reason.

I may deal with some of Thomas Paine's objections to the Bible (King James) at a later time. Suffice it to say that the material advanced by these opponents to the King James Scriptures does not affect the remarkable congruity that exists between the writers of the Restoration's Three Sacred Books.

Findings of the Prophets and Philosophers Compared

In our previous articles we noted the extraordinary and amazing unanimity and agreement that exists between the prophets on literally hundreds of subjects. In preparation for this article I carefully read Will Durant's famous book, The Story of Philosophy (over 1,250,000 copies sold). The philosophers appear to be greatly at cross-purposes. They attack each other's theories and teachings and undermine each other's positions; this is directly opposite to the situation existing in the Scriptures. We do not have the spectacle of Paul undermining Nephi, or Joseph Smith attacking teachings advanced by Isaiah. In fact this phenomenon of coherence between the prophets of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants is apparently a literary marvel that does not exist between any other comparable large group of writers. In fact, the Inspired Version in Genesis 7:23 says, "And the Lord called his people, Zion, because they were of one heart and of one mind." This quality of one-mindedness as manifest by the prophets in Restoration Scriptures appears to have no logical explanation other than that they were real prophets drawing upon the inspiration of Divinity.

Bergson aptly sums up the wars in the camps of the philosophers in these words: "I believe that the time given to refutation in philosophy [no refutation in the Restoration's Three Standard Books.—R. W.] is usually time lost; of the many attacks directed by the many thinkers against each other, what now remains? Nothing, or assuredly very little."¹

First it will be well to note that the philosophers and the prophets are concerned with one and the same subject—the existence and nature of God and the purpose and meaning of life (see Durant's Story of Philosophy, page 513).

It appears that down through the ages the majority of the philosophers have chosen, in varying degree, to disbelieve in God, Jesus Christ as the savior, and supernatural revelation.

The great majority of the philosophers lost their faith in God. Their findings about life stand as a striking and amazing fulfillment of the profound statement of Moroni in his closing words of the Book of Mormon: "... if ye have not faith . . . ye have no hope; and if ye have no hope, ye must needs be in despair" (Moroni 10:16).

(For those interested in Book of Mormon research it should be noted that the claim advanced in this quotation—that loss of faith brings despair—was published in 1830. There was apparently no material available to Joseph Smith to verify this claim that despair follows in the wake of unbelief. Therefore the material that follows verifies one of hundreds of Book of Mormon claims upon which painstaking research is now producing co-operation.)

Despair and Pessimism of the Philosophers

DARWIN

"Darwin and Wallace were themselves among the first to admit the profound depths of moral disillusionment which attended the development of their theory."²

A noted professor of British anatomy says, "his [Darwin's] thesis led not to spiritual advancement but to intellectual pessimism."³

H. G. WELLS

"Our universe is not merely bankrupt, there remains no dividend at all . . . the attempt to trace a pattern of any sort is absolutely futile."⁴

ROBERT INGERSOLL

"Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word."⁵

HERBERT SPENCER

". . . the sun will shine less warmly and brightly as the centuries pass away; the friction of the tides will retard the rotation of the earth . . . gradually and then rapidly equilibration will become dissolution, the unhappy epilogue of evolution. Societies will disintegrate, masses will migrate, cities will fade into the dark hinterland of peasant life; no government will be strong enough to hold the loosened parts together; social order will cease to be remembered, and in the individual too, integration will give way to disruption; and that co-ordination which is life will pass into that diffuse disorder which is death. The earth will be a chaotic theatre of decay, a gloomy drama of energy in irreversible degradation; and it will itself be resolved into the dust and nebula from which it came. The cycle of evolution and dissolution will be complete . . . every birth a prelude to decay and death.”⁶

“There was in Spencer an almost Schopenhauerian sense of the futility of human effort. At the end of his triumphant career he expressed his feeling that life was not worth living . . . He knew that people would not relish a philosophy whose last word was not God and heaven, but equilibration and dissolution; and in concluding his First Part he defended with unusual fervor his right to speak the dark truths that he saw.”—Ibid., page 369.

NIETZSCHE

“At eighteen he lost his faith in God and spent the remainder of life looking for a new deity; he thought he found one in the superman . . . He became cynical, like one who has staked all on a single throw of the dice and lost . . . he remained at the bottom an unhappy man, whose nervous system seemed to have been carefully designed for suffering and whose exaltation of tragedy as the joy of life was but another self-deception.”—Ibid., page 404.

BERTRAND RUSSELL

“He can find no God in such a contradictory world; rather, only a humorous Mephistopheles could have produced it, and in a mood of exceptional deviltry. Nevertheless, he will not surrender. If he cannot run, he can at least enjoy the fight; and by the knowledge that foresees his own defeat he stands superior to the blind forces that will destroy him.”—Ibid., page 481.

Stoicism and Epicurianism

(Defeatist Philosophies)

“ . . . The apathetic acceptance of defeat, and the effort to forget defeat in the arms of pleasure.”—Ibid., page 97.

VOLTAIRE

“Who would have expected so gay a host to become the exponent of pessimism?”

“All born for torment and for mutual death, and o’er this ghastly chaos you would say the ills of each make up the good of all. What is the verdict of the vastest mind? Silence. The book of fate is closed to us; man is a stranger to his own research; he knows not whence he comes nor whither he goes.”

“Tormented atoms in a bed of mud.

Devoured by death, a mockery of fate . . .

Seeking a light amid the deepening gloom,

I can but suffer, and will not repine.”

—Ibid., pages 225, 226.

Although Voltaire attacked the church and Christianity as perhaps no previous philosopher had attacked them, yet in his old age, frightened by the spectre of approaching death, he ignominiously crawled back to the church and sent for the “Abbie Gautier to come and hear his last confession.”⁷

ROUSSEAU

“The argument of the ‘Confession’ was briefly this: that though reason might be against belief in God and immortality, feeling was overwhelmingly in their favor; why should we not trust in instinct here rather than yield to the despair of an arid skepticism?”—Ibid., page 260.

SCHOPENHAUER

“Life is evil . . . and if every evil were removed, and strife were altogether ended, boredom would become as intolerable as pain.”

“Finally and above all, life is evil because life is war. Everywhere in nature we see strife, competition, conflict, and a suicidal alternation of victory and defeat.”

“Towards the close of life, every day we live gives us the same kind of sensation as the criminal experiences at every step on the way to the gallows.”

“The less we have to do with women, then, the better. They are not even a necessary evil. Life is safer and smoother without them. Let men recognize the snare that lies in women’s beauty, and the absurd comedy of reproduction will end.”

“ . . . The loveliness of life is a lie and . . . the greatest boon of all is death.”

“The final refuge is suicide. Diogenes is said to have put an end to himself by refusing to breathe—what a victory over the will to live.”—Ibid., pages 324-345.

Humanists, naturalists, and so-called philosophers have voiced loud objection to the Bible (and Book of Mormon) prophets’ declarations that man is a lost and fallen being engulfed in sin and evil and in tragic need of a savior. Such critics will do well to compare the findings of the prophets with the findings of the philosophers. There is one major midday versus midnight difference. The prophets and Christ offer us hope and a way out, while the philosophers of unbelief offer us a dismal swamp of dark despair.

SANTAYANA

“Santayana is poet enough to know that a world quite divested of deity is a cold and uncomfortable home. ‘Why has man’s conscience in the end invariably rebelled against naturalism and reverted in some form or other to a cultus of the unseen? . . . the soul . . . is saddened by the thought of death, and clings to the hope of some power that may make it permanent amid the surrounding flux.’ But Santayana concludes bluntly: ‘I believe there is nothing immortal.’”

Santayana, once a Catholic, “mourns for his lost faith.”

“Exile that I am,

Exile not only from the wind-swept moor,

Where Guadaranna lifts his purple crest,

But from the spirit’s realm, celestial, sure,

Goals of all hope, and vision of the best.”

—Ibid., pages 495, 497.

“That life is worth living,” he says, “is the most necessary of assumptions, and, were it not assumed, the most impossible of conclusions.”—Ibid., page 506.

It almost staggers our credulity to believe that the most brilliant minds of the ages should come to such bleak, desperate conclusions about life. Consider the case of one of America’s most brilliant thinkers who has chosen to disbelieve.

CLARENCE DARROW

“Can a man be happy in a mad house? That is what life is. I take life as it comes, because it is a senseless fool thing that must be lived out because I have sense enough not to do such a messy thing as put a bullet through my head.”⁸

Ten years later Darrow again passed through Kansas City and was interviewed by reporters. When asked whether he had any word for the young people of our time Mr. Darrow replied, “I certainly have no encouragement for the young bloods of today. The sooner they jump out the windows the sooner they will find peace.”⁹

As down through the ages one traverses the arid deserts of the philosophers one finds an occasional green oasis. One of these is William James. He has chosen to believe much his predecessors tossed overboard.

Roy Weldon

WILLIAM JAMES

"James was amazed and attracted by the endless varieties of religious experience and belief . . . He saw some truth in every one of them and demanded an open mind toward every new hope . . . In the end, James was convinced of the reality of another—a spiritual world."¹⁰

After wading through the dry, bleak deserts of the unbelieving philosophers James is as refreshing as a mountain spring.

JOHN DEWEY

Will Durant lists Dewey as the greatest philosopher of our time. Dewey accepts Darwinism at face value and rejects supernaturalism. He says, "The modern era will begin only when the naturalist point of view shall be adopted in every field" (Ibid., pages 522-524).

Dewey appears to have some of the beliefs that led other philosophers to despair. One can scarcely help wondering whether Dewey is repressing pessimism as an admission of weakness, and one wonders further that so many of the great minds of the ages should abjectly admit and confess such weak and dismal conclusions about life. I think Durant's explanation of the pessimistic tendency in philosophers is entirely insufficient. Durant says, "Perhaps the tendency of philosophers toward melancholy is due to the unnaturalness of sedentary occupations; too often an attack upon life is merely a symptom of the lost art of excretion" (Ibid., page 344).

(It should be noted at this point that this article is concerned only with the conclusions of the philosophers about God and life and is therefore in no way casting reflection upon the great contributions of the philosophers to the literary and scientific advancement of man.)

As noted at the beginning (quote from Bergson) when the philosophers get done with their attacks on each other, nothing is left. We believe this statement should be amended. The philosophers do have something left. With few exceptions (Dewey, Bergson, and others) they have one thing left in common—a dark, dank sea of pessimism. If choosing to believe or disbelieve in God, Christ, and revelation were reduced to the simplicity of choosing what we eat, who would choose the bitter, loathsome menu of the unbelieving philosophers when the sweet, refreshing, soul-enlivening bread of the prophets is available?

The Conclusions of the Prophets

Herbert Spencer, the noted British philosopher, apparently had everything human ambition could ask—success, prestige, wealth, fame—yet at the end of his career he declared life was not worth living. Schopenhauer lived in peace, quietness, and financial sufficiency, yet he described the closing years of life "as the march of the condemned to the gallows."

Let us contrast Spencer and Schopenhauer with the prophet Joseph Smith—a contrast between unbelief and belief. Joseph Smith and his wife had eight children. Only three survived the rigors of their life of persecution and mob violence to reach maturity. Joseph Smith was arrested and thrown in jail over thirty times. He and his brother Hyrum were finally shot to death by a mob in Carthage, Illinois. It would appear Joseph Smith had far more reason to be bitter and disillusioned about life than the Spencers, Schopenhauers, Kants, Nietzsches, and Darrows, yet apparently fully conscious of the immediacy of the fate that awaited him, Joseph Smith penned these last glorious, soul-reviving words:

Brethren, shall we not go on in so great a cause? Go forward and not backward. Courage, brethren; and on, on to the victory! Let your hearts rejoice, and be exceeding glad. Let the earth break forth into singing. Let the dead speak forth anthems of eternal praise to the King Immanuel, who hath ordained before the world was that which would enable us to redeem them out of their prisons; for the prisoners shall go free. Let the mountains shout for joy, and all ye valleys cry aloud; and all ye seas and dry lands tell the wonders of your eternal King. And ye rivers, and brooks, and rills, flow down with gladness. Let the woods and all the trees of the field praise the Lord; and ye solid rocks weep for joy. And let the sun, moon, and the morning stars sing together, and let all the sons of God shout for joy. And let the eternal creations declare his name for ever and ever. And again I say, How glorious is the voice we hear from heaven, proclaiming in our ears, glory, and salvation, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life; kingdoms, principalities, and powers.—Doctrine and Covenants 110: 22, 23.

As the end of his career loomed ahead Paul said, "And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy."—Acts 20: 22-24.

"And Joseph said unto his brethren, I die, and go unto my fathers; and I go down to my grave with joy."—Genesis 50: 24, I.V.

For the joy that was set before him—"Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross."—Hebrews 12: 2.

I refer briefly to a few more instances and phrases characteristic of the unbounded joy and optimism of the prophets.

I Peter 1: 8—"Rejoice with joy unspeakable."

Isaiah 65: 14—"My servants shall sing for joy of heart."

II Nephi 1: 115—"Men are, that they might have joy."

Luke 2: 8-11—"Angels bring glad tidings of great joy."

Psalm 16: 9-11—"In thy presence is fulness of joy."

Psalm 22: 1—"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord."

Matthew 5: 13, 14—"And blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you. . . . For ye shall have great joy, and be exceeding glad."

Acts 13: 52—"And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost."

As on all other subjects the prophets and writers of the Three Standard Books of the Restoration movement (Inspired Version of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants) appear in complete harmony on the subject of joy and optimism as products of belief in God and acceptance of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

They also appear to agree that the results of turning away from belief in divinity are as the philosophers have indicated and as aptly put by Jeremiah: "it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God" (Jeremiah 2: 19).

Personal Testimony

In conclusion, I speak from personal experience. I believe as a normal man I have tasted most of the good things of life—health, home, family, sons I am proud of, a vocation I like, a medium of business success. Yet I can truthfully say that the greatest, deepest, and most overwhelming joy I have tasted has been those joys and satisfactions that have swept my soul as the Lord has poured out his spirit as I have associated myself with the congregations of his people in the ongoing work of the Restoration movement.

In the next presentation I hope to compare the findings of the men of science with the prophets of the Three Standard Books of the Restoration.

In a later presentation I hope to deal with the subject "The Doctrine and Covenants Proves Joseph Smith a Prophet."

Doing justice to this requires a lot of research. I have some excellent material prepared by C. E. Miller and the late C. W. Clark. I will welcome further contributions and give credit if material is used.

LCDR John Stull

I Had an Experience

FOUR AND A HALF YEARS ago I was staff navigator for a U. S. Navy Transport Division operating in the Mediterranean. I became ill, and surgery aboard ship and six miserable weeks in my bunk effected no cure. The Division was in the port of Livorno in northern Italy when the doctor admitted that he could do no more aboard ship, classed me as a litter case, and arranged for me to be flown to a large hospital in Naples for further diagnosis and shipment back to the States.

An ambulance transported me from pier to plane, and another met the plane at Naples and took me to the hospital. I was given an initial examination on arrival. The doctor stated that he could not detect any of the symptoms spelled out in my medical record, but that I would be given a more thorough examination in the morning. After an uneasy night, I faced the assembled medicos. To the astonishment of all, including me, my illness had vanished when I arrived in Naples, taking with it the scar from the shipboard operation, the debility from the prolonged weeks in bed, and all pain. The doctors in Naples were confounded, but that was nothing compared to the astonishment on the faces of the doctor aboard ship and my shipmates when I rejoined the staff, hale and hearty, scarcely three days after my feeble departure. I cabled my wife the good news.

She answered that it was no surprise. When my letters informed her of my expected departure for Naples and the plans to fly home for a more complicated operation, my mother-in-law, who had been praying for me for years, phoned the pastors of two branches and requested prayers in my behalf. My wife, her mother, and a dear friend had held little private prayer meetings and had prayed diligently in faith that I would be healed. My wife may not have been surprised, but I still feel astonishment as I hold my "miracle" close to keep it ever present in my mind and heart.

At that time, I was not a member of this restored church nor even a moderately interested bystander, but my healing had put me in a more than normally receptive mood for what was to come. Soon after this a letter arrived from my wife saying that as she had been writing, a voice, not in the room, had said, "He will preach the gospel." Her reaction was that she was finally able to relax and be at peace with the Navy and our life of separations, knowing that God was reaching out to us, and she concluded her letter by suggesting that I prepare myself. My reaction to this was mixed, and confusion reigned. One side of me seemed to cry out for confirmation of Babbie's experience. The other side seemed to say that she had gone off the deep end and, to be honest, this latter side was in the lead.

Nothing more happened for two years. I didn't find too much to admire in this church. I resented most sermons I heard as being just like the "once over lightly" platitudes to be found in pulpits anywhere, and I found the members singularly unfriendly. Then one day Jack Conway, the pastor of the Washington, D. C., branch, came to lunch at the Pentagon, where I had since been ordered. The discussion between us became quite heated and he finally said, "John, the question is not whether the sermons are good, the people friendly, or anything else. The question is Jesus Christ and where you stand in regard to him!" At that moment, I was overcome with a feeling of the rightness of this church. As I walked back to my section in the Office of Naval Intelligence, the giant hallways were suffused with a radiant glow, and I felt the light of God's Son.

My daughter, Sinara, and I were baptized within a couple of weeks. Less than three months later, I was called to the office of priest. Babbie heard correctly, and I am privileged to preach the restored gospel. I didn't have just an experience. Working in this cause is a continuing experience, an increasing blessing as each day passes and God continues to touch our lives.

Salvation Is Free

HAVE YOU HEARD? But then of course sometime or other you have heard the announcer on the radio who says, "Auto Lite brings you this tale well calculated to keep you in suspense." My story is somewhat different. It is calculated to keep about 75 per cent of us who bear the name of Christ's church absolutely ashamed until our actions prove we have viewed ourselves in a clear mirror of understanding . . . and about 13 per cent more of us not quite so absolutely ashamed.

For some time a question here and a remark there about this business of "salvation is free" has kept a few thoughts milling around in my mind. Recently, an hour usually allotted to fellowship service was used for guided discussion of the Restoration story, and during the discussion we got around to this same oft-repeated statement, "Salvation is free."

Wrong Conception

I have thought over a period of years that most of us have the wrong conception of the true meaning of free salvation. Let us say that the "plan of salvation" is as free as the air we breathe; but after accepting this free pattern as our blueprint for living, the cost is great—not just in money, for the money cost is the very least of it. One brother said something that made me want to hang my head in shame. He said, "Yes, most people say salvation is free, and judging from the bishop's records more Reorganized Latter Day Saints believe this than any other people."

Salvation is not free! To be a successful member of Christ's church costs more than you ever dreamed, in more ways than you thought possible. It costs you hours, days, months, and years of study. In fact, that debt of study for a progressive member of Christ's church is one that can never quite reach the place where the page is stamped paid and the book closed.

Again it costs countless thousands of minutes of prayer. And judging by my own, when I occasionally take stock, only a few hundred of those thousands will be prayers of thanksgiving.

Salvation often demands sacrifice, and there are so many things that we as individuals want to hang onto. Mary won't be baptized because she thinks it too great a sacrifice to give up dancing. Knowing that the church disapproves of dancing as a pastime, she feels that to give it up would be just too much. But then while I think of Mary as being foolish (I don't care for dancing), I take a look in the mirror at myself. It has been more than a third of a century since I was baptized. How many hours, months, and years of that time were wasted on trivial matters that did not further my knowledge of Christ's work? How much was used to impart what small degree of knowledge I had gained to others?

A Poor Record

Many of us are ashamed that we, the older members, have not lived close enough to the gospel law of Christ to save our natural increase to the church. We are ashamed that our homes are not such that our young people would feel no need to look elsewhere for entertainment, for comfort, and in many cases for love—a love that makes them know that if here and now Dad and Mom love them with so great a love, they cannot afford to take any risk of losing the wonderful love of God.

Some time ago an apostle spoke to us at a fellowship hour. In all humbleness he told us that too many branches of our church were not adequately meeting the needs of a great percentage of the people on the branch record book or of the people in the surrounding communities. Our shame in this instance was accompanied by a prayer that we might grow stronger, acquire greater knowledge, and be filled with the love of God for humanity to such an extent that we would repeat the story of salvation to all who would hear.

Sins of Omission

There may be some agony attached to full-fledged salvation—agony that sears the heart as we see loved ones who, in spite of years of church background, seem to prefer the dark side of the street and waste talent that could bring a richness to their own lives and light the candle of service for many another. It is true agony of soul when we see young fathers and mothers (because of our neglect) failing to establish homes that invite Christ to be a welcome guest. We suffer, too, when we seek to comfort a friend whose loved one has died without a knowledge of the gospel which he or she might have believed had we witnessed for Him.

It is agony to be sixteen and unable to express before others, especially one's own branch members, the love stored within oneself for Christ and friends. So the young fail, not only to express such love, but also to do the things that their hearts bid them to do.

The Cost

Salvation through the gospel is not free, for nothing under God's heaven can be ours without payment in love, in service, in knowledge, in faith, in prayer, and in sincere expression of thanks for the love of our Father in heaven.

To obtain salvation lays upon our shoulders a debt so great that only through loving service to our fellow men—holding their hand in one of ours while drawing it toward the other which is clasped in the hand of God—can we cancel our debt.

Finally we come to that great day when our Lord's eyes hold for us a welcome, and we see among the throng of those who are singing "Hallelujah to the Lamb" the face of one to whom we gave the glad message of the gospel. Then our joy shall be full. Then and only then can we with understanding and joy say, "We have paid the price. Salvation is ours."

Growing toward Zion

Therefore not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection. — Hebrews 6: 1.

Needed: a leaven

If a small number of our members were completely selfless, completely Christian, their example would act as a leavening agent does to bread, completely transforming entire communities to a Zion condition. To realize this majestic goal seems almost unattainable in this sophisticated age; yet, truly, if we do grow toward selflessness, the exalted goal will, to the degree that we do grow, seem and be more within our grasp.

A tool for Zion building

A tool that will aid in Zion building is a very old one and, curiously, one that presently is little employed. This tool consists simply of keeping a daily record of the “ups” and “downs” of specific character traits which we would like to strengthen or to obtain.

The classic expression of this method of working toward moral perfection was given to us by Benjamin Franklin in his Autobiography. Franklin hit upon this method first by reasoning that “the mere speculative conviction that it was our interest to be completely virtuous, was not sufficient to prevent our slipping; and that the contrary habits must be broken, and good ones acquired and established, before we can have any dependence on a steady, uniform rectitude of conduct.” Arriving at this conclusion, he searched for listings of virtues which seemed to fit his needs. Then he annexed a short precept that summarized the meaning ascribed to each virtue; these virtues and their precepts are as follows:

1. Temperance: Eat not to dullness; drink not to elevation.
2. Silence: Speak not but what may benefit others or yourself; avoid trifling conversation.
3. Order: Let all your things have their places; let each part of your business have its time.
4. Resolution: Resolve to perform what you ought; perform without fail what you resolve.
5. Frugality: Make no expense but to do good to others or yourself; i.e., waste nothing.
6. Industry: Lose no time; be always employed in something useful; cut off all unnecessary actions.
7. Sincerity: Use no hurtful deceit; think innocently and justly; and, if you speak, speak accordingly.
8. Justice: Wrong none by doing injuries, or omitting the benefits that are your duty.
9. Moderation: Avoid extremes; forbear resenting injuries so much as you think they deserve.
10. Cleanliness: Tolerate no uncleanness in body, clothes, or habitation.
11. Tranquillity: Be not disturbed at trifles or at accidents common or unavoidable.
12. Humility: Imitate Jesus and Socrates.

Franklin clearly recognized the need for a specific and pointed day-by-day method of growing spiritually; and in his time he popularized this common-sense way of stimulating spiritual growth. It was Franklin’s intention to “acquire the habitude” of all these virtues. To do this he made a “little book,” describing its manufacture as follows:

I allotted a page for each of the virtues. I ruled each page with red ink, so as to have seven columns, one for each day of the week, marking each column with a letter for the day. I crossed these columns with thirteen red lines, marking the beginning of each line with the first letter of one of the virtues, on which line, and in its proper column, I might mark, by a little black spot, every fault I found upon examination to have committed respecting that virtue upon that day. I determined to give a week’s strict attention to each virtue successively . . . leaving the other virtues to their ordinary chance, only marking every evening the faults of the day.

He thought that this method would be most efficacious and would be “like him who, having a garden to weed, does not attempt to eradicate all the bad herbs at once, which would exceed his reach and his strength, but works on one of the beds at a time, and, having accomplished the first, proceeds to a second.” In this way, he reasoned, “in the end, by a number of courses, I should be happy in viewing a clear book . . .”

Grooming the method to fit the grower

Can we not also use this “record-keeping” method as an effective tool in bringing Zion closer to reality? Clearly Franklin’s virtues do not completely fit our own needs. Any one, for example, might have other virtues more meaningful to him or other facets of these same virtues upon which he would prefer to concentrate his self-improvement efforts. A six-year-old child might describe generosity as “sharing toys with others, even with those who do not share theirs.” Two years later his description of generosity might be very different. Similarly, most Latter Day Saints would not be challenged by Franklin’s virtue of temperance; cheerfulness, prayerfulness, or keeping the financial law, for example, might be substituted for several of Franklin's virtues.

Compiling individual lists of virtues in itself brings up several questions:

- (1) How much variation would there be in virtue lists, thoughtfully prepared, of all age groups of both sexes?
- (2) How much spiritual evolution would be shown by comparing the list of a seasoned missionary with that of a new member?
- (3) If this program were made a family project, would each member make an entirely different list of virtues, or have about the same virtues but define them differently?
- (4) Are there any church members whom you would nominate as nearly morally perfect?

We all have faults, each one of which keeps us from that perfection which we are admonished to attain. Because this is so, let us do something about our shortcomings by trying hard to erase them. Those who wish to embark upon this kind of adventure in character building (recording, perhaps, their triumphs as well as their lapses), will soon find, as Franklin did, that bad habits are replaced by good ones only by considerable effort but they can be replaced.

Franklin experienced many relapses and moments of painful attention to his faults, concluding that he was "almost ready to give up the attempt, and content myself with a faulty character in that respect, like the man, who, in buying an axe of a smith, my neighbour, desired to have the whole of its surface as bright as the edge. The smith consented to grind it bright for him if he would turn the wheel; he turned while the smith pressed the broad face of the axe hard and heavily on the stone which made the turning of it very fatiguing. The man came every now and then from the wheel to see how the work went on, and at length would take his axe as it was, without further grinding. 'No,' said the smith, 'turn on, turn on; we shall have it bright by and by; as yet, it is only speckled.' 'Yes,' said the man, 'but I think I like a speckled axe best.'

Come, let us strive for that bright axe!

Elbert A. Smith

A Prayer of Blessing

Being alone in my home on a Sunday afternoon, August 24, I felt the urge to indict a prayer of blessing to be upon all those of the church membership in need of divine aid and willing to receive it. I am persuaded that all who are so minded will have help.

O God, our heavenly Father, most humbly I do beseech thy blessing to be upon thy church and upon the individual members of thy church, to each according to his or her personal need.

We dwell in the shadow of great danger which threatens all people. These are such times as the prophets warned us would come in the latter days when peace should "be taken from the earth." But with the warning went promises of blessing to all those who love thee and keep thy commandments. Forgive us, Lord, our blunders and our shortcomings. May we from this time on serve thee more diligently and more intelligently. May thy people be blessed as never before with unity and good will, with light and divine guidance, for this is a time of great need.

Wilt thou bless in an especial manner and to a degree not before enjoyed those who bear heavy ministerial and administrative responsibility. I pray thee to bless the members of the First Presidency, the Apostles, and the Presiding Bishopric who so continually bear heavy burdens and so often face difficult problems.

Bless all members of the priesthood everywhere, even those who minister to the smallest of our congregations in the most distant parts of the world. Forget not, I pray thee, those who labor in the central places, the hope of Zion. May their strength and inspiration be increased fully to the measure of their need.

Bless those devoted women of the church who serve according to their gifts and talents in the branches and departments of the church. Thou knowest the needs of each. May their needs be fully met.

In an especial manner bless the women who are homemakers and homebuilders that they and their companions may build godly and enduring homes from which may come the next generation to serve the church. Bless the homes that are truly devoted to thee, and reach out and help us reclaim the homes in which there is contention and worldly folly.

Most humbly I invoke thy blessing to be upon the coming General Conference. May it be a time of unity and peace and good will, and may there be given an understanding of thy will and the needs of the work. May the spirit of revelation be present in rich measure. Once more I invoke thy blessing to be upon thy church now and evermore. Amen.

A Talk with President Grice

By Roger Yarrington

AROUND GRACELAND people are saying Harvey Grice is the best thing that has happened to the college in a long time.

Already he is at home in the office of the college president. Visiting him, one notices immediately that his conversation is flecked with terms learned in industry and the military. But these blend easily with the language of the academician and of the minister which he also speaks.

President Grice learned the language of the industrialist in his over twenty years with General Foods Corporation. Before becoming president of Graceland College on July 1, he was manager of manufacturing and engineering at the company's Kankakee, Illinois, operations.

He picked up the language of the military as Division Chemical Officer for the famous Rainbow Division during World War II. He served in France, Germany, and Austria and still holds a reserve commission as lieutenant colonel.

Speaking of his work with General Foods Corporation, President Grice says, "Manufacturing and management was a job I was prepared for and enjoyed. I can't think of anything I could enjoy more." He began work with General Foods in 1928—before he left high school. After completing his Ph.D. degree at Ohio State in chemical engineering in 1941 he went to work for the company full time and worked his way up through a series of jobs in research, manufacturing and engineering.

Why was he willing to leave a job he liked so well?

"All of us dream of doing something better, not because it is more enjoyable but because it is more worth while," he explained. "The opportunity of becoming president of the church college seemed to me a chance to do something more worth while. You may say I wanted to come here as a matter of improving my stewardship."

Needs of the College

Dr. Grice has a businessman's eye for sizing up the situation in a hurry. After only three weeks on the campus he had interviewed at length many of the administrative officers and faculty members and had made a foot-by-foot survey of the buildings and campus.

The most pressing need facing the college, he said, was for additional facilities.

"Right now we need (1) a new food service center, (2) a girls' dormitory, and (3) more physical education facilities. These are our present bottlenecks. Other necessary facilities will follow, if we will properly serve our youth and the church.

"We have set 685 as our maximum enrollment for this year. However, we have over 700 applications. We need these additional facilities if we are going to take care of all the church youth who want in—and who should get in—the church college."

Dr. Grice ticked off other needs he saw:

There is a need for training faculty replacements. A few instructors are near retirement, others periodically desire leaves of absence.

The four-year program in religion needs to be continued, expanded, and accredited. Its value to our church should be very great.

And, in back of it all, there needs to be a long-range development program for the college—a program with definite objectives for the school's curriculum and facilities.

A Growing Graceland

It is on the subject of Graceland's future development that Dr. Grice shows the most enthusiasm.

"I hope to be here for twenty years," he said. "So, naturally, I would like to see a twenty-year program of development with objectives clearly stated. This is where I intend to concentrate my personal experience and energies."

What is his dream for Graceland? Without a moment's hesitation the answer comes back, "A Graceland University, of course."

"One of my first impressions as I attended the graduation ceremonies last spring was, It's too bad we have to release these young people from Graceland with just two years of training when in four years we could accomplish so much more for them, for the church, and for the world.

"I am very proud that Graceland is capable of carrying on a four-year program in religion. Personally, I feel we ought to expand into other areas as we are able. I hope for a Graceland fully staffed and equipped to meet all the educational needs of the youth of the church.

"However, if this is not advisable and it turns out to be wiser to establish other Gracelands, I expect Graceland to be prepared to send out educational and administrative cadre to staff other such colleges.

"Graceland Hill may become our 'Mount Zion' of education—the point from which the Restoration philosophy goes out to influence other places of learning. I would like to see our Graceland graduates occupying seats of responsibility in many other educational institutions of the world."

Church's Responsibilities

Dr. Grice sees three great responsibilities for the church in accomplishing Graceland's goals:

First, the church has the responsibility of inspiring young men and women to prepare themselves to become qualified instructors at the church college.

Second, there is a responsibility to provide the raw material—the students—from good homes, with good church training, and with good motivations for learning and serving.

Third, it is the church's responsibility to provide the necessary funds to enable the college to accept any and all who are properly qualified and wish to attend.

He feels confident that the church will measure up to these responsibilities in the future because he sees a period of growth and expansion for the church ahead.

"There seems to be an increased interest in implementing the principles of the gathering and stewardship," he noted. "The church everywhere is making an impact on the lives of people. If we continue our instruction and hold to the law, there is a good possibility in the next ten years that we will see the establishment of experimental Zionite communities. If we don't bog down, the church is going to achieve a lot in the near future."

Also a Counselor

The Grice family likes Lamoni.

"We have been made very welcome here. There was even a group of college faculty on hand to help us unload when we arrived," Dr. Grice mentioned. "I grew up in a small town like Lamoni. We enjoy living in a small community."

Small-town concern for helping one's neighbors seems to be natural for Dr. Grice. He had been in Lamoni less than three weeks when he joined a group of men from the community who had volunteered to scrape and paint the house of a college custodian who had been ill.

Besides his college duties, Dr. Grice is assuming the responsibility as counselor to the president of Lamoni Stake. He was set apart as a counselor to Elder Harry Simons during the Lamoni Stake reunion in August.

He was ordained a high priest in 1956 and was president of the Northeastern Illinois District before coming to Graceland.

New Enthusiasm

There is no doubt that Dr. Grice is tackling his job with enthusiasm, and already his enthusiasm has spread to others.

On the Graceland campus there seems to be a general agreement that the chief administrative office of the college is in good hands. In the words of one staff member, "Dr. Grice is the kind of man who doesn't leave any doubt in your mind that he is in charge of the situation and that he knows where he's going."

And the people at Graceland like it that way.

A Grandmother's Letter to Her Grandchildren

MY DEAREST GRANDCHILDREN,

This big old house is empty now that you have returned home after your two months' vacation with us.

I miss saying, "David?" and hearing a patient voice replying, "I'm Charles," or "Charles?" and an equally patient voice answering, "I'm Davey." This little interplay of names generally ended with, "But, Gram, you never used to get us mixed!" And the reply was always the same. "The backs of your heads did not used to be so much alike either!"

Upon returning home after delivering you safely to your parents, I tried to consider what your time with "Gramps" and me meant to you, and what it meant to us.

Each of your visits over the years—and you have been coming for longer or shorter periods all your lives—has been a time for looking into the past, projecting ourselves into the future, and living happily in the present.

I remember replying one morning to your "What shall we do today, Gram?" "This is going to be a miscellaneous day—a day made up of many different things." So this letter to you is going to be a miscellaneous letter.

Our view into the past meant telling you stories about my grandmother, your great-great-grandmother; the story about the visit that seven of her small grandchildren made to her over one Fourth of July and how she made a merry-go-round by burning a deep hole in a post with a long red-hot poker which belonged to the very large wood and coal burning stove that stood in the big old-fashioned kitchen and turned out delicious homemade bread and Welsh currant cake which grandmother provided so generously to small, always hungry grandchildren (though we always had to eat our beet tops also because they were "good" for us. They are still good for you, too!). She bolted a sturdy wide plank to the post, and warned us that each child had the right in turn to ride the merry-go-round, then push it for others to ride. It was an equal sharing of labor and pleasure, the lesson that children must learn in order to realize the meaning and importance of "justice for all."

Do you remember with what interest you listened to the story about your great-great-grandmother's corner cupboard with the jar holding peppermint candy sticks? She kept it on the top shelf away from too easy access (though we were good climbers, and a stick of candy in hand always seemed to stay there). It was filled regularly for visiting grandchildren with a sweet tooth. Your great-great-great-grandmother kept a similar candy jar for her great-grandchildren; and your daddy's grandmother in Kirtland never as long as she lived failed to have a supply of his favorite cookies when he visited her.

Then I told you about the welcome visits of our missionaries to our homes in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New York, and how your great-grandmother and great-grandfather permitted us children to "stay up" so that we might hear the marvelous tales they told of their experiences in the towns and cities and countries of the world of their day. After having finally been scooted off to bed, we donned our nightgowns and tiptoed back down the stairs, sitting as quietly as little mice to listen once more until we were discovered by our parents and warned that we would be too sleepy to get up in the morning, so were reluctantly but finally sent to bed.

This rich heritage may not be experienced by you children firsthand in these days, because that special generation of ministers no longer travels the lands, holding the dedicated power and authority of its divine calling. Our present day missionaries have not to encounter the same conditions and problems as were presented in your great-grandfather's day, but you may read interesting stories in the Herald of the experiences of our present day ministers. You recall your Uncle Myron's stormy trip by plane to Alabama to witness the satellite launcher? That was as exciting as any of the Hardy Boys adventures; do you not agree?

All these related memories give you children a background of stability, of established love and consideration of the past and for your future—qualities which you in turn should cultivate so that good memories, good experiences, good ideas and thoughts may be considered in your generation, then handed on to your children and your children's children.

It is important, my dears, that you should look forward to a more distant time than just five or ten years, or until you have finished high school or college. It is important that you should look to your far future, that you should plan to grow in wisdom yourselves and help following generations to develop goodness and wisdom.

Growing in wisdom means that you feed your minds mental food that helps them to grow, just as you feed your bodies physical food which has the proper amount of vitamins, minerals, fat, and proteins for your healthy growth. So watch your mental and spiritual diet. Watch your diet of television and of books. It may easily become unbalanced.

You remember having read in your history books about the discerning judgment of the leaders who wrote our country's Constitution. Because of their understanding we are reaping today, many years later, the benefits of that wisely considered planning. People from all over the world wish to live with us here in our country (and is it not a marvelously beautiful and bountiful land? Remember you spoke of it when you rode in the high dome on the train) because the men and women who established it were forward-looking people who realized that they held in their hands the destiny of children such as you, and of all children for generations to come. It is a pause-and-consider kind of thought, is it not? It is a very important and interesting fact; for it is the same in our families. If each member is wise and good, that wisdom and goodness is handed down beneficently from father to son, and from mother to daughter, so everybody in the family benefits.

It is true also in our church. If we have wise and good leaders, and if each member is wise and good, people will wish to associate with us, just as your friends come to your house because they are happy to be with you.

In our miscellaneous present we have done so many things that it leaves me quite breathless to even think about them. It seems to me I did a great deal of admonishing (though never at seven o'clock in the morning) which you accepted with cheerful grace. It was very affectionate admonishing but important to your welfare, as you so happily agreed.

Do you remember our discussing etiquette? We decided that etiquette was simply doing or saying the thoughtful and kind thing at the time it was needed. Of course we should know about the correct knife, fork, spoon, and other such things, because we learn to conform to certain practical rules helpful for everyday living. Some things you do to show respect to older people, such as your polite habit of standing to greet a girl or woman, of shaking hands with the men or boys you meet, and of bowing to the ladies or girls and saying, "How do you do?" and answering questions courteously (since adults do ask questions) and never, never "make little face" no matter how embarrassed or shy you feel. Boys should watch their daddies and do as they do; girls should watch their mothers and always remember to do as they do. Fathers and mothers are friendly to everyone, speak up when they are spoken to, answer questions politely, and smile, because they love to meet people and have nice manners.

Do you realize that when we meet people for the first time the only way they have of judging us is by our manners and appearance? If we make a good impression they go away with a feeling of pleasure that stays with them even if they do not meet us again for a long time, or perhaps ever.

If, on the contrary, we are untidy and have bad manners, that is what they remember about us. If they are people with whom we shall be associating frequently, nice manners and appearance help smooth our association. Bad manners, rudeness, and an untidy appearance make a barrier that must be climbed before they are able to understand the real boy or girl who has erected this barrier. Sometimes grownups and young people do not always realize that boys and girls are often shy and afraid of adults and do not take the time or trouble to know the real person behind the barrier of rude manners and untidy appearance. Sometimes also young people do not realize that adults are shy themselves occasionally. Then, too, there is this point; your actions, your conduct, your manners, your appearance reflect on your parents at times, and no boy or girl wishes to think their parents have not given deep thought and care to their rearing.

Every growing boy and every growing girl has the obligation to grow in wisdom, understanding, and right conduct as each matures in body and mind. Boys and girls possess souls that must also mature, else they are never fully grown, no matter how long they live.

When we came to discussing the future, we had so many plans and projects that it makes me quite dizzy even to think about them, but in a final summing up this must be your aim: to plan to do the work that will make you happiest; to do that work the very best you know how; to be honest and truthful, considerate and loving to the members of your family; respectful to your parents and other "grown ups," and considerate of other people's rights and property. And of course you must be, as you so seriously pointed out, a good example to wee Jamie, for Jamie is going to try to do exactly what his big brothers and sister do, because that is the way of small brothers.

Then, too, in the not really far future, when you apply for entrance to Graceland College, the instructors are going to wonder what kind of young people you are. Your "Grams" and "Gram" are confident that when that time comes, all your teachers are going to wish each one of you were, at the very least, twins!

Do you still remember the litany we chanted while we were traveling?

God has not given us the spirit of fear,
But of power,
And of love,
And of a sound mind,
And a cheerful and thankful heart,
A controlled mind and tongue,
A deep and abiding faith,
And a peaceful heart;
For if we have peace in our hearts
We shall have peace in our homes;
And if we have peace in our homes,
We shall have peace in the nation;
And if we have peace in our nation,
We shall have peace in the world.

Do answer this very miscellaneous letter before too long, and tell us what you did at youth camp, how you liked it this year, and all about your activities at home and school.

We send our dearest love to you.

"GRAM."

. . . But a Day

It is late afternoon, a time for reflection and meditation upon the day.

As I watch the setting sun reflecting its golden rays on the clouds, causing the whole landscape to glow with a mellow golden light, it is to me the most beautiful time of day.

A day could be compared to the span of our life here on earth.

Early this morning, before the sun came up, the earth was as fresh and innocent and beautiful as a newborn infant.

As the sun came up, the day was as glorious and expectant as a little child.

At noon the sun was seriously at work, and the day was accomplishing its task as busily as a growing child contemplates its study and future plans.

In the afternoon the day was warm with activity, and a little rest. It was good . . . like the life of happy young married people.

Evening hurries like those in middle life with so much to do and not much time to store away sheaves for the coming sunset years.

Now as the sun settles itself in the west I think of those who have spent their day of life and have worked, learned, loved, and earned a rest. They, too, have seen the day from its beginning. Now at evening they are rewarded with the golden beauty of friends, the sparkling rays of love and family. There comes a fuller, happier understanding of life, its true values and beauty.

Blue sky, white clouds, now orange, now changing peach into pink. A cloud passes and the full red sun peeks out for a last flame of beauty—lustrous white and gold, with a brightness more lovely than finest satin. My carpet and walls are richly splattered with the rays of the setting sun.

A gold and red half circle, now a quarter circle, an eighth, and finally a tiny speck fades behind the purple hills. Deep shades of blue-purple are slowly softening into dusk.

A bird flies straight into the glorious sunset as though it is returning to its Maker.

After the sun has set there is an afterglow to bless and enrich those who reflect on its beauty. Its soft mellowness widens to include the whole sky. Perhaps it is even a more rewarding spectacle to behold than the sunset itself. Like a living spirit which has gone back to God, leaving an afterglow in the hearts of loved ones, it remains as a promise of the resurrection and dawn of yet another day.

There is peace and rest in the coming darkness.

Church Man in the News

Harry Wesley Burwell

Elected Officer in Railroad Communications

H. W. BURWELL, communications engineer for the Louisville and Nashville Railway, was recently elected chairman of the AAR Communications Section, according to a news item appearing May 19 in "Telecommunication Reports," a trade magazine.

Brother Burwell has long been active in the work of the Association of American Railroads Communications Section, and just prior to his recent appointment he had served as vice-chairman for a two-year period. In his present post, he will serve until 1960.

He came to the Old Reliable as a telephone installer in 1914, and has subsequently held several supervisory positions. He was advanced to telephone engineer February 1, 1937, and was named communications engineer in June, 1957.

For several years he has been active in various committees of the communication section of the AAR. In 1950 he was chosen chairman of committee number two, inside plant, which position he still holds. In 1952 he was elected a member of the committee of direction and has been assigned places on two of its subcommittees.

For two years he has been on the communication committee of Louisville area of the Civil Defense Group and chairman of the communication committee of the transportation section of that group.

Ever since the organization of the friendly service committee of the L. and N. Railroad several years ago, he has been an active member.

Brother Burwell was born at Five Lakes, Michigan, October 4, 1890, and baptized in 1913 in Chicago by Robert W. Burwell.

He was graduated from Hammond, Indiana, high school, and attended Purdue University from 1908 to 1912. He received his degree in electrical engineering from Purdue.

He gives his special interest and hobby as "church work." In 1916 he was ordained a priest. In 1921 he was ordained an elder, and in 1941 a high priest. He was ordained an evangelist October 14, 1950, by Apostle Percy Farrow. He likes to get acquainted with Saints in the various parts of the country through which his work carries him.

He has served as district president of Southern Indiana District twice, filling out unexpired terms of General Church appointees who were moving, and has also held other district offices. For a period of twenty years he has served as pastor of the Louisville Branch.

Brother Burwell's first wife, Hazel Peal Maginnis, died October 31, 1934, and he married Nina Rae Ferguson on March 20, 1936. His children are Robert J., Harry Wesley, Jr., and Lois Jean Anderson. ALICE CROSSAN BAYNE

Children in Prayer Meeting

MANY TIMES I have held my children back when they have had a desire to take part in a prayer service. I know I did this because I lacked faith in their ability to pray and testify in a manner which would be pleasing to both God and man. This was a result of my own lack of faith in my ability to teach them the things that they should know.

Yet I have found as a result of my prayers on their behalf they have given some fine prayers. They were very short and to the point, yet they clearly demonstrated the fact that the small amount of instruction I had been able to give them had provided the seed. This had been nurtured by the Spirit and wisdom of our heavenly Father, which resulted in the fruit of prayer.

Regardless of how little time we have to spend teaching our children, we can manage to discuss pertinent questions concerning God and the church as we go about our daily tasks. The few minutes we spend soon add up to hours, and during this time the child forms his concept of our heavenly Father and his ways.

When a child has reached the age of accountability, and more especially when he becomes a member of the church, it is our duty and privilege to see that he attends all services including midweek fellowship.

It is truly amazing to see the change that comes into a fellowship service the moment a child takes part. It is as if all of our Spiritual batteries have been recharged.

"A little child shall lead them." Many times I have seen this Scripture fulfilled.

We tend to think of prayer service as mainly for adults and above the comprehension of our young. This is not so. Many children are closer to understanding our heavenly Father than we are. They have much to give, and we have much to offer them. Doctrine and Covenants 4:1c states, "If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work." This includes little children.

The Angel Chorus

at the Independence Sanitarium

DURING A RECENT telephone conversation I had with Miss Ina Hattey, supervisor of the nursery at the "San," we were accompanied by background music, a blend of voices in seeming chorus—a clear obbligato here, a basso there, and tremolos in various ranges filling in the harmony. I exclaimed and Ina chuckled a reply. "Yes, our angel chorus is serenading the Mothers' Club. It is relaying its appreciation for cozy cribs and bedding, for comfortable clothing, and for incubators, the latest of which is an isolet."

She explained that should one member of the chorus develop a bit of irritation (excoriation) on his little "sit down," he is comforted with a dry, soft, warm diaper, which helps heal the irritation. These new type diapers are fitted, are not bunglesome, do not bow the pliable little legs nor hinder free movement. And they are much easier and quicker to manage by the busy nurses. Should one of the cherubs have an experience with "contact dermatitis," fresh shorty gowns comfort and soothe the tender flesh. The shorty gown is cooler than the long gowns previously furnished. Babies regurgitate habitually, sometimes frequently, so their gowns are changed immediately. They must always be kept sweet.

There is usually a serenade at mealtime when the cherubs are carried separately for dinner with their mothers. They are wearing fresh gowns, prettily embroidered around the necks and wrists (pink for the girls and blue for the boys). They carry the fragrance of heaven with them. None of this escapes a delighted mother's eye as she examines the dainty handwork on gown and blanket and realizes the devotion and love of the Sanitarium foster mothers and the time element involved in such a labor of love.

When General Conference convenes October 5 the "angel chorus" will be dressed for the occasion, and visitors to the nursery will be welcomed daily during hospital visiting hours. The crib spreads are special and are embroidered and appliqued by the Panadelphians, who also foster the photographing of the babies on their real birthdays. (See illustration.)

Mothers' Club members have cut 3,777 articles since October, 1957; these include gowns, diapers, mattress slip covers, receiving blankets. They also buy finished pink and blue flannel blankets, strengthen the edges and trim them with crochet. They cut, bind, and machine-quilt oodles of bed pads and "drool doilies." Continuous laundering and sterilizing is hard on garments and bedding. Thousands of these articles are used annually.

There have been 1,079 members of the angel chorus enrolled since January 1 this year—577 boys and 502 girls. The largest number came in January. There have been five or six extra heavy days when the stork delivered ten times each day. There have been nine sets of twins.

Church women from branches in the following states have donated 1,159 finished and trimmed garments during 1957-1958: California, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Ontario (Canada), Pennsylvania, Utah, and Washington. This is wonderful, but the Mothers' Club needs more help (an occasional cash donation from a proud father or grandparents is very acceptable). Our new corresponding secretary is Sister Pauline Arnson. Request letters and contributions should be addressed to her at 4400 Norwood, Kansas City 33, Missouri. She will furnish patterns, samples, information, and grateful appreciation.

The nursery at the Sanitarium was just a clinic in 1916 when the Mothers' Club began its sponsorship. During those first years about fifty babies were delivered annually. The Mothers' Club was organized by twelve young mothers during the summer of 1911. Its members have always met monthly for a luncheon together in each other's homes. At these gatherings ways and means of acquiring funds to purchase equipment for the nursery and materials to be sewed for the "angel chorus" are discussed. Several days a year are usually required to cut bolts of outing flannel, paddings, and blanketings for the articles needed. An electric cutting wheel is used. Then the garments are sacked and distributed by the cutting committees among the club members to be finished by a given time.

We love the chore, and we look forward to meeting our visiting co-workers at the Mothers' Club Tea, which is arranged in their honor during General Conference. This year the tea will be given on Tuesday, October 7, at 4 o'clock (following business meeting) in the Education Building, Room 202. Any visiting women who have helped sew for the nursery during the past two years and any visitors who are interested in sewing for the nursery are welcome. There will be a display of nursery sewing and patterns for them, with instructions.

Book Review

The World Is Learning Compassion

by Frank C. Laubach

Fleming H. Revell Company

Price $3.50

Dr. Laubach's book is one of the finest works I have ever read. Again and again its pages brought further testimony to me of the truth of the Latter Day Prophet who told of angelic ministry in the nineteenth century restoring the gospel and way of Christ to the earth.

While dealing mostly with the twentieth century it indicates quite clearly that the first great strides began to take place in the early part of the nineteenth century. It was in 1844, for example, that the program of co-operatives—one way the world is learning compassion—was begun in Rochdale, England. "Between 1500 and 1800 the narrow stream of compassion grows wider," says Dr. Laubach. Then he recounts the evidences of preparation which led up to "The Incredible Twentieth Century."

Readers will no doubt be shocked by some of the statistics in the book, pointing out the areas of tremendous need. "Three out of five of the human race cannot read or write." Another fifth of the adult population is almost illiterate. Three fourths of the people of the world are hungry. Add to these the incidence of disease, superstition, and distrust. Although there is little documentation to support the statistics quoted, there is little doubt the author speaks mostly from firsthand experience.

But it is heart-warming to review many of the ways the growing compassion of the world is beginning to meet these needs. The author takes us into several fields. The United Nations; the works of great philanthropists and philanthropic foundations (like the Ford and Rockefeller Foundations); the field of science and medicine; the roles of our government and other governments; people-to-people compassion; and even the growing compassion of private enterprise.

I believe this is a stirring challenge to the people of America, similar in certain ways to the challenge to the occupants of this land that we find in the Book of Mormon. Isn't there a "familiar spirit" between the words in the Book of Ether which command us to serve the God of the land, Jesus Christ, and these concluding words of Dr. Laubach?

America need not come down to the level of want. She can help lift the world easily, swiftly and joyously—the moment she makes an all-out effort—up to an era of abundance as no Utopian ever dreamed could be possible. And the moment government, church, business, and philanthropy join hands in all-out, sincere, unselfish effort, the whole world will love us. Russia and China will cease to fear us and hate us, and will imitate our "war of amazing kindness." And when we begin this, God will be on our side. We shall be practicing the compassion that was born on Christmas Day.

I not only recommend this book but suggest it be a "must" to a people who are dedicated to the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth. For herein are stated the kinds of problems with which we must grapple. We are also made keenly aware that we are not alone in this great effort, but that the Lord is working through many people, organizations, and governments to bring to pass the establishment of Christ's way of life.

Life's Intimate Friendships

By L. J. DuBois

The Warner Press, 1958

Price $1.00

Written as a guide for young people, this small book attempts an analysis of "life's intimate friendships." The areas covered are suggested by the table of contents: Life and Human Relationships, The Meaning of Friendship, The Choice of Christian Friends, The Personal Preparation for Friendship, From Friendship to Courtship, From Courtship to Marriage.

The book is worth reading. It is designed to be more than a superficial description of how to win friends and influence people, although there are sections which seem to be just that. Essentially the author argues that sound friendships must be built upon a foundation of sound character and sound moral and spiritual values. I have no quarrel with such a thesis. But the book basically lacks consistency. At times it is objective and analytic, at times highly moralistic. Certain terms (e.g., courtship) are used with various and undefined meanings. At times the writing is extremely insightful and provocative, at times mediocre, at times trite, and at times fallacious.

While the book is not recommended for the casual reader who believes everything which happens to get into print, there is nevertheless enough good material to make it well worth reading for the critical reader. It would be especially valuable for classwork where a free discussion of the controversial sections would be possible. The contents of the book certainly would stimulate such discussion.

A Guide for Teachers

LET'S DO SOMETHING ABOUT OUR TEACHING

Norma Anne Kirkendall, a student of theory with much experience in the practical aspects of religious education and a background of Latter Day Saintism, has written this attractive, easy to read text for teachers. It presents the basic laws of learning and teaching in progressive and easily understood terms. New teachers will find it particularly helpful because of the large number of helpful ideas for better teaching that are available in a single reading. Experienced teachers will likewise appreciate the book because of the author's ability to expand and re-explain the educational process. Excellent as a text for teacher training classes or for individual use.

Lead Us Not into Temptation

THE DIFFERENCE between the "Lord's Prayer" of the Book of Mormon and that of the Inspired Version of the Bible, both brought forth into our language by inspiration, need not be so perplexing if the reader will take a broader view, and instead of limiting his attention to the work of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, consider also the sentiments of the men of old whose sayings have come down to us.

The expression "lead us not into temptation," found in both the King James Version of the Bible and the Book of Mormon translations, has aroused considerable objection; it is considered a reflection upon God's providence. Nevertheless it is still used in many versions of the Bible. Why? Because if correctly understood no discredit to anyone is seen in the basic thought.

The Lord knew the weakness of flesh to temptation, and he knew the damaging results of it. Therefore the urgency for man to avoid overpowering temptation would cause him to call for help. A direct way to express this appeal would be "Lead us away from temptation." There is also a negative way of stating the same petition, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Both the positive and negative form stem from the same concern for man's safety. There is no reason in this particular thought to regard any characteristic of God, other than his having the power to keep man from harm.

The negative form of an expression is less desirable as it may leave edges on which the reader unknowingly connects implication which was not in the mind of its author.

The study of the composition of our text is brought up here to help determine if any actual discord exists between the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Version wording of the Lord's Prayer. The only real complaint, if there is any, is the indirect way of stating the petition which has caused translators some trouble in selecting the right words to frame the original. William Jenks, in his comprehensive commentary on the Bible in 1834 (fourth volume) commenting on the rendering of this expression in the King James' Lord's Prayer, refers to it as being negatively expressed.

In volume five of Clarke's commentary the author states that the expression, "Lead us not in" or "Bring us not in" is a mere Hebraism, meaning that God is said to do a thing which he only permits or suffers to be done. The preface of the 1901 American Standard edition of the Revised Version of the Bible gives some idea of the difficulty encountered and the great amount of work that has gone into producing a true picture of both the meaning and style of the Hebrew and Greek texts.

Joseph Smith lived fourteen years after writing the Book of Mormon and eleven years after finishing the Inspired Version of the Bible. During this time, when there was objection in general to the wording of the Lord's Prayer, it is hard to believe that he was not aware of the difference in the two writings. Who else of all people beside Joseph would have authority and the light and the urge to correct an error or make a change, if it was necessary. No change was ever made by him or his successors, which leaves us with the conclusion that there need be no problem, especially if we will realize that the emphasis was upon the people's need of help and not the way of asking for it in this particular instance.

We are advised that it was not by the excellency of speech that the Book of Mormon would establish its claim.

Again it should not be a surprise to find the expression of our subject an ancient idiom which has sifted down to us, and while it is not proper in our language (the Inspired Version has the better translation) it is used in the Book of Mormon as well as the King James, indicating a figure of speech which was used by both folds of sheep which Jesus visited during his earthly ministry.

Organized into Mission

CHILlicothe, MISSOURI.—Through the efforts of Seventy William Guthrie and Glenn E. Johnson, a few members living at Chillicothe started Sunday evening preaching services in September of 1955, held in homes. Services were held later in City Hall, and a year ago the group began having church school and morning preaching services. On June 15, Brother Guthrie organized the Chillicothe city mission.

Tract Review

The Book of Mormon Is Christian

This new tract has been in print only a few months, but already it is going into a second printing. Written by Seventy Donald D. Landon, it is the outgrowth of a plan to revise another tract that he had previously written.

Brother Landon begins his tract by pointing out that the tangible evidences of the divinity of the Book of Mormon have multiplied many times during the past few years. It wasn't until after the Book was published that research in archaeology and anthropology began to open up new evidences to confirm the testimony of the early witnesses.

After developing his basis of proof of the divinity of the Book of Mormon, the author invites the reader to investigate the teachings of the book and to compare it with the Christian teachings of the Bible.

Among the teachings of the Book of Mormon that he compares with the Bible are the following: the importance of doctrine; the gifts of the Spirit; the ordinance of baptism; the nature of the spirit in man; healings by Jesus; the identity of Jesus Christ; Jesus as the Creator and Savior; the atonement of Christ; and many other points of agreement.

One of the author's closing statements is this: "As you journey through the pages of the Book of Mormon, you will become increasingly aware that the entire message points to the centrality of Jesus Christ. All Scripture should." With this, he invites the reader to study the Book of Mormon and consider its validity.

Single copy price of the tract is ten cents.

And Finally...

A NEED OF PASTORS

We are building many churches, and the probability is that we shall keep on building them as the church grows, as we hope it will.

The church can lend money for the erection of houses of worship. Congregations can raise money to pay off the debts on those houses. These things can be done corporately.

There is only one thing that no action of General Conference can manage, and no congregation can do for itself; train a pastor. There is only one person who can prepare a pastor for the work—the man himself.

We have pastors who are serving congregations who are worn and tired and need a rest; they cannot rest because there is no one to replace them. There are pastors serving who have had little or perhaps no opportunity to study and prepare for their work, but they must go on serving because the flock would be without a shepherd if they stopped.

The church could be wonderfully and usefully served if young men, now in their student days, would include studies and preparations for pastoral ministry. There is no more important work for the church. The increase of the membership and the building of new houses of worship call for more pastors.

Many men now serving need a time of leisure for reading and study, so that they can return to their labors enriched for their ministry. Assistant pastors are needed in many branches, and young men who are interested could obtain splendid experience in this service.

Remember, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them," and the need for pastors is such that the sincere and dedicated young man, hopeful of serving in a most important branch of the service, will not long lack an opportunity.

GOSPEL LADDER

Remember the ladder of "First Principles" which used to be a part of the banner of "Zion's Hope"? This is not that kind. The editors received a letter from a young man whose girl friend believed in the Book of Mormon. He inclosed a magazine with an article which branded the book as a hoax. He said his friend was a "Ladder Day Saint" and couldn't think she would believe the Book of Mormon if it were as bad as represented. Could we answer the article? We could, and did.

But where did this "ladder" come from? The youth camp where "Jacob's Ladder" is one of the more popular songs? Or did he work this one out all by himself because of the high esteem to which his girl friend had climbed? We did not try to solve that but did admire his good sense in picking the girl and coming to the right source for truth about the Book of Mormon.

A New Church School Text

By Dr. Roy A. Cheville

Ten Considerations for Family Living

Here is another thought-provoking text from the pen of Dr. Cheville. He identifies the book as "an exploration by family builders, concerning the kind of families we are setting out to achieve and the characteristics that will identify them as Zion in quality." The book is excellent for home reading, and a fine study text for any adult church school class. Among the many helpful subjects discussed are included developing personalities, family ties, kinds of family life, family "languages," marks of family success, adventures in family living, family outreach, family changes and crises, things in common, and the place of God in the family group.

We'd Like You to Know . . .

Frances Hartman

EVERY BUSY EXECUTIVE wishes for a "girl Friday." That is, an efficient secretary. Kenneth Graham, Herald House manager, found one in Frances Hartman in 1953.

Since coming to the church publishing house as secretary to the manager, Frances has added the responsibilities of personnel director, supervisor of the customers service and circulation departments.

"I have really enjoyed learning about the publishing business," Frances said. "I've especially enjoyed dealing with Herald House customers. There seems to be a feeling of brotherhood even with the people we know only through correspondence."

Before coming to Herald House, "Fran" was secretary to Bishop Harold W. Cackler at the Center Stake Offices.

She likes to travel. Recently she took a trip to Colombia, South America. Now she is planning to see Germany. This fall she will be in her third German class at the School of the Restoration.

Her other activities include singing in vocal groups and writing. She has been a frequent contributor to Herald House publications and other periodicals. She is also editor of "The Compass," a quarterly for Center Stake Oriole Monitors. Enoch Hill is her home congregation and also enjoys her services as secretary.

Fran grew up in Independence. She attended Graceland College and Kansas City University.

"The church and its teachings are my first consideration," Fran said. "I made a pact with myself in my early teens to accept every church responsibility required of me if I were capable of performing it. I still try to maintain the agreement."

Their Visit to Blumenscheins Reveals Doctor's Condition

JIM CHRISTENSON of Independence and Edwin Browne of Lawrence, Kansas, who left recently to visit the Blumenscheins in Honduras, returned Sunday, September 7, to report they had found Dr. John Blumenschein's condition improved.

The two made the trip because of reports that Dr. Blumenschein was seriously ill. They found that he had just returned from an Evangelical and Reformed Church hospital at Siguatepeque, Honduras. He had been flown there by a hospital plane which landed on a landing strip near the Blumenschein home.

At the hospital, the doctor learned his pain was caused by internal pressure on certain nerves. The pressure was relieved by medical treatment and his condition became much more comfortable, although it was still necessary for him to remain in bed most of the day. The medical treatment was temporary in nature.

"We found the family in good spirits and very optimistic about the future, despite the doctor's continued serious illness," Jim Christenson said.

"Dr. Blumenschein carries on a limited medical practice from his bedside, serving the local natives. We found that the 'Gringo Doctor' and his family are very highly regarded by the natives. In Mogote, where the church meetings are held, the people are highly interested and enthusiastic about the church. There are about twenty-eight persons attending the regular services conducted by the Blumenscheins," Brother Christenson added.

"We were encouraged by the possibilities of mission work in this area and by seeing the high regard the Blumenscheins have cultivated for the church among the natives."

The two visiting elders reported that the Blumenscheins live high in the mountains, about three miles from the small village of Mogote. Their home is in a valley and consists of about 440 acres fronting on Lake Yojoa. They are living in a temporary structure and work is underway on a new permanent home.

A tape recording made during the visit may be used as part of the "Kingdom in the World" program Thursday evening at General Conference.

Wanted: A New Family

THE CHURCH HAS always been greatly concerned about the kind of family environment that exists in our homes and in the homes of our neighbors. Of course, every social and governmental agency has a similar concern, for the family is an institution of world-wide importance; it performs vital functions in all known societies. It is almost everywhere the central and indispensable nucleus of society.

Every child requires a long and intimate participation in a small group for its development, and the most convenient and widespread method of providing this environment is to have a married couple live together in a household, caring for their own children. The children have the benefit of adults who are highly interested in them, the association of each other, and usually a set of relatives whose interest in them is also strong. In such an environment the essential human traits are acquired.

About ten years ago many experts were warning that marriage and family life in America were dying institutions. This prediction was based on the fact that, after climbing gradually for more than half a century, the U. S. divorce rate zoomed to an all-time high in 1946—twice the rate of five years previous.

Many things have been blamed for the growth in divorce rate over the first half of the twentieth century. One attributable cause was identified as the "industrial revolution." With the transformation to a complex factory and commercial system came migrations from small, stable social communities into impersonal, thickly populated cities. Out of this move came a loss of many of the traditional and sacred aspects of the family.

Also the invention of many labor-saving devices for the household and the removal of many used-to-be functions of the family to the factory and to the grocery and department store reduced the importance of the family and eliminated some of the basis of solidarity within the family.

In connection with this diminishing of functions in the home, the clamor for freedom of individual action brought a loosening of restrictions on the privileges of women. Then followed various liftings of controls over children, and the phrase "juvenile delinquency" came into common use. The earlier pattern of family relationships was seriously deviating toward an unknown direction. The members of the family were not sure what their relationships to each other were.

THEN CAME the Depression and World War II. Both nation and family were in turmoil. Many marriages began and ended in haste. The pendulum of family behavior swung to an extreme from the early Puritan home of two centuries earlier.

But some recent statistics indicate the swing back to a closer knit, more stable family institution. As one author recently put it: "Divorce is going out of style." Divorce figures are now back down to pre-1940 levels. The rate is now about half of what it was in 1946. A whole series of social and economic and religious changes, generally not foreseen, are at the present time establishing a new foundation for family life. In some ways there is developing a different kind of family, but the young married couple and their children are more and more turning to a concern for religious associations and principles, and to other socially accepted patterns of behavior.

Families today are moving to the "country"—away from the congested areas of the city; they are generally maintained in private households. They are becoming larger; Mom and Dad are more equally sharing the rearing of their offspring; they are sharing more activities together out of the home. Economically they have fewer worries than any previous family in American history; religiously they have stronger ties to their Creator and to some church group. Family unity is bringing greater security to a new generation of children; time will tell how this affects our future delinquency problem.

Another trend, credited by many for the greater family stability, is the institution of an educational program to acquaint young people in high school and college with the many aspects of marriage that frequently cause trouble. During the past three years, a study series emphasizing a better understanding of the family and its problems and possibilities has become available to our church study groups. Written by experts and students in the field of family relations, it has offered us an excellent opportunity to learn more about building efficient and happy family life. However, only 5,000 people have so far made a study of the two basic courses in the "Family Living Study Series," and less than 2500 have made use of any one of the other eleven courses in the series.

OF COURSE a stable, happy home requires more than reading a few books or pamphlets, but the word of revelation backed by the proof of experience strongly emphasizes that "knowledge increaseth strength." And in Latter Day Saint families today there needs to be created a reserve strength and unity if the ideals of a Zion society are to be realized.

What kind of family do you have? Are you satisfied that it has developed the "quality" needed to help in Zion-building? Why not make the year ahead a time to learn more about your family and to study ways and means to make your home an example of the "new" family needed for the "new" society of Zion!

OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY

Seventy Clair E. Weldon writes from the Mission to Latin America in Weslaco, Texas:

We have baptized twenty-six Latins here this year, with prospects for more by the year's end. Nearly forty per cent of the Weslaco Branch is now Latin, compared to no per cent in 1951. Sixty-four Latin members are presently enrolled.

Most of our Latin members live in the United States, but ten live in Mexico. Most of them were born in Mexico and are still Mexican citizens, but many of those born in Mexico reside by passport in the United States.

Members' birthplaces in Mexico cover a wide geographic area, where friends and relatives offer possible contacts for future expansion in Mexico. They represent eleven states and the Federal District. Of the group of members, forty-three are adults over eighteen years of age.

About half of our members are bilinguals (Spanish and English), and the other half speak only Spanish.

The economic situation of our Latin members is good and improving. It is incorrect to categorize them as being poor or largely migrant farm laborers. Most of our members have good, secure jobs. About half of them are home owners. Most of the remainder rent homes and have resided in the same place for considerable time.

The Latin members are making a good contribution to local branch finances. We continue to give teaching and ministry along these lines. We now have part of the necessary materials in Spanish for financial law observance—a Spanish "First Tithing Statement" (approved by the Bishopric)—and we're working on a budget book and teaching helps.

We are happy that the Lord is blessing his work here. The fruits of much labor are beginning to appear. We appreciate the church's support of this developing work. We are confident it will continue to grow and bring much joy to the church as people of Latin America join us in the body of Christ.

Language and Prophecy

We are fearfully and wonderfully made.

Prophecy means not a forecast of the future but the unveiling of mysteries beyond the intellect's reach. The literal meaning of prophecy is the utterance of truth from a hidden source from which truth cannot be extracted by intellectual processes.—
Arnold Toynbee.

WE BEGIN by affirming the existence of an absolute reality. Absolute because there can be no other. Real because our experience itself is felt reality. This absolute reality—or God—must remain for us humans a mystery. Ernst Haeckel, a scientific astronomer of the last century, wrote a book called The Riddle of the Universe. Absolute reality is not a riddle. Riddles are amenable to intellectual processes and can eventually be answered. Sir James Jeans wrote a book with a much better title, The Mysterious Universe.

Who can fathom eternity? What does the word mean? Does it mean a very long time? Does it mean endless time? Immediately one asks the question he knows it is not a question at all but an attempt to fathom a mystery. All the terminology relating to God is itself a negation of all we know relating to our temporal existence. Almighty—this word means something incomprehensible to us, for all-mightiness would make what we know of power and might as though it did not exist.

Infinite! What can that mean to finiteness? In a realm where they were no bounds—no finity—there would be no existence such as we know. I say “such as we know” because of what will be said later.

Unchangeable. What does that mean? It can mean only the (to us) shadowy stability behind the change and decay which is all around and within us. So it is with any language applied to the mystery we call God. “Canst thou by searching find out God?” Yes, and no. To the intellect which seek always and only a “scientific” answer—no. Behind the foreground of intellectual inquiry there is a vast hinterland which for its exploration requires other means of conquest than the tools of human thought. Words strain and crack and sometimes break¹ when we apply them to try to discover and explore this hinterland of human consciousness and experience.

The other answer to the question, “Canst thou by searching find out God?” is yes—if. If he reveals himself to you. “If, with all your hearts ye truly seek me—ye shall ever surely find me!” “He that seeketh me early shall find me and not be forsaken.” Those who “with all their hearts” seek God have already found him. This means that knowledge of God—“the Absolute Reality”—is an affair engaging the whole man, not only his conscious thought but his subconscious affections, too. This kind of searching, we have found, is God’s gift to us, and while we seek him thus, we are assured that already we have been found of him.

Not in Word only

We have said that all the language we use to indicate God is a negation of our temporal experience. But this needs further explanation. We could not know our language was temporal and imperfect unless we were already convinced there was an eternal and perfect form of expression. The terms we habitually use to apply to God are themselves thus inadequate and “found wanting” when examined at the bar of our basic being and deepest convictions. And so these words can never adequately express the divine. They “strain and crack” and finally break when required to bear such a burden. That is why Paul said, “Our gospel came not in word only.” It could never come “in word only,” for it needs the “power and the Holy Ghost and much assurance” put to it to make it a gospel.

While all this is said, let us hasten to add that this mystery we call “God” is not unintelligible. In fact we have organs or means by which it can be known. In the inner man, in the deeps of the unconscious part of our minds we are all connected to a vast unfathomable mystery. This “inner man” is to us as mysterious as the God who made us. That is why when we know Him we come to know ourselves. But only through the knowledge of God can we know ourselves truly. Philosophy cannot help us, because it begins with the slogan, “Man know thyself.” One said that the proper study of mankind is man—which is true if the One Man who is truly man is first apprehended as a basis from which to judge all others. But that One Man can be apprehended only by the revelation of the Eternal God. Without that revelation, he is just another man “in like fashion” as all others. “Man know thyself” is therefore impossible of complete achievement. There are areas of the human psyche other than the intellect through which we may view reality “as through a glass darkly,” and these means or organs of knowledge and communion are as valid for the apprehension of the truth as the intellect.

Personalities and Semantics

The conscious volitional area of the mind has been likened to a flat surface, and the subconscious to an “emotional abyss.” Each area has its own way of looking at reality and interpreting what it sees in terms of a single vocabulary. A sunrise may be described laconically in terms of time thus, “7:42, sunrise.” That is a utilitarian declaration. Or in the language of poetry it may be described thus: "Jocund day stood at tiptoe on the misty mountaintops." This statement tells us that the sun rose in the imagination of a poet and more of his personality was engaged in observing it than was employed by the weather forecaster. But look at this statement from the Nineteenth Psalm.

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race. His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.—Psalm 19: 1-6.

Here the sunrise is related to divine law both within and around the perceptor, and the social institutions are not entirely excluded from the consideration either. For the supreme example, remember the words of our Lord: "For as the light of the morning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, . . . so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." He who said this claimed that he was the "bright and the morning star."² The same fact of nature viewed first by the intellect, in the case of the newscaster, by the emotions of the poet who said that the sun meant "jocund day," then by one who was an enlightened moralist, who saw the relation between the inner and the outer world and related the sunrise to the inward "law of the Lord," or as we might say, "conscience," last of all by the supreme revealer of all, Jesus, who saw in the same fact a prophecy of that which was to come and related it to millenniums of time, and the judgment of Jesus as to the full meaning of this temporal fact is gradually being wrought out.

So when a complete man measures, we have a complete measure. Intellect, emotion, will, and history are combined in the view of Jesus. So prophecy is that utterance of the truth which is beyond the reach of the intellect. To the ordinary use of words must be added the language of the Spirit, which means the language of experience as interpreted by Jesus Christ our Lord if words are to be made at all adequate to be used in prophecy.

Science, History, and Prophecy

A scientist asks, "why?" And when he has the answer, he asks of that answer, "Why?" again. When the second answer constitutes the ground of the third question, something else has happened. The first answer has been modified by the second, and the second by the third. So then, with all its vast knowledge of the universe, science is always provisional, and the only consistency about it is the never ending drive for knowledge which scientists have in themselves and which is not explicable in terms of their provisional formulas. This same thing is true of all intellectual and metaphysical pursuits. Truth apprehended intellectually is expressed in scientific formulas, in philosophical maxims, and in canons of art. The intellect runs on the surface of life. This is not to decry reason nor despise the intellect. There is no progress possible unless experience itself is analyzed by thought, and principles are apprehended and used to enrich life. We need the trained scientist and philosopher. We need the theologian, too—the theologian who will justify to the reason the Christian experience and relate harmoniously to the rest of human knowledge that justification. We are trying simply to say that life itself is more than thought. Christianity is more than theology, just as a man is more than his thought of himself.

The Timeless Element

Because intellectual pursuits such as science are provisional they can be "dated." Ptolemy, Newton, Einstein—these names stand for provisional cosmogonies. One depends on the other. Science goes forward cumulatively. But this is not true of those apprehensions of reality given by other means. The Twenty-third Psalm, for instance, will never be out of date because it represents a unique apprehension of the nature of God. It has no "date," such as Newtonian physics has. It is timeless. When one compares two poems he simply asks which represents the greatest insight—not "which one came first." So that, unlike science, a later poem does not set aside the value of an earlier one. Each poem, worthy of the name, springs from a "swift intuition of the heart" in which the poet reaches into the timeless storehouse of eternal truth and writes as his mind is illumined. This is true also of music, which is older than words and engages the feelings which are prior to harsh words and to music. It is said by some that the Twenty-third Psalm is losing its value as a vehicle of peace, since so many of our contemporaries grow up in urban surroundings and never see a sheep. Perhaps there is some virtue in this observation, but surely the criticism is superficial, since all read, and the pastoral scene has not vanished from our screens and picture books.

The Intellectual vs. the Intuitional

The difference between the intellectual and the intuitional approach to truth is fundamental. Because both use the same vocabulary, misunderstanding and mutilation often occur. This is illustrated by Wagner in "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg." The opera tells of a contest sponsored in the city with the prize going to him who pens the loveliest song. Walther, the hero, writes his prize songs which many consider the loveliest melody ever penned. Beckmesser, the villain, steals this song, and tries to rewrite it in the florid intellectual style which Wagner despised. The result is ludicrous, and Beckmesser is laughed to scorn because he attempted to put the language of the heart in the intellectual medium of strict classicism. The whole opera is an indictment of the attempt to translate into intellectual terms that which was expressive of the whole man—Walther's love for the beautiful Eva.

So it was with the Christian religion. As soon as the Church came to terms with the Empire (circa A.D. 314), being passionately missionary, she sought to win the minds of the philosophers and professors of the universities. These men were self-reliant and very independent. Even though the Emperor finally condemned paganism they remained aloof. They were sympathetic, it is true, but they would not accept Christianity until it could be presented in the philosophical language of the intellect.

Theodosius I (379-95) penalized paganism, but this philosophical class had a code of its own. If its members were to be won, the Church had to try to translate her gospel into their terms. In doing this—a process lasting over two hundred years—Christianity gradually and imperceptibly came to be a system to be believed rather than a life to be lived. The ancient symbols of that life took on a sickly hue, "the pale cast of thought," and the driving thrust of a pure moral life directed by the Spirit, which demanded the whole man to be effective, lost its force. So it is always.

People who cry for exact meanings of words as the sole tool to reshape life miss the mark. The meaning of words is derived from their context, just as notes in a symphony combine with each other to convey the heart of the Master's message. The Spirit uses the letter and makes of the letter the vehicle of life. It is the life in its turn which inspires the thought. Theology must ever be baptized in worship and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost as the theologians set their hands to do the will of God. Otherwise, theology becomes a vain Babel, and men think thereby they can get to heaven simply by building towers of words and castles in the breath of their lips. The beauty of Walther's song cannot be pinned down in Beckmesser's babblings. The beauty of the divine message cannot be held in creeds and formulas. Creeds and formulas, written scripture, church organization, et al, are means to the end that men might have life. But they become means of denying life to men when they are mistakenly supposed to be ends in themselves.

Apostle

Lost Dimension

So, then, poetry and art use a language in common with the intellect, but they use it in a quite different sense. Further, the subconscious uses other means than speech as well as using speech. Parable, myth, metaphor, ordinance, drama in sacrament, all these it uses to convey to man the treasures of that hinterland which is beyond the reach of the intellect. Recently Paul Tillich diagnosed the ailment of our age as western man's "loss of dimension in depth." By this he means the loss of being concerned about one's own being and being universally. We are not gripped by any concerns about the infinite, and we lust after having, rather than seeking to be. In the process of losing this dimension in depth, we have lost also the symbols which expressed it. For instance, when the protagonists of religion sought to "square" the account of the Fall in Genesis with "scientific" truth, the Fall became not a symbol of this dimension in depth but a piece of clumsy fiction invented, it was thought, by the childish minds of primitive people. The same spurt of ridicule which Wagner utters in Beckmesser was used against the story of the Fall and for precisely the same reason. Symbols, which are the language of the whole man, cannot be expressed in terms of the intellect. This does not mean that these symbols are unintelligent or unintelligible. It means that they alone can "say" what needs to be said to the whole man.

The "Language" of Symbols

Of course, some men have been metaphysicians and poets both. Santayana is one; Plato another. Plato knew that logic was not enough and used myth to say what logic was powerless to express. Strangely enough it is Plato's prophetic vision that has power over men today. His metaphysics is dated and his science hopelessly lost. For poetry and music are akin to the prophetic vision; these are timeless and are somehow related to the eternal mystery. And God uses many means to minister his life to us. By word, yes; by ordinance, certainly; by history, and by his own Son—who was an essential symbol of his own life. The word "symbol" used in this connection might be misunderstood. But I can find no other word for what is meant. Symbols are representative of that which they stand for. If a man spits on a piece of calico colored red, white, and blue, I think him disgusting; but if he comes into my home and does the same thing to red, white, and blue cloth sewn together so as to form the Stars and Stripes, I shall not do any thinking at all. I shall proceed to throw him out. The flag represents to me a deep devotion to my adopted country. It is a symbol—a conventional symbol, but it is not that country. It is a symbol, but not an essential symbol in the manner to which we referred to the life of Christ. An essential symbol is "one with what it tells of." When such a symbol occurs or is used, then that for which it stands occurs also. It is this kind of symbol which the prophetic vision uses to convey the knowledge of God. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are so constituted as to be capable of becoming such essential symbols. That is the meaning of the passage which affirms that without the ordinances thereof, "the priesthood and the authority of the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh."³

Believing Is Seeing

In the being of God all have being. God is not "in the world" in the same sense that we are. The world, and we in it, are in God—in that divine Being where certain timeless truths are. Any institution, such as our church, has value only as it apprehends these eternal verities and exists to make them luminous. The preaching of the gospel of God, the administering of priestly ordinances, the inevitable gathering together of those who believe, the establishment of Zion, all these are apprehensions of truth and are based alone on the prophetic vision which rightfully belongs to all who believe.

Some have said that seeing is believing. It is not so. The reverse is true, believing is seeing. What is belief itself but the call of God to a man out of his loneliness and solitude into the fraternity and fellowship of Christ? How can there be believers without a church? And how can there be a church unless these called-out ones have the companionship of Him who called them? No man can believe on the Lord Jesus Christ unless Christ is with him to aid him to believe, and when he so does believe, there is the end of his solitude and his strange loneliness.

Science and the Prophetic Vision

What is the upshot of all this? First of all, the prophetic vision encompasses all, intellect, feeling, will, and history. This vision has essential symbols peculiar and necessary to it, through which it is actualized. These essential symbols cannot be translated into intellectual terms. When the attempt to do so is undertaken, and scientific language is introduced to convey these timeless apprehensions, always their essential counsels and truths are mutilated. There is no scientific explanation capable of describing what happens when a sinner repents and finds peace to his soul in God. There is no adequate psychological "explanation" for the vision of Isaiah, who "saw the Lord high and lifted up," because it is not possible to psychoanalyze the Lord. To understand what happens in the Communion means to partake of the flesh and blood, i.e., the life of Jesus. No theological treatise can be substituted for the act of Communion itself. When the dimension in depth with its own symbols of life are yanked out and pressed flat on the horizontal plane of the intellect they are destroyed, and the life they convey is destroyed also. You cannot force the prophetic vision into intellectual and scientific terminology.

But a peculiar thing is here to be noted. The terminology of science, its apprehension of truth, and the truth so apprehended can be the stuff out of which the prophetic vision can formulate new and even more meaningful symbols, myths, and parables. Take the case of the discovery of Neptune in the 1850's. The gravitational pull of Neptune on Uranus was observed and precisely measured before Neptune was seen. Indeed it was the observed vagaries in the orbit of Uranus that led to the scientific affirmation of the existence of the other planet. Who has observed the vagaries of the wild and irregular scene of this world's course and not affirmed the existence of another world which is exerting a "gravitational pull" on the souls of men? Joseph Smith asserted that Christ was in the sun and was the "power thereof" by which it is made. It remained for science to provide additional literal verification of that fact, for our sun shines by a power that causes it to be dying while giving light and life to all. So the prophetic vision restored in these last days is capable of assimilating all. It must be so, or our gospel is a shibboleth.

In olden days prophets wrote and spoke as they were "moved" upon by the Holy Ghost. They did not "move upon the Holy Ghost." The Holy Ghost moved upon them. He wrought in their souls apprehension of those timeless counsels and truths which are of the whole man—the man Christ Jesus. The principle of sacrifice they used to convey apprehension of the instrument of divine grace. They used action and drama to give meaning to their words. When the future came before them in apocalyptic vision there was always at the heart of it "one like the Son of Man," or the "Suffering Servant," or the "Messenger of the Covenant." Call him what they would, he is recognizable, whether this figure or that is chosen to symbolize him. For he is the author of prophecy—Jesus Christ our Lord.

Live As You Pray

I knelt to pray when day was done,
 And prayed, "O Lord, bless everyone;
 Lift from each saddened heart the pain,
 And let the sick be well again."
 And when I woke another day
 And carelessly went on my way,
 The whole day long I did not try
 To wipe a tear from any eye.
 I did not try to share the load
 Of any brother on the road.
 I did not even go to see
 The sick man just next door to me.
 Yet once again when day was done,
 I prayed, "O Lord, bless everyone."
 But as I prayed, into my ear
 There came a voice that whispered clear,
 "Pause, hypocrite, before you pray.
 Whom have you tried to bless today?
 God's sweetest blessings always go
 By hands that serve him here below."
 And then I hid my face and cried,
 "Forgive me, God, for I have lied;
 Let me but live another day
 And I will live the way I pray."

Drama Prepared for Conference

"THE LIVING CHRIST" is the title of the 1958 General Conference production by the White Masque Players.

Richard Maloney, president, said the production will be a compilation of poetry, prose, and drama selected from great literature, including the writings of several church authors.

Brother Maloney has spent over a year in research and study to make up the drama which moves in sequence from the Creation to Christ's birth, his ministry, the revelation of the Book of Mormon, the Passion, and finally the resurrection.

A rhythm choir will present a prelude to each act using the recorded music of César Franck as a background for "The Creation," the music of Prokofiev for the "Land Shadowing with Wings," and "Were You There?" by the Roger Wagner Choral for the prelude to the "Passion Drama."

Church authors include Elbert A. Smith, Helen Harrington, Roy Cheville, Geoffrey Gillard, Josephine Montgomery, and Elbert Dempsey, Jr. Excerpts from the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants will also be used.

Other authors represented are Carl Sandburg, T. S. Eliot, Longfellow, Dorothy Parker, Frank Harris, Padraic Colum, and Mary Austin.

The production staff has worked many months with Brother Maloney to execute the stage settings, costuming, lighting, and other technical problems for staging the drama.

Cast for the drama will be Elbert Dempsey, Jr., Mrs. Arline Cackler, Joseph Long, Mrs. Nina Maloney, Bruce Reynolds, Miss Ruth Morrison, Max Kaplan, Mrs. Ruth Hays, Stewart Carson, and Miss Jeanette Gard.

The Conference production will be given eight nights, October 3 to 11. Persons attending General Conference will be admitted with a ticket which will be included in all General Conference registrations.

Anthems for Worship

THE PURPOSE of publishing this list is to be of aid to the local choir director in his search for suitable anthems for performance in the worship services of his congregation—anthems that are musically good without being musically difficult. We have tried to keep in mind that many choirs will not run to more than fifteen or eighteen members and that the general musical experience will be limited. The use of incidental solos has been kept to a minimum, and in anthems where they do occur these short solos can be taken by the entire section if desired.

While some of the numbers are musically quite simple, none of them are of such inferior quality that even the best choir need hesitate to include them in its repertoire. Any special demands such as definite organ accompaniments, need for a sizable choir, requirements in basic musicianship have been noted. All of the selections are of recent composition but none are extreme, "modernistic," or atonal. Yet there is a wide variety of musical style and mood. The a cappella suggestion in some instances is purely a suggestion—definitely not mandatory. Care was exercised in making selection on the following basis (1) the music by itself must be interesting, well written, and "have something to say"; (2) the text must not infringe on accepted theology or doctrine nor yet be maudlin or romantic; (3) vocally the parts must bring out the best in the voices for which written without making undue demands; and finally (4) it must fulfill the true function of music in worship—"When music is used in the praise of God and for the edification of man, it has the power to lift man's soul to greater appreciation of God and his love for man."¹

The dagger (†) has been used to indicate those anthems that will be sung by the massed Conference Choirs on October 5 and 12, 1958. These will also be recorded on tape by the Radio Choir.

In addition, the Radio Choir will record those selections indicated by the asterisk (*). This tape recording, along with a packet of single copies of the anthems, will be available for study on a loan basis from the Radio Department on or about November 1, 1958.

Four additional lists of suggested music for worship are in the process of compilation and will be available for distribution within a few days; (1) 100 suggested vocal solos, (2) 25 anthems for SAB choirs, (3) 25 junior choir anthems, and (4) "Music for Your Wedding" including organ, choral, and vocal solo suggestions.

If we can be of service to you in any manner, we solicit your questions, suggestions, or requests for information lists or "loaner" tapes. Simply address a postal card or letter to the undersigned and we will endeavor to be as helpful as possible in aiding your efforts to serve God through the medium of music in your local congregation.

* "All Were There" — George Lynn (Oliver Ditson No. 332-40083)

Charming, simple, unusual, narrative in soprano line with quiet chordal background of other parts. A cappella, easy.

"Polish Carol" — Norman Coke-Jephcott (H. W. Gray No. 2067)

Traditional Polish folk carol set to a most interesting organ accompaniment though not difficult. Most effective, easy.

"When Christ Was Born of Mary Free" — David H. Williams (C. C. Birchard No. 1598)

Patriotic—Famous Men—Memorial

† "Once to Every Man and Nation" — David Stanley York (Theo. Presser No. 312-40098)

One of four anthems in this list by Mr. York which are especially recommended. Each is set to well-known texts in broad, vital, uplifting melodies with harmonizations and organ accompaniments that are full and satisfying. The parts "just seem to fall into place" and yet choirs and congregations never tire of them. Final "Amen" this anthem a glorious outburst—can be used separately as response.

"The Four Freedoms" — David Stanley York (Theo. Presser No. 312-40296)

Baritone solo for a well-developed voice above four-part writing in both men's and women's sections. Medium difficult, but choir should have a lot of fun with this one. Best for a choir of 20-24 voices—a cappella.

"Sun of My Soul" — Warren Martin (Theo. Presser No. 312-40397)

Memorial, dedication, or general. Calls for double chorus but section is only six easy bars repeated in four places, and can be done effectively by antiphonal mixed quartet. Best setting of John Keble's well-known hymn.

Palm Sunday

"Prepare the Way" — Morten J. Luvaas (Oliver Ditson No. 332-14449)

Strong Swedish folk melody arranged with interesting accompaniment. Three stanzas—unison, two-part, and SATB with descant. Easy.

Easter

"Christ, the Lord, Is Risen Today" — David H. Williams (H. W. Gray No. 2275)

Original, vigorous melody mainly SATB with occasional division in women's voices. Accompaniment has strong flavor of trumpet trio—could be so arranged. Some a cappella passages—medium difficult.

Anthems of Praise and Purpose

* "Awake, My Heart" — Jane M. Marshall (H. W. Gray No. 2515)

Prize anthem of the American Guild of Organists in 1957. Joyous, energetic, mostly unison, closes two-part canon with flashing ending. Interesting syncopated figure; easy for voices; medium difficult for organist.

"Praise" — Alec Rowley (Oxford University Press No. A. 24)

In reviewer's opinion an "ideal anthem." A perfect wedding of beautiful text and inspiring music. Dynamic exclamations of "Praise, power, dominion forever!" contrasted with a gorgeous hymnlike closing. Medium difficult.

"Praise, My Soul, the King of Heaven" — David S. York (Theo. Presser No. 312-40179)

Male voices open with broad, flowing, Welsh-like unison melody, second stanza women's voices in four parts, third stanza closing "Alleluia's" written four-part male voices, but altos can take tenor parts. Medium difficult.

† "Sing Ye to the Lord" — Everett Titcomb (Carl Fischer No. CM 440)

A short "sunburst" of praise—two pages (forty seconds), climaxing in four vigorous "Alleluia's" that can be used as a separate response. Easy, a cappella, useful as a call to worship or response.

* "The King's Highway" — David McK. Williams (H. W. Gray No. 1217)

A majestic statement of purpose that in all things "I'll Walk the King's Highway." Mostly unison; a bit longer than some but not the least tiring. Direct, straightforward, forceful. Accompanied. Easy.

Anthems of Spiritual Drama

"By the Waters of Babylon" — David H. Williams (C. C. Birchard No. 2050)

Setting of dramatic situation related in Psalm 137. Not at all musically difficult but needs careful, intense, imaginative reading, and a good organist with a flair for registration.

"Holy Spirit, Truth Divine" — David S. York (Theo. Presser No. 312-40178)

Begins broad, quiet melody alternating lines between men's and women's voices. Builds to stirring climax, must be presented "reverently with conviction." Good for small choir. Musically easy. You'll like it!

† "My Eternal King" — Jane M. Marshall (Carl Fischer No. CM 6752)

One of the most deeply moving and inspirational anthems you'll have used in a long time. Chorus parts not difficult but need a sensitive director and organist. When it is given a sincere performance, you'll be led to bow your head in silent prayer for several moments praising God and rejoicing in the beauties of his love.

Anthems of Quiet Reflection

"Be Thou Near Me, Lord" — Haydn Morgan (Neil A. Kjos No. 5114)

Simple, quiet prayer for guidance. Can be used a cappella. Only one short solo or unison male part. Last page makes a beautiful response to pastoral prayer or benediction. Musically easy.

* "I Sought the Lord" — Austin C. Lovelace (Clayton F. Summy No. 1565)

Opens with smooth flowing plain song melody for all sopranos. Men begin second stanza and are joined by women. Must be presented with musical phrase governing rhythm, not measured beats. Easy, a cappella.

"O Lord, Thou Hast Searched Me Out" — S. Drummond Wolff (Concordia No. CH 1023)

Psalm 139: 1, 2, 23. Opening and closing with a simple plain song phrase, composer has set a quiet four-part prayer anthem—some free part writing. Last page a lovely, ethereal prayer response. Medium difficult, a cappella.

Anthem with Instrumental Solo

- * "None Other Lamb" — Jane M. Marshall (Carl Fischer No. CM 6755)

Quiet, dramatically intense, perfect blending of organ, voice, and instrument. Cello part never a ditty-like obbligato but as expressive of drama of text as the chorus. Fairly easy but needs good cellist.

Response Anthem

- * "Pax Dei" — C. Whitney Coombs (H. W. Gray No. 831)

A single page of musical beauty with the direction "To be sung at the close of service." Simple, four-part writing with brief division in women's voices. Opening or closing four bars effective used separately as responses.

Anthems for Dedication or Consecration

- * "Jubilate Deo" — Richard Purvis (Leeds Music Corp. No. L-143)

"In the manner of a stately procession" it becomes a paeon of joy and thanksgiving—otherwise, it might get too "swinging." Strongly rhythmic, completely unison melody, text from Psalms closing with "Gloria." Easy, accompanied.

- * "Surely the Lord Is in This Place" — Norman Coke-Jephcott (H. W. Gray No. 1974)

A magnificent setting! Contemporary, organ accompaniment employing fifths but with a good reason. Vocal parts largely unison in somewhat recitative style, but easy. Needs good organist, imaginative conductor, willing choir. Spiritually most rewarding!

Christmas Cantata

Why not try the Joseph W. Clokey "Childe Jesus" this year? Published by C. C. Brichard with orchestration, if you like. Tells Christmas story in one of the most musically satisfying collections of eleven carols from various lands and periods. Has several simple short narrator solos to tie story together. Climaxes with "Adeste Fidelis"—have congregation join. Plenty of opportunity to utilize children's choirs instead of soloists or duets. Even has suggested pantomime instruction booklet if you are ambitious. Price 85c

Lent or Holy Week Cantata

This Is It! If you have been searching for a work not musically difficult but of musical worth, narrative without being full of recitatives, melodic but without repetitive arias, dramatic but not romantic, contemporary but not extreme, satisfying to singer and congregation alike, then get David H. William's cantata "On the Passion of Christ" published by H. W. Gray Co. Scriptural passages from St. Matthew; soprano, tenor, and baritone short solos, performance time about thirty minutes. Price 75c

Mrs. Helen Elledge

I STARED into the stormy sky in amazement. There, written clearly for all to see, was a record of God's benediction upon our efforts!

It happened a number of years ago at Lake Doniphan. I was acting on the staff for our girls' camps, and one of my assignments was the campfire program.

This particular evening we had a group of Skylarks in camp—young girls who were to be there only the one night. The weather was very threatening. Black storm clouds were being blown across the sky by a high wind, but so far it had not rained. Some of the leaders felt the campfire should be held inside by the fireplace. But our program was keyed to the out-of-doors, and I felt we would be cheating the girls to keep them inside unless it was absolutely necessary.

Trusting that God would protect us all, we built our fire in the open. The leaders watched the sky anxiously, expecting rain at any moment.

The story that evening, which was the "meat" of the campfire, was the legend of the Star Dipper. In this legend, during an extreme drouth, a young girl went in search of water for her ill mother, taking a gourd for a dipper. After a long hunt she found a tiny spring of water. Filling her dipper to the brim she carried it carefully homeward. On the way, because she was so unselfish, she shared her water with a thirsty dog, then with an old, old woman. Each time she shared it the dipper was changed, first to one of silver, then to one of gold. The third time it was shared with a tired, dusty man. Instead of drinking from the dipper, he turned it upside down, spilling all the water upon the ground. Staring in astonishment at the place where the water disappeared, the girl saw a large spring emerge from the dirt. There was enough water for the entire village. Glancing quickly at the man who had performed this miracle, the girl thought she saw him vanishing into the sky, carrying with him the magic dipper. This time it had been changed to one of diamonds.

I ended my story, "And if the air were clear tonight, you could still see that diamond dipper among the stars!"

All eyes looked upward. There, directly above us, the clouds had rolled back just enough to reveal the Star Dipper shining brightly in the sky!

It was like a benediction on our campfire.

Financial Planning for College

IT IS NOT my purpose in this article to convince you of the importance of a college education but to emphasize that if you or your children are considering a college education long-time financial planning is important.

In our contact in the business office with students and their financial problems we find the ones who are constantly having trouble are those who have done or whose parents have done very little planning prior to college enrollment. On financial plan after financial plan, which are submitted at the time of application for enrollment, we read such statements as these:

At present I have no cash on hand. This summer I will work. I hope to earn enough to make my first payment.

My financial position at this writing is very poor. I plan this summer to get as much as possible toward my schooling.

My aim for the summer is to make all the money I can. I will have to make most of my college expenses this summer.

I don't have a financial position. I am in a great deal of school activities and it is impossible for me to work.

I intend to get a job as soon as school is out for the summer. I don't have any cash

The student savings plan pays 3 per cent interest on hand at present. I can't say exactly what my financial position will be.

Because I have had a car for approximately two years I have not been able to save a penny. I am planning to open a savings account tomorrow at a near-by bank.

Findings on Educational Expenses

Many of these students haven't felt the necessity of long-time planning but have become concerned only during the summer months prior to their starting college. This kind of planning invariably leads to financial problems shortly after the student enrolls.

Why plan? The following are some findings made in a study by the United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.¹

1. Costs involved in obtaining a higher education today are practically double those for attending college in 1940. This increase is due primarily to the fact that inflation has lowered the purchasing power of the dollar.
2. The cost of attending undergraduate college during 1956-57 averaged $1,500 a school year at public institutions and $2,000 at private ones. These costs included educational and living expenses. [Average expenses at Graceland are more comparable to the public institution unless transportation is exceptionally high.]
3. Although tuition and fees have increased steadily, it is the living costs involved in attending college rather than educational costs that make it increasingly difficult for low-income families to send their children. Living costs consumed five sixths of the average budget of students who attended public colleges and two thirds of the budget of those who attended private institutions.

A few other interesting findings which are related to student costs in this study are these:

1. While students and their families paid more than three fifths of the cost of a college education, in no cases did they sustain the entire cost, this being provided through endowments, taxes, and other means. [At Graceland the student in 1956-57 paid 73 per cent of his educational expenses, the balance being made up from church appropriation, endowment income, and other income.]
2. Chief sources of students' budgets for college in 1952-53 were in this order: contributions of family, relatives and personal savings; student earnings; scholarships, veteran's benefits, loans, gifts.

3. Scholarships accounted for slightly less than 5 per cent of the total income of all students, but did make a significant contribution to budgets of the 20 per cent of students who received them. However, the median award was less than $300. Women received more scholarships than men, but the size of their awards was smaller.
4. While on an average, women spent less than men for attendance at college, families and relatives provided a larger proportion of their budgets. This may account for the widely held belief that it costs more to send a girl than a boy to college. Women from high income families, however, did spend more at college than men from the same family income bracket.

As you can readily see, when you have an annual expenditure of from $1,500 to $2,000 for your education you must give the problem a great deal of serious thought if you are going to avoid some of the financial pitfalls which await the last minute planner, and in some cases, even the person who has done considerable planning.

Over the years Graceland has developed several methods which help solve the financial problems of several hundred students each year. They are presented individually as follows:

Student Savings Plan

The Graceland College Student Savings Plan makes it possible for the prospective student to save for his Graceland education naturally, pleasantly, and systematically, starting any time after birth.

The plan works like this. You, or your parents, or your relatives or friends may open an account for as little as $5.00 (or more, if you prefer). Interest at the rate of three per cent per year is paid for the time the money is on deposit, beginning the first day of the month following that in which the deposit is made. When you enroll as a student at Graceland the amount of money you have deposited—plus interest earned—is used to defray your college expenses. Total deposits, without interest, may be withdrawn at any time if it proves impossible for you to attend Graceland. At the present time 727 students have a combined savings of $121,408 for their college expenses.

Scholarship Loans

Many worthy young men and women have been able to attend Graceland College because of generous contributions by friends of Graceland to the Scholarship Loan Funds. Some of these funds have been given in memory of loved ones; others are gifts of groups or individuals.

Scholarships are essentially of three kinds: restricted, semirestricted, and unrestricted. The unrestricted funds are administered by the college officials and are used repeatedly as they are repaid. The restricted funds are deposited in the name of a future student and are held in trust until that student uses them. Although these restricted funds may be loaned to others in the meantime, each of them must be available for the eventual use of a specific person whose coming to Graceland automatically terminates the fund. The semirestricted funds are made available by the college subject to restrictions indicated by the donor.

A student who meets the qualifications may borrow up to $300.00 a year. These qualifications include at least a C grade average and satisfactory personal and credit references. These loans are repaid by the installment method at $15.00 per month, beginning five months after the student completes his formal education. Approximately $15,000.00 is loaned to needy students each year.

Student Work Assignments

Student employment is available to a limited number of responsible young men and women. Positions in the various departments include office assistants, faculty assistants, stenographers, librarians, dining room and kitchen assistants, janitors, receptionists, music accompanists, and other similar responsibilities. We ask those who are able to pay their college expenses not to request work, thereby giving those who are actually in need an opportunity to secure aid.

Currently, remuneration for seven hours each week for the nine months equals approximately $140.00. A student having a fourteen-hour assignment per week earns approximately $280.00. The total student payroll for this past year was approximately $55,000.00. The qualifications for work are a genuine need, at least a C grade average, and willingness to do the job assigned.

A student discusses finances with the author, vice-president and treasurer of Graceland

World Fellowship Fund

This fund provides money for students from abroad who (1) have limited financial resources, (2) are handicapped by currency restrictions and can only take a certain amount of money out of their country, (3) have excessive travel expenses, and (4) have limited work opportunities while at school because of immigration rules.

The fund is established for those students who plan to return to their own country after they receive their college education. If the student does not return, then the money used is considered a loan and not a grant. The fund was started in 1949 and since that time between $2,000.00 and $2,500.00 has been spent each year to assist students from abroad.

The activity of this fund is limited because it is completely dependent on contributions by friends of Graceland who are dedicated to helping church young people from abroad attend. For those who are financially able this is an area where a contribution returns real dividends in the lives of the young people who are helped.

Other Planning Factors

The following quotation from the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare summarizes some additional factors which should be taken in consideration in any financial planning for college.

What students spend for a year in college is largely governed by two clusters of more or less independent social and economic forces. The matrix of one is in the mores and economics of the home and community in which the student formed his spending habits. The second has its matrix in campus traditions and usages sanctioned by college officials but largely controlled by student groups. A student feels distinct pressure to observe these campus financial folkways if he is to be accepted by his close associates.

Accordingly, many of the motivations and usages which affect student spending significantly are social rather than academic in nature. The student and his family have primary responsibility for the amount and character of most of his expenditures, and they can influence such spending through conditioning the student socially in his formative years, and through the choice of the college he attends. This, of course, does not free those who govern and administer a college from responsibility for continuous study and regulation of practices of academic and campus life that determine costs for the average student. Attendance at any college is almost certain to modify the pattern of spending to which a student has been accustomed in pre-college years, but whether he lives at a given college on an economy, average, or luxury budget is largely determined by family income and personal habits and ideals.²

We want to see you at Graceland, and thus we hope that any planning you do will make your experience here on the hill that much more worth while.

Build Thee More Stately Mansions

Talk given at the Women's Institutes at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and Stratford, Ontario

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, a great lover of nature, found much inspiration in God's creation which he sought to share in verse with others. In his walk along the seashore he observed that the chambered nautilus built a new and bigger shell into which he moved, leaving his outgrown shell by the unending sea. Sensing the human need for growth and expansion such as this he penned these words:

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spreads his lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new.
* * *

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

The chambered nautilus worked silently . . . "year after year beheld the silent toil." There was no great stir created; no announcement was made; no committee meeting was called; no name appeared in print; no flowery introduction was voiced; no frustration was experienced as a result of trying to answer so many voices which clamored for attention. With singleness of mind and purpose the "lustrous coil" took shape and an outgrown shell was vacated.

Inreach and Outreach

I feel that as women of the church, we have been encouraged to engage in too much "busy work." There is so much that needs to be done—in the home, community, church—and "sensitive souled woman" who wants so much to see her "dream world" a reality plunges in with eagerness and enthusiasm to be met with frustration, time and again, as she comes to realize that the outreach is too demanding in proportion to the "inreach" to the central core of operation. Our major emphases in women's work have been in creating spiritually adequate homes, being community builders, sharing through friendly visiting, and seeking to meet the crying demand for leadership in every phase of branch life. Yet rarely do we sense the emphasis being made that the "stakes must be strengthened before the ropes can be lengthened." We have been attempting to accomplish a gigantic task for which we have been ill equipped.

Be an Answer

A few years ago I heard a blind, aged minister tell of some of his experiences during the war when he was called upon to visit families and break the news that a son was killed in action. He said, "I didn't say much. I just sat there with them. I learned then that it was better to be an answer than to have one." I feel as women we must be the answers. Too often we have thought we just have had to have one, and thinking this we have imposed our "profound logic" on many a cornered husband, child, or unsuspecting friend. When I am so tempted to indulge, I remember a personal slogan to which I have dedicated myself, "Talk less and pray more." I am convinced that through the "silent toil" we can be an answer, and that when we speak our words will be winged with power to "reach the hidden depths of many a heart."

The Quiet Things

Frank Laubach, in his book, Prayer, the Mightiest Force in the World, says, "The quiet things like prayer, repenting, penetrating our self-deception, deepening our awareness are likely to be overlooked because they are so silent and secret. We think noise is more important than silence. War sounds more important than the silent growing of wheat, yet wheat feeds thousands while war kills. We are tempted to turn from prayer to something noisy like speeches and guns because our motives are mixed."

In our "silent toil" we must pray as if we believed that prayer would change the world. So seldom do we hear that kind of praying. We are responsible for the 1960's. If we fix our thoughts on what ought to be rather than on the things we dislike, we could let our dislikes die of neglect, for we help everything we think about even when it is the evil and weakness we see in people or in the world. Anne Lindbergh in Gift from the Sea has challenged us with the words: "Woman must be the still axis in the revolving wheel of relationships, obligations, and activities. Woman must be the pioneer in achieving stillness, not only for her own salvation, but for the salvation of her family, of society and perhaps civilization."

Silence is like the sleeping sea. It gathers to itself calmness and strength. Silence is the purifier of souls. It is the mighty force that bears men and women to greatness. "Be still and know that I am God."

The Clear Call

"Leave thy low-vaulted past" . . . this is a clear call to repentance. Perhaps the most repeated words in modern revelation are "Cry nothing but repentance to this generation." God knew we would need help, first, in seeing the need of repentance, and second, in making the painful adjustments necessary for our growth toward God. The first step of seeing ourselves as we are is so very difficult, for sin blinds us. "He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes."—I John 2: 11, I.V. Some idea of the way we come to see ourselves as we are is gleaned from the story told by President F. Henry Edwards of a mother who went to see her son at college. She arrived unannounced to find some objectionable pictures on the walls of his room. She didn't say anything, but returned home and sent him the picture of Hofmann's "The Boy Christ." When he put the picture of Christ on the wall the others came down, and when his roommate asked why he answered, "I just couldn't leave them up there by Him." We don't see ourselves until we stand in His Presence and then we know all the shoddy, cheap, unworthy things must go, for we "just can't leave them there by Him."

A Joyous Experience

Repentance should be a joyous experience, for it is a part of the "good news" of the gospel. If we take the definition of Brother Wayne Updike in his book, Whosoever Repenteth, we sense repentance as an indication that we are alive spiritually and that we are growing toward God; for he defines it as a "Conscious positive response to an ever increasing revelation of God." This book was used a great deal in reunion classes and was wonderfully received by the women. I highly recommend it to other groups for study and meditation.

Parables of Reality

ONE SUNDAY in church school class the instructor, who rates highly in both secular and religious teaching, expressed an idea in words similar to these, "All things are parables of the realities of God." The idea struck me with force, and I determined to investigate it.

This teacher noted Genesis 6:66, I.V., "All things have their likeness; and all things are created and made to bear record of me; both things which are temporal, and things which are spiritual; things which are in the heavens above, and things which are on the earth, and things which are in the earth, and things which are under the earth, both above and beneath, all things bear record of me."

In the New Testament we find expressed man's responsibility to God through recognition of the evidences of the reality of God as revealed in his creations.

For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men; who love not the truth, but remain in unrighteousness, after that which may be known of God is manifest to them. For God hath revealed unto them the invisible things of him, from the creation of the world, which are clearly seen; things which are not seen being understood by the things that are made, through his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse; because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were they thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts are darkened.¹

Something of this thought is continued in Section 85:12 of Doctrine and Covenants: "Behold, all these kingdoms, and any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power." One needs only to study the galaxies of the heavens to begin to comprehend God moving in majesty and power. Recently I read that the human cell is a minute galaxy. I was awed, for here is an evidence of the Scripture, "all things have their likeness."

"And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them."² Some people object to a literal interpretation of this passage, saying it tends to limit God to a human form. But if the human likeness, like the galaxy of the human cell, is compared in degree of magnitude to the galax-

If we are in tune with God and desirous of knowing more of his divine will in our lives, and if in his mercy he reveals, then we must respond whatever the price of adjustment. Repentance is the good news; it is God's willingness to give us another chance; it is his love which will not let actualities dominate possibilities.

Nobler Than the Last

"Repent ye therefore and become converted that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." May we be able to see our "low-vaulted past" as that which separates us from God. As we catch a new glimpse of his purpose in our lives, may there come from the Lord the refreshment and renewal which we need to challenge us to build those stately mansions of soul and character that will equip us for the tremendous demands which are placed upon women in the loving outreach which is our destiny. May each day be "nobler than the last" "till thou at length are free" because we have discovered the great truths about ourselves and God's design for us. May we live each year through the "silent toil" on our growing edge and be able to look back and see our "outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

ies of the heavens, how great a difference between man and God! Man is finite; God is infinite. Man reflects in a minute degree the nature of God but is far removed from His perfection. Yet we are invited to attain to that perfection, to become the sons and daughters of God.

In Doctrine and Covenants 104:19 we are told Seth was the express likeness of his father, Adam. I believe this is a type of the likeness of God and Christ. Jesus said, "If ye had known me, ye should have known my father also." Joseph Smith saw two personages in his first vision. Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon testified they saw the Son on the right hand of the Father.³ Elder S. A. Burgess, a man of astute mind, a church historian, is said to have left his testimony that he saw the Son on the throne with the Father and that they were identical in appearance, but one seemed to have more authority than the other.

The earth is a beautiful place unless desecrated by sin. Those who have seen paradise testify that it is very like the earth glorified. There are trees, grass, flowers, bird song, sparkling water, and a soft, penetrating light that resembles the earth on a clear, dew-washed morning in spring. Is one a parable of the other? In considering the rest to be experienced in paradise,⁴ think of the rest which a remission of sins brings to one.

The glory of the sun typifies the glory of God.⁵ But man can neither endure an intense, prolonged contact with the light of the sun or with the glory of God. Both purify, heal, comfort, and sustain if properly approached, but the power to destroy is also resident in the light of each. The light of the sun destroys germs; the light of God destroys sin.

Isaac's obedience in being offered as a sacrifice is said to be a similitude of Christ's obedience and sacrifice.⁶

The liahona, or directors, was a type of shadow of the Scriptures.⁷ The serpent raised on a rod was a parable of the Christ lifted on a cross.⁸ More types and parables could be cited from the Scriptures, but these suffice to set our minds searching for other similitudes of the realities of God.

Wallace B. Shute

M.D., F.R.C.S.(c), M.R.C.O.G

Invents New Surgical Instrument

A SPECIAL newspaper bulletin from Montreal, Quebec, Canada, recently stated at Dr. Wallace B. Shute, Ottawa gynaecologist, had presented his design for parallel forceps to the Second World Congress of Obstetrics and Gynaecology. This instrument was designed to eliminate the risk of head injury to a child during birth.

Dr. Shute's forceps, now in use, has the forceps blades which are applied to the baby's head in exact parallelism rather than being clamped upon the head by a scissors lock as in all previous forceps. There is a locking device which maintains safe and even pressure upon the baby's head whatever its size. This gives it a tremendous advantage over the old scissor-type of forceps (in use with practically no change in design since 1625) which obviously can cause serious and permanent damage to the infant's head.

Some time ago, Dr. Shute became dissatisfied with the shortcomings of scissor-type forceps. In 1941 he designed and constructed the first working model of his new instrument. The first model, although a bit clumsy, worked well. Later he refined his idea, and now the first models for professional use have been made. The instrument is patented not only in Canada but also in the United States, and applications for patents have been made in Britain, Germany, Sweden, Japan, and Russia.

On April 7, Dr. Shute flew to Ireland as a guest of Dr. Tyrone Guthrie, founding director of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival in Canada. He and Dr. Guthrie discussed a play, "The Kristus," written by Dr. Shute. They worked together for ten days to prepare the play for production. (Dr. Guthrie was director and manager of the Old Vic Theatre in London, England, for more than fifteen years, and is now on the Board of Governors of that institution.)

While in Ireland, Dr. Shute was invited to present his paper on the new obstetrical forceps before the staff and personnel of the world-famous Rotunda Hospital in Dublin. He had a large and interested audience.

He later flew to London, where he also presented his paper on the forceps before the Royal Society of Medicine. Dr. Shute says, "My lecture was very courteously and warmly received, and I have since heard that interest in this first major innovation in forceps construction in 350 years has been increasing in England." While in London he was given the unique opportunity of seeing the original Chamberlen forceps of 1623 at a private showing.

Following his presentation in Montreal in June, Dr. Shute has been pleased to find evidence of increasing interest in the parallel forceps from as far away as India, as well as in Canada and the United States.

Dr. Shute's papers will shortly appear in the American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, the Proceedings of the Royal Society of Medicine, and in the Proceedings of the Second International Congress of Obstetrics and Gynaecology.

Dr. Shute's other interests, besides church work and family, include the writing of poetry and plays, painting, and music.

He is an elder, and serves as counselor to the pastor at Ottawa, Ontario, where he and his family reside. His wife's name is Eileen Elizabeth, and they have a twelve-year-old son, Christopher Wallace, and a seven-year-old daughter, Elizabeth Joan.

Connells Home on Leave

Elder and Family Return to Peshawar University in Pakistan for One More Year of Teaching

ELDER AND MRS. W. E. CONNELL and their daughter Carol recently visited Independence during a month home leave from Peshawar University, Pakistan.

They returned to Pakistan October 1. Brother Connell, a member of the faculty at Colorado State University, is chief advisor of a party from C.S.U. working at Peshawar University.

The Connell family has spent three years in Pakistan and will be there for one more year before returning to the United States. Brother Connell will then resume his duties as professor of animal husbandry at Colorado State University.

Carol will attend Woodstock School, Musoorie, India, during the coming year. Her brother, Terry Connell, was graduated from the school last spring. He was senior class president and active in other school offices. This year he is a freshman at Graceland.

During the past year Mrs. Connell also taught at Peshawar University when the regular home economics teacher became unavailable.

Soon after arriving in Pakistan three years ago, the Connells began teaching Sunday school classes in their home. Brother Connell taught an adult Bible class, and Mrs. Connell taught the children of American and Canadian families working at Peshawar. Through Brother Connell's class, a young Pakistani, Justin James, was converted to the church and baptized.

The presence of the Connells in Pakistan also made possible the recent baptism of the John Gideon family in India. The Gideons were converted to the church through correspondence with Apostle Reed Holmes. The Connells traveled to Delhi, India, last spring to baptize six members of the family.

Brother Connell said Justin James is making fast progress in the church and hopes to come to Graceland College through the assistance of the World Fellowship Fund in 1959.

Justin has translated the tract The Great Restoration into Urdu. Five hundred copies were printed by Brother Connell. They are being distributed by the Connells, the Gideons, and Brother James. Justin is now working on a translation of Jesus Christ, Savior of the World.

If he is able to attend Graceland, Justin wishes to take religion courses and also study pre-medicine subjects. "He hopes to finish a medical education at a school in India and then minister physically and spiritually to the people in Pakistan," Brother Connell said.

At present, Justin is a technician at a dam building project.

Justin's cousin, Elwin James, desires baptism, Brother Connell said, and he hopes the baptism will take place soon.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Connell were enthusiastic about the possibilities for the church in Pakistan and India. "The people there are very warm and affectionate and appreciative," Mrs. Connell said. "They are wonderful to work with."

The Connells said there is already a sizable number of Christians in the two countries. "It is among this group that our church will have its greatest success," Brother Connell stated. "The church can work with these people readily because they believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ," he continued. "There are other churches in the area—mostly Seventh Day Adventist and Lutheran, it seems—who are doing good work with the Pakistani and Indian Christians."

He went on to point out that Christian churches in the two countries do not offer only Christianity but also medical, agricultural, and educational services. "These are the types of missions that will succeed," he said.

Most of the educated people in the two countries speak English, and perhaps several other languages, the Connells said. This is primarily because the countries were under British government for so many years. Eighty per cent of the people in Pakistan are literate.

When they passed through Independence the Connells were on their way back to Pakistan. They said the past three years have been a great experience for them and they are looking forward to one more year of teaching and ministry in the near East.

Question Time

Question

Is the percentage of tithers which has been reported based on the total membership or on only those members who, because of age, would probably come in the known income or "increase" bracket?

Michigan

M. F. A.

Answer

The percentage of tithers is always based on the total properly enrolled membership at the end of the year. Inasmuch as the financial law applies to all members, and members of every age may have increase on which tithing should be paid, all members are regarded as potential tithers. It is doubtful that a percentage of members paying tithing based on the membership exclusive of the aged and very young would make any great change in the percentage figures now used because many older members are regular contributors and an increasing number of children are filing tithing statements and paying tithing. It should be remembered that the amounts contributed have no bearing on the percentage contributing.

Attempts to figure percentage on restrictive groupings such as "active membership" always prove misleading and confusing because it is difficult, if not impossible, to secure uniform application of any definition of "active membership." While a study of percentage of tithers in the different age brackets would be valuable, the percentage of tithers of districts and stakes based on the total enrolled membership is a much more significant figure than a percentage based on a limited age range or "active" members. W. N. JOHNSON

What is our stand concerning oath-taking in a court of law?

Ontario

H. G.

Answer

The Scriptures and Conference Resolutions make no reference which can be appropriately related to the question being asked. In the Old Testament there are numerous references to where oaths were taken; for instance, Abraham and the king of Sodom (Genesis 14: 22, 23). Abraham requires an oath of his servant Eliezer (Genesis 24: 2, 3, 9). Esau confirms the sale of his birthright with an oath (Genesis 25: 33). "And the Lord swore unto Joseph that he would preserve his seed for ever" (Genesis 50: 34, I.V.).

The commandment "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain" (Exodus 20: 7) seems to us to have a different connotation than would be applied in the taking of an oath in court. Another of the Ten Commandments says, "Thou shalt not lie." Therefore to affirm, as in court testimony, that we will tell the truth does not do injustice to these commands of God.

Here are other scriptural references which indicate references vowing correct testimony:

Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name.—Deuteronomy 6: 13.

Behold, ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit. Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely?—Jeremiah 7: 8, 9.

When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it: for the Lord thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee.—Deuteronomy 23: 21; Ecclesiastes 5: 4.

And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall thy glory.—Jeremiah 4: 2.

There are many other Scriptures in the Bible with reference to strict swearing of testimony. Paul gave several oaths in his ministry, such as: "Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not" (Galatians 1: 20).

We see no scriptural objection to the dignified swearing-in processes for a witness in the court of our land.

Question

What happens to a nonmember who partakes of our Communion? Would the Scripture about partaking unworthily apply, or would damnation only apply to members who partake when they have not repented or adjusted differences with other members?

E. C. N.

California

Answer

It would seem to me that the extent of the injury, or damnation to the soul of one who partakes of the Communion unworthily, depends on the seriousness of the wrong. A minor variance from the proper attitude of heart and mind would naturally cause only minor damage to the soul. An attitude which is greatly out of tune with the Spirit of Christ would certainly cause great damage to the spiritual life of the one who then partakes unworthily.

It would appear that the same principle applies to nonmembers who partake of the emblems. If it is done in ignorance, little harm is done; just as little good could result under such circumstances. On the other hand, if a nonmember understands the extent of the wrong he is doing, great damage results to his soul, just as great good would be done if with his understanding he would comply to the requirements of the gospel and join the fellowship of Christ's church.

Cornerstone Ceremony for Church

at Salem, Illinois

A CORNERSTONE laying service for the new church was held in Salem, Illinois, on July 27. District President R. H. Ellis was in charge and was presented to the congregation by Pastor Charles H. Wesner. Former pastor George Wolfe read the Scripture, and former pastor Lowell Wilson read the historical account.

The program consisted of a piano prelude, the national anthem, a consecration prayer by Seventy Al Pelletier, Scripture reading, a hymn, history of the church, presentation of guests by the pastor, the sermon, closing hymn, and laying of the cornerstone by the building committee. Brother Pelletier gave the benediction, and the choir gave a response.

Among the guests were Paul B. Chance, county superintendent of schools; B. E. Gum, Salem school superintendent; Mayor Omar McMackin and members of the council; Perry Crawford, Salem city clerk; and Reverend Carl Hearn, representing the Salem Ministerial Alliance.

In February, 1951, a membership survey was conducted by Virgil Harmon and Elder Wesner, then pastor of the Centralia Church. Enough members were found to justify an attempt to organize, and cottage meetings were begun. The first such meeting was held February 22 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Morris in "Little Texas." Brother Morris, a geologist for the Gulf Oil Company, was soon moved from the area by his work.

The second meeting was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Stonecipher. Among the members who made these services possible were the Clarence Stoneciphers, Joseph Schenck, Virgil Harmon and wife Doris, Charles and Frances Wesner, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Stonecipher, Corine Munter, and Alton Smith.

Evangelistic services were held by Seventy R. S. Coleman from April 10 to 16, 1951. As district president, he organized the group into a mission on May 10, 1951, and appointed Elder Ed Colvin as the first pastor.

He has been followed since that time by Pastors Wolfe, Wilson, and Wesner.

A building was rented on South Rotan Street, and the first meeting was held there June 19, 1951, with thirty-six in attendance. A church school was organized.

In July, 1953, the meeting place was changed to Route 51 and Lake Street.

In May, 1952, a building fund was started, which grew steadily until a building site could be purchased on North Ohio Street. Groundbreaking services were held there June 14, 1957. Services were first held on February 12, 1958.

In an editorial in the July 24 issue of Salem Times-Commoner the church group is praised as a credit to the neighborhood. "It is a small group, but a dedicated one," the editorial states.

The church is located at the corner of Ohio and Allmon Streets.

Book Review

One Way of Living

by George M.
Docherty

Harper and Brothers

Price $3.00

The author is a Presbyterian minister and begins by relating the experiences that led him to become a minister. He feels that conversion is for everyone, and if real, it will change the life of the individual regardless of how bad or how good he may seem to be.

Conversion demands the commitment of one's self to the highest of all callings—first and foremost to be a Christian. Although the preacher may be judged more harshly for shoddy work, dishonest practices, or for insincerity in the pulpit, the laborer or the business executive, the mechanic or the professional man is no less responsible for his claim and responsibility to be a Christian. In an English churchyard is this epitaph half concealed by moss on a simple flat stone,

In memory of Samuel Taylor, Cobbler.

In this parish for forty years,
He cobbled shoes to the glory of God.

The book states that in our early history some 38 per cent of our population attended church. Now about 60 per cent attend church services. The remaining 40 per cent—some 65 million—attend no church or synagogue and live without Christian challenge or commitment.

The author makes it clear that all mankind must know God and Christ. Through Christ is the way. With faith comes the knowledge that God as a Father loves us, that Christ can loose us from our sins, and that the Holy Spirit can and will lead us. By this the world can be changed.

In the last chapter, "One Nation under God," the author makes us see the reality of God's purpose in our land—the difference in a pledge of allegiance to a land not under God, and to the real American Way—under God. The mission of America is to establish the principles of Divine Origin as the common heritage of all nations wherein man will lift up his eyes and see himself as God meant him to be.

One Way of Living is a book worthy of readers interested in details of the above.

Graceland Gazette

■ Graceland's doors opened to the 1958-1959 freshmen on September 1, and her upperclassmen returned September 4. The official enrollment for this year is 708 students. Forty-three states and nine countries abroad are represented.

■ Saturday evening, September 6, the freshmen proved themselves eligible to become full-fledged Gracelanders in a program of mock television broadcasts, skits, and choruses. The returning students also presented a short skit.

■ Classes began Monday morning, September 8, at 7:30 a.m. A new course, photography, is offered this year. Mr. Rod Schall is the instructor. The course consists of lectures, demonstrations, and practical experience in all phases of photography.

■ On Wednesday morning, September 10, at the Opening Convocation, President Harvey H. Grice gave the address. He challenged the students with the significance of the motto "Think" as related to their Graceland experience.

■ Three 1958 graduates of Graceland are attending the Institute of American Universities, Aix-en-Provence, France, this year. They are Jackie Thompson of Ferguson, Missouri; Alan Kent of Bartlett, Illinois; and Ed Gould of Lamoni, Iowa.

■ Miss Marilyn Sorden who left Graceland to teach in Germany writes that she is bicycling through central Germany. She is enjoying many new experiences, particularly her contacts with the church in several places.

■ Graceland's 1958 football team is a unique collection of players. The fifty-eight men who have turned out represent twenty states, the territory of Hawaii, and Germany. The only section of the United States not represented this year is the New England states. Eighteen men are returning from last year's team which compiled a 5-4 record. Thirty-eight are freshmen, and two are transfer students. Representing Germany is Gerd (Gerry) Neuman. His home town is Kiel, Germany, the famous submarine base during World War II. With Russia wanting control of the Kiel Canal, Kiel was a hot spot during the war. Gerd was a very young boy then, and he used to sit in his living room and watch the bombs dropping all around him. When fourteen years old, he came to the United States with his father, who was assigned to work in the German consulate in Chicago. Gerd was enrolled in the eighth grade. His teacher interested him in football and got him to play in the Boy's Club. During his first two years at Lane Tech High School, he played first team on the soccer squad, but during his junior year he decided to try his hand at American football. He adjusted to the American game easily and saw a lot of action in his two years on the gridiron. Jim Nisley from North Platte, Nebraska, is one of the two seniors on this year's Graceland football team. Jim is one of the best all-around athletes at Graceland. The other senior is Hank Volskay from Springfield, Missouri. Hank has six years of football experience, including three years at Graceland. Hank and Jim give the 1958 Graceland football team two experienced men who can be counted on for good performances.

The 1958 football schedule is as follows:

- Sept. 20—Culver-Stockton of Missouri at Graceland
- Sept. 27—N. E. Missouri State College at Graceland
- Oct. 4—St. Mary's of Kansas at Graceland
- Oct. 11—Graceland at Missouri Valley, Marshall, Missouri
- Oct. 18—William Jewell of Liberty, Missouri, at Graceland
- Oct. 25—Graceland at Tarkio College, Tarkio, Missouri
- Oct. 31—Drake "B" and Frosh at Graceland
- Nov. 8—Graceland at Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa

■ The Ford Foundation sponsored seven regional research seminars in economics this past summer. Only ten people were chosen to participate in each seminar, and Graceland's economics and business teacher, Mr. Jerry Runkle, was one of the ten chosen for Region VI, which includes the states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota. This particular seminar dealt with market structure, business behavior, and public relations. It was held at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis.

■ Each time Dr. Evan Shute visits the campus, he brings a piece of art which he contributes to the college in the hope that Graceland will gradually accumulate a nice art collection. It is his hope that other people will desire to do the same thing. At three different times Dr. Shute has presented the college with an art piece.

■ At the annual Faculty Reception, Saturday evening, September 13, the students had their first opportunity to meet Dr. and Mrs. Grice personally. The receiving line was made up of approximately ninety people consisting of administrative officers and their wives. Consequently, there were five different receiving centers, and the students went from one to the other to meet faculty and staff members. Introductions were followed by a program presented by faculty members of the music and speech departments.

■ Graceland's annual blue-gold intrasquad football game played Saturday, September 13, on the Graceland field ended in a 14-14 tie. Coach Richard Carter divided his squad up into blue and gold units. Assistant Coach Harry Dennis was in charge of the blue team while the other assistant coach, Tom Nowlin, was in charge of the gold team.

■ Five new faculty members have joined the Graceland staff: Mr. Charles Welch in communication; Mr. Stanley W. Johnson in psychology; Mr. Bruce Swoffer in secretarial science; Dr. Lloyd Young in sociology and religion; and Mrs. Samuel A. Anderson in children's literature. Mrs. Cleo H. Moon, who had been serving as catalog librarian, has been appointed as head librarian.

■ One hundred dollars was added to the World Fellowship Fund as the result of a white elephant auction held at a faculty stewardship (potluck) supper September 16.

Nauvoo Reunion

It was the late afternoon of July 20th. Nauvoo Reunion had been over at noon, yet many stood in groups talking over the wonderful experiences of the past week, reluctant to leave. Nauvoo District had been without a reunion for two years, ever since facilities for such had been dispensed with in the further restoration of the Joseph Smith historic properties.

This year, with faith and optimism, the district purchased its own grounds, which adjoins "David's Chamber" made famous in the writings of Elbert A. Smith as the place where his father, David H. Smith, wrote some of his beautiful poems. It is part of the property that originally belonged to Davidson Hibbard, one of the first white settlers in Nauvoo, and made mention of in Joseph Smith the III. The site contains the family burial plot.

The men of the district worked hard and long clearing the land, electrifying the grounds, and building a cookhouse. Not having a commissary, each family had to provide its own meals and take its turn entertaining the visiting ministry. A canteen and small grocery store were housed there also, and water was furnished by means of a tank wagon.

Even though living conditions were primitive, one hundred and sixty-six permanent campers were registered, many of them young people and children whose contribution to the success of the reunion was outstanding.

On a vantage point overlooking the sweep of the Mississippi was pitched the big assembly tent, while near by in neighborhood groups were the family tents and trailers and at the foot of the hill the tents for children's classwork.

The campers were called to services by strains of music from an electric organ loaned by the district president. God's Spirit was felt in sweetness and power, and the ministry of the staff, Apostle D. T. Williams, Patriarch William Patterson, Seventies Russell Ralston and Lou Zonker, touched responsive hearts. The people of the Nauvoo District were glad they had not postponed any longer those wonderful experiences that come to a group when they gather together for reunion.

Tract Review

The Language of the Book of Mormon

Due to many requests, this tract was developed from articles written by the late President Israel A. Smith and published earlier in the Saints' Herald.

The tract is divided into three parts: (1) A "Sealed" Book, (2) Book of Mormon "Characters," and (3) The Language and Writing of the Book of Mormon.

The first section deals with the historical background of the Anthon transcript of characters and the proofs that it is authentic. The second section includes an extensive array of photographs of the characters taken from the Anthon transcript, and compares them with photographs of characters taken from recognized Egyptian works.

The third section is concerned with the Hebrew origin of Book of Mormon peoples and their relationship to the Egyptians—especially discussing the source of their knowledge of the Egyptian language.

This tract sells for 25 cents. It is in Herald reprint form with an attractive cover.

He is survived by his three sons: Howard F., Jr., Richard Paul, and James Emery; his wife, Lucy, and her son, Michael J., all of the home in San Leandro; his parents of San Leandro; and two brothers: Frank E. of Hayward, California, and Paul L. of Newark, California. Funeral services were conducted by Elder D. C. Holden and the San Leandro Masonic Lodge at the Estudillo Chapel of Santos-Robinson Mortuary. Interment was in Mountain View Cemetery at Oakland.

And Finally...

"POME"

When you get what you want in your struggle for self

And the world makes you king for a day,
Just go to a mirror and look at yourself
And see what that man has to say.

For it isn't your father or mother or wife
Whose judgment upon you must pass.
The fellow whose verdict counts most in your life

Is the one staring back from the glass.

You may be like Jack Horner and chisel a plum
And think you're a wonderful guy,
But the man in the glass says you're only a bum
If you can't look him straight in the eye.

He's the fellow to please, never mind all the rest

For he's with you clear up to the end,
And you've passed your most dangerous, difficult test

If the man in the glass is your friend.

OLD-TIME MISSIONARY

(At the 1893 General Conference held in Lamoni, the following was reported in the "Herald" concerning the preacher on the evening of Friday, April 7:)

The sermon of the evening session was delivered by Brother Joseph S. Lee of Wyoming, known to many of the Saints as "The Hunter." Brother Lee wears his hair long, in true frontier style. Some curiosity was manifested by many as to what would be the character of the discourse and the manner of the speaker, and the large audience was not disappointed. The keen eye of the man, trained to alertness by a life on the border, was indicative of the trenchant arguments and clear-cut statements of his sermon. Brother Lee is a philosopher. He pleased his hearers and widened his circle of friends, who appreciated his effort and encouraged him by close attention. Brother Lee has in times past preached the gospel when mobs threatened him continually, but without intimidating him. He now labors in Utah.—"Saints' Herald," 40: 232, April 15, 1893.

"A WORD TO THE WISE . . ."

From the back row of the church during a fellowship service came the curt words of a mother to her young child, "Shut up and listen!" The words seemed abrupt and harsh, but there is good advice for us adults in that instruction. Often we need to halt our conversations before and during worship services and listen to the helpful admonitions and teachings being offered by others.

Highway Signs Will Be Supplemented by Numerous Street Signs in City

New Auditorium Signs Erected

TWO LARGE HIGHWAY signs recently have been erected near Independence to inform tourists that the city is the site of the church's headquarters.

The signs invite tourists to visit the Auditorium and take a guided tour. They are located on Highway 40-71 south of Independence and on Highway 24 north of the city. Both highways are U. S. routes and heavily traveled.

According to Jack Boren, assistant to the Presiding Bishop, several more of the highway signs will be added in the future.

Before General Conference, about thirty smaller signs will be erected inside the city. The smaller city signs will include arrows to direct traffic to the headquarters building. They will be placed permanently in concrete on the main city routes.

The signs have been erected according to action taken at the 1956 General Conference. At that time it was decided that such road signs should be put up shortly before the 1958 Conference when the Auditorium would be more nearly completed.

The highway signs are very striking. They carry a large illustration of the Auditorium and the words, "While in Independence, visit . . . World Headquarters, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—Conducted Tours Every Day."

Colors in the highway signs are blue, gold, silver, with a little red. The large signs measure ten by twenty-four feet.

The smaller city signs will also have an illustration of the Auditorium as well as a pointer and a few words directing travelers to the building. The small signs will be mostly green and white.

Both the highway and city signs will be visible at night through the use of "scotch-light" lettering.

Everett Berndt, Auditorium supervisor, reports that visitors at the headquarters building are running far ahead of last year. During the summer months of June, July, and August, visitors totaled 4,500—nearly 1,500 more than the same months in 1957. He expects the total number of visitors this year to be the largest in the building's history, especially with the new signs helping tourists find the landmark.

Wanted: An Unbeaten Generation

For I beheld, and there was no man; even among men, and there was no counsellor, that, when I asked of them, could answer a word. Behold, they are all vanity; their works are nothing; their molten images are wind and confusion.—Isaiah 41: 28, 29.

The "Beat" Generation

Here is a phrase, sinister, alarming, and portentous, that has been appearing in late newspaper stories, and now even in the comics. A group of people have so named themselves, and they have a literature, including poetry, novels, essays, and a philosophy of their own. They appear to think they have taken a beating from life, and they are retreating from the conflict. Their literature at least represents a turning downward to elementary levels of behavior and ethics, self-indulgence, carnality, and crude individualism. Some seem to accept the pose of defeat without ever having fought, simply because they prefer to go down.

Unbeaten Ancestors

These people come of ancestors who were not beaten. Americans of the Revolutionary War period had it hard, but they did not accept defeat. Pioneers brought the West under submission with crude tools and bare hands, and they were not beaten. Theirs was the literature of Walt Whitman, Mark Twain, and Bret Harte; theirs were the legends of Paul Bunyan, Wild Bill Pecos, and Johnny Appleseed. Now we have the "beat generation" whose legend is Peter Rabbit. They were raised on free school lunches, vitamin pills, TV entertainment, and government subsidies. They take a quick look at the future and decide to run from it, shuffling off the scene in slacks and slippers. They are something to contemplate.

Are We Bankrupt?

Isaiah apparently found some of this same kind of people in his time. Could there be a streak of jaundice in human nature that appears recurrently in the generations? Yet it would appear to be a product of culture and ideas rather than a matter of biology.

It is tragic that the popular literature of our times for a whole generation has shown a loss of the qualities of beauty, honor, integrity, human dignity, and holiness in life. It reveals humanity at its worst and lowest levels.

We are not bankrupt. It is as in the days of Elijah when the Lord said, "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees of which have not bowed unto Baal." There are still good books, and good people to read them. There are still people motivated by ideals.

Men Wanted

In places where large construction projects were to be undertaken, signs used to appear: "Men Wanted." Men are wanted today, as they were in the generation of Josiah Gilbert Holland, who wrote: "God give us men! A time like this demands strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands."

The qualities of human nature have not changed. The race is not worse than it was in former times. People have simply been misled, fed the wrong kind of ideas and inspirations. They have read a corrupt literature. They have set their feet upon the wrong paths. The ways they have taken will lead to their own destruction if they do not turn back. But they can still be called back, and they can still turn back if they will.

People have been betrayed by counsels of failure and despair. Their mentors are the half-articulate, whose works are nothing, and whose gods are "wind and confusion," as Isaiah said.

Futilitarianism

Those of the "beat generation" are futilitarians—their works are futile and useless. In Ezekiel's time, "The king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way . . . to use divination; he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked in the liver." Instead of using his intelligence he drew lots with arrows to decide his course, he sought wisdom from dumb idols, and he looked into the entrails of a dead animal for light. Some people are doing no better than that today. This is the futilitarian way of life.

The prophet Haggai cried to Israel, "This saith the Lord of hosts; consider your ways."

It is high time that we should consider our ways, if we would save ourselves.

The Return to God

Malachi delivered a message to Israel: "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts."

Jesus said, "Come unto me."

And in these latter days the church offers to men its protection and guidance, and an opportunity to contribute something to enduring good. "Whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God," and "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them," are the words of the prophet. We have the promises; we have been told what to do; it is the time now to do it.

Changes in Civil Service Retirement

THE ATTENTION of all bishops and bishop's agents is called to Public Law 85-465 approved June 25, 1958, which will very favorably affect certain widows and widowers of deceased federal employees. Qualified survivors will be eligible for annuities up to $63.00 per month.

The qualified widow or widower of a retired employee who died before February 29, 1948, becomes eligible to receive one half the monthly annuity that the retired spouse was receiving when he (or she) died. Similarly, the surviving widow or widower of a person who died while employed in the federal government before that date becomes eligible for a monthly annuity equal to half the amount the spouse would have received if he (or she) had been retired at the time of death.

Eligibility requirements for the new survivor benefits provide:

The husband (or wife) who died before February 29, 1948, (1) must have worked for the United States or the District of Columbia government for at least ten years, including any military service; and (2) at the time of death, must have been employed in a position covered by the Civil Service Retirement Act, or have been retired and receiving civil service annuity checks.

The widow or widower (1) must have been married to the deceased at the time of his death and for at least five years before; (2) must not be receiving any other civil service annuity based on the government service of the deceased; and (3) must not have remarried. All of the above requirements must be met.

While the Oblation Fund renders a splendid service in giving assistance to our members, it does not suffice to meet all the needs, even when full use is made of funds available from tax-supported services. Priesthood members in each state who are interested in giving ministry to the poor should familiarize themselves with the welfare provisions of the state and community in which they reside. There are undoubtedly a number of aged church members living on very limited incomes who can qualify for assistance under Public Law 85-465 if it is called to their attention and such assistance as is needed given in making application. Persons who meet all the requirements should write to the Retirement Division, U. S. Civil Service Commission, Washington 25, D. C., for the proper application forms.

Our Heritage of Prophetic Ministry

Wherefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments, and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world; . . . that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world.

—Doctrine and Covenants 1:4.

PROPHETIC MINISTRY may be described as the revelation of the mind and will of God. We think of Elijah speaking the mind and will of God in a spectacular way when he walked into the court of King Ahab and Queen Jezebel. The king and queen were dressed in all their finery and surrounded by their court. Elijah entered the palace dressed in coarse material with a sheep's skin mantle drawn about his shoulders. Speaking in a rough voice he prophesied, "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years" (I Kings 17: 1).

The will of God is never spoken in the abstract. It is spoken in light of conditions that exist at the time. In this incident Elijah was telling the results of the sins which the people were committing. Prophetic ministry then has a direct application to the lives of those who hear and sometimes to the lives of those in the future who will read it.

Prophetic ministry reveals truth. Because of the many complications of modern life this takes on a new emphasis. It is difficult for us to see the causes as well as the results of many things that happen. We are unable to see the hand of God working in us and in those around us to bring about his purposes. Sometimes in our moments of despair we forget that God loves us. Most of us at one time or another have seen a prophetic message delivered in a prayer service in which a person in need is assured of the protecting power of God. This is a profound truth even though it is simple.

An Ever Present Need

Every generation and every person in each generation needs the strengthening and directing help that comes from the revealing of the truth as seen through the eyes of God. It is our heritage to be associated together in an endeavor where the very nature of the work provides for this prophetic ministry. Those who have been faithful in prayer meeting attendance have seen the prophetic ministry evidenced.

Our heritage in prophetic ministry has been enriched because of the Lord speaking through his prophets concerning times that have passed. Our concept of Zion is clearer because this ministry has helped us see what Enoch's City was like. "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them" (Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2). We would have known little of Enoch's City were it not for the prophet Joseph Smith. Although legends have continued to persist regarding a city such as Enoch's yet the principles which made it so would have been lost.

Beyond Human Insight

A major function of the prophetic ministry is to speak the mind and will of God concerning the conditions that are contemporary to the prophet. The situation that is existing at the time the prophetic ministry is delivered is always the point of departure, even though the prophet may speak of high goals, of things to come, or of things past. Calls to the priesthood are by their very nature this type of prophetic ministry. For with God's help the church officers see the lives of the men more nearly as God sees them. They see what they are as well as what they may become and what ministry they may offer. These qualities are often hidden from the natural eyes of man. Most of us have questioned a call to the priesthood at one time or another. But as the man is ordained and begins to function in his calling, the truthfulness of his calling is evidenced by the fruits of his labor.

It has been said that there are not as many public prophecies today as in times past. One reason that this has appeared to be so is that years ago it was common for others than the proper administrative officers to rise in a meeting and prophetically indicate that someone was called to the priesthood. This happened before the pastor was ready to make the call known. Today the procedure has been corrected in harmony with the law whereby the calls must first come through the pastor (Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4). The evidences received by others of the call are expressed when the call is made known. This has taken away some of the spectacularity of the gifts, even though it has in no sense taken away the effectiveness or importance of them.

As the Need Arises

The stream of our heritage runs deep when we see the new concepts that God has revealed through his latter-day prophets. Again, each of these came at a time when the need was either present or soon to be present. In the 1830's alcoholic liquor was in common use by members of many families. They did not have the advantage of the scientific research which has shown to us the harmful effects of it. A school-teacher once dismissed a school for a two weeks' vacation and gave the children a bottle of liquor to celebrate. Adults consumed it as though it were water. Indeed the mind and will of God was revealed through his prophet in Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1: "And again, strong drinks are not for the belly."

The Saints in August, 1833, had lost some of the clarity of their goal because of the persecutions that had taken place. Those in Jackson County would soon be driven from their possessions. It was necessary that the Lord again speak concerning his will in relation to the government under which they lived. In the time of confusion and frustration their vision needed clearing (Doctrine and Covenants 95:2): ". . . concerning the laws of the land, It is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and . . . in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land . . . wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold." There was a great temptation among the people to use unlawful means to try to gain justice. But with this prophetic ministry they were shown what ought to be their procedure.

New Concepts

New concepts regarding the nature of man have been added as a result of the prophetic ministry. Much of the religious world believed in Joseph Smith's time that man was inherently evil, that he had been evil since the beginning because of Adam's sin, and that he had to suffer for thus being evil. The new concept which brought light and hope to the world is found in Doctrine and Covenants 90:6, "Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning, and God having redeemed man from the fall, man became again in their infant state, innocent before God." This concept is also evidence of the nature of God. He loves us.

Our greatest heritage lies in those prophetic experiences that give us a goal to work toward. "Zionic conditions are no further away nor any closer than the spiritual condition of my people justifies."—Doctrine and Covenants 140:5.

Prophecies of doom and destruction, although necessary to reveal accurately the result of sin, should not be given undue importance. Experiences which dwell primarily on the negative side are not of the same high quality as those which point the way to new horizons. The quality of Doctrine and Covenants 1:4 is pointed up when we realize that the major stress is placed not on calamities but upon God's calling certain men to spread the gospel plan throughout the world.

The God-Man Relationship

The nature of prophetic ministry calls for close co-operation between God and man. It can be best illustrated by the story of the man who visited a greenhouse and was extolling the beauty of God's creation. The florist took the man out behind the greenhouse where a small wild rose grew. "It is beautiful, isn't it? But," he added, "come inside and let me show you what God and man have done together." The florist showed him the great array of beautiful roses that God and man had brought into being. Prophetic experiences generally come when man is attentive to the Spirit of God, and the heavenly Father has something to say. There is an initiative on the part of both God and man.

The Age of Intolerance

Man's background cannot be divorced from the prophetic experience. He sees and understands according to his experiences. Joseph Smith, the martyr, lived in an age of religious intolerance. Even though he rose above the common understanding of the time, the intolerance of his age is evidenced in some of his prophetic messages. This is best evidenced by his frequent use of "shall." This is mandatory. "And on this day thou shalt do none other thing" (Doctrine and Covenants 59:3). His son Joseph saw the result of religious intolerance and was reared in a time when tolerance was beginning to be noticed. He states concerning Sunday (Doctrine and Covenants 119:7), "The church is admonished that until further revelation is received . . ." "Admonished" is a term which denotes pleading.

Elder
Fred Young

This same thing is true of all prophets of all ages. The Hebrew prophet Nahum thought of God only as the God of Israel. He was raised with the spirit of nationalism. He hated Nineveh. The prophet Amos began to see Him as the God of all people, everywhere. Amos was the product of a different part of Judea. He was not a priest but a lonely herdsman.

The Importance of Awareness

Awareness of needs and hopes is basic to the prophetic ministry. It is unlikely that the Lord could have spoken to Joseph Smith if Joseph hadn't been aware of a need and gone to God in prayer. Virtually all the revelations we have in the Doctrine and Covenants came as the result of inquiry by the prophet, the elders, and the people. Doctrine and Covenants 42:1 is a good example: "As ye have assembled yourselves together according to the commandment wherewith I commanded you, and are agreed as touching this one thing, and have asked the Father in my name, even so ye shall receive . . ." Doctrine and Covenants 128 came after the elders had gathered at General Conference in Lamoni, inquiring of the Lord concerning Zion. It is a rare event when a man is called to the priesthood or some important function without the officers of the church being aware of the individual, some of his qualifications, and desires. I know of only one such time, and that man was asked to undertake a mission to the islands of the Pacific. From this we can readily see that the purpose of the prophetic experiences is to raise us from where we are to a higher level of understanding of God and his ways. For this reason prophetic experiences must have more than an emotional exhilaration in our lives.

Apostasy has been termed a turning aside. However, apostasy is accompanied by the restricting of the prophetic experiences of the Saints. As our vision of God and his hopes for us dims, we lose our way and begin to flounder. Our heritage of prophetic ministry has clearly shown us the necessity of receiving an ever-increasing amount of light from God.

Misconceptions

Some common misconceptions of prophetic ministry make it appear almost mechanical. One such misconception, figuratively speaking, makes it seem as though all a prophet has to do is to pick up his spiritual telephone and speak to God as he would his next-door neighbor and receive an answer to his question. Nothing could be further from the truth. Prophetic ministry requires fasting and prayer. The prophet must be alert to God and have a knowledge of his law and commandments. He must be sensitive to the promptings of the Holy Spirit. He must use wisdom. He must bring into play all the abilities and strength that he has been endowed with, as well as harmonizing his mind and will with that of God. There is no such thing as easy prophetic ministry.

The prophets have been known as lonely men because they have seen beyond the vision of the men about them. Elijah who had seen clearly the results of the sin of Ahab and Jezebel went to the brook Cherith. The period of isolation spent there typifies the loneliness which pervades the lives of the prophets. They cannot discuss many of the things that are on their hearts because few people would understand and appreciate them.

Sometimes theirs is a life of sorrow. Even as Joseph Smith was to proclaim the "calamity" which should come upon the lives of people because they had forsaken God, so have the prophets of all ages sorrowed over sin in the lives of their people. Because of the prophetic experiences in their lives, they see more clearly the results of following anyone but God. This is one of the reasons they have been willing to risk all that they might preach and teach the people the way of God.

A Great Responsibility

Prophetic ministry is one of great responsibility. If it were not for the confirming power of the Holy Spirit, most men would back away from it. Think of the responsibility for a mortal man, one of billions created on this earth, to speak to God's creation and say, "This is the will of God." Yet our heritage is rich because of the bravery of men to speak when they have been so directed by God.

Any prophetic experience is a humbling one. The natural result of coming into the presence of the Master is to recognize how insignificant we are in relation to Christ. This doesn't mean that we are as nothing, but in comparison to him we are as nothing. Isaiah said it well (Isaiah 6:15): "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."

We are fortunate that the nature of God's plan is for prophetic ministry on every level of life. We see this evident on the General Church level by the contents of the Doctrine and Covenants, as well as the calling of men to office, i.e., bishops and evangelists. It is evidenced on stake, district, and branch levels in calls to the priesthood, administration of the ordinances, and in the administrative affairs and meetings. There is one level of life in which prophetic ministry is not often recognized—the home—and yet its importance in the home is equal to that on any other level of life. Many testimonies have been given by faithful mothers and fathers of the insight they have received from God concerning the lives of their children as well as each other. This has been coupled with direction that has helped lead them closer to Christ. Some people term this intuition, but I prefer to give the credit to God and his concern for us rather than to some happenstance.

Personal Testimony

Prophetic experiences have provided the bedrock upon which my life in the church is founded. They have provided me with a concept of the nature of God that would not be possible otherwise. As chairman of a building committee several years ago, I spent months in prayer and study over a particular problem that confronted us. During my lunch hour one day I felt myself being drawn close to God. I felt as though if one more veil were removed I could look down into the future stream of time. During this experience, insight into the nature of the problem confronting the committee was given to me. In addition, a question was answered that had bothered me for years. I often wondered why the Psalmist and the prophets spent time speaking words of praise and glory to God. In this experience I realized that the natural result of coming into the presence of the Master is to offer praise and thanks to him.

Our Responsibility

We have a rich heritage of prophetic ministry in the Restoration, in the Scriptures, and in our daily life at home and at church. There goes with this heritage a great responsibility. The first is that we make good use in our lives of the light and knowledge received. The second is that we do all possible, through prayer and study, to keep the flow of wise, prophetic ministry increasing to aid us in the building of the kingdom of God.

Voices We Hear

ONE OF GOD'S greatest gifts to man is the art of communication, the use of the voice. There are many kinds of voices in the world, and none is without some significance, even though slight. It is wise to learn the ultimate meaning of voices we hear, that we may profit thereby. Some are so filled with import they change a man's whole life.

There is such a superabundance of radio and TV voices each day, relating the world's fast-changing events, commercials, stories, and sports, that little good results from listening, but precious time is consumed and often entirely wasted.

It is what we do about this situation that matters. It is inevitable that voices lead to life's ultimate choices.

As we endeavor to become Christlike, we learn to know the true worth and great importance of the voices to which we listen. What tremendous instruments they are!

The voice of evil carries bitterness, wrath, anger, evil speaking, dissension, lying, and destruction.

The voice of righteousness pleads for love, witnessing, giving, forgiving, tenderness, and edification. These determine the meaning and direction of our lives, both spiritual and temporal. These voices are the center of our relationships with one another and with God. They are the index of the heart, revealing our deepest feelings.

If we are zealous of spiritual gifts, the voices to which we listen must have deep spiritual values, calling for the resistance of evil and the renewing of the inner life. Then with the help of the Holy Spirit we seek to make our voices heard in the cause of Christ that lives may be molded to make a rich contribution to the building of God's kingdom.

God will lead us to success if we learn to listen to the voices which help us build spiritual natures to Christ's pattern.

Graceland's Greatest Need

The new food service building is still in the planning stage

THE GREATEST need at Graceland College is for a new food service building, according to President Harvey H. Grice.

Studies have been going on for a number of months to determine the best type of building to build and the best arrangement of facilities. The college staff wants to make sure that the building is a good one when it is built, because at present the food service department is the greatest bottleneck for a growing Graceland.

According to Mrs. Lillian Flanders, director of food service, the present kitchen and dining hall in the lower floor of Walker Hall were opened in 1928. They were planned to feed about 300 students. This year the Graceland student body will number 685. To say that the food service department is overtaxed is an understatement. It will be impossible for Graceland to accept a larger number of students until the food service department moves into larger quarters.

Mrs. Flanders has been working closely with Jim White, business manager, and Dr. William Gould, acting president before the appointment of Dr. Grice. They have visited and studied the food service departments at a number of colleges similar in size to Graceland.

"When you visit other college facilities of this type it is amazing to see the problems and poor planning that can happen," Jim White said. "Because of these visits, however, we feel we have arrived at a plan that will meet our needs very well and very reasonably."

New Food Service Plans

A few years ago the college began plans for a new food service building which would be part of a new student union building. Plans now call for just the food service building, utilizing much of the former blueprints.

Brother White explained that the food service building alone will be less expensive and better able to meet Graceland's needs. In estimating the needs, he pointed out, it is necessary to look into the future of the college and be sure that the new building will meet future needs as well as existing needs.

Because of this, the building now planned will be built to accommodate a student body of 1,000. It will be a one-story building with partial basement. The size will be 100 by 104 feet. The cost will be about $500,000 of which over $300,000 is already available.

Plans call for the building to seat 500 persons at one time at four-place tables. This is adequate for a student body of 1,000. The building will be located between Gunsolley and Walker Halls, just east of Patroness Hall. The south side of the building will include a lot of glass, furnishing a nice view of the campus from the dining room.

Kitchens, a small lounge, offices, storage space, employee and student rest rooms are also provided for in the plans. By careful planning of these facilities, the architects hope to solve several problems now existing. For example, the present food service storage facilities are very limited and most of the department's canned goods are stored across town in Herald Hall; this is an inconvenient, costly procedure.

More Time, More Room

Mrs. Flanders said that she hopes the new plans which provide more seating space and more charm and beauty for the dining room will also help students to learn more about gracious dining.

"Students now average about ten minutes at the table during a meal," she said. "They gobble their food. There is a reason, though. For one thing, they see the long line of students waiting to eat and feel they must rush and make room. Also, they have had to wait themselves and often do not have time to eat a meal properly.

"We hope to help this situation by having two serving lines to speed the process so students can spend more time at the table. Also, the waiting line, if there is one, will not be visible from the dining room. And we hope the surroundings will be more pleasant and conducive to better eating habits.

"The dining room will include folding doors for shutting off areas for club and other small group dinners. Perhaps we can use some of these areas for instruction and example in better table manners."

And Banquets Too

Another problem that will be solved by the new building concerns large banquets and dinners. In the past large functions have been held in the Student Union. This has made it necessary to carry dishes and equipment to the Union to set up the tables, and also to carry the food between the Walker Hall kitchen and the Union while the banquet was in progress. The new building will have a dining room large enough to seat the entire student body when tables and chairs are arranged banquet fashion. The small waiting lounge will also be very handy during such affairs.

Start in the Spring

Each year about 140 college students take part-time jobs in the food service department. They are supplemented by nearly twenty full-time employees. The new building will not require so many workers and will thus be more economical. Those who do work will have better lighted and ventilated working conditions.

It is hoped that the money needed to begin the building will be available and construction can start in the spring, Brother White said.

Whether or not this is possible will depend on both the action of the coming General Conference and the generosity of the alumni and friends of the college on Graceland College Day, November 9.

Preparing the Way South of the Border

THERE ARE some 22,000 Protestant missionaries busily engaged in evangelizing Latin America, according to a recent article in Time magazine.

The Protestant movement south of the border is reaching major proportions, the article states. The Methodist Bishop of Buenos Aires is quoted as estimating Protestant church membership at five million and a total Protestant community of ten million, including all children, teen-agers, and others who have not formally announced their Protestantism. Brazil alone, the Bishop said, has four million Protestants.

Another interesting note on missionary work being done in Latin America appeared in a recent issue of the Improvement Era. Marion G. Romney, Mormon apostle in charge of that church's work in Mexico, reporting to the April, 1958, conference of the Utah church, said Mormon membership in Mexico at the turn of the year was 11,249. Convert baptisms last year, he said, totaled 1,288. There are 254 Mormon missionaries in Mexico.

As the church with the greatest commission on earth to take its message to the people of Latin America, we can take heart that the barriers of religion and government which have so long stood in our way seem to be breaking down. Others have been preparing the way for us.

Discussion on Succession and Authority

Editor's Note: The following letter was written by the President of Los Angeles Stake to a Mormon Professor of El Camino (California) College. It will be read with much interest by those concerned about the historical differences between the Reorganization and the Mormon church.

DEAR MR. GREER:

I have finally found time to organize my thoughts for a considered answer to your questions regarding the rights of Joseph Smith III to succeed his martyred father in the prophetic office. I am indebted to Seventy Houston Hobart of Salt Lake City for some of the material reviewed. I personally feel a very kindly spirit toward your people among whom I number some very good friends. I respect the sincerity of your intent in raising these questions, and will deal with them in the order of their presentation. I hope that my answers will help you to better understand our position even though you may not accept it.

1. Holy Scriptures. Historically, why has the Reorganization not accepted the prophet's revelation concerning Moses' writings, as contained in the Book of Moses; the inspired translation of the Egyptian papyrus as now contained in the Book of Abraham, both of which are contained in the complete book THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE?

The Reorganization has historically accepted the Prophet's revelation concerning Moses' writings as contained in the Book of Moses. However, when the prophet corrected the King James Version of the Bible (completed July 2, 1833—see Church Chronology, page 9) the writings of Moses were actually a part of the Book of Genesis. It is as the Book of Genesis of the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures that we have these writings today in the Reorganized Church.

The Book of Moses, Chapter 1, titled Visions of Moses, is in the Inspired Version preface. The writings of Moses comprise chapters 2 through 8. The comparable passage is recorded in the Inspired Version's chapters 1 to 8 ending with verse 18. The Inspired Version continues the prophet's corrections while the Book of Moses ends with Moses 8:30. We can safely say that the Reorganization receives more of the work of the prophet in this respect than does the Utah church.

The Book of Abraham closely resembles the Inspired Version which had not been published at the time the Book of Abraham came forth. Many passages are identical. The divinity of the book may be questioned on the point that it contradicts the Book of Moses in the Pearl of Great Price as well as the Holy Bible. See Abraham 4:1-3 (The Gods) and Moses 1:1-3 (I, God.) Compare also Abraham 2:14 with Genesis 12:4; Abraham 2:22 with Genesis 12:11-13.

Joseph Smith spoke of the papyrus as purporting to be the Book of Abraham. The fact that he translated it does not make it divine. To emphasize this point we recommend examination of Joseph Smith as a Translator, Chapter VI, page 73, which says:

Our preference leads us, also, to devoting attention to this book, because, as we understand his own representations, it was produced through application of his acquired knowledge, rather than with any claim to extraordinary assistance. In other words, if translation it is, it was translated even as any scholar of today would translate, subject to the limitations involved in the state of the original text, as well as in his own mental qualifications for the work.

The term "complete book" cannot be applied to the Pearl of Great Price. For instance, the only part of the Gospel of Matthew which is included in the book is verse 39 of chapter 23 and chapter 24. Joseph finished the correcting of the King James Version February 2, 1833. The Reorganization has the entire work.

2. Authority. It is my present understanding that you base the government of the church through the son of the Prophet Joseph. I should therefore like information; specifically the date, place, witnesses, and the prayer of ordination given by the Prophet to his young son. Particularly, I should like to see the evidence that the Prophet bestowed apostolic authority upon his son and gave him the keys to the kingdom.

Testimony of Joseph Smith III:

About my selection by my father to be his successor in office, I remember of being called in his office, or into a room adjoining his office, and receiving the laying on of hands, and a prophetic blessing or setting apart, whatever it may be called. I remember that, and also remember that just before his departure for Carthage, with a number of others, I was called into a room in the Mansion House, and there again received the laying on of hands, and the blessing. I was also present at a meeting in the grove near the Temple, and I remember my father laying his hands on my head and saying to the people that this was his successor, or was to be his successor.—Plaintiff's Abstract, pages 40-41.

Testimony of Lyman Wight:

Now, Mr. Editor, if you had been present when Joseph called on me shortly after we came out of jail [Liberty, Jail, Missouri.—Ed.] to lay hands with him on the head of a youth, and heard him cry aloud, "You are my successor when I depart," and heard the blessings poured on his head,—I say had you heard all this, and seen the tears streaming from his eyes,—you would not have been led by blind fanaticism, or zeal without knowledge."—History of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, pages 789-91.

Testimony of James Whitehead:

I was the private secretary of Joseph Smith from early in June, 1842, until he was killed in 1844. . . . I recollect a meeting that was held in the winter of 1843, at Nauvoo, Illinois, prior to Joseph Smith's death, at which the appointment was made by him, Joseph Smith, of his successor. His son Joseph was selected as his successor.—Plaintiff's Abstract, pages 27, 28.

The church did take action as a body on the question of the ordination of young Joseph as his father's successor; the church consented to it. That was done first by the indorsement of the High Council, and then it was brought up before the whole body of the congregation, the whole people; and there were thousands there. That was done at the meeting held in the grove at the east end of the Temple. I should think there were three thousand (3,000) there. There was a record kept of it, but the record was taken to Salt Lake. I was present on that occasion. There was a vote taken, the congregation voted, and agreed to the appointment of young Joseph as the successor of his father. The vote was taken by the raising of the right hand I think. A negative vote was taken, but nobody voted in the negative.—Ibid., page 33.

Testimony of John H. Carter, Sr.:

I was present at the meeting in the City of Nauvoo, in the State of Illinois, at which something was said or done about the successor of Joseph Smith . . .

Joseph Smith came on the stand leading his son, young Joseph, and they sat him down on a bench at the prophet's right hand, and Joseph got up and began to preach and talk to the people, and the question he said was asked by somebody, "If Joseph Smith should be killed or die, who would be his successor?" And he turned around and said, pointing to his son, "There is the successor," and he went on and said, "My work is pretty nearly done," and that is about all he said in regard to his son. . . .

It was the understanding of the people generally, of the church as far as I know; all understood it from that day on that when the boy Joseph came of age he would take the lead in the church and be at its head. There were a great many people who believed that, and moreover, President Young preached it himself for some time after he came into the Valley. That was the belief of hundreds and thousands; was the belief then, and is the belief now.

I have always believed that ever since I heard Joseph say the words I have stated, . . . and I believe it today, just as strongly as I ever did, and it was under that belief that I followed President Young west with the branch of the church now known as the Salt Lake branch.

Not one half of the members would have followed Brigham Young west, or would have followed his leadership, if it had not been published at the time and advised by the authorities of the church that young Joseph Smith would eventually be the leader of the church. If that had not been told the members, there would not have been one half to follow them who did in fact follow them.—Plaintiff's Abstract, pages 179-181.

Much speculation abounds as to who will be successor of the imposter Joe. It is asserted by those who profess to know that his oldest son, a lad of about twelve years of age, is to be the new ruler, and that a revelation to that effect was left behind by the departed prophet.—Public Ledger, copied from the St. Louis Transcript of July 10, 1844.

Patriarchal blessing of "Young Joseph," given by Joseph Smith, Sr.:

I lay my hands upon your head to bless you; your name is Joseph, and it is after the name of your father; you are Joseph the third; and you shall live, and after you are grown up, you shall have wisdom, knowledge, and understanding. And you shall search into the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Your heart shall be tender toward all, and your hand shall be opened to relieve the poor. You shall be admired by everyone who beholds you, and you shall be an honor to your father and mother, and a comfort to your mother, and a help to your brothers. You shall have power to carry out all that your father left undone when you become of age. And you shall have power given you to wield the sword of Laban.—Saints' Herald, Volume 56, July 28, 1909, page 702.

3. Who ordained young Joseph? By what authority, and where did these persons receive the Apostolic authority necessary to bestow the keys? Assuming that Joseph III held the keys in the first place (which could be in error), why did he not ordain them, instead of they him?

Joseph Smith II was ordained president of the high priesthood of the church under the hands of Z. H. Gurley, Sr., an apostle in the Reorganized Church, and William Marks, a high priest. Both of these brethren held priesthood in the days of Joseph the Martyr. Elder Marks was President of the Far West and the Nauvoo Stakes. Joseph the Martyr related a vision he had concerning William Marks in which he said that Brother Marks was surrounded by a great concourse of enemies from whom he was delivered. Joseph further stated, "And again the Lord said, 'I will raise thee up for a blessing unto many people.'" The prophet commented that this vision was evidently given him so that he would know that the hand of the Lord would be on Brother Marks' behalf.

Joseph the Martyr could not himself have been ordained by any authority higher than that held by William Marks who ordained young Joseph, for he was ordained President of the High Priesthood before the twelve apostles were selected. Note the following dates:

January 25, 1832, Joseph Smith ordained President of the High Priesthood

February 14, 1835, Twelve Apostles were chosen

There is no evidence to support the generally accepted view of Utah Mormons that Peter, James, and John physically laid hands upon him to ordain him to the Melchisedec priesthood. Such a historical event should have been mentioned somewhere in Joseph's accounts. It would seem, rather, that Joseph and Oliver were commanded to ordain each other. The word "ordain" has several meanings. We use such an expression as "God has ordained that . . .," in other words that God has willed it. This subject is treated at some length in Reorganized Church History, Volume 1, pages 59-66. Those interested should study this chapter.

I am certain that competent Mormon historians themselves recognize the difficulty in finding any real evidence of any physical act of ordination. The Reorganized History says of the problem:

Some have supposed that they received two ordinations; one under the hands of Peter, James, and John, and one by each other; but it is scarcely supposable that they would fail to mention so important an item. There is no historical evidence of such an event. Nor is there any evidence that Peter, James, and John were present, either when the instruction was given to ordain or when the ordination took place. The only historical account of their appearance is the epistle quoted from above [Doctrine and Covenants 110: 20, 21] and the place of that appearance is definitely given as between Harmony, Susquehanna County (Pennsylvania), and Colesville, Broome County (New York), while the place of instruction concerning ordination, as also the ordination itself, was at Fayette, Seneca County (New York). It is not safe then to write historically that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were ever ordained literally under the hands of Peter, James, and John. He who does so writes recklessly and without sufficient evidence upon which to base his conclusion.—Volume 1, pages 64, 65.

With regard to the lesser ordaining the greater, consider the ordination of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, to the office of President of the Church. The Reorganized Church History has this to say:

There is one point in the ordination at Amherst that may trouble some; viz., that this council of high priests ordained Joseph to a higher office than was held by themselves. But this is in harmony with the event mentioned before, where the office of elder in the Melchisedec priesthood was bestowed upon Oliver Cowdery under the hands of Joseph Smith, prior to Joseph's ordination; and also in harmony with the action of elders ordaining high priests at the June conference of 1831. These examples make it clear that those in whom the rights of priesthood exist may officiate in any ordination, where emergency demands and a command of God directs; though where the church is perfectly organized the general rule is for the greater to ordain the lesser.—Church History, Volume 1, page 247.

The government of the Reorganized Church is based upon the law of succession which was given by the Lord to the church in February, 1831—Section 43 in the Doctrine and Covenants of both churches.

4. Succession. (Assuming that you shall have answered the previous question to our satisfaction I continue) Having received the above ordination, why (if history is correct) did Joseph III hesitate to fulfill that which he should have known was given him to fulfill?

Joseph Smith III hesitated to take the place that was rightfully his pursuant to his father's designation to be his successor because he had to be satisfied which of the groups represented the church organized in 1830. Emissaries from the Utah church, the Reorganization, and others requested him to affiliate with them. It was taught in Utah as late as 1856 that Joseph and his brothers would journey to Utah.

At present the Prophet Joseph's boys lay apparently in a state of slumber, everything seems to be perfectly calm with them, but by and by God will wake them up, and they will roar like the thunders of mount Sinai.—Heber C. Kimball, Journal of Discourses, Volume 4, page 6.

In the fall of 1859 Joseph received the evidence he awaited. The Lord manifested that the Reorganization was the rightful successor to the original church, and he made the necessary arrangements which led to his uniting with the Saints.

5. Your Offerings. I should like you to list several items which your church offers me, were I to become a convert—items which I do not already possess, things which are above and beyond what my church has already granted and does yet promise me. (This of necessity, I grant, must be limited by your present knowledge of my church and what it offers me.)

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints offers you the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ as it was taught in the days of the apostles and restored through the prophet Joseph Smith. That the Reorganized Church is the true successor to the original was recognized by an impartial judge before whom all available evidence in support of the Utas Mormons' claims was placed. See any county law library for the following statement by Judge Philips in his decision in the case of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints vs. The Church of Christ ("Hedrikites") rendered March 16, 1896—Federal Reporter, First Series, Volume 60.

Marian Blumenschein

WE LIVE ALONE in La Suiza in our little grove of pines. Our nearest neighbors live in the small village of Orcancitos a mile and a half away. There are a number of reasons why we live alone. The natives prefer to live together in villages. We very seldom see a farmstead in Honduras. Farmers walk miles from the village to their fields. When we do see a farm home standing alone outside of the village it is not like a farmstead in the States—it is a single little hut; the only other building may be a tiny chicken house built on stilts.

Another reason we are alone in the Suiza is that we chose the valley rather than the mountaintop. This is malaria country. The natives warned us that there is mucha plaga (much plague) in the valley, that it is more healthful to live in Mogote where there are no mosquitoes. None of their homes are screened, and for them it is more healthful to live on top of the mountain. In the little fishing villages around the lake the people sleep with mosquito netting over their hammocks. It was with some trepidation that I brought our family of five children into the valley, but my husband taught us ways of the malaria mosquito and gave us the rules we live by. It is much to our advantage that the nearest settlement is a mile and a half away as the malaria mosquito usually does not fly more than a quarter of a mile from one victim to another. Since our arrival in March the government of Honduras has sprayed every home in this lake country including our own. This is part of the United Nations program to eradicate malaria from the face of the earth.

The entrance to our valley was blocked by a creek that could not be crossed without a fair-sized bridge. John and José made camp by the creek with enough black beans in the pot on the rock to last for three days. They had scarcely finished setting up three rocks for the bean pot when they were discovered by a teen-age boy, Manuel Castillo, on his pony. This was a very fortunate circumstance. Manuel stayed to lend a hand to the work of felling and moving large pines for the twenty-foot span. He rounded up all the heavy planks that last year had made his fine raft. He and Jorge had quite a business of hauling people and cargo across the swollen stream during the last rainy season. He had enough planks for the whole bridge, and he was proud that he could be of help. He reported to his folks in Mogote, "Gringos are building in La Suiza, and, Mom, they are a different kind of gringos; they eat beans. These are the people I want to work for."

The Castillos have observed the ways of North Americans in their contacts with the Rosario Mining Colony in near-by Mochito. Their observation is that in Mochito the gringos eat only meat rather than beans.

Manuel came to work for us in May; he has made his home with us ever since. He is a strong well-built boy for fifteen. He is one of the twelve healthy, handsome children of Ladisleo and Maria Castillo. We are not surprised that Manuel is clean and neat and that his table manners are very acceptable. He is accustomed to eating on a tablecloth in their tile-floored, flower-filled, sunny dining room at home. He plays a harmonica—after a fashion—and would like to learn to play the guitar, which is the most common and most popular instrument.

Manuel and his teen-age boy friends who flock here on week ends have built a soccer field in the crossroads in front of our home. They call the game football, but the only resemblance to football is the goal posts. They tie handkerchiefs over their heads for a smoother bounce, as they either bat the ball off their heads or kick it with their feet.

We met the Hernandez family, too, the day we landed in La Suiza. John and José selected a particularly beautiful spot in the edge of the pine grove and were clearing it off with the machete we brought with us from the States when suddenly they were confronted by a man on horseback. "This is my land," he said. "You can't build here."

Señor Hiraldo Hernandez has since proved to be a good neighbor. However, he did capture the mountain slope and the three springs of water just back of our house, and he and his boys started clearing off the dense tropical forest as fast as they could. What they didn't seem to realize was that we don't want to farm the mountainside; we want the flat land.

Señor Hernandez and his family are among the best farmers in this region. They are prosperous and hard working. Before we were out of bed in the mornings we could hear the ring of their machetes felling trees. From our cabin window we watched the tall trees totter and then crash down the mountain side. After they cut the forest they left it to dry a month or so in the summer sun, and then they burned it. The last month of summer season is the time of forest fires. Devastating fires rage along the mountainsides night and day. No one fights fire; quite to the contrary every day more farmers set fire to their fields. They tell us that crops grow better on burned-over land, that the fire destroys the insects, and that later when the rains come water washes the ashes down into the soil, killing more insects.

Next the Hernandez family faced the problem of fencing out the hogs. Hogs have open range; they freely roam the villages, cleaning up the scraps below the kitchen windows. During fencing time Eugenio Hernandez brought the oxen down to pull the huge pine logs into place beneath two strands of barbed wire. They made a good fence that only a goat could climb. (We had three goats.)

There are fourteen children in the Hernandez family. All the boys between twelve and twenty worked hard in the field every day, and in planting time they hired two or three extras to help. They came by the house, an army with planting tools and small sacks of corn. These overgrown dandelion diggers for planting have long handles like a hoe and a straight blade at the end. The workers fanned out along the mountainside walking in parallel lines, jabbing a hole in the untilled earth and throwing in a couple of grains of corn, singing, whistling, and shouting as they walked. The whole field was planted in two days. Later they also planted rice, Irish potatoes, melons, and squash.

The rains came and the corn sprang up over night—and the weeds sprang up with it. "Laying the corn by" was easier, we observed, on the steep rocky mountain than on the flat land. The more rocks between the corn the fewer weeds. The steeper the slope, the less stooping to cut weeds with a short-handled curved machete. The corn grew tall and green; we, too, took a certain pride in it—but we noticed it was not as heavily laden with ears as we expected. Now is the time of the drying yellow stalk. Again the workers are in their milpa doubling the corn. They are bending the top half of the corn stalks down to the ground. This is necessary, they tell me, for two reasons: first, to protect it from destruction by the hurricane and, second, to protect it from a rot that destroys the corn if too much moisture enters the stalk from the top.

The Hernandez boys often stop by the house with gifts from their home—bananas, plantano, cottage cheese, milk, eggs, squash, and sweet corn. I don't know how we can ever repay them for all the gifts they bring. One day Señora Hernandez came down the steep trail from their hilltop home to see the doctor. She rode side-saddle on her horse and carried a brilliant umbrella to protect her from the sun. Mother of fourteen, she is a big-boned, tall, strong looking woman with a twinkle in her eyes.

The next morning Eugenio came dragging a reluctant little pig to our doorstep. "A gift," he said, "in appreciation for the doctor's kindness."

We were speechless as we quickly calculated how much the little porker would bring. And we were especially delighted that the pig arrived the day before Beth's birthday. We were planning to bring all our church folks home with us from Mogote for a birthday dinner. John and José arose bright and early to put the stones in a hole in the ground, to butcher, and to wrap the pig in banana leaves for a real luau—Hawaiian fashion. It was the first time the Hondurans had seen a pig roasted in this fashion—and only the second time that we'd ever seen one.

We enjoy our new neighbors and increasingly understand and appreciate them. And, oh, the longing that is in our hearts to tell them the gospel of Christ, the story of their forefathers, and Christ's work among the ancients of this land. It takes time to lay foundations of love and confidence, and time to learn the language well enough to tell the story of Jesus and bear our own testimony of his love.

The Wells of God

THERE IS AN ANCIENT proverb which reads, "The wells of God are deep. It is the buckets we bring to them that are so small."

We alone possess the power of words or language by which thoughts are communicated, because we alone of God's creatures possess a mind with power to reason. We are stimulated mentally and spiritually by written or spoken words, by those we have worked with, and by those who have lived themselves into our lives. There is increasing satisfaction if our stimulation comes from lives lived under God and within his circle. Apart from the inspired guidance furnished us, our lives might be pointless and hopeless. If caught in the crush of the world of business and commerce, of entertainment and pleasure, of warfare and violence, we tend to lose sight of this power and love revealed. There is an instinct in us to reach for greater light and power so we are strengthened and helped when we desire experiences and convictions that are deep and lasting.

God has always dealt with man as the highest being of all His creation, inviting him to come to reason and understanding, to know and to do His will in partnership with Him. He has a plan for every man's life which will reflect His beauty and goodness. His plan is founded upon a person, Jesus Christ, and is appreciated as his spirit flashes light into men's souls and deals with each one individually.

Several scientists were discussing the best ways and means of communicating scientific information, and one advised "the best way to transmit an idea is to wrap it up in a person." The good news of God is communicated by words, but a more convincing power is given us than words, for it is wrapped up in a Person. His Spirit will give us an understanding faith, wisdom to speak our convictions, and courage to live by the example of Christ.

Today we have an abundance of academic, mechanical, and financial power, but we still lack the power of the Spirit of God, the only power that can control us without destroying our agency. However, it will not force itself upon us. We must be willing and ready to receive it, and until those things which are not right in our hearts (perhaps known only to God and ourselves) are cast out, new and spiritual opportunities must sometimes be withheld. We grow in this power by living God's way to capacity where we now serve. If his Spirit is within us, we have the power to overcome every "sin which besets us," and when sin is cleared away, greater inflow of the power of God comes.

Have you ever watched an orchardist irrigate his grove, or a farmer his land? When he opens little gates to irrigation furrows, there rushes in a life-giving flow of water which, in time, will result in beautiful, tall trees and nourishing plants. Our lives are like that. All of us are given capacities into which flow power, wisdom, energy, and health from a divine Source. Like the trees and plants, we thrive according to the degree to which our gates are opened to receive. God lets every person be the keeper of his gate.

A few years ago the song "It Is No Secret What God Can Do" was written. It presents to us the good thought that there is power to match every task in the work of God. Have you ever been heavyhearted? If so, you will understand and share with me an experience. Some time ago, because of some very disturbing conditions in my work as a district woman's leader, I was heavyhearted to the extent that I was burdened as I had never been. This feeling stayed with me for some time and grew worse until not only my heart but my whole being was burdened. The covering of my body was normal, but instead of flesh, blood, and bone, it seemed to be heavy lead. After several hours of experiencing this extreme heaviness, I found release. It came in music. Not a single sweet solo voice, nor a heavenly choir or a chorus, but my whole world. The very atmosphere all about me sang this song, "Leave It with Him." The beauty and spiritual richness of that experience is still mine.

Our capacity of heart and understanding of mind increases and enlarges as we draw from the "wells of God." As members of Christ's body, we are given different abilities with which to work. All are needed and have responsibilities in this work. The church needs us to sing, to teach, to lead, to attend, to encourage, to live, to be steadfast, unmovable, so that the whole body of Christ may be strengthened. Could it be that sometime through the years, instead of strengthening it, we have weakened the "body" by posting:

FOR SALE

One cross—nearly new. I cannot carry it and keep up with the world and its crowd. One talent—new, except slightly shopworn. It has been laid away for several years. One five-piece set of armor—(see Ephesians 6:13-17 for its original description)—all pieces are in excellent shape; need only polishing.

One bundle of Christian opportunities—seldom used, but possibilities are unlimited. One badly used influence—buyer may be able to repair.

Note: The above items are located in the basement at corner of Careless and Neglect Streets. Signed: A Church Member.

OUR ATTITUDE toward a more complete allegiance to the Master and his work should be in the words of a testimony: "I haven't much to offer, but I'm willing and available." The "bucket" we take to his "well" is measured by the character of our obedience, our faith, our works, our discipline of life. We have our agency to do as we wish about spiritual values which will last, but our willingness now to obey will determine our destiny. The things of earth are passing; we should not hold what is passing with too tight a grip but realize that which is lasting has no limit, and as we go on in daily obedience, tomorrow will be an enlargement and a further call to fresh obedience.

God does not require us to carry the great bundle of life all at once. He mercifully unties the bundle and gives us first one stick, which we are able to carry today; then another, which we are to carry tomorrow. The practice of the presence of Christ can help us to live radiantly each day. Spiritual values and concerns grow as we live by the intangible values of faith, hope, and love; as we live for the riches of heaven instead of for earthly possessions. It means Christlike thoughts, Christlike desires, Christlike actions, Christlike habits and concerns. The spiritual life within rises and grows and increases in power. This is saintly living.

Life, our one great treasure, is not to be taken lightly. We should desire to live its full measure in this world; but we must do so by the performance of duties, always with the ideal of self-perfection. Carved in the heavy door of an inn in New York are these words by Elbert Hubbard: "The love you liberate in your work is the love you keep." To do great work one must fall in love with his task. The designer of a piece of machinery may pat it with pride, as he might pat the head of a son. It is a part of him. He has built his personality into it. That is why it is such a fine machine.

Luther Burbank's devotion to an ideal brought him the thrill of new plant creations. Henry Irving, practicing more than thirteen years to perfect his acting of Macbeth, a part he loved, found that love coming back to him in the applause of his audience. Work that is done in the spirit of love glows with a mystic quality no one can explain, and the worker feels as did Robert Louis Stevenson, who said, "I know what happiness is, for I have done good work." The best work that we do is only the embodiment of our thoughts, the work of our hands and deeds, and is but a suggestion of undeveloped possibilities.

More graceful, more beautiful, more aspiring is the inward temple of which the outward is only a feeble and fragmentary expression. Life is a flowing process, an endless thread running out of eternity into eternity, having no beginning and no end. It is not just the days of our years, nor are we entirely of this world or this changing flesh. We will change, for within the flesh is the living spirit. It came from God, and when we come to our last day of life here we have a whole life, with God, ahead.

Adherence to the basic principles that Christ set forth is the only way to achieve perfection. That should have first place. We can build the finest buildings, have the best educated people, and the most beautiful homes and furnishings, but that "perfection" will never be until we believe thoroughly that which we have in the Scriptures and live the things we profess. We shall never outgrow the principle of faith. One of our ministers stated, "The church will die if its members stop believing in answered prayer. We do not have faith if we are surprised when we receive an answer to our prayers."

Repentance is a continual adjustment from our own will to the will of God. Perhaps at times we are like the little boy who prayed for forgiveness and ended his prayer by saying, "Lord, if you're busy, don't hurry about it, for I'm having such a good time." We who accept Christ's program must feel a burial of the old way of life—of sin—and live daily following Christ. Our progress will be in the measure of our faith, for life and happiness of life depend absolutely on righteousness and on faithfulness. An illustration is given of a woman of questionable character who lived in a cellar in the slums. At the invitation of a friend, she went to church. The following week she moved out of her cellar room and had a different attitude toward life. When asked why she moved, she said, "When that minister preaches to you, you have to get out of the cellar." This experience proves that the life of a good man is a partial revelation of divinity which "moves" people, for he whose life beats in tune with the heart of God becomes a prophetic message when he counsels, teaches, preaches, and lives with people as well as when he receives divine insight and says, "Thus saith the Lord."

THE INFLUENCE of the Scriptures has done more to free and elevate women and bring happiness than any other factor in the world. Jesus does not mention the word "happiness." He speaks of "joy" instead. Joy is to happiness as sterling silver is to the plate. At first glance, they may look the same, but joy wears better; it is made to last, for it is nourished by the Eternal. The best years of any life come only when one stops the pursuit of happiness as the end and aim of all existence and begins to recognize and enjoy the blessings at hand; when one learns that the true meaning of life is not in self-gratification or self-seeking but in the quest for God—to find him, to know him, and to grow into his image. This is discovery of the joy of living. Religion is not something apart from the rest of our lives; rather it is a way of life, a quality of experience and activity that infuses itself into everything we do.

When we are at our best we know that we should be like Christ. We know that he seeks to reach us through each window of our soul. Many of us have felt the tug of the Spirit, the greatest of all gifts, but have failed to stand firm and do the works of righteousness, and God could not fully reveal himself through us because we did not fully reveal him in our daily lives. We know that he drew on resources which are available to any person of any race and any generation—the "wells of God."

A new organ was installed in a church. The first Sunday it was used, the electric current that was required to operate the console went off at a point early in the service. A hurried call brought help. During the prayer, the following note made its way to the organist: "After the prayer, the power will be on." The mechanic did not realize the depth of truth in those words.

AS WE GO to the "wells of God" and fill our buckets power comes and transformation takes place in us; we delight in righteousness and we grow steadily in his likeness. The ideal mother is to her daughter the very model and mirror of womanly perfection. The daughter gladly yields to her mother's influence, and it is said, "That girl is the living image of her mother." She receives what she admires and silently shares character and steadfast likeness.

There is an old legend that Jesus left his likeness or image on the handkerchief the pitying woman gave him with which to wipe his face as he went to the cross. This is a beautiful story, though it is not true. But would it not be interesting to have an authentic likeness of Christ? We have a word picture of him in the pages of our Three Standard Books, for he is revealed in these transforming instruments, and the transforming agent is the Spirit which comes as we dip our "buckets." Transformation takes place in believers who find the likeness of Christ, look upon it, ponder it, and gaze lovingly and intently upon it. As they do so something of the glory of his face passes into their faces, stays there, and shines out that others can see it.

It has been fabled from old times that the graceful swan was changed from a most ugly bird into its present beauty merely because of its constancy to its mate. Just so a soul will grow lovely and beautiful by deep devotion, willing obedience, and a deep ambition to express in every part of life and every activity the object of its affection, Jesus the Christ. If we accept our relationship to him as a companion and friend, our personality and our character will progressively become like his; this should be the highest ideal of any Saint.

Our proverb means that there is an abundant supply of help and blessing to be received from God, but we draw so little from these "wells." To receive the best things of the Spirit, we must let down our "buckets" below the surface. We can receive strength and blessings and lasting happiness and joy, as much as we are ready for. Paul made use of the "wells" of God: prayer, faith, hope, good cheer, and courage to attempt great things for God, relying upon his promises. Our "small buckets" are lack of faith, fear, neglect of prayer, halfheartedness, little courage, no enthusiasm. And yet we could have so much. James 4: 2 says, "Ye have not, because ye ask not."

The "wells of God are deep" and cannot be measured. There is sufficient for all.

There Is Something You Can Do about Mental Health

MENTAL ILLNESS presents a tragic contradiction. No group of illnesses has a potentially higher rate of recovery. Most mental illness can be cured.

In spite of this proved fact, however, mental illness continues to be the nation's number one health problem—the neglected hinterland, the great blind spot of all health problems confronting our nation today.

The extent of mental illness is generally underestimated because many people still think of it only as "insanity" or "craziness." Actually, mental illness is very common. It can be as serious as cancer or mild as a cold. Severe disturbances of mental health necessitates hospital care for nearly a million persons in this country. It is reliably estimated that another sixteen million are so seriously afflicted with nervousness as to impair their productivity and happiness. At least half of a physician's patients have complaints that are caused by, or are intimately related to, emotional disorders. All of us have occasional emotional reactions which affect our happiness, reduce our efficiency, or cripple our ability to get along with people.

Other figures indicate the size of the problems. Nearly half of all hospital beds in America are required for mental illness. Personality disorders were the largest single cause of manpower loss during the recent war. They were the reason for more than 50 per cent of all the discharges from all military services.

The other aspect of the problem, namely, the shortage of trained personnel and facilities, is equally serious. There are less than half the psychiatrists, one fourth the psychologists, one third the social workers, and one fifth the nurses needed to meet the current demands of hospitals, clinics, and other organizations desiring their services. The amount of money invested in research in the field of mental health is proportionately the smallest expended in any medical specialty. The need for treatment facilities, including both hospitals and clinics, is probably more acute than in any other medical specialty. Inadequate as it is, the treatment and care of the mentally sick patients represents the greatest dollar cost of any type of illness—approximately 40 per cent of all expenditures by the states for health and hospitals is made for the maintenance of patients in state mental hospitals. The whole problem is complicated by lack of public understanding. There is no field of medicine about which there are more misconceptions, misinformation, and downright ignorance.

WHO CAN DO something about this problem of mental health? The answer is simple: You can. The chief responsibility for maintaining mental health and preventing ill health lies primarily with you, the average citizen, rather than with the professional worker.

If you are going to do something about mental health you have to have at least a similar basic understanding of mental hygiene, of the anatomy and physiology of your personality and some working knowledge of emotional first aid.

As you learn about your personality you ought to be able to see ways and means of improving your own mental health. If you have thought of mental symptoms only in terms of seeing visions or hearing voices, you will learn that there are many minor symptoms which at times all of us manifest—inability to work, unhappiness, prejudice, moody symptoms, suspiciousness, overdependency, irritability, seclusiveness. You will learn that these minor symptoms have definite causes, and that in many instances by changing yourself, and your environment, or both, you can become more mentally healthy.

The second thing you can do is to accept your social obligation for mental health of others. It is always easier to see more clearly or think straighter about other people than about ourselves. Too often one is inclined to brush off any responsibility by merely saying that the other person is stupid or dumb or queer or mean.

IF YOU HAVE any kind of leadership post, you must assume some responsibility for those associated with you. Many times there is the opportunity for you to take the initiative in helping them through their difficulties. Almost always they will look to you, whether they be students, parishioners, clients, co-workers, employees, constituents, or patients. Probably no more important lesson was learned with regard to mental health in the military setting than that good leadership often prevented, and bad or no leadership caused, mental ill health.

There are many things you can do about mental health in your community if you will. This means, however, that you have to be sufficiently mature to give yourself in time, energy, and money. You will have to assume some social responsibilities in order that you, your family and your neighbors can have a richer life. If we are going to make any real changes in the status of mental health, many of us will have to be more psychologically mature and more social-minded. If you wish to do something about mental health, you can go to work immediately in your own community. Align yourself with others who are interested in working for better mental health. There are mental health associations affiliated with the National Association for Mental Health in hundreds of communities across the country.

Join the mental health association in your community. Volunteer your help. All kinds of help is needed—hospital volunteers, professional assistance and guidance, technical help, speakers, organizers, campaigners, and, of course, financial contributions. If there isn't a mental health association in your community, get together with your neighbors and start one. Write to the state mental health association in your state or to the National Association for Mental Health, 10 Columbus Circle, New York 19, New York, and you will be put in touch with people who can help you get started.

WHAT COULD your association do? No community in the United States today fulfills all the requirements for good mental health; most of them fulfill very few. What about your community? Apply the following questions and see for yourself:

First, take a look at the medical facilities. Is there provision for adequate psychiatric outpatient care? Is there adequate local hospitalization for emergency cases? Is there a child guidance clinic, opportunity for marriage and parental counseling, vocational guidance?

How does your educational system meet the test? Is there some trained person to help the child solve his difficult problems in relation to his family, in relation to his school work, in relation to his playmates?

What is the status of delinquency and crime in your community? How much understanding is there that this is usually, if not always, a problem of mental health? What scientific understanding of human behavior is evident in your law courts, in the management of prisons, in the programs of the reform schools and in the rehabilitation efforts of the penitentiary?

What is the recreational program in your community? We have more leisure time than we had before, and apparently this is even increasing. We can't possibly ignore the fact that if we provide only alleys and beer taverns as playgrounds, juvenile and adolescent delinquency, yes, even adult crime will increase.

A direct and greatly needed attack on the problem of mental ill health would be the improvement of the mental hospital or hospitals in your state. Very few public institutions in the entire country can meet the minimum standards established by the American Psychiatric Association. Across the boards, our mental hospitals are 20 per cent overcrowded with patients and 60 to 80 per cent understaffed. In the great majority of our states the technique of placing a patient in the state hospital is medieval. Only as a result of the pressure of public opinion will commitment laws ever be changed.

Just as in the case of the battle against every type of disease, the cause of mental health needs money. Money is necessary to increase and improve training programs, to develop new and expand established research, to provide better treatment for more patients, to launch preventive programs. It is needed for building physical facilities in which to carry on these programs.

CERTAINLY THE WORLD could never before have had more grief and unhappiness and human turmoil than currently exists. We—you and I—must assume some responsibility for reducing this turmoil. We have made such remarkable technological advances that we have become proficient in building great cities and the most complicated gadgets. We dare not continue letting our inability to get along with each other destroy our cities, our gadgets, ourselves. What gain to be scientific geniuses if we remain social imbeciles? The responsibility for achieving social and emotional maturity—which in turn depends upon preventing and treating mental ill health—lies entirely with you and me. What will you do about it?

We Went to the Fair

By Charles R. Mundorff

The booth was manned daily by Brothers Doyle Huff and Bernie Long of Cadillac with Elders Mundorff and Beavers assisting.

THE CADILLAC, Michigan, Branch decided to go to the Northern Michigan District Free Fair at Cadillac, September 1 to 5, and came up with the most attractive booth on the grounds. The committee worked fast to get ready for the Labor Day opening. The church name was cut out of black construction paper and pasted on white plasterboard for the frontispiece of the booth. Pictures of the ordinances of the church were flown from California to adorn the sides of the booth; these were used to explain the laying on of hands to many nonmember friends. The walls were plasterboard with the joints taped and painted a rich tan color, as was the ceiling. In the center was a brilliant white panel which, when the picture of Christ was removed, served as a screen for the showing of the film "Other Sheep." On a table covered with a linen cloth was a wide selection of tracts and copies of the Book of Mormon. Many remarked that this was a fine arrangement of literature attractively presented. Flowers were fresh every morning and changed to break monotony. Three times each day the film "Other Sheep" was presented; it was received very well during the entire fair. This gave an opportunity to answer questions and lend copies of the Book of Mormon to people in the surrounding area. The cost of this operation was approximately $135.00. The fair covered four counties and was attended by fifteen to twenty thousand people.

We feel that our missionary effort in this respect was well received and quite successful. Plans are being made for even a better presentation of the restored church next year.

Discussion on Succession and Authority

Beyond all cavil, if human testimony is to place any matter forever at rest, this church was one in doctrine, government, and purpose from 1830 to June, 1844, when Joseph Smith, its founder, was killed. It had the same federal head, governing bodies, and faith . . .

There can be no question of the fact that Brigham Young's assumed presidency was a bold and bald usurpation. . . . The book (Doctrine and Covenants) clearly taught that the succession should descend lineally and go to the first-born. Joseph Smith so taught, and before his taking off, publicly proclaimed his son Joseph, the present head of Complainant Church, his successor, and he was so anointed . . .

Through obedience to this gospel of Jesus Christ you have the assurance of eternal life. The church offers you spiritual salvation. For the sake of such a great pearl all other jewels of lesser value should be sacrificed.

The Reorganized Church has been very concerned that the right of choice which is the indispensable ingredient of freedom should be preserved to its members. This freedom of choice is evident in all business meetings of the church. Members have the right to introduce legislation and to nominate officers from the floor and to receive a full accounting from the church of all tithes and other contributions presented to it. It does nothing in secret. A criticism of the communistic system is that this right is not extended to the people, and being denied the freedom to choose they do not have true democracy. They can only approve or reject those appointed to rule over them by the central authorities. This latter is also the procedure of the Utah Mormon church. Can we approve in religion what we condemn in a political system? Visitors from the Utah church have noticed with interest and appreciation the expressions of democracy in the Reorganized Church.

Whereas the Utah Church appears to restrain its competent scholars from any critical examination of its doctrines in the interest of discovering new interpretations, the Reorganized Church has taken a very liberal view in encouraging individuals to pursue truth without restraints being imposed through concern for preserving the traditional concepts formulated by past leaders. This attitude may very well make the Reorganization a better vehicle for the development of progressive Mormonism than is possible among those who seem so much concerned with garnishing the tombs of noble spiritual ancestors. The Reorganized Church leaders have been wise in declining to express ex-cathedra opinions on matters of church doctrine which would tend to stand in the way of continued pursuit of a better knowledge of the truth.

The financial law of the church is administered with great justice and fairness. There is evidence to support the belief of the church that its tithing of the increase rather than of the income is in harmony with the teachings regarding the financial law in the days of Joseph the prophet. The church adheres to a more idealistic concept of stewardship than that which is expressed principally in a relief program. The church emphasizes the importance of consecration of surplus, sacrifice offerings, and tithes. Oblation offerings are set aside each month for the care of the poor and the aged.

The church is vitally concerned about the problems of Christian education and physical health and generously supports its institutions dedicated to serving these human needs. All church-supported institutions rank high in their standards of excellence as compared with other institutions of similar type. They reflect sound management by capable people.

The church is giving encouragement to development of highly trained and spiritually endowed leaders and has an increasing number of able men coming up through the ranks of the priesthood.

The Reorganized Church is rapidly expanding in membership and in influence. It is laying solid foundations for growth of a world-wide church in the strengthening of its missions in many lands. It is no longer a small church, as churches go in size. It is numerically larger than many other highly respected and well-known religious bodies.

Most important of all, however, is the influence that it has in the lives of those who enjoy the fellowship of a wonderful group of people and who find avenues for useful service in the many activities of the church. The spirit of the Reorganized Church is summed up in the recent statement of a former member of the Utah church in Orem, Utah, who said, "I never knew what real peace was before coming into the church."

Your questions clearly indicate the importance you attach to our showing proof that (1) Joseph Smith designated his son as his successor; (2) that that son was ordained by persons authorized to officiate in such ordination.

If such evidence must be documented for Joseph Smith III could we not with equal propriety suggest that you should be able to supply the same type of evidence to justify the succession of Brigham Young in the prophetic office? Do you have any evidence that Joseph Smith designated Brigham Young to succeed him in office? Is there any evidence of a revelation calling Brigham Young to his office? Who officiated at his ordination? I am quite confident that you can offer no proof on any one of these points.

Sincerely Yours,

Mary Hall

Secretary of Association for Childhood Education

Rockwood Court Branch of San Antonio, Texas is proud to claim Mary Hall as one of its members. Over the years of her membership with this branch she has been active in every area possible, particularly children's work. Many of the priesthood of this branch feel they got their beginning in religious education through her efforts.

Mary is the recording secretary for an international teacher's organization for the betterment of children over the world, known as the Association for Childhood Education. This area of reaching forth to help children in other places is the natural thing for Mary to do since her life has been spent in teaching school and children wherever she is. In this position of recording secretary

Mary has many opportunities to contact teachers of other lands. She has been an elementary teacher in the San Antonio Public Schools for many years, teaching all grades from the first through the sixth. For a good many years she has been head of the children's department of her branch and has had a voice in the development of that successful department. She has given of her time and talent unstintingly where any children's work was needed.

Since the first Texas Reunion at Bandera in 1945, Mary has not missed a reunion. Most of these years she has been head of the children's department, starting in 1945 with ten children and having one hundred and thirty enrolled this year.

It has been one of her responsibilities in life to help young teachers, both in public school and church school, to get started. She counts her vitality as a blessing.

She isn't all career woman, however. She has also been wife and mother. Her son, Warren, a graduate of Graceland who is now studying at Texas University, is one of Mary's greatest prides. Warren was married to Marleen Condon at Graceland, and now Mary is soon to be launched into another area of teaching—she will be a grandmother.

San Antonio members are justly proud of and grateful to Mary Hall for what she has done at home and abroad.

Reception for "Town Mothers"

The H and K Club of Independence (former Gracelanders) gave a reception for the student nurses and their "town mothers" on the evening of September 8. The town mothers met at 7:30 in the school recreation building for a discussion of the program. Mrs. Earlena Ebling Reneau, club president, was in charge. Talks were made by Erma Carter, a senior in the school, and Nelle Morgan, director of nursing. Chaplain Robert Farnham introduced the faculty members present and talked of the school's appreciation of the town family program.

At the close of this short meeting the student nurses joined the group, and Mrs. Reneau introduced the entertainment. Special music was provided by Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Buck, Mrs. Charles Neff, and Mrs. Scott Finken.

After the program, Mrs. Reneau explained a plan whereby the student nurses and town mothers were to find each other. In just a few moments town mother and student daughter had met. Refreshments were served by H and K club members.

The ten tables were beautifully decorated with candles and flower arrangements. The party will be long remembered by these young women who are entering into a preparation period for a life of service.

Student Association Meets

Student nurses assembled in the Recreation Building on the evening of September 15 for the first all-student assembly of the new school year. Carrah Hendrix, student president, presided at the meeting. The new freshmen were introduced to all of the proposed activities of the student body for the coming year. One of the high lights of the evening was the presentation of a miniature gavel to the student president of the last school year, Gail Hershey of Florence, Alabama. A. Neal Deaver, hospital administrator, presented the gift to Miss Hershey in recognition of the leadership she gave while serving as student president.

School Publications Staffs Organized

The student association has announced the staffs that will be responsible this school year for the two publications of the school; The Sanilog (year book) and I S H (monthly newspaper).

Members of the Sanilog staff are Sonita Sue Smith of Eugene, Oregon, editor; Beverly Smith of Cedar Falls, Iowa, co-editor; Ilene Rathman of Independence, business manager; Kay Pinson of Independence, art editor; Zada Pement of Kansas City, layout; Sandra Dech of Kansas City, activities; Barbara Thoman of Independence, religion; Katherine Stricker of Bandera, Texas, advertising; Nancy Scott of Nevada, Missouri, copy; Bettie Steiner of Theodore, Alabama, typist; Betty Burkhead, Fairbanks, Alaska, photography; and Iola Tordoff, R.N., faculty adviser.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. T. George Neville of Willoughby, Ohio, observed their golden wedding anniversary on April 20, 1958. They were married in Shawnee, Ohio, moving later to Akron, Ohio; they have now resided in Kirtland and Willoughby the past thirty-four years. Brother Neville has been a member of the Reorganized Church since he was eight and has served as priest, elder, high priest, and evangelist. Sister Neville has been active in the women's department and other services for forty-eight years.

A reception was held in the Chestnut Room of the auditorium across from the Temple in Kirtland, by their three sons: Byron J. of Kirtland, Donald C. of Painesville, and Lt. Col. Robert B. of Washington, D.C., and their wives, Faye, Marian, and Anne. Five granddaughters, one grandson, and a host of friends and relatives attended.

A Blessing in Disguise

In 1955 I began passing through a trial of sorrow, suffering, and despair that became almost too grievous to be borne.

And, as though that was not trial enough, it seemed that the Lord had turned his back upon me and left me to my own strength to sink or swim. My prayers seemed to amount to little or nothing. I would go to church regularly, only to return as spiritually dead as ever. I fasted often and long in desperate efforts to lay claim again upon the influence of God but received only temporary relief and sometimes not even that.

After a period of fasting from Thursday evening until Sunday noon for four or five weeks, with earnest prayer and struggle for relief and deliverance and a maintenance of righteousness, I seemed to be more carnal and sensual and devilish than I had been before.

I became positively disgusted with myself. All my efforts seemed only a mockery and a failure. I feared, and wondered if I would yet yield to self and sin and bring a reproach upon the church which I loved better than I loved myself.

I would say in my heart that, even if I should fail miserably and lose my soul and make my bed in hell, this church is still true. And, through the darkest clouds, this faith and assurance never failed me. Also, a hope, faint and barely discernible, would seem to be telling me that, if I would be faithful and patient, everything would be all right again, sometime.

After I had endured all that I thought would be possible and still maintain my integrity before God, my wife died suddenly, being seriously ill less than twenty-four hours with a heart attack. This proved to be the greatest sorrow and suffering of my life.

I sank deeper into despair. I prayed to die. I begged God earnestly and often to take me away and get me out of my misery. I would go to bed at night wishing that I would go to sleep and never, never wake up again. I feared more, and wondered when and what the outcome would ever be. I would cry out desperately, "O God, if you don't come to my rescue, I'm gone."

I remembered that the Lord said he would have a tried people, and I came to the conclusion that he must have meant exactly what he said. I wondered whether I was going to stand the test or not.

Thoughts would come to my mind to accuse the Lord of not being fair in the matter. But I never did. I knew better. I thought that it might be for my own good if I could only endure. I kept resolving that, in spite of my nothingness, I would continue struggling and fighting and striving to win as long as I had to go on living at all. I had no thought of giving up.

A few months ago my burden lifted, my sorrow and suffering ended, and my despair vanished, leaving me with a greater love and appreciation for God and his dear Son than ever before, and the good Spirit returned to me with his comforting influence, his direction, and protection. I am beginning to believe that all my sorrow, suffering, and despair was only a blessing in disguise.

My brothers and sisters of the faith and everyone else seem as nice and kind as ever, and I feel not the least bit of hardness toward anyone. My future hopes and expectations are reasonably bright and I feel anxious now to go on living as long as I can be faithful and useful.

I feel no fear of anything now except that I might say or do something that would bring sorrow and pain to the great heart of God.

I make a new resolution every morning before rising. I resolve to make it through the day without sin either in word or deed. I am not always successful at this I find, but I am still at it, and am resolved that this shall be one of my daily rules for the remainder of my life. I feel now that if I can live a life pleasing and acceptable to God, nothing else matters greatly. I am living by myself and can do as I please. If I fail to live right, it will be my own fault.

Request from a Member in New Brunswick

In the November 8, 1956, issue of our local paper there was an article about the first "Mormon temple" in New Brunswick on Grand Manan. I read it and wrote the reporter that the "temple" belonged to the Reorganized Church, of which I am a member. The reporter wrote back that he would be glad to publish a statement correcting the error.

A few months after the first article was published a Mormon elder called on me and wanted to know about the church here. I told him of the mistake and said that the church here was of the original church. He insisted his church was the original.

This winter I made a list of the members and had it put in the local paper. If anyone had any information about them, he could then contact me.

I should like very much to know if there is anyone living who knew my grandparents, Elisha and Mary Flagg.

My son Basil and I are, as far as I know, the only members on the islands. We live on a farm at the north of the main island. Basil has spent two years at the university in New Brunswick.

BOOK REVIEW

The Table of the Lord

by Charles L. Wallis

Harper and Brothers
1958

Price $3.95

A rather unique collection of materials is The Table of the Lord, compiled by Charles L. Wallis. As Mr. Wallis notes in his subtitle, it is a Communion Encyclopedia. This book will be a particular help to presiding elders who for years have had to search through many volumes to find just the right call to worship or poem that would lend dignity and worship to Communion services.

Due to the wide variety of interpretations placed by various denominations on the place, importance, and meaning of the Lord's Supper, quite a bit of this material may not be applicable to a Reorganized Latter Day Saint service. However, much of it can be used to a good advantage in our own distinctive service.

Some items of interest to be found in this collection of helps are eight complete planned services, 168 meditations on the meaning of the Lord's Supper (these are excellent sermon material as well), 107 suggestions for hymns and special music, and a wealth of additional materials including illustrations, poetry, calls to worship, invocations, benedictions, Communion prayers, Scripture selections, etc.

When first I glanced through this new book and noticed several chapters concerned with the various prayers of the service, my first reaction was that of the typical hidebound Latter Day Saint: "We don't need these, we have our own Communion prayers, and beyond that we don't use 'canned' prayers." Upon reading these prayers and comparing them with the hundreds of pastoral prayers, invocations, and benedictions I have given and heard given over the years, I was forcibly impressed that this would be an excellent realm of priesthood study.

All in all, pastors could improve and beautify Communion services with the help of this fine book.

Written prior to their move to a medical-missionary experiment in Central America, this husband-wife team share the experiences of their family life and point out what other parents can and should expect in this relationship. Although they modestly claim little "authority" on the subject, their past training and experience make them ideal authors of a very interesting, informative, and inspirational study text for young adults.

Tract Review

I Was a Protestant Minister

Here is the thrilling experience of a man who, through a casual contact with the Book of Mormon, turned from the ministry of a prominent Protestant church and became a zealous layman of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church. (Since that time he has been ordained an elder and serves the church locally in Oklahoma.)

Charles Caywood, Sr., spent many years in his search for truth. In his account of the experience, he combines the historical events with the philosophical reasonings that went on in his mind. He humbly presents his reasons for the change he made in religious affiliation and presents his belief why he feels the need for every person to open his heart to the leadings of the Spirit of God.

Some of the topic heads in the tract indicate the contents: My Years of Uncertainty, I Began to Study, Man Did Not Convert Me, I Discovered New Scripture, Are Thy Inspired Writings, I Met Church Leaders, I Continued My Search, I Received Assurance. One section of his tract emphasizes "You Need an Experience." In it he states his recognition of the value of one man's testimony to another, but he feels his own experience "can hardly suffice" for another person's. He comments, "It is evident that God intends for us to acquire most of our knowledge through our own experiences."

The second printing of this tract is a handy pocket-size edition with a colorful cover. The single copy price is ten cents. Quantity purchases reduce unit price to as much as one half.

And Finally...

"DON'T APOLOGIZE, I'M YOUR COUSIN"

A word of chastisement had been given a youngster by his older sister for slamming the basement door. Whereupon another boy said, "He didn't do it. I did." An apology from the scolding party was forthcoming, but Bill hastily replied, "Don't apologize, I'm your cousin." What a positive Christian attitude for Latter Day Saints to develop . . . rather than wanting or expecting retribution when their feelings have been hurt or they have been wronged, to be able to say kindly and with love, "Don't apologize. I'm your brother—or sister—in the gospel."

FREEDOM MUST BE PAID FOR

Everybody wants freedom but too few wish to live up to the responsibilities which accompany it. One staunch nationalist in Africa wrote us that his people rejoiced in the theory of their new freedom but shied away from the obligations which self-government requires if it is to endure.

"Our plight is worsened," he stated, "by the fact that we now have no Caesar to appeal to, and many ignorant of the fact that the remedy lies in our own hands have given up in despair."

God wishes all people to live in freedom. But he does not impose it on any of us. Each of us must show that he or she really wants it by shouldering the individual share of responsibility needed to maintain it.

KNOCKER?

Have you ever noticed that most knocking is done by folks who don't know how to ring the bell?

COMPARISON

True humility is possible only for the greatly successful. The tallest mountains know how far they are from the stars.

—Paul Eldridge

STRICTLY PERSONAL

Some people are at war with their fellow men, in trouble with the world, and out of harmony within themselves because of one or more wrong ideas. Many a sinner is one who, with the right idea, could be a saint. Many a failure is one who, with the right idea, could be a success. Many an enemy is one who, with the right idea, could be a friend.

This emphasizes the importance of our reading, our thinking, and our understanding. If you deposit a thousand dollars to a man's credit at the bank, you may give him some temporary benefit but do him no permanent good. Give him a true thought, and it will serve him all the rest of his life.

The resources, the growth, and the changes of mind and spirit are most important for our eternal welfare.—L. J. L.

SOMETHING OF VALUE

Ancestor worship may not only lead young people to search amid their heritage for the lasting values, but may tend to make older people prove their virtues by today's deeds.

To the church and to the Council of Twelve Apostles:

As I am about to go overseas and realize the usual hazards of travel, and ever conscious of the uncertainties of life and the certainty of death, and in order that my demise, whether soon or longer postponed, may not cause confusion, I hereby declare that in the event of my death, whenever it shall occur, my brother, William Wallace Smith, should be selected to succeed me as president of the high priesthood of the church, this having been manifested to me by the Lord at the time he was chosen and set apart as an apostle and again when he was called to be a counselor and member of the Quorum of the First Presidency, at the General Conference of 1950.

I feel at liberty to make this appointment at this time because he has become better acquainted with the members since he was called in 1947 and has proved himself to the body.

This action is taken by me pursuant to the authority vested in me by the terms of Section 43 of the book of Doctrine and Covenants, in connection with other references in the law, notably paragraph 8 of Section 127, all as interpreted by my father, the late President Joseph Smith, in the Saints' Herald of March 12, 1912, and all of which I believe is in complete harmony with precedents established by the church in General Conferences of 1860, 1915, and 1946.

President W. Wallace Smith's Statement to the Conference

This is a moment to which I have looked forward since I was informed of the contents of the document left by the late President Israel A. Smith to be delivered to the President of the Council of Twelve and to the church by the custodian of the document, Elder F. Henry Edwards. After the subsidence of the first cruel impact of the tragic accident that took President Israel's life I realized that soon or late, if your action was favorable, I would stand before you to accept or reject the onerous task of representing God to his people as the President of the High Priesthood and President of the Church.

Certainly something like this doesn't happen in the twinkling of an eye. I am convinced that there has been some degree of preparation going on continuously during most of my life. Like my father before me, I have been at times more largely involved in secular interests than in those of the church. There is, however, no question in my mind but that the loving, tender mercy of my heavenly Father has been a mantle of protection over me many times during that period. My life has been spared. I have wondered sometimes to what end. There must be and is some higher Power guiding the destiny of man, and it is to this Power that I look at this moment for the strength which is necessary to sustain me in my high resolves. Modesty forbids, at this or any other jun-ture, that I should indulge any presumption in this regard. Neither do I apologize for any willingness on my part to be governed in my acceptance of this responsibility by the knowledge of the fact.

My acceptance in the councils of the church by my brethren and by you has been a comforting matter to me. I pray that neither they nor you shall ever have reason to regret the placing of that confidence or the giving of your support.

It is by no means born of a sense of obligation to do so that I thank you for your vote of confidence in me; for I feel very humble and quite inadequate indeed in myself to carry out the tremendous tasks that face us jointly. I will need and sincerely solicit the support of each of you separately and of all of you collectively that together, with the help of our heavenly Father, we may so serve that the church may fulfill its destiny and the divine will be accomplished.

Unity in the body of the church, as well as in the quorums and councils, has been sought, and is a highly desirable condition to promote. I pledge my powers of body and mind to continue to foster the unity that was achieved under the kindly leadership of my brother, the late President Israel A. Smith. With the able help of proved assistants in the Council of the Twelve, the High Priests' Quorum, the expanding quorums of Seventies, the missionary elders and others, the missionary work moves forward. My brethren of the Bishopric, strong in their advocacy of sound policies of administration in the financial affairs of the church, give me reason to believe we will continue to make progress in this direction. I recognize no need to refrain from asking, nor any reason not to expect, the high level of participation that we have been receiving from the growing numbers of earnest, consecrated members. I will try to merit this support which I trust will be freely given.

Inasmuch as it may be considered by some as presumptuous for me to come to you at this moment with a detailed statement of policy for church administration, I have tried to avoid indiscretions. Yet I have been pressed by a heavy responsibility to consider the urgent needs of the church, and I have had to set aside a feeling of caution because time is precious and our people must be served expeditiously. At least one, if not two, of my predecessors anticipated the responsibility to come. My father, in his acceptance of a similar position almost one hundred years ago, said:

"I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals. I propose that all shall be dealt with in mercy."

I cannot find it in my heart to do less.

In my own life I have seen the divine wisdom behind the institution of the ordinance of marriage. The covenant relationship entered into in such a state envisions a sharing relationship. I am particularly happy this afternoon to recognize the part my wife has played in our coming to this moment.

She has stood by me in times of discouragement and trial—not unquestioningly but helpfully. There is no attempt on my part to minimize the influence she has had in my life. I gratefully acknowledge her help, and have her assurance that we will walk together in any new responsibility which may come to us.

Although I was a lad of tender years when I stood at the foot of the bed of my father in his last hours on earth, I recall quite distinctly his concern for the welfare of the church and the growth of its mission in the world. This has not lessened in me through the years, but rather it has been heightened by a growing realization of the fact that none of us are equal to this task in our own strength, but by standing together with each other and with God we can do all things that are possible. My prayers in the name of the Master are for the welfare of his church and the members of it. May this General Conference be a success and His work prosper.

Document on Changes in Quorums

To the Elders of the Church and the General Conference

While working at my desk in the Auditorium during the day on Thursday, August 21, 1958, I had given sustained consideration to the many needs confronting the church. Consequently these things weighed heavily on my heart and mind. Later at home I had made them a matter of prayer and while I had come to some conclusions, I was not sure they were the right ones. Weary, I decided the best remedy was to rest—sleep if I could—and then go on from there. Having retired somewhat earlier than is my custom and due to the fatigue of a heavy day's schedule at the office, I dropped to sleep almost immediately.

I had been asleep for several hours when I awoke. It was dark in my room so I was aware that it was not time to arise. Ordinarily when something like this happens I can go back to sleep without a great deal of trouble. On this occasion I could not, because the problems confronting me began to pass in review before my mind.

In this experience none of my questions seemed to have satisfactory answers. Since I could not go back to sleep and my mind was active and my soul disturbed by a realization of the enormity of the task before me, I decided to again make it a subject of prayer. Consequently I presented myself to the Lord and once more propounded the questions to which I was seeking answers.

Instead of a solution to my queries unfolding as I had hoped, there appeared before me, in bas-relief, an image of the face of the Master. This was not close to me; it appeared indistinct as if it were afar off. No words were spoken but I was made to know that while my prayers had been heard the answers which I sought would not yet be given me. I realized there was still a way for me to go before I would be close enough to hear the words spoken by the Lord for the guidance of his church. Despite the distance and indistinctness of the vision I was made to know that the need is great, the answers are prepared, the servants of God are available, the maturing process is going forward, but it is yet a little while until we shall be ready for the Lord to reveal his mind and will as fully as we need.

Since it became apparent that the burden of its prophetic leadership would be mine, I have given additional prayerful consideration to the needs of the church, and have sought earnestly for light with such powers of mind and body as are at my command. As a result of this, and other experiences which I deem inspirational, I bring this word to the Saints as being the mind and will of God unto his people.

It is now almost seven weeks since the initial experience took place. As I write these things are confirmed unto me.

TO THE CHURCH

I have taken unto myself my own. It was wisdom that my servant Israel A. Smith be released from his onerous duties. He has found his reward with the faithful.

It is my will that F. Henry Edwards be sustained as a counselor to the President of the High Priesthood and the Church, and as a member of the quorum of the First Presidency. He is called to this office by reason of his preparation through long years of faithful service and should be ordained for the strength and support he can give to his associates and in the councils of my church.

To fill the other vacancy in the quorum of the First Presidency Maurice L. Draper is called from among his brethren. His apostleship is extended in presidency as he takes his place as a counselor to the President of the Church and a member of the quorum of the First Presidency.

Due to the infirmities of the flesh, my beloved and faithful servant Elbert A. Smith has responded to the direction of the Spirit in resigning his office as Presiding Patriarch of the church.

To fill this position in my church Roy A. Cheville is called and should be chosen and set apart to this high and holy office, and be given the responsibility of presiding over the brethren of the patriarchal order as Presiding Patriarch. This is in harmony with my instructions to the Saints at an early date.

The wisdom of changes in the Council of Twelve was a continuing question in the mind of my servant who has gone to his reward. It is a continuing grave concern of the one whom I have designated to lead you as his successor and, while I am not yet ready to reveal all that shall be, the following changes should be made.

Few in my church have served as long and as faithfully as my servant, Paul M. Hanson. He is honorably released from his responsibilities as a member of the Council of Twelve, but is free to labor as a member of the High Priesthood wherever and whenever the opportunity is present and his strength will permit. Likewise my servants, Daniel T. Williams and Edmund J. Gleazer, who have also served in the councils of the church over a long period and with evident distinction, are honorably released from their responsibilities in the Council of Twelve.

While there is but one office in the patriarchal order, there are multiple functions. All my servants who have been called to this office will not be equally proficient in each of the separate functions. My servant Daniel T. Williams has ability to counsel, advise, and give blessings. If faithful, my servant Edmund J. Gleazer will be especially blessed in the ministry of the preached word while he maintains his health and vigor. These, my sons, are now called to be patriarchs and should be ordained pursuant to and in harmony with my will revealed through the spirit of wisdom. This should be done as soon as practicable in order that not one jot or tittle of their ministerial effectiveness be lost to me.

In harmony with my will now revealed to you, Charles D. Neff and Clifford A. Cole should be ordained Apostles and take their places in the Council of Twelve along with their brethren whose duty it is to spread the gospel into all the world as especial witnesses.

It is my will that the day shall soon come when the provisions within the law may be sufficiently understood to enable the bonds of indecision to be loosed and the fulfillment of my purposes to be accomplished.

There are others of my priesthood who are called to the Apostleship who, if faithful, will find their places in due course. Though it is desirable for the Quorums to be filled it is not expedient that it shall be done at this time. As I have made known to my servant, the time is yet a little while until all shall be made clear. Amen.

Your servant in Christ,
W. WALLACE SMITH

W. Wallace Smith Ordained

Monday evening, in a service of dignity and before a packed Conference Chamber of nearly 7,000, W. Wallace Smith was ordained the fifth president of the church.

President Smith was ordained under the hands of Apostles Paul M. Hanson and D. T. Williams, Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp, and High Priest (quorum president) Ward A. Hougas. Apostle Hanson was the spokesman.

Other members of the Council of Twelve apostles participated in the service. Apostle Charles R. Hield was in charge of the service, and Apostles Percy E. Farrow and Donald O. Chesworth offered the invocation and benediction. Apostle Donald V. Lents read the Scripture, after which Apostle E. J. Gleazer presented the "charge to the people and the priesthood."

Brother Wallace, who had been seated in the audience early in the service, was escorted to the rostrum by Apostles Arthur A. Oakman, Roscoe E. Davey, Maurice L. Draper, and Reed M. Holmes. Apostle D. Blair Jensen read the charge from the Council of Twelve to the incoming president.

Ordination Service for New Leading Officers

Wednesday night, in the Conference Chamber, the ordinations provided for by the afternoon business session were consummated.

Under the hands of Apostles Arthur A. Oakman and Charles R. Hield, assisted by Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp and High Priest Quorum President Ward A. Hougas, the two counselors to the President were ordained. Brother F. Henry Edwards has served as a counselor in the First Presidency for the past twelve years. Brother Maurice L. Draper has served in the Council of Twelve since 1947.

The new Presiding Patriarch, Roy A. Cheville, was ordained by President W. Wallace Smith, assisted by Apostles D. O. Chesworth and D. V. Lents. Dr.

Cheville has served many years as religious life director at Graceland College.

Elders Charles D. Neff and Clifford Cole were ordained apostles under the hands of Apostles D. Blair Jensen and Roscoe E. Davey, assisted by Apostles P. E. Farrow and R. M. Holmes. Brother Neff has been serving as assistant to the First Presidency prior to this ordination, and Brother Cole has been Director of Religious Education for the General Church.

In the same service, Brethren E. J. Gleazer and D. T. Williams, released from the Council of Twelve under the document approved at the afternoon business session, were ordained to the Order of Evangelists. President Edwards and Draper, assisted by Apostles Farrow and Holmes were spokesmen at the ordinations.

Special music for the service was provided by the Central Missouri Stake Choir, directed by Metta Anderson.

On Sunday afternoon, two other leading officers were ordained. Apostle Charles R. Hield was ordained president of the Council of Twelve; and High Priest Garland E. Tickemyer was ordained president of the Quorum of High Priests, to replace Ward A. Hougas, resigned.

Research for Missions Abroad

The Committee for Research on Missions Abroad has been ably assisted by Elder Donald D. Landon in the gathering of helpful data for the use of the Council of Twelve and the Joint Council in developing our world evangelism program. Brother Landon's data has been selected from sources relating to nations, groups, and people around the world. Included is information about our own existing missions, policies and procedures of evangelical denominations in missions everywhere, and economic, political, and cultural data about areas which will be of concern to us in the further expansion of our world evangelism ministry.

The committee is pleased with the work of Brother and Sister Kiskey Sekine in Japan. They have been employed by the church to prepare literature for publication in Japan. They have translated ten tracts.

Two of these, "Hear Our Story" and "What Is Christ's Church?" have been printed, and supplies are available in Japan, Hawaii, and in the office of the Council of Twelve. Others are being printed as they are edited and corrected.

In addition to their work on translations, Brother and Sister Sekine are holding regular meetings with twenty to twenty-five children and a number of adults. One of their friends, Yoshiyasu Yoshida, is at Graceland this year, his first contact with Christianity being through our group activities in Japan.

The Joint Council has acted to continue the employment of Brother Kiskey Sekine as during the past Conference period.

It is the intention of the Joint Council to continue its research studies, and to make decisions from time to time which will increasingly meet the challenges of our world-wide evangelistic responsibility. Many factors are involved, and action must be bold and vigorous, but well conceived and wisely planned. Our needs include more financial resources, linguists, a growing body of trained ministerial personnel, and the faithful devotion of the Saints which makes these resources available.

Superannuations

The Conference granted the honor of superannuation to five of its long-time appointees. A tribute was given to each, sketching briefly his contribution in office, and a gold lapel pin with a small diamond set was then placed on the lapel of each by President Smith, while the wives present of these men received corsages which were pinned on by Sister W. Wallace Smith. Those honored were John W. Blackmore, John R. Grice, J. Charles May, Myron A. McConley, and Arthur E. Stoff.

The Truth Shall Make You Free

By Arnold A. Spiller

LIFE IS SACRED and holy, whether it be a fungus growth or a giant redwood tree, a mouse or a milk cow; whether it provides sustenance to man or the necessary obstacles and temptations which he must overcome to develop. All such life is "born of water," and must have a continuous supply of it to remain alive.

The divinely created common grass seed suddenly becomes dissatisfied with things as they are, once it is "baptized of water." It is thus given strength to burst its "limes" or shell that it may reach heavenward for solar rays and earthward for water and mineral sustenance, continually overcoming other obstacles such as clods or stones as it reaches farther into the earth for its water and minerals and higher into the air for vital rays. Once it is alive it must either continue to grow or rot. Never again can it remain the same.

After the seed has developed into a tuft of grass, given birth to other seed for procreation and grown into a plant of beauty and fragrance, suddenly a cow from the higher plane of life devours it. The role of the tuft of grass is not one of inevitable doom, however, because it makes a definite contribution to the animal kingdom which cannot only smell, taste, hear, and feel, but actually see in a vast new realm of glorious, majestic beauty. The animal then benefits man who is given dominion over the earth, and man adds to the glory of God through the development of love and intelligence.

Struggle and Growth

The divinely planned struggle for existence begins in all life, including man, even before birth as it first begins to stir in its mother's womb or within the shell of an egg. As it daily gains strength from exercise it finally grows strong enough to exert its way into physical existence. If the mother should interfere in any way or break the shell of her eggs, regardless of good intentions, she would be hurting instead of helping her young. Life is, and should be, a struggle from its very beginning, for this is the only way such life can grow stronger. When the mother steps aside with her sustenance and protection, her offspring quickly uses all its own senses and physical strength to satisfy the desires divinely planted within it to stay alive and procreate. Life is a continuous struggle, and death is inevitable whether it be natural from old age or caused by man who destroys it. Regardless of how any animal dies, it makes a definite contribution to mankind, who was given dominion over it by directly providing sustenance to him or indirectly by adding fertility to the soil which grows his fruit and vegetables as well as the beautiful flowers adorning his table. Even the life of millions of years ago made a contribution to man by supplying fuel for present day power.

Man is blessed of God as he partakes of and wisely utilizes the produce of the earth. He is also further blessed of God as he reaches up into a much higher realm which is not limited to his physical senses (which the animal also possesses) because he can visualize things which he cannot yet see and also can think or reason, even working out difficult mathematical problems or composing complicated symphonies or oratorios. Parallel to this, however, man must develop a love for God and his fellow men—even his enemies—to safeguard such powers entrusted to him from a much higher level of love and intellect. Job wrote, "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding" (Job 32: 8).

Born of the Spirit

Although man's use of his physical senses does not measure up to that of the animal level, he may develop an intellect (safeguarded by love) whereby he can more fully comprehend what he does receive. He can also enter new fields of endeavor in searching out the glories of God through his creative thinking. When man becomes aware of his higher level and a far greater power than his own, which is forever pulling him upward if he is willing to respond, the change in his life is called in biblical language "being born of the spirit." Just as all life in the sea, the earth, and the air as well as man's physical birth is born of the water so is man's life of love and intelligence born of the spirit.

As hunger and sexual desires were planted in all life for it to live and procreate, so there was planted within man a desire to grow in love and intelligence. Throughout history, man has asked the question, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" In our present scientific age man also asks, "Why?" With these two questions in mind, when man first begins to explore the unknown he is so amazed and enthralled at the immensity of it and the comparative insignificance of the known, he is tempted to go no further and spend his life worshipping the mysteries of the unknown.

The Symbol and the Symbolized

Man was taught to pray that he might learn to think. While the first impulse of man at prayer (once this contact is made) is worship and adoration, it should not remain there. God, the Father of it all, is perfect and therefore could not be influenced to show favoritism to those who pray first, longest, or loudest. Nevertheless, this first step is essential for man to be worthy to receive the glory of God through the development of his own love and intelligence. Just as there must first be an exhalation sufficient to create the vacuum necessary for an inhalation of our lungs, so must there be an exhalation to God before there can be an inhalation of his glory. Man's spiritual birth, which does not take place at his physical birth, may come at any time when he is prepared to receive it.

The rite of the "laying on of hands" is symbolic of the reception of this Holy Spirit by man. This ritual may be made a beautiful ceremony, impressive to all those in attendance as well as to the ones upon whom it is administered. However, never must we make the mistake of so elevating the symbolism and those officiating in it that we crowd out that of which it is symbolical. The ordinance of marriage can be administered only by those having authority to do so. But such authority does not assure the success of such a marriage.

Life from Death

When man attempts to limit God to words he immediately bogs down in semantics. Whether He be called "Deity," "I Am," "Jehovah," "God," "All," or "Our Father which art in heaven" is secondary to man's feeling and response toward such power. When any church attempts to limit this power to its own membership or priesthood, it is doomed to failure. Although man's physical senses are important in revealing evidence of such a superior power, never should man attempt to limit God to them. Once man has become aware of such a force or power, it must then be transferred to his intellect and ability to love. His physical senses should continue to testify of it, always sending to his intellect and love greater manifestations of its glory and power.

These two accumulations of force or power continue into the next phase of his eternal existence when his physical body must be left behind by death, just as a tuft of grass is devoured by a cow or as the plant leaves the husk of a seed behind as it responds to a power greater than its own. Parallels are found in the acorn which dies that a mighty oak tree might be born, or a tomato seed which must die before the tomato stalk with its green foliage and fruit can be born. Man continually attempts to stuff the tomato plant with all its foliage and fruit back into the tiny tomato seed or the giant oak tree back into the acorn that he might be able to see it at his present level of intelligence instead of "growing up" that he might comprehend it at a higher level.

Every season the wheat farmer sows millions of seeds whose death and resurrection are essential to his own success as well as the very existence of humanity. The farmer does not mourn the loss of his dead seed. Neither should he spend time praising the resurrection of his seed which could be spent in destroying weeds and grass which would intrude. He must also cultivate his resurrected plants and perform the many other duties relative to good farming. Is not man with his added ability to love and learn more important than the wheat seed?

Folklore has always been and still is a valuable source of supply for the inspiration of thought essential to the aesthetic rapture of music and painting. To capture the glory of the colorful fall harvest and blossoming of spring has long been the ambition of writers, painters, and musicians. Traditional folk dances associated with the fall harvest, spring planting, and blossoming of spring have also been subjects of celebration for ages. However, do the size, quality, or number of such paintings, music, poetry, or celebrations contribute in any way to the value or quantity of the harvest?

Philosophy of the Ancients

Primitive man worshiped the sun. The Mayans of Central America through a long period of observation of the sun had perfected a calendar long before our present system of measuring time received its final touches late in the sixteenth century. The Incas of Peru believed in a God called "Pachacama" who gave life to the world, but they had never known or seen him. For this reason they built no temples and offered no sacrifices to him but worshiped him in their thinking and doing. Their creed states:

Pachacama has given life to the sun. The sun is his highest creature. He is a visible god, the god for man. Only through the sun can man adore Pachacama. For the sun gives to man warmth and light, and nourishes the corn and the llama. He is man's wisdom and health. The world is hard like the Andes; and no eye can look beyond the sun. But the sun comes near and is warm, and no eye can see without him. Therefore, men must worship the sun, build temples to him, offer him sacrifice, fashion their arts and laws after his regular ways. And we—the Inca—who have come to spread the ways of the sun are his children. Here among men, we are in relation to the sun as the sun is in relation to Pachacama.

Other mystic religions of the past have made the sun the center of their ceremonies. Many have made blood offerings, much of it even human blood, to appease their sun gods. The total of all such worship and offerings has never yet made either the earth or the sun alter their courses to the slightest degree as a result of them.

The Fallacy of "Blood Atonement"

Even our present day religions bog down in traditions of the past as we go farther and farther into our scientific age at a faster rate of speed. Many insist on maintaining their stone-age religions, though they admit they cannot understand them. The greatest offender is so-called Christianity which would exchange the blood of Jesus on the cross for the sins of the world. This follows a traditional pattern as far as one goes back into history. Adam practiced the ceremony of burnt offerings. Ever since, offerings have been made in an effort to worship God and to offset the sins of man, but if all such offerings were combined in one great offering with all its accompanying ritual not one sin would have been removed from any man until there was first a repentance and a change of life made on the part of the individual.

Christianity with an eye for economy in one way at least would combine all the sins of men and all burnt offerings in one great sacrifice—that of Jesus. As crime rises and morals drop, Christianity drops its war against sin to legalize it. The rate of remarriage following divorce, which often is a method of legalizing adultery, is highest among the so-called Christian nations. A saying heard frequently during World War II was "All the Christian nations are at war, and all the pagans are at peace." So-called Holy Wars have been fought in the past by Christian against Moslem nations.

Opera with its simple plot of a hero, heroine, and a villain who is often slain in the struggle has contributed much to the musical world. It is also an example for good, because right prevails against wrong. In the day of silent movies a hero rode over the hill on a beautiful horse at a high rate of speed to rescue the passengers of the stagecoach and the valuable mail pouch with a beautiful heroine thrown in for the sake of romance. Some Christians, however, stupidly attempt to make the death of their hero, Jesus Christ, a substitute for their own wickedness with a blank check for future sins when certain rituals are carried out in the church and with a monetary offering. It is amazing that such beautiful music as Handel's Messiah could evolve from such an unreasonable plot.

Many interpreters of the Bible preach that Christ did it all. Paul told the Corinthian saints that the message he brought was "Christ and him crucified" (I Corinthians 2: 2), but Jesus said in Matthew 6: 38, "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness." Isaiah's prophecies of one who "was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him . . . his soul was an offering for sin . . . he shall bear our iniquities" (Isaiah 53) applied to Christ but omitted the basic teachings of Jesus to love and learn. Isaiah does not say that man shall not suffer for his own sins.

John declared in I John 1: 7, "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin," but Jesus said in John 18: 37, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

Ignorance and Sin

An example which could apply to present day Christianity may be found in a book entitled The Conquest of Mexico by William H. Prescott. The Indian chief, named Hatuey, having fled originally from St. Domingo to escape the oppression of its invaders (the Spanish), made a desperate resistance for which he was condemned by Velasquez to be burned alive. It was he who made that memorable reply, more eloquent than a volume of invective. When urged at the stake to embrace Christianity that his soul might find admission into heaven, he inquired if the white men would go there. On being answered in the affirmative, he exclaimed, "Then I will not be a Christian; for I would not go again to a place where I must find men so cruel."

When Galileo saw the solar system and would tell it to the world, he was confronted with seven prelates of the Roman church, all robed in scarlet, who made him kneel and renounce his theories and declare that the world did not move.

In some aspects sin is ignorance. We are told in the Scriptures that the glory of God is intelligence. Jesus taught truth—not a substitution for it—and said, "The truth shall make you free." He taught eternal truths which could free man from sin by its application rather than making his death a substitute for it.

History supplies a parallel to the wickedness of the Christian Era and its futile attempt to offset instead of correct sin by the crucifixion of Jesus with the wickedness among the people in Abraham's day when a guilty feeling of sin touched them they attempted to offset it by claiming that the righteous Abel was slain for their sins. "And have said that the blood of the righteous Abel was shed for sins; and have not known wherein they are accountable before me" (Genesis 17: 7).

While economizing on one Christ, instead of many gods, for all the sins of man so long as certain rituals are performed by a clergy who is supposed to officiate in his stead, man splurges in the erection of churches, temples, and cathedrals all over the world. This rivalry among various religions has resulted in the most beautiful but extravagant architectural achievements of man. Such temples, mosques, and cathedrals, are closely related to various forms of idolatry. When Jesus taught his greatest truths which were based on love for God and man, he resorted to a hillside nearby. No teaching of man can compare with the simple facts that even a child could understand which he taught in his famous Sermon on the Mount, yet no such elaborate erections were necessary for them to be uttered. He is also quoted as saying, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Christianity is more concerned about celebrating his crucifixion than in drawing unto him and putting into practice his teachings of the kingdom of God.

The Authority of Truth

When asked which was the greatest of all commandments, Jesus gave a perfect rule to follow in ascertaining the truth of Scripture, churches, and prophets. He said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments [thou shalt] hang all the law and the prophets" (Matthew 22: 36-38). Truth is evidence of God regardless of its source of manifestation.

An example of the authority of truth is the story of a huge trailer truck which was stuck in an underpass. Due to its speed it had gone so far into the underpass that it could neither back out nor go forward. A crowd, including a small boy, quickly gathered. Highway officials came to give authority to break the pavement with pneumatic drills, and company officials came with authority to pay for the cost of replacing the concrete. As they were about to proceed with breaking the concrete to free the trailer truck, the little boy came forward and suggested that they let some air out of the truck's tires to free it. This was done, and the trailer truck went on through the underpass and refilled its tires at a service station with no damage to the truck or the highway. The boy had no authority from the State Highway Department nor the truck freight line, but he had rendered a valuable service to both through the authority of truth.

If the church membership will only put into practice the basic teachings of Jesus regarding the kingdom of God founded on love, it will receive the promised endowment of the Holy Spirit. And when a righteous ministry dedicates itself to the services and development of the individual member, with no desire for recognition or praise, then will come the achievement of our purpose as a church. The potential power of one human soul is comparable to the power of atomic energy multiplied by the difference in value between a human being composed of love and intellect—two constituents of God himself—and a pile of uranium equal to his own weight. This power could then be multiplied by the number of dedicated members of the church for the potential power available for accomplishing the kingdom on earth.

This primary purpose as individuals and as a church must be motivated by love for God and fellow men. Jesus taught, "Seek ye first the kingdom." If this is done we could help our fellow men by teaching and practicing the truth which will free mankind from the present chaos of sin and bring ourselves nearer to God as well by our assistance in the accomplishment of his purposes among men.

The Future of Graceland

A Crisis of Values

THERE IS GREAT concern at present about the future of education. It is ironic that a Russian earth satellite was the thing that touched off such a widespread interest in the future of education in this country. One is led to the sad conclusion that while the threat of a shortage of doctors or teachers or just informed critical-minded citizens could be ignored, a threatened shortage of scientists able to prepare the nation for modern war could not. The concern is not only about the quality of education in the future but about the availability of minimal educational facilities as well. The number of students to be educated in the next decade or so will increase so rapidly that an enormous enlargement of capacity in buildings and especially of the number of teachers—must take place in order just to maintain present standards.

Because of the great public and professional concern that exists about the educational issue, new taxes are being levied, development projects initiated, buildings planned and constructed, and thought is being given to the attraction and education of teachers and professors. In spite of these preparations the nature of tomorrow's education and its fruits is very obscure indeed. It is a question in the first place whether the preparations are nearly adequate. Will people choose to pay the extremely high money costs necessary to meet the real needs? Even if they do, what will be the nature of education and the benefits derived from it by those educated and by society as a whole? Will schooling ultimately be thought of as a means for preserving, dignifying, and enriching the souls of men, or will it be aimed primarily at serving the purposes of narrow self-interest, greed, and war? I believe that there is a weight of opinion inclined to the latter set of values in the United States (as in most other nations of the Western world. Such a grossly utilitarian philosophy of education is an outgrowth of our competitive culture and expects schooling to bring money returns and contribute to national defense. The values of any society find vivid expression in the methods and purposes espoused in teaching the young. The great confusion and corruption of values in our time, dominated as they are by self-love, fear, godlessness, racism, hate, greed, nationalism, and war, leave in doubt and apprehension the issue to be expected from tomorrow's educational systems. Teachers alone will not determine the matter. More important than what teachers want education to be is what parents and students want it to be.

The phrase "crisis in education" is commonly used now with a variety of meanings. Certainly there are many real crises in education from kindergarten to college. In this article I am referring to that one which is most basic and most pressing—the crisis of values. What do people want in education and why do they want it? I am particularly interested in this crisis because it is precisely and immediately the problem of the church with regard to Graceland College.

What will the Graceland of the immediate future be? What do the people of the church want it to be? A common answer to these questions undoubtedly is that Graceland should continue in the main to be the college it is and has been, with whatever improvements might be made around the edges. People are in general satisfied with the continuing substantial services that are rendered to several hundred youth of the church every year at Graceland and are justifiably proud of the refinement of the program and facilities of the college over the years. Perhaps this satisfaction with things as they are is more than a little responsible for an attitude of conservatism toward the college. A desire to conserve and maintain a good thing when one has it, and an apprehension that innovation may jeopardize it, is understandable.

The truth that the church must recognize, however, is that the college almost surely cannot or will not remain as it is. At present seven or eight hundred students a year seek admission. In a decade or so the number will be fifteen hundred to two thousand or more. If present capacity is not expanded, Graceland simply will no longer be the church-wide college for our youth. If the people of the church want Graceland to serve the church even as well in the next decade as it has in the last they should decide now what should be done and begin to do it—1960 or 1962 or 1965 will be too late. It will be too late after hundreds or thousands of qualified applicants have been denied admission and the traditional "Graceland expectancy" among college-bound youth has begun to break down and disappear.

If the church decides that it really wants a college for all its youth, one that combines the fine traditions of Graceland's past with the emerging needs of our prophetic world mission, this will be a choice of values of fundamental significance. (I am speaking now only of the immediate future where our resources will limit us to thought of only one college. The more remote future may see several if we decide we want them.) The money cost incurred would be very high—possibly several million dollars over a span of years—

but this would be subsidiary to the making of the decision. If we say "We cannot afford it," what we really mean is "We choose to use our money in other ways." I emphasize again, our critical problem is not what we can do, but what we really want to do. It is a problem of values before it is a problem of finance. We can now reflect that the debates of a decade ago as to whether or not the church could afford to finish the Auditorium seem now a bit inconsequential. It was and is a question of choice rather than ability. If we decide to expand Graceland, we must decide soon. It takes time to raise money, time to build buildings (many are planned but unbuilt), time to recruit and train staff members and readjust the whole complex institutional structure of the college to a dynamic expansion. And time is of the essence now.

What kind of instruction is there to be in the Graceland of the future? To match the rising standards and demand in higher education, to say nothing of the unique needs of the church, the quality of instructional and counseling services should be better in the future than they have been in the past. Unless it is possible to pay staff members more adequately than at present it may be difficult to maintain present standards or to improve them. Given the extremely high cost of professional education for professors (the Ph.D. and Ed.D. are often comparable in expense to the M.D.) the attraction of new faculty from the thin ranks of qualified persons in the church at the salaries available seems an insurmountable problem. I might add that until a stronger tradition of scholarship and intellectual pursuits develops within the church the ranks of the academically inclined and qualified Saints in all fields of education and professional services will continue to be thin.

What should be taught in the future Graceland? This is a complex subject that deserves much thought and discussion. Can or should the college continue to be just a first two-year school, or should it become a four-year college in an increasing number of curricula? Will the phenomenal nationwide growth of inexpensive local community colleges indicate a change in function for Graceland? Many people think that the baccalaureate program instituted two years ago is making a significant nascent contribution to the church and that it should continue. I am quite frankly one of them. The maturity and development which can be achieved in the junior and senior year of college are strikingly greater than that which is possible in the freshman and sophomore years. Many sophomore graduates seem just ready, when they leave after two years, to begin to take full advantage of the unique opportunities Graceland affords and to make a maximum contribution of their own to the college community. And the heightened tone of maturity, purpose, and leadership which upperclassmen lend to the student body is very significant and worth while.

I fervently hope that our decisions, whatever they may be, will be influenced by other considerations than those dictated by a desire merely to train our students for the competitive job market. If this is our real interest let them go to bigger, better, and cheaper public colleges. But if we are convinced that education is an important part of the awakening of the intellect, moral sensibilities, and spirit of our youth, let us remember this in our deliberations.

The quality of prophecy is not primarily the ability to foresee the future. It is rather the ability to understand what the future should be, and the ability to use the present to shape the future according to the prophetic vision. Inasmuch as we as a prophetic church envision how portentous is the future of mankind—how fraught with danger, despair, opportunity, and hope—it behooves us in the spirit of our prophetic purpose to seize and use the present for the sake of the future. We need to make our value judgments and decisions now.

Graceland is indeed the college of the church. It reflects the values, goals, hopes, and aspirations of the Saints. Its students and staff are representative of the church. Graceland is what the church has made it. It will be what the church wants it to be.

Why Graceland?

ONE OF the greatest assets in our day of technology and a highly integrated society is the opportunity of bettering ourselves through education. Daily life is more exacting today than at any other period in history. We need education in order to meet the problems of life adequately and to accomplish the tasks that are ours. Many times, however, we feel that this is the only value of education—to teach us things that we do not know. There is an additional value which is of equal or even greater importance. John Ruskin had this in mind when he said:

Education does not mean teaching people what they do not know. It means teaching them to behave as they do not behave. It is not teaching the youth the shapes of the letters and the tricks of numbers, and then leaving them to turn their arithmetic to roguery and their literature to lust. It means, on the contrary, training them into the perfect exercise and kingly continence of their bodies and souls. It is painful, continual, and difficult work to be done by kindness, by watching, by warning, by precept, and by praise, and above all—example.

Mr. Ruskin was thinking of the teacher when he gave this challenge. There are also qualities needed in the student. A general but extremely important quality is seen in a mural on the wall of the children's ward of the Methodist Hospital in Des Moines. This mural was probably painted by Walt Disney himself. As you look at it, you see Pinocchio skipping along with his books strapped together. He is looking at a tree which has two signs on it, one points one direction and says, "To school, 2 miles," the other points another direction and says, "Somewhere else, 1 mile." It is up to the student to go the extra mile in order to obtain success in industry, in business, or in life itself.

The College-Success Ratio

There are not only requirements, but also rewards for the teacher and the student. A quotation from Sunshine magazine stated that college men have become members of the National House of Representatives 352 times as often as noncollege men, members of the Senate 530 times as often, President 1,392 times as often, and Justice of the Supreme Court 2,027 times as often. This is true not only of our political life but also of every phase of our society.

Education in the Early Church

Early in the history of the Restoration there was a firm belief in the need of education. The threefold challenge of Jesus to Peter rang true in that day, "Feed my sheep . . . Feed my sheep . . . Feed my lambs." The restored Church of Jesus Christ established the first school west of the Mississippi. Joseph Smith pioneered in education when for the first time in history there was established in Nauvoo a free educational system through the university.

The University of Nauvoo, even though it was not fully operative because of the dispersion that took place, was nevertheless chartered by the state of Illinois and was to have become an integral part of that city.

Graceland's Needs

Today Graceland has become an expanding part of the total church, and with her expansion, she is able to minister better to the students who come. Also her needs are becoming greater in order to minister better to those students. When I was graduated from Graceland in 42, there were 315 students enrolled. Today this number has more than doubled. There are now approximately 700 students at Graceland.

Not only has the student body doubled at Graceland, but individual costs have risen with our day of inflation. Higher education is different from any form of business, for increased enrollment does not mean increased resources of revenue. Education costs above and beyond what each student contributes to that education. General Church appropriation, endowment income, College Day, and alumni support must subsidize each student enrolled in Graceland.

Not only is there a need to subsidize each student who comes to Graceland, but also there is a dire need for capital improvements in order better to serve the needs of these students. Dormitories, food service buildings, additional classrooms, equipment with which to work are all needed in order for adequate education to be accomplished. It sounds like a lot, but it's worth it.

Fourteen Reasons for Supporting Graceland

My grandfather was German. He told me on one occasion that he used as his philosophy of life the German recipe for coffee. This German recipe is merely three words, "Put some in." It is important for us as individuals to be vitally interested in the role of Graceland and put some in.

Several years ago I copied down fourteen reasons for supporting our church college. (1) Graceland is ours. (2)

Graceland develops clean, honest character. (3) Graceland teaches and practices the gospel of Christ restored. (4) Graceland develops a keener church consciousness. (5) Graceland is operated by men of our own faith. (6) Graceland policies are determined by the church. (7) Graceland has reached a high state of educational efficiency. (8) Graceland develops a true standard of success in the individual, service, and stewardship. (9) Graceland's product, our youth, is in an increasing demand in business, professions, industry, and service of the church. (10) Graceland fosters brotherly love without the expense of fraternity and sorority. (11) Graceland gives more in return for the money extended than any business investment. (12) Graceland is a source of the future church's wealth and leadership. (13) Our patriotism and loyalty to the church demands that we support Graceland. (14) The lives and characters and careers of our children are too precious to risk in any hands except the most adequate. Graceland's hands are adequate.

Enduring Memorials That Serve Mankind

A NEW YORK attorney died last February and his family, striving for the most fitting tribute to a man they loved, inserted in the newspapers this notice: "In lieu of flowers a contribution to the Columbia College Fund is suggested." Friends responded by sending 115 contributions totaling $2,654 to the attorney's alma mater, to help deserving youngsters through college.

The attorney's wife later observed, "We felt that this tribute suggested life and growth rather than death—a building toward the future. My husband was interested in the education of youth, and this carried his concern on beyond his lifetime."

There is a suggestion of immortality here and a feeling of warmth and light, rather than the gloom which frequently surrounds funeral tributes. Scholarships which honor the memory of departed relatives and friends bring threefold benefits: they form a lasting tribute to those who have passed away; they give aid to our straitened colleges; and they extend a helping hand to youth.

Dr. Henry M. Wriston, president emeritus of Brown University, relates, "The wife of one of our staff who died in 1954 requested scholarship contributions 'in lieu of flowers.' She thought $1,000 or so might be forthcoming, but the gifts totaled more than $38,000!"

And at Colgate, President Everett Case tells of the family of a businessman, at whose death a similar request was made. Instead of flowers friends contributed $4,750 in scholarships, and the man's company put in $25,000.

But gifts need not be large to be effective. At Colgate within the last four years 41 friends of one alumnus contributed $650—in gifts of $5 to $100; 85 friends of another alumnus gave $2,610, and 78 friends of another gave $1,950. Colgate alumni secretary Carlton Miller points out that 80 per cent of the donors were not alumni, simply individuals who wished to honor the memory of a friend. "People respond uniquely to this form of giving," Miller says. "There would be more of it if the next-of-kin would have it in mind when preparing obituary notices."

The alumni association of the University of California at Berkeley established a specific Memorial Scholarship Program in 1953. "Most contributions have been five to ten dollars," states alumni field secretary Clifford Dochterman. "But in aggregate they provide scholarships for several worthy students each year."

The good accomplished by such giving goes deeper than is generally realized. Many people assume that all college scholarships are paid for by outside contributions. They're not. In a survey made two years ago, 535 colleges reported that they provided an annual total of 48 million dollars in aid to students. Of this, 27 million, well over half, came out of operating funds that were vitally needed for faculty salaries, new buildings, equipment. Thus a dollar given for scholarships does "double work": it helps to educate a deserving youngster, and it frees another dollar to be used by the college. Such enlightened giving has special timeliness today, for never before have we so needed educated youth, especially in the sciences. At present only half the students in the top quarter of their high school graduating classes go on to college. Lack of money cuts short many a promising career. Memorial scholarships might go a long way toward correcting this situation.

The notion of thus honoring the dead through living deeds gained its first impetus in Sweden in the 1920's, when a "Flower Fund" was organized in Stockholm to build, with money normally used for funeral flowers, low-cost housing for folks. The fund has built eight large apartment houses accommodating one thousand aged men and women. A ninth building is being planned. The idea has spread: there are now some two hundred flower funds in Sweden.

The idea of enduring memorials is spreading rapidly in the United States. For example, almost every day one sees in the obituary notices in metropolitan newspapers requests that, in lieu of flowers, contributions be made to a specified worthy cause.

Figures indicate that the nation's florists need not suffer a significant loss of business if the memorial scholarship idea takes firm root. The scholarship money that would help wipe out the operating deficits of hundreds of our colleges is less than 4 per cent of our annual expenditures for flowers. And this might be made up by other, more appropriate purchases of flowers for the living, who can see and appreciate them.

The movement toward honoring the dead and serving the living through scholarships nicely combines the need for sentiment and practicality. For these are scholarships for remembrance, in which those who have gone before assist the perennial blooming of youth.

Religion in Action

THESE ARE BUSY days. We are in the hastening time, everyone seems agreed, and with this condition comes a challenge to sift and weigh our activities in order that we may put "first things first." Christ preached that one of these first things was to have love for our neighbors. Our goal as a church is to "evangelize the world and to establish Zion." For a great many of us our evangelizing is limited to a small area of activity—our neighborhood and business association; therefore, since we are in close contact every day with a limited number of people, it is extremely necessary that our lives witness favorably.

When we stop to analyze just what has made the greatest impression on us, we often find that it is some little kindness that someone has gone out of his way to do for us. It may be little, but, oh, how much difference it may have made in our lives and even in the lives of generations to come.

My first contact with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints came when I was a very small child. I lived with an aunt and uncle who moved into a Latter Day Saint farming community. We knew very little about this religion, and what we did know was not too favorable. The adjoining farm was occupied by several different families during the years we lived there. Most of the families were Latter Day Saints. As farmers have occasion to work together in helping each other at busy times of the year, my uncle came to regard his Latter Day Saint neighbors highly. They were honest, hard working, pleasant and cheerful to be around.

One spring was exceptionally wet, and as we lived near the river our farm was flooded. One night the water rose very rapidly and was at our door before we realized it. One of these good neighbors came for us with a team of horses and a wagon. The water was so high the horses had to swim part of the way out. We stayed several days in the home of these good people and, needless to say, a strong bond of love came to exist between us. The high regard these people had for their church and for their fellow men made a lasting impression on me and created a desire within me to know more about their religion. Recently, in the office where I work, I overheard a conversation between two people who were discussing our church and our beliefs. One of them, who lives among Latter Day Saint neighbors and recently lost a child, remarked, "Well, I don't know too much about their beliefs, but I do believe that somewhere in the Bible it says, 'by their fruits ye shall know them,' and they are certainly wonderful neighbors." I was surely glad that some were witnessing by their lives.

These things are important. Too many times the story is quite different. It is possible that we may become so engrossed in our daily activities that we do not even know that our next-door neighbor has gone to the hospital until she is back home. How much a little interest and concern for the welfare of our neighbors can mean in their lives, and how far reaching in the lives of others! Yes, sometimes we are busy with important things—caring for our families, planning and carrying out activities in the various departments, working in the world—but somehow we must make our first order of business a Christlike interest in individuals. Our visits do not need to be long, just a few minutes to let them know we enjoy their company and are interested in their well-being. I am sure if we scrutinize our time closely, we can find a few minutes each day that we might devote to a more worth-while cause. When we are having a little family party of ice cream and cake or a picnic in the back yard, we can invite the neighbors next door or across the street to share it with us. A cake or a one-dish meal might be very welcome when a family is moving into the neighborhood. We don't have to make it an occasion to have guests or to visit; many times the casual contacts are far the most fun. I remember in my grandfather's home guests were always welcome, be they friends or strangers, and a dinner invitation was extended on a moment's notice. He was known and loved by everyone in the community. I believe we should strive for some of the old-fashioned casual hospitality. This would surely make us a peculiar people in this day of self-preoccupation.

Then there are those of whom the Apostle Paul says, "Let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith" (Galatians 6:10). Yes, we have a definite obligation to our neighbors, but we have an even greater obligation to our brothers and sisters in the church. It is true that we have the friendly visitor or the visiting committee and the priesthood visit, but this does not relieve each and every one of his obligation to the other members of the church family. Christ says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35).

If we really have love for the brethren, we will be on the alert for persons who are in need. I do not mean financial, because there are needs far more acute than physical hunger—the hunger of the soul for love and recognition.

How great is the need of members or families who are making a new start after being out of the fold for a while. They need to feel they are accepted and warmly welcomed back.

There are divided homes and many times an intimate contact by a member family with genuine interest expressed for the nonmember companion can be the means of winning him to the Master and thus uniting a home. What personal activity are we engaged in that is as important as this? Friendly social contacts can often open the way for priesthood visits when up to that time the door had been closed to them.

Some people seem to stand on the periphery of activity and never act as though they really want to be a part of the group. I wonder if they have ever been asked and made to feel they are really wanted. It is our business to seek out the timid souls and make them feel they belong, else it is easy for them to drift away unnoticed.

When people are absent from church on Sunday or Wednesday night, do you call them or drop in—or are you just quite busy and feel that the friendly visitor or the priesthood will contact them anyway? If you have a prompting to call people, don't put it off; do it right then. It takes only a few minutes to make a phone call or drop a card or even to stop by as you are driving past their homes—and how good it makes them feel to think someone misses them that much!

How long has it been since you have had another family of your congregation into your home for a meal or maybe a little Saturday night snack or some refreshments after church on Sunday night? How much longer has it been since you have had someone in your home whom you do not know very intimately—for instance, the new family that just started coming to church with your congregation a few Sundays ago? You will be surprised what a blessing will accrue to your family and especially the children by these intimate contacts with other Latter Day Saint families in the community.

John says, "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light" (I John 2: 10). Not everyone is easy to love and take into our hearts, but we must remember that whether we love a person or not, our heavenly Father loves him. Who are we to do less? Such people are in desperate need of companionship. Their souls are as precious as anyone's.

We have differences with people sometimes. Perhaps an intimate social contact would give us insight into why they feel and act as they do. We could come to understand them better and possibly we could be a source of help to them.

There are those who are "out of the way" who need an encouraging hand to help them back on the right road.

The widow and the orphan need our ministry. Therein may lie a future apostle or ambassador for Christ. We are told that to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction is "pure religion and undefiled before God"—in other words, religion in action. We pray for the Lord to bless the "poor and the needy" and the "sick and afflicted"; then many times he calls upon us to bring to pass the answer to our prayer if we are willing to respond.

Paul says, "Let love be without dissimulation [pretense]. . . . Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another" (Romans 12: 9, 10). It is our duty as members of the household of faith to develop a concern for all members of the congregational family, regardless of whether we feel particularly drawn to them or not. We must become close to each other and come to appreciate each other's joys and sorrows. We must seek to uphold each other in our trials and problems, but how are we going to know about them or care if we do not get closely acquainted with our brothers and sisters?

Powerful sermons may be preached, mighty anthems may be sung, well-organized programs may be planned in the various departments—and these are all fine and good, but they will not build the kingdom. They are only instruments to guide us in this most vital activity. The greatest ministry will be performed when we make the two great commandments a part of our lives and offer ourselves as living sacrifices in service to our God. This can be done only in service to our fellow men. This type of ministry receives the divine approval in latter-day revelation:

Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith. Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease. Sustain each other in peace, and ye shall be blessed with my Spirit, in comforting and strengthening you for my work . . . Be ye diligent, wise, and faithful, doing all things with an eye single for the glory of your God, and for the good of his people. Thus saith the Lord. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 12-14.

Neighbors in Zion

THE WORD "friendship" is a beautiful word. Friendship means a mutual love between two people. It needs to be fed and nurtured that it may grow in beauty and sincerity through the years.

The other day I called on a neighbor, Mrs. S——, who lives down the street. I found her in a bad mood. Her heart was full of bitterness toward a friend and neighbor around the corner.

"I'll never speak to her again. I'll never go in her house again," she said. "I know she did that just to provoke me."

I said, "You know Mrs. Y—— likes you. Look at all the nice things you have done for her. I know she wouldn't want to hurt your feelings. I doubt that she had anything to do with what you mention."

"Oh, yes, she did. You don't know her," she said.

Before excusing myself to go home I decided on another approach. "What did Jesus teach us when he was here?" I asked. "He came to teach us the way of life. In order to have an abundant life according to his teachings we must love one another. When we love one another we have that joyous, satisfied feeling inside that tells us of our own well-being. When we have a feeling of resentment or hate it poisons our system and makes us sick. We can't possibly feel that all is well with us. Negative emotions harm us more than they harm anyone else."

After I reached home I worried lest I had offended my neighbor. But a few days later I was pleased when I looked out and saw Mrs. S—— coming through my gate. One of the first things she said was, "I did what you told me."

I asked her what she referred to and she said, "I forgave Mrs. Y——. She is a very sweet person. I went to see her that very evening you were at my house. I went to town with her Monday just as I used to do. After I went to see her I felt so happy I sang all the next day."

It is true that when we keep God's law we have a happy, satisfied feeling inside. It is his plan that we should have a friendly interest in love for our neighbors. There is a work for us to do. That work begins in our homes but expands to include our neighbors.

The Salad Room

New Dishwashing Equipment

Theirs Is a Good Gift

By Bea Luther

THIS YEAR some seventy-five members of the Laurel Club once again assumed the responsibility of feeding several thousand people during Conference.

With the Laurel Club as a nucleus, volunteer groups from women's departments of the various church branches in the Independence area plus about fifty Graceland College students are helping to serve breakfast, luncheon, and dinner in the dining room in the lower part of the Auditorium during each of the eight days.

Crowds increase each year, and the Laurels are constantly striving to improve the efficiency of their service. This year some very important improvements have been made in the dishwashing equipment at a cost of over $2,000. These improvements save many steps, eliminate breaking through the cafeteria line with dirty dishes, and generally improve the efficiency of the work.

The dishwashing equipment is now located behind the big brick semicircle that juts out into the attractive dining area. Two outside openings in this semicircle are the receiving centers for countless trays of dishes. From there the dishes travel along metal conveyors where twelve workers scrape and put them into racks in regular assembly line fashion. The racks are then fed into the big washing machines. Thousands of dishes pass through the line in an hour—a far cry from the time when the dishes at Conference time were done in washtubs.

Another new addition is a spacious room where salads of all kinds are prepared in staggering quantities. The old salad room was half the size of the new one, windowless, cramped, with a low, slanting ceiling.

The Laurel Club kitchen is complete with its own baking area where homemade bread, pies, and puddings are prepared. In another tremendous work area the meats and vegetables are made ready.

It probably is not generally known that with the exception of a limited number of kitchen helpers and the Graceland students, all work is donated by the Laurels. Theirs is a labor of love, their only remuneration being the satisfaction of giving good service. These workers, in serving their God and the church, must sacrifice the privilege of attending all but a very few of the Conference meetings.

Husbands of Laurel Club members contribute their support in various ways. Many co-operatively allow their wives to donate great amounts of time, and some husbands even give their own service wherever they are needed.

If you had been in the kitchen on the morning of the first Sunday of Conference, you would have seen women busily preparing for the noon meal pause for a brief service in which they received the Communion. In that brief time—a hush in the midst of feverish activity—the Holy Spirit filled the room, touching every heart. More than one will tell you that the Spirit blessed her as well as her work. The Laurels remember one year when there was no time to stop for a meeting. After a prayer, the elders passed the trays among the women, each one stopping her work just long enough to receive the emblems. They will tell you that remembering the experience still brings an uplift to those who were there.

While Conference is the biggest project the Laurels undertake, one of their many accomplishments included efficiently serving one thousand people, many of whom were governmental dignitaries, at a banquet on the occasion of the opening of the Truman Library in Independence in July of last year. During the winter it is a routine matter for the Laurels to serve three or four banquets a month for groups ranging in size from one hundred to six hundred people.

The Laurel Club is a service organization. Six women organized it in 1906. Profits are donated to countless facets of the work of the church; the Auditorium, the Sanitarium, the Nursing Home and many local branches are only a few of the places where its support is felt.

These loyal Saints are to be commended for their splendid service to and support of their church. You may be interested in knowing who their officers are: president, Mrs. Robert Miller; first vice-president, Mrs. Maude Etzenhouser; second vice-president, Mrs. O. C. White; secretary, Mrs. Rudolph Richter; treasurer, Mrs. Robert Lacey; cost clerk, Mrs. Floris Hands; kitchen chairman, Mrs. Keith Stokes; dining-room chairman, Mrs. Wilfred Burton; historian, Mrs. Jess Holsworth; publicity chairman, Mrs. F. O. Spangler.

Prove Me Now

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Malachi 3: 10.

PROBABLY all of us have wondered at some time, "If we have to pay all that money for tithing, how will we ever have any left for such things as a new car or a vacation trip?" What happens to people who tithe? This is my experience.

One Sunday a few months after I joined the church, I heard Patriarch Edward Carter speak on tithing statements. As a result I resolved to file mine. Although my husband is a non-member the solicitor explained how I could file on my personal possessions. I started the inventory. I had a $25 war bond, bought when I was in high school, worth $26.50. This was my sole cash asset, and I decided to redeem and use it. I asked my husband if he had any objections to this, and he said that it was up to me. When Sunday came again I had not completed a thorough inventory, but I felt impelled to turn in my check for the bond money anyway. This was in April. That week my father called and asked us to accompany him to New York by air at his expense. It was a wonderful trip.

Although I had no personal income and for reasons of health could not work, I started to pay the remaining tithing due, a little each week, from household money. We do not use the "allowance" system for our personal expenses, but take them out of the general fund. Whatever I needed I bought when I felt we could afford it. It was somewhat of a mutual agreement that my husband's recreational expense was an out-of-town newspaper each day while mine was tithing. They about equaled each other weekly. I felt that my being careful about purchases and conscientious about mending, and so forth justified this.

My husband had a steady job, but our expenses almost equaled our income so we had to watch even dime store purchases in order to save a little. Our car seemed old to us, and we looked wistfully at new ones we couldn't afford.

In May someone paid my husband over $150, a debt which had been owed several years and under such conditions that I had suggested canceling it as a bad debt. We banked the money and decided to save for a vacation, as we had not had one for six years. By carefully buying only necessities we were able to take $250 in travelers checks with us when we left for the Rocky Mountains the middle of June. During this time I continued to pay my tithing. Our sixteen days of travel were the most enjoyable in years.

When August came my husband found a better job, and we moved from Michigan to Indiana. After he started working he discovered the job allowed use of the company car for personal purposes, with a new model each year.

This is not presented as a get rich scheme but as a testimony that the Lord blesses us beyond the scope of our dreams when we make the first sacrifices and efforts, trusting him.

Each Day with Christ

THERE ARE times in our lives when we feel we are not living as closely to the Master as we should. It is then we seek to come into his presence for guidance and comfort.

Such were my feelings as I pondered how each day was being spent in a business office of the world. We know there are many things which can easily draw us away from Christ. Indifference and ambition fill the heart; relationships can become competitive—which is not conducive to spirituality; and the status of our personal witnessing for Christ can reach a low ebb before we are aware of it.

Realizing this I meditated on what I could do to overcome the things which involved me, even to a slight degree, and earnestly prayed to know how to live one day acceptably to Christ. Very soon thereafter I arose one morning and got ready for work; as I did so I felt unusually calm and collected—at perfect peace. I did not think much about it for a while as I had been trying to live closer to the Master and had experienced his peace on quite a few occasions. However, about ten o'clock the realization came to me that my request was being granted. Nothing ruffled me; nothing disturbed my tranquillity; little bickerings went unnoticed; my work was easy. Noon came, and the lunch hour with my associates was pleasant. Work again in the afternoon was, as before, without strain or tension. Thus the entire day passed without an unpleasant incident, the peaceful spirit remaining to the end. This brought the knowledge that the cares of the world need not overtake us if we give them only their rightful place in our lives.

Righteousness can be built into our hearts and purposes to such an extent that every day can be a wonderful experience with the Master at our side, living together, working together, using every opportunity to help those around us. This Zionite attitude takes spirituality attained through study and learning, much prayer, and application of the principles we find recorded in the Scriptures. These treasures can be ours by searching.

Here is a beautiful poem* by Ralph S. Cushman:

SEEK GOD IN THE MORNING

I met God in the morning,
When the day was at its best,
And his presence came like sunrise,
Like a glory in my breast.

All day long the Presence lingered,
All day long he stayed with me,
And we sailed in perfect calmness
O'er a very troubled sea.

Other ships were blown and battered,
Other ships were sore distressed,
But the winds that seemed to drive them,
Brought to us a peace and rest.

Then I thought of other mornings,
With a keen remorse of mind,
When I, too, had loosed the moorings,
With the Presence left behind.

So I think I know the secret,
Learned from many a troubled way:
You must seek God in the morning
If you want him through the day.

Cornerstone Laid for Marion, Illinois Church

OPEN HOUSE WAS HELD at the newly remodeled church on West De Young Street in Marion, Illinois, on June 19. The congregation has been using the church for services since March 1, although some work remains yet to be done. Installation of acoustical ceiling on the lower auditorium, tile on floors, and landscaping and planting of shrubbery will be completed this fall.

The building was moved back from its original site, which has been taken by the state as part of a right-of-way for Route 13. The church was relocated on a lot 120 by 125 feet. The old structure was completely remodeled, and three additional wings were added; these are occupied by classes, nursery, and the pastor's study.

The lower auditorium is used for the junior department.

The copper spire over the main entrance extends fifty feet in height, and is lighted by four floodlights. The marble stone over the entrance bearing the church seal was made and donated by the Thurmond Monument Company. The cornerstone was donated by the late Christine Morgan in honor of her mother, Mrs. Sally Whitlock.

The contract was awarded in August, 1957, to the F. E. Holmes Company of Marion. Construction began in September. W. Clarence Wilson, Mount Vernon, Illinois, was the architect. The J. H. Conley Company, Marion, did the plumbing; Stanley Rix and Sons did the heating; Lambert Linoleum Company did the tile work. The grading was done by O. L. Norris. Painting and electrical work was done by volunteer labor at a saving to the branch of about $5,000.00.

Painting was done under the supervision of Lee Cogdill, and electrical work was supervised by R. W. Poore.

The blond wood pews and pulpit furniture were purchased from the Turney Wood Products Company, Harrison, Arkansas.

The laying of the cornerstone was held March 2. The opening hymn was "The Church's One Foundation." The prayer of consecration was by Missionary Cecil Robbins. Scripture reading was by District President Russell Ellis.

A brief history of the building project was given by the pastor, R. W. Poore. Kay Kelley sang "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place." The cornerstone was placed by Apostle D. T. Williams and the pastor, Brother Poore. The hymn "On This Stone Now Laid" was sung by Judy Vaughn. The benediction was by Brother Ellis.

When completed, the church will cost approximately $50,000.00.

For the past four years a radio program of Evan A. Fry's sermons has been broadcast over WJPF, Herrin, Illinois.

The church has a membership of around 170; thirty-seven members were recently transferred to the newly organized mission in Harrisburg, Illinois. Priesthood includes one high priest, five elders, four priests, one teacher, and one deacon.

The present officers are R. W. Poore, branch president; Wallace Peebles, assistant; Russell Ellis and Norman Jackson, counselors; Carl Raybourne, church school director; Wallace Peebles, Zions' League leader; Clifton Brown, men's club president; Elizabeth Poore, women's leader; Meribah Vaughn, children's supervisor; Mildred Atwood, music director; Sharon Cogdill, secretary; Dorothy Kelley, book steward; Norval Radford, treasurer and church statistician; Norman Jackson, missionary co-ordinator; Ernest Burklow, bishop's agent; I. T. Webb, historian; and Glenna Jackson, publicity agent.

Antidote for Worry

STAYED ON THEE

No word of earth can measure or define
The marvel of God's mighty keeping power,
With peace the prize for which hearts ever yearn,
Available in every need and hour.

And yet there is a price that all must pay;
Peace never comes unaided to the soul.
The mind must first be stayed on God if we Would gain so rich a prize, so great a goal.

For thoughts are potent, mental images
That form a constant inner attitude.
To stay the mind on Him it must be filled
With things accounted pure and true and good.

Fear, bitterness, self-pity, flee away
When thoughts, as captives, to His will are brought
And made obedient to His law of love;
And in the soul a miracle wrought.

With mind stayed on Him in childlike trust,
Calm comes, the tumult and striving cease;
The goal is won, the heart finds rest at last
Within the sanctuary of God's perfect peace.

WHY DIDN'T I get a raise in pay?" "What makes Henry late coming home?" "Will I be able to make this sale?" "What will the neighbors think?" "Will my tax bill be higher next year?" "Am I in danger of losing my job?" "Will Russia bomb the United States?" "Do I have cancer?"

These are only a few of the things that people worry about. The list can be prolonged indefinitely. Yet when we stop to look at the list of worries, they seem so unnecessary. Some of them are almost ridiculous. In most cases worry does not help the situation.

Doctors say that worry consumes a great deal of nervous energy. It interferes with sleep. It reduces a person's vitality and undermines general health. Many symptoms of illness can be traced to persistent worry.

When a person's thoughts dwell on tragedy, as in worry, his body reacts as though danger really exists.

The body has a built-in mechanism designed to respond to emergencies; worry triggers this mechanism, as in fright, anger, or horror the autonomic nervous system marshals the body's reserves for an all-out defense. The adrenal glands become particularly active. The secretions which these glands produce circulate throughout the body and implement the demand for emergency status. The heart beats faster, the blood pressure rises, the blood carries more blood sugar, and the digestive organs slacken their functions. This body mechanism is not intended to function all the time. Its purpose is to tide one through a crisis. Once the crisis is over, the organs should return to normal functions.

But the person who worries usually keeps on worrying, hour after hour. Some tragedies he worries about seldom occur, but he keeps on worrying just the same. Meanwhile the organs of the body do not differentiate between imaginary tragedy and the real thing—they have only one pattern of response. When the emergency signal is given, they prepare for the worst. And if the signal keeps on coming through, the organs continue to maintain their all-out defense as long as the body's resources permit. Thus worry reduces vitality and makes the body more susceptible to actual disease. From this it is clear that, to be healthy, a person must abstain from worry.

AS CHRISTIANS we claim to trust God to bring those experiences in life that are for our best good. We recognize that many of life's circumstances will not be pleasant. We know we must take the bitter with the sweet, and we believe that life's trials and tribulations are for the purpose of making our characters stronger. But even though we accept this theory, we still become confused and worried over God's dealings with us. Our selfishness makes us afraid to trust Him to do what is best for us.

When we go to a doctor's office we trust him to examine us carefully, to make an accurate diagnosis, and to recommend a treatment that will keep us well or help us to recover our health.

Similarly, Christians are foolish when they hesitate to trust God to bring them just the experiences that are best for them.

When Christ was on earth, he manifested such complete confidence in his Father's watch care that he was free from worry. Matthew 8: 24-27 tells the story of a storm on the Sea of Galilee. Christ said to his disciples, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

Thus he not only demonstrated his own freedom from worry to the extent that he was able to sleep during the storm, but he indicated to his disciples that faith is the antidote for worry.

Paul expressed this same concept when he wrote, "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind" (II Timothy 1: 7).

Faith is a necessary part of the Christian's way of life. "Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Hebrews 11: 6).

But you may ask, "How does faith keep a person from worrying?" The explanation of how faith operates is just as simple as the explanation of the child's confidence in his parent. When a child is awakened by a terrifying dream, he instinctively runs to his mother's bedside for comfort. The mother holds him close to her and gives him reassurance. She then takes him back to bed, tucks the covers around him, and holds his hand while he falls back to sleep. He is fully confident of his safety.

Similarly, the Christian when tempted to worry and fear naturally turns to his heavenly Father. He claims the promise which the Scriptures contain, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you" (Isaiah 66: 13).

The reason the child can go back to sleep after his mother has comforted him is that he loves her so much he trusts her and believes her reassurance. In like manner the Christian has a childlike love for his Father in heaven. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear" (I John 4: 18).

It is difficult to control one's thoughts and banish worry, but the Scriptures provide the solution:

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.—Philippians 4: 8.

Graceland Gazette

■ The students and faculty were presented a further opportunity to meet Dr. Harvey H. Grice at a press conference held during the assembly, Wednesday morning, September 24, 1958. He was interviewed by a panel made up of the Acacia editor, Tower editor, student body president, Don Booz (Director of Public Relations and Development), and Mrs. Eleanor Miller (UP representative for the Des Moines Register and Tribune). When questioned about his reason for leaving industry for education, Dr. Grice stated that he felt that all the while he was doing something he enjoyed and was prepared for, he was looking for something even more satisfying. He said, "This is it."

Dr. Grice feels that there are some parallels between his former position and the one here. He mentioned that there were about six or seven hundred employees where he worked, and a similar number of students here. There were machines there, and there are here, although on a smaller scale.

Mrs. Miller inquired as to the possibility of the expansion of the four-year college into other fields than religion. Dr. Grice replied that there is no immediate anticipation for expansion into other fields, though there are certainly hopes and dreams of a four-year college on the Hill.

When asked, "What are the most responsible contacts for the influx of foreign students and students from diverse parts of the country?" Dr. Grice answered that the church was most responsible. With 160,000 members scattered over the world, the existence of Graceland is a fairly well-circulated fact. Many students come as a result of the testimony of friends and relatives. The job that Mr. Booz does in Public Relations is also responsible for students coming from many geographical locales.

Mr. Booz inquired of the service of Graceland to the community around Lamoni, in the form of night and summer sessions. Dr. Grice replied that there is a definite and obvious need for expansion into these fields. He felt that night sessions could benefit students and adult residents alike in providing education on a large scale.

■ Judy Barrett, Kansas City, Missouri; Marcia Kemp, Denver, Colorado; Sandy Korf, Yuma, Colorado; Sally Warnock and Wayne Dugger, Independence, Missouri, have been selected by the coaching staff to be the cheerleaders for the 1958-59 Graceland school year. The five regulars and the two alternates, Barbara Gilmore, Detroit, Michigan; and Bonnie Hayes, Binghamton, New York, were selected from eighteen students who tried out.

■ Paced by a well-balanced offensive machine, Graceland rolled past Culver-Stockton of Canton, Missouri, 27-6, in their season and home opener Saturday night, September 20. Graceland scored once in each quarter and added a field goal by Rick Carter, Lamoni, Iowa, in the fourth period.

■ Forty-five freshman nurses who are in training at the Sanitarium in Independence, Missouri, visited Graceland's campus Saturday, September 27. That evening they were guests of the college at the football game against Northeast Missouri State.

■ Two leading students of the University of Costa Rica visited the campus October 1 and 2. Mr. Randall Garcia, president of Law Students' Association of the University, and Mr. Ricardo Orozco, president of the Chemistry Students' Association, were guests at the assembly on Wednesday morning, October 1. They were accompanied by Mr. Edward D. Rock, a Department of State escort interpreter.

These two gentlemen each have a reading knowledge of the English language, but have only slight speaking ability. Mr. Garcia is twenty-three years old and is in his last year at the law school of the University of Costa Rica.

Mr. Orozco is twenty-nine years old and also lives in San Jose, Costa Rica. He is finishing his last year in the School of Chemistry at the University of Costa Rica. He has taught science in the Colegio Seminario and has been an accountant in the offices of the Ministry of Public Works.

■ The Graceland Ham Club is under way for another year. This is an organization of men and women who are radio operators or interested in becoming operators of amateur receiving and transmitting sets. A series of classes was held Monday, September 15, until Friday, September 19, for instruction to those wishing to gain their novice or general operator's license. The club is interested in the function of the amateur's radio in the national and international communication and defense scheme. Members are from several states, and most are operators on some scale in their home towns. On campus there is amateur equipment which has been utilized to a great degree already this year.

From Darkness to Light

I was baptized in 1938 because I thought my wife and I should belong to the same church; she had been a member of the Reorganized Church since childhood. Actually I felt all churches were "headed for the same place." My companion, however, took her religion seriously. After we moved away from our home branch she insisted that we drive one hundred and twenty miles to have our children blessed when they were babies. For fifteen years we held different views on the importance of religion; then we moved back to the community in which we lived when I had been baptized, and I began attending services again. There was some contention in the branch, and at times I felt the urge to leave the church. Often it seemed that the more I tried to serve the Lord, the worse things got.

One night I drove to a near-by town to pick up some medication for chickens; on the way home I rolled our pickup. The patrolman who found me said I was certainly lucky, but the pastor assured me that it wasn't just luck. He said the Lord had a work for me to do. However, I had decided to leave the church.

One night after that I had a vision. I was walking toward the church with a lantern in my hand. The church was illuminated, so I put my lantern on a post and began walking toward it. Then I turned back to get my lantern. As I did so a voice said, "Do not turn back." Again I walked toward the church, and again I returned to get the lantern. Once more the voice said, "Do not turn back, or you will fall into utter darkness." As I looked back I saw a deep, dark hole in the ground. Then I walked quickly toward the church.

I told no one of this experience for some time; then I related it to the pastor. He said he would pray over the matter and let me know at a later time what the vision meant. In about three weeks he told me that his indication was that the church was my light and that I needed no other. This strengthened my faith, and I continued to work in the church, doing whatever I could.

On April 20 of this year I was ordained to the office of teacher in the Mansfield Branch. It is my prayer that I may ever be ready to serve my Lord in whatever way he would have me serve. Please pray for me.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Elder and Mrs. LaMont Ryhal of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary on September 10 by receiving their friends and relatives in the social room of the New Castle (Pennsylvania) church, where Elder Ryhal served as pastor in 1947. He was baptized in the Reorganized Church in December, 1903, ordained a priest in 1921, and an elder in 1933. Mrs. Ryhal, the former Lydia Biddle, was baptized in March, 1909, and until recently was actively engaged in branch work.

like to see the Auditorium and the work that is being done on it?" I was eager to make the trip, so early one morning we left for Independence. We walked all around the Auditorium, and when I thought we were ready to leave, Opal asked me to hold a package for her while she made a telephone call. When she came back she asked if I would like to meet President Israel Smith in his office. I said I would be delighted. I had heard him preach, but I had never been introduced to him. I found him to be the most gracious person I have ever met. He showed us around his office, pointing out the photographs on the walls. Then Hazel asked if we could see the council chamber, and he said yes. He explained to us that this was where the laws governing the church were discussed and decisions were made. It was a beautiful, sacred place.

The church means everything to me. I am thankful for the gospel and the plan of salvation. God has been good to me throughout my life. I love him with all my heart, might, mind, and strength.

None So Small

by Frances P. Reid

Published by Broadman Press

Price $1.50

These pages carry brief but helpful sketches of many commonplace events or situations in the lives of mothers of young children. Each experience is written to enable the reader to recall similar instances or to contemplate those situations yet to come in the lives of "little people." Quite naturally each sketch moves into meditation and sentence prayers to guide mothers to a greater appreciation of God's gift of life and to be joyful as they share in the growth of their children.

These are pages to be read one or two at a time; they include a great variety of subjects such as broken toys, first trip to the hospital, shut-in days, doubled fists, forgotten chores, losing the game, going to camp, and worshipping out-of-doors.

This book would be excellent for mothers of new babies and small children. It is also an appropriate gift for expectant mothers.

TRACT REVIEW

The Great Restoration

This is No. 7 in the Gospel Series, and it is written by Presiding Patriarch Elbert A. Smith. Here is easy reading in an accordion-fold pamphlet of twelve pages—aimed toward the busy person who can spend only a few minutes reading at any one time.

The brief introduction to the New Testament church is followed by a quick look at the Apostasy. Then Brother Smith presents the two possible means of recovery from the Apostasy: Reformation or Restoration. Commenting on John's description in Revelation 12 of the church as a beautiful woman and on the presentation of the church as "the bride of Christ," the author also pictures the "dissolute woman" (church) which took the place of the "bride." Then he raises the question: "Would Jesus want this church [the dissolute woman] reformed to be his bride? Or would he want his original bride restored?"

Following this questioning, he turns to the reader and asks the same question: "If you had married a lovely bride and had gone to a far country and during your absence your wife had been driven away and her place taken by a degraded wanton—when the time came to return, which would you choose, reformation or restoration?" The reader quickly gets the point and chooses restoration.

The remaining pages of the tract describe the desire of the Reformers for a "restoration" and the actual experience of "restoration."

This tract sells for three cents per copy. In quantities of 1,000, individual copies cost one and one half cents.

Why I Belong . . . to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This book is a compilation of 12 reasons why Apostle M. L. Draper is a member of this church.

Each chapter gives a specific belief of the church which contributes to the author's conviction of its divinity.

This book has been a steady seller since its publication early this year. Its continued support by the public is convincing proof of its fine testimony.

And Finally...

AN UNCERTAIN SOUND

Did you ever catch yourself humming a cigarette ad tune without realizing what that haunting melody was saying? Millions are being poured out to get the catchiest tune, and millions are being caught by them. But how does one remember which has the best tobacco, the safest filter, or the mark of distinction? Since all can't be the mildest, safest, or tastiest, the advertisers cancel each other out by extravagant claims.

We have the gospel to advertise. To be effective our testimonies need to be positive, not negative nor competitive. We used to sing "Loyalty unto Christ the trumpet now is sounding." Paul warned us, "For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare for the battle?" Is our testimony sure and certain? There are some in the church who are haunted by the melody of the gospel, but they either don't remember the words or have been confused by malcontents who sound uncertain notes.

FOOTPRINTS

I dislike the idea of dying and leaving a world in which there is so much of good and so many friends who have helped me enjoy the good I have found, but I am not afraid of what the other side holds for me.

I hope that when I do go on to the new phase of living I shall have so lived here that a few "footprints" may be left "in the sands of time" that will not be at once rubbed out.

A New Church School Text

By Dr. Roy A. Cheville

Ten Considerations for Family Living

Here is another thought-provoking text from the pen of Dr. Cheville. He identifies the book as "an exploration by family builders, concerning the kind of families we are setting out to achieve and the characteristics that will identify them as Zionite in quality." The book is excellent for home reading, and a fine study text for any adult church school class. Among the many helpful subjects discussed are included developing personalities, family ties, kinds of family life, family "languages," marks of family success, adventures in family living, family outreach, family changes and crises, things in common, and the place of God in the family group.

An Inspiring Conference

THE LARGEST General Conference since our Centennial has drawn to a close. Every business session and all other scheduled meetings were well attended. Many of them had overflow crowds. However, this Conference will be remembered for its spirit and accomplishments rather than its size.

The week was packed with inspiration and experiences which only those who were here and participated in can fully understand. It is possible to get a portion of the spirit of it by looking at certain features through the eyes of another. By all standards of measurement it was an outstanding Conference.

The reorganization of the First Presidency and Council of Twelve in harmony with the revelations was the high point of interest. That which followed was by no means an anticlimax but complementary. Far-reaching structural changes followed. Before the Conference closed it had accepted new leadership in the Council of Twelve, the Order of Evangelists, the Quorum of High Priests, the Department of Religious Education, the Department of Women, and the health division. Since March 31 there have been four stakes reorganized with new presidencies. Usually changes in leadership cause a period of uncertainty and hesitancy. Offsetting this is the fresh approach to problems, the hope which comes with change, and faith that God has directed in these important adjustments.

The universal reaction of Conference members was that prophetic leadership is again in good hands. A strong leader with vision and courage stands at the head to represent Christ. His presiding was kindly but firm. The business was handled with unhurried but with signal dispatch. Because of the need for organizing the Conference and considering the revelations which affected the Conference leadership, no general resolutions were passed until the Friday morning session. In the four sessions on Friday and Saturday thirty resolutions were handled—passed, laid on the table, or defeated. In addition to this there were thirty-one motions passed affecting personnel—approving nominations, selections, or appointments, and giving tributes for services rendered. Then there were numerous subsidiary and incidental motions handled by the chair which I have not tabulated. President Wallace handled these like a veteran. His decisions came without hesitation and in a voice, augmented by a rejuvenated public address system and splendid acoustics of the new chamber, which left none in doubt as to what was happening. It was an inspiring Conference. The Saints went to their homes assured that the church is on the move. C. B. H.

Report of the First Presidency

To the General Conference

We are happy to bring you this report of our stewardship in the inter-Conference period now closing. This report was anticipated, in some measure, in the interim report which appeared in the Saints' Herald of February 17, 1958.

During the present Conference period members of the Presidency have visited all parts of the church except Australasia and Polynesia. These visits are of major importance in terms of the balanced direction of the entire work of the church, personal contact with local leaders, particularly the high priests of the church, and with younger leaders who are just coming into full strength and promise. We have been well received everywhere and have been especially happy to have part in the dedication of many fine church buildings, erected at great sacrifice, which give us a dignified place in the communities in which they serve.

General Quorums and Councils

Because of the nature of the work of the Council of Twelve, our meetings with the Council as a group have not been frequent, but they have been of great importance. We have also sought to maintain constant contact with the apostles in their individual responsibilities. We have been happy in these associations, and feel that they have been productive of good for the church, particularly in the field of missionary outreach and expansion. While these results are good they are not considered the ultimate in possible accomplishment.

Much of our most important work is done in consultation with members of the quorums and councils and our departmental directors. We work in constant contact with the Presiding Bishopric for whose ministry we have recurring reason to be deeply grateful.

Our contacts with the Council of the Presidents of Seventy, likewise, have been occasional rather than frequent. Our relations have been cordial and, we believe, mutually helpful. We are happy at the prospective increase in the numbers of the Seventy because of ordinations which will be proposed to this Conference. And we hope that the time is not far distant when the quorums of Seventy will be still further augmented.

Our regular monthly meetings with the Standing High Council, with such additional meetings as occasion may require, have been stimulating and helpful. In addition to their function as the highest court of the church, the members of this council advise the Presidency and, on request, the Presiding Bishopric, concerning matters of general church significance. Keen and sustained attention has been given, in particular, to the demands of a sound policy, rooted in the law and revelations of the church, and pervaded by the spirit of forgiveness, in the matter of marriage and divorce and remarriage. Some significant insights have been achieved, and some of the good work of the Council lies behind official pronouncement made by the Presidency in this and other areas.

Less frequently, but wherever occasion has demanded, we have been in touch with the Presiding Evangelist and the work of his office. There is need for evangelical ministry in all the districts and large branches of the church, as provided in the law, and it has been a matter of satisfaction to us to see that this need is being met in many places.

The Quorum of High Priests includes all the high priests in the church except those called to special responsibilities within the high priesthood and who meet separately to discharge these responsibilities. In the nature of things it is difficult for this quorum to function as a unit except at General Conference time. But we have been particularly pleased to note the eagerness of many members of the quorum to have the high priests as a body take their rightful place in the church, and we believe that studies made by committees of the quorum within the past Conference period should result in better understanding and a needed and balanced contribution to the total work and leadership of the church.

Some of our most significant work is done in consultation with the heads of the specialized service departments of the church. We are well served in these fields, and are making significant advances in the leadership available, the understanding of the place of the departments in the functions of the church, and the literature being created and widely distributed. This is reflected in the published reports which will come to you from the departments.

Baptisms

In the calendar year 1956, 5,345 baptisms were reported to the Church Statistician. In 1957 there were 5,704 baptisms reported. This total of 11,050 is again the largest number of baptisms in any two years in our history.

The comments which we made in our report for 1956 are still valid. Our baptismal increase continues to reflect the total strength and vigor of the church. While credit may be given to individuals in specific situations, even there it is the strength and vigor of the church as a whole which make our gains possible. On careful scrutiny of our church life it is apparent that this strength and vigor are not uniformly manifested. If the whole church measured up to the standard set by the areas where our missionary testimony is most effective, then we would have several times our present number of baptisms. If all parts of our best areas could measure up to the most productive parts of these regions, and if this were duplicated throughout the church, our growth would be truly phenomenal, and many of the problems incident to our slow increase would then disappear. While we have had an excellent record in many respects, what has been done can be far surpassed if we respond to the prophetic admonition given ten years ago "that joint responsibility is laid on all. Properly and equally borne, this responsibility will insure success, the consummation will be glorious, and all will share in that glory."

One of the encouraging aspects of our church life during the past two and a half years has been the continuance of the quickening, deepening, and widening of our interest in missions abroad. In part, this is a reflection of the many contacts of our people with the peoples of distant lands. It is more directly influenced by the fact that so many have served and are serving in the armed forces of the United States and of the British Commonwealth of Nations, in the Point Four Program, and in international business ventures. But, more fundamentally, this concern grows out of the ministry of the Spirit which stimulates an awareness of missionary responsibility in those who go to distant places and there see for themselves the need for the good word. This method of expansion is natural. It is healthy because it is not artificially stimulated.

The church has never been able to keep ahead of expanding missionary opportunities. The more vigorous the life of the church, the surer we are that ministers and members having no appointee status will become concerned about missionary endeavors for which they themselves must supply much of the motive power. We have been delighted and encouraged by the baptism of our first converts in India and Pakistan and to note the growth of groups in Okinawa, Korea, and elsewhere in the Pacific. We have rejoiced in the fraternity manifested whenever possible between members of our armed forces in Europe, and in the contribution that has been made by them to the planting of the work in this area. As quickly as we may, the councils of the church expect to build on the foundations thus laid. In this connection we also call attention to the report of the Committee on Ministry to Armed Forces Personnel.

Financial Response

Behind the report of the Presiding Bishopric are many examples of sacrificial devotion in compliance with the law governing temporalities. We express the gratitude of the church for this support, which is especially significant when we reflect that financial support of the General Church is paralleled by that contributed to branches and districts. Yet it is becoming more and more apparent that the work committed to our care cannot be accomplished by the dedication of a tenth of the increase of only part of our people, but out of the glad generosity of many more who give to the Lord out of the joy of their salvation. The quickening of this response for its own sake, with financial returns an important resultant and means of further service, is the concern of the spiritual authorities of the stakes and districts and branches, as well as of the bishop's agents and solicitors.

It is out of the willing co-operation of all that our gains are achieved. We must not lose sight of the benefits accruing to an individual who gives, not out of a sense of duty or obligation but out of a fullness of heart and concern that the will of the Master shall be done. It is out of this kind of sacrificial giving that we get some of our best results.

Preaching and Teaching Ministries

Our hope of salvation centers in the wisdom and love of Almighty God, in the redemption offered through his Son, and in the enlightening and empowering ministry of his Holy Spirit. These point to and guarantee the coming of his kingdom. Our preaching and teaching ministry should center here. Our presentation of the principles of the gospel should find its foundation here. In these difficult times, when so many men's hearts are failing them for fear, our only sound foundation for hope is in God himself, but in him we have every reason for the most glorious hope. Since the times are so portentous, it seems to us to be especially important that those who would lead our people should seek the release of power through study and mutual converse and meditation, but that, having done this, they should heed the admonition of the Apostle Paul to preach and teach this saving word. We believe that the Spirit will approve, commend, and give direction and power to such well-founded guidance.

Ethical Standards

We find ourselves concerned about the ethical standards of our people. As a general rule those who are active in the work of the church are more than usually honest, chaste, and disciplined. But our stewardship demands more than this. Our personal lives, and our relations with others, should rise out of our love and wisdom and self-sacrifice. This is true in every relationship. It is perhaps most obviously true in our home life.

We have reason to deplore the extent to which the current standards in relation to divorce and remarriage are followed by our people. We have been seeking to make constructive approaches to this problem, which will be brought before the Conference by a resolution proposed from the San Francisco Bay District. But it should be recognized that no negative attack will be widely successful; no barriers and denunciations will be of significant creative worth. The solution of the problems in this area, as of all our major problems, lies in the total ministry of the church and especially in our ministry to our children and young people. It is on this foundation that we must give our specific ministries in crucial situations.

Reunions, Camps, Retreats

Our reunions continue to be a major source of spiritual strength. The tremendous investments in reunion grounds are prohibitive where the use of such facilities is only occasional. We are therefore happy in the phenomenal growth of camping, and in the slower but still significant growth of priesthood and leadership retreats. Each of these activities, usually centering in what we know as "reunion grounds," justifies itself. These additional activities are coming to be taken into account as improvements are made on reunion sites, and this is all to the good.

A few years ago we were somewhat disturbed since so much of the camping leadership was provided from the appointee ranks, thus distracting the brethren concerned for extended periods from other important church ministries. This trend has now been changed, and we are developing a splendid group of self-sustaining leaders, men and women of devotion and growing experience, who are making a rich contribution through camp work. We call attention to the excellent report of Elder F. Carl Mesle in this connection.

Organizations for Good

Throughout the church there is a growing concern for the visible evidence of the establishment of the kingdom. We welcome this. It is important to note in this connection that practice in kingdom building need not wait for further study or organization. The fulfillment under God of our community responsibilities, the practice of our business and professions with primary regard for the welfare of the persons involved, the meeting of the minds of our people as well as their physical gathering together, the spiritual and intellectual and cultural enrichment of our home life, and—sustaining all these—the deepening of our private and public worship are all of major and immediate importance. This includes a wholesome respect for the dignity of our houses of worship and the sincere adherence to the principles of sacred worship. The kingdom will not be built by people of good intent who come together to plan the good life, but who have no informed experience of the demands and challenges and frustration of life as it is now known. Study and advance must begin from where we are. Seemingly the small gains, if sound and widely shared, are of great importance; and we are grateful to report that such advances are being made. We intend to share more fully from time to time reports on specific gains which go to make up the total gain. In this general connection we call attention to the reports submitted to the Conference by business and professional associations of members of the church, and we commend these associations to those interested in these fields of service. Of already proved value is the work of the Central Development Association, the Farm Management Committee, and others.

Higher Education in the Church

There is a rightful and growing concern throughout the church in the matter of education. Many members of the church are taking advantage of local opportunities for adult education to broaden their outlook, improve their skill, prepare for greater responsibility and, perhaps most frequently, to qualify more fully for leadership in church affairs. We have been happy to give encouragement to such education in many widely separated places.

The School of the Restoration, authorized by General Conference in 1956 and opened in June of that year, is now functioning helpfully. Its directing personnel and facilities need to be augmented as experience, finances, and available ministry make possible. Those responsible for preordination training, which is locally determined and directed, will do well to take advantage of the courses offered by the School and of the counsel of Brother Updike. Appointee orientation and education assemblies conducted at the School have been successful and should be continued and enlarged.

Of special concern to us has been the matter of ministry to college people which has been under the direction of an able committee with Elder L. O. Brockway as committee chairman and Elder F. Carl Mesle as secretary. A report of the work of this committee will be presented at the Conference.

Of further major concern has been the necessity for co-ordinating the various endeavors of the church in the field of higher education, and planning these co-ordinated endeavors with informed concern for the problems and opportunities growing out of population changes, increased concern for education, the changing economic picture, the leadership needs of the church, the location of our church membership, the competing demands on the church dollar, and similar matters. Formation of a committee on higher education, whose function will be to advise the General Church officers concerned in this important field, was completed shortly before the death of President Israel A. Smith. We were particularly happy that each of the fourteen members of the committee requested to serve responded readily and favorably. But for the death of President Smith meetings of this committee would have been held already. They are planned to begin shortly after the close of this Conference. We have sought to emphasize the importance we attach to the work of this committee by arranging that one of our own number, President Edwards, shall preside with Dr. E. J. Gleazer as co-chairman. The other members of the committee are Elder G. Leslie DeLapp, Elder Maurice L. Draper, Elder C. A. Cole, Elder Earl T. Higdon, Dr. L. O. Brockway, Dr. Ronald G. Smith, Dr. Robert L. Brackenbury, Dr. W. E. Gould, Dr. Velma Ruch, Elder C. D. Neff, Elder Chas. Glen E. Downing, and Dr. Malcolm Ritchie.

The Auditorium

We all rejoice in the completion of the Auditorium to this present point. It is a matter of deep concern to us that circumstances did not permit the dedication services for the Conference Chamber to be fully held during the General Conference. It was because we recognized that the Auditorium belongs to the entire church, and that the faithful Saints in the most distant outposts have a rightful concern here, that we arranged for prayers of dedication to be offered during the three Communion services held at this Conference. Now that this has been accomplished, the remaining work on the Auditorium still beckons all of us. Specific proposals will come to the Conference from the responsible officers of the church covering what still remains to be done and to these we invite the careful and sacrificial attention of the Saints. It is expected that when the building is completed, and is offered to our heavenly Father in all its parts, we shall have a period of dedication and rejoicing in which the whole church will join.

Thanks

The present members of the quorum have been especially appreciative of the support given them in the quorums and councils of the church, and in the church as a whole, in the period ensuing since the death of President Israel A. Smith. We are especially thankful that the Saints are approaching the Conference with dignity and high confidence in the providences of God. We have been grateful for the blessings which have been ours, and the divine direction of which we have been conscious as we have sought to serve you.

Your servants in Christ,

Report of the Council of Twelve

To the First Presidency and General Conference

Under my assignment of the late General Conference as Representative of the First Presidency, I have held myself available for the performance of such work.

My time has been chiefly occupied with routine work in the office of the Twelve, some preaching, attendance at reunions, and archaeological study in relation to the Book of Mormon.

Where God and man labor together the divine and human elements are ever present. Great is the loss where discrimination is so faulty as to lead to the obscuring of what is divine by what is human. Where the human element is properly appraised and what is divine is perceived and magnified there comes assurance of the triumph of God's work and the certainty of immortality and eternal life.

Unwavering is my faith in the glorious consummation of God's work, including the redemption of Zion.

PAUL M. HANSON

East Central States Mission

I herewith set forth a few salient facts concerning activities in the area in which I have been given responsibility during the recent inter-Conference period.

During the two and one-half years which it has been my privilege and pleasure to serve the church and the Saints in this territory, I have found joy in working with one of the finest groups of appointee personnel it has ever been my good fortune to serve with. Likewise, the men of the local priesthood in almost all places have exercised themselves under a spirit of fine co-operation which has been a joy to experience.

The large body of active Saints in this area have been so very helpful that I must speak a word of commendation for their excellent assistance in and through the departments as well as in the more humble services that many Saints render in keeping the church in motion as a productive organization.

The East Central States Mission has had its share of success in the missionary and financial programs of the General Church, which has helped to move the body of Christ forward in a period of more than ordinary achievement. This general accomplishment is evidenced in the upward trend of the missionary graph as depicted in a recent issue of the Saints' Herald, and in the success attending the collection of funds beyond the two million-dollar mark for the church in general; and further, in the completion of the General Conference Chamber in which we are presently privileged to meet for this Conference period.

Our building programs often depict the character of consecration and progress which stimulates our forward movement. In keeping with this thought may we report the following:

New churches built in our area in the inter-Conference period are located at Marion, Illinois; Salem, Illinois; Joppa, Illinois; Dowagiac, Michigan; and other buildings purchased for our worship needs are at Kankakee, Illinois; LaCrosse, Wisconsin; Eau Claire, Wisconsin; Kirkwood, Missouri; and Mountain View, Missouri.

Ten active programs for church building within the next two years are taking shape in Madison, Wisconsin; Lancaster, Wisconsin; Springfield, Illinois; Ottawa, Illinois; East St. Louis, Illinois; St. Louis, Missouri; Fairfield, Illinois; South Bend, Indiana; Rockford, Illinois; and Springerton, Illinois.

For these activities we commend the Saints concerned and look forward with hope and assurance to many congregations better housed for worship and service.

I am sure that I speak the mind of all the workers in our eleven districts when I express appreciation to the First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric for the excellent co-operation which they have given us in every instance where such co-operation has been sought and was found to be essential to the furtherance of the cause of the kingdom in our particular phase of the general responsibility.

My thanks, moreover, go to the men in official capacity, both the self-supporting and appointee ministry in our territory. I would not dare to attempt making a complete list of all those who have extended themselves in self-effacing service for fear some one or more deserving persons inadvertently might go unmentioned. However, I do wish to name Brother Russell F. Ralston, one of the Seven Presidents of Seventy. His appointment to our territory was very greatly welcomed. He has been associated with us in the administration of the area, in which position his services have been without stint. We want you to know of his excellent service in this connection. I wish we might have the space to mention all who have rendered their consecrated help in more limited areas, speaking now of the geographical expanse covered.

It is our hope that the Spirit of God will continue with his church throughout the years to come. With the Saints throughout the world, we have mourned the passing of our beloved Brother Israel, and we shall hope and pray that through his successor in office and those who shall be associated with him in the Presidency will come the spirit of the prophets to guide God's church to its ultimate success in its destiny of righteousness. Of this we have no doubt. For we are assured that as God has been with those who have preceded in leadership, so he will be with those who succeed to such responsibility. Such shall be our prayer and our trust.

D. T. WILLIAMS

Southern Mission

The Southern Mission consists of six districts; namely, Southern Indiana, Memphis, Arkansas-Louisiana, Mobile, Pensacola, and Alabama, and unorganized areas in Georgia, North and South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana. In these unorganized areas we have a few branches and a number of missions. In southern Florida we now have a membership in excess of seven hundred, not counting the winter visitors from the North. While we have a large enough membership to justify a district organization, we have preferred to wait until we could organize two districts in Lower Florida, one to be called the Southern Florida District, and the other Central Florida District. In this area the church is growing rapidly, not only by baptisms, but by the influx of members from other states due to the creation of new industries and also the desire, upon the part of some, to retire in that section of the United States.

The work in the South has been characterized this inter-Conference period in the growth that is revealed in our numerical increase due to effective missionary programs. In several districts we have set a record for baptismal increase.

Growth has also been evident in the development of many fine men as they have labored co-operatively in their priesthood responsibilities with the Conference appointees. Likewise, we have been encouraged with the leadership of the women in the music, and all activities of the department of women.

There also have been indications of growth in our building program. We have improved a number of our houses of worship and have added new church edifices in such places as Birmingham, Alabama; Orlando, Braidenton, and Fort Lauderdale, Florida. Several other buildings are now in the planning stage and should be erected in the not too distant future.

An increased interest in the financial law has also been shown in this mission. The special Stewardship Emphasis Program under the direction of the Presiding Bishopric is bringing some excellent results. We are pleased, also, to report that the branches and districts are making greater provision, financially, to sustain the appointees, thus relieving the General Church of some of the responsibility it formerly carried in these matters.

We have experienced four very successful reunions. Three of these reunions are conducted on grounds that are rented by our people for these gatherings. However, we do have our own reunion property in Brewton, Alabama, and the annual reunion is sponsored by three districts, Mobile, Pensacola, and Alabama. During the past two years considerable effort, as well as a considerable amount of money, has made these grounds more beautiful and better equipped for reunion purposes. New buildings, which added much to the comfort of our people, have been erected during this period.

I have had excellent co-operation upon the part of the Conference appointees, together with the local men in all of my work. As a consequence, the spiritual and intellectual growth of our membership is evident in all of our district and regional activities. The prospects for the work of the church in the South have never been brighter.

E. J. GLEAZER

European Mission

During the first twenty months of the inter-Conference period I was assigned to the Eastern States Mission. The time was spent in reunion work, district conferences, series of meetings, and priesthood institutes, on a regional basis. During the last year, 1957, there was an appreciable increase in the number of baptisms in the field.

From January 1, 1958, I was assigned to Europe and since that time have been responsible for that field. In Scandinavia we have two missionary families who are doing excellent work in Norway, the Richard D. Andersen family and the Frederick C. Banta family. In Germany, Brother R. Vern Webb continues to give excellent leadership, and in the East, Alfred Urban represents the church very ably indeed. In Holland a new mission headquarters building is nearing completion. Bishop A. D. Compier is giving fine leadership in this venture and also in Continental Europe, teaching and administering the law governing temporalities. Elder William F. Horn and family are active in Rotterdam and Friesland, he presiding over the mission and doing missionary work. In England, Brother Frank A. Fry presides, and Brethren Eric Rowe and Thomas E. Worth work with him endeavoring to build up the work.

Significant regional gatherings have been held in Oslo, Norway; Hannover, Germany; Zwaagwesteinde, Holland; Birmingham and Enfield, England. In July a Servicemen's Retreat was held at Berchtesgaden, in southern Germany, and was attended by about thirty personnel.

Our needs in Europe are for more missionaries and for literature in the various languages. The Joint Council have been apprised of these needs and they are under consideration at the present time.

ARTHUR A. OAKMAN

Central States Mission

During the past two years the activities and development of the work in the Central States Mission give reason for encouragement in the cause of the kingdom. A statistical summary is not available at the time of the preparation of this report, but reference can be made to trends and unusual achievements.

Baptismal gains continue to hold at levels of recent years. In some instances they have exceeded 4 per cent for stake and district figures, and in a few cases where congregational and branch figures are in there have been gains of 10 per cent and better. We continue to be challenged, however, by the evangelistic responsibility inherent in branches, districts, and stakes. In the Center Stake, at the heart of Zion, we find more opportunities for evangelism than we have people who are willing and qualified to serve. This is true in every stake and district of the mission.

New church buildings continue to be erected at a record-breaking pace. In some cases these involve relocations; in others they are replacements or enlargements or completions of building projects at locations already occupied. In every case our work has been strengthened in the area of the new building.

Reunion grounds developments include the improvement of facilities at Lake Doniphan, which services Center and Kansas City Stakes; at Mount Zion Park near Odessa in Central Missouri Stake; at the park for Far West Stake near Stewartsville; at Lakehurst, near Maquoketa, Iowa, and serving Waterloo-Clinton, Black Hawk and Galesburg Districts; and at Guthrie Grove, near Guthrie Center, Iowa, which serves Northwest Iowa and Southwest Iowa Districts and Des Moines District. At both Lakehurst and Guthrie Grove debt payment programs are underway. It is hoped that by the end of the year the Lakehurst property will be entirely free of debt.

Several branches are in special need of spiritual revival. In some cases our best hope for ministry probably lies in the relocation of our meeting places, and in others union with near-by congregations is desirable. But in most instances we need to expand and multiply our points of witness. If we can do this with old branches which have been weakened over the years we shall do so. In such a program they will be strengthened and the work will grow. Where this is not possible, we are giving ministry as circumstances allow, while promising new openings are created and other centers of witness are strengthened.

The area of greatest challenge is the Missionary Development Area of north and central Missouri. This huge area needs resources of local leadership, appointee man power, and material assets. We are pleased with the development of the Liahona House, student center and chapel, in Columbia, Missouri. This project continues to need supervision, and appointee ministry is involved to some extent. Existing branches in the area vary from those which are branches in name only to relatively strong and growing branches in larger centers. More appointee ministry in this area is a vital necessity if we are to realize our possibilities there.

The Central States Mission has a long list of appointee ministers, assigned to the five central stakes and the eight districts and missionary area making up the mission. But the membership to be served and the missionary opportunities to be developed are such as to require even more assistance if possible. Especially is it necessary for the membership and standing ministry to assume increasingly the responsibility for both pastoral and missionary ministry if the needs here and abroad are to be met.

M. L. DRAPER

Southeast Texas, Northeast Texas, Southwest Texas, French Polynesia and Latin-American Mission

Encouraging progress is being made in this area of church activity.

Northeast Texas has grown to the point where it was separated from the former Central Texas District. High Priest Earl M. Moore has been elected district president, and John Midgorden sustained as bishop's agent. The mission at Greggton (Longview area) is progressing nicely and has purchased land upon which it is to construct a church. The mission at Waco is building now and will soon have its new church completed. Marlin has completed a new educational wing to its church plant. The Dallas Saints are now worshipping in their new sanctuary and also have group meetings in the Oak Cliff area. John T. Puckett is the area appointee missionary. Sixty were baptized in 1957.

Southeast Texas (part of the former Central Texas District) selected Jack R. Evans for its district president, and H. Roy Vandell was approved as the bishop's agent. Metropolitan Houston has shown a steady growth, and now has three branches, Houston Heights, Pasadena, and Bellaire, each housed in a fine church and with an expanding program. Jack Evans is also the General Church Appointee for the area. The work has grown nicely in the Sabine Bay area under the able leadership of Elder Henry Porter. A mission has also been established in Victoria, and the potential is very great there. Sixty were baptized in the Central District in 1957.

Southwest Texas. From one branch in San Antonio the work has expanded to three congregations. The Capital Avenue mission has been organized into a branch, and has a fine attendance under very devoted and capable leadership. The Southwest mission (of the Rockwood Branch) has also grown nicely, and now has purchased land where it soon will build its new church, and one of these days merit branch organization. The work at Corpus Christi is growing under the leadership of Wilbur B. Graybill, and they soon should be located in their own church.

These three districts unite in their reunion and youth camp activities and hold these gatherings at their fine conference grounds a few miles west of Bandera, Texas.

Latin-American Mission. The headquarters for this mission is maintained on the Rio Grande border at Weslaco, Texas. Two missionaries, Clair Weldon and Robert Turner, have been working with the Spanish-speaking people on the border, and co-ordinate their work with the membership and pastor of the Weslaco Branch of the Southwest Texas District. This is a very difficult mission, but progress is being made, and 70 Spanish-speaking people have been baptized in recent years with 26 of these baptisms so far in 1958. One of their number, Pedro Cardona, has been ordained to the office of priest. Missionary Robert Fishburn will serve the area both in the capacity as administrative leader and as a member of the Latin-American missionary team of two.

We have members in many of the Spanish-speaking countries south of the United States border, and hope someday to have more organized activity there. Members now reside in Mexico, Honduras, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Venezuela, Costa Rica, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Nicaragua, Panama Canal Zone, and Netherlands Antilles. Eight are engaged in teaching in Cali, Colombia. Members of our church who may be traveling in these Latin-American countries (Brazilians speak Portuguese), please contact Apostle Charles R. Hield, at the Auditorium, as you may be of great help to our members and interested friends of the church in the Latin-American area.

The Book of Mormon in Spanish has been translated completely and an initial copy typed. Now refinements are being made, and it is hoped that the Book of Mormon in Spanish can be published within the next Conference period.

French Oceania. Church work is being carried on upon twenty-nine of the islands of the South Pacific. The missionaries have been F. Edward Butterworth (now back in America), Allen J. Breckenridge, David Kaleikau, and Alan D. Tyree. Sixty-nine were baptized in 1957, and through June, 1958, there have been fifty-three baptized. The Apostle made a trip there this year during May, June, and July, and attended district conferences at Tiputa on the Island of Rangiroa, at Ahe, and at Papeete. New buildings were dedicated at the first two of these places. Starting this fall the new large headquarters church and offices will be built at Papeete, Tahiti. We have about 2,400 members in the South Sea Islands, and about 220 members of the priesthood. Some fine men are serving as branch and district presidents. Much remains to be done, but the future is encouraging.

We wish particularly to express deep appreciation for the devotion, consecration and co-operation of the district and branch officers, the many local faithful priesthood members, as well as the Saints of the various congregations, including the women's departments, youth, music leaders, and so forth. It is only with their help that progress can be reported.

CHARLES R. HIELD

South Central States Mission

During the inter-Conference period the church has progressed in the South Central States Mission. Baptisms have averaged slightly under fifty a month.

Reunions in the area were held at Camp Fellowship, near Wichita, Kansas; Racine, Missouri; Wilburton, Oklahoma; Palmer Lake, Colorado; and Prescott, Arizona. Youth and children's attendance were maintained at previous levels, but adult attendance was down slightly.

Youth camps were held at Pawhuska and Wilburton in Oklahoma; Palmer Lake, Colorado; Racine, Missouri; and near Payson, Arizona. Attendance at these camps increased this year. Over five hundred of the area's youth of camp age were in regular attendance.

Several missions have been opened and five branches organized. Consistent and continued efforts have been put forth on remodeling present structures and purchasing and building houses of worship. Indebtedness on houses of worship has been reduced. The Ozark reunion grounds near Racine, Missouri, has eliminated its indebtedness; and the reunion grounds at Palmer Lake, Colorado, has added one small structure and purchased some small adjacent plots of ground without incurring debt.

General Church tithes and offerings have been consistent with past performances.

Such progress as we report is premised upon the diligent and co-operative efforts of local and appointee personnel.

The assignment of Brother Harry Doty, of the Presidents of Seventy, as an assistant to me in this area has been most helpful in meeting administrative needs and has been appreciated by workers and membership.

D. BLAIR JENSEN

Pacific Northwest, the Prairie Provinces and Hawaii

This territory is composed of four rather natural divisions—the area west of the Rocky Mountains, the area east of the Rocky Mountains, the Prairie Provinces of Canada, and Hawaii. The area west of the Rocky Mountains includes British Columbia in Canada, and in the United States, Washington, Oregon, and three counties in northern California. The eastern area includes the Boise and Western Montana Districts, Unorganized Wyoming, Northern Plains District, and Unorganized North and South Dakota. The Prairie Provinces include Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. Hawaii includes the Territory of Hawaii.

Supervising such an extensive field is a very challenging responsibility, but it has been a rewarding experience. There are approximately 13,000 church members in this field. Here, as elsewhere, we find fine loyalty and devotion to the church and its cause. There is a growing understanding of the purposes of the church accompanied by an increased desire to see our work expanded. The result is in all places an increase of activity. This is reflected in a steady increase of membership and very much improved facilities with which to work.

Our church building situation is constantly improving with the purchasing of several church buildings, the building of new churches and doing major alterations on churches already constructed. In this inter-Conference period one new church has been built at Kaneohe, Hawaii. Two have been built in the Prairie Provinces. Ten have been built or purchased in the area west of the Rocky Mountains. Seven have been built or purchased in the area described as east of the Rocky Mountains. Some of those being built are still in the process of construction, but all except one are close to completion. About seven churches have received major alterations or improvements.

In the whole field there are unlimited opportunities for missionary work. A steady increase by baptisms is maintained. Four branches have been organized since last General Conference. A number of new missions have been commenced as well as several groups of church members organized for ministry and expansion.

The standing ministry has been doing excellent work, both in helping locally and in caring for missionary expansion opportunities. These have been supported and supervised by a competent staff of appointee ministers. The appointee ministry is presently composed of two High Priests, two Bishops—one full time and one part time—five Seventies, two Presidents of Seventy, and six Missionary Elders. All of the six missionary elders and one high priest have commenced their full-time work under their present assignments. I am happy to report that all of these show excellent progress in their ministry since going under appointment.

The appointees are divided in the field as follows: Hawaii—3, Prairie Provinces—2, with a part-time bishop, Eastern Area—4, Western Area—9. The assignments of man power are on the basis of membership needs and missionary opportunities.

There are ten reunions and eleven youth camps held in the area. Two promising reunion camp sites have been acquired during the last year. These are for the districts of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Attention is being given to our camp site needs in other parts of the field, both as to those already owned by the church and areas needing camp sites of their own.

A number of regional gatherings help to serve the educational needs of our people in the interests of progress and saintly growth. A military personnel and college student conference was held during the past year at the Lewis River campgrounds.

Annual inter-Provincial priesthood institutes for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta are being held. These have done much toward a broader priesthood training. Likewise, and with equal effect, annual regional institutes are held for the British Columbia, Seattle, and Spokane Districts, and for the Southern Oregon, and Columbia River Districts. Priesthood and departmental institutes are held in all other districts and in Unorganized Wyoming. This last mentioned area is making excellent progress toward the forming of a new district eventually.

We appreciate the fine co-operation which has been given by all leaders and workers in the area; also the help of General Church leaders and departmental workers has been very beneficial.

PERCY E. FARROW

Great Lakes Mission

During the past two years there have been many indications of continued growth throughout the branches of the various districts and the Detroit International Stake of this area. In Michigan and Ontario there are 14 districts, one stake and the unorganized area of Eastern Ontario.

Baptisms for the complete area during the past two-year period have ranged from nine hundred to one thousand per year. Definite advancements were registered in individual stewardship participation with many members making an accounting for the first time. Financial returns registered tremendous increases during this period.

The over-all spirit in this mission is healthy. There is a growing army of missionary representatives who are telling the story of the Restoration to their many friends.

Outstanding among the features of the church is the unique summer program which is offered. There are five reunion grounds owned by the church at which places we have conducted six reunions and camps for children—junior boys, junior girls, junior boys and girls co-educational, and Zion's League ages. In addition there are three Aaronic institutes held annually—two in Michigan and one in Ontario and a mission-wide elders' institute at Lexington, Michigan. At the Aaronic institutes there are 450 members in attendance and 300 elders annually. In addition to these activities we conduct Labor Day week-end activities for Zion's League, an annual September young-adult week end at various places in the mission, and a Thanksgiving week end for the young people of Ontario at the Port Elgin reunion grounds. This type of summer program has been wholeheartedly accepted and has made it possible for us to baptize a growing number of young people. All of our reunion grounds have been improved during the past two years with additional buildings or plans that have been approved to provide additional facilities. We feel that our summer program is unique.

In the Province of Ontario, we have had a reorganization of districts so that now there are six districts known as the Chatham, Owen Sound, London, Niagara, Toronto-Metropolitan, and Northern Ontario Districts. In addition there is the Eastern Ontario Unorganized Territory which includes the branch of Ottawa with its splendid Norman architectural church. This national creation of a Canadian church building at Ottawa is very attractive, and under the direction of Elder Calvin Carpenter many members from all Canada have received ministry. Our greatest progress in Ontario has been in the Toronto area where our district now consists of seven city branches and the branch of Cameron. We look for continued progress in the branches at this fastest growing city in the world.

Northern Ontario District, which is far flung geographically, offers to the church a golden opportunity for achievement. With the splendid missionary assistance of Elder John Bradley we expect to be making history. Already on Manitoulin Island at the Slash Branch and at Monetville, there is a forward-moving interest with a number of new baptisms. With the purchase of new churches and considerable remodeling, we look for gains from this area.

An amalgamation of two branches in the Chatham District and the opening of a new mission in the Chatham Branch and the renewal of Sunday night services have been signs of new life in this area. In the London District improvements to our church facilities have been made with missionary work being conducted at Tobermory. A newly formed district called Niagara is looking forward to new churches to be built at Hamilton and Brantford.

The appointees in the Province, namely: Brethren H. P. Grundy, J. C. Stuart, A. O. Crownover, C. R. Kornman, F. E. Butterworth, P. M. Mair, E. E. Hanton, C. M. Carpenter, and John Bradley have all had their participation in the forwarding of the church of our Lord in Ontario, ably assisted by the many men of the standing ministry. Evangelist E. Y. Hunker has also rendered splendid ministry in Ontario in his brief time in this area.

www.LatterDayTruth.org

The state of Michigan, exclusive of the southern tier of counties, is divided into eight districts plus the Detroit International Stake. This area has two thirds of the membership of the Great Lakes Mission and also of the appointee ministry. The activities of the stake, which includes five congregations in Essex County, Ontario, leads our advancement in Michigan. Under the ministry of Stake President W. B. McClain, Bishop O. K. Byrn, and missionary elders Lyman Edwards and Glenn Johnston, very notable gains have been registered. The building program of new churches continues with rapidity and some two hundred baptisms are recorded each year. The eight districts in the rest of the state of Michigan have been able to hold their own with several of them making notable progress. The Upper Michigan District, our smallest, has noted definite signs of increased activity in the Sault, Ontario, Branch where a mission has been opened, and in the mission at Spanish, Ontario. Cottage meetings have been held at Escanaba, Michigan, which have produced new members. 1958 will be the best baptismal year of this district. In Northern Michigan District during the past two years, we have registered an average of 70 baptisms or 65 per cent increase over the previous three years. Increased activity has been noted in the larger centers, Traverse City, Alpena, and Cheboygan.

Central Michigan District, which led all the districts in the domestic field with a baptismal gain of 8.13 per cent, continues to be sparked by well-organized missionary endeavor. This district consists of county-seat branches and small-town branches with the exception of Cadillac, a larger center which shows definite signs of stability.

Eastern Michigan District likewise has had a quickening in baptismal achievement. Most of these branches are in small towns except the county-seat units. Our Bad Axe mission in a county-seat town appeared to have served its purpose but now has been rejuvenated. The outstanding achievement in this district is reported at Juniata where we now have a flourishing congregation in a small community with a church school averaging 53, and 25 baptisms during the year. In the other four districts we have largely a metropolitan operation centering in the following cities: Flint, Port Huron, Saginaw, Bay City, Midland, Lansing, and Grand Rapids.

In all of these cities there are definite indications of growth which speak well for the Church of Jesus Christ in the state of Michigan. In addition to the help from those under appointment, Brethren L. E. Landsberg, R. M. Russell,

J. C. Phillips, A. W. Sheehy, M. P. Guthrie, M. Harford, J. A. Pray, L. E. Miller, and C. R. Mundorff, we have received able ministry given by many devoted district presidents and other officers in the standing ministry. Among the brethren who have assumed a major role as district presidents in the advancement of the church and who are members of the standing ministry are Elders A. J. Dexter, William Archer, Jay Doty, Rex Stowe, and Harvey Wagg.

The gospel was first preached in Michigan a long time ago. A transition from rural activity to urban churches has been completed and we rejoice in the strength of our organization in this area which is only second numerically to the state of Missouri.

The three foremost centers for the church in the Great Lakes Mission appear to be the Detroit area; Toronto, Ontario; and Lansing, Michigan. In these areas we have adequate organization to insure the church of rapid strides in the future.

We commend to you the brethren of the Order of Bishops who have assignments in the Great Lakes Mission: L. E. Landsberg, O. K. Byrn, H. P. Grundy, and J. A. Cadwell. These brethren have assumed stewardship and economic responsibilities and have capably assisted in the forwarding of the church in the Great Lakes Mission.

D. O. CHESWORTH

Southwest States Mission and Alaska

We report steady progress during the inter-Conference period. Symptomatic of progress has been the construction or purchase of the following houses of worship:

Anaheim, Arcade, Barstow, Fresno, Lennox, Pacific Beach, San Jose, Santa Rosa, Southwest Los Angeles, Temple City, Upland, and Ventura.

Many building sites have been purchased. Remodeling, with significant additions to church facilities, is taking place in several branches, and most extensively at Sacramento.

Reunion and camp properties have witnessed exceptional development with new housing at Happy Valley Conference Grounds, Santa Cruz, California, and a new dining and fellowship hall, camp manager's residence, and Olympic-size swimming pool at Buckhorn Camp, Idyllwild, California. The Lake Louise property in Alaska is being cleared. A rustic tabernacle has been erected.

Reunion and camp attendance has grown during the period. During the summer, 1958, more than six hundred children and youth have been in attendance at camps in southern California alone. This does not include those who attended reunions of Los Angeles Stake and Southern California District. At two of the children's camps the nonmember attendance was in excess of 50 per cent. There have been successful experiments in primitive camping. A new reunion was inaugurated in 1958 for the Utah-Southeast Idaho District.

Baptismal gains are symptomatic also, revealing enthusiasm and spiritual strength. The mission baptismal percentage for 1957 was 4.26 per cent. Los Angeles Stake has a 4.45 per cent average gain for the last five years. Provo, Utah, is currently leading the entire mission in percentage gains. Central California and Southern California Districts more than doubled their 1956 baptisms during 1957.

For some reason, difficult to assess, the Southwest States Mission has not been as far to the fore in percentage of contributors and statement filers as would seem desirable. However, in 1958 remarkable gains are being made.

A major contributing factor to such significant progress as is being registered in the mission is the development of a workable and continuous program of home ministry. Results have been revealed in three areas at least: attendance, evangelism, and contributors and statement filers. Wayne Updike helped to inaugurate the method. We can document a direct correlation between the percentage of priesthood involved in home ministry and the health of branches. In Los Angeles Stake priesthood visiting is supplemented by the efforts of the youth in addition to the women.

Opportunities for growth have come more rapidly than we could develop sufficient leadership. In some areas it seemed we were over extended, but leadership is developing, and there are many evidences of spiritual growth. We report progress, not dramatic, but steady.

REED M. HOLMES

Australasian Mission

My field of labor for the Conference period of 1956 to midyear of 1958 was in the Australasian Mission, and I am happy to report a good two years. Progress was made in many ways, due to the fine work and co-operation of all the appointees, the priesthood, and membership of the mission.

During these two years, three new church buildings have been completed and are now in use. These are located at Hughesdale, Victoria; Auckland, New Zealand; and Kingsgrove, New South Wales. These buildings are all a credit to the church and should serve their respective congregations for many years. Another new church is well under way, and is scheduled to be completed the latter part of this year. This is the Norwood Branch in Adelaide, South Australia. The following branches had already purchased their church land and are busy raising funds toward the building of the churches: Ryde, in Sydney, Hayhurst in Adelaide, and Bulahdelah, New South Wales. The following have recently purchased very fine sites: Perth in western Australia, and the Windsor Branch in Brisbane, Queensland.

Another fine development has been the opening of two new reunions, making four in all. The two new ones are at Huia Vale, close to Auckland, New Zealand, and at Tulabudgera for the Southern Queensland-Northern New South Wales area. Successful youth and children's camps are being held regularly in the Sydney, Victoria, and Hunter-Manning Districts, also in the South Queensland area, Adelaide, South Australia, and in New Zealand, also various institutes for women and for priesthood.

The mission has done very well in response to the financial law. Considering the fact that about one third of the total membership live in isolation, the response is exceptionally good.

Baptisms have kept up well, with just a little under 100 for 1956 and a little over 100 for 1957. 1958 has been coming along well, with the likelihood it will surpass 1957.

The work in New Zealand has evidenced a fine upward trend, under the ministry of Seventies Floyd Burdekin and Les Gardner. The baptismal rate there has been very good, the best, I believe, in the history of the work in New Zealand, and the same is true in regard to financial law observance.

They held their first reunion at Huia Vale, a beautiful site, in December, 1956, having an attendance of over 50. In December, 1957, the attendance went up to over 90, and the prospects are that it will be well over the hundred mark this December. They have made some very fine developments on their grounds, and by the time of the next reunion much better facilities will be available.

The other reunions continue to be of a high order. There was over one fourth of the total church membership in attendance at the 1956, 1957 reunions, which is a very fine showing.

One branch was disorganized, the Teralba Branch. It is now functioning as a group under the supervision of the Hunter-Manning District.

When the new church building for the Drummoyne Branch was designed, space for the location of the mission headquarters was arranged for in conjunction with it. The completed structure is a very beautiful and adequate building, providing very well for both the Drummoyne Branch and the mission headquarters, all of which was a vast improvement for both.

The following are the General Church appointees serving in the Australasian Mission: Bishop D. A. Alberts; High Priests Charles A. Davies, religious education and priesthood education director and minister at large, and managing editor of The Standard; Alan Frater, president of Victoria District; Sydney Jacka, area supervisor, South Queensland area; A. R. Gunning, president of Sydney District; Geoffrey Spencer, president of Hunter-Manning District; Seventies Floyd Potter, Victoria and Sydney Districts, Missionary; Floyd Burdekin, in charge, New Zealand; Les Gardner, New Zealand, Missionary; Jack Imrie, South Australia and West Australia, assistant to mission president. All of these brethren are giving a very fine ministry in their respective fields.

The Australasian Mission has made fine progress during the past ten years, the four years of my first assignment, 1948-1952, the four years of Apostle Draper's ministry, and the last two years that I labored there, 1956-1958. As was stated before, this progress has been made possible by the tireless efforts of all the appointees, plus the diligent labors of many of the standing ministry and the devotion of a large percentage of the membership.

ROSCOE E. DAVEY

Eastern States Mission

It has been my privilege to work in this mission since the first of January, 1958.

During this period of time we have enjoyed many rich spiritual experiences with the members of the church and are made happy with the devotion of the Saints in their desire to truly be "laborers together with God."

The spiritual tone of the mission is continuing to develop on a high plane, which was witnessed this summer in the good reunion experiences that were shared. All reunions in the Eastern States Mission were well attended, and rich blessings were enjoyed by all those in attendance at the services.

Last year (1957) was a banner year for the addition of new members to the church, and I am happy to report that thus far this year an even larger number of people have chosen to become members of the church and share in the kingdom-building experience. This is the result of close co-operation between the local ministry and General Church representatives. There are many local men giving of their time and ability in witnessing, as well as carrying on the routine responsibilities of church administration and growth.

A number of branches are in the process of renovating their present buildings, making additions or moving out into completely new quarters. All in all, the Saints are attempting to better their places of worship and make them more conducive to receiving the good Spirit which is available to us as children of God.

At the present time there are seventeen full-time appointee workers associated with me in the mission. These brethren consistently share with me their gratitude for the assistance of many fine local men who are giving of their abilities, talents, and time. If our local men of the ministry were not devoted in such a manner, this group of full-time church workers would be most inadequate.

This mission provides for six reunions: Deer Park, Onset, Maine, Western New York, Kirtland, and West Virginia. The Deer Park, Onset, and Maine reunions are conducted on church-owned reunion grounds. Kirtland reunion, of course, is still being held at the Temple. However, work is progressing on the new reunion and camp ground at Temple Grove (Transfer, Pennsylvania) and it is anticipated that reunion will be held there within the next several years. We are most fortunate in Western New York to have a camp available for rent at Allegheny State Park, and also in West Virginia grounds are rented for the reunion. A number of junior and senior camps are conducted throughout the mission in these same locations. All of these activities have assisted in rendering an intelligent, spiritual ministry and uplift to all those in attendance.

In the short period of time I have had the opportunity of ministering with the Saints in the Eastern States Mission, I have found them most co-operative and responsive. They are devoted to the church and for the most part give excellent co-operation to the General Church procedure and policy. I am looking forward to continued experiences with them in our growth toward spiritual maturity. We will continue to bear witness and assist our people to become valiant in testimony.

The Financial Report of the Presiding Bishopric

To the First Presidency and General Conference

Figures for 1956 and 1957 continue to reflect progress in all areas of our church endeavor. The policy which has governed the church financial administration since the Conference of 1932 has been a stabilizing factor throughout the years. Our debt was eliminated, reserves have been set aside, and annual budgetary operations have constantly been kept within our income. This is referred to from time to time in our reports because of its importance. We are reminded constantly that a new generation of church members is arriving at maturity which is not aware of the financial history. Occasionally someone will ask, When shall we start the storehouse? Our answer has been and continues to be, The storehouse principle has been applied to financial administration and the storehouse is becoming a reality. Every reserve established, whether it be the Ministerial Reserve Fund, Missionary Reserve Fund, Houses of Worship Revolving Fund, Oblation Fund, or similar funds that have been set aside for specific purposes, is an application of the storehouse principle.

In addition to such funds, attention is called to the fund designated as the Storehouse Treasury Fund. In this fund there are placed surplus consecrations given for specific purposes such as land purchase, Auditorium, business and industry, and the other needs listed in the document on surplus consecration approved by the General Conference of 1950. Since that time, some individuals and one stewardship group (The Walnut Park Development Association) have contributed surplus funds. The storehouse is not to be interpreted as a house of merchandise or warehouse for storing goods. These may be necessary adjuncts of the storehouse but are only part of its total organization.

The inflationary trends consistently continue. More and more dollars are required to carry on the work of the church in all of its departments.

As we review the accomplishments of the years 1956 and 1957, we call attention to the following:

1. There has been encouraging increase in participation and compliance with the financial law as indicated in the following:

The percentage of members in the domestic field making a stewardship accounting has increased steadily in recent years. A comparison of 1947 and 1957 follows:

1947	9,230 filers	7.99%
1957	24,554 filers	17.6 %

From 1947 to 1957 there was a steady increase in percentage of membership contributing to the General Fund as shown by the following figures:

1947	29,300	25.03%
1957	47,655	34.2 %

In 1957 there was a spectacular increase in the number contributing to all general church funds, resulting largely from the widespread use of the dime cards for Auditorium Offering. A total of 58,562 contributors, or 42 per cent of the domestic field membership received official receipts from the General Church last year.

In view of the inflationary trend of recent years, increases in per capita giving to the General Fund have not maintained the same rate of gain as the percentage of members filing tithing statements and contributing to the General Church. In 1947 the per capita giving of domestic field membership to the General Fund was $9.49. With the exception of 1954 each year has shown an increased giving with the latest figures being $14.66 in 1956 and $14.93 in 1957. An additional $3.76 per member was received for Oblation, Auditorium, College, and Sanitarium School of Nursing Day Offerings, making a record total of $18.69 per member giving to the General Church in 1957. When coupled with increasing local budgets and the widespread church building and reunion development program, these figures undoubtedly represent the highest income and the most widespread participation in the history of our church.

2. Appropriation by the General Conference of 1956 and contributions by members made possible additional progress in

- A. Continued work on the Auditorium by an appropriation of $200,000.00. In addition to this, Auditorium Offerings of 1956 and 1957 amounted to $481,084.79. (Of this amount $44,567.85 was Christmas Offering.)
- B. An amount of $100,000.00 set aside for capital needs of Graceland College.
- C. An appropriation of $75,000.00 for the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital which, with funds previously appropriated in amount of $90,000.00 in 1952 and $125,000 in 1954, together with Federal Hill-Burton Fund grants, made possible the building of a new wing and other extensive improvements to the hospital building and equipment.
- D. Other funds were appropriated to increase our Operating Reserve and Houses of Worship Revolving Fund in amounts of $100,000.00 to each fund.

E. Additional appropriations were made for Missions Abroad in the amount of $80,000.00. These appropriations assured procedure in building the new headquarters building in Rotterdam, Holland, which is nearing completion; the building of a new church in Hawaii; purchase of a Mission House in Alaska; commencement of plans for construction of a new church and another Mission House in the Society Islands Mission at Papeete, Tahiti. In addition to this, funds were provided for research in Missions Abroad.

3. The investment in Resthaven, our home for the aged, has been justified in every respect. We invite the members of the church to visit and inspect the buildings. The arrangements for the care of our aged have brought many favorable comments from members of our church and nonmembers as well. However, we still feel there is need for further study and planning to be done to achieve the highest type of service possible at economical cost.

The cost of caring for patients in Resthaven is probably greater than most people realize. The average cost per patient per month as based on 869 patient months has amounted to $145.80.

We realize that this is but a good beginning toward solution of the problems having to do with the aged. We must reach out into other geographical areas of the church to provide facilities and personnel to serve those who have need. Research and planning in this respect will be carried on in the immediate future.

4. Reference has already been made to appropriations made by the General Conference of 1956 for the Auditorium. The progress made is reflected in the building as you now see it. There are many of our church members not able to attend General Conference, and it is our hope that the moving pictures which have been and will be taken will be made available to branches and districts to carry the story of Auditorium progress to all. Many have contributed to bring about the completion of this building.

5. Our Houses of Worship Revolving Fund policy has continued to supply funds to assist in the building of houses of worship. In the two-year period, 1956 and 1957, 51 loans were made totaling $278,613.00. In addition to loans from this fund, 36 loans, totaling $474,150.00 were made from the Ministerial Reserve, Consecration Contract, and Houses of Worship Funds.

6. Our farming operations continue to be an important segment of Bishopric responsibility. The lands operated total some 8,000 acres. The investment in them is more significant than is represented from the returns received from agricultural operations. It has been a policy of long standing and in harmony with divine instructions that the church buy lands. A substantial portion of these lands are held as assets in our Ministerial Reserve Fund as evidenced in the financial statement of that fund included as a part of this report.

It is important that we continue to look ahead to the goals both immediate and long time. The institutional needs are still of considerable magnitude:

A. The work which has just been completed for the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital places that institution in a very favorable position except for the need of additional dormitory and classroom facilities for our School of Nursing. This calls for immediate attention and will be covered in specific recommendations from the Board of Appropriations.

B. At the General Conference of 1956, we reported on the needs for Graceland College as presented by its Board of Trustees. They were Food Service, Dormitory Space for Girls, and Library. The Conference appropriated $100,000.00 and took further action authorizing the Presiding Bishopric to make provision for the payment in cash of $233,000.00 of Graceland Endowment Bonds and for additional funds by appropriation or internal financing. The Presiding Bishopric has this problem under consideration and is hopeful of consummating this financing program within the current year. Recommendations regarding this will come through the Board of Appropriations to the General Conference.

C. In our Report to the General Conference of 1956, reference was made to the need for some planning for the future to provide for new facilities for the Herald Publishing Plant. Recent request for use of some of the property owned by the Central Development Association (holding corporation for the church) for commercial purposes has brought before the Presiding Bishopric the need for long-time planning by General Church officials and the designation of special properties to meet future needs. The Presiding Bishopric will initiate steps toward such planning in the near future.

D. The Auditorium in its present state gives evidence of the sustained support given by our church members to bring about its completion. We are confident that it is the desire of the church to continue until the present structure is completed. The major work yet to be done is finishing the ramps, the lower auditorium, and the facing and remodeling of the wings. The amount of money involved in all this work is of considerable magnitude and estimates of cost are in preparation but not available at the time of writing this report. It is anticipated the approximate cost will be available to present to the General Conference.

E. There continues to be more demand for funds from the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund than are available; new church buildings are under construction in many places. This indicates steady growth of the church and an increase in assets, which is most encouraging. The need for more houses of worship and building sites continues to be a pressing problem.

F. Among the many needs that we have had before us throughout the years are those of providing pension programs for our General Church employees and for the faculty of Graceland College. Recommendations are being made by the trustees of the college and also by the Presiding Bishopric to the Board of Appropriations for consideration and action considering these long-deferred obligations.

G. The missionary needs of our church are always pressing. Additional men call for increased income. Family needs of our appointees increase with our expanding economy. Some consideration and help has been given and limited provisions made for inheritances and education of appointee family children. While such help has not been adequate, it has been a step in the right direction and is in keeping with the range of ability of a large portion of our church membership. Increase in the missionary force and further investments in missions abroad will of necessity be kept within the limits of finances available.

H. We continue to emphasize the need for preparation on the part of those gathering to the central areas. Our world situation is in a state of change. Momentous events take place so quickly that few are prepared for them. We should give heed to the commandments regarding the Gathering:

And let the work of the gathering be not in haste, nor by flight, but let it be done as it shall be counseled by the elders of the church at the conferences, according to the knowledge which they receive from time to time.—D. and C. 58: 12 b.

Advice and counsel from district and branch officers in conjunction with General Church officers concerned will prove beneficial to those contemplating moves to the central areas and will enhance the position of the church.

Express information relative to our financial condition and operations for the years 1956 and 1957 is set forth in financial statements and schedules following.

Our income of Tithes and Offerings (exclusive of Auditorium Offerings and Oblation) has again increased over previous years, amounting to $2,070,131.98 in 1956 and $2,201,476.27 in 1957.

Our Operating Net Gain for the two years 1956 and 1957 were $378,319.01 and $391,435.10 respectively.

Other incomes of $84,134.43 and $104,325.89 raised the Net Income over Expenses to $462,453.44 in 1956 and $495,760.99 for 1957. This is a favorable result and the total for the two years is $958,214.43 but is under that for the two years 1954 and 1955, which amounted to $1,016,863.71 and considerably under the years 1952-1953 when the Net Income amounted to $1,337,950.27. We wish to call attention to the fact that with inflationary trends still continuing it is important that we keep a good margin of income over expenses. It is from this net income that we provide for capital needs to which considerable reference has already been made in this report.

Family allowances and elders' expenses have continued to increase with the rise of living costs. The number of appointees on our list has changed from year to year, as follows:

December 31, 1953	173
December 31, 1955	204
December 31, 1957	213

We have continued our policy of replenishing the Missionary Reserve Fund from time to time by action of General Conference for funds that have been used for the cost of inter-Conference appointments and other missionary or capital needs related to our missionary work.

Elders' expenses continue to constitute a substantial portion of the total budget. Included in the elders' expenses are amounts of $81,530.13 for 1956 and $90,012.10 for 1957, covering depreciation expenses of church-owned automobiles; also an amount of $20,778.90 for 1956 and 1957 for liability insurance on automobiles. As will be noted, we have continued to keep our expenditures for both years within the budgetary appropriations authorized by General Conference.

BALANCE SHEET ASSETS

Cash Assets at the close of the year 1957 in the General Fund (stocks, bonds, and cash) show an amount of $1,025,740.17. This is a favorable situation, but when matched against the capital needs it is obvious that it will meet them only in part.

The policy of the church taking over ownership of all appointee-operated automobiles has now been completely put into effect and the investment shows normal increase arising out of increased costs of automobiles and additions which are made because of new appointees, less depreciation. The figure in 1956 amounted to $369,068.65 and $343,235.04 for 1957, of which $228,948.36 and $214,304.68 represented investments in automobiles for 1956 and 1957 respectively.

Accounts and Notes Receivable consist largely of contracts and mortgages receivable on real estate. The amount due from other funds is made up for the most part of $71,035.68.

Other assets and deferred charges is made up of real estate accounts, unexpired insurance, and net worth of investments in the Australasian Mission.

LIABILITIES

Liabilities are made up of current accounts payable, amounts due other funds ($184,415.03), and some deferred payments.

AGENCY FUND

This fund is maintained as a service to the individuals concerned. The assets of this fund are kept liquid so that complete payment of all obligations is provided for. It is our policy to keep this at a minimum as for the most part deposits are made by individuals with the church.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

These funds for the most part represent property consisting of cash, bonds, and real estate turned over to the church, wherein the church assumes certain obligations during the lifetime of the individual. This fund is kept liquid, and accumulation of capital is left in the fund. It is to be noted that the fund equity shows continued increase and now amounts to $133,239.96.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

In previous years we have called attention to the gradual increase which takes place in this fund. We are in much better position to keep our books adjusted to include new houses of worship than in former years, but still need to make surveys. We would appreciate general and local officers calling to our attention new projects and additions of houses of worship that should be placed on our books.

In our last report to General Conference, we pointed out that an amount of $88,000.00 had been advanced to this fund from General Funds. The General Fund has been reimbursed, reducing this obligation to an amount of $32,088.29. Continued income from the fund will enable us to make full reimbursement to the General Fund. We solicit the cooperation of branches which have borrowed from this fund to repay their loans as rapidly as possible as it releases funds for other congregations. The invested building fund equity as of December 31, 1957, amounts to $15,856,781.15 as compared with $13,576,751.85 on December 31, 1955, an increase of $2,280,029.30.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING LOAN FUND

Since the Houses of Worship Revolving Loan Fund was established in 1946, the sum of $3,187,263.89 (this includes loans from all funds) has been loaned to 370 congregations. The amount repaid up to December 31, 1957, is $1,539,752.45. Requests for loans continue to exceed the amount of money that is available. Some congregations have made payments on loans ahead of schedule and this has been extremely helpful in assisting other congregations to proceed with their building plans, where otherwise construction would have had to be postponed. We still have requests that amount to $150,595.68 in excess of funds that are available. Included in the Houses of Worship Revolving Loan Fund is an amount of $100,000.00 which was set up for Missions. This, too, has been used to the fullest extent. The maximum loan in this fund is $7,000.00.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

As reported to previous Conferences, the beginning of this fund was in 1937. Substantial appropriations were made by General Conference from time to time until the fund was established in sufficient amount that only current appropriations were necessary. These appropriations are made on an annual basis.

As pointed out in previous reports, this fund will meet only a portion of the costs of retirement, the balance being met out of current income. It was realized when this fund was established in 1937 that the amounts provided under the retirement program would not be adequate to meet total retirement costs. Since that time, continued inflation has taken place. With the recent provision of the Social Security Act to include ministers, our appointees are now eligible and will participate in the Social Security benefits. It is anticipated that these benefits, supplemented by our Ministerial Reserve Fund provisions, will much more adequately meet the needs of our retired appointees.

Two items to which we wish to call attention are $493,463.09, representing the amount loaned from this fund to congregations for houses of worship construction, and $415,526.20 invested in farm lands.

AUSTRALASIAN MINISTERIAL RESERVE

The policy of the setting up of funds to meet the cost of our ministerial personnel practiced at headquarters is also being carried on in Australia.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND

The purpose of this fund is to provide support of missionary endeavors in the years which are ahead, provide funds for appointment of men between Conferences, for the maintenance of the School of Instruction, and for the preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages. It has also served to provide means whereby additional facilities and equipment could be provided for Missions Abroad. It is customary to rehabilitate this fund from current cash accumulations to replace withdrawals made. This procedure will be followed in making specific recommendations to this Conference.

OBLATION FUND

The segregation of this fund a number of years ago has made possible the fund's increase during the years, while at the same time meeting the many demands made upon the church for financial assistance to its members, including some cases of rehabilitation. It has also made possible the extension of aid in Missions Abroad.

Reference has already been made in this report to the home for the aged, the building of which was financed from the Oblation Fund and included in the assets of this fund. This, together with the Social Service Center building and the Resthaven properties on Winner Road (which are now being used by the School of the Restoration), makes up the real estate investment item on the Oblation Fund books, amounting to $643,897.24. Rent is charged for the properties used by the School of the Restoration.

In previous years, we have reported on the need for the employment of a well-trained social worker. Up to the present time, we have not found one as the duties assigned to such a person would be varied, requiring special training and business experience. Our aid cases continue to increase and further consideration is being given to this need.

OPERATING RESERVE FUND

We again wish to call attention to the fact that at the time this Operating Reserve Fund was established, it was hoped it could be kept at a figure equivalent to a year's operating expense. With the many demands for capital investments such as additions to our Houses of Worship Revolving Fund, expansion needs for our institutions, etc., it has not been expedient to increase the Operating Reserve Fund to the extent desired. The reserves in this fund are now approximately two thirds of the operating expenses for 1957.

STOREHOUSE TREASURY FUND

We made reference to this previously in this report and again wish to emphasize the fact that this fund will become increasingly important as more of our people comply fully with the temporal law as it is anticipated that consecration of surplus will be made to this fund. Whereas it amounted to $24,013.95 in our report to last General Conference, it now amounts to $62,215.85.

STEWARDSHIP ENDOWMENT FUND

This represents the book value of the Atherton and Spring Branch farm lands which were hypothecated for the Grace-land Endowment Fund issue. The beneficial interest of this fund is $221,839.31, and is shown on the General Fund Balance Sheet as reported previously. Surplus arising out of farming operations provides for capital improvements as conditions and circumstances justify.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUNDS

This represents funds set up by authority of General Conference to provide for institutional building needs.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS

This fund consists of appropriations made for Auditorium construction, Radio Fund, and other items listed which are self-explanatory.

A statement of fund equities is made a part of our report. While the total fund equity is shown at a figure of $25,536,811.33, we know that there are a number of houses of worship that have been completed in recent years which have not been currently appraised and the value set up on our books.

As we look to the future, we see many needs and opportunities which challenge us as a church. The need for missionary work throughout the world is apparent to all. The implementing of our Zion program challenges us to further organization of groups and members into working groups.

As we seek to interpret the financial trends which are taking place, we find many different expressions from economists and financiers as to the future. Some feel that deflation is just around the corner; others that we will have continued inflation. It is for us to maintain our position regardless of which of these trends materializes.

We have consistently administered the finances on the basis of a cash-in-hand policy supported by adequate reserves. This policy is a safe one to follow and will assist us in meeting the situation whatever trend takes place. It would seem, however, that there is more likelihood of inflation than of deflation. The increase in our national debt, large governmental expenditures, the tremendous growth in population with its resultant demands for goods and services, all are definite factors in creating inflationary trends. This means further lessening of the purchasing power of the dollar and consequently increases the need for more income.

Our world situation remains unstable, but we have confidence that despite the threats of war that always seem imminent, for a decade or more to come we will continue in a state of unsettled peace. It is then an important time to continue to strengthen the church financially and spiritually that the great goals of the Gathering and evangelization may be attained. The call and acceptance of stewardship responsibilities is vital to the welfare of individual members and to the church. We are grateful for the increased compliance with the temporal law of the church and express our gratitude to all of you who have made it possible for us to give such a satisfactory report. However, measured in the light of our increasing needs, we ask not only for continuation on the part of those who have so complied, but for all members of the church to consider soberly their responsibility in this matter.

Church Auditor's Report of Examination

To the First Presidency and the General Conference:

We have examined the records of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, an unincorporated association with headquarters at Independence, Missouri, and have prepared the balance sheets of the funds as of December 31, 1956 and 1957, the related statements of income and expense, and equities for the years then ended. Without making a detailed audit, the accounting records of the church, the accounting procedures and other evidence have been reviewed in support of the financial statements. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards applicable in the circumstances, and tests were made to the extent we deemed appropriate.

The following comments apply to the balance sheets at December 31, 1956 and 1957, and to the transactions for the accounting periods then ended.

Cash in banks was verified by direct correspondence with the depositories and by reconciliation.

United States Government and Canadian securities are held for safekeeping by the First National Bank in Kansas City, Missouri, as fiscal agent. Verification was made by direct correspondence and by reconciliation.

GENERAL, LAND AND INHERITANCE, AND TEMPLE FUND

The assets, liabilities, and results of operations of the Central Development Association and the Real Estate Department are consolidated in this fund. Reports of examination of these two operations have been made to the First Presidency.

Cash in the hands of bishops and agents, except for funds held in missions abroad, was traced to subsequent receipts and deposits.

Funds due from or to the Australasian and Society Islands Missions are not included in the amount due from bishops and agents but are included in the accounts of the Australasian and Society Islands Missions.

Real estate contracts are assets of the Real Estate Department and are detailed in the report of examination of that department.

Accounts receivable which include amounts due from related institutions were verified by reference to individual ledger sheets and by other supporting evidence. Notes receivable were examined.

Inventories of feed, livestock, and supplies were taken and priced by farm managers. We tested the accuracy of pricing and computations of inventories.

In accordance with a policy approved by the Presiding Bishopric the operation of farming properties owned by the Ministerial Reserve Fund and the Stewardship-Endowment Fund was placed on a fiscal year ending February 28. Net earnings from farming operations for the fiscal years ended February 28, 1956 and 1957, are included in the equities of the funds owning the farms.

The beneficial interest in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund represents the difference between the depreciated value of the Atherton and Spring Branch real estate and the amount due Graceland College in the form of bonds and an account payable. The beneficial interest is increased by the expenditure of funds for capital items and reduced by annual provisions for depreciation. Earnings on these lands from farm operations are held in the Stewardship-Endowment Fund as earned equity.

Additions to furniture, fixtures, and equipment were examined, and depreciation in the approximate amount of $25,000.00 was charged to the General Fund as operating expense.

Unexpired insurance on real estate improvements and transportation deposits relative to the Society Islands Mission comprise the amount stated as "Deferred Charges."

The assets entitled "Australasian Mission" represents the net worth of that mission at December 31, 1956 and 1957, as reported by the bishop in Australia.

Accounts Payable include accounts with vendors, active and inactive allowances payable, and payroll taxes payable. A major portion of the amount stated as payable at December 31, 1957, has been paid.

Schedules of Administrative Expense (Schedule Number 2), Ministerial Expense (Schedule Number 3), Contributions by Stakes and Districts (Schedule Number 1), are included as a part of this report.

AGENCY FUND

The Agency Fund was created in the year 1942 in order to segregate from the General Fund and other funds all liabilities which for some reason could not be liquidated. It also acts as a depository for cash and bonds held for safekeeping for individuals and church organizations.

CONSECRATION AGREEMENT FUND

The Consecration Agreement Fund was set up during the year 1942 to record the assets and liabilities relative to certain agreements entered into by the Presiding Bishopric with certain individuals.

These agreements arise out of a desire of individuals to make a contribution to the church and at the same time provide for themselves some security for the future. These agreements are described as follows:

Class B: This class represents the type of agreement wherein the individual turns over to the church cash, bonds, or other negotiable assets as a consecration, in consideration of which the church agrees to pay the individual a regular amount each year, with the possibility of additional (liability reducing) payments in cases of need. The total amount of such additional payments is not to exceed the amount of the original consecration. Furthermore, when such additional amounts are paid, the amounts of the annual payments are reduced proportionately.

Class C: Under this type of contract the individual gives cash, bonds, and in some cases real estate as a consecration. There is no provision for regular annual payments, but the additional payment provision, as in Class B, is included. Some of these agreements provide for the payment of last sickness and funeral expenses. Where real estate has been conveyed to the church, the contract and the asset have been recorded at nominal value. The liability in such cases is limited to the amount which is realized from the sale of the property.

Class D: This represents agreements where there is a definite amount payable per month or per annum, but no additional payments are required.

Class E: This class represents non-negotiable notes, payable to the individual, which contain a provision that the note shall be canceled in the event of the death of the payee.

Class F: This class represents bonds payable to the church at the death of the payee, and both the liability and the asset are carried at nominal value.

Real estate investment represents nominal values, plus costs of acquisition and improvements, of real estate consecrated under an agreement. Some of these agreements provide for a life estate in the real estate by the consecrator.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP FUND

The Houses of Worship Fund is divided into two sections. The Restricted Building Fund section consists of cash, accounts receivable, bonds, and other assets which have been acquired by contributions from local congregations or from the sale of houses of worship which were no longer in use. It has been a policy of the church to hold the receipts from the sale of houses of worship in this fund, restricting its use to the acquiring of property in the vicinity of the congregation from which it was acquired. If it is found inadvisable to utilize the asset in the immediate vicinity, it is to be used somewhere in the district in which the branch was located.

Accounts and notes receivable are in the most part due from local congregations.

It has been the practice of the Presiding Bishopric to issue notes to certain local congregations covering contributions to the fund. These notes are shown as liabilities, but they differ from other receipts of the fund only in that a note payable has been issued as evidence of trusteeship.

The Real Estate Investment section represents the portion of the fund invested in buildings and grounds used for local congregations, reunion grounds, and properties having historical value in connection with the church.

Auditorium building and grounds is stated at the amount carried in the General Fund at December 31, 1942, plus the cost of subsequent construction.

Chapel accounts A, B, and C represent church buildings, reunion grounds, and historical properties, respectively. As a result of a Houses of Worship appraisal survey, an adjustment was made as of December 31, 1949, to increase Chapel A properties to the appraised value of $5,689,006.94. A like adjustment was made to increase the Invested Surplus account.

Mortgage payable in the amount of $880.00 represents a liability of this fund to the General Fund (Real Estate Department).

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND

A revolving fund in the initial amount of $300,000.00, and increased by subsequent appropriations to $1,000,000.00, was established in 1946, as a means of assisting branches by means of loans, at a nominal rate of interest in the construction of houses of worship.

Notes Receivable representing loans to branches and districts were examined.

HOUSES OF WORSHIP REVOLVING FUND — MISSIONS

A fund for mission houses of worship was created by a transfer in 1955 from the Houses of Worship Revolving Fund in the amount of $100,000.00.

Loans are made at a nominal rate of interest to aid in the construction of houses of worship for missions.

Notes receivable representing loans to branches and districts were examined.

MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

The Ministerial Reserve Fund was created in 1937 and has been increased in subsequent years by appropriations from the General Fund and by income and investments.

The requirements of this fund are computed by the church attorney and are based on the life expectancy of those appointees now covered. The assets of the fund are held to cover retirement costs, death benefits, and other contingent costs relative to future needs of appointees. This fund does not accrue for the benefit of any one minister or his dependents. The annual transfers of cash, although based on individual cases, build up a fund which can be used to provide the necessities of life to the appointee and his dependents after his retirement or after he has reached the age of seventy. The fund balances are carried separately on the books according to the purpose for which each is intended.

Real Estate represents investment in Missouri farm lands.

Family allowances for those appointees who have reached the age of seventy were charged to the Retirement Reserve.

The Unallocated Reserve represents the segregated reserves which have been accumulated for those ministers whose appointments have terminated.

The Graceland College Faculty Retirement Reserve was created in May, 1942.

AUSTRALASIAN MINISTERIAL RESERVE FUND

This fund was created by General Fund appropriation of funds received and held in Australia. Subsequent additions have been covered by Conference appropriations.

Cash in banks and government bonds are stated as reflected in the audited reports received from the bishop in Australia.

MISSIONARY RESERVE FUND

This fund was set up in accordance with General Conference action of April 6, 1944. The original appropriation of $100,000.00 was to provide funds for appointment of personnel in interim Conference periods, with further provision that up to $5,000.00 annually could be expended for the cost of a school of instruction for ministerial appointees, and provision for the expenditure of an amount not to exceed $2,500.00 to cover the cost of preparation and translation of missionary literature into foreign languages.

Subsequent appropriations have been made to rehabilitate the fund.

OBLATION FUND

The Oblation Fund was created to record the contributions received as oblation subsequent to January 1, 1942, and to record the disbursement of these funds. This fund is restricted only to the extent that it shall be used "for the purpose of giving temporary aid and benevolences, and at the same time to make possible their use for the permanent rehabilitation of those who have become physically incapacitated or disabled, and who are worthy of the assistance and help of the church."

The surplus of this fund is increased or decreased by the operational deficit or surplus of Resthaven.

Accounts, notes, and contracts receivable were examined and are considered to be well secured.

Real Estate Investment represents the Resthaven property, the Social Service Center building, and other property located in Independence, Missouri.

OPERATING RESERVE FUND

This fund was created by General Conference action of April 6, 1944, the purpose being that of providing a fund of sufficient amount to permit the appropriation of operating expense from this fund rather than from the income of the current year.

STOREHOUSE TREASURY FUND

Created by General Conference action of April 9, 1950, the purposes of this fund are detailed in a document presented to the Conference on April 8, 1950. Contributions specifically designated for this fund are included in the fund equity.

STEWARDSHIP-ENDOWMENT FUND

General Conference action of April 6, 1944, authorized the segregation of the Atherton and Spring Branch farm lands as collateral for the bonds issued to the Graceland College Endowment Fund. The net differences between the real estate investment and the amount payable to Graceland College Endowment Fund is designated "Beneficial Interest-General Fund," and appears in the General Funds as an asset.

It is the expressed opinion of the Presiding Bishopric that "the net income from these lands is to be made available for improvements as may be necessary and required for further development of the lands segregated." The capital account of this fund is the net earnings from operation of these lands.

The bonds payable to the Graceland College Endowment Fund matured January 6, 1956.

SUBSIDIARY INSTITUTIONAL FUND

This fund was created by action of General Conference on April 6, 1944, and subsequent action. The funds are held subject to disbursement in accordance with the requirements contained in the appropriations.

The institutions for which these funds are held are designated in the balance sheet of this fund.

UNEXPENDED APPROPRIATIONS FUND

This fund was created in the year 1947 in order to properly segregate funds held for future needs.

Allocation of these funds is detailed in the Equity section of Fund Balance Sheet.

OPINION

In our opinion, the accompanying fund balance sheets and related statements of income and expense and equities present fairly the position of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at December 31, 1956 and 1957, and the results of its operations for the years then ended, in conformity with accepted accounting principles, applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year.

Frank A. Fry

NOW SERVING in the British Isles for the second time, High Priest Frank A. Fry is completing his sixteenth year under General Church appointment. Of course his service to the church covers many more years than this statement would indicate. He was first ordained thirty-five years ago—to the office of priest—and later ordained an elder in 1934 and high priest in 1938. All of these ordinations preceded his appointment in 1942.

Brother Fry was born in Harrison County, Iowa, April 1, 1905, of Latter Day Saint parents. As far back as he can remember he has wanted to serve in the church in any way possible. The desire to serve full time crystallized during his years at Graceland College. There he spent one year in pre-engineering and then changed to a two-year course in religious education. Before going under appointment he spent ten years in retail merchandising at Dow City, Iowa, and Taylorville, Illinois.

He and his wife, the former Zeta G. Clothier, have served the church in Port Huron, Michigan; Des Moines, Iowa; and Omaha, Nebraska, as well as the six to seven years they have been in the British Isles.

One of Brother Fry's hopes has been to see Zion flourish and to have a part in its development. One day while thinking of Zion and its relationship to the work in the British Isles, he silently asked the question, "How can Zion ever be?" The still small voice of the Spirit spoke to him the words, "If you desire it with all your heart, it shall be realized." This experience has many times brought him assurance and hope as well as adding meaning to his work.

Graceland Inaugurates New President

HOME-COMING WEEKEND at Graceland October 17-19 was highlighted by the inauguration of Dr. Harvey H. Grice as president of the college.

The inaugural ceremony was Sunday morning, October 19, in Zimmermann Hall. Dr. Grice's inaugural address was titled, "The Leadership We Deserve." The oath of office was administered by Bishop Earl T. Higdon, chairman of the Board of Trustees.

At a business meeting of the Graceland Alumni Association Saturday morning, L. Wayne Updike was elected president of the association. Other officers chosen were Richard Lancaster, vice-president; Enid DeBarthe, secretary; and Robert Hynden, treasurer. Wesley Elvin, Barney Parker, and David Sheehy were elected to the Alumni Council.

The Saturday morning program at this year's home-coming differed quite radically from the past. Rather than the customary queen contest and introduction of the football team, there was a convocation on Christian higher education. It consisted of two parts: (1) a forum on "Zion's perspectives in higher education"; and (2) an address on "The emerging role of higher education in the Restoration movement" by Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr.

Members of the forum were President F. Henry Edwards, Dr. Lloyd Young, Dr. Velma Ruch, Mrs. Blanche Mesley, and L. Wayne Updike; Dr. William S. Gould was the moderator. They discussed such questions as "How does higher education affect the levels of our worship?" "What effect does higher education have on the arts?" "What can the church college contribute in higher education?" "How can higher education contribute to the solution of such problems as want and war?" and "What can higher education contribute to family life?"

In his address, Dr. Gleazer pointed out five goals of higher education. He said such education aims at making specific our ambitions for a better life; developing faculties used in the process of common consent; conditioning self-discipline; producing competent, skillful people; and building people capable of mastering their material surroundings. He concluded with the statement that higher education has not yet found its complete place in the church.

Graceland College Day

GRACELAND COLLEGE is now entering the sixty-fourth year of its service to the church and to the young people who seek higher education as a preparation for life and for work in the church.

In the years that have passed since 1895, when its work began, Graceland has provided a training ground where young people have been able to receive academic training for their careers, with the advantage of fellowship among other young people of the church, along with the ideals and the influences provided by leaders and educators devoted to the faith.

College Day was first begun with an appeal to the citizens of Lamoni to make January 1, 1897, "a day of dedication and free offerings" for the benefit of the college. The finance committee—Bishop E. L. Kelley, William Anderson, and D. F. Nicholson—issued the appeal on December 17 in the College City Chronicle.

College Day became a church-wide event in 1905 when the Joint Council of the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric presented to the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, on Saturday, April 8, the following resolution:

We favor recommending to the Conference that . . . one day in each year be set apart, to be known as College Day, upon which offerings, in the manner of collections, shall be taken up in all districts and branches of the church, to aid the college work, the same to be forwarded to the Bishop of the church to be devoted to such purposes.

The motion to approve the report and adopt its recommendations was affirmed.

As the quality of a community may be quickly judged by the condition of its schools, reflecting the ideals of its citizens in their love and care for their children, so the church will be judged, not in the opinions of men but in the character of its history, according to the love and care that its people have for the youth growing up in their homes and branches who are preparing to take their places in the work of the church. History will judge it, in part at least, according to the efforts of its members to train those who will be the future leaders of the church.

WHEN GRACELAND College began its work, the leaders of the church had been trained and prepared for their work in other institutions of higher learning, in the field, or wherever they could find the opportunity to read and learn. Graceland was untried, unproved, and in some areas unsupported.

The situation is different today. Graceland has been tried and proved, and the value of her contribution through the young people is beyond intelligent question. Through the years, Graceland has contributed to the leadership of the church, so that there is no department of the church work in which its young men and women have not rendered distinguished and valuable services.

Today the expenses of higher education keep pace with other rising costs. The tools of education—libraries, classrooms, laboratories, supplies, facilities, endowments, and operating funds—come at a considerable cost. But these expenses are investments: investments in character, investments in skills, investments in youth, investments in the future of the church. They are investments that have yielded and will continue to yield great returns.

The church makes a continuing contribution to Graceland through appropriations from general funds. This money is used for capital gains and operating expenses according to the need. Tuition at Graceland provides approximately 75 per cent of the educational cost. General Church appropriation accounts for from 20 per cent to 25 per cent.

There are some special needs for which it is thought wise to ask the people of the church to make an offering. Last year for the first time this offering passed $30,000.00 and was used to provide architectural studies for new buildings, extensive repairs for the Administration Building, and a substantial portion of the money for the temporary music building which is now under construction.

ON SUNDAY, November 9, we ask the people of the church to remember Graceland College. May we suggest that contributions on that day be not mere token offerings. We should do a little better than empty our small-change purses into the collection plate. It is one day for us but a whole year for the college and its young people. And a year is a long time in a young life, as it is also a matter of great importance in the history of the church.

Graceland has served the church and our young people. Let us serve Graceland. And let us remember that lip service alone pays no bills, helps no students, finances no classrooms. When a young person is preparing for life, he needs help; he hasn't much chance to earn money or pay his own way. The costs are too high; the opportunity is too short.

Graceland College is one of our church institutions pre-eminently dedicated to the future—a better future, a richer future, a future of spiritual vision and practical works, of intelligence working with knowledge, of insight linked with foresight, of dedication motivated by understanding.

Let us consider the needs of the college and our young people in this light, and we can depend upon the church people to do what is best.

The mission is moving ahead very well with conversions. Our people are to be commended for this progress. A follow-up is still needed with some of the recorders, for the figures received here in the Department of Statistics do not compare with some of the figures noted in the reports.

It is my prayer that we each will continue to be directed by the Good Spirit, and as a result of progress the church will minister effectively to God's children.

We Choose Graceland

Those who choose to help their church college will have opportunity on Graceland Day to help it become an even finer institution of learning

WE HAVE recently been hearing this worth-while plea, "Give your support to the university or college of your choice." There also have been many "open the door" campaigns conducted, emphasizing the need for personal support of our colleges in order that their doors may be kept open for all who merit the experience of college life.

There are many special "days" in the year. One has been appointed for Graceland—a time when her friends and admirers, graduates and supporters throughout all the world and in all the church are to remember her. She awaits their answer, "We choose Graceland!"

A prophet of another day proposed a similar challenge. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Joshua's own covenant, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord," emphasized his love for his God. This love was so great that he could conceive no more worth-while expression than that of giving himself and his family in service to his God. As with Joshua, when we love something wholeheartedly, our best expression of this love is in the giving of ourselves. The greatest recorded expression of such love was written in these words, "For the Lord so loved . . . that he gave his only begotten Son."

The purpose of commemorating Graceland Day is that those who love the college—those who through association with her have been greatly inspired by her influence—may this day have the opportunity to raise her ensign throughout the world. Singing her praises, they will spread the spirit of Graceland, the spirit of service through giving—the giving of self.

Service is a stewardship, the kind that requires sacrifice. I like the definition of sacrifice recently given by Seventy Barney Berridge, "That which is made sacred in giving." This lends deep meaning to the divine counsel, "Give your body, a living sacrifice." We must experience personal sacrifice in giving something which truly expresses our love. Our gift then becomes a sacred trust to him that receives it.

Graceland Day is celebrated in order to emphasize our need for giving that our college may continue her service to the church. Graceland is not alone a college. She is a consolidated expression of the sacrificial love of those who desire that she may continue to serve our youth, and in so doing "serve the Lord." Thus her service has become sacred. Truly she has a sacred trust.

The investment of the church in Graceland is not alone represented in expenditures for facilities and equipment. It is also expressed in the energies of many "lifetimes of service" expended for her cause. Maintenance and replacement of buildings and equipment can be budgeted from available funds. The expenditure of energies in teaching, counsel, guidance, planning, and spiritual inspiration must be provided with somewhat greater difficulty. The financial cost of meeting the needs of administering Graceland's many activities must be paid by those she serves—her students and the church. This cost is approximately $1,230 per year per student. Of this total cost, students contribute approximately $1,050 per year per student. This leaves approximately $180 per year per student to be provided from other sources, but primarily by the church through General Conference appropriation. These costs are somewhat lower than in other privately endowed educational institutions. For instance, at Brown University in the east the annual student tuition is reported to be $1,250 per year, with an additional $2,300 per year per student being provided by college appropriation—a total of $3,550. The U. S. Office of Education reported recently that at public colleges and universities, where tuition rates are still nominal, a student needs about $1,500 per year to fully meet his educational needs. Normally this personal cost is met by the student and his family—those who love him. The additional administrative cost of providing our youth with the necessary facilities and instruction at Graceland represents a form of scholarship contributed by the church, the faculty, and college employees. All consider it their stewardship—a stewardship of service, a sacred trust.

Graceland, as other colleges and universities, has instituted special development funds in which the contributions of benefactors may be placed for special purposes not provided by normal income. On behalf of the Graceland development program we invite contributions from those who wish to perform this special service. If you wish information to assist you in making such special offerings, please send your request to Mr. Don Booz, Director of Public Relations and Development, or to members of the Board of Trustees, Graceland's Development Council, the Alumni Council, Faculty, or to the President.

Those of you who wish to give sincere expression of your desires to assist Graceland through personal contribution have that opportunity in your home congregations on Graceland Day throughout the church. These offerings will indicate a firm decision that in lending support to the college or university of our choice "We choose Graceland."

An Open Door to Education

THE CALL TO knowledge and competence is to me one of the central challenges of the Restoration message. Throughout our Scripture runs the affirmation of the importance of inquiry and learning, the necessity of broadening our intellectual and spiritual horizons. As I write my mind is full of these familiar words:

As often as thou hast inquired, thou hast received instruction of my Spirit.

Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you.

Seek not to declare my word, but first seek to obtain my word, then shall your tongue be loosed.

Seek not for riches but for wisdom; and, behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you; and then shall you be made rich.

The glory of God is intelligence.

Seek learning even by study, and also by faith.

For as long as I can remember these words have guided and blessed me; I have tested their truth and discovered their validity.

Perhaps one can never capture in words or through the relation of individual experiences the inner sense of guidance, the constant impulsion, the open doors that make it necessary to follow a certain course of action. However that may be, I know within myself that my life has been guided educationally in certain directions. I have a conviction that the search for knowledge is important and will be blessed by God.

One of the early experiences that made me know this took place in the Stone Church when I was seven years old. My parents and I were each being blessed for our second mission to Scandinavia. My blessing was almost completely concerned with my future education, with God's interest in it, and with the assurance that changing countries and languages would in no way interfere with my learning process.

Over and over again in the years to follow I became aware of the operative force of that blessing. Learning a new language became easy, and my personal study was constantly enriched by additional insight. In the final arithmetic examination before graduation from the Norwegian folkeskole, for instance, I had worked all the problems but one. That one simply would not yield to any means of solution I could conceive. After exhausting my own knowledge, I paused briefly in prayer and immediately discovered another way of approach. The problem was solved, the only solution in the entire class.

The same Spirit was with me as I returned to the United States. Entering the second semester of the ninth grade, I could speak very little English and had no conception of how to spell the words I did know. Never in my educational experience have I worked more diligently than I did that semester, and never have I felt more constantly supported and sustained by the Spirit of God. Often I would take tests not knowing the meaning of many of the key words, and yet over and over again the answers would be correct and the test successful.

In the fall when I entered my sophomore year at Tulsa, Oklahoma, I knew the language and could sense that I was on my own in a way that had not been true the previous semester. Such an experience is hard to explain because its validity lies not only in its outward manifestations—good grades or facility in the use of the language—but more importantly in inner assurance and direction.

From the moment I was born, the plans for my life included Graceland College. My parents were attending the college in preparation for their mission to Scandinavia, and from the beginning they instilled in me a desire to attend Graceland. As the time drew near, the eagerness with which I planned made many wonder if I were not expecting too much. They attempted to reduce the shock of reality by depicting all the disillusionments that might be mine. I found the reality one of the greatest mental and spiritual upheavals in my life and one of the greatest challenges I have ever encountered. Many things came under scrutiny, many questions were aroused, and I became engaged in building an intellectual and spiritual structure that was constantly tested by all I could learn and experience. It was a difficult time and one of the most exhilarating in my life. A hunger for knowledge was awakened, and isolated fragments of understanding made a discovery of the larger harmony and relationship imperative.

My plans or financial arrangements had not included any schooling beyond Graceland, but now I could not stop. Throughout the study for my Bachelor's degree and Master's degree I experienced the joy of specialty, of knowing enough about a subject that it began to yield its secrets. Literature became a world of beauty and meaning whose secrets I, too, would like to share with others. Teaching, though it had been in my plans from my sophomore year at Graceland, took on a meaning it had not had before, and I found much joy in helping to lead others to the sources of inspiration that had given themselves so richly to me.

One day in my second year of teaching at Graceland, President Gleazer called me to his office and asked me if I had ever considered getting a Ph.D. The thought had entered my mind but had not seriously taken root there. After his request that I give it some careful consideration, I determined to go to summer school, tentatively beginning a degree with no immediate necessity for commitment. For four summers I went to school, enjoying my work but without the personal determination I knew would be necessary if I were to endure the rigors candidacy for a degree would require. A decision, I knew, must be made shortly, but my prayers had seemingly availed nothing in giving me the guidance I was accustomed to having in my educational plans.

I determined in the midst of this indecision to visit Madison and see what the University of Wisconsin had to offer. The minute I reached that campus, very quietly but firmly, the inner sense of assurance came that here was the place I should continue my study, that the work I proposed to do was important and should be finished. Now I was thoroughly committed regardless of what might be required in the expenditure of time and energy.

The days that followed were filled with the most intense intellectual activity I had ever known, yet through them all ran that sustaining spirit that had so often been a part of my educational endeavors. Many experiences stand out in my mind. I remember the assurance that came with a special prayer of blessing in Dr. Chevillie's office; moments of worship in my little carrell in the Wisconsin library as many early fragments of understanding found their place in the larger pattern; an experience on the streets of Madison, three weeks before my final written exams, when I felt not that I would pass the tests but rather a conviction to the innermost part of my being that I was a child of God and part of a purposive whole; the calm I knew at the crucial moments because I felt sustained by the Spirit of God as well as the prayers of many who loved me.

Not all, however, were quite like this. I came to a time, two months before my thesis was due, when through physical and mental exhaustion I would often work for four hours and write only two or three sentences. One night in desperation and intense need of help, I went to my patriarchal blessing hoping to find some ministry there. One sentence was almost illuminated for me: "When you come to places in life that are difficult and you know not which way to turn, ask of God and there shall come to you the blessing you need, and you will see your way clearly." With shame I realized that in the strain of the past few weeks I had almost forgotten "to ask of God." The next morning in the little meditation chapel on the second floor of the Ad building, I was administered to. The prayer included these words, "We pray not that the work shall be easy but that it shall be possible." And it was possible. In spite of physical illness and continued weariness I never again felt blocked. The work progressed steadily and was completed well within the time limit.

From the experiences of these many years "in the pursuit of knowledge" certain convictions have emerged in my mind. First of all, I believe that learning is part of the stewardship principle. If we seriously believe that God intends man to move out of prejudice and ignorance, then to be truly partners with him we must extend our intellectual horizons, become experts in our chosen fields, and constantly seek the enlightenment that comes from many sources. God's Spirit continually works with man, but the extent to which we can share in the eternal principle will be limited by the capacity of our understandings.

Second, every area of learning is a legitimate facet in the unfolding revelation of the kingdom of God. In all the conglomerate world of knowledge can be found little bits of insight and sudden flashes into the moving mystery of creation. Each course in home economics, in literature, in engineering, in psychology can add pieces to our understanding of God and his purpose for men. "In the beginning God . . ." takes on new meaning as we discover the intricacy of his creation and the operation of his laws in human affairs.

Third, seeking learning by study and by faith involves work and enlistment.

Faith is not a filler for gaps in our own knowledge, not a substitute for reason, but rather the active commitment of the whole person. It is the gamble of one's whole self in response to God. The effect of this kind of response is that it opens eyes; it makes things come clear. Faith gives direction to study; it reveals relationships, and it provides the kind of communion that can come only to those most intimately concerned with the work of the kingdom.

Fourth, the qualities of humility and love, so essential to the truly Christian person, can be fostered by genuine education. We are told to love God with our heart, might, mind, and strength. The love of God in the intellectual sense is not the study of a separate entity called God but rather the approach one takes to the study of everything. True love in all areas of life is more surely developed by understanding than by any other means. Through this vision of love true humility becomes possible. Humility, strangely enough, may be more difficult for the ignorant man to achieve than the educated man. The miracle of knowledge when one penetrates to the heart of a subject reveals to those who look the greater miracle of the creative force behind such wonder. The joy of having seen becomes mingled with the humility inevitable in those who can see themselves clearly in the scheme of things, who with strength and assurance know their own worth before God and who yet see the vast stretches of discovery still ahead. To those without such vision, humility may only be a name applied to inertia, weakness, or lack of incentive.

Fifth, the Zionite community can become reality only through the development of persons dedicated to the growth of self in all its aspects. An emphasis on holiness without a corresponding interest in truth can lead only to distortion and decay. Man was given a mind for the worship of God, and the very best that he can conceive in literature, in music, in science, in sociology, in business needs to be dedicated to the service of God and find its fulfillment in a community of people totally committed to the release of their God-given potential.

As my mind returns to that scene in the Stone Church many years ago, I know that my experience has verified the implication of that blessing. I have followed where it has led and have found much joy and inspiration. My vocation, almost inevitably it seemed, became associated with education. Further, and I do not believe it was accidental, I received the opportunity of teaching in a place where I feel I can most fully utilize the gifts that are mine.

Many have asked why I choose to stay at Graceland. The answer is simple. It is "my" college grounded in the very best philosophy of the Restoration movement and an agency for the enlightenment of its people. What is distinctive about a college is not its buildings, its location, its size, but its "atmosphere," the intangible quality that seems to permeate every aspect of its activity. This atmosphere is built by what the students and faculty ultimately treasure, by what they consider of supreme worth. To us at Graceland the scholastic endeavor, in so far as it is a sincere search for truth, is worship of God. Knowledge, we believe, is the revelation of God, and the learning process, in its release of human potential, a progressively full relationship with God.

Somewhere in every life there comes a dedication to a quest, a search for meaning and significance. I have found the vision of my search in the church and my dedication through its educational program.

What Graceland Has Meant to My Family and Me

By Barney Parker

The Parkers—Barney, Phyllis, David, Mark, and Jane

I AM NOT TRYING to quote from Genesis, but "in the beginning" Graceland didn't mean much to me, as most of the students in the class of 1954-1955 would tell you. As time went on Graceland gave me my wife, the former Phyllis Hansen, and in turn we were blessed with our three children. Now I can truthfully say that Graceland has meant my family to me—not only my family by blood relationship, but the Graceland family that opened its arms and its heart to someone, namely me, who didn't quite fit into the Graceland pattern of life.

As Phyllis and I look back over those six years, we wonder if it is possible to write of the experiences which tell what Graceland has meant to us. I spent two of those six years in the Army, but somehow even they seemed a part of some major plan.

At that time our family was smaller. There was only Phyllis and our young son, David. We were pretty much alone out in Tacoma, Washington, where we were stationed at Fort Lewis. We had not been away from our parents for any length of time. Everything, the tiny baby boy included, was strange, and then Graceland knocked at our door two thousand miles away from Lamoni, Iowa. It was Frank and Vida Benson and their small son. Phyllis had phoned the pastor when we first arrived in Tacoma. He had asked if we knew this person or that one, but none of the names sounded familiar. However, he did pass on to Frank and Vida that we were Gracelanders, and they came to see us. Phyllis had met them at a General Conference in 1952 through a Graceland friend. At that time I was not a member of the church, but I certainly did appreciate their friendliness. When we did go to church I was surprised to see Dave Johnson and his wife Lucy. Dave and I had battled together on the football field. Then there was another day and another knock. We opened the door of our trailer to find Dona and Gayle Scafe. Because of their interest we were able to find a more suitable home in which to live. These are "living instances" of what Graceland has meant to us. It was my awakening to a world-wide fraternity. Graceland has meant friends, not mere acquaintances.

In 1956 I was discharged and we went back to the Hill with misgivings and uncertainties. This time we weren't kids any more. We couldn't write home for money if we ran short of cash. I would like to say thanks to my wife's parents who didn't wait for us to write home, but who made it possible by financial help and by encouragement again and again for us to return to Graceland.

SCHOOL WAS difficult when I returned. Our housing was inadequate for a live-wire, eighteen-month-old boy and his mother who was expecting a second child. Somehow we made it through those next months. With the help of Phyllis, her parents, the kids of Graceland, the faculty and staff, I readjusted to college life. My grades were better because I saw a need to study everything, not just the subjects which interested me. I was graduated that spring with an Associate of Arts degree.

During those two years we had learned a lot about our church college, but we really learned to love Graceland when we left her. She had taught us love, humility, and courage. As we left we did not realize how much or how soon we would be called upon to use those Graceland-endowed attributes. Things were looking better as we left. I had received several athletic scholarships. We would have no high tuition to worry about or other incidental expenses. I soon found out, even during the summer, at the university that there was a different spirit as the players entered the playing field. If there were any holy words, they were used in profanity. My instructors were good men and they were good to me, but Graceland had taught me to think for myself. Here I would go to college, but it would be easy to drift by. Don't misunderstand me, I had to study at the university but there is still a great deal of difference between a person with an education and a person who has gone to college. I have yet to meet a true Graceland who is not an educated person.

There was a deep unrest and dissatisfaction within me. After spending about two months at this university I left. We had made friends who could probably not understand our reasons for leaving. We could not understand them ourselves.

We arrived at another university in another town. Here we thought things would be different because it, too, was a church-sponsored college. For some reason I could not feel "at home." Then came the night when I couldn't take the pressure any longer. I put in a long-distance call collect to Dick Carter, the football coach at Graceland. I asked him if there was any possibility of my getting into the new four-year curriculum. He rather hurriedly assured me that there wasn't, because Graceland was seeking scholars for this experiment in education. I asked him if he would talk to Dr. Gleazer, because for some reason we felt a need to come back. We were quite surprised the next day when Coach Carter called and told us that the faculty had decided to accept me. I think he was as surprised as we were.

We wondered if we had enough courage to go back to Graceland even after we were accepted. How could we explain to our families and friends the reasons for turning down those scholarships and coming back to Graceland with $400 tuition to pay plus books and household expenses? As we were packing, Phyllis said, "I guess we are going to have to trust in God's word. I don't know why we are going back to Graceland, and I know that you don't either. God gave us intelligence to make decisions, but didn't he also say, 'Seek not what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind . . . your Father . . . knoweth that ye have need of these things. But, rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you?'" The words weren't exact, but we both felt the impact and the meaning of them.

These words were the only real reason we had for returning to Graceland, and at times they grew faint. The children were tired and irritable as we traveled back to Lamoni. Mark was only four months old. At this point in our life Graceland meant a struggle with every ounce of physical and mental strength toward an unknown goal. It meant heartache for physical comforts. We had never purchased one pair of shoes for our children with our own money. I had been financially unable to buy Phyllis one new dress in the entire time we had been married. Graceland meant sacrifice, but it taught us that a happy heart and a head held high are worth more than anything in the world.

GRACELAND began to mean many things to us. It meant a deep concern for those who would follow in the rough-hewn trail made by Jim Weate as he encouraged us during those first few weeks, when I was so tired from the football practice that I could hardly see to study. Yet I would not trade one of those football practices for all the athletic scholarships in the world. It meant a love for Darrell and Sandy, for Scotty and Don, for the two Teds, for Ruthie and Jim Swick, for George and Bob, for Tom and Gary, and for Everett and Gerry. It meant an admiration, love and respect for Doc Cheville and the faculty. Graceland began to mean more than buildings and a beautiful campus; it began to mean the dedicated voices of outstanding instructors who were teaching us how to live beyond the boundaries of Graceland. It meant a strain on family life. It meant work, study, research, write, and prepare speeches until twelve o'clock night after night. It also meant football trips, a peaceful feeling that I was really learning something, and fellowships with the boys and my Graceland family.

That junior year at Graceland reached a high point for Phyllis and me, and perhaps for others as I was baptized and confirmed in the presence of my friends on February 22. We still had not reached our goal, perhaps we never would, but the words rang clear in our mind, "All these things shall be added unto you." Graceland meant more to me as I continued after my baptism and confirmation. It symbolized a faith of a church and her people. It united our family in a deeper love for all humanity. This was not done in two years. The seeds were planted, but it took the third and fourth year to reap the product and turn me out, a little rough perhaps, but with a sound foundation on which to stand.

WHEN THE school year was over we all felt good, teachers and students included. The Parker family had managed to survive the financial strain of the latter part of the year by Phyllis' obtaining a job with Doctors Gamet and Swanson.

That summer I went to school at Northwest Missouri State College at Maryville. I found that I was educationally equipped to compete in the classroom with graduate students. In July we became the parents of our third child, a daughter, Jane.

We again returned to Graceland in 1957. During the summer I had almost decided not to go back. Our financial situation was again bothering us. Something seemed to be pushing us, against our physical will, to return. We both knew that we would never have regrets if we did, so when classes opened I was in attendance.

We were almost to the end of our goal. David was now almost four years old, Mark was two, and Jane was nine months old. Phyllis and I were both twenty-four.

The courses were still difficult, but now I had a stable pattern of study. In December I became a part-time representative for the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. Thanks to my friends I was able to supplement our income, and I was also able to offer them assistance in the business world. Graceland has meant security as Phyllis and I were assured; ". . . your Father knoweth that ye have need of

Our Family at Graceland

By Darrell Webb

Darrell and Joan with their children, Tim and Elaine

TODAY HAS been another exciting day at college during this third week on a once strange college campus. Here at Colorado State College in Greeley the pathways are becoming more familiar as each day passes.

This evening as I sit here and think back over the day's accomplishments I remember the faces of new acquaintances. I review in my mind some of the problems which have arisen. Several of these were conquered; others were left to be solved in the days ahead. I also recall some of my most precious experiences of my previous college home back on a "hill" in Iowa—Graceland.

First of all, Graceland holds great significance for my wife, Joanne, and me. We have been married three years. Most of this time has been spent in studying together, worshipping together, homemaking and family rearing together, and in just plain living together there at Graceland. In our marriage plans we had decided to do those things in a place of our own choosing. Looking back now we feel there could have been no other place more suitable for securing the foundation of our family life. We feel it is well balanced in many areas of down-to-earth living, including our recreation, our interpersonal relations, our religious life, and our approach to the problems of each new day.

As we look back over our Graceland experience we find that we cannot really separate any single event or occasion as being the outstanding or best experience. The whole time spent there seems to have been one great continuous experience.

Those three years may be compared to the flow of a small Iowa stream. Sometimes the water flows merrily along its way as if everything was as it should be. Sometimes obstructions—trees, logs, or beaver dams—block the way and the stream must gather force to push on through. Other times rocky places demand hard work before they are washed clean. Narrow spots are encountered between hills or high banks; some concentration is necessary for passing through. Then on it flows into open areas.

Our living at Graceland was similar in some respects. I spent many hours in hard study. Sometimes the academic load and home demands slackened, and we felt free and eager for a Sunday afternoon drive over the hills surrounding Lamoni. Problems arising now and then within the family demanded some concentration and ironing out. Our children needed care and attention. We include these as part of our Graceland experience.

The things I did at Graceland reshaped the course of my life in many ways. One change concerned my occupation. My original intentions were to go to Graceland and take the few religion courses offered, then after my two years there, continue in construction work. With the knowledge received I thought I could better serve in the congregation I would attend.

While studying at Graceland and through associations with others, I became more aware of existing conditions both within and outside the church and felt a more urgent need for helping others. With that in mind I took several education courses in preparation as a classroom instructor.

At Graceland I learned that religion and religion alone is not enough. A person needs a well-rounded "diet" in many areas to live a full, rich life. This was shown to me through the variety of academic courses offered and those which were required, plus the many other activities in which one can participate while there.

I remember talking to a girl sitting next to me once. I asked her where her home was. She said, "I'm from Canada." Right then I grew, for I had never met anyone from outside the United States. She must have known it, too, because of the surprised look on my face, for she jokingly commented, "What's the matter with you people down here? Do you think we Canadians are supposed to look different from you?"

Since then many new faces and stories from other lands became a part of my Graceland experience. I remember vividly a worship service in the Student Center when the God I had claimed to know expanded and held more meaning for me. In the front of the room stood at least nine persons of different nationalities. Each was given an opportunity to offer prayer to his God in his own native tongue. This was done while I stood there. I heard each pray in his own language. I did not understand any of the words, but that was not so important. What mattered was that I came to realize that the God to whom they had spoken and who had heard their prayers was the same God to whom I had often talked. The phrase "a universal God" took on new significance and fuller meaning.

Before my Graceland experience I thought football players were "rough" and "tough" and never once thought of God and his purpose in man. Then one day prior to a Yellow Jacket ballgame, we who were on the football team gathered around the south goal posts for a short period of prayer and meditation. Here the men talked with God as tears came to their eyes. I thought, How different from my past experience. Then the next day we gave our all in a good clean game of football.

Several courses we took tied in very well with family living. We have been guided and helped by the religion, philosophy, and psychology courses. Child psychology has entered many times in our discussions concerning the conduct of our children. Math and science classes, along with home economics, have helped us with our day-to-day planning and enter in extensively as we project our thoughts into future living together.

While we were in Lamoni with such a full schedule, Joanne and I grew along together. We worked when necessary and played when time allowed, always making sure we had time to be together as a family with our two children.

We think Graceland is a good place for a young couple's first years together. We grew together mentally and spiritually in the Graceland environment, which is more favorable to Christian living than "just any place." While there we formed lifetime friendships with other persons and other families.

Our two young ones, ages eight months and two years, will remember little if any of their Graceland experience, but when they have grown older we expect to answer some questions and tell some stories of those "good old Graceland days" when Elaine and Tim see their pictures as babies in the Graceland Acacias. To date both of them have spent most of their lives as part of the Graceland family. Their questions will then enliven once again our family days at Graceland. They will be told how we as a family worshiped God with friends from many lands; how Judy and Siki from Japan wanted to hold Tim but were a little shy in asking; how our married friends who were looking forward to their own children were always eager to play with our children and to look after them for us whenever necessary. They said, "We need the experience."

As Gracelanders we shall have many rich memories to share with each other as we look back through the years on those days we spent on the "Hill." We do not live for these memories alone, but because of them we will go on together achieving new goals in our activities with our fellow men.

What You Can Do for Graceland

Summary of talk given by Bishop Leslie Kohlman on May 31, 1958, at Graceland's first Parents' Day Assembly

I AM SURE that you, with me, have been deeply moved by the spirit that has motivated the Independence Graceland Mothers' Club and their fine achievement this year in contributing $3,500.00 for this outdoor chapel.

Surely in this the fathers of Graceland are not to be outdone. Some Graceland Fathers' Clubs must be organized. Better still, since this is Graceland's first Parents' Day Assembly, we might well organize some Graceland Parents' Clubs for the purpose of bringing into full reality the expression of our desires, interests, and concerns for Graceland's many needs.

A committee reporting on colleges in America points out that they are successful to a great extent because of the attitude of their alumni. Their spirit and attitude is one of understanding, of being responsible partners, champions for the cause of their respective institutions of higher learning. Parents may well do likewise. The invitation is for you to join hands with the administrative officers, faculty, students, and alumni of this institution to see that its needs are more readily and rightfully met. You may not be able to meet all the needs, but at least in part a real contribution could be made, such as has been demonstrated here this afternoon by the Independence Graceland Mothers' Club.

We believe that "men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness." Therefore, as parents you ought of your own volition to be eager to come to the rescue of Graceland and its many needs. You need not be commanded of God or directed by the church or the college to do so. Work understandingly and co-operatively with the administration in meeting Graceland's needs, but be imaginative and creative about how you as parents might make a greater and a more effective contribution.

On your own, you ought to be aware of your opportunities to assist Graceland. On your own, you ought to seek out ways and means to aid and help this important institution of the church.

It is true that you make some contribution to Graceland's needs on Graceland College Day and through the program of the Alumni Fund. But these opportunities are primarily initiated and ministered by the church and the college. Why not do something significant on your own? Surely this fine group of mothers here this afternoon set before us a marvelous example and illustration of and for this appeal to you as parents.

Know that in this church and in the task of building up the kingdom of God you have a social responsibility. You are to be keenly, socially aware of one another and your needs. This includes the functions of the church at large and its institutions.

I invite you to sit down soon and make a list of the things you might well do to assist Graceland in meeting its many and varied needs. You will be amazed at what you will discover you can do.

For this church and its institutions the call has gone forth for our tithing, surplus, freewill offerings, and consecrations. We have also been made divinely aware that it is a "day of sacrifice." We have need to be aware that the payment of the tithe of increase, and giving of freewill offerings, often without too much sacrifice, but opens the door to that which we might do and have need to do.

Voluntarily we need to make our surplus available for service. Wherein we do not have surplus, we need to make consecrations. These consecrations may be made up of all the interests, talents, and wealth that might be mobilized for service for the church and its institutions.

I have discussed with Don Booz that which might be done for Graceland through wills or bequests. But why wait to make our contributions when we die? Why not now? Surely if we examine the possibilities and together mobilize our resources, much could be done for this institution now.

Remember the spirit that motivates the Independence Graceland Mothers' Club. Let the spirit of consecration and sacrifice reign in your hearts. Know what you can do for Graceland, and do it!

Graceland at 26?

THE DECISION took two weeks, but as I reflect I wonder how long we were actually being prepared for this change which was to take place in our lives. Truly the Lord works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform.

It was the summer of 1957 and around our house there was much discussion about where we should spend that precious vacation. We wanted to go to the Kirtland Reunion, but some of our friends advised, "Oh, don't go there. Take the children to the beach where they can have fun and you can relax." —I won't go into detail; I'll just say that we went to Kirtland Reunion.

The first two days were hectic. It rained. The children were cranky, and in general we were having a difficult time adjusting to our tenting experience. We almost went home at one point. Then things began to happen. Peace reigned supreme throughout the camp, and the Spirit truly ministered to everyone, including the children. As the reunion progressed, I remember feeling an unusual desire not to leave. I wished that we might remain in this peaceful place where the Spirit hovered so near.

On Wednesday morning we attended prayer service and something happened to both of us. We look back on this as a unique spiritual experience and one which cannot be penned. That afternoon we went into Cleveland and visited with a doctor who had come to this country from Europe a few years ago. This man and his family impressed us deeply. He had been a doctor in his native land, but the educational requirements here made it necessary for him to retrace his steps and he had just completed the required internship. They had sacrificed and persevered. Yes, he and his family had given their all to accomplish this goal. He showed us his small, drab office (his first) with pride, and we could sense that he was devoted to the service of others and consecrated to his work.

John, Pat, Christopher, and Carol.
John is a sophomore at Graceland, and Pat is secretary to Dr. Grice

John had been a member of the church for just a little over a year. He had been told to prepare himself for a greater service. Perhaps this challenge meant to study, to attend church, and to live a good life. Could it mean more than that? Was the Lord going to require a sacrifice of us? As we drove back to the Temple for evening services, we passed an apartment house where several young families were living in less than modest surroundings. I asked myself, "Would you be willing to sacrifice your new home if John wanted to go to college?" At this same moment he asked, "What would you say if I said we were going home, sell our house, and go to Graceland for four years? We are still eligible for the GI Bill benefits." I was overwhelmed with his confidence, and the only logical answer could be "Let's go."

For the remainder of this memorable week we sought counsel from those we felt qualified to give it. We prayed and asked others to remember us that this decision which was so important to our future might be made wisely.

This was in the middle of August, and on September 4 John was walking up "the Hill." Can you imagine how he felt—twenty-six years old with a wife and two children, while all around him the carefree laughter of college kids rang in his ears?

I was left at home to sell our house and complete our affairs. The recession which had just begun added greatly to our problems. The ensuing months were difficult. It took until Christmas to get our affairs straightened out. How many times we felt like turning back! How many ways Satan used to discourage, to unravel and twist our faith! The earnest prayers of our friends in Toledo, our newly acquired friends in Lamoni, and others were answered in the Lord's own time as he saw fit. How marvelous is his wisdom and planning! How much superior to our own! Those months of darkness gave us both the added courage and patience we were going to need for the journey ahead. We had much growing to do to measure up to the privilege he had given us.

One school year has passed, and we are beginning another year of problems and of progress. We don't feel the least bit out of place here on the Hill, although sometimes we look in the mirror and laugh and wonder how old we really look to the younger students. It is our sincere hope that we can always exemplify to young men and women the importance of a Graceland education, whatever the cost, whatever the age.

The Fall of TV's Quizzes

THE TV QUIZ program—the opiate of the masses—has at last fallen. And great was the fall of it.

It began with Dotto. When a contestant on the TV quiz show revealed he was briefed on answers beforehand, television audiences were slow to believe.

Then others added their testimonies. Soon the scandal spread to other popular television quiz programs, including Twenty One and $64,000 Challenge.

Time magazine reported that as evidence stacked up, it became apparent that some of the biggest TV programs that have held millions spellbound for months were no more than cleverly produced dramas with a script and actors who were briefed not only on the answers but on what to wear, how to cut their hair, and how to struggle for an answer in an isolation booth.

With the public rapidly becoming disenchanted and switching to other programs, sponsors are beginning to withdraw some of their quiz programs. The ones that remain on the air will certainly suffer in popularity because of the suspicion that they, too, are crooked.

People who once won thousands of dollars every Saturday evening by reciting answers to questions they already knew will now have to look for some kind of honest work. And the millions of people who sat in their easy chairs and watched them do it will have to wipe away the dreams of easy fortunes and return to reality.

Certainly the mass appeal of the quiz shows was based on greed. This emotion was fed by the sight of easy money. Some shows capitalized on this to the extent of making the easy money seem available to one and all. This was done by "audience participation," i.e., people at home could send in post cards or call in their answers and share in the loot.

What made us want to watch the shows? Was it the nervous ungrammatical little fellow, who looked and acted just like any other citizen off the street, who stepped up and easily won thousands of dollars? Did we see ourselves doing it, too?

Perhaps it was the mental picture of what we would do with several thousand dollars if we won. (Did giving 10 per cent to the Lord enter the picture?)

Perhaps part of the wonderment that intoxicated us was the spectacle of the sponsors "giving away" so much money every week. Actually, the huge sums that other sponsors spend on big name performers makes the quiz shows look like a bargain for their sponsors. The companies that advertised on the quiz shows were buying millions of people's viewing time relatively cheap. And we fell for it. This, we said, was more entertaining and important than turning off the set to visit friends, or reading a book, or going to prayer meeting.

It is a little painful now that we know how badly we were taken in to hear the comments of the men who fed us the stuff we swallowed. However, it should also be instructive to know the morals back of the medium we sometimes slavishly worship.

"Look, this may be a quiz business to the housewives of America, but to us, it's the entertainment business. There's no reason for the public to know what happens behind the scenes," one TV quiz producer said.

That is supposed to be the justification for misleading millions of people! To Christians it should be a revelation. It should bring to mind scriptural warnings about the dangers of setting up golden idols.

You say you don't worship the TV idol? Then you are wonderfully unlike the majority of your brothers. The number of TV watchers in America has grown at a rate that is startling. It would surely warm any pastor's heart if the same rate of growth took place in his congregation.

Twelve years ago—within the memory of most people who will read this—there were only ten thousand television sets in America and less than a dozen stations. There was no such thing as a TV network, a TV star, or a TV commercial.

Today in the United States there are more than forty million television sets. Four out of every five families have one. And there are over five hundred stations. Surveys show that the average TV family has the set on six hours a day. People spend more time watching television than they do reading, writing, or conversing. Only sleep and work take more of their time.

However, now that the TV public has been shaken awake, perhaps the picture will change. Would it be too much to hope for a revival of reading and perhaps even conversation? If that is expecting too much, perhaps we can hope for a little more wisdom from the public in choosing the type of TV program that will be watched.

We are people who believe in stewardship, and that includes stewardship of time. Certainly gluing ourselves to a medium that indulges in dishonesty and promotes the sins of greed and laziness does not fit into our pattern of stewardship.

One TV executive suggested: "We can solve this quiz show scandal very simply. All we have to do is announce, 'This show is fixed. Mrs. Smith is going to win it. Stay tuned in and see how she does it!'"

A better suggestion is don't tune in. Leave the set off until television can offer something better to consume our time.

What Graceland has Meant

these things." It meant an awareness that we could receive material values from Graceland. Proof of this came as I was approached by two of the leading professional football teams in the nation.

June came and I was on the platform with the others as President Gould spoke: "And the success of this class cannot be measured today or tomorrow, but in the years to come." As he said this I looked to the far horizons and saw my David and Mark and Jane coming back to Graceland with our friends' children. Then I knew that Graceland is a lifetime experience. I realized that Graceland meant an awareness of the world view of life and the people in this view. It meant I could faintly glimpse the pattern of the way my family, my Graceland, and my church could fit into this world view. It meant I could truthfully say, "For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself?" (Luke 9: 25)

Let's Use a Little Psychology

FOR SOME YEARS, Henry C. Link, who is now best known for his book The Return to Religion, believed that all the answers to man's personality difficulties could be found in the psychology and guidance books. However, as he counseled people with problems, he suddenly came to realize that he was advising them to do what Christ advised people with similar problems to do, and that when this advice was followed the personalities of the people involved began to improve. It became clear to Mr. Link that Jesus is the answer to man's problems, and that even as he is the Master Physician, so is he the ideal Person—also the way to become the ideal person. All psychology, as we know it, is based on his teachings, but only in Christ himself is found the actual changing power.

Jesus is concerned that we be happy and joyous, and only he knows how we can become such people. He loves us, and our basic need is love. When we know how much he loves us, we come near to him; then we see what he is, and what we are not. But because he loves us, we are not afraid of him—ashamed to our depths as we be—and presently we begin to see in him what, with his help, we may possibly become. Even though we despair of arriving at his perfection we feel that he believes we have infinite possibilities and that he is hungry for our love, and we are drawn to him.

Mere "book" psychology has no such appeal to us, as does this. We have to see, in person, what love is, and the Christ is irresistible.

We need not only to be loved but also to love others. The person who loves only himself can eventually go insane.

Probably that is one reason that people grow up in family circles. We have the security of being loved first and then of giving love, and the giving of love is the sign of developing maturity.

Nowhere in the world is the Christ pattern of behavior more needed than in the home. It has been said that home is the place where we are loved the most, and where we behave the worst; quite often this is true. We take love for granted—and to an extent we should—but we sometimes abuse it terribly. The growing divorce rate bears record to the fact that human love may die.

Brother Elbert Smith once wrote that selfishness is the greatest cause of divorce. It may manifest itself in many areas—in infidelity, ruthless extravagance, poor housekeeping, nagging, and countless other ways—but basically selfishness or self-love is at the bottom of most failures in marriage.

It is "the little foxes" who, continually nibbling at our self-esteem, often bring us to the breaking point.

ALL OF US need to be believed in, particularly by our companions. There is a difference between conceit, which is bad for all of us, and necessary self-confidence, and wives should realize this. We all make mistakes, but the wife who continually holds up her husband's weaknesses before others is courting trouble. Even if the laughter is often good-natured, that husband may gradually come to see himself as others see him, good-natured, but perhaps bumbling, inefficient, ridiculous even . . . and self-confidence goes.

Why do we women do this? It might shock us if we realized it is often to build up our own selves. We build up our own valuation—or at least we think we do—when we belittle someone else. Actually people pretty quickly realize what we are up to, but in the meantime our husbands are getting hurt. From them we expect chivalry, which hides our little foibles, but the role can work both ways.

Do we criticize our husband's parents before the children and our friends? It's cruel. Children have a right to take their grandparents as they find them, and grandparents have the right to be so taken—without prejudice.

All women love nice things, and most men like their wives to have nice things. But do we try to do cheerfully with what we can afford, or do we sometimes sigh—sweetly of course, but very deliberately—and wish aloud in their presence that they could do for us what Bill is doing for his wife? We can make our husbands, who are often working to the limit to provide what we do have, feel like complete failures. We know what the salary is; we have the spending of most of it; and we know what it can and cannot buy. If we can economize somewhere and make it stretch further—more power to us. But if we can't, we certainly don't make things better for anyone by whining about it.

Most of us like to feel that we are witty, intelligent, attractive. When we women dress up in our best to go out with our husbands we want to be told that we look nice. If it's only a new hairdo, we want it noticed. We can be completely deflated if our "dishpan" red hands are the only thing commented on.

WE LIKE OUR LITTLE jokes to be laughed at. So does the man of the house like to feel that he is witty, humorous, and enjoyed. The man who has eagerly waited for the exact moment in the conversation when his little joke will really go over can scarcely appreciate the wife who pounces on him at the critical instant with "For goodness sake, Bill, don't tell that old story again! I've heard it fifty times!" What is more important to the wife, her own temporary boredom or her husband's temporary enjoyment?

Do we make our husbands diet because we want to lose those extra pounds? Why should we? It's not their fault, and they are entitled to the good meals which they are earning.

Do we act like martyrs when the factory shuts down and our husbands are out of work? Of course they are not busy, but certainly they want to be. They are as worried as we are. It is the time for us to help, and there are ways that we can do it. The good library book (almost all men like detective stories), the games with the children, the little odd jobs about the house that can now be done—all these things can help keep a man's mind off his worries. Men need comfort, not in a maudlin way but in a way that says, "I know you'd rather be at work, but you will be soon. A good smart man like you will find something. In the meantime, it's nice to have you around, and the children enjoy it, too. Let's enjoy you while we have you."

At that, "between jobs" periods are easier on us than on our grandparents. There was no unemployment compensation then.

Shall we women work away from home? No answer can cover all cases, and we wish to be understood on that point. There are cases where the woman must work. She may be a widow; the family may be deeply in debt; the husband may be ill; the income may simply be inadequate. But we must carefully evaluate our reasons. What are they? God has told us that he knows what things we stand in need of, and that if we ask him and put the kingdom first, he will see that we have these things. He does this, too. Many a missionary's wife, whose husband is in the field, can testify to this. Even if she has to work away from home, God somehow opens ways so that she can do this and still raise a splendid family. There are many others of us whose husbands are not under appointment, and who must work. If we, too, put the kingdom first (which in these cases means the rearing of a godly family) God will see us through. We may be able to have only a simple house, but it can be a home. Maybe we can take in sewing, do typing or baking, or care for a child for someone in our homes. Perhaps we can get work where we can be home when the children return from school. God will open the way when we put the kingdom first.

LET'S BE SURE the kingdom is first, in our minds, when we work away from home; otherwise we can't claim God's promise. Do we want a beautiful house with all the newest electrical equipment? Are we trying to justify ourselves by telling the neighbors, "I want a lovely home for the children to entertain their friends in"? Many of us do say this, and some of us really believe it when we say it. But what is happening to the children? We have seen families who had simple little houses that were marvelous homes—homes to which the children and the neighbors' children loved to come after school. There were plain, good, wholesome, loving mothers; there was the smell of gingerbread or cookies in the air, and a warm fire in the range. There were no electric dishwashers, and there were just plain sinks, but God's spirit was in those homes. And we have seen women sometimes grow envious of other women's houses and go out and work till five or six at night, and we have watched their homes deteriorate, their children grow delinquent, and their husbands become bitter. Better a little house with love, with mother, with children sprawled about with books, games, cookies, than a lovely house—empty. Delinquency seldom occurs in homes like these plain ones.

The mother, it has been truly said, is the heart of the home, and the heart belongs in the home. Our children are there only such a little while. They need us. We women weren't designed to live two lives. If we marry, let's make marriage and children our career. If we must have expensive furnishings, let's work a year or two before we marry to earn them, or wait until the children are on their own.

IF WE NEED—really need—to work away from home, God will help us. If we don't need to, if we just don't like housework, are "fed up" with dishes, dusting, and cooking, then we'd better think twice. If our boys, coming home night after night to cold houses, say wistfully, "Mom, I wish you wouldn't work," we'd better listen. Otherwise that plea may knock on the doors of our heart, echoing, and re-echoing when it's too late. When mother's home, it's easier on everyone. When she isn't, everyone is busier than necessary. Children who have to be at school at eight for band practice are tired when they get home at 4:30. They shouldn't have to do the jobs that are mother's jobs, nor should the husband, night after night, have to help with the housework. There are women who, even when they are at home, leave the washing and ironing for Saturday so that the husband and children can help.

We hear a great deal about the "office wife" these days, that type of woman who knowingly and ruthlessly will break up the home of a married man. There are plenty of these women, we must admit, and they are heartless. But home and children are uppermost in the hearts of most good men, and they come home to them tired and weary and in search of love and peace. If love, peace, and appreciation are there, the office wife has no chance. But there is one thing that we can learn from these women. They do know how to make a man feel important, and we could profit by doing the same thing. Our husbands are important, and they need to know that we appreciate them.

Husbands and wives and children and parents all need to find in one another the Christ qualities; those qualities in them that see clearly and love devotedly; that show us, in themselves, the love and beauty of the Master, and that draw us to him; that believe the best of us, and awake the best in us. This is the Supreme Psychology, and the home in which it is practiced is built on the Rock.

Today

Days are more precious than the rarest gems. As I awakened this morning, I thought, What shall I do today to enrich my life and the lives of those around me. Surely there will be opportunities if I look for them. What better than to wish that others have a beautiful day in the service of our Lord.

A determination to move out into his work will enable us to master our lives. Today we can take hold anew of the rod of iron, for unless we do the kingdom of God shall not be built.

God wants us to live such lives that we can continue to receive of his power and his Spirit, and the promise is as we work his Spirit and power shall continue with us, to bless and minister, that many people may be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Today we may begin anew to prepare ourselves by study, so that He can use us in ways of which we have never dreamed. Today can hold a new experience, a new opportunity to express love and render service. As our days are lived, so shall our reward be.

Fill your mind with precious things
Just before the day begins.
Duties old and duties new
Wait to be performed by you.

Take ahold with steadfast heart;
Never from His ways depart.
God is in his heaven above,
Filling every act with love.

General Conference High Lights

Many who attended General Conference visited the "San" and School of Nursing. Their interest gave a spiritual uplift to the personnel endeavoring to render service through this avenue of work.

Another high light was the privilege granted the School of Nursing to participate in the evening program with the other two institutions of learning sponsored by the church. For the first time, these three institutions were brought together and made to realize the potential contribution of their unified efforts to the growth and development of the church. During this service, senior student nurses were given their second blue stripe on their white nurse caps denoting their progress into the third year of nursing education. Junior student nurses were given their first blue stripe denoting progress into their second year of nursing. The forty-two freshman students were present to observe their sister students receive the badge of distinction. The students will receive their "cap" at a special ceremony to be held in the Stone Church on the evening of November 16.

The biggest thrill of the Conference was the assurance of the building of physical facilities to house the School of Nursing. While this allotment of funds only provides the much needed classrooms, it is an assurance of progress in the future. This Conference high light will be a real inspiration to the one hundred and seventeen students presently enrolled in the school, to the six hundred who have gone before, and to the faculty and administration who remain here endeavoring to prepare the young to serve their fellow men.

Three Graduating Classes Hold Reunions

During the week of General Conference the classes of 1938, 1948, and 1955 held reunions.

Mrs. Hazel Stubbart, now residing in Independence, reports that five of the ten members of the class of 1938 attended the reunion on Saturday, October 11. There were letters and news from the other five who were unable to attend. Those here were Margery Sheehy Boon of Springfield, Pennsylvania; Jennie Roberts Ford of Colorado Springs, Colorado; Wilma Gunn Rosenbaum of Independence; Gene Cable Swain, of Lees Summit, Missouri; and Hazel Hartman Stubbart.

Mrs. Lottie Coleman Papenfus reports that there were thirteen of the twenty-four members of the class of 1948 at their reunion on October 8. Letters and pictures sent by absent members were enjoyed by those present. They felt especially privileged in having Jean Nagle attend; Jean is now a missionary nurse in Ghana, Africa, and is home on leave. Others in attendance were Shirley Crowell Botts of Grandview, Missouri; Jean McDonald Carswell and Josephine Thompson Stewart of Kansas City, Missouri; Dorothy Hays of Moberly, Missouri; Eleanor Holm Sandy of Prairie Village, Kansas; Nora Bessmer, Elaine Metcalf, Verna Watters Moreland, Alberta Taylor Steele, Jean Parsons Taylor, and Margaret Wacker of Independence.

Mrs. Clarice Lewis Stacker reports on the class of 1955 that thirteen of the twenty-three members were in attendance. This reunion included husbands and children (nine of each). Class members in attendance were Donna Baker Clifton and Donna Marie Gardner Henderson of Omaha, Nebraska; Patsy Moore Chidister of Fairview, Oklahoma; Merle North of St. Louis, Missouri; Dianne Stiles of Des Moines, Iowa; LaVelle Canfield David, Barbara Luce Bloom, Delores Swoffer Weiners, Jeanne Fizer Carroll, Clarice Lewis Stacker, Eleanor Yale Lewis, Barbara Montgomery Tommey, and Ethel Kronsbein Pettijohn of Independence.

They were confirmed along with Verna Piedt, Nancy Piedt, Wendy Waddell, and Wayne Waddell, who were baptized previously. Elders A. Powell, A. W. Piedt, and J. A. Gendron officiated.

An ordination service was held August 17 for Clarence Land, Fred Piedt, and Gerald McKay. AKU-AKU

By Thor Heyerdahl

Rand McNally & Company

Price $6.95

Thor Heyerdahl is a man of adventure. He first speculated in 1937 that the islands of the South Pacific were inhabited by colonists who set out from the western coast of South America. Combining adventure and intellectual research, he sprang into international prominence by leading the famous Kon-Tiki expedition in 1947. The book Kon-Tiki tells of this expedition and, together with Mr. Heyerdahl's second book The American Indians in the Pacific, advances his theory of the colonization of the Pacific isles by people from America. In 1955 he further pursued his theory by organizing an expedition to Easter Island, Rapa Iti, and the Marquesas Islands.

His present book Aku-Aku is concerned with this expedition, with major emphasis upon the explorations at Easter Island or, in the language of the natives, "Rapa Nui," which is literally translated as the "navel of the earth." Easter Island is a remote island in the Pacific. In Mr. Heyerdahl's own words, "the loneliest island in the world" offered a wealth of adventure as well as intellectual satisfaction. No one had ever been able to penetrate the tabus of the natives of Easter Island nor to answer the questions posed by her history. The island was covered with large statues of a by-gone race. The natives themselves were sometimes light complexioned and red haired.

Senor Kon-Tiki, as the natives called him, was well known before he actually arrived. Because of his fame and because he lived with them, month by month, he won them over and began to solve the puzzles of their secret tabus as well as by archaeological exploration to solve the puzzle of Easter Island itself.

Aku-Aku is difficult to translate. Perhaps the best translation is "guardian spirit." With his own powerful "aku-aku" in communion with the guardian spirits of the natives, Thor Heyerdahl was gradually taken into their confidence, to go with them to secret family caves and find there ancient stone carvings and the legends of cannibalism and civil wars of an age past. The accounts of descent into caves in the earth through passages which would barely allow a human body to pass form an exciting bit of adventure. The uncovering of temple platforms and statues put in place by an ancient civilization quickens the intellect and fans the thirst for knowledge. The conclusions concerning the ancestry of the Easter Islanders and their connection with the original inhabitants of the Americas should be of untold interest to students of the Book of Mormon.

For any who thirst for knowledge, for those who want supporting evidence of the Book of Mormon, and for those who enjoy a good adventure story, Aku-Aku is heartily recommended.

Nauvoo Properties Attract Many Visitors

DURING THE BUSY summer months, thousands of visitors come to the historic properties at Nauvoo. However, more than five thousand three hundred visited the properties in August alone. Some are Latter Day Saints (of our own church and also of other factions) who come to see this place which was so prominent in our early church history. Some are people who are interested in the old buildings which reflect living conditions over a hundred years ago. Others are interested sight-seeing tourists who are just curious.

Thus we have a unique opportunity at Nauvoo. For our own members, we hope to help them feel the atmosphere and enthusiasm of the early Saints. We hope to make our history live for them. Also, perhaps we can learn lessons from our Nauvoo history, too, for not everything about the Nauvoo period was in accordance with our understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

For members of other Latter Day Saint groups, we hope to create an interest in the claims of the Reorganization—that Joseph III became the second president and prophet in accordance with appointment made by his father, the Martyr, and in full agreement with the laws of the church accepted in the early 1830's.

There are many others who come to Nauvoo and hear our message for the first time. We hope to interest these good people in the story of the Restoration of the latter days. Literature is also available, and many interesting discussions are held with some of these visitors.

As they sign our guest registration card, all visitors have opportunity to make any comments they wish. Here are some of the comments of recent visitors.

Very interesting. Third or fourth time here.

And Finally...

WHAT DID HE SAY?

Most classes in journalism at some point in their training are subjected to an experiment in writing up a dramatized crime or accident. The element of surprise and emotional tension must be involved. The dissimilarity of what was seen by these "reporters" is usually astounding.

Written between the lines you have just read is this dictum: "Don't believe anything you hear, and only half of what you see." Of course, that is an extreme interpretation, and therefore it is not spelled out but implied.

I have heard some discussions (arguments) which were not accurately reported also. Even some preachers, God's messengers of truth, have been known to change their "facts" in later accounts of their experiences. Because of a minister's training and avowed devotion to the truth, he carries the responsibility not only for what he says but for what the public thinks he says.

MEMO TO MISSOURI MEMBERS

(from a letter written by Dale Swall, Director of the Colegio Bolivar, Cali, Colombia)
... and if anyone gets Zion built on that end, be sure to let us know, otherwise we'll try our best here.

FAITH AND WORKS

That there need be no quarrel between the fields of religion and medicine is best illustrated by an incident which was related by one of our ministers. Called to the home of a church member to administer to a man suffering from a severe attack of bronchial asthma, he found a doctor already in attendance. When the man's wife attempted to introduce the two men, the doctor said with a smile, "Oh, I already know him. We work together. I work, and he prays."

Leona Hands

START WITH YOURSELF—Good government starts with you. It will be just as good as you—and others like you—make it. You are important. What you do, or fail to do, will strengthen or weaken government just that much.

Remember that God has entrusted you, personally and individually, with a particular mission to perform in applying divine principles to human affairs. You can help to fulfill Christ's prayer: "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Be positive and constructive. Recognize dangers, yes, but don't waste precious time complaining or criticizing. No matter how little you do to bring back the values you think are missing, remember that it will be a step in the right direction. "Better to light one candle than to curse the darkness" is the Christopher motto.

"The Christophers," October, 1958

RAIN PEOPLE

I don't know whether you like the rain, but I do! To me there's something friendly in its pat against the pane. To me the drops seem little people that speak in liquid voices, and with the softly falling rain, my heart rejoices!

Rosalie C. Oliver

A BOOK STEWARD in Oregon wants more church seal jewelry by Monday. Australia needs some books for a reunion. An appointee in Texas is calling about new hymnals. A salesman from Harper's is waiting.

That's usually the tempo in Rosalie Oliver's office at Herald House. Her job is purchasing, promoting, and selling church literature and supplies.

Rosalie came to work at Herald House in 1952. She was not yet a member of the church, although she had taught a primary church school class in Detroit for four years. Later in 1952 she was baptized in the Stone Church by Elder Rigby Leighton who had been her pastor in Detroit.

Her business training included several years of civil service employment in Mobile, Alabama (her original home), and secretarial training at Huffstetler Business College in Mobile.

Since coming to Independence, she has continued her education at the School of the Restoration where she has studied the Book of Mormon, psychology, and Spanish.

She is active in the East Alton congregation where she is secretary for a church school class and a member of the Daughters of Zion.

In 1942 she was married to John J. Oliver, a former professional ice hockey player who is now an engineer for Southwestern Bell Telephone Company in Kansas City.

The Olivers have two children, Judy, thirteen, and Michael, twelve.

Rosalie says she finds her work at Herald House the most satisfying she has ever done. One reason: she has gained a thorough knowledge of the church's great stock of printed literature—plus a working knowledge of all the religious literature printed by other publishers and sold through Herald House.

Film Will Be Available Soon to Stakes and Districts

Conference Movie in Production

A MOTION PICTURE of the 1958 General Conference is now in the process of production and should be ready for distribution by December 1, the First Presidency has announced.

The Audio-Visual Department is working hard to have the new film ready by that date. About fifty copies of the picture will be made so it can be shown in every stake, district, and branch, within six months after it is released.

Most of the film for the movie was shot with a new Arriflex 16mm. motion picture camera recently purchased for the department. The camera has a three-lens turret with wide-angle, normal, and telephoto lenses and shoots sound synchronized film. Additional movie film was taken with smaller, more mobile cameras.

In all, approximately 20,000 feet of film was used. This is now being processed and edited. The film will be used to make up a 30-40 minute movie of the General Conference.

The black and white motion picture with synchronized sound will be the first such record of a General Conference.

Four purposes of the film have been set out in a prospectus:

1. To give an audio and visual report of the 1958 World Conference that will share as widely as possible the spirit and experience of the Conference.
2. To show the finished portions of the Auditorium in contrast with the unfinished portions.
3. To instruct and inspire the church membership.
4. To challenge the membership by showing the interests and actions of the Conference.

The film will show all phases of the Conference—business, worship, classes, and mixers. It will also include a personal statement by the president of the church at the close of the film.

Kenneth Raveill, the photographer who took most of the motion picture, reports that the first part of the film is already processed and has turned out very well.

Further notice will appear as soon as the film is ready for distribution.

Re: the General Conference

We Were Impressed

THIS WAS the General Conference: thousands of visitors from near and far; hundreds of cars in the parking lots and moving along the streets; the big General Conference Chamber in the Auditorium filled with people up to the last row of the balcony day after day; lines of people moving slowly in the queues at the Laurel Club cafeteria; people clustering about the service, information, and educational booths; people browsing in the bookstore; people around the refreshment stands; people talking and listening, greeting friends, asking questions and giving answers.

It was this, and much more than this: a mood, a spirit, a feeling of comradeship and fraternity, a sense of belonging, an identification with something bigger and more enduring than themselves.

And among all the questions, one recurred again and again: "What do you think of the Conference?" And just about as often the answer was, with various reasons appended, "I think it's wonderful!"

It was wonderful. Especially to those of us who live here and work here all the time, and who have always the feeling that we are working for you, the people of the church, many of whom can visit here only when there is a General Conference, if at all.

Let's put it this way: We were impressed. We were impressed with a number of things. This is how it seemed to us.

We were impressed with the mood and the spirit of the people—their confidence, their hopeful and cheerful expectancy of the best, and of good things for the future. They had a wholesome, sincere, and practical faith. If there were exceptions, they were decidedly in the minority, and they created no trouble or concern.

In the business sessions we were impressed with the seriousness and manifest good intelligence and common sense of the delegates as well as the speakers. They discussed things freely but not at too great length. When the time came for it, they made ready and wise use of the previous question, though only when it became necessary. In the voting, it was apparent that the delegates understood what they were doing and made wise decisions.

We were impressed with the fact that almost without exception the church people appreciated the beauty and practical comfort and convenience of the new facilities provided by recent construction: the General Conference Chamber, the east and west porticoes, and other features of the building provided by the gifts of church members. They recognized that while the cost was high, the results are worth the price and are just what are needed.

We were impressed with the general welfare apparent among the church people visiting the Conference. It was quite evident that they have benefited by the good economic conditions prevailing in this country and abroad during the past few years, and that they have used their resources to advance themselves in spiritual, educational, and cultural background.

One further thing should be made clear. While the people were appreciative of all the benefits and blessings of material progress, they were primarily concerned about spiritual conditions in the church and among themselves. This concern was reflected in many ways.

We were impressed with the growth of the Conference in size, in numbers of persons interested and attending and participating in the serious aspects of church work. These people did not come just for a good time, to see friends, or to have a vacation; they came for a real purpose, with the work of the church in mind.

All these trends and tendencies, taken together, are indeed impressive. They inform us of the serious and purposeful interest of the membership in the work of the church. They warn us that General Conference attendance is approaching the maximum that can be accommodated in the present conditions and with the present facilities.

Meanwhile, we rejoice under the blessings of God, for the unity and good spirit of the people of the church. We feel assured that the General Conference has pointed the way forward, and that, under the new leadership of the church, the people will follow. Surely good things await us as a people.

Tithing Statement Filer Count

The tithing statement filer count as of September 30, 1958, shows a gain of 2,015 filers over the corresponding period of last year. The total for the first nine months of 1958 is 23,375.

Of ninety stakes and districts for which we have comparable figures last year, sixty-three have equaled or exceeded the September 30, 1957, count. Of the districts which are lagging, only a few show any substantial decline in number and percentage filing tithing statements.

In the closing months of the year, bishops and bishop's agents will be encouraging those who have not filed for 1957 to do so before this year closes. We shall again follow the policy of sending a "reminder" letter to members enrolled in districts whose statements were received during 1957 but have not yet been received this year.

THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC

New Trustees to Hospital Board

At the October meeting of the Independence Sanitarium and Hospital Board of Trustees, President W. Wallace Smith succeeded his brother, Israel A. Smith, as chairman of the board. President Maurice L. Draper was installed to complete the group of nine members.

During the Conference a new General Church Medical Council was formed with Dr. Vance E. Link as its chairman.

These changes in the trustee members now complete its membership with the total of nine as follows: W. Wallace Smith, chairman; F. Henry Edwards, vice-chairman; G. Leslie DeLapp, secretary; Henry L. Livingston, treasurer; and Maurice L. Draper, Walter N. Johnson, Mayor William Sermon, Judge William J. Randall, and Vance E. Link, M.D.

Reorganization of School of Restoration Board of Trustees

Several changes in the official personnel of the School of the Restoration were made at a meeting of the board of trustees at 10 a.m., Friday, October 31, according to an announcement by President W. Wallace Smith, who was named president of the board. The following were added to the membership of the board: M. L. Draper of the First Presidency; G. E. Tickemyer, president of the High Priests' Quorum; and C. R. Hield, president of the Council of Twelve.

Clifford Cole, who became a member of the Council of Twelve at the recent General Conference, resigned as associate director and dean of the school, and as secretary of the board.

Clifford Buck, the newly appointed director of the Department of Religious Education, was selected as the new secretary of the board.

Members of the board of directors continued in office were F. Henry Edwards of the First Presidency; the three members of the Presiding Bishopric—G. L. DeLapp, H. L. Livingston, and W. N. Johnson; and Z. Z. Renfroe, president of Seventy.

Free Publicity Helps Available

Herald House will send a free copy of "Meet the Editor" to anyone requesting it. The sheet tells how to publicize church meetings in the local newspaper.

Missionaries interested in using newspaper advertising and news stories to inform the public of missionary meetings will find the sheet of helps especially useful. It contains a list of suggestions for submitting news and advertising to the editor and a sample news story.

Requests for free copies of "Meet the Editor" should be addressed to Chris B. Hartshorn, managing editor, Herald House, P.O. Box 477, Independence, Missouri.

What's Coming for "Herald" Readers

The editors have by no means exhausted the Conference story, and plan to present brief articles with pictures on page two which will acquaint the church with the personnel changes in the quorums and departments. Also President W. Wallace Smith's closing day sermon and the ordination prayer by Brother Paul M. Hanson will be presented.

In the next issue will be found an editorial by the Presidency discussing further work on the Auditorium as approved by the last General Conference. An editorial of greetings by the First Presidency will appear in the issue of November 24.

A special issue of the Herald in January will be devoted to the First Presidency, discussing the duties and responsibilities and the law upon which they are based.

A series of articles on "Early Independence in Retrospect" by Pearl Wilcox will start soon. This will be illustrated with many photographs.

Following this we hope to present the autobiography of Elder Myron McConley.

New Men in Christ

By F. Henry Edwards

IT IS CUSTOMARY for the President of the church to preach the opening sermon of the Conference, at which time he has generally looked backward in order to look forward and chart the program of the church. This year, however, because of the special circumstances in which we meet, it would be manifestly improper for anyone occupying the pulpit at this time to intrude on this function.

It remains for me to attempt to sound some clear and fundamental note appropriate to our present situation and basic to such ends as we shall seek during the Conference. This I hope to do, and to this end I sincerely ask a place in your prayers.

Our Essential Concern

In 1858 the General Conference met in a small and unlovely building in Zarahemla, Wisconsin. Now, one hundred years later, we meet in this beautiful building at the Center Place. Then, those participating came from a few struggling branches in Wisconsin, Illinois, and Iowa. Today we have come together from all over the world. In more than one respect, those were the horse and buggy days. This is the space age.

Yet our basic problem is the same. We are still concerned with salvation, for today, as always, man without God is lost. Our problem is not the multiplication of our possessions, nor the race for development of scientific and industrial might, nor the refinement of our means of communication. These have an important bearing on the problem, but our basic responsibility does not lie here. Our major concern is in the realm of the Spirit. Our significant contribution to the development of universal fellowship is in this realm. We seek new men in Christ. The building of such men is the sole justification of the church and of all of her doctrines, resources, sacrifices, and hopes. It was never more clear than now, in the day of man's greatest achievements, that the age awaits the manifestation of the sons of God.

The vast and majestic realms of outer space set fire to the imagination, call anew on the spirit of the pioneers, and bid us conceive our earthly destiny in a framework larger than we ever before dreamed. But those whose knowledge has matured into wisdom are sure that our eternal destinies are not determined here but in our perception of life's true and enduring values, in the faith and hope and courage with which we pursue these values, and in the brotherhood and mutual consideration and capacity for sacrifice which becomes part of us as we labor together under God.

Salvation for moderns is not to be won in the realm of outer space but in the realm of the inner spirit.

Loyalty to Christ Is Central

It is our experience and testimony that men never win this inner victory by themselves. This victory is won and can be won only by new men in Christ, and the most significant thing about such new men is their new allegiance. They have been won by the love of God in Christ. They have received the testimony of the Spirit which Paul says bears witness with our Spirit that we are the children of God.¹ They have sworn their allegiance. They are God's men. Love is the law of their lives. Duty is far surpassed by devotion. The new man sings from his heart:

*Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my life, my best, my all.*

As a people we have looked for example to the Christians of the first generation. These early Saints knew the joy and the costs of such allegiance. It was their testimony that they felt themselves in the grip of a world which was not their own. The Lord Jesus had laid his hand heavily upon them. Paul called himself the bondslave of Christ, saying, "I bear in my body the mark of his branding iron." Peter, reprimanded for preaching the gospel, declared, "We cannot but speak." He knew that there was nothing else for him to do.

For us, redemption means first of all that our minds shall be cast in this mold, that we shall achieve the abandon of a great faith that will lift us out of ourselves and put our power into the control of a Power not our own, the Power that brought Young Joseph to Amboy. It will mean that we do not choose, so much as we are chosen. We who talk so much about restoring primitive Christianity will then go beyond the restoration of some particular doctrine or detail of church organization to the point where we make our new allegiance known in such a manner that men do not merely recognize it but are captured by it and swear a new allegiance for themselves.

Early Saints

I do not want to depict the early Saints unrealistically. They were tempted as are we and had their own shortcomings. But as we compare ourselves with the best of those of whom we have record, we can readily see that our major difficulty as persons lies in the fact that our new man is housed in the same body as the old man who wants to serve himself and not God, or—more accurately—who wants to carry water on both shoulders. We talk of the kingdom, but we tend to envision it in terms of security and peace and well-being. We think of its joys but take out of it all the blood and sweat and tears that belong of right to our finest hour. The old self feels that he must have his own way, his own possessions, his own satisfactions. It was because he faced similar temptations that the Apostle Paul said, "When I would do good, evil is present with me."² Reflecting the reality and sternness of the struggle, he says again, "I die daily."³ It is for this reason that prayer and Scripture reading and worship are vital, that we might be "renewed day by day."⁴

First Things

In parallel manner our deeper problems and failures as a church arise from the fact that while the Spirit of the living God seeks expression in our joint life, so that the church becomes in fact the Church of Jesus Christ, we still put first so many things in which we take delight but in which God has no primary concern. Programs and procedures and prerogatives are important, but they are not primary. They can easily minister to our pride rather than to the cause of the kingdom. Financial and doctrinal stability and security are similarly important. But they are not justifiable ends in themselves. They are the home base for adventure. We must not build our assets in order that we might conserve them, but only that we might invest them in men and in a cause.

Again, study and the development of our theology are important, but we must not refine our understanding of the truth so that we can take glory in a sense of special privilege. We must come to know the truth that we might better proclaim it in the market place, risking the attacks of all comers, confident that the truth will provide its own vindication and that our own agonies of understanding will in time be the ministers of our glory. These are the most vulnerable and at the same time the most rewarding investments possible. We will make them gladly when we are captured by the steady excitement and the abiding glory of full dedication to the building of the kingdom of God under God's own Son.

Jesus Measures the World

Dr. Halford E. Luccock has reminded us that there were two occasions on which the Lord Jesus looked on the world and measured it. The first occasion was when the devil took Jesus to a very high mountain and showed him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, and said, "All these will I give you, if you will fall down and worship me." And Jesus looked at that world and measured it, with all its thrones and shining palaces. To his mind it was worth nothing—nothing at all—compared with doing the will of God.

Dr. Luccock goes on to say that on the other occasion when Jesus measured the world it was again from a hilltop. This time from the crest of Calvary. From Calvary Jesus looked out on a world of sin and need. He measured it in terms of this need and found that to serve and to save the world was worth everything. So he gave his life a ransom for many. It may be that we shall never have the kingdoms of this world offered to us, but we do have the lure of planning life entirely in terms of personal gain.

If we are to follow the pattern of Jesus, we shall measure such possibilities as worth nothing in comparison with the high glory of doing God's will. As Paul put the alternatives: "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord." New men in Christ know that the world which needs us so much is entirely worth serving and saving.

Misuse of Religion

In the light of these measurements, consider the subtle and persistent temptation, which we meet on every side, to make religion serve us when we should serve it. For example, there is the currently popular teaching which lays constant and seemingly exclusive emphasis on the physical and mental benefits to be derived from the religious life: peace of mind, the ability to make a success of life and to find in life the maximum happiness. But to practice the religious life only because of its present satisfactions is to exploit it, and at the same time to miss its greater values.

The religious life can do great things for us, but the religious life also demands great things from us. And this is its glory, not its weakness. It is true that our Lord constantly offered men inner peace. But he never stopped there. As a matter of fact, he rarely began there. Even more constantly he emphasized and re-emphasized the cost of discipleship. "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way." ". . . if any man will come after me, let him deny himself" was what he taught.

Stewardship

The essence of apostasy is that a man should put himself and his own interests first, forgetting God and his brother; that he should refuse to seek the Lord and establish his righteousness, but instead should walk in his own way and after the image of his own god.⁵ To overcome this is a truly miraculous achievement. It is repentance on the grand scale envisioned by the Lord Jesus. It does not involve mere change of mind but the re-direction of the entire personality because of a heartfelt change of loyalty.

This is what stewardship envisions. He who has hitherto worked for himself now works for God. The true steward's attention is centered not on what he makes by being a steward nor on "keeping the law" (which is a Mosaic concept) but on the joy of service for love's sake.

Stewards are new men in Christ. We do ourselves and the kingdom the worst kind of disservice when we equate the term "steward" with anything less than this. Stewardship has a great deal to do with how we manage our possessions; but this is not its basic character. We have the highest kind of authority for saying, "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity [the pure love of God] it profiteth me nothing."⁶

It is to this level of love that we are called—the love of God which governs every relationship of life. And, in their hearts, even worldly men know this. There was a time when it seemed that the church might justify herself by the facility with which members and ministers handled the word of God. But the climate of expectation has changed. The level on which the kingdom must be defended today is a different level than that of a hundred years ago. The demonstration of stewardship was important then; it is vital now.

Gift of a King

In the Scripture lesson we read the will of King David. Lawyers have said that it would stand probate in any court. Here the aged king tells of his great love for the house of God and his enormous preparation in gathering the materials with which to build this house. He then records his personal possessions which are now set aside for this work "a treasure of mine own of gold and silver"—estimated by some as the equivalent of twenty billion dollars today—and says, "I give it unto the house of my God." To this staggering gift is added a challenge to the royal court, as the will would be read: "Who then of you offereth willingly to fill his hand this day unto God?" That is a question for all of us. Do

President
F. Henry
Edwards

we give according to the hand and the heart of a king? Do we give as to the King of kings? When we face this question, enlightened by the Spirit, as new men in Christ, we know that no offering is adequate unless it is part of the presentation of "our bodies, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service."

Revival

It is imperative for the effective achievement of our purposes under God that there shall be constantly maintained among us a spirit of revival. Individually and collectively we need to be sharply awakened by fresh reminders of the love of God, inspiring us—of its own quality—to a similar love for our fellows. Individually and collectively we need to be called anew to face the realities of both time and eternity, that we shall make our investments in values which endure. Individually and collectively we need to be challenged again to undergird our finest dreams with solid accomplishment in the realm of the kingdom.

The Lord has made marvelous provision for this ministry of revival and of power by giving us the services of the Order of Evangelists. It has been heartening to see the number of evangelists increasing from year to year. Those to be ordained at this Conference will bring the membership of the order to more than one hundred. But the primary blessings available from the order functioning at its best are not solitary and never-to-be-repeated pronouncements to individuals, important though these pronouncements may be. We look to the fathers of the church to bless us again and again with their living testimonies to the love of God in Christ, with sound and clear prophecies of the kingdom which is guaranteed by that love, and with counsel which shall augment our own discernment and so enable us to walk more surely in the Way of Truth.

Tangible Gains

Of parallel importance with this ministry of spiritual guidance is the ministry of specific and tangible performance. Idealism can degenerate so readily and so quickly into mere dreaming, and spirituality can so easily be conceived in terms of emotion and nothing more. It is fully possible for men of good intention and congregations of faithful churchgoers to imagine themselves the people of God when no visible evidence of their devotion is ever forthcoming: the poor go unfed; churches go unhoused; and missions go unmanned.

The Lord has therefore made marvelous provision for the ministry of practical wisdom which is rooted in high priestly concern for the souls of men, by giving us the services of the Order of Bishops. Membership in the Order of Bishops is increasing more slowly than in the Order of Evangelists, but ordinations contemplated at this Conference will bring the total number of bishops to forty. Of necessity the bishops place great stress on compliance with the law of tithing. This we should do, without neglecting the weightier matters of the law, but we should take special care lest our compliance, inadequate though this is in some areas, should lull us into a satisfied conviction that we have thereby fulfilled the whole purpose of God.

The law of tithing is a heaven-sent guide to indicate that portion of their increase which those who love God should give him of their glad free will for the prosecution of missionary work and a few related purposes. But the church is called to do far more than this, and our awareness of obligation has broadened and deepened to the point where we feel called to do more than can ever be accomplished with the means provided by tithing alone. We must give to the Lord "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together." And this will not come from stressing our sense of duty and of obligation, but rather from renewed awareness of what God has done for us. The Apostle Paul had this in mind when he wrote to the Roman Saints: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God [that is, in light of all the good gifts of God to us], that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." If we do this we shall be not conformed to this world: but we shall be so transformed by the renewing of our minds that we shall prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect will of God.⁷

Evangelism

Added to these imperatives is a third which is of equal importance. It is in the nature of the Christian enterprise that those who have been won shall in turn win others. There is a sense in which this high privilege is shared by all. The love of God calls for the love of man, and this love reaches out to other men. This shared experience of the church as a body is in the background of everything else that may be done by individuals and by quorums and is a significant factor in determining the strength and the direction of our total missionary endeavor.

Out of this background, in these days when so many of our number are traveling in far places, many who are quite young and who may also be inexperienced nevertheless manage to carry an effective testimony to lands where no prior evangelism has been attempted. This is in the pattern set through the ages by new men in Christ. Everything possible should be done to maintain and strengthen the missionary passion in the church at home, out of which this distant testimony comes. And we should continue to support those who are carrying the light into dark places, as has been done through such agencies as our committee on ministry to armed forces and other ministries of the church.

Sometimes the strengthening of the work in distant places is done so quietly, so humbly, and so unobtrusively that it passes almost unnoticed. Of this sort is the work of such people as Marilyn Sorden, who found employment in Germany and is now living there, simply in order that she may serve as a church member and fit in as may be needed with the other Saints of the mission. Such people are not well known, and there are similar cases even less widely known. But surely such advance guards of the kingdom are known to God.

Organized Advance

These personal ministries extend the church without demanding heavy investments by the church. They are part of our rightful endeavor and should be supported, as fully as they may be, as part of our saintly life. But the planning and execution of the more orderly advance of the church has been divinely committed to the Apostles and their associates of the Seventy. These carry the burden of our missions abroad. They may well build on such initial enterprises as I have just mentioned; but they cannot be required to do so, or our attempted advance will become so widely diffused as to be ineffective. Now this organized advance, while truly glorious, demands careful and long-time planning and heavy financial investment. The Twelve and Seventy need to feel the support and the sympathetic understanding of the church in this work, and should not be distracted from the laying of sound foundations by irresponsible demands that the work should be opened up, officially, in new areas for which adequate preparation has not been made.

In contrast with such unprepared penetration of new fields is our work in the Spanish-speaking countries. Apostle Charles R. Hield and those directly associated with him have worked wisely and faithfully and with considerable skill in providing Spanish literature, in seeking Spanish-speaking leaders, and in assessing the areas of greatest promise for our future advance. Other General Church officers concerned have been understanding and co-operative. Funds have been invested. A good work has been begun. Let us continue this good work as new men in Christ who are impelled by love, who work in fraternal concern for each other, and whose passion for souls is paralleled by willing obedience to the disciplines which effective ministry requires.

Ministry at Home

The work in these far places has a glamour of its own. Actually, on the spot, it is frequently laborious and discouraging. The work nearer at hand, the only field that is available to the vast majority of us, must also be pushed by new men in Christ as part of the total endeavor carried forward in his name.

The late President Israel A. Smith was a man of quiet wisdom. In one of our conversations in the Presidency a few years ago we were discussing the missionary resources of the church. Without any seeming awareness that he was saying simply and effectively something which is of absolutely vital importance to the rate of our advance, President Smith commented, in essence: "Thank God that we have the Twelve and the Seventies who can devote themselves to the work of their calling as the chief missionaries of the church. We ought to support them in every way. But we must remember that they are not the only missionaries of the church. If the teachers and the deacons are to 'invite all to come to Christ,'⁸ then it is obvious that evangelism is one of the built-in functions of the entire priesthood. Every stake and district and branch should do its part in winning men for Christ and should do so, as we have been commanded, in order that the Twelve and the Seventy shall be freed to push the work into the new fields opening up before us."

Education

There is one further imperative to which I call your attention. This, too, is in the nature of the Christian enterprise; it is that those won to Christ feel obligation to develop their God-given talents as a means of service. They do this in order that their insights shall be broadened and deepened and clarified by the distillation of the experience of the race, so that the offering which they bring shall be sound and wise and effective.

For most of us, the day is past when we look askance at education, regarding it as the enemy of humble and heartfelt devotion. Indeed, there are areas in which the pendulum seems to have swung in the other direction, and education is regarded as an end in itself rather than as a means to the refinement and quickening of personality. What we now need, as always, is to learn of the Spirit how the knowledge which so frequently ministers to pride can become the handmaid of loyal service. Here, as always, the Lord Jesus is our example and guide. It was not the sheer fact of his self-sacrifice that made him the world's Redeemer. It was the kind of Self that he sacrificed. He gave himself out of love, but this love was informed by an infinitely wise understanding of our deepest needs.

Aids to Learning

The Conference will consider many matters having direct or secondary relation to our responsibilities in the field of education. As the necessary personnel and finances become available, our educational institutions must be strengthened and enlarged. We shall never be able to keep up with the demands. It is not even desirable that we should attempt to do so. Throughout the church there are and will be many who cannot attend Graceland or train at the Sanitarium. Some of these can be helped through the School of the Restoration. But there remain many children and young people in whom the foundations of knowledge must be well and truly laid. The obligations here are on the parents of the church, and on the teachers in our schools. But many of these parents will find that the best that they can do for their children is to set examples of concern about education which will be observed and acted on by the coming generation.

In the everyday walk of life, the finest thing that we can give to others who journey by our side is the aspiration and balance and faith which we ourselves display. The cause of the kingdom will be steadily advanced as the climate of our church and home life is characterized more and more fully by concern for the larger life to which education opens so many doors.

New Men in Christ

In this Conference we shall seek to achieve common consent on the highest possible level, which means that we shall seek it according to the covenants and commandments as these are understood by men of faith who are enlightened by the Spirit.

Throughout the Conference, and after the Conference is over and we return to our homes, we shall need to beware of the distractions which can divert our endeavors into secondary channels and leave undeveloped the primary ministries which are our special concern under God. Let us learn of him what is primary. Let us think and teach and pray and legislate in light of this revelation of his will. Let us commit ourselves to tasks which are impossible except for new men in Christ. Let us approach every such task in the spirit of worship and the occasions of worship and yet with deep awareness of the practical demands of our great task. Let us give rightful support to those who shall be called to positions of leadership in all the areas of our church endeavor. And let us make this support effective by accepting the responsibilities of our personal and group stewardship, as those who live daily by virtue of the gracious providences of our heavenly Father.

New Explorer Program

THIS MONTH a new Boy Scout Explorer program is being made available for our church. It was formulated after extensive research and wide consultation with religious leaders, educators, and youth leaders. The new program will appeal to youth and to youth leaders because of its flexibility in method of operation, larger role of boys in leadership, emphasis on special interest groups, more coed social activities, new optional uniforms, and less emphasis on badges and awards. All in all, it will be a closer cousin to the Zion's League.

When directors of the Boy Scouts of America were looking for a name that would typify their new program for high school age boys, they found that nothing could describe it better than "Exploring," which means "to reach for or after something." The primary purpose of the program is to help the youth look into the future and prepare himself for it.

Teen-age Concerns

Taking their problems to the Survey Research Center at the University of Michigan, the Scouters asked, "What do teenagers really worry about? What is it they want to do with their leisure? How do they react to parents' and peer pressure? Are they concerned about the future?"

Question after question was aimed at the representative group of the two-and-a-half million boys who were fourteen through sixteen years old. The results and their analysis were the "tools" used to lay the foundation of the new program. It would be difficult to give an accurate rundown of the entire program, but in general here is what the group was concerned about and the answers provided through Exploring.

1. What will the boy do once he graduates? A surprising number were very concerned about their future vocations, while very few had definite ideas of what their lifelong jobs would be.

Exploring offers as part of a six-point program a variety of experiences that allow a young man to investigate various businesses, trades, and professions.

2. What about the fair sex? Many boys had never had proper coaching on the common social graces connected with dating. Not knowing what to do, they adopted a boorish or rough-hewn attitude and soon found themselves without dates.

The new Explorer program for high school age young men offers two options of dress as modeled by the two young men in the photograph. The man on the left wears the new dark-blue blazer, gray slacks, maroon tie, and black shoes, while the young man on the right is dressed in the traditional dark-green Explorer uniform.

Exploring encourages several different types of events and social affairs that require common knowledge of proper manner. Social events with cold participation, dad-and-son parties, parents' night, and other activities give ample opportunity for help on social graces.

3. Personal fitness concerned the boys, though many thought it was not a grave situation.

Exploring is putting strong emphasis on group and individual sports that normally are ignored until later in life. Games such as golf, handball, archery, and others that can be carried into adult life will be stressed. The outdoor adventure factor will also prove of help in strengthening muscles and straightening backs.

Report of the Committee on Ministry to College People

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This report was received too late for use in the General Conference Bulletin.)

To the First Presidency

Two thirds of our church young people enrolled in colleges during the past school year were in attendance at institutions other than Graceland College and the School of Nursing. These two institutions of the church do presently provide educational opportunities flavored with an uplifting awareness of divinity for two thirds of our new students starting each fall. The trends of college enrollments and the uncertain prospect of immediate large scale expansion of the church's educational institutions indicate that the proportion of church people enrolled in other colleges and universities will increase. In June, 1958, the Committee had names and addresses of 1,288 students in 224 different colleges and universities in ten different nations. One of the major concerns of the Committee on Ministry to College People is to serve these people with as much as possible of the same fine ministry offered students enrolled in our church educational institutions.

The other major concern of the committee during the past eleven years is with members who have entered professional fields after acquiring specialized training and who so often have let the pressures of work and of social situations take a toll of their appreciation and support of religion.

Ministry to Students

The specific objectives in ministry to students have evolved since the initial appointment of the Committee in 1947. The following points are a summary of our present objectives:

1. To encourage and strengthen the total movement toward increased study and advanced education.
2. To assure a commensurate growth in religious understanding and spiritual maturity.
3. To motivate our college people to utilize their special training in service to Christ and his church.
4. To increase the opportunities for fellowship and intermarriage among our college youth.
5. To utilize the public relations and missionary opportunities occasioned by the organization and official college recognition of our college student groups.
6. To contribute to the historical movement of the Restoration in its dual emphasis on study and faith, spirit and intellect, heart and mind, worship and knowledge.

Procedures

The procedures of the committee are illustrated by a description of the activities directed toward students during the preceding two-year period by the subcommittee under the chairmanship of Dr. James VanBiber.

1. Since June, 1956, the number of our members known to be enrolled in colleges and universities other than Graceland and the School of Nursing has increased from 785 on 120 campuses to 1,288 on 224 campuses. A summary of this information is attached at the end of this report.
2. The distinct and universal name of Liabona Fellowship has been granted to our organized campus groups which have increased from nine to twenty.
3. The number of Regional College Student Conferences organized and conducted with the aid of committee members has increased from four in 1957 to eight in 1958. Regional Student Conferences were held this year in Toronto, Ontario; Auburn, Alabama; Iowa City, Iowa; Columbia, Missouri; Stillwater, Oklahoma; Lawrence, Kansas; San Jose California; and East Lansing, Michigan.
4. During 1957-58 some fifty college and university campuses received personal visits from Committee members.
5. During the past two years qualified members have represented the church in the Religious Emphasis Week activities of some eight different colleges and universities.

6. Under the editorship of Mr. Harley Morris, now of Independence, Missouri, some two thousand copies of the University Bulletin have been sent out quarterly to students, faculty members, appointees, members of the Professional Teachers Association, and interested subscribers.
7. The Campus Directory giving information on colleges in church towns in the U.S.A. and Canada was revised and distributed as an aid in directing new and transferring students to schools affording church privileges.
8. An experimental Campus Leader's Handbook has been prepared and distributed for the assistance of the organized student groups on twenty campuses. Most of this work was done as a project of the group at the University of Kansas.
9. The Student Committee has co-operated with Central Missouri state and the Liabona Fellowship at Central Missouri State College in raising funds to purchase a Student Center for our 120 students at Warrensburg with a supporting dormitory.
10. A University Scholarship Loan Fund has been started with contributions from the students at four regional conferences.
11. A subcommittee on scholarship information has collected and distributed material on available scholarship aid.
12. The locating of faculty members of the church on campuses particularly in need of leadership and ministry to students has been more effectively encouraged.
13. A biennial conference of faculty sponsors and campus group officers was held in January, 1957, with an attendance of fifty.

The rich dividends attributed partly to the committee's work and partly to the growing interest and ability of the church at large to minister to college students are reflected in the mounting enthusiasm of our students toward personal righteousness and in their determination to qualify for a distinctive contribution to the mission of the church. Individual and group projects initiated by students have added to our missionary and public relations efforts on campus and have motivated students to move out under the power of their own initiative to serve both at home and abroad. More and more are focusing their eyes upon Zion and the kingdom as the central motive in their personal and professional expression.

With some exceptions the active cores of our university groups continue to be represented in the increasing number of students which Graceland and the San feed into our colleges and universities. While the committee continues to help bring the best possible ministry to our students throughout the world, it should be recognized that the initial experience at Graceland or our School of Nursing contributes immeasurably to the motivating force which prompts our students toward Christ-centered lives.

Ministry to Professional People

The second objective of the committee has been directed toward "professional" people of the church, those with specialized training or experience. The desire has been to challenge such people to a much fuller use of their professional skills in the direct service of the kingdom. We continue to believe that the professional's examination of himself and his field in the light of the divine call to every man to fulfill God's purposes in him will open up channels of service that enrich the man and that contribute indispensable factors in hastening the work of the kingdom. We believe also that the most effective challenge is one which stimulates the initiative of our members to the analysis of their own fields and to the thoughtful offering of themselves in the program of the church at local, district, and General Church levels.

The procedures for accomplishing this purpose are still the subject of study and trial. Two and three years ago a series of experimental clinics were held. A Regional Professional Council was formed. Proposals were lodged with many church members urging a voluntary calling together of persons in selected professional areas for a detailed analysis of their own field in relation to church mission and program. A census of church members in certain specialized vocations has been maintained and has turned up several hundred names. In addition many specific requests for participation by professional people in ministry to students have been met.

The achievements of the committee among professional people cannot be clearly defined. The committee's activities have contributed somewhat to the growing expression of desire among college graduates for a fuller integration of themselves into activities of significance to the church. Since playing a part three years ago in the origin of the R.L.D.S. Professional Teachers Association, the committee has watched with interest the growth of other professional associations.

The need has been felt for more complete information concerning the training and experience of church members. Accordingly the committee undertook last fall a pilot project on the systematic collection of vocational information on members in a limited number of categories. The half-time services of Miss Margaret Christensen of Berkeley, California, were obtained for a year. Following many consultations with church officers and with survey experts, Miss Christensen devised a vocational questionnaire coded for effective availability of information and sent out 1,743 copies to members in several professional categories and to all high priests. The 1,251 returns constitute a file which is of assistance to General Church officers and to the existing professional associations.

The Future

Our aims for the immediate future in ministry to students touch all of the items previously listed as objectives in view of the needs among the rapidly growing numbers of church member students outside of our own schools. We contemplate a larger corps of regional representatives for liaison with students, the organization and official university recognition of more Liahona Fellowship student groups, the recommendation of additional Student Centers with supporting dormitories, expansion of the program of Regional Student Conferences, and the building up of more adequate student loan funds. Most pressing is the need for the appointment of counselors with financial support for nearly full-time service on campuses having seventy-five or more student members.

The committee notes with pleasure the appointment of the new Committee on Higher Education and offers its co-operation in reaching a balanced program of higher education in relation to the church.

In ministry to professional people the new professional associations are already making a unique contribution. The committee is eager to co-operate in any helpful way but feels that its own functions in this area need to be redefined. The significance to the church of an alert and consecrated body of skilled specialists is so very great that every means of stimulating and using their services should be explored.

Personnel

The present membership of the committee includes Dr. Margaret Barker, Ed Ford, Dr. E. J. Gleazer, Jr., Carl Mesle, Harley Morris, Dr. Evan Shute, Dr. James VanBiber, and the chairman, Dr. L. O. Brockway.

Additions to the subcommittee on Ministry to Students include Dr. Harold Condit (representing Graceland College), Byron Constance, Bernard Galbraith, Miss Nelle Morgan, Reginald Smith, and Harold Summers. Bernard Galbraith is chairman of the campus visiting committee, and Dr. F. M. McDowell is chairman of the scholarship committee. Other student committee members are Howard Baltz, R. Edwin Browne, and Dr. Dwight Davis.

The volunteer efforts of the local "secretariate," of the Regional representatives, faculty advisers, local pastors, and many others whose hearts, minds, and time go out in service to students can be mentioned but not adequately recognized in a short report. A final word of appreciation is well deserved by two former office secretaries—Miss Lillian Wilkinson, now in Manchester, England, and Miss Jan Young, now back in college.

L. O. Brockway, Chairman

Allowances for Children

ALL OF US FACE the the problem of giving allowances when our children begin to grow up. When should we begin? How much should we give? Should we direct our children in handling an allowance? Should we give continual advice? Should we let them learn how to handle money through experience? What about tithing and offerings? How much should the child be responsible for buying outside of luxuries?

Several years ago, while doing child welfare work, I found it often my painful duty to advise temporary foster parents on this subject that is very important to children if not to parents.

I regret not having had the experience of child rearing then that I have now, although I had the advice of good supervisors. Over a period of cases and through the experience of rearing a family, I have discovered certain attitudes and methods that work better in training a child's thinking regarding his possessions.

Let a word be said first in defense of allowance giving. Money is not, and should not be, the important factor in the life of an individual, but to the average person of this generation it is! Money problems have proved to be one of the main causes for marital unhappiness, for delinquency, and for international strife. It is the measure by which most often a man or woman is judged for his or her success. We seem to assume that if a person is financially well to do his company is desirable, and if not, his company is less desirable. We look up to wealth and down on poverty. We say we don't, but we do! This is wrong, and somehow we must change this attitude in the coming generation. I think that by using an allowance as a concrete symbol we can do a great deal to increase our children's understandings of the relative position of possessing things to the possessing of truth and morality.

When an Allowance?

We have found that an allowance is very well understood by an eight-year-old child. (God knew that, of course, in his suggestion on baptism.) There is an almost sudden maturation of a child at this point in almost every instance.

How Much Allowance?

A welfare supervisor once very wisely told me, "A child must know what his parents can afford, whether it is great or small, and be willing to fit into the family situation."

This serves several purposes. Obviously, one purpose is that it won't overstretch father's pocketbook. There are more subtle purposes served, of course. The child feels a part of the family plan. He is helping by not taking too much. Just as important, he feels he is getting his share of spending money. The amount of the allowance should be explained, exactly why it is what it is. A child accepts gratefully and cooperatively anything given in love. I have never found an exception to this rule when parents approach a child properly.

What Advice, If Any?

An eight-year-old child must have advice almost daily on his or her spending. A ten-year-old can enjoy more freedom. A twelve-year-old who has been trained from eight years to have money doesn't really need much advice. Most children will come for advice. If they don't, it can be given casually or in the course of conversation without "much ado" about it. The child must not feel coerced; yet, worse, is to leave him adrift. The insecurity of having to make a decision without help leaves him feeling that he is alone and unwanted. Even older children get this feeling when parents dismiss their responsibility of the child simply because he can now "take care of himself." I imagine the best basic rule is to constantly listen for the need in the child and then move to fill that need with assurance and understanding.

Included in this advice item must come, at the very beginning, a basic teaching of the principles involved in the tithing law. A child should feel responsible for tithes of ten cents out of every dollar from the first to the last dollar that is used for his own personal pleasure. He will not leave this principle as he grows because it will be automatic for him to tithe. He will keep an account by preference once the habit is formed. There is something about tithing for a child that also makes him aware of the needs of the church. It gives him a desire to add offering to his tithing, to help in the responsibility of the kingdom. A child gets much joy in doing this when the avenue of his thinking is opened by parents who do not treat it as a duty but as an opportunity to help in the cause of Jesus Christ.

How Much for Necessities?

As a child matures into a teen-ager, he should learn how to purchase his clothes and food. This doesn't have to be a part of his allowance, although clothing might well be allowed for at about sixteen years. He should be taught how to save on sales and good materials. He should know when he is paying more than an article can ever be worth to him.

A teen-ager should be able to go to a grocery store and do the buying for the family on occasion. He will enjoy the experience if he is challenged with the idea of good purchasing for the health of the family as well as for saving.

Danger Signs

We should be aware of certain danger signs in our children's thinking about allowances and the use of them. Our oldest daughter recently said to me, "Why do you spend your money on us several times a month and not take it out of our allowances?" Here was my opportunity to forestall the coming thinking in her mind that there must be absolute adherence to allowances no matter what the situation. I explained to her very carefully that her father and I did not give her an allowance to keep her from spending too much or too little. I told her we gave her an allowance so that when she was a parent she would understand how to handle money carefully. She must learn to get the most happiness for herself and for her family from the available money. Further, sometimes we wanted to share more with her because we didn't want her to feel that we were making a chore of handling money or keeping her own allowance. It was to train her that she should be as free as possible in the important area of living involving possessions. Always the things that would be hers must be of use to her and be her servant; never must she become a slave to them.

Yes, sometimes it is well to give more when we have it. Sometimes, when money is needed by the family, we should give less. The child will be delighted to be a part of family financial planning and will, probably, have a more willing heart than the adult.

Money and Morality

Money can be, and quite often is, the root of evil because we have made it a very dominant motivation in our living. We must somehow through these methods of training teach our children how useful it can be when we have it. Also, we must teach them how very much we can do with very little when we train ourselves to do so. In either case, we must always remember that it is only the means to some ends and certainly not the basic key to happiness. Only truth and morality survive when material things are gone; these are free, and they are all that are really worth having.

Minute Women

PROBABLY THE BEST and most universally known slogan in the world today is the one that the Boy Scout movement has adopted, "Be Prepared." In simple terms it points up one of the main principles taught in Scouting: be ready to serve, at any time or place, especially in emergencies or crises.

About a year ago in a prayer meeting, a young man, new in the priesthood, gave an interesting testimony. "I want to be prepared to serve," he said. "Our pastor has instructed us to be ready to usher, to assist in the service, to offer prayer, or perhaps bring the message, if the need should arise. Along with this inner preparation," he continued, "I must see that my personal appearance is presentable, so that I may never be hesitant about serving in any capacity."

This sounded like excellent advice for priesthood members who, one minister says, should be "God's minute men." Yet much of what the young man said is equally applicable to the women of the church in the women's department work.

Consider the number of circles and groups in the branch in which you live. These must be staffed by leaders, assistant leaders, secretaries, treasurers, publicity chairmen, music directors, teachers, friendly visitors, and cradle roll workers. At the meetings, all members are encouraged to active participation, for the programs are planned in such a way as to utilize the services of each one who attends. Every woman at some time will be called upon to offer prayer or to serve in some capacity of women's work. Many latent abilities have been uncovered during these meetings, and women are continually challenged to answer the call to be prepared to serve—often in an emergency.

Fortunately, crises are rare. Like the mother whose small son announced at bedtime that he had to take thirty cupcakes to school in the morning, we might be totally unprepared for such a situation.

Yet the opportunity to serve in an emergency comes often. As everyone knows, emergencies continue to arise in all phases of everyday living. Such an instance caused me to recall the young man and his words about being well-groomed always so that he would not feel hesitant about serving when the call came.

The local Council of Church Women in our city sponsored a World Day of Prayer service last winter in one of the larger churches. The chairman of the program was a member of our church. I was riding with her, and we arrived at the meeting quite early. (This necessitated a hasty lunch and some hurried preparation on my part.)

Shortly after I was seated a woman approached me and asked, "Would you assist us by ushering today? One of the ladies is unable to attend."

Somewhat hesitantly I voiced my objections. "I really did not expect to have a part in the service today. I had to get ready in a hurry."

She appraised me rather critically for a moment, then smiled. "You look all right to me," she said. "You're an usher."

And so, for the next half hour or better I greeted women at the door, seated them, and handed out programs—but not without some inner qualms. Conscious of the fact that I represented the church of which I am a member, I couldn't help wishing that I had spent a little more time on my personal appearance. Incidentally, I've never boasted that I can get ready to go anywhere in ten minutes since that incident.

A man and his wife from another state attended a funeral in our city and heard one of our ministers preach a moving sermon on death and immortality. We invited the couple home with us for dinner. Out of a clear sky the man said, "Tell me about your church." I endeavored to do so, and he listened attentively. He even attended church a few times, but that was all. Did he decide against further investigation because it would entail too radical a change in his way of life, or did I fail to witness effectively? I wonder.

Once we had some next-door neighbors of another faith. Because they went to their own church regularly and had some rather strict beliefs, it never occurred to me to ask them to attend any of our services. Yet, just before they moved away, the woman came over to say good-bye. In the course of the conversation she said, "Sometimes when I saw you car leave the house on Sunday night I would wish that I was going with you. We do not have an evening service in our church." The opportunity to invite her never came again.

It is an old adage that one learns by doing. We cannot be prepared to offer prayer when asked if we have never prayed at all. Neither can we testify if we do not take part in an occasional service. There is no substitute for experience.

Some of the Negro spirituals have a deeply significant meaning. In one of these, "I Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray," the colored man mourns because he does not have the opportunity to attend church and hear others pray. There are many places in the world where someone of our faith is denied church privileges.

Yet, wherever we may be, there is a need for daily prayer and communion with our heavenly Father. This is a personal matter and an obligation that no one but ourselves can fulfill. It could well be that the writer of the spiritual mentioned also penned another called "Standing in the Need of Prayer." This author is unknown. This second hymn sounds like an outgrowth of the first. The man who "couldn't hear nobody pray" might soon repentingly say, "It's not my brother or my sister, but it's me, O Lord, standing in need of prayer."

One of our own glorious hymns of the Restoration sounds an urgent message to Saints: "God is marshaling his army." Both the aged and the youth are admonished to be valiant soldiers, ready at a word to serve the cause of Christ, to have an active part in bringing to pass the victories that are in store for God's army in the battle against the power of evil.

We have been given the green light to go forward, to move onward and upward in this great movement that God has initiated. Assured that eventually the victory is his, that his work will triumph, let us move out and be prepared to serve.

Kingdom Caliber

I HAD SEEN him at church on various occasions and had heard him testify of how he wanted to do the Lord's will. From others I had learned of some of his good deeds, and I would probably have thought he was one of the most likely to succeed in helping to build our much-talked-of model society had I not overheard him telling about what happened at work one day. "We finished that culvert today," he told his friend. "Thought we might have to do part of it over after the big freeze—left a crack right down the middle of the concrete. We fixed it though. By the time we finished covering it with sand and gravel, nobody could tell there was anything wrong." I felt a little sick inside as I listened to him, because even if nobody did discover the crack, a good Latter Day Saint just doesn't turn out inferior work. He will not, in fact, consciously do anything that is less than his best. If he does make an error, he will correct it as quickly as possible. His sense of stewardship won't let him settle for half-right when he can make it all-right.

Here is a heart-warming example of what I mean. Recently I had some dental work done which demanded as much artistry as technical skill. The finished product was almost perfect—only one small flaw kept it from being absolutely right. When I went back for another appointment, my dentist noticed the flaw and offered to correct it. At his own expense he made a special trip to the downtown laboratory, carving time out of his already busy day to do so in order that I would have less delay, and he did it graciously. His wife says, "Bill is a perfectionist,"* and I suppose that's about the only term for it, except the word is too often used to describe one who is extremely "fussy" about unimportant details rather than one who is genuinely conscientious. Whatever this quality of "caring" is labeled, it should rank high on the list of qualifications for kingdom applicants.

* Bill is also R.L.D.S.

Poor workmanship and dishonesty just cannot be a part of the social order we hope to produce. Among other things, Zion will have professional people who are trustworthy—doctors who will prescribe operations and eyeglasses only when they are necessary; architects and contractors who will use the best design and material, not because they wish to make a greater profit but because they want the finished product to be beautiful and lasting; teachers who take seriously their job of preparing young lives for maturity and give their best to it, although they could draw the same salary for less effort.

This quality is important in the priesthood, too. I was particularly impressed by the minister who, when asked if he would allow his sermon to be printed—or if he preferred to keep on preaching it a while before it appeared in print—answered, "I like to tailor every sermon to fit the congregation and the occasion. No, I won't be using it again." This is almost going beyond the call of duty, because a lot of time and effort go into preparing a sermon. Certainly no one could criticize a minister for making liberal use of a carefully prepared message. Yet here is a man who is so concerned about the people to whom he is asked to speak that he studies their needs and tries to give them what he feels is most helpful. He doesn't just "preach a sermon"; he ministers to his listeners.

The refusal to allow oneself to get by, to take the easy way out, requires strict personal discipline. I sometimes have difficulty talking myself into producing a full-fledged meal when opening a can of spaghetti and meatballs would be so much easier. (I am fairly well kept in line by a husband who frowns on cheating in this department.) And it would be a pleasant departure from the usual routine, I have often thought, to just forget about trimming the shrubbery and cutting the grass and doing the rest of those never-ending tasks that go with maintaining a home. Yet when I see property that doesn't get this continual care, I am quickly made aware that such as this would have no place in the Zion community. Adult life brings with it the obligation to do many things that are not actually enjoyable, but there is no question about it, they must be done.

Kingdom-caliber people are, I believe, those who do the right thing because it ought to be done. They don't quibble about it, don't put it off until another day, don't try to draft someone else to do it for them. They may not always enjoy doing it, but neither could they be happy leaving it undone. They do not rake gravel over the crack in the concrete. Whatever their job, they do it well. In a world of something-for-nothing seekers, they are indeed a peculiar people.

New Brick Church for Middletown, Ohio

THE MONTH of September marked the anniversary of occupancy by the Saints of Middletown, Ohio, of their new church building. This beautiful brick structure, dedicated to the work of the Lord, stands as an accomplished fact of a goal that only a few years ago seemed impossible to the branch.

The church is of modernistic design, both inside and out. The wood trim, pews, and overhead rafters are finished in limed oak. The permanent seats will accommodate approximately 250 persons, but with the movable partition into the social hall, this number can be almost doubled with the use of extra chairs.

A well-equipped nursery is an added feature. There is a modern kitchen also, where the ladies prepare meals. By serving noon lunches once a month through the winter, they have contributed greatly to the financial needs of the church.

A beautiful pipe organ adds much to the beauty of the services.

The appearance of the church and grounds is a testimony of the devotion of Deacon Charles Osborn, who gives many hours to the maintenance and care of the building.

Elder Russell M. Rockwell is starting his tenth year as pastor, and the congregation looks forward to progress and accomplishment in the branch.

New Explorer Program

4. The last item on the list is service. This may have surprised some people who have not worked with boys, but to Scout and church leaders it was expected. Although the present push nationally is toward a crash program on cold mechanical science, boys still showed a need for helping out their fellow men in a humanitarian way. They didn't say it in just this way, but they indicated a strong need to be useful as participating citizens.

Exploring offers conferences on how to be "citizens now." Through quarterly program literature service projects will constantly be encouraged, to the home, the unit sponsor, and the community. Through these experiences, a young man can get his first taste of adult responsibility to society.

Better than ever before these four areas of emphasis make Scouting and Zion's League more closely related and complementary, so that experience in Exploring is sound preparation for stepping up to Zion's League participation.

Requirements for Membership

Now that all these concerns had an answer in the program, requirements for membership were next. Because some boys who are Boy Scouts want to stay and serve as junior leaders in their local Scout troop, and at the same time others wish to graduate to the older boy program, Exploring must again adopt a flexible entry regulation. In addition, many boys who have never been Scouts are now interested in joining, and provisions to include them are necessary. The final action was to open the door to any boy who is fourteen years old or older and in the ninth grade or above. If he is a Scout and wishes to stay in his troop, he can do just that.

To be certain that even the boy who may have an exceptional special interest will feel welcome, the post he belongs to can prefix the "post" part with a title such as radio post, science post, or nature post, or any other subject that the group, as a body, is trying to follow.

There will be a change in wearing apparel, too. While the forest green uniform will still be available, an optional outfit consisting of a navy-blue sport coat, white shirt, maroon tie, and gray slacks will also be official for social usage.

Although juvenile problems are at a relative low in many areas, youth workers advise that the most effective way to prevent any future problems is to reach a boy at an early age and give him enough guidance to travel a straight path into manhood. With the widening of their older boy program, the Boy Scouts of America can do just this. A boy can become a Cub Scout at eight and stay until he turns eleven, then he may become a Boy Scout and stay until he is eighteen. Or, after three or four years of Boy Scouting, he can move into Exploring. There he can stay until he is old enough to take over a leadership position. All this will enable him to help the younger Scouts who are on their way up.

In this new Explorer program particular emphasis can be placed on enrolling boys who have never been associated with Scouting. The program has been designed to be of great interest to all high school age boys.

The new Explorer program was launched early this month, and congregations and branches may now organize Explorer posts on the new plan. Following the usual pattern of partnership practiced by the Boy Scouts of America, these units will be administered by the churches as a part of their own youth program.

For additional information check with your local Boy Scout headquarters or write to the Youth Division, the Department of Religious Education.

■ Through prayer services, informative discussions, and a mock business session, Graceland students prepared for General Conference. The college closed at noon Saturday, October 4, for the week. About 85 per cent of the student body attended Conference.

■ A new building is going up on the Graceland campus. This all-steel structure, which will be used temporarily by the music department, is 40 by 100 feet. It was started in July, but due to excessive rain early construction work was slow. It will probably be finished in time for the second semester.

Included in the building will be a tiered practice room which will be used by the band, orchestra, and choirs; a classroom; and four or five studios for private instruction. There will also be several music listening rooms, storage, and rest rooms. Members of the music faculty will occupy the music studios and use them for instruction.

Marietta Hall, which was formerly used for music instruction and practice, will still be used for individual practice sessions.

Graceland's campus plan for future development includes a large fine arts building which will provide for all music activities. When that building is erected, the small building now under construction will be converted into a much-needed storage unit for the buildings and grounds department. With this in view, the new building is being constructed adjacent to the heating plant area, just east of the tennis courts.

■ Graceland underwent an extensive face lifting this past summer. One of the biggest jobs undertaken was that of black-topping roadways and parking lots. The total area blacktopped ran 7,769 square yards.

The total cost of this improvement amounted to $3,703.82. Members of the graduating class of 1958 made it their class project and managed to cover a good deal of the expense. Their support took care of $1,029. The largest contribution came from the Graceland Alumni Association, which donated $2,074.82. This brought the total contributions to $3,103.82, leaving $600 to be raised. This remaining sum was worked into the college budget.

■ Graceland lost its first cross-country meet of the year Saturday afternoon, September 27, to Kirksville by a 19-38 score. The race was run on Graceland's cross-country course. Kirksville finished the first four men in the race. Their first three men were all timed in 9:46 to 9:48 for the 1.9 mile course, Graceland's Bill Russell, Grand Rapids, Michigan; Rich Simmons, Richmond, California; Bob Davies, Willoughby, Ohio; and Larry Rollstin, Des Moines, Iowa, finished from fifth to eighth in times ranging from ten minutes flat to about 10:15. Jerry Wheeler, Puyallup, Washington, and Eddie Crawford, Independence, Missouri, finished tenth and eleventh for Graceland.

Saturday afternoon the annual Home-coming football game was played on the new athletic field, and the Yellow Jackets lost a hard-fought game with the William Jewell Cardinals, 25-0. During the half time, Dr. Roy A. Cheville led a program for the World Fellowship Fund, and Home-comers gave over $1,000 which will be used to finance the education of students from other lands. Other activities in the late afternoon were class and social club reunions preceded by a box-lunch supper. There was also a special reunion dinner at the Coliseum for the 25- and 50-year classes. A special convocation procession, "The President's March," was written for the occasion by Oliver Houston, Jr., a member of the college music faculty. The invocation was offered by Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp. A special anthem, "Towers of Graceland," was written for the inauguration by Dr. W. S. Gould, and the music was arranged by Henry Anderson. The charge to the new president of the college was given by the president of the church, W. Wallace Smith. Earl T. Higdon, representing the Board of Trustees, presided during the service of installation and gave the installation statement. Dr. Grice responded with the President's Pledge. The faculty then responded in unison and pledged to the new president loyalties, talents, comradeship, and faith. Members of the congregation also responded in unison and dedicated themselves to support the college in soul and through sacrifice. Dr. Grice then responded with the inaugural address, "The Leadership We Deserve." The prayer of blessing and benediction was offered by Dr. Grice's father, Evangelist John R. Grice.

Note from India

Through the columns of the Herald we express our thanks to all our brothers and sisters in far-off countries who have written us recently. We have sent replies to each. If there are those who have not heard from us, we presume that it is because their letters have not reached us. Our correct address is below.

A Home in Independence

December 1, 1956, found us moving off a farm we had rented for the second year. It was the second time we had been hit by severe drouth. All of our savings had been invested in farming, and since the crop was very poor we had to sell our household furniture to pay our debts.

We were not the only farmers who had been hurt by the drouth. Most of our neighbors had to sell out or move into town and secure jobs.

Our town was just average size. The packing houses were the main industry of the city. Because of rising costs in taxes, the oldest and largest packing house was forced to close, causing over six hundred workers to lose their jobs, homes, and security. Shortly after this, another large plant that had employed over one thousand people also closed, and as a consequence many families either moved out of town or moved in with their relatives.

For some unknown reason we picked Missouri. As we drove out of Iowa, with nothing but hopes and ambitions, we decided to visit our relatives while we were driving south.

After we left Grant City, Missouri, we decided to stop in Independence and visit the Auditorium.

On Tuesday, December 31, at 5 o'clock in the evening we arrived in Independence. We were told to come back the next day so we could take the tour.

Then on New Year's Day we went through the magnificent building and were very impressed. My husband suggested we contact one of the missionaries that had come to our home town a few years back and visit him.

It was while we were visiting in his home that we realized the Lord had a purpose for leading us to Zion. Brother and Sister Velt suggested we try to find employment and reside here.

With the help of many Saints, we were given furnishings for our newly acquired home; we also received clothing and food. These things plus our faith in God, helped to sustain us until we were better fixed financially.

We have felt the hand of God guiding us on through severe crises and giving us the added strength and faith we needed.

To all of those who have had a part in helping us materially and spiritually we owe a debt of gratitude; we shall remember them in our prayers.

Requests Prayers for Friend

I wish to request prayers for a friend of mine, Albert (Bert) Maslen, of the Stratford, Ontario, Branch. This young man, a member of the priesthood, is suffering from cancer in an advanced stage. He has tremendous faith in the church and its ordinances. The Saints in Stratford Branch have had united prayers for Bert for a long time now, and this is what he says in a recent letter: "I am glad to say I feel a lot better; I do not have nearly so much pain as I did at one time during my illness. I fully believe if it had not been for the prayers of the Saints, I would have been gone long ago, as far as this earth is concerned." Brother Bert was told by his doctor recently that he was through doing work of any kind, and we all know the extent of the seriousness of his condition. This brother has recently moved to a new home, and he advises me that he has told the story of our church to the members of the family in the lower portion of his house. He also states that he has had them out to church, and ends with this statement: "So we have not stopped witnessing."

He feels that those in his family are fairly happy under the circumstances, and states that he believes they will always remain happy as long as they are interested in the church. I have known Bert for a long time, and it seemed as if he was stricken with cancer just when his ministry was bearing much fruit. He is truly one of God's chosen.

A Way to Serve

This past week as I watched the women making apple butter, I asked myself, "What would my church be like if it depended solely on me? If something happened to the rest of the members and I was the only one left to carry on the work, what would become of it?"

Suddenly I realized how little I had done in the past, and this realization caused me to be very humble. There would have been no young adult retreat last week, no Wednesday evening prayer service, no study class on Thursday night, no visiting the sick, no apple butter made. . . .

I began to realize, too, what an endless list of services are provided me by my fellow Saints. Because of their love, faith, prayers, and labor, I am privileged to enjoy many good things.

We all cannot be responsible for making the various services of the church available, but we can set up a plan of action which will result in our doing something for the cause of Zion. We can schedule our time so that we do have opportunity to visit the sick and aged (not only of our church but also of our neighborhood), send cards, make favors for the hospital, clean house for a friend or neighbor who is ill, baby-sit for a harassed young mother, make a new dress for a needy child, wash the church tablecloths, make something for the bazaar . . . the list is unlimited. As our personalities and talents differ, so will our manner of service differ. But we must serve—systematically, lovingly, wholeheartedly. It is for each of us to find a way.

Letter of Appreciation

I want to express appreciation for the wonderful articles, stories, and notes appearing in the Herald. Since I have lived in so-called isolation since I came into the church, I have found much comfort and satisfaction in reading church publications.

I particularly enjoyed the series "Reminiscing in Kirtland," since I am very interested in church history. Uncle David Patten—as we always spoke of him—was my grandfather Patten's brother.

Book Review

I Believe in the Bible

by Joseph R. Sizoo

Abingdon Press, 1958

price, $1.25

In the brief nine chapters of this book Dr. Joseph Sizoo makes clear that the Bible is the word of God but looks forward with assurance to the further revelation of God's power.

His belief in the Bible was challenged by men of great scholarship as they seemed to make untenable certain beliefs he held in the various experiences of men of God as recorded in the Bible, as well as the story of creation, the account of the flood, the selling of Joseph into Egypt, and others. The author began to study, search, and pray diligently for the answer to these disturbing situations. As a result of his prayerful seeking, he bears this testimony, "I found in the Bible a God, living, active, at work in the world . . . a God who revealed himself through patriarchs, prophets, priests, and psalmists—all finite men—and finally and perfectly through Jesus Christ his Son, our Savior, who still speaks to us and reveals God to us by his Holy Spirit."

Mr. Sizoo answers such questions in his study as "What is the Bible?" "How did we get the Bible?" "What is it about?" "Why do we need it today?" Along with these, he answers other questions that help in the understanding of the Bible for a student of the life and ministry of our Master. From three fields of scientific investigation—archaeology, history, and the study of languages—he confirms his belief and goes on to show that man's greatest need today is the knowledge propounded in the Bible that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name."

The author concludes the testimony of his belief in the Bible by vigorously affirming the relevance of the Bible today—how a study and understanding of it can restore lost hope—and fulfill his search for security. This simple and personal testimony is an inspiring assurance that life is sustained by inner resources that come from knowing the God of Israel—the God of the Bible.

I heartily recommend this book for both members and ministry of the Church of Jesus Christ. It will enrich and enhance their understanding and appreciation of the "God of love."

TRACT REVIEW

The Book of Mormon: a Second Witness for Jesus Christ

James S. Menzies, missionary, feels there is a great need to present the message of the Book of Mormon in a positive manner. Out of his experiences he has put on the printed page a few of his thoughts used in this approach to missionary work. He gives Jesus Christ a central position in his message and identifies the Book of Mormon as a "second witness" for the Christ.

After presenting a brief statement on "What is the Book of Mormon?" Brother Menzies points out the unfortunate view that many people have of God and Christ as personages of ancient generations. The Book of Mormon and the experience which brought it into being, he comments, change this view and make Divinity a present day reality in the world.

This tract makes good use of our interpretation of the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah in identifying the fulfillment of biblical prophecy with the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Each of the major verses in that chapter is explained in the light of the Restoration.

Brother Menzies also explains the John 10:16 reference to "other sheep" and tells the story of Christ's ministry in the Americas. He closes his tract with a section devoted to the predictions within the Book of Mormon of "America's destiny." You'll appreciate re-reading the prophetic references in the Book of Ether and his explanation of them.

This twelve-page tract has a single-copy price of four cents.

ON OUR TEAM

Coaches have two standards by which they judge and select their players. One is the sustained skill which is shown and the second, almost as important, is team spirit. To some extent both are built-in abilities, but to a larger degree they are the result of training.

Church life is also teamwork (Doctrine and Covenants 119:8 b). Business and industrial skills must be combined with ministerial devotion to achieve the kingdom way of life. However, team work is the spirit or life of Christ's body. Whenever one member of the team is undermined by malicious criticism or tripped by ridicule and humiliation the whole team suffers. I like the line of our hymn (462), "Who serves my Father as a son is surely kin to me." More power to you, brother; you're on my team!

RECOGNIZE THE DANGER—An inner decay, fostered by self-interest and a passion for "soft living," is causing more and more people to disregard the responsibilities that go with their rights.

Corruption, racketeering, immorality, and crime of all types are undermining the morale of the country. And yet the public seems to become more and more passive toward the breakdown taking place under our very noses.

Reverence for truth is giving way to compromise and expediency, even among those who should be guardians of the truth. Patriotism is rapidly losing its once powerful appeal. The decline of loyalty is allowing the doors to be opened to disloyalty. More and more are forgetting that God is the "Author of our liberty."

But it is not too late to reverse this risky trend if enough people can be found to renew and strengthen the standards of American life, particularly government.

HAVE YOU GROWN ANOTHER SKIN?

An evangelist once gave some excellent advice to a church school class of young adults. "Joining the church," he said, "is a matter of continual growth. When you become a member, your growth doesn't stop. This is only the beginning. You should grow by learning the Three Standard Books of the church so that you acquire a working knowledge of the gospel. You should grow in stature so that your shoulders might broaden to carry the burdens of life. Then you should grow another layer of skin, so that you don't become easily offended."

PRICE OF SUCCESS

To know every detail, to gain an insight into each secret, to learn every method, to secure every kind of skill, are the prime necessities in every art, craft, or business. No time is too long, no study too hard, no discipline too severe for the attainment of complete familiarity with one's work and complete ease and skill in the art of doing it. If a man values his working life, he must be willing to pay the highest price of success in it—the price which severe training exacts.

other continuity scripts
by Naomi Russell

Here are five delightful, new Christmas programs which may easily be adapted to large or small choral groups. All five were produced originally by the Cantanina Chorus at Stone Church, Independence, Missouri.

The musical selections used were written for treble voices in three parts; however, most of them are available in solo form and for mixed voices. No elaborate stage settings are required.

The spoken words are simple yet dignified, supplementing the beauty of the Christmas message portrayed in the music.

Completed Chamber Wins Approval

"We've had many favorable comments on the finished parts of the Auditorium," an assistant to the Presiding Bishopric said soon after the 1958 Conference.

Bishop John Boren said Conference visitors seemed to be unanimous in their approval of the work done and in their desire to see the building completed.

The General Conference voted approval for the Presiding Bishopric to continue its fund-raising efforts toward completion of the building. The 1960 General Conference was set as a goal for completion of the lower auditorium, two new elevators, a south portico, and stone facing on the front wings. The 1962 Conference was designated as deadline for completion of the ramps.

Conference visitors seemed to be especially impressed with the beauty of the completed Conference Chamber, Bishop Boren said. The finishing of the huge room has been a demonstration to the church that it is possible to go ahead and finish the entire building in a short time, he added.

He pointed out that the seats in the Conference Chamber cost $175,000. They were made possible by contributions from all over the church. The married students at Grace-land College, for example, all gave one dollar and thus bought one chair for the Auditorium.

In another case, the members in Barstow, California, sent a contribution large enough to buy twelve chairs for the Auditorium—almost as many chairs as there are members in the Barstow mission!

"Completion of the Conference Chamber has been made possible by the sacrifice of the Saints throughout the world, which is typified by this little group," Bishop Boren said.

He stated that to complete the remaining work on the Auditorium, including the ramps, it would only be necessary for half the Saints to contribute one dollar a week for less than three months.

As a result of the General Conference, several facts concerning the new General Conference Chamber have become apparent. For one thing, it is now clear that the new porticoes with their ability to expedite the flow of people in and out of the Chamber will be very useful.

Also, the beautiful new chairs in the Chamber are capable of withstanding extreme wear. "Those chairs took a lot of punishment during the eight days of Conference and show little or no wear," Brother Boren said. "We are convinced they were a good investment."

The air ventilation system and public address systems still require some attention. These are things that could not be tested adequately until the huge room was full of people. Through the long, warm week it became clear that the ventilation system will have to be improved. Some improvement is already expected when the lower auditorium work begins. This will include work on the upper auditorium's floor ventilators.

Members of the Presiding Bishopric are now finalizing plans so they can be put out for bids. However, Bishop Boren pointed out, there is only $130,000 on hand so most of the plans will have to wait until sufficient funds are on hand to let contracts.

Contributions to help complete the remaining portions of the Auditorium can be made through the duplex envelopes or mailed directly to the Presiding Bishopric at the Auditorium in Independence.

We Look to 1960 and Beyond

THE MINISTRY of the Holy Spirit at the recent General Conference has been the subject of a multitude of testimonies that have come to us unsolicited from the Saints in many places, far and near. Such testimonies and such ministry are sources of spiritual strength to our people, and we are confident that this strength will find expression in many activities and lines of service.

One fact has been impressed upon us in an increasing awareness: that our greatest need is for an ever clearer insight into the eternal values of the gospel. When our souls are possessed by the Lord Jesus Christ, and we are personally committed to him and his way of life, we find in him and in his purposes impelling reasons for training our minds, developing our physical skills, and organizing our material resources for better service in the mission that has been committed to our care.

A vision of future possibilities in areas of many specialized ministries that will contribute to the many aspects of Zion's growth expands before us. Doors of opportunity are opening for bearing our testimony in the domestic field throughout the United States and Canada. We are making progress in the Latin-American Mission and in other missions abroad. We are caused to rejoice by reports reaching us from new areas not yet officially opened as "mission fields," but where our members are bearing their testimony, and those who "hear gladly" are being baptized. We rejoice because of the increasing numbers of young people attending church-sponsored and other institutions of higher education. We are aware that many improvements have been achieved in our experiences of worship in congregations throughout the church.

The 1960 General Conference should be a great event in the history of the church. It will mark the centennial of the conference at Amboy at which "Young Joseph" came to take his place as president of the church. It is likely that it will draw the greatest attendance of our church people ever brought together in one place. It seems almost inevitable that our physical facilities will be greatly overtaxed. Because of this probability, we are eager that the action of the 1958 General Conference, directing us to proceed with the completion of the Auditorium, shall be supported by the Saints as they contribute the necessary funds to complete the next and most urgent projects on the Auditorium.

The 1958 General Conference approved "The completion of the lower auditorium, the front wings, the south portico of the building, and the south elevator, before the General Conference of 1960." This appears to be entirely possible because of what the Saints have already done in contributing to the completion of recent projects.

In a large sense, the entire Auditorium construction program is a material manifestation of the devotion of the Saints to the spiritual ideals and purposes of the church. We believe that the financial achievements of the church in recent years are memorials to the spiritual devotion of the Saints. Our response to the needs of the immediate future will be prophetic evidences of further spiritual development. If the construction of a building were our only objective, our gifts and sacrifices would be of little eternal significance. But as the completion of the Auditorium is an expression of the development of genuine spiritual power which contributes to the achievement of eternal goals, our Auditorium offerings take on a tremendous significance.

Elsewhere in this issue is an article by the Presiding Bishopric concerning our financial goals. We join in urging the Saints everywhere to respond to these needs in the spirit which characterized our recent General Conference.

We as a people will complete the Auditorium. Project by project the work has been done and will continue to be done. And as we work and grow, our testimonies, expressed in words and deeds, in spiritual power and in enduring steel and stone, will go to the world. Attendance at our services of worship will increase. Our institutions will be enlarged and their efficiency will be improved. The training of our minds and our hands for the tasks of the kingdom of God will be hastened. These things shall be, for the reason that the Saints are committed to the cause of the kingdom in fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Great days are ahead for the church. Among the splendid experiences before us, the General Conference of 1960 is not far away. The weeks and months will pass swiftly, and we must hasten with our work. Let us be ready for the future by taking advantage of our immediate opportunities now in the spirit of prayer and saintly devotion.

Apostle A. A. Oakman, accompanied by Sister Oakman, will return on January 17 to his field of labor, which is England and Europe.

Bishop W. N. Johnson of the Presiding Bishopric will go to Europe early in May to be present at the Pfingsten Conference, and will remain in Europe for the dedication of the new church in Rotterdam, Holland. He will return to the United States by the way of England.

President Maurice L. Draper will go to Europe early in June also to be present at the dedication of the Rotterdam church. He will then travel to England where he and Bishop Johnson will confer concerning certain church matters. W. Wallace Smith Ordained

To the Office of President of the High Priesthood and of the Church of Jesus Christ at the Auditorium, October 6, 1958

By Apostle Paul M. Hanson, President of the Council of Twelve, Apostle D. T. Williams, High Priest Ward A. Hougas, and Presiding Bishop G. Leslie DeLapp

Brother Wallace, as servants of Jesus Christ, we lay our hands upon your head and ordain you to the office of President of the High Priesthood and of the Church of Jesus Christ.

When the time came for the fulfilling of prophecies relating to great events of latter days, God revealed these things to Joseph Smith, your grandfather, who soon learned from his communion with God that he was living in the noontime of God's readiness to bless where the heart and mind would faithfully turn toward him. As your grandfather responded to that which he felt to be divine he was led to translate the Book of Mormon by the gift and power of God and to bring forth the church with its

The Order of Bishops to Meet

The implementation of the financial program of the church approved by the General Conference, which calls for continuing the construction work on the Auditorium and for the raising of a large budget, has made it advisable to call a meeting of the Order of Bishops. A number of other important matters will also be considered. The meetings will be held on November 18, 19, and 20. The members of the First Presidency have consented to meet with the Order for such time as they may find possible.

New Testament meaning out of obscurity. To him and others was granted the honor of laying the foundation of Zion.

You are called to preside over the church in an age in which the Lord revealed there would be many crises—nation rising against nation, men's hearts failing them for fear of the things coming on the earth, and the love of many waxing cold because of iniquity.

We pray that God may richly endow you with all the gifts that belong to the office in which you are being set apart, that you may be qualified in presiding over the church as prophet, seer, and revelator.

May the church continue in unity to advance under your ministration. May Zion's light shine brighter and brighter with the passing of time. May there come to you every needed physical blessing, that you may do the things that are in your heart to achieve. May there come to you in times when the burden of your calling is ponderous, encouragement from your counselors, support from the councils of the church, and comfort and gladness of heart from the Holy Spirit.

We, in accordance with the calling to which you have been divinely designated, ordain and set you apart through Jesus Christ, our Lord, Amen.

Open House for Canadian Offices

CHURCH HEADQUARTERS in Canada and the offices for Herald House (Canada) have moved to a new location—189 Eramosa Road, Guelph, Ontario.

An open house was held at the new location on September 6. More than fifty persons attended. Some came from as far away as one hundred miles.

Present to greet the visitors were Bishop Hudson P. Grundy, bishop of Canada and manager of Herald House (Canada); Bishop Alex Cadwell, counselor; and Kenneth L. Graham, manager of Herald House.

Persons visiting the new offices also met the office staff and saw a display of the new church school curriculum published by Herald House. The local newspaper covered the event.

Formerly the offices were on the second floor of a downtown building. The new location is in a building that was previously used as a home. Brother Graham said the change will be advantageous to the Herald House operation because there will be more room available and it will be easier to move stock in and out of the building.

Since the opening of Herald House (Canada) in Guelph in 1953, the volume of Herald House business in Canada has tripled.

Canada is the second country to utilize the branch plan for ordering supplies from Herald House. Herald House (Australia) has been in operation for many years and was the first such branch of the publishing house. Formerly it was known as the "Publicity Department."

Under the branch plan, all orders from Canadian customers are handled by Herald House (Canada). Bishop Grundy stated, "The plan is justified by the results. It allows closer contact with the customers of Herald House and special services geared to the particular needs in this area. And increased business reflects the fact that more church literature is getting into the homes of members."

MR. CHAIRMAN, MR. ESRY, FELLOW MINISTERS, SAINTS AND FRIENDS:

We are indeed happy to have our guests and friends with us tonight to participate in this very worth-while endeavor. We assure you that your friendship, support, and good wishes have meant a great deal to us in our determination to assist others in making Independence a better place for all of us to live. This building and its facilities are dedicated to that purpose and to the purpose of furthering the program of the Master through the organization which has sponsored and built it. Any sacrifice which our world-wide membership has made sinks into insignificance in the light of the greater task which looms before us as these facilities are put into full operation and the gains which are possible are made through its full and complete use.

Many Things to Many People

It is with a feeling of humility and a deep sense of obligation that I stand before you tonight to participate in this service of dedication. This room, with its approaches and furnishings, means many different things to many people. Within these sacred walls hundreds of musicians have sung in oratorios; hundreds of nurses and thousands of high school students have been graduated; hundreds of thousands have worshiped in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; other thousands have taken part in the conduct of the business of the church. Apostles, evangelists, prophets, bishops, seventies, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons have been ordained here.

Never have we met in this Auditorium under such favorable conditions as far as the physical facilities are concerned. Never has the benign atmosphere created by these furnishings been so conducive to the physical comfort of the individual. We are humbly thankful for these beautiful surroundings, and I trust that we shall not indulge a feeling of false pride. We are aware of the proverb that says, "Pride goeth before destruction" (Proverbs 16: 18).

For a High Purpose

We would be singularly insensitive to the movement of Divinity, however, were we to ignore in this service the high purposes for which this chamber was built. And if we were to ignore the fact that we are here to worship God, I am sure many would be disappointed.

Ruskin once defined a laborer as one who works with his hands; an artisan as one who works with his hands and his head, and an artist as one who works with his hands and his head and his heart combined.

Undoubtedly there has been a delicate blending of all of these to accomplish what we see before us in this completed General Conference Chamber.

I could not adequately represent to you tonight all of those whose skills have combined to bring into being the beautiful ensemble of materials and color before us. It will be my purpose, however, to make some reference to a few whose dreams find a measure of fulfillment in the completion of this portion of the total project.

Designed to Fill a Need

Surely there was a high degree of prophetic insight exhibited by those who envisioned this building as the gathering place of the Saints. The late President Frederick M. Smith, who conceived the idea, saw a vision of a building adequate in size to house the world Conferences of the Reorganization. No history would be complete that did not recognize the part he played in stimulating its beginning. As a leader he saw ahead to a time when the facilities then existing would be woefully inadequate. Out of this recognized need came the stimulation which eventually resulted in the designing and building of the Auditorium.

There is much included in the history of the church from 1915 on which has to do with the bringing forth of the building in which we are meeting tonight. At the Conference of 1917, held in Lamoni, Iowa, in a church building which would seat less than seven hundred, the address of the President of the church included this statement:

Along with this question [which had to do with the biennial conferences] goes another of importance; adequate quarters for the General Conference, a building suitable in arrangement, appointment, and space, should be built, and the Conference held therein. It can be so constructed and situated that it will be of constant service other than for these annual or biennial gatherings.

Subsequent to that time at varying intervals reference has been made to the Auditorium, concerning what it should do, the capacity, its form, until there was a growing realization of a need for such a building as has been erected here.

In the Saints' Herald of February 3, 1926, this statement was made by President Frederick M. Smith:

I have always felt my heart warmed when thoughts of the Auditorium have come, for I recall the deep emotions aroused when news came to me that the Saints in their fine zeal and faith had subscribed the large sum they did for this purpose. That fine response sprang from a deep-seated and far-flung faith in Zion and the hope for its early realization. And Zion is one of our greatest, grandest objectives.

Dedicated Builders

The ground breaking took place on February 1, 1926. The surveying was done by W. O. Hands, and the Moore-Weeks Construction Company was employed to superintend the erection of the building under the direction of Church Architect Henry C. Smith, according to his plans.

Work on the Auditorium has had its ups and downs since that time, but we are thankful that certain determined individuals have, through the years, continued in their drive to see that the project should continue.

I would not quote so extensively from the writings of President Frederick M. Smith except that it was his vision to a large extent that was the motivating force at this period of the development of the building program. Another statement by him is challenging:

Perhaps some may say it is unnecessary; it will not be finished. I submit, my fellow Latter Day Saints, that our record of achievement and our experience of the past justify us in looking forward with confidence to seeing the Auditorium well and duly finished, and that its capacity, large as it may look now, ultimately will be packed to its limit. [Were he still living he would see his dream fulfilled here tonight.] The Auditorium must be finished. It is needed. It is opportune, and it will be finished. To believe otherwise is to overlook the spirit and the determination of a people with a record of eventually accomplishing its tasks.

In my humble opinion this same spirit and determination still exist in the body of the church.

Many of you here tonight will remember the Centennial Conference held here in 1930 and will recall with a thrill the pageantry of "The Course of Time" and "The Fulfillment" as well as the solemnity and beauty of the two Communion services which it was necessary to hold in order to accommodate all of those who wished to participate.

Since that time much has taken place regarding the retiring of the debt of the church, the resumption of the building program and, from time to time, the completion of certain parts of the building. Through interaction of the various councils and by the able help of the Presiding Bishopric and the splendid response of all of you monies have been raised, plans have been perfected, and the construction work has been completed.

Research, Debate, and Prayer
