But we not only believe that the college should be made of larger service to the community, as above set forth in the but provision should also be made for extension work reaching everywhere that help can be given. In this also, on our own responsibility, a start has been made with one student, Miss Sadie Whitney, of Montans, who is taking work in college English and French, in absentia. Her In this also, very favorably with members of work compares conspars very favorably with members of her-classes in attendance at the college. A request for class extension work has also been received. We have secured data on extension work from Harvard University, Chicago University, and the University of Wisconsin, in this coun-University, and the University of Wisconsin, in this country, and from one of Oxford Colleges, from London University, and the University of Glasgow, in Great Britain. The above are complete files of their literature. We have also considered plans used to advantage by others, and believe that methods can be devised to the advantage, both of lieve that methods can be devised to the advantage, both of the church and of the college by way of extension work. This should, in time, include the association, with the col-lege faculty in the extension department, of the men pos-sessing the necessary scholastic requirements, and yet of sufficient ability that the church requires their services in other departments of work. These men could greatly strengthen the faculty of the college, handle the extension work, and supervise the delivering of lectures in various places as may annear advisable. We are inclined to thirk work, and supervise the delivering of lectures in various places, as may appear advisable. We are inclined to think places, as may appear advance. We are inclined to think that many methods should be combined, and not corres-pondence work alone given, although correspondence work will doubtless come first. It may take some time to to school workers made us believe that there was a need for advance to the point we have set, but a start could doubt-less be made with advantage, if arrangements could be made so that this office could devote a little time to the formation of suitable plans and outlines of work.

The college should be used as an instrumentality by he whole church in educational work, and should be used in that way which will give the largest possible net re-

It is true that at present the whole church receives the benefit, and in the future no doubt will to an even greater extent, through the services of individuals who have received training.

But none of this work should be pushed to that extent, or in such a manner as to greatly increase, at the present time, the expense or running the college. The local ex-tension work, so far as undertaken and so far as planned, has been and will be self-sustaining. The extension work to more remote points should also be developed in such a way as also to be as nearly as possible self-sustaining as may be practicable.

Finances.

The income for the year has been greatly handicapped by the efforts made on behalf of and in the interest of raising funds for the debt collection. This prevented any raising funds for the debt collection. This prevented any effort being made on behalf of the college up until November. Unfortunately, the Presiding Bishop has not found it practicable to extend the needed help, or any portion, from this connection for the reduction of the debts. With the advice of the Presiding Bishop, as well as with his consent, Elder J. W. Wight undertook, in the early part his consent, Edder J. W. Wight undertook, in the early part of November, an effort to reduce or pay off the debt of the colloge. His effort, as above indicated, has netted $1,217.67. Gomer R. Wells was also put in the field in January. The result has been, $332.88, relatively small from a financial standpoint, but large we hope and believe from an educational standpoint, as he has met and overcome much misunderstanding.

We respectfully represent that the finances of the college can only be properly handled in conection with the finances of the whole church, and consideration given to finances of the whole church, and consideration given to every department. This end may largely be met through an annual budget, and when fully undertaken, the college should be run within the limits laid down by the body, the debt met, reduced, paid off, and when paid, kept paid, and additional expenditure made only with the consent of the body. There should be economy in collection as well as expenditure. But under existing circumstances, it is an open question if there is any other alternative than for the College Board of Trustees aggresively to push efforts for the securing of means. for the securing of means.

He who climbs above the cares of this world, and turns his face to God, has found the sunny side of life. The world's side of the hill is chill and freezing to a spiritual mind; but the Lord's presence gives a warmth of joy which turns winter into summer. which turns winter into summer.

THE DOCTRINE OF REPENTANCE.

A sermon delivered at Kansas City, November 13, 1913. by Patriarch F. A. Smith. Reported by Belle Robinson James.

The speaker read nine verses of the thirteenth chapter of Luke and said: I call special attention to the thought contained in the fifth verse: "I tell you nay; but, except ye repent, yeshall all likeperish." The subject is an old one, generally considered as one of the first principles of the gospel, and it is as old as the gospel itself. It is sometimes looked upon as a minor principle, but to my mind it occupies one of the prominent and important places in the teachings of the Son of God, and it is one of those peculia r subjects that possibly has two edges to it-it will cut both ways. In other words, it will effect inside of the church and outside of the church. Some seem to get the idea that repentance is only for the outsider, the sinner who has made no profession of Christianity. While they need it without doubt, there is also room for it and its work inside the church. Some may think there should not be any necessity for it inside the churchand I would not controvert that very much, but unfortunately for us, we are human beings; we have not reached a condition of perfection as yet, and as a consequence, we discover that there is necessity for its use inside the church.

Now the Master was talking to a class of individuals who had rather complimented themselves upon the thought that they were the people of God, they were his favored people above all others; and yet he tells them that except they repent of their sins they shall all likewise perish. He gives them two ilustrations,-and no doubt the people of that day were a good deal like they are now; for you will discover that humanity is a good deal alike, no matter in what age you find it,-one, the Galations who perished at the hands of Pilate and whose blood was mixed with the sacrifice and whom the Jews thought were so badly defiled and so wicked that this thing came upon them as the judgment of God. The same thought was held of those upon whom the tower of Siloam fell; but the Master gives them emphatically to understand that that was not correct; that they were not more wicked than others at Jerusalem, and then says: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

You will discover in this that salvation is made dependent upon this doctrine of repentance, and the importance of that doctrine I am going to strive to establish tonight, and bring out, if I can clearly, the thought that it plays one of the most important parts in the salvation of the human race. It cannot and must not be confined to the narrow limits that seems to have been thrown around it in the past.

What does repentance comprehend? What does it mean? There are several statements we might read concerning this. God in talking to the Israelites gave them some instruction that we want you to get. Repentance has been generally accepted in the world to be, that if an individual expresses sorrow and sheds a few tears, why, of course, he is repentant, and they have acted upon that theory to a very large degree. But that is not all of repentance; it may have its place in repentance, but repentance must be something more than sorrow.

In the 18th chapter of Ezekiel, beginning at the 19th verse, we read:

"Yet say ye, why doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them he shall surely live. The soul that sinneth, it shall die. on shall not bear the iniquities of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son; the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him. But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die. And his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him; in his righteousness that he hath done he shall

I have read this to show you the principle that the Master laid down, and he emphasizes the fact that the Father will not answer for the iniquity the some nor the son for the iniquity of the father, neither can the righteousness of the father save the sau. They must stand upon their own responsibility; and in the presentation of the thought he carries the idea clearly-the individual who has been wicked if he will turn from his wickedness -all of it, and do it no more, but 'keep all my statutes and do that which is right he shall save his soul alive—he shall live. nothing else in the scripture that explained this principle, this would be sufficient. But the Master gives the two sides, and I want to call attention, briefly, to that, so that we may make the application of repentance, two-fold in its character tonight, inside the church and outside of the

We all need salvation. We all need redemption, and if there is any sinner in the wide world that needs it more than another, it is the sinner inside the church. You may think possibly that this is a little extreme; they ought not to have any more than anybody else, but I say they do. The sinner outside who makes no profession, has not understood the word-surely would not be as responsible nor be held to the same close account as the individual inside the church who transgresses the law when he knows the law, and when he professes to believe in Jesus Christ and his commandments, and to keep them. That is why I say that the sinner inside the church is under greater condemnation.

Ezekiel tells that the sins of the wicked man shall not be mentioned unto him if he repents from them and does them no more and does that which is right. He also presents the other side of the case: if a righteous man leave that which is righteous and doeth wickedly, he shall suffer the consequence of that wickedness.

"But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abomination that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he d

"Again, when the wicked man turneth away from wickedness that he bath committed and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive. Because he considereth and turneth away form all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall

Now in this case, we have presented before us both sides of the question. We have the wicked man. We have therighteous man. If the righteous man leaves his righteousness and commits iniquity, he will suffer the consequences. If the wicked man leaves his wickedness and does that which is right and does the wicked things no more, he shall save his soul alive. He has presented the two sides and made it quite clear there are two sides.

I want to notice carefuly a statement made by the Apostle Paul touching upon this point in a very clear way and which will help us to know just what he means by what we may term the difference between sorrow and repentance. seems that the Apostle had written those people a letter in which he gave them what we might coll a scolding, and after sending it, and thinking over the mater he concluded he was just a little harsh about it probably, and it just repented him a little that he did it: but later he gets word from them and here is what follows:

For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent: for I did perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for

Now I rejoice not that we were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in

For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation m be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death.

For behold, this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear of this matter. 2 Cor. 7:8-11.

When this letter came to them and they began to see what they were doing, it had the desired effect. It awoke them and aroused in them a consciousness of their own iniquity.

Paul shows clearly, that there are two kinds of sorrow, that of godly sorrow that worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of, and the sorrow of the world which worketh death, and those people had that godly sorrow. There came to them a recognition of their sin, and in the recognition of that transgression they found their own condition and sorrowed over it. But what did it do for them when they sorrowed in this way? Was it simply the shedding of tears? Was it simply the fact that they were sorry in their heart over that? If that had been all, my friends, the sorrow of the world might have brought that, but we discover it worked something different from that; it worked repentance not to be repented of, and in the exercise of repentance, the apostle clearly outlines what they did; "what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves." Oh! that is the Oh! that is There must be a clearing of yourselves. It stirred them up and produced in them a recognition of their guilt and made them careful that they did not do it again. It made them clear themselves, in other words go to work and make right what they had done wrong.

Now we see repentance working under a godly sorrow. Now you know there are two kinds of this sorrow and there are conditions in the world that we are confronted with quite frequently, and in our experiences in church work we have had to meet it quite often and it is anything but a satisfactory thing.

Too often have I discovered in our experiences in church work that individuals have been exercised over their sinful condition, but instead of the repentance that they ought to have had, there was sorrow, not a sorrow because they had been in transgression particularly, but because they had been found out, that they had been caught in their iniquity and must bear the consequences of an injured reputation, or face the penalty of the law. Such sorrow didn't work any particular repentance, for some of those individuals have immediately fallen into the same transgression as soon as they had gotten out from under the clutches of the law.

"Well," says one, "there isn't anything said out that." No? I wonder how many times about that." you would think there ought to be recognition of repentance when the individual immediately drifts right back into the same old sin! long must we bear with that kind of work? Why someone speaks right up: "The scripture says we will have to forgive them seventy times seven." Does it? "Why, yes," says one," of course it does." Exactly, but, my friends, but on what conditions must we forgive them seventy times seven? It is a peculiar thing that very often the people seem to lose sight of the conditions that are presented in connection with this language. I think we will discovr before we get through, and especially you people that are members of the congregation that I belong to, will remember when I read it to you, that it says-"As oft as they repent thou shalt forgive-if unto seventy times seven." I like that feature of it. and as you think of the matter you will come to believe it right too, for when we talk about repentance, we expect something; we demand something.

An individual professes Christianity. We require of him a recognition of the law of God. and that it shall be manifest in his life and conduct in the putting away of evil. Every church member expects that of him. Every individual outside of the church that knows him and knows that he has made confession of Christ expects him to do that. Every one of them. That is expected of the individual who may be a transgressor or sinner as the world calls him. But what about the individual who is a member of the church who commits transgression? How are you going to deal with him? Are we to expect that he shall manifest in his conduct, in his life, a neglect of the principle of repentance which is necessary and absolutely required in order that he shall still hold a standing in the church of God. and be in good fellowship? Can we justly expect that in application of this principle which the Lord himself has made applicable to all both in and out of the church that there should be a peaal ty placed upon the one who transgressed, possibly through ignorance of the law which will not be put upon the individual who knows the law? Would that be justice? The Lord says his laws are equal, and if they are, they will demand of the individual that is a sinner whether he is inside or outside the church, that he shall make his repentance manifest to mankind. And if he is truly repentant of the evil he will make right what he has made wrong.

Now it is not sufficient, then, that we should be sorry. True repentance means more than that, and hence, when the Master made the declaration to those people in Palestine and gave them to understand that except they repent they should all perish, he recognized the force of that position, and he saw clearly the hypocrisy, if you will let me use that term, that was practiced by many of those people in their lives.

It may seem a little hard to talk about hyperrisy as being a quality of some of those who attempt to teach the principles of repentance, but it was the case with the scribes and Pharisees: yet, my friends, how can we make it otherwise? What value is there in the principles of Christianity if they do not correct the evils that are in the world? If we are going to make the way so easy: take down the bars until there is nothing to do, so that men can follow the same old paths of sin without any change in their lives, it seems to me that Christianity would lose its power and be without value.

But if we discover in the application of the law that God has given that it requires the individual who comes to God to correct the evils and sins of which he has been guilty and make right the wrongs, then he can begin to comprehend how Christianity can accomplish its work and redeem man from sin.

Repentance is the principle upon which this change of character hinges . Now as a church we have stood for years upon-this principle as being a necessity. Turn with me to Section 17 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants which has come to us by revelation, and which we have been pleased to term the law of God. I want to call your attention to paragraph 7:

And again by way of commandment to the church concerning the manner of baptism: all those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins and are willing to take upon them the hame of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end; and truly manifest by their works that they have received the Spirit of Christ, unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."

Here we are told that they are those who "witness before the church that they have thuly repented of all their sins," who are to be received into the church. Here the law holds that it is necessary and that individuals who have not yet become memebrs of the church of God should manifest to the church that they have received of the spirit of repentance and are willing to turn from their evils and take upon them the name of Jesus Christ before we shall receive them into the

Now friends, think for a moment of the situation. Shall we say to the soul that comes to us with his heart bleeding under the consciousness of his own guilt, pleading for the forgiveness that God has promised to the child that comes in sincerity, and say to him: "We shall demand of you the evidence that you are indeed sincere before we will grant to you the right of baptism that shall give you the remission of your sins?' And then, when some who have been baptized into the church have committed iniquity, and continue in it, and when the officers go and labor with them and demand of them to walk uprightly. and they still persist in refusing to listen to those officers until they are brought before a tribunal of the church and are about to be convicted, confess and plead guilty, and are quick to ask forgiveness. Shall we take them into full fellowship without asking them to give some evidence of the sinceriey of their profession? We must recognize the equality that God has haid belongs to his law, and that the individual who stands in that attitude is just as much under the law of repentance as the man outside who is seeking admission to the church, and must needs manifest fruit meet for repentance, as John the Baptist taught, before we extend to him the hand of fellowship in fullnes again.

Now I am going to call your attention to the definition. I will ask you to go with me to Section 58 of this little book of Covenants and there we have a statement of what may be termed repentance, and this definition is one that we, as a people, can stand upon. I want the world to know where we stand upon that principle, for it is a vital one:

"Behold, he who has repented of his sins, the same is forgiven, and I the Lord, remembereth them no more. By you may know that a man has repented of his sins, behold he will confess them, [that is what we want] and forsake them. Par. 9.

If the man is truly repentant at heart, sincerely, earnestly endeavoring to bring himself into favor with God, he will confess his sins and forsake them. Now we could naturally conclude if the individual did not confess untill he was compelled to that his confession would not be of a great amount of value. I have said sometimes I would not give them a snap of my finger for a bushel of them and I don't know that I would under the circumstances of that kind. If they are going to confess though, in the sense in which this book holds out, they will repent before the people get the evidence, it will be their duty to go make their acknowledgement and then not do the sin any more. If they did do it again, continue to do it again and again, we would naturally conclude that there was not much sincerity or honesty in their profession.

ZION'S ENSIGN

Now some may say: "Well, if you are going to make repentance as important as that, it would have its weight, and influence the world in the recognition of the right." I surely think it would, my friends. There is no question but what it would, and you will discover at once if the people recognize that principle as they ought to do and put it into operation according to that provision he has given there—it may be that we could not forsake all of our sins in one day or make confession of all of them at once, but as soon as we discover ourselves in transgression-every time we did and made that kind of a confession and forsook the sins that we were guilty of, how long would it take, friends, to put us in a condition of righteousness? Not long, would it?

You discover, then, that this is a working principle of the gospl of Christ. It is one of the redeeming features of God's grace given to the human race and we ought to move along lines of that kind. Now I am going to read another statement and again I use this little book, Section 42, paragraph 7:

Thou shalt not kill, and he that killeth shall die. Thou shalt not steal and he that stealeth and will not repent shall be cast out. Thou shalt not lie. He that lieth and will not repent shall be cast out. Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shalt cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to shall deny the faith and shall not have the Spirit, and if he repents not he shall be cast out. Thou shalt not comit adultery; and he that comitteth adultery and repenteth not, shall be cast out; but he that has committed adultery and repents with all his heart and for-saketh it and doeth it no more, thou shalt forgive; but if he doeth it again he shall not be forgiven, but shall be cast out. Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm. Thou knowest my laws concerning these things are given in my scriptures; he that sinneth and repenteth not, shall be cast out."

Here is the law given and it is in perfect keeping with what the Master gave to us in the Scriptures. It presents a clear outline of that particular duty that rests upon us. He that sinneth and repenteth not (in the church) shall be cast out. He that is a sinner and does not repent,well you wouldn't want him inside, would you? Would he be worthy to come in before making an application of our rule? If he has committed iniquity he must confess it and forsake it and by this you may know that he has repented.

Let us go back and notice a statement made in Ezekiel. I read before from the 18th chapter. Now I am going to read from the 33rd. It seems those Israelite people had been complaining some and the Lord begins to talk to them.

"Therefore O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; thus ye speak, saying, If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?

should we then live?

Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, the righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression; as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous he able to live for his righteousness in the the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the by that he sinneth.

When I shall say unto the righteous that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness and commit iniquity, all his righteosuness shall not be remembered; for his iniquity that he hath comitteth, he shall die

Again I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if right:

If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he hath robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity, he shall surely live, he shall not die.'

Here is the important thought I want to bring to your mind: "When I say unto the wicked, thou shalt surely die, if he turn from his sin and doeth that which is lawful and right, if the wicked restore the pledge; give again that he hath robbed; walking in the statutes of life without committing iniquity, he shall surely life: he shall not die."

Now that is repentance proper. The transgressor, whoever he may be inside or outside of the fold, who repents of his sins and turns away from his iniquity; making wright the wrong he hss done, restore the pledge, give back that that he has robbed, this individual, if he continues to walk in the ways of righteousness shall save his soul alive—he shall not dio. This is repentance. It is not merely sorrow, it is not the humbling of our pride; it is not the mere regret because of shame that may come to us through the exposition of our iniquity that is going to correct these things and change our natures; but a free recognition and willing confession of the wrong, and a manifest turning away from it. That is the course that is going to find favor with God.

There isn't one of us but who would recive an individual in a moment, who came to us in that way, acknowledging his wrong, showing the depths of his sorrow and regret by making all things right, and we would be willing to give him a helping hand and forgive him of the transgressions and help him to do what is right. Then how do you think God will feel? Why the person who comes conscientiously and honestly, in that way will find favor with God. God has said he would grant it and he cannot refuse.

In the 26th chapter of Jeremiah and the third verse, the prophet says: "He that turnth from his iniquity and repenteth of his evil, shall find salvation." Under these conditions we are clearly in the right. Now I have met one or two experiences in my life in which this has been demonstrated. I intend to repeat one of them,

While holding meetings in one of our western cities in a tent a number of yeras ago, there came a man and his wife, as we understood it in that community, and attended services for a long time; the continued to attend and were very deeply interested, but they did not come into the church. It seemed strange because others did, and they had expressed themselves time and time again as being entirely satisfied with the doctrine and believed that the church was the church of Jesus Christ. But there was something that kept them out-there was a distant feeling of some kind, so that we could not get close to them. I wondered at it. After I had closed my services and was holding meetings in a store building in the south part of the city, one evening I was sitting at the desk reading before the time for meeting to open, when the door opened and one of the ladies who had been baptized and this woman of which I speak, stepped into the building. As they came in, I looked up, and all at once there came to me one of the peculiar experiences of my life, for as these ladies started down the aisle, there seemed to unfold before be a clear distinct representation of the condition of this woman. understood instantly why they had not come to be baptized. I saw her life and it was an astonishment to me. They came directly up to the stand and she asked me if I would come with comeone else to her house at a certain time. I told her I would bring one of the ministers of the church with me and come. We went. The man was a large man, a fine looking man. These two people sat there after we had met and had a word of prayer, and looked at each other for a moment, and then they unburdened their souls. They confessed everything; told us the condition just as I had seen it. They went like children and the "Brethren, what shall we do?" crv came: told them I would ask for a little time, I did not know what to do. I thought of the day of Pentecost when the cry was made: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" I prayed over that as I had never prayed over anything before, for I wanted instruction; I wanted direction. Here were two souls pentitent, weeping, and asking the question, what can we do? They had never been marriedthat is the man had not, the woman had. The duty came home to me. What shall we do for I received instruction on that and began the work necessary; made the investigation required, found that the lady's former husband was dead; she was free. They were maried, and when she had made right everything that shecould, she says, I have done all that I can do to right my wrongs. Now I want to be baptized. We baptized her with the manifestation of the Spirit of the favor of God in her behalf; but the man says, Brother, I am not ready; I have wrongs that I have done that I must make right first. When I have done that, corrected these, then I will be ready to go into the church."

Here was a case of true repentance. He immediately left for his old home and there began the work for making right his wrongs. He wrote me after a year of work, he wrote me several times during the year, but after the end of the year I got a letter from him. He says: "Bro

Smith, I have done everything that lies in my power. I have made right every injury I have ever done as far as it is possible for me to make it right. Now I am ready for baptism. Send an And I confess frankly my dear friends, it was the most clean-cut and clear case of genuine repentance, of true repentance that I had met in many a day. It was one in which the individuals were convicted of their sin. They moved in harmony with the divine injunction; they confessed them and forsook them. They made right the wrongs; they gave back the pledge and that which had been taken. They corrected their evil and then were ready to move out into the divine life and put on Christ and be new creatures in fact.

Now friends, I want to emphasize that thought for you and ask you to think of it. The Master made no mistake when he made the declaration that "except ye repent, ye shall all likewise per-ish." The commission he gave his disciple his seventy when he sent them out according to the scripture was to 'cry repentance unto this generation.' We come down to the time when we move out to the work under the dispen-sation of this latter day and the commission that God gives to these people here and the elders of this church is: "Say repentance unto this generation." It is the slogan cry of the gospel. It is the great point upon which we must recognize the peculiar working of God in us, that shall be developed within us the disposition to put away the evils, the sins of our own committing and do that which is right in the sight of God in order that we may find favor with him.

Repentance, then, means something. It means more than society at large has generally given it credit for. It requires a genuine true conversion of the individual and the efforts of that individual made to correct the wrongs that have been done shall bring to him the divine recognition, and favor of God and save his soul alive in the kingdom of God.

I ask you then, friends, to think of it, to carefully consider it, and you will see at a glance that to become a child of God, a genuine child of God, a true child of God, to continue a child of God, the principle of repentance must have its peculiar work with us. It belongs to us. It will save the human race, and bring to us the peace of mind, the satisfaction of soul, the confidence in God that nothing else can give to us.

Now may God help us to see it. May he help us to grasp its importance and recognize its peculiar requirements; to move under the influence of the conviction that comes to us day by day and year by year of our own mistakes and follies and enable us to repent of them. Then the Lord says we shall be forgiven; if we repent not we shall be cast out. We may deceive the church and they may cast us out; but my friends, our name inscribed on the church record cannot hide from God and his searching eve our faults, our errors, our sins-especially the willful transgression and the stubborn refusal upon our part to forsake them and confess them unto God.

May God help us and bless us and strengthen us in our warfare, encourage us in our battle in life, and finally may we be found among the worthy ones in his glorious kingdom. Amen.

THE SWEETEST MUSIC.

I have listened to the magic Of the Mock bird on the wing, As he poured forth liquid music, Making field and forest ring; But his song is not one-half as sweet Although it has beguiled— As the prattle of a baby, Or the laughter of a child.

I have listened to the great of earth As their hands swept o'er the keys, And been captured by the music Of their wondrous melodies: Of their wondrous merodies;
But their songs, they do not move me,
(Though they oft are strange and wild),
Like the prattle of a baby,
Or the laughter of a child.

I sometimes think that Heaven Will not be half complete, Unless beneath the tree of life, Or or the golden street,
We can hear the old, old music,
That on earth so reconciled—
The sweet prattle of a baby,
Or the laughter of a child.

William M. Aylor.

William M. Aylor needs no introduction to the saints in the fields where he has labored, but to the many saints in other fields he may not be so well known. He is one of the younger men of the ministry, upon whom was placed last year the responsibinity of the office of Apostle.

Bro. Aylor was born in Illinois in 1864. The story of his conversion to the faith of the restored gospel is an interesting one. Living in the newly settled regions of Oklahoma in 1891 he heard the first sermon and contrary to his expectations found it to be the truth which he believed. The preacher was Elder Joseph R. Lambert, who, upon reading a private letter from a relative in the neighborhood where Bro. Aylor lived was directed by the Spirit to go to that place. Coming a long distance to what seemed an uninviting field he commenced praching, resulting in the baptism he commenced preaching, resulting in the baptism including Bro. Aylor.

He was ordained an elder in 1898 and his diligence in the ministerial work led to his ordination to the office of Seventy in 1901. His mission work has been largely in Oklahoma and the South and last year when he was ordained to the Apostleship he was placed in charge of the Southern mission.

From the time he came into the church he met much opposition from the people of the Christian or Disciples' Church, and of necessity was obliged to study in order to meet them successfuly. The opposition has continued and he has developed in strength and has had great success in meeting the ministers of that church in debate, having held fifteen debates with them. In all his work, wherever he has labored, he has helped to make the name of Latter Day Saint honorable.

NOTES. (From the Daily) President Smith.

President Joseph Smith has been in attendance at all the business sessions of the Conference, and at a few of the other services. His participation in some of the discussions and his ready grasp of the subjects in hand show that his interest in all the affairs of the Church is as keen as ever before, notwithstanding his blindness and partial deafness deprives him of seeing and hearing many things. His faithful watching over the Church as a pastor through the many years of his life is not a service to be easily or indifferently omitted, and he seeks by all means possible to keep in touch with the progress of the work and the events of each day, not only in the Church but in civil and national affairs.

NOTES.

President Joseph Smith remained in the ses sions of the conference till the last, his health holding out very well. However, he made no attempt to preside or take any leading part except The burden of the work to make a few speeches. falls upon his two Counselors.

The Standing High Council was called to sit Saturday to hear an appealed case. The Council is composed of twelve High Priests, presided over by the Presidency of the Church, making fifteen in all. The High Council in the Church corresponds to the Supreme Court in the State.

One of the helping organizations is the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service. Their reports this year show a growing strength in their organization, and their labors extended for some time through the Conference, and covered a variety of fields of usefulness. The Church of Jesus Christ offers a busy field for all who are disposed to work, and the women may find plenty to do as well as the men. Through this auxiliary they are finding it.

During the last week of the Conference the weather has been most excellent, and all are rejoicing in the coming springtime.

The mistaken idea that instinct is a sufficient guide in

The mistaken idea that instinct is a sufficient guide in so delicate and sacred and vittal a matter, the comfortable superstition that babies bring their own directions with them-these fictions-have existed long enough.

If a girl asks me why, since the functions of parenthood are so uncertain, she should make the sacrifices necessary to such training, sacrifices entailed by this highests education of mind and body and spirit. I can only say that it is better to be ready even if not called than to be called and found wanting.

Science has not been able as yet, to say at exactly what.

Science has not been able as yet to say at exactly what time that influence begins affecting the child, before birth nor how far they can be controlled, directed or modified.

To the "born mother" the first hours of baby's birth repays her for all the months of waiting. I know that there are some women that do not agree with me. This, howare some women that to not agree with me. Inis, nowever, is but proof that all women have not a deep maternal instinct. Those who have not may love their children tenderly, but it is an acquired love.

The woman who is what an old Irish woman termed, "a a rapture that san ean never lorget.

It is hers, bone of her bone, flesh of her flesh, her very own and with the great gift comes the knowledge the patient waiting, the anguish of suffering are over.

When a true woman puts her finger for the first time into the tiny hand of her baby, and feels that helpless that he had the suffer of the first time into the tiny hand of her baby, and feels that helpless that he was the suffer of the first time.

clutch which tightens her very heart strings, she is born again with her new-born child. A mother has a sacred claim on the world, even if that claim rests solely on the fact of her motherhood:

Her life may have been a cipher but when a child comes figure is added which gives it value.
Unfortunately, most of the exalted moments of life are allowed by a comment of the called the comments of the same of the called the comments of the same of the called the Controlled to the controlled to the controlled to the country mother must not wonder as the days go by and her strength returns slowly and the baby's cries at night and frets by day, she feels a reaction from her state of bliss. She begins to appreciate that after all, she is only an ordinary woman, that to have a child is not the marvel of the controlled to the control retation she thought it at first, that she is but treading in the same path trodden by all women since Eve. It is not that she loves her baby less than expected. She loves it more than she thought possible, but she is weak, and—appaling thought—the trained nurse will soon be leaving.

While she has her let her learn her lessons from her in te way of judicious training.

One nurse told me that she could, in the weeks in which she cared for a young baby after its birth get it into regular habits if the mother would allow it.

A young mother was telling a physician that she had

A young mother was telling a physician that she had begun her child's training very early in his career. "At what age?" was the query. "When he was three weeks old," was the proud reply. "Then Madam," was the startling reply, "you began three weeks too late."

Absurd as this statement may at first appear, it contains a truth which every mother of the new-born baby would do well to take to heart. A child's physique during his whole after life may depend upon the care he receives in infancy.

Women have been fighting many battles for the higher education these last few years and they nearly gained the day.

When at 'ast complete victory shall perch upon their banners, let them make one more struggle, and that for the highest education, which shall include a specific training for parenthood.

JOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

To the Spring River Saints

To the Spring River Saints

The great wheel has whirled, and again we are thrown out into the Spring River District. It is well, we may have opportunity of crossing the border into Mexico. Our war dander has "risen" very preceptibly of late, until homiletics and peace offerings have almost faded away. We are fortunate, however, in having the best district and as fine a lot of saints as there are in the church to work for and with. Brn. Lee Quick, A. C. Silvers and Geo. Edwards are all tried and true workers who are also returned to the district, with the addition of A. L. Gray, a young man who bids fair to make his mark as a worker in the vineyard. We hope to interest a few of the local workers as fielders for the year, and with this force we should continue to keep our district in the forefront, up to date and progressive in every movement. progressive in every movement.

Our district is composed of twenty-seven counties, six in Missouri, the Zion and God-honored state of the world, with its unequeled fruits and flowers, the dews of heaven, and the deeps beneath. Eleven counties in Kansas with clean, fresh cities, abundance of cereals, and inexhaust-ible coal fields couched beneath, where thrives the Kansas ible coal fields couched beneath, where thrives the Kansas sunflower who so intelligently turns his smilling face to the orb of day, and also the home of the prairie-dog, rattle-snake, and owl, and the Socialist Party. We have seven counties in Oklahoma, the land of great promise, where the "Red Man" is fast accepting the gospel and the story of his forefathers, where the hunting grounds are fast being turned into vinkyards and waving fields of grain, where the black crude oil from a thousand geisers bring wealth to Jacob's race and his face waxes pale no more. Last but not least, we have three counties in Arkansas, the land of the big "red apples, stick-tites and clar seed peaches;" where the mighty hills of the Ozarks seem to lean over against the sky, hanging their dark sombre side upon the clouds, where the violets of the deep vales lift up their cups of blue and through their perfumed breath, are sun-kissed about the middle of the day; where the crowned peaks of those wooded monarchs reflect the the crowned peaks of those wooded monarchs reflect the golden splendon of the setting sun.

With this vast array of territory before us, with the many opportunities for preaching in new places, as President of the District, I suggest that Missionaries confine their labors to the out-lying districts principally, and to the weaker branches that are needing assistance, leaving the weaker branches that are needing assistance, leaving the larger branches to the local arm to be cared for as specified in the law. We also wish to give notice of our quarterly conference in June, to be held with the Fairhand Branch. Also remember our reunion to convene at Joplin in Cunningham's Park, August 7th. 1914. We expect this reunion to be the grandest of the series. We are already arranging and completing our plans. Idusée will be an especial feature, there being a movement on foot to combine all the choirs of the district to aid in the grand chorus. Our Bro-Rushton the "Different" together with other excellent speakers already secured, will be with us. Also Bro. Wm. Lewis, Patriarch for our district will be present. We remember with much pleasure the service he rendered last year.

So brethren, here's for a pull, and a strong pull alto-gether for the best interests of the work intrusted to our So mote it be.

THOUGHTS.

THOUGHTS.

Our position as to the Gospel is absolutely tenable; the argument logically sound and faultless. The Word pulsates with a wonderful power, seeking expression in terms of noble service. But there is always a feeling that hidden forces hinder and obstruct that expression. What are they?

A people sluggish with sleep, induced by an apparent peace and tranquility which ignores world-evils, the factors peace and tranquinty which ignores world-evils, the factors of soul destruction; secure in the thought that they are of the church because they are in it. These hinder. An environment of men and women coldly indifferent, carelessly critical, stubbornly antagonistic, blindly prejudiced, mistakenly active against the Truth. This ob-

Because the sway of Error, in the very nature of things, ust be temporary, and that of Right ultimate, but o danger need be feared. Not that of attacks and bitter persecutions by opponents among men or devils; not that of open scorning or silent shunning on the part of associates; only that caused by those who profess belief, but whose hearts are filled with fear instead of courage; whose constitutions are successful. convictions are weak and wavering, instead of abiding with constant purpose.

Yet this danger is more to be reckoned with than feared, for the action of the Word is to strengthen the weak, en-courage the distrustful, make fruitful the barren vine.

Upbuild by dispelling prejudice with the dissemination of knowledge; make the Word attractive by beauty of setting; a building neatly arranged; grounds trim and welkept; a welcome sincere and hearty; music beautiful and rendered in the spirit; praching invigorated with God-like

Affirm constantly; defend rather than attack; justify righteousness, never villify its detractors; render evident that life in the light of truth will open the beatific vision of Him "which keepeth truth forever."

THE HALF HAS NEVER BEEN TOLD. I have read of a beautiful city, Far away in the kingdom of God; I have read how its walls are of jasper, How its streets are all golden and broad. In the midst of the street is life's river Clear as crystal, and pure to behold; But not half of that city's bright glory To mortals has ever been told.

ave read of bright mansions in heaven, Which the Savior has gone to prepare; And the saints who on earth have been faithful. Rest forever with Christ over there. There no sin ever enters, nor sorrow; The inhabitants never grow old: But not half of the joys that await them, To mortals has ever been told.

I have read of white robes for the righteous, Of bright crowns which the glorified wear; When our Father shall bid them "Come enter, My glory eternally share." How the righteous are evermore blessed, As they walk through the streets of pure gold; But not half of the wonderful story, To mortals has ever been told.

I have read of a Christ so forgiving, That vile sinners may ask and receive That vile sinners may ask and receive Peace and pardon from every transgression, If obeying when they truly believe. I have read how he'll guide and protect us, If for safety we enter his fold; But not half of his goodness and mercy, To mortals has ever been told.

—Elizabeth A. Ellis.

Is Social Service Taking the Place of Faith? Many men in these latter days have turned side into "social service"; the feeding of the hungry and the clothing of the naked and the healing of the sick. A most Christlike sort of service! But to say that this is "the Christ-life" is to say a false and foolish thing. He "went about doing good"; but He did not content Himself with ministering to those who were laid in couches along His way. Not sustenance, but salvation was the keynote of His ministry. One of His great questions was, "How much better is a man than a sheep?" A man is better than a sheep by so much as a mansion in the Father's house and a garment of fine linen is better than a shelter from the passing storm and a warm fleece here and now. A man is better than a sheep by so much as eternity is longer than time. We are far afield when we imagine that we are following Christ's example by ministering to the physical needs of the people and refraining from dwelling on the sinfulness of sin and the supreme importance of reconciliation with a justly offended God. -The Christian Herald.

The Duty is the service we owe to others. first and highest duty of man is toward his Creotor and Redeemer, and after that toward his fellow men. In fact little difference is shown between duty to God and duty to man by the Lord in his statement to the Pharisees regarding the commandment; "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" and service to man is largely service to God for it is but carrying out the purposes of God.

As social beings men are inter-dependent, and any man who enjoys and lives by the service of his fellows and does not perform his part toward maintaining the common good is failing to fulfill his obligations to man, and dishonors his Creator. In fulfilling his obligations to men, and making himself his "brother's keeper," he honors God who created all.

The coming of the glorious gospel in the latter day restoration by angel hands has brought light, peace, joy, and salvation, to thousands of obedient souls, far exceeding what the world has otherwise known. But the reception of such wondrous blessings places upon the recipients obligations which were not previously borne, the fulfillment of which would lead to the gathering in of every willing soul to enjoy the same divine blessings. The responsibility thus placed upon those who have obeyed the gospel and have become members of the church of Jesus Christ falls equally upon all, subject only to the several abilities which the different members may have in the extension and development of the work.

The extent of a man's responsibility in the service of God is measured by his ability to render service. The kinds of ability in different men differ as their service differs, and it is well that it is so, for were all gifted with one and the same qualification there could be nothing accomplished. Were all gifted only as preachers there would be no executives and the work would fall to pieces, nor would there be any provision for their temporal necessities and hence they could not preach. Were all executives, were all business men, or all musicians, or teachers, the work could not move properly for all these and more are essential to the accomplishment of the great tasks of sending the message of life to all the world, and the preparation of a people to receive the Lord at his coming.

Hence in the kingdom of God, in which the activities of men are properly directed, there is need for men having every kind of qualification and engaging in every line of service, and that every man shall use his qualifications in the accomplishment of the work, uniting his service to that of others in so doing. Without this the work This variety of qualifications is cannot be done. made necessary by the universal character of the work to be lone covering as it does a great variety of necessities.

It may readily be seen that if the services of any one essential class be withheld, that in proportion to such withholding the whole work will be retarded. If those who preach drop out so that that part of the work is not done, there is not a member who would expect the gospel to win its way in the world. Occasionally an elder leaves the ministry to take the lecture platform or to enter the political field, and it is apparent that he is diverting his proportion of service to secondary considerations, to say the least, but were all the elders to do this who is there but would say, "These men are failing to perform their part of the work, and it must fail?"

But the elders bear but one part of the great responsibility, they represent but one or two of the many qualifications needen to carry on the work, and if others fail in performing their part the results will be the same as if the elders fail in performing theirs. The Lord has said: "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."

Since God has called the ministry, the business men, the professional men, the laborers, and all, to labor together with him for the accomplishment of the work of extending the gospel, the withholding of service by any one class of laborers will to that extent retard the gospel's progress. While certain qualifications are required for the ministry in their part of the work, other qualifications are required by men who have the responsibility of caring for the temporal part, and still others by those who by their various professions, businesses, and employments, acquire the temporal means necessary for the maintenance and extension of the work. For the prosperous man of business to devote his increased wealth to personal pleasure, or the attainment of personal ambitions, to the neglect of the gospel work, has the same effect upon the work as for the minister to turn his attention to other persuits than preaching and caring for the interests of the church. The universal distribution of responsibility among all the members of the church makes necessary a faithful performance of duty by every one.

Our duty to God requires that this be done "with all thy heart," and "with all thy strength," and the necessities of our fellow men and of the work demand it. A work that God himself has planted, that Christ has nourished, and in which angels have ministered in connection with many self-sacrificing men and women, should certainly enlist the willing service of every member, and receive his heartiest support whether that support be given in one form of labor or another or in material support. Could all but sense the importance of the work, and the extent of personal responsibility, surely the work of God would receive first consideration from every man. the gospel work is so considered and receives the support of all there will be no delays in its progress.

GENERAL CONFERENCE NOTES.

Some confusion existed one day over the meaning and force of a previous action regarding College finances. The adoption of the garding College finances. 'budget" in relation to college finances on Friday was understood by many to provide that whatever deficit there might be in the College accounts would be met from the general funds of the Church, while some thought otherwise, The bringing up of a deferred matter touching the same question opened the whole matter to debate, the discussion taking a very broad range. The matter did not seem to be exactly clear and each effort to clarify the situation only seemed to increase the mists.

Such conditions occasionally arise, and tend to show the struggles of the Church through its officers and delegates to get right upon all the incidental points and policies. While the fundamental law remains the same, and is unchangeable, the changing conditions of the world and among the membership of the Church, necessitates changes of methods and policies as to the incidental parts of the work. So that the fact of differences existing among the elders upon these matters gives no bad sign, but that through our differences we are impelled to struggle on to unity in all things.

We assemble from different places, from different environments, with differences of temperament and education, some from the stern government of Presbyterianism, others from the lax forms of Discipleism, some from regions of affluence and refinement, others from poverty and weakness, and it could not be expected that all would have the same ideas and see things just alike, but by brotherly association, by candid and honorable discussion, each gathers the thought and standards of the others, resulting in progress toward unity.

The Conferences are educational. Every person may gather something each day that will strengthen him in his particular line. The Saints above all people are intensely in earnest. They stand for the right as they see it, and strangers sometimes think upon hearing the earnest and open discussions that there is likely to be trouble in the church, but those who think so do not understand Latter Day Saints. One of the papers last week had a headline, "Row in the Mormon Conference," but not a member thought of such a thing as a row. Some years ago when an important question was being debated, the headline appeared the next morning, "A Split Threatened in the Church," but no such thing was thought of by a single member. Men stand for what they think is right no matter who may be on the opposite side, but the grace with which the minority yields to the majority when a matter is decided is remarkable.

For sixty years the Reorganized Church has stood as one, and there has been no split, and the prospects for continued unity were never brighter than now. The Church is united upon all matters fundamental, though we hope that as time progresses the numerous matters of detail will more fully be brought within that unity, and all see eye to eye.

WORTHY COUNSEL.

Extracts From the Farewell Sermon of John Robinson to the Pilgrim Fathers, 1620.

Brethren we are now quickly to part from one another and whether I may ever live to see your face on earth any more the God of heaven only But whether appointed that or not, I charge you before God and the blessed angels, that you follow me no farther that you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ.

If God reveals any thing to you by any other instrument of his, be as ready to receive it as ever you were ready to receive any truth by my ministry, for I am verily persuaded, I am very confident, that the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of his holy word. For my part I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the reformed churches, who are come to a period in religion and will go at present no further than the instruments of their reformation:

The Lutherans cannot be drawn to go beyond what Luther saw: What ever part of his will our good God has revealed to Calvin, they will rather die than embrace it. The Calvinists, you see, stick fast where they were left by that great man of God who yet saw not all things. This is a misery much to be lamented; for though they were burning and shining lights in their times, yet they penetrated not into the whole counsel of God, but were they now living would be as willing to embrace further light as that they first received. I beseech you remember it is an article of your church covenant that you be ready to receive whatever truth shall be made known to you from the written word of God.

Remember that, and every other article of your sacred covenant.

But I must here withal, exhort you to take heed what you receive as truth; examine it; consider it; and compare it with other scriptures of truth, before you receive it for it is not possible that the Christian world should come so lately out of such anti-christian darkness, and that perfection of knowledge should break forth at once. -Courtesy Elder Wm. Anderson.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

The interest of the Independence Branch during the past week has centered around the unusual event of the election of a presiding elder. Since 1901 when the stake was organized the presidency of the stake has been the presidency of the branch, but the action of the late conpresidency of the branch, out the action of the kinds reference provided that the leading branch of the stake might elect a separate president. Since the conference a number of names have been upon the lips of the saints as prospective officers for the position, and the last few days preceding the election interest was keen. The large days preceding the decident that no new would mber of names mentioned indicated that no one would come near receiving unanimous vote.

The nominating ballot at the business meeting on The nominating ballot at the business meeting on Monday night brought out over fifteen names which on the third ballot were reduced to four, viz. G. E. Harrington, D. J. Krahl, Walter W. Smith, and A. H. Parsons. On the last ballot the vote was taken on the names of G. E. Harrington and D. J. Independence, Mo., March 29, 1914.

Dear Ensign:-After several months trip through a part of the South, we arrived in Independence and are anticipating a pleasant time during General Confrence, in meet-ing friends whom we have not seen for four years. Leaving Joliet, we first went to Indianapolis, Ind., where we attended the district conference, and labored for a short time. We were pleasantly located at the home of Mr. and Sr. Morrison who made us welcome. There also, we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. and Sr. Barmore who had accompanied us to America from the South Se lands, we joining them there, as the steamer "Tahiti" stopped there enroute from Australia.

Shortly after the Indiana Conference, we left for Wirt, where we spent a short time holding meetings in the nice church building located there, and we had splendid inter-est at each service. Brother and Sister Ford shared their hospitality with us while in that part, and we greatly ap-preciated their kindness. We then made a short visit to the Davis sisters who reside in Jamestown, Ind., and a social evening with their friends was spent pleasantly, and we trust that some good was done. We next left for Louisville, Ky., where we visited the branch and met the many saints. A series of meetings was held and good in-terest prevailed. We made our home while in that city with Bro. and Sr. Vaughn Merrifield, who kindly entertained us and made us feel at home.

From there, we left for Joliet to spend the holidays, this pleasure not having been ours for four years, and also we desired to attend the district conference in Chicago. The conference was largely attended, and the meetings pronounced excellent. We left soon after, direct for Paris, Tennessee, where we had planned to reach long before, but were detained. We were taken to the home of Bro. and Sr. Wm. McClain who reside a short distance out from the city, and we were very welcome at their home. They had a horse and carriage, and we were anticipating many pleasant drives, when we learned shortly that we were expected at once in other places, so we moved on. We held some meetings, however, at the home of Bro. and Sr. McClain, and a few of he neighbors and friends not of the

we next visited May's Hill, not far from Paris, and we spent a week or so with Bro, and Sr. Boothe, holding the metings most of the time in their home, as so much sickness and unfavorable weather, hindered us in having the church services as had been plannd. Bro. Cobb of May's church services as had oeen plannd. Het. Cond of lany chall kindly drove us into Paris, and from there we went out to India, a small place located near Paris. We went to the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. Campbell, who made us very welcome and with whom we greatly enjoyed the short stay. Meetings were held for several nights in the school house near, and the members seemed delighted with the results, in that so many came out to hear. Many favorable comments from those not of the church were heard, and we therefore trust that some good may result therefrom. Near the close of the series of meetings held there, the weather became unfavorable for continuing, and we decided to continue on our way to Peryear, ing, and we decided to continue on our way to Peryear, Tennessee, where we wished to labor for a while before district conference convened. We reached that city and were met at the train by Bro. Comie Gallimore and Bro. Curtis Ross, who gave us a fine horse to drive, and a comfortable carriage, while they led the way in another rig. The scenery was beautiful, and the day a perfect one. We reached their home, and Sr. Ross always ready to welcome the missionaries, came out and greeted us, and invited us in where we had a splendid dinner, and by the way we shall not seen forget that cond "neach us, and invited us in where we had a spiendid dinner, and by the way we shall not soon forget that good "peach cobbler," and also shall not forget the interesting family. We left that eve, for the home of Bro, and Sr. Callimore, where meeting was to be held that eve, and where we were kindly invited to stay during our sojourn in those parts. Meetings were held the two days we spent there, and the capital country to the weather when the security resembles. parts. According were first the two days we spent chern and the saints seemed to greatly enjoy them. Many of the saints came long distances, even though the weather was very unfavorable. We were kept rather busy here, especially that the conference was held there shortly.

especially that the conference was held there shortly. Saturday, Feb. 14th found us up early, preparing for a long drive in the cold, to the Oakland Branch, at Farmington. Bro. J. R. McClain and Elder Pitt, going in one carriage, and Bro. C. Gallimore and I in the latter's carriage. We were royally welcomed at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. J. Adair, and we spent many pleasant days, holding meetings in the Oakland Church. The weather was fine for a few days, and many attended each service, including a number of outsiders, but the rain and condition of the reads interfered, and it was thought best to discontinue, and thus, we said farewell to the dear friends there, and journeyed on our way.

Bro. and Sr. Williams, good saints, also reside near the Oakland Branch Church, and Bro. Williams kindly offered odition of the High Hill Branch a distance of several miles. We gladly accepted his offer, and reached there after a very cold ride, going to the home of Bro. and Sr. Gray. We appreciated the warm blazing fire of logs in the Gray. We appreciated the warm blazing fire of logs in the fire place as we entered, and soon made ourselves three of the party around the fire. We spent a week there, and held meetings in the High Hill Church. Special efforts were made to make the meetings a success, and many came many miles to attend the services. Elder J. R. McLain joined us there, and he and Elder Pitt were kept busy each eve. We left High Hill, Bro. Gray Jr. and Bro. McClain taking us to Bethel, where in the church there, which is one of the nicest churches we saw in the district, belonging to the saints, a lecture on Palestine was an which is one of the nicest churches we saw in the district, belonging to the saints, a lecture on Palestine was announced, and we stopped two days at the home of Bro. and Sr. Hendrix, who are striving to let their light stine, even though, practically isolated from the saints. We were made welcome there, and enjoyed our short stay. From there we started on our trip to Foundry Hill, where conference was shortly to convene. We went direct to the home of Bro. and Sr. Ross. The last day of conference, Sunday March 1st, was a very stormy day, cold and warm fluxing went of the day. A large retires cold and snow flurries most of the day. A large gathering of saints and friends attended conference, and we all had a very pleasant time together. Our trip through the various branches was interesting, and while we could not see that much good was accomplished, at the time, we sincerely hope that some good may result in the future.

There are many excellent young ladies and gentlemen all through the districts, and we regretted that many of them did not have the opportunities which some others have as they are capable of doing much for the cause we represent. We hope and pray that these fine young people may have better advantages and opportunities in the near future. We shall not forget the kindness shown us, and the efforts put forth to make our visits pleasant.

We visited Eagle Creek where we stopped a couple of days at the home of Bro. and Sr. Roberts. Meetings were held in the church there, but the whooping cough and measles so prevalent in that neighborhood, inter-fered with the people going out to hear, so we journeyed on to Paris, once more. From there to McKenzie, Tenn., on to Paris, once more. From there to McKenzie, Tenn., where we were met by Bro. Dickson, who had arranged a series of meetings in that District. We were made welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. Reynolds, and meetings were held for a number of evenings, in the school house near. Bro. We were kindly invited to spend the day at the pleasant home of Mr. McCain who resides near this at the pleasant nome of Mr. Auctain win estates heat mip-place, and we found Miss McCain such a charming hostess, that we regretted the day passed so quickly. Next day, we left for Fulton, Ky., where we had promised to stop off enroute to Independence, with Bro. and Sr. J. R. Mc-Clain. We were pleased to have the pleasure of meeting Sr McClain and their interesting family, as we had been associated with him, most of the time, during our trips to the different branches. He was always ready to do all he could to make our stay pleasant at the different places.

We left Fulton March 20, for Independence, reaching there next day at 7 a. m., where we were met by Elder Pitt's son.

We shall remember each brother and sister whom we met, and trust that the Lord will bless all, in their labors for the Master.

My lectures on the Book of Mormon with the stereoptican illustrations are taking well here; they are different from what they have had. Bro. Griffiths is doing a great work over here, and is the right man in exactly the right place. He is meeting with success. We have both been greatly blessed.

THE TEEN AGE GIRL

THE TEEN AGE GIRL.

The following article was prepared and read by Miss Mabel Knipschild (Instructor of foreign languages at Graceland College,) as a basis for round table talk in one of the classes which considered this subject in its various phases, and of which Miss Knipschild had charge. The occasion was one of the conferences of the Religio con-

Before considering the "teen age" or "adolescent age" of the girl we shall briefly review her previous twelve or thirteen years. Her development may be divided into three periods which are each marked by peculiar physical, mental and moral characteristics that demand specific treatment. These three periods are: First, childhood, from birth to the age of 8; Second, youth, from 8 to 12; and third, the teen age from 12 to 18. No definite dividing line separates one stage from the other, but the changes are more or less noticable.

First, childhood. The physical characteristics are rapid First, childhood. The physical characteristics are rapid growth, a high susceptibility to disease and fatigue. It is then when all the rapid instincts ripen, and these are the basis of the child's activity. It acts by suggestion and imitation, for its brain is not developed enough to supply reasoning powers. Without these the child is neither moral nor immoral but unmoral. For a normal growth we have to know how much to let these instincts function. What stories should be read to the child, games played, and nature studied to give vent to the fighting, savage play, and other instincts, and when should a check be put on them, are questions connected with the life training of a child.

Second, youth. At eight things begin to change. There is a slow growth, the child's health is stable and is in a sense mature. The brain is more completely developed. a sense matter. The shall is more completely accepted the shall forming" period. Habits are formed by repetition, hence we should fill this age with drill. Society demands a knowledge of so many things—reading, writing, numbers, language, etc. And these should be learned at this period. J. Stanley Hall says, "This is a time when drill has to proceed on a basis of mastery. Let the child learn the lesson that in this complex life not all its efforts will be sugar coated. Let it learn that part of the training a person should acquire is work (bitter in the face of pain. Hence this period of stability id mean much.

Third, the "teen age." From the last period, fixed and level, there is quite a transition into adolescence. Everything is broken up now. Adolescence is a "new birth." Biologically the girl becomes a woman. At about the age of ten there is a very slow growth, followed at eleven or twelve by a very marked and rapid growth, being some-times almost doubled in a single year. Energy is dimintimes amost under in a single year. Energy is duminished so much sometimes that anaemia, lassitude, and depression result. The nerves are in a strain, causing awkward movements. The body undergoes a complete change in shape. There is an increased susceptibility to adult diseases. But the most important physical changes are, of course, the development of the sex functions. These ultimately furnish the key to the explanations of the and moral characteristics.

Mentally, as well as physically, adolecsence is a birth. First there is a great emotional instability. Fear, anger, love, pity, jealousy, ambition and sympathy are springing into life. Before, the child has been largely self-centered. These new instincts widen out the horizon. The other sex now enters into the girl's life. She becomes extremely conscious of her appearance. This is the season of bangs, curls, puffs, frills, ribbons, tight shoes, high of bangs, curis, puns, trins, rubons, que suotes, night heels, elaborate hats, etc. The thought and talk of the girl at this stage may be all of him, his, and he. She has a great passion for secrets. In her home she lolls, dreams, and has reveries. She samples all kinds of reading dreams, and has reveries. She samples all kinds of reading to find something in keeping with her mood. She wears badges, mystic letters, and symbols known only to her inner circle or clubs. This is the stage for intimate girl friends and a girl's secrets must be known by her nearest and dearest shums, for they are a very part of her and dearest snums, for they are a very part of near.

A notable characteristic of this stage is that the girl takes up with scores of fads, and is so imitative that everything around her effects her. This imitative nature seems to be of two kinds: first, that of doing things like her girl nates; second that of following the copy set by older at: it women, woulder girl on a flow of them to

For instance, some popular girl or a few of them together by prearrangement come to school some morning and set a new fashion, i. e. wear the hair in one or two braids, psyche knots, with ribbons, puffs, and all kinds of fads which spread like wild-fire through a class, school, or

On the other hand a popular teacher is often imitated On the other hand a popular teacher is often imitated in like manner, but an unpopular one is minicked. Her smile, her mode of sitting, using her hankerchief, fan, parasol, her handwriting and various other things are almost unconsciously repeated. Girls also come to love or hate their grammer, arithmetic, botany, Latin, German, Sunday school work or Religio, according as the teacher Sunday school work or Religio, according as the teacher of these subjects is liked or disliked, and as she is interested in her subject. So here is one place where we see the force of a teacher. Her personality and inspiration may cause enthusiasm to spread like a contagion. In this age of great stability nature has arranged to partly take care of the girl lest she become the product of her present self. For instance, we know how inconsistent she is, one minute will yow never to speak to her themselves the stable product of the present self.

again but it will not be long until she thinks her the finest girl ever. Nature sees to it that she revises and reconstructs her views. She would be miserable ses and reconstructs her views. She would be missioned such a hasty conclusion would remain for years. Here too, the monster Death is a very facinating friend her dreams and reveries. She often pictures herself in her creams and reveries. She often pictures nersely having committed suicide because of some grief by leaping into the water. But nature has made the instinct of life too strong and although the girl wishes many times she were a boy, or were dead, after all she only coshe were a boy, o quettes with death.

A little later comes the stage of chronic tittering or giggling. It is not that the girl is so happy, but she desires to please, to show a happy disposition, or for lack of anything to say she laughs. This giggling is often intensified by the presence or approach of a boy. To him it spells appreciation. The giggle age lasts but a few years, but requires the best oversight by older ones lest years, but requires the best oversight by older ones lest me vestages of it may remain far into maturity.

The modern world has come to look down upon feelings.

We should repress them and if we do not we are not cultured. But the teen age girl gives expression to her feelings. Things seemingly insignificant can cause her to seemings. Tangs seemingly insignificant can cause her to sob. She learns to cry at people and thus learns how to win her way with mother, brother, sister, and friends, by provoking remorse and fear on their part lest she should harm herself in her spell. She is not conscious why she does this, but it is plain as day to others. It is well too, that she should occasionally enjoy a good cry in her own room. The organs which may be needed in in her own room. The organs which may be needed in future life need exercise. Nature sees a need for this crying trait and also for laughter. They are safety valves and prevent extremes of joy and woe. They relieve a tension harmlessly when the strain threatens to become too great. It means much though to the girl in her morbid moods whether the parents are nervous, nagging, irritable, or cheerful and bright. It is a time for mother and father to be watchful and hopeful. Over extremes found in our teen age girl are laziness and then over-exertion.

Self-feeling, i. e. all sorts of egoism, followed by selfabasement, distrust in all her powers. Also selfisimess and altruism. First she will want everything for her own, and then will turn around and do the most unselfish thing. Socially she is very bold at times, then very bashful and retiring. Again one day she will have a desire to be great, the next she has relaxed and lost her interest.

At times she is very conservative, i. e. in full sympathy with the stationary aspects of life, then wih a most radi-cal nature wants to overthrow everyhing and fix it over. So with this general review of the teen age girl we can say that she tries and tastes life in all directions. We see how utterly unstable she is. Hall says if we stunt a child in early life it is hard to keep it from making up for it under proper conditions, but it is very much more important what you do to the child of 12 or 14, for there is no making up after that.

So the question arises what must we as mothers and So the question arises what must we as mothers and teachers do in the face of these facts? We must remember a cruth as the basis of our training that the child, which during childhood and youth was the creature of obedience, can not be reached in that way when it arrives at the teens. The girl feels a desire for independence, at the teens. The girl feels a desire for independence, a longing to be an adult. So we have to take her into our confidence and council; treat her as an equal and companion. A mother never on earth will succeed if she tries to make the girl do a thing. A mother is or should be her daughter's best friend and companion. She should be so well acquainted with every little perplexity of her daughter and know how to direct every step that finally girl will be safely tided over this period.

the girl will be safely tided over this period.

The mother must see to it that the girl gets plenty of exercise at this stage of rapid growth, for it causes much destruction of material and waste of tissue which must be removed. This cannot be done until it comes in contact with a great supply of air absorbed by the blood at the lungs. Hence the great importance of a large tung capacity; otherwise the girl may fall a victim to consumption, the disease which often gains foothold at this weakened stage. So the mother cannot insist enough that the daughter get plenty of open-air life, encourage her to become interested in something outside, in flower culture, gardening, chicken raising instead of idly walking the streets with her chums or some boy to get the open-air. The girl can only partly obtain her required evercise through work but must also have an abundance of it in the form of play and games. They afford a greater variety of motions together with much interest.

The daughter must have nourishing food. At this age her appetite changes and is full of whims and freaks. Breakfast is slighted. She dotes on pickles, bothons, ices, etc. No thoughts of indigestion or dyspepsia enter her etc. No thoughts of indigesion or dyspepsia enter her head. Just what her system needs most at this time she refuses to eat. The mother must see that her food he as much of the plain, wholesome kind as possible and have a regularity in her meals.

The girl must have plenty of sleep, eight to nine hours every night. Usually at this age the parents awaken to the fact or presume their daughter has great talents for music, painting, and drawing. The girl should have been taken their three is her sight to upday age of stability. With music, painting, and drawing. The girl should have been taking these in her eight to twelve age of stability. With her high school subjects she has enough until later at the close of adolescence. But often the mother anxious to have her daughter "cultured" in its narrow sense insists on the girl's adding a few more hours to her week's work. She begins to look pale and tired. She needs rest work. She begins to look pale and tired. She needs rest and recreation. Therefore she is allowed to go to parties until late hours. Morally this is to be condemned. Physically the body is fatigued from excitement and loss of sleep. Even severe studying is not so harmful, but a reasonable amount will promote both mental and physical health and growth. When a girl's health is ruined the fault is often given because of the studies and not the fatigue and imprudent loss of hours of sleep. So we must exert our efforts against the girl homicide.

Fortunately many of the High Schools have a gymnasium and should have one by all means. As a last resort

Fortunately many of the High Schools have a gym-nasium and should have one by all means. As a last resort it makes good the lack of home exercise, recreation, and open-air. Every girl should be required to take it. In so many families the girl is needed to work out of school hours to relieve the already overburdened mother. And then if the girl loses her health as did one in our home town, who was accused of doing so because she played basket ball, which is of course a strenuous game and should be very carefully supervised—but at the same time no thought was given to her drudgery work at home every moment out of school. In these very families the boys are often excused from all care of their own rooms and are allowed to leave them in chaos for the sister to "put to rights" for them. This is decidedly an unfair division of labor.

Often a girl is not naturally inclined to get out and play, and often because the mother is constantly reminding her that running and jumping are more befitting to a tom-boy than to a young lady, she exhausts eyes and brain by lolling on the sofa, reading novels and magazines whose influences often harm her permanently. The modern, ideal mother who is such a companion to her daughter, never dreams of having her read anything un-less she first has a knowledge of it. Nothing is more ideal than to have the daughter discuss the interesting things of a book with her mother. In adolescence reading is chiefly to satisfy the feelings, and girls who cultivate heart must have love stories. Although they must be pure, there must be enough of evil to suggest some of the vileness in the world, though always with the tri-umph of virtue sure in the end. Reading should open up all the possibilities of the soul. A book or sometimes an article, at the right moment, has often changed the current of a whole life.

The mother's greatest duty of all is to wisely direct the girl's sex pedagogy. Statistics record one or the greatest mistakes made by parent or guardian at the carly teen age of the girl. A Miss Crum in gathering information from girls between 16 and 18 years of age found that most of them first learned about the sex re-lations in the early teens, the stage of romance and idealism. G. S. Hall says, "Such knowledge could not come at a more unpsychologic moment than just now when the soul teems with emotion and when the ten-dency to spiritualize all these relations is at its very height." Hence there comes a fall from evaluate decreases. height." Hence there comes a fall from exalted dreamery to a bare fact. The girl distrusts because she has been deceived so long on these matters. She will be tempted to ask others, turn to doctor books, etc., and when she is fully convinced she is filled with disgust, aversion, horror, shame and depression. If this knowledge would have come several years earlier, at eight or nine when the child was more stable it would have been fixed by now. That mothers have failed in this respect in the past is a sad mothers have tailed in this respect in the past is a sad enough fact to contemplate. Some say they just can't tell their children, others deliberately refuse to und'r the false idea that ignorance is innocence, and other are too indifferent to concern themselves one way or the other. This refusal causes estrangement and resentment other. This retusal causes estrangement and resentment as few other refusals on the mother's part can do. Sometimes the mother is bitterly condemned for her silence by the daughter when mature. Just the other day a girl told me how her mother wronged her by leaving her completely ignorant in her early teens. At the pubescent stage she went through a mental distress impossible to describe. She thought she was disgraced and was only least from compiting suicide, hecuses she knew she would kept from committing suicide, because she knew she would not go to heaven.

Undoubtedly a mother's attitude toward the girl at this age cannot be too careful. She cannot afford to allow her daughter to go uninformed, not permit her to gain information from another source. Knowledge of this kind is the worst of all because it is often connected with debasing tnoughts. In hundreds of the white stave cases, if you read the testimonies of the girls themselves, you if you read the testimonies of the girls themselves, you find they were innocent but ignorant of such apalling wickedness, and after having been seduced they rest the blame upon their parents for not having trained them properly. If the mothers find these truths difficult to impart to their daughters in the most sacred way, they can secure plenty of excellent literature in the Social Purity Publications which can be purchased from the Haved Publishing House. Herald Publishing House.

In this connection it is also very importnt that the young people should thoroughly understand the laws of eugenics, i. e. the right to be born. The great problem we are facing today is not the creation of a more numer-ous race, but a better race. Our girls must not be rushed ous race, but a better race. Our girls must not be rushed into matrimony. Before doing so they must understand a little more clearly what matrimony means, and the momentous thing it is to add a child to the human race. This eugenics can teach our girls, and that is why it is Just a word now about the girl's studies and school life. So many good changes are being made in the High School studies. For years all the learning has been so formal, uninteresting, consisting of long Latin words and technical science terms. The adolescent girl has had too many outside interests to learn just for the sake of learning them. She will have to see some use or application in them. And the fact that three-fourths of the High (Continued on page 6.)

WHEN THOU MAKEST A FEAST

In the fourteenth chapter of Luke we have recorded an incident in the life of Jesus Christ from which I think can be gained a valuable lesson.

The Master is invited to the house of a Pharisee to eat, and to be watched and trapped if possible in what he might say. Ever on the alert to be doing something for the good of those with whom he came in contact, he immediately took in the situation; he detected the guests represented a well organized mutual admiration society, just as we find prevalent among the same class of people today.

The Master was not there because they loved him, or because they wished to learn from him, but to draw him out if possible into an argument which they might use against him. He was not invited there for the purpose of removing the strain of poverty resting upon the "Man of Sorrows," or to bestow upon him an act of benevolence, although they might have heard his lament over Jerusalem as recorded in the previous chapter, and seen the effects of weariness and fatigue, resting upon him.

He applies himself at once to his work as an instructor, and ever seeking to advocate the cause of the poor and needy, he places an open rebuke upon those who had invited him to eat with them, in the following message: "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsman, nor thy rich neighbors lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee.

But when thou makest a feast call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; And thou shalt be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just"

Here was a rebuke to the custom carried on by the "Well to do" of that time, and as the words of the Master are eternal, and cannot pass away a rebuke also to like customs in any age, whether carried out by Pharisee or saint, ancient or modern.

The cause of the poor needed a champion then; Jesus of Nazareth was one who volunteered his services, and enlisted to his aid the services of such men as had the interests of the poor at heart. The poor therefore found a friend in Jesus, also in those whom he called to be his disciples; for they were not to be neglected.

What are we as followers of Jesus Christ doing for the social welfare of the poor? Who are the guests found at the feasts we prepare, and to whom are the invitations issued? Do we go out of our way to assist the poor, the lame, the blind, to these occasions, when a "Good time" is to be Would we welcome the shabbily enioved? dressed, the faded bonnet, the weather-beaten coat, as we would the dainty and fashionable dress with all the fixings, such as pearls and diamonds, and a few as mentioned by the Prophet Isaiah in the third shapter, as follows: "The chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers* * * the head bands, and the tablets, and the earrings, the rings* * *the changeable suits of apparel, the mentles, and the wimples, and the crisping pins, the glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the vails." etc. Can we recognize in this catalogue what is often in evidence at our social gatherings, and the absence of the less fashionable as represented by the poor and needy?

It has been common to get up a dinner or supper for some local church expense, and charge twenty-five cents or half a dollar, for the good time; this bars the poor from partaking, as they have not the price often for the meal or feast, thus forestalling the opportunity of doing as the Master has bidden us do. How much better to have these good times free, and let those who can, make the Lord a free will offering and get a bishop's receipt for the amount, and thus honor the law and those whose duty it is under the law to collect and receipt for what we have to donate to the work. What think ye?

The wife of a faithful missionary, and a good saint approached me a few days ago, after the General Conference had adjourned, and put this guestion to me; "Do you not think, Bro. Bullard, the aristocracy of the church is growing?" Is not this a dangerous menace to the well being of the work? Has not pride taken a firm hold upon many of those whom the Lord has blessed with the advantages of education and the comforts of life. Do we not see the glitter of jewelry and precious stones bedecking the saints, when some of our poor can scarcely appear in proper apparel?

These are very discouraged because of the extravagance of others of the household of faith, and the lack of interest taken in them. How would you answer these questions, dear reader?

Do those who are devoting their time to the adorning of the body at the expense of the adornment required by, the graces which made up the wonderful life of Jesus Christ—keep in constant touch with the Holy Spirit, through the means of grace provided through the assembling of ourselves together, at the prayermeeting, and where meat for the soul is provided? Are they when opportunity affords, visiting the widow and fatherless in their affliction, and keeping themselves unspotted from the world?

To whom will come the recompense in the resurrection of the just? The blessings from the Lord is for those who do as the Master outlined in the house of the Pharisee, and at sundry times and divers manners during his mission here, and his word to the church and the world.

"For I was an hungered and ye gave me meat, I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink, I was a stranger and ye took me in, naked and ye clothed me, sick and ye visited me." etc. See Matthew 25-35-6.

Isaiah was imbued with the same spirit as his Master as found in chapter 58, ver. 6,7, "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every voke?

Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" Read on and the reward is assured.

Is it not time we so arranged our feasts that we can insure the attendance of those who most need our care, and in so doing we will entertain "the unseen guest" who will bring with him joy and blessing.

Richard Bullard.

STATEMENTS AND COMMENTS.

The following statements are taken from a sermon delivered in one of the Protestant churches of Indpendence, Mo., corrected and approved by the minister. The comments are by the undersigned.

Jesus employed many methods of healing. Divine healing did not originate with men, nor was it optional with men, but was ordained for the benefit of his believing children. It was a part of the gospel plan,, enjoyed in all ages by those who obeyed God's commandments, having faith in him and his promises, and such as did not have faith could not please him and consequently could not be the recipients of his divine favor and blessings except as are enjoyed by all men. Paul said "without faith it is impossible to please God." Heb. 11:6. It does not matter how many methods Jesus used in healing the sick, the important question is: "What did he command his followers to do in that regard?" Jesus gave some specific instructions in regard to healing, and men are not justified in setting aside his commands because he may have used other methods than those he enjoined upon men. Man must live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The blind man whom Jesus annointed with clay would not have been healed had he not fulfilled the command to go to the pool of Siloam and wash. The healing came through his obedience and through that the glory of God was made manifest. One of old said: "Obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams.

2. A method is taught by James, (5:14) but he does not inform us what kind of ointment to

It would have been superfluous for James to have indicated to the saints of that time what kind of ointment to use for the reason that it was well understood by them. The anointing with oil was a well established custom in Israel, and had been for many generations. The land of Palestine was a land of the Olive tree, and olive oil was in common use among the people. The oil symbolized the anointing of the Holy Spirit. James well understood that in the event of the true method being lost to man that God could and would reveal it again. He says: "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God that giveth liberally to all men, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." So the children of God may know if they seek in faith to their Father in heaven.

 Psychic healing is a cure through psychic or mind influence. If you employ a doctor in the regular way, all healing is from God, as James said every good and perfect gift is from the Father of lights.

The believers who were healed anciently under the hands of the elders of the primitive church were not healed by the will of man but by the power of God. Paul speaks of this healing as a gift of God, 1 Cor. 12, and only to be exercised by those who were recognized by the Lord. Even the devils recognized the authority of God's servants. Acts 19:14. It is nowhere in the Scriptures said that God's hand is the power in all healings, but we do read in Rev. 13:14; 16:14; of spirits of devils going forth in the earth to deceive the nations, and in Mat. 7:22 of men doing wonderfull works, even to casting out devils, but were not acknowledged of Christ nor approvedwho think that all healings are of the Lord will fall an easy prey to the deceiving spirits who work miracles among men.

4. As to the laying on of hands, you say there is no power in it. I don't know.

Do you suppose one of God's servants anciently would have said I don't know if there is nower in the laying on of hands? Jesus gave an infallible test that I believe will stand for all time, (and this is the specific instruction previously referred to) Mark 16:18: They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." But says the unbeliever we do not understand this to be a command. What then is it? If you have a right to say by way of interpretation of this word, it means we may do so if we wish, but it is not imperative, then you will by the same parity of reasoning, destroy the sense of the 16th verse, He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, would you interpret that, 'may be saved?" Why not receive the Lord's word at its face value, and read, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" and believe that he meant that. You say, "I do receive that to mean just what he said." Then why not receive verse 18 the same way, and not say I don't know if there is any power in the ordinance that Jesus promised his children they should be healed through,

5. God sometimes uses bad men to do his work. A horse thief in Kentucky held revival services, and was wonderfully blessed of the Lord, as large numbers were converted, and while he was holding the revival and converting many people, he was conducting his campaign of robbery.

God has used wicked men and nations, to punish and scourge other nations and people who were like themselves wicked, but not in all the holy Scriptures is there one hint that God ever used a bad man as a mesenger to carry the message of life and salvation to the people. Wicked men who are holding revival meetings or other religious work, are not serving God, but are deceivers; and are teaching false doctrines. They cannot know the things of God. "The natural man [bad or unregenerated man] receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are Spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:14. If the bad man cannot know the things of God, how can he teach them acceptably to God? We discover by this reading, that so far as the natural man is concerned God's works are all secret, he cannot know them for he cannot discover God's secrets. can? Listen. "The froward is an abomination to the Lord; but his secret in with the righteous. (those who do right) Prov. 3:32. Not mush hope here for the bad man being called to the Lord's ministry. Again, a correct understanding of God's will is necessary if a man have such a responsibility as poun this matter. "Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise [they who do his command-ments] shall understand." Now let me in contrast give a quotation from what purports to be a revelation through one who is generally denounced as a bad man by the world, (I refer to Joseph Smith) "If ye have a desire to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest***and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work. Remember faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence." Doctrine and Covenants 4:1. No room in his ministry nor consolation held out to bad men, but without these virtues a man could not assast in the work of the Lord. He understood that if a man was corrupt, he would not understand the things of God, consequently, could accomplish noithing in the work of the Lord, but would always teach false doctrines, not having the Spirit if God. The Lord has declared that in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall everything be established. I could furnish more witnesses to prove that God will not employ wicked men as his servants.

6. No specific directions were outlined by Jesus for healing. Why assume that no specific directions were outlined by Jesus? This is an indictment against James, and makes him guilty of a very serious offense against God; to assume that he would arrogate to himself the authority to advise to annoint with oil, in the name of the Lord; when he had not been commanded to do so? Is there anything in the teachings of James before or subsequent to this advise referred to, that would warrant the belief that James was a man who would have assumed to counsel men to do anything in the name of Jesus that Jesus had not commanded? Is it not best to consider that Jesus did give specific directions, and that James in his advice was counselling in harmony with that direction given by Jesus.

7. Isaiah said he has "borne our griefs." He did that by healing them.

If this Scripture had its fulfillment in the healing Jesus did for men while he was here on earth, and since men are denied healing in this age, in what sense does he bear our griefs? If healing was only intended for that age, perhaps salvation is also limited to that age, for in the same chapter just referred to, he said: "and with his stripes are we healed." Does that apply only to that generation? It must all apply to us, or none of it. It will not do to say that we may be recipients of his salvation and not of his healings.

8. Jesus refused many times to heal.

If he did refuse many times to heal; was he not very partial and unlike he is generally represented to be?

9. If redemption from bodily corruption is the will of Jesus, then all disease would be healed and we would not die.

Certainly Jesus does not take any delight in bodily corruption, but has given a remedy whereby his children could be healed; and he enjoined faith as the means to obtain this blessing; and gave assurance of his Father's willingness always to hear them, and answer their petitions provided they approach him with faith. But men do not always enjoy that faith, he often upbraided the disciples because they did not possess that faith requisite to bring the blessing, and he gave us the key that we might obtain the power over all dis-(viz) "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.' John 14:7. This Scripture shows why we are not redeemed from bodily cor-Then you say if we kept his words and ruption. were redeemed from bodily ills we would not die. I answer, yes, we would all die naturally of old age, worn out, and not destroyed with disease, for it is appointed to all men once to die.

In conclusion, I deplore the wide difference in opinion believing as I do that in order to render an acceptable service to our God it is necessary to have at least approximately a correct understanding of his will and purpose towards us. And I am continually at a loss to understand how; with his character portrayed to us as unchangeable and without shadow of turning that good and sincere men are ever found trying to explain away the Scriptures, and in some way account for the gifts of the gospel not being found among men as in former years. If men do not believe the promises of Jesus: they are unbelievers and can have no sure hope in his promises of salvation. Many are not altogether to blame, for after the primitive church went into apostesy; and the church had become so corrupt that the Lord had withdrawn his Spirit from them and there was no answer from God, they began to say by way of explanation; "It is no longer necessary that we should have the gifts of the gospel with us for the church is now established, and this tradition was handed down from generation to generation, until the people really believe it to be true. Personally we do know that there is power in the laying on of hands, and that Jesus' words are true, and that although this ordinance has been lost from among men for many generations, God has graciously restored it again, and has again delegated men to minister before him; and his children, and God and his son Jesus Christ are glorified as of old.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

Persons not familiar with the organic form of the Church are often confused by the variety of officers and ministers, which in the number and character of their work materially differ from those of other churches.

At the head stands the President, who is also the Prophet to the Church, and who is assisted by two Counselors, who in all matters of business requiring a vote hold the same power as himself, and in his absence, or disability, may do the work belonging to the head of the Church. The Presidency hold a general oversight over all the departments of Church work, appointing those in charge of missions, etc. The power of their office is Anostolic.

The Twelve Apostles constitute the second quorum in the Church, and as a quorum hold equal power with that of the First Presidency spoken of above. They are subject to the appointment of the Presidency, and in turn appoint and direct other missionaries in their work.

The Seventy constitute the missionary arm of the Church under the Twelve, there being when the quota is full four hundred and ninety men, divided into seven quorums of seventy each, each presided over by a president, the presidents constituting a council having special duties in addition to those of the regular office of seventy, and are known as the "Council of Seven Presidents of They often consider matters for the Seventy." good of the whole seventy, select the new members from among the elders subject to the ratification of the quorum and the General Confer-The special duties of the Seventy are to ence. travel as missionaries and preach the gospel to the world, building up churches as they may be

The Quorum of High Priests is one of considerable latitude, not restricted in number, at least so far as revealed, and its members constitute the pastoral arm of the Church. They are appointed by the Presidency and Twelve, by whom they are directed in their wo.k in caring for the membership of the Church in their various needs. Within the Quorum of High Priests are the Order of Evangelists and the Order of Bishops. Evangelists are revivalists for the membership of the Church rather than for the world, their special duties being to impart spiritual life, encouragement, hope and strength, and give counsel and advice, etc. to the membership. The Bishops of the Church care for the financial and temporal interests, and have also judicial powers. The presiding Bishop and his two Counselors have general charge of the temporal concerns of the

In addition to these there are also selected from the High Priests twelve men who constitute the Standing High Council of the Church. Their work is largely judicial, and with the Presidency of the Church they constitute the highest tribunal known to the Church—the supreme court. Cases are appealed to this Council from the Bishop's Courts.

The Quorums of Elders, each composed of ninety-six Elders, are presided over by one of their number chosen and ordained and having two counselors to assist him. The number of quorums are unlimited. Elders may travel and preach as missionaries, or occupy as pastors, or they may render local assistance to the missionary or pastor while following their daily pursuits. They may be appointed to act upon Elders' Courts to sit in judgment upon transgressors. There are many other duties attaching to the office.

Priests are organized into quorums of fortyeight members and are local officers, though they may travel as missionaries. Those holding the office of teacher are organized into quorums of twenty-four each, and deacons into quorums of twelve each. These are local officers having a variety of duties.

Through these various officers the whole need of the Church is met, whether in regard to its responsibility to the world, or its responsibility to its own membership in caring for spiritual growth and development. The organization of the Church is like a wonderful and intricate machine, when every part is working it turns out perfect work. Is it strange that after the Lord had defined the duties of the various officers that He said: "Wherefore, let every man learn his duty."

CHURCHES, AND THE CHURCH.

A thousand different churches, and no two alike; Did Jesus Christ make a failure when he built his Church? and has man done any better than Christ? Does wisdom tell us that it is necessary to have a thousand plans of salvation? Consistency tells us the gospel of Jesus Christ will not fit into a thousand different plans, creeds and confessions of faith that are full of discords, and inconsistencies.

Men claim to accept the Bible teaching as a rule of faith and practice, yet by their disciplines, creeds and confessions they ignore some of the most important teachings found in it.

O Consistency, thou art a jewel! but whence hast thou gone, and where hast thou taken up thine abode? Canst not thou came forth from thy hiding place, and aid the sons and daughters of men in gaining a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ?

God the eternal Father, and Jesus Christ the Son, did not make any mistakes in formulating a plan of salvation for the human family, in their wisdom they made the plan perfect, and who is was necessary in the church 1900 years ago, is just as necessary today. The plan is as unchangeable as God himself.

But puny man has formulated a thousand different plans, and not one of them in complete harmony with Christ's plan.—Jesus Christ did not build but one church, and never authorized any man to build another different one. He (Christ) did not start in to build churches for experiment to see if he could make any improvement on them. He built his first and only one just right, and just like he wanted it, and it did not need any man-made amendments added to it, neither any part taken from it. He knew what he was doing, he counselled with none but the Father. He said: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

His testimony is, that he was doing the will of the Father in all things that he did. Therefore I conclude that he had the authority and wisdom of his Father to assist him in building his church.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God; But men today are acting as if there were a thousand; and the infidels are saying: "That proves to us there is no God."

The inconsistencies of the churches today are converting about as many to infidelity, as to Christianity.

THE NAZARENE.

By Irini Zumwalt.

There was a man who might have been a king And ruled in all the earth supreme He turned his back upon the offered crown And chose to dwell with humble, unknown men That he might ease the heavy load they bore, Plant hope and faith in tried human hearts And lead them up to higher thoughts and lives. He threw his life away to aid his race And was condemned at last and sent to death Like any murderer or common thief, Yet innocent of any charge of guilt Save that he lived an honest, fearless life Denouncing wrong in places high or low. He died with words of love upon his lips, Forgiving all his foes and faithless friends. Men said he was a failure, yes, a fool, To yield a kingdom for a martyr's wreath. They died, their names and all their deeds are lost His name still lives, by multitudes revered In every land, as deathless as the stars. And down tic centuries still shines the glory Of far Golgotha and a Roman cross.

A SLIP OF THE CHAIR.

After President E. A. Smith had announced the reading of the report of the Quorum of High Priests by the Secretary, attention was not given immediately, as the delegates were busy examining a printed report which had just been distributed.

"Please give attention to the matter in hand," said President Smith.

"That's what we're doing," replied a voice from the floor.

School pupils leave school before graduating is simple because they do not see any benefits to be derived from their study. High School should be a place to fit for life. And what should be the training of a girl? Should it be the same as that of a boy? Hall says that a girl differs in every fibre and tissue from the boy. Therefore her education should be different. Not altogether though, here she is to here life in company with man she should since she is to have life in common with man she should have a general knowledge of English, History, Science, and the lauguages. In order that she may see the need for these, let her first become interested in her professional training or something which will intensely inrestorant training or sometiming which will intensity in-terest her, e. g. manual training or domestic science especially. These are things for which every girl's in-stinct calls or should call. With them as a basis we can teach her the other subjects. Her chemistry will no longer be useless and dry. It must be had for scientifically handling her foods and textiles. No matter what a girl's future life may be she should have a practical knowledge of all subjects underlying home life—sewing, cooking, hygiene, nursing, drainage, children's diseases. To be prehygiene, nursing, drainage, children's diseases. To be propred to direct the education of her home and children she must have art, literature, music, etc. By all means a girl should have a thorough knowledge of the English language to be able to express herself. She may be ever so well versed in other things, but no one will necessarily know it. Just let her talk a few minutes and she is judged according to her English.

A girl's education then should be such as to most fully prepare her for life.

Having discussed the relation of the parent and the school to the girl, let us conclude by noting the significance of a teacher in this period of the girl's life. We have seen how a woman teacher's character will effect a girl in her dress and in her liking for a certain study. This liking applies to a man teacher also. Personally I think a woman teacher is much needed by the girl. From her own experience she knows the need of advising a day's absence from school now and then or of exempting the girl from the strain of an examination. It is possible for the woman to have a keener insight into the girl's worry, fret and weariness. Full of sympathy, inspiration, and personality, she can so enter the girl's life as to fix the highest moral standard.

It is quite often the man teacher though, for a man is always the hero of a girl's dreams, who through bigness, broad power and force, inspires her to ambitions-to set the world afire, so to speak, such a teacher will arouse ideals that will be a foundation of all the girl's future life work.

Not only is this age an important one for the public school teacher but also for the religious teachers. Statistics show that about 85 per cent of the conversions and religious awakenings occur between the ages of twelve and twenty. These early years of strong emotion should be directed toward higher life by every teacher. Such inward promptings never come again with such force. And men and women grown old out of the faith are often so because they lost the promptings through failure to act upon them.

And thus, since the whole life depends on the outcome of the teen age girl we see what a problem it is to mold her in such a way that she will be a woman of whom all womanhood may have a just reason to be proud, and before whom all that is noble in man must bow in reverence.

PASTORALS.

To the Saints in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, and Mississippi, Greeting:-

Quorum of Twelve have appointed as mis-es to the above named states the following brethsionaries to ren, viz:-I. M. Smith, Swen Swenson, Hale W. Smith. A. G. Miller, A. E. Warr, E. C. Shelley, and the writer. The quorum, who made these appointments, have confidence that each of these brethren will make an effort, at all times, to live a pure life and in this way convince the people among whom they labor that they are worthy to represent the church of Jesus Christ; for surely, there better way to make the gospel light shine than to be without blame in word and deed. See D. C. 119:3. I trust that none will be found saying or doing that which will have a tendency to destroy the confidence thus re-posed by the Quorum of Twelve, or cause mistrust or suspicion among those with whom they are called

Having been given the oversight of the missionary force in this field this year, I call especial attention to the fol-lowing clause in the late revelation received, by our beloved Prophet, Joseph Smith, and adopted as law to govern us as a people. It is as follows:

"The Spirit saith further, that the spirit of distrust and want of confidence in those who are called and orand want of connedence in those who are called and or-dained to act in the various responsible positions in the priesthood and in authority in the church is unbecoming those professing faith in God, Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Spirit of truth, and evinces a serious lack of that charity which Paul, an apostle of Christ, declared to be the quality of Christian virtue which thinketh no evil. Those who go out from the assemblies and solemn conclaves of the church should exercise great care in their ministrations abroad to the branches where they may officiate and in their preaching the gospel to them outside, to avoid sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion either in public ministration or in private conversation. The church has been admonished heretofore in this respect and the Spirit saith again, it is unbecoming to the character and calling of them who administer in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lord."

This warning from heaven has come to us for our benefit as missionaries in order that we may build up confidence in each other where we may labor as well as confidence in the chief authorities in the church. The membership are also admonished that the spirit of distrust bership are also admonished that the spirit of distrust and want of confidence in those who are called and or-dained to act in various responsible positions in the priest-hood and in authority in the church, is unbecoming those professing faith in God, and evinces a serious lack of that charity which thinketh no evil. The ministry are especi-ally warned and commanded to avoid sowing seeds of distrust and suspicion, in public or in private conver-sation. I call attention to the word of God lately re-ceived by us so that any in the ministry or those who are only members who may see they have a weakness along only members who may see they have a weakness along the line herein condemned will be able to overcome the same and not have to suffer by reason of being found in the condition referred to by the Lord. Any missionary who may be found acting unwise to the extent that he is bringing reproach upon the church and is acting out-side of the purview of his calling as a minister for Christ should be reported at once to one in charge of the field whose duty it is to look after the matter at once and help the brother in a kind considerate way to adjust the difficulty. Those who report to those in charge of the difficulty. Those who report to chose in charge of the field should exercise the spirit of wisdom and patience giving them plenty of time to make an investigation and settle the matter without spreading it among the saints, to the injury of the work and the brother. The co-operation of every local officer as well as every member is earnestly solicited for the purpose of advancing the work, in all of its beauty and grandeur, in every department of the same in order that the saints may be built up in faith, knowledge, and wisdom and the preachthe gospel go forth to those in darkness who have not had a chance to receive the light.

Our mission has been given us by the Master who plainly stated, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them;" and are all commanded to labor together God unto them;" and are all commanded to labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all. See D. C. 119:8. The Lord has also stated, "Behold, now it is called today (until the coming of the son of man) and verily it is the day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people." Sec. 64:5. The financial arm of the work should be kept up and strengthene inorder that the work of God may be built up in all of its departments. This not only means that the families of the priscipancies should be summored but that those elthe missionaries should be supported but that those el-ders, who leave their hemes land loved ones for the go-pel's cake and stay in the field and labor, should be well provided for with means to travel and all that is needful in the way of clothing, books, etc. But in regard to this we have no room to complain as the Southern saints have been quite liberal.

I also call attention to the important fact that Graceland College, our institution of learning, the homes for the aged, also the homes for children, as well as the Sanitarium, radt the Order of Enoch should all be well supported financially in order that each line of our work may be kent, in good working own. Let work. supported manaciary in order that each line of our works may be kept in good working order. Let every man learn his duty and act in the office in which he is appointed in all diligence, without any jealousy, strife or faultfinding, and the work of God will build up and the saints be made to rejoice and the year will be a prosperous one.

I. M. Smith, lately ordained to the office of patriarch, will confine his labor to the branches.

I request officers of districts and branches to confer with him and secure his services that the saints may receive the great benefit that is to be derived through his ministration. See D. C. 125:3. It will be proper for the missionaries to keep up the interest in the places where they have already opened up the work and not let it die out, as well as to do all they can to spread the work in new territory. I desire to keep in close touch with all the workers in every part of the field by mail that I may know the needs and conditions of the work in every locality so that every demand may be met so far as possible, and all the missionery force kept busy that work may be well cared for and built up. F. M. Slover,

Indiana, Greeting—
Another year is before us. What shall it be? The year just passed was a good one indeed and we are very hopeful for the future. We hope and pray that those that have labored so faithfully and earnestly in the past will continue their efforts, which we feel assured that they will. The blessings of God have always accompanied the efforts of the faithful ones, and they always will. When we consider the blessings of the past, we feel grateful to God for the favors bestowed and we feel it our duty, to show our appreciation by doing all that we can to to show our appreciation by doing all that we can to build up the kingdom of God and to assist in establishing

To the Saints of Central and Western Districts of Oklahoma, also Northern Tex., Greeting:

Bro. Hubert Case of Oklahoma has been ordained as one of my counsellors, I therefore cheerfully recommend him to you and ask that you heartily co-operate within in the temporal needs of our work.

The above territory has been provided with a willing and efficient number of laborers, whose families must be cared for while the husband and father is presenting the great message of life and peace to mankind.

As the Lord has declared he requires "the heart and a willing mind;" and has said "this is a day of sacrifice and the tithing of my people," we trust that all, without hesitation, will rally to the assistance of our standarud beauers and thus be partakers with him in the great salvation of our Lord. vation of our Lord.

whitening and the widening of the field now before us. Let us perform our part of the duty that is allotted us without hesitation.

Bro. Case will receipt all moneys paid to him.

Ellis Short, Bishop for the above Territory.

THE HIGHEST AIM.

Poor hungry hearts that hungry go, Patient and plodding all the weary day; And wondering why, if God doth love his creatures so, Life's sweetest joys for them take wings and fly away.

A purer love, a holier life, a sweeter end, A purer love, a noner lite, a sweeter end,
A peace that dearer is to us than joy;
A love without imperfect taint, a friend
Whose friendship is unmixed—without alloy.

This is the boon for which we in the gospel strive. For this we in the crucible ourselves do place; Praying to God that we his tests survive, And win the prize when we shall end the race. -Elder M. H. Bond.

WHAT AM I TO DO TO BE SAVED?

An inquirer writing to one of the Protestant religious journals for information as to the course he should pursue in seeking salvation presented his inquiry thus:

For the past year or so I have devoted my attention to the requirements of God and true Christianity. I have prayed fervently, with a contrite heart. I accept and acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Son of God, who came to save lost sinners, and accept the whole story of Jesus, doubting nothing said of him in the Scriptures. But pray as I may to have the witness of my acceptance, I have had, so far, no revelation of his forgiveness. I have prayed earnestly for more faith, and that I cannot give myself. What am I to do to be saved, and how can I receive more faith, or perfect faith?

The answer calls for comment because of the position taken and because the position is a common one in the Protestant world. Omitting some incidental statements the answer given is as follows:

The answer to your question lies hidden away in the The answer to your question lies induce away in the question itself. And there is, though you are not aware of it, a contradiction in what you write. You say you "accept the whole story of Jesus, doubting nothing said of him in the Scriptures." Yet you go on immediately to say there is something which you do doubt. What could possibly be plainer, than his words: "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out" (John 6.37), or "Every that which we have the said that the said the said the said that the said t one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened" (Matt. 7:8)? and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." (Matt. 7:8)? Look up the many New Testament promises; then some of the beautiful ones from the Old Testament, like "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions" (Isa. 43:25), and the wonderful passage, Isa. 1:18. You believe everything about Jesus except the one thing which is most necessary to believe, namely, that he forgives your sins, even yours.***Take it for granted that God does receive and pardon you; then see how quickly your heart and mind will rest in the assurance that he does so. You are mistaken in saying that you cannot give yourself faith, You cann. The way to trust is to trust-to ston doubt-faith, You cann. The way to trust is to trust-to ston doubtfaith. You can. The way to trust is to trust-to stop doubting, to begin to believe.***We are glad you have asked this question, for it is the most important that can be asked, and there is one answer that applies to every case: "Stop doubting!" Two things more. Begin at once to testify to Christ's pardon, basing your testimony on his word. Then go to work trying to win others to him and to advance his cause. You will lose your doubts in your work. And as you testify and work, your faith and assurance will grow stronger day by day.

This answer simmered down is nothing less than a kind of spiritual hypnotic, a suggestion to think a thing is so an it will be so, even though it be contrary to personal experience. The ad-The advice to "Take it for granted that God does re-ceive and parden you," and to "Stop doubting," when the daily experiences of a year are all against such an assumption, is inconsistent, and can hardly lead a seeking soul to the satisfaction he desires

The attitude taken in the above answer in regard to the soul sickness and desire for spiritual light and life of the inquirer is identical with that taken by Christian Scientists regarding sickness and disease of the body. The first says, "Don't think there is anything wrong with your soul, you are all right. Don't doubt. Don't listen to the urgings of your conscience but take it for granted that God has received and pardoned The other says, "Mind is God; you are as you think. Don't heed the pains of body but take it for granted that you are well and you are well." In each case the appeal is against conscious truth, for when the body is racked with pain the sufferer is truly aware that there is something wrong with the physical organism; and when the mind is burdened with distress and there is anguish of soul relative to one's attitude before God, the consciousness of the soul's need of forgiveness and cleansing is made apparent. and to put the consciousness to sleep by the hypnotic suggestion to "Stop doubting," and "take it for granted that God does receive and pardon will not change the actual condition, any more than will a diseased condition of the body be changed by telling the patient that the disease does not exist or by administering an opiate to destroy sensibility to pain.

Protestantism has long held that the conscience is a safe guide, but the answer counsels the questioner to suppress the urgings of his conscience which tell him that he is not yet right with God, and to rest contented in the assumption that he is right. This seems inconsistent. If the conscience is to be followed, (and it may be within certain limitations,) there seems to be no more reliable instance of the correct leading of concience than in the case of inquirer who has been seeking the right and praying to God for guidance. Would it not be better in this case to follow the course marked out by the conscience and continue the effort to get right, than to smother its impulses and assume the opposite to be true?

What God Requires.

All the promises found in the answer, and many more, are given in the Scriptures, but the strict requirements and conditions upon which they are based are too often overlooked, at least in part. The promise of receiving when we ask cannot be separated from the many teachings of Jesus in his sermon on the mount, and the promise cannot apply when any part of those teachings are ignored or rejected. Likewise the promise of the seeker finding is dependent upon the search being made in conformity with the teachings which accompany the promise. Every promise of God is made subject to certain conditions, and only as the conditions are fulfilled by man will the promises be fulfilled by God.

Belief.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," was the requirement made of the Philipian jailer. Jesus said "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." And again "Believe the gospel." When Jesus gave his apostles the final commission to go into all the world and "preach the gospel to every creature," he gave the promise of salvation to those who believed and were baptized. This belief stated as a pre-requisite to salvation was evidently more than an assent of the mind to the doctrine that Jesus was the Christ, and included an acceptance of all the principles and ordinances taught by him. An acceptance of Christ means an acceptance of his teachings. This kind of belief necessitates a careful study of the Scriptures to determine just what Jesus taught.

Repentance.

Repentance is turning from wrong to right, from error to truth, a transferring of allegiance from the world and Satan to God. Not everything taught in the name of Christianity is true; not everything purporting to be of God is divine, and hence if one has followed erroncous doctrines and ceremonies a turning from them will be necessary in order to fully repent. The Apostle Paul speaks of "repentance from dead works," as being necessary as well as from sin, and may it not be that the author of the question failed to find satisfaction and peace from God because some of his works, though performed in sincerity, were not in accordance with the gospel teaching, and hence were "dead works," and unapproved of Baptism.

Among other things taught by Jesus Christ was the ordinance of baptism which the Scriptures repeatedly affirm was for the remission of sins. The ordinance is for those who have believed and repented, and it brings them into membership with Christ in his Church or kingdom, or as stated by Paul they are "baptized into Christ" As a burial in water it is a type of the death and resurrection of Jesus wherein the old man of sin is put off and he becomes a new man in Christ Jesus. This is one of the essential steps in coming to Christ.

Reception of the Holy Ghost.

The promise of the Holy Ghost which is the seal of sonship in Christ is based upon the foregoing requirements and is bestowed by the ordinance of Laying on Hands. By this Spirit one may know that Jesus is the Christ; by it he may know of the doctrine, and of his own acceptance with God; by it only is man able to discern the things of God, and receive a witness of his acceptance and his forgiveness.

Go on Unto Perfection.

Ultimate salvation is dependent upon more than the initial steps in the gospel. peace and perfect salvation result alone from a perfect obedience, and hence the necessity of continuing in the search for the higher and better things of life, and climbing to higher standards, going on unto perfection. This is possible with the divine help offered through the Spirit.

What a contrast is this teaching of Scripture to the uncertain counsel of taking "it for granted that God does receive and pardon you." If there is anything in this world upon which men need certainty it is in seeking the way to God. The Scriptures point the way and as that way is followed there will come the evidences that will dispel every-doubt, and the way will grow brighter until God is revealed in all his glory.

NEARLY ONE THOUSAND BOOKS ON RELIGION.

About eleven thousand books are published each year in the United States. In the last year for which the figures are at hand, 1912, a few more than a thousand of these were books of fiction. Next came religion and theology, with more than nine hundred.

No other department in the classification made by the Publisher's Weekly showed so many titles. Sociology and economics, for instance, had 867, law 862, history 524, applied science 674, and so Of course the method of classification is arbitrary. But it is interesting to find religion claiming almost as many books as fiction.

The fact is evidence of the extent of the interest in the subject. Religious sentiment exists which the Church has not yet taken full advanage of. That is one reason why advertising campaigns urging church attendance have been successful in large cities throughout the country. They have appealed to a sentiment that existed, but which in very many persons has not been effective.—Kansas City Star.

ALCOHOL AND THE DEFECTIVES.

Dr. Mary M. Wolf, in the annual meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, held recently at Swarthmore, Pa., said that while connected with the State Institution for Insane, at Norristown, her studies led to the conclusion that 41 per cent of its inmates were from alcoholic parents. She further said:

"In Pennsylvania not one of our 67 counties is without its insane, feeble-minded, paupers and criminals. We have 17,000 insane, and an estimated population of 15,000 feeble-minded. last Legislature appropriated $4,000,000 for the care and maintenance of the indigent insane for the coming two years, and about $1,000,000 more for additional buildings. It also appropriated about $1,600,000 for the feeble-minded.-National Advocate.

Dear Ensign.—Feeling impressed to write a few lines in testimony of the many blessings received in the past year, I am glad to say there is nothing that is worth slighting ospel for, and I believe everyone who has tried to the gospel for, and I believe everyone who has tried to live faithful will be ready to agree with me.

There are many things offered for pleasure but as the most of them are of the world they only cause us to fear more alone and weary of life. I think I have experienced most of the so called pleasures, and can say to all the world, there is nothing to compare with the gospel work for real enjoyment. Although I have gone through trials since embraging the years and some many sore persecutive. since embracing the gospel, and borne many sore persecutions, my faith grows stronger each day and my love for God greater. We have all gone through the fire here, but have come forth better and stronger because of per-

I wish to say to all saints everywhere that God is willing and ready to give us grace sufficient for all needs if we are obedient to his will. Dear saints, let me exhort you as one that loves every principle of the gospel, to be you as one that twee every financing of the gaste, to see steadfast. Never give up till the master says it is enough. We must not think we are better than the Savior who bore so much, that we might have everlasting life. We must cultivate that meek and humble spirit and do everything for the cause of rightcourness we can, and to help those that know not God, to be able to see the light.

We must remember there are many souls hungry for the bread of life, and they are looking to us to show our faith by our works. We should always be ready to sow the by our works. We should always be ready to sow the good seed and when it begins to grow, tend it with loving care, glad to do something for the kind Father that does so much for us, and above all have unity and peace in all

We have a small Sunday school here but it is very interesting to us, we are determined not to let the good seed sown here perish. So we are going forward rejoicing seed sown here perish. So we are going torward rejoicing because of truth and the knowledge that obedience brings blessings. We are glad to have so many elders sent to this field and trust that great good will be accomplished this year. Hope Bro. Moler will be successful in his labors. were all greatly attached to him, and are sorry to lose him from among us.

Now let us grasp every opportunity for doing good, and not try to offer excuses when we see our duty, but help those in charge of the work every way we can, help those in charge of the work every way we can, as the harvest is white let us all be laborers together for the Master. Don't get discouraged, but press forward with diligence, with child-like faith in the promises made to the faithful. Let us work and pray and rejoice in the face of all opposition and look forward to the coming of the Savior. The Ensign and Herald are a great mfort to me with their message of truth.

With a prayer for all, I am your sister in the conflict

Belair, Ill., April 3.

Editor Ensign:—With our faithful elder in charge, S. J. Harris we are very thankful to God for sending Bro. Lloyd Moore to labor among us. We hope that he will be allowed to stay with us as there is a great work in Belair to do. We have only a small branch now but are trying so to live and let. our light shine that we may be the means of bringing others to an understanding of the everlasting gospel. God will bless and help each individual who is earnestly striving to do his will.

This morning March 30th, Bro. Moore will go home to the district south. All who have heard him preach, know how we appreciate his effort, and we receive strength and encouragement through the ordinance of ad-Moore to labor among us. We hope that he will be alministration. We want to do all we can to advance this great and grand latter day work.

great and grand latter day work.

I try to be faithful and do my duty in my little home as a mother and wife, and I grow so strong and well. I could care and do for them, and I am so happy trusting in the Lord. If I fall in my efforts it will not be the Spfrit, it will be the weakness of the flesh. God bless us both spiritually and physically. Our church house will be ready to be painted this spring. The first meeting we had in our church was the third of Jan. 1913. Brother S. S. Smith prached for us. We would like to have our church dedicated this summer, if we could get the Kelley or some other dear elder to come. I do pray Bro. Kelley or some other dear elder to come. I do pray that the light of the gospel will shine upon the minds of my kindred, that they may obey the gospel.

I have been doing some little work here in the way of talking, and have had quite a number of people tell me that they wanted to hear some of our men preach. To me it seems as though the field is white and ready for the harvest. We seem to be the only ones here who ever heard of the church before. We are here, ready, willing, yea, anxious to care for an elder or two, if they will only come here, and I think the good people of this place would welcome a chance to hear the good message. Kansas City, Mo., May. 4. Editor Ensign:—As I have never written to the silent preacher I will send you a few lines from the Fourth Kansas City Branch, as we all love to read of the work done in the various branches all over the land.

In February our branch concluded to send for Bro. J. S. Roth to come and hold a series of meetings. Bro. Roth begun the meetings after conference closed, and has con-tinued ever since with a fair attendance and good inter-I believe there were more outsiders in attendance than we have ever had at a series of meetings before. Several of them are interested. We all hope and look for an ingathering from the gospel seed which has been sown with a liberal hand.

Roth certainly is a preacher for the people, as he can hold a congregation as it were spell bound for an hour or more every night and the people seem to be looking for more. On Friday night Bro. Roth announced that he would close on Sunday night. Then our president took a vote, asking all who wished the elder to continue another week to raise their hands. I believe every one out-siders and all voted to continue. The branch unanimously requested Elder Roth to come and take charge of the missionary work, holding cottage meetings and that way open new places, and we believe he will do a great work in our part of the vineyard. But Bro. Roth refused to come without consulting with the Stake authorities. Notwithstanding he is in his seventy-second year there seems to be no let up for him, and his voice is just as strong as if he were only forty. We sincerely hope Bro. Roth will soon be with us again as we need his help in this locality.

May God bless all the laborers who are in the field for the gospel's sake.

Mrs. W. E. Grubb, Morris, Okla. The Ensign is a great comfort to us in our isolated condition. That the prespective of the Sanitarium last year exceeds any other year of its existence. There were 313 admissions, an increase over the previous year of 144. The earnings from patients were $16,750.89, an increase of $7,953.81. That although there was a large increase in attendance, there were fewer deaths. At an early period of the year, there was an increase in business in the institution, but on account of a lack of sufficient number of stitution, but on account, of a lack of sufficient number of nurses, it was necessary to employ trained nurses outside of the Sanitarium, at an expenditure of about $700. At the present time there is a full equipment of nurses, numbering fifteen. For the training of pupil nursess it was found necessary to employ an instructor at $50 per month in addition to board and room, who, from reports given us, has proven a very successful teacher. Several needed improvements are asked for by the business manager, Dr. Messayare, that an adaptement of the convention room. Messenger; that an enlargement of the operating room, and a pathological laboratory. The building is quite well filled with patients, so much of an increase has been had in attendance of patients there that provisions were made for the occupancy of the place close to the Sanitarium, known as Kensington Place, which has been partly utilized for accommodating the nurses. It is stated by the physi-cian in charge that if the business of the institution in-creases as rapidly as in the past year, that it will be necessary to seriously consider the enlargement of the building.

Messenger tells us that if the regular rates were for those who are cared for by the church that the for those institution would show a gain instead of a loss

Last year the Sanitarium gave the needy sick $3,898.42. The Bishopric gave a like amount, while the donations received only amounted to $670.20. The increase of the number of nurses, adding a teacher of nurses to the institution, and the payment of $700 for special nurses contributed to lessen the gains. With some needed changes tributed to lessen the gains. With some needed changes being made, it is expected that the expenditures of the in-stitution will be considerably reduced. A fire escape has been added to the Sanitarium, as required by the city, at a cost of $165.

Dr. Messenger has given his entire time to the care of the Sanitarium and has labored conscientiously to secure best results possible and has expressed pleasure with work, more so because of the appreciation manifested

COMMITTEE ON MONUMENT.

Heman C. Smith, Secretary. This committee has held two meetings in the year, one at Nauvoo, Ill., August 28, at 9:45 a.m.. There were present of the committee E. L. Kelley, George P. Lambert, Frederick A. Smith, and Heman C. Smith. Frederick M. Smith, chairman of the committee, being absent, the com mittee requested Elbert A. Smith to act in his stead, and also made him chairman pro tem.

It was decided to erect a first-class iron fence around the east half of block 155, where the graves are located, and also to build a retaining wall along the water front of this property. Bishop Kelley invited other members of the committee to counsel with him regarding the protection of the Nauvoe House property, and the committee decided to recommend the erection of a retaining wall along the water front of block 156, so far as needed.

The mayor of Nauvo, through Elder Lambert of the committee, presented a proposition for the establishing of a boat landing at the foot of Main street. The committee by resolution authorized Elder Lambert to inform the mayor that the committee would look with disfavor upon the proposition, but would be glad to consider a proposition for a landing one block east of Main street. The committee by resolution appointed Elder George P. Lambert to supervise the improvements decided upon, with

SERMONS AND ARTICLES

ASSURANCE OF THE RESURRECTION.

Memorial sermon by Elder C. Edward Miller at Rozelle, Australia.

Memorial sermon by Edder C. Edward shifer at Rozelle, Australia.

(In memory of Frederick Haworth.)

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."—Isaiah 55:8.

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"—Acts 26.

God's word contains the divine program which will be carried out, in assigning departed souls to their future station in the universe. Everything is governed by the law of degrees. Light. color, heat, sound, intelligence, morality are all under this law, and so is salvation. "Every man shall be rewarded according to his works." The old doctrine of either heaven or hell for humanity was never authorized by the work of God. Paul says in 1 Cor. 15:23 referring to the resurrection, "But every man in his own order." And in the 41st and 42nd verses he tells us this order is: "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."

Christ is coming back to this earth again, to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords. He is to come in the "clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, taking vengeance on them who know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." He is also coming to bring about the resurrection of the dead, these will be saved in the "sun" glory, and will live on this earth in its restored Edenic condition, with Christ in his thousand years millenial reign." Isaiah pictured the restored earth as being free from violence even between beasts. "Nothing shall hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain."

Our departed brother has obeyed the old Jerusalem gospel, he has been born again by the water and the spirit, and is in the family of God, Jesus Christ being the elder brother. In Christ's thousand years reign on this earth will be fulfilled his promise; "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Isaiah says: "Every man shall sit under his own vine and fig tree." After the millenium another great change is to take place here, Christ shall have put all enemies under his feet, the last of which is death, then God himself shall dwell with his people, the New Jerusalem is to come down from God out of heaven. Christ said "I go to prepare a place for you," and "In my Father's house are many mansions."

To the mind of your speaker, the glory here referred to means "intelligence." It is the glory of God. Christ, who we are told in John 1:1-4, created everything in this universe; prayed to the Father, "give me the glory [intelligence?] I had with thee before the world was." I think there will be as much diffrence in the physical beauty and intelligence of those who come up in the first or "sun" resurrection, and those who are brought forth in the second or "moon" resurrection as there is difference between the brightness of those two luminaries. So, to my mind, the future intelligence of the human family depends upon their observance of the divine law here. Those who obey the gospel in its fulness will receive the greatest reward.

Then there are those who are immoral, murderers, etc., they will be sent to the prison house and will not be released "until they have paid the utmost farthing." We do not build prisons in this enlightened age to torture the inmates, but to reform them. The divine prison is not a place for torture but for tuition. Christ preached deliverance to the captives. He preached to the spirits in prison, while his body lay in the tomb.

Are any of you doubtful about the resurrection? Do any of you, in the language of my text, "Think it incredible that God should raise the dead?" I will refer you to the resurrections going on all the time. In my country, during the fall, preceding the winter, a little caterpillar crawls up the trunk of a tree, it finds a little cavity in the bark, it builds a tomb for itself in this wise: A cement wall is built up by the little creatur: expectorating a secretion from its mouth, this wall completely encloses the cavity, so no prowling enemy can devour its inmate during the wintery months while it lies there helpless. But what a wonderful transformation is taking place! It is just as wonderful as the matamorphosis of a mortal to imortality! the caterpillar has by spring changed to a beautiful butterfly! But how can it get out of that tomb? Who will roll the stone away? What a herculean task for a fluffly, soft little butterfly!

But the mind of Jesus Christ in the creation of the world, solved that problem. A chemist was at work for the rescue of the little prisoner. For centuries butterflies thus imprisoned were born, but no one knew how they mastered the difficulty of that tomb. We cannot explain the mystery of the resurrection, but, we can reason towards faith. A patient scientist, in late years, found that two little quils, one on each side, of the body of the butterfly held the secret. One contained formic acid, and the other caustic potash, by compressing these quils, the chemicals were ejected against the cement wall, causing it to disintegrate, liberating the captive, so joyously it could with white wings fly out into the sunlight of God! And its very flight has been made erratic as a means of protection so it could have life here on this earth for its alloted time. The machanical construction of its wings are designed to help it escape preying birds. And if God will give so much thought for a butterfly, what will he not do for those who love him and keep his commandments?

Men have tried to educate themselves away from a belief in the immortality of the soul, but I affirm, by reason of that desire being in the breast of the lowest savage and the most civilized man, it is a natural desire, and like all other natural cravings, it will be satisfied. If there ever has been a human being tried to crush that hope out of his soul, the brilliant American agnostic, Robert G. Ingersoll was that man. Publicly and privately he assailed that doctrine, but at last, the angel of death waited upon a loved brother. These two men had a touching affection for each other. They loved as brothers should. They agreed that the one who survived the other was to deliver an oration over the dead body. Robert survived, and here is part of what he said:

"We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word. But in the night of death hope sees a star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing. He who sleeps here, when dying, mistaking the approach of death for the return of health, whispered with his latest breath, "I am better now." Let us believe, in spite of doubts and dogmas, of fears and tears, that these dear words are true of all the countless dead."

Ex-Senator Albert Beveridge, who was one of President Roosevelt's chief lieutenants, and a ready writer of considerable fame, said that in his experience he found that practical men, men of large movements, and who dealt in the great affairs of men were very rarely infidels.

Sir Alfred Russell Wallace, whose name is a household word the world over, in his book, "Man's Place in the Universe," says "What a piece of work is man; How noble in reason, how infinite in faculty! In action, how like an angel! In apprehension how like a god! And for the development of such a being, what is such a universe as ours?* **Man is the unique and supreme product of this yast universe."

How illogical, to think after untold centuries and ages, man was finally produced upon il.e and then the universe, after having earth. created him, turns around and annihilates him! Mergenthaler would have been considered an imbecile, if after having perfected the linotype. he had placed a stick of dynamite under the masterpiece of mechanism and blew it up, saying he built it to destroy it! This mighty universe is in a crude state, it is as it were, just the morning of creation, and our brother, will rest in the paradise of God, until Christ again comes to this earth, "with ten thousand of his saints" and he will, with the rest of the resurrected dead take part in the development of creation.

When the earth is clad with snow, and the soft flakes are kissing the frozen ground, the winter of death predominates; the trees are barren, the flowers bloom no more, the song birds have migrated, and the moans of the winter winds seem to dolefully chant a funeral dirgs for all the earth; but in that frozen ground a mighty rally is taking place! Spring is approaching, the sturdy oaks, the weeping willows, the towering poplars and the graceful maples are ready to send up the life giving sap that those naked limbs might be clothed as was not Solomon in all his glory; the sun has kissed away the last snow and there bloom the fragrant violets, and the the gorgeous tulips, painted as if it were by the finger of God! The peach trees and the apple blossoms scatter their aroma on the balmy air. Gorgeous color delights the eye, new life enlivens the soul, the robin red-breasts have returned with the rest of the singers of the air, to make music for the ear. The resurrected trees, the blooming flowers, the warbling birds, all proclaim in color, in life and in song, Hail sweet Spring, Hail! And on the resurrection morn when the dead shall rise to die no more, when the good of all ages shall meet as the family of God, then will Jesus, God's dear Son, bring eternal spring to the earth, and there shall no more be sorrow or death, "I am alive for ever more."

OCCUPATIONS DURING THE MILLENIUM.

A Ten Minute Sermon by Elder W. A. Sinclair, M. D.
"And then shall the heathen nations be redeemed, and they that knew no law, shall have part in the first resurrection." Doctrine and Covenants 45:10.

The millennium is a time prophesied of by many of the prophets of God as a period of wonderful experiences for those who shall be made partakers thereof.

Peter in speaking of the time says:—"Which things the angels desire to look into." 1 Peter 1:12.

Daniel taking up the same theme records:—
"And many of them that slept in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt, and they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."
Daniel 12:2,3.

Paul refers to the same transition thus:—"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive, But every man in his own order; Christ the firstfruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. 15:22,23.

And the Doctrine and Covenants in section 76, marks out at least two of the great glories—the sun and the moon—as having part in this wonderful reign. There are differences of conditions among these participants, relative to their capabilities and spiritual enlightenment, hence, there must be differences in character of the occupations each will follow.

According to Zechariah there will be but very little change in the secular affairs, but the great difference will be in religion, for all families of the earth will be required to go up to Jerusalem once a year to worship the king, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." Zech. 14:16.

The beast and the false prophets are destroyed so that their influences will not be felt any longer. Rev. 19:20.

And Daniel says:—"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Daniel 7:27.

This is probably a solution to the state of religion that will previl. The saints will be the chief people who will occupy here, chief, because, they will be the teachers, and the gospel of Jesus Christ will be universal.

According to John in Rev. 20:6, the whole concourse of the saints—independent of sex, will be priests—teachers of the kingdoms and peoples who will be present at that period.

And in Rev. 5:10, he says:—"And hast made us unto our God, kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."

According to these two passages the saints will be rulers over certain cities or kingdoms, and are also the teachers of the people.

Micah 4:3. "And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Consider the above besides kings and priests, we will have blacksmiths for the plowshares must be made, and also the pruningkooks. We will have farmers who will use plowshares, and animals will be used in the plowing, therefore there must be harnessmakers, to supply the necessary harness.

Pruninghooks are for vineworkers, hence, there must be vine dressers.

65:21. "And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them."

In order to build houses there must be carpenters, and if we look at Amos 9:13,14. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes, him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall "And, I will bring again the captivity of my melt. people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them."

Here again we have building going to take place, so we are safe in saying that there will be bricklayers, and if bricklayers, brick makers, stone masons, hence quarrymen, plasterers, hence lime makers, plumbers, hence moulding shops, and moulders to make the utensils, painters hence paint workers, in fact every kind of tradesman to manufacture every kind of implement necessary for the use-of man.

There will be gardeners to make gardens, wine merchants, who shall make wine.

Revelation 3:5. "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white rainment; and I not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before the angels.

If we are to wear white robes, it will necessitate the workers in the different departments, from the sowing of the grain or the growing of the animals until the material is ready for the making, and then it will need the weaver, the finisher, the tailor, etc., to prepare it for the wearer.

And so we might go on enumerating the different trades that are suggested by certain texts, but it is apparent that every kind of mechanic and tradesman will be needed just as they are

The saints will be the teachers of the people in religious affairs and they will not follow manual labor, but will be sustained by the labors of those of the lesser glories, while they are teaching them the beauties of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Contentment will pervade the universe, for we read in Micah 4:

"But they [The Nations] shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it."

And we read in Isaiah 2:6-9. "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion, and the fatling together; and the little child shall lead them.

And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den.

They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

THE LATEST WONDER OF WIRELESS WAVES.

Four thousand four hundred and twenty-two lives saved by wireless telegraphy! At least that is the number of persons rescued from imperiled or wrecked ocean steamships whose predicament was made known to rescuers by means of the Marconi invention.

With these accomplishments—with the story of the Titanic, the Republic, the Volturno and others the public is familiar, as it is, more or less, with the rapid extension of wireless stations throughout the world. But with the adaptation of the wireless to certain other important purposes the public generally is not so well acquainted.

A Ship Without a Crew.

Of the more recent wonders the shore guided boat is the most qicturesque in its appeal to the imagination and the most obvious in its importance. John Hays Hammond, jr's, boat, which he controls at will from his station on the shore of Gloucester Harbor, may be the bginning of a revolution in paval warfare. Who will undertake to predict what may be the outcome of this ability to stand in a signal tower on land and direct the movements of a boat out at sea, sending it to the right or to the left, stopping it or hurling it straight ahead with the speed of a railroad train. at the will of the distant operator.

This is the result of the genius of a youth 25 years old. Mr. Hammond has been at work on his plans at his summer home at Gloucester, Mass., ever since he graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology four years ago, the result being a craft which he can direct shore over a devious course on Gloucester Harbor, easily steering it at a distance of six or seven miles among the shoals and rocks and other craft in absolute safety.

This wireless boat runs by the powers of her own engines, but is steered by the man on the distant cliff. Here, on a wooded height overlooking the harbor, stand two enormous masts, 360 feet high, connected with antennae, and close by is the lookout station of the operator who conducts the movements of the boat. The experiments are more frequent at night and the operator is aided in keeping track of the boat by an enormous searchlight which plays upon the craft out in the harbor.

Experts Watched the Boat.

Mr. Hammond's experiments have had the interested support of the United States government Early in his work he enlisted the aid of General Weaver, chief of the United States Coast Artillery, and the latter visited Gloucester, accompanied by Col. R. P. Davis, an expert in these matters. Thy stood on the lookout tower and watched Mr. Hammond cause his manless boat to dart about the harbor under perfect control: they watched it circle about and turn instantly at the touch of the key; saw it head directlyfor a definite mark and hit it with a precision that must have meant destruction had the mark been an enemy's battleship and the boat a torpedo loaded with dynamite.

The very latest thing, however, in the wireless field appears to be the new telephotographic apparatus recently tried in Paris, by which photographs may be sent by wireless over quite a distance. A leading Paris journal made a trial and assures its success. The apparatus is said, however, to be still crude and until it is perfected to such a degree that photos may be sent as wireless messages are now sent the method will be kept a secret. The inventor is a Parisian.

Trains Operated by Wireless.

Wireless operation of moving trains is one of the latest uses to which the Marconi invention has been put. November 21,1913, the Lackawanna Railroad made a successful experiment of operating one of its fast passenger trains by means pur uoidurußuig ir suoitris ssələtim omi sii jo Scranton, and since that time has constructed two other wireless stations, to which will be added a fifth, and will depend entirely on this system of communication. Its worth was well shown on the occasion of the great storm of March 1, 2, and 3. On March 2, especially a great many of the trains on other Eastern roads were tied up because of the great blizzard which raged throughout that section of the country, but the Lackawanna, although running through a mountainous region, and although its regular wires were down in many instances, was able to operate its trains without interruption by means of the wireless system.

The Lackawanna's experience has caused many other railroads seriously to consider the advisability of resorting to the wireless at least in case of storm disablement of regular wires.

Added to the obvious importance which wireless telegrams would naturally assume in navy maneuvers in time of war there now comes the army wireless pack, which has been universally introduced among United States Troops, and which will largely supplant the old time method of signalling. The army pack, which has been adopted after a long series of experiments, is so simple in form that the entire outfit can be carried by two mules and is so constructed that it can be taken down and put into operation in less than a minute; it has a guaranteed radius of eighty miles .- S. S. Sheridan, in Chicago Record

BELIEVING AND OBEYING

"I'm not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." Rom. 1:16. By this Scripture we learn we must believe before the gospel has any power over us. The power is for the enes who believe, and not for the unbelieving.

Then James says that faith without works is dead. So we must have works or our faith or belief will not gain us any power, We learn that because of Abraham's great faith he was called the friend of God. But we must not believe that he had faith alone for his works went with his faith.

We are told that devils believed and trembled. Why did they tremble if faith alone was sufficient? They had no works, so we see that faith alone is not accepted but both will work much power. Jesus said in his sermon on the mount, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heav-en." From this we learn we have something to do besides believe. We may believe that if we plant a corn field we would reap a harvest. So we believe that if we do the will of the Father we will reap a reward. But will that belief alone raise the corn or will that belief alone gain us a reward? No; our reward will be as small in the celestial kingdom as it will in the corn crop without work.

So we learn there is a work to do as soon as we believe. We must repent of our evil deeds and repentance will naturally lead to good works. Heb. 6:1-6 mentions faith, repentance, baptism, the laying on of hands. When we have complied with these rules are we ready to sit down and say "Now I've done my Father's will and hence I am saved and sanctified?" What! Sanctified so soon? But Paul says, "Let us go on unto perfection." fection." So we see we are not perfect yet! we must be sanctified through faith. Well, what must we do next? Keep a regular attendance at church? Yes, that is a good part but not all by any means. James says Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this; To visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. Not to keep yourself from worldly people but refrain from their evil deeds. "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins." Rev. 18:4. So we see we are to be in the world but not of the world; not participate in the sins of the world.

Let us turn to Matt. 5:1-13 and we will see a few things we must do. First we must be poor in spirit. This agrees with the Scripture that says, "He that exalteth himself shall be abased, but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.' So we must not be exalted in our own opinion. Not justifying ourselves but ever ready to confess our sins one to another and to God.

"Blessed are they that mourn," Some may think we should not mourn after coming into the church but should always rejoice. Indeed we should rejoice, but when one member mourns we should all mourn with him and so bear each others' burdens. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled." we must have a desire for more learning, more righteousness, a desire to do more work. must do everything that lies in our power, we must give our lives a living sacrifice to do whatever the Lord wills regardless of the circum stances. Have we all done this? If not we must get busy for our life is short and there is much to do.

"Blessed are the merciful." We must be merciful to the ones less fortunate than ourselves. I say less fortunate because perhaps they have not yet gained sufficient knowledge or have not been raised as they should have been or many other things that cause them to sin, so we must be merciful and always forgiving.

"Blessed are the peacemakers," some say that is none of my business, that is fro the teachers and not my calling. But it is your calling. (the saints) are the salt of the earth." Salt is a preservative, so we must preserve or save our brother from (not in) his faults, hence be a peacemaker. Last but not least, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you, falsely for my sake." But remember it must be false else there is no room for rejoicing. John says that any who do the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine, so we must do his will and he will He will not leave us in let us know our mission. the dark if we prefer light enough to work for it. That we all may study to show ourselves approved and be worthy to meet in Zion is my prayer in Jesus' name.

HOW ENGLAND GOT ITS CANAL RIGHTS.

Back in the '40s the United States was engaged in viewing with alarm-to use the words of the party platforms-the expansion of British possessions in Central America. The British government owned, and still owns, a strip of God-forsaken country just south of Mexico on the Caribbean coast, known as British Honduras. In the decade immediately preceding the middle of the last century, the British statesmen started in to acquire additional territory under the familiar guise of establishing a "protectorate" for the benefit of a handy tribe of Indians.

Pursuing this laudable end, her majesty's forces seized the Nicaraguan town of San Juan del Norte, and re-named it Greytown. Now Greytown was no ordinary banana village. It was at the mouth of the San Juan river, and at that time it was universally supposed that the only possible route for an isthmian canal was by way of this river to Lake Nicaragua. If England controlled the mouth of the river it would control the shortcut across the Isthmus.

Public opinion in the United States was aroused to a high stage of indignation. To ease the situation the Taylor administration negotiated a treaty with England to stop further expansion of English territory in the neighborhood of the site of the canal and to insure its freedom from British control when it should be constructed. John M. Clayton, Secretary of State, conducted the negotiations for the United States and Sir Henry Bulwer, British minister, for Great Britain.

It must be borne in mind that the United States at that time did not dream of undertaking the work of constructing the canal, and its sole purpose was to induce Great Britain to surrender the advantage of canal control which its seizure of territory would otherwise give it. Accordingly the treaty pledged each power "not to assume dominion over any part of Central America," not to obtain exclusive control over any canal, where ever constructed, and not to erect fortifications overlooking the canal. Besides, the two powers agreed to guarantee the neutrality of the canal, and allow their war vessels to pass through it without molestation in the event of war.

The treaty was ratified in 1850. It was understood in the United States that with the ratification the British protectorate in the neighborhood of the canal site would be abandoned. But England did not so understand the treaty, and it was not until 1860 that it met the expectations of the American negotiators.

For many years the treaty remained wholly satisfactory to the United States, since it was interested only in preventing any British expansion in Central America. But when, along in the '80s, the question of the construction of a canal by the United States came to be agitated, the treaty at once loomed up as a source of irritation. The shoe was then on the other foot. The United States no longer wanted to use the treaty to restrain Eng-It desired to have it abolished so as to reland lease the American government to act as it might see fit.

For years there were threats of abrogating the treaty. But the treaty embodied no method for its termination, and England always protested that it had made substantial concessions in carrying out the treaty, so that the Unied States was bound in honor to observe it.

Thus it fell out that when this government was ready to go to work in earnest on the canal, it had to induce England to agree to a modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. This modification was the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, negotiated by Secretary Hay and Lord Pauncefote, in 1901. The concession which England exacted for consenting to abandon the older treaty was the paragraph for equality of treatment in tolls to the ships of all na-On this condition it agreed to surrender its rights over the canal.

Thus the tolls controversy is founded on conditions growing out of British aggression in Central America more than sixty years ago.—Kansas City

How Much for the "Up?"

In answering a question as to the cost of a motor boat suitable for the South Sea Island, the Bishop said it would be "$: 000 and up, with the emphasis on the 'up'". The questioner will asked, "How much 'up' do they want?" "As much es they can get," replied the Bishop.

FROM OUR NEW PRESIDENT.

"If ye are not one ye are not mine" has been the burden of my thought for some days. This thought came in connection with a desire to write a letter to all women of the church, wherever they live. In almost every district there is a woman's club of some kind—sewing, embroidery, literary, musical, or sunshine. Now why can we not all join the Woman's Auxiliary? There is no requirement but to send names of your officers and number of members together with the name of your club-if you we ask but do not demand, that for each member ten cents a year be sent to the Auxiliary to form a leaflet fund. All money raised by your society can be used by you in any way you desire. If you do not wish to pay even the ten cents per capita and will join with u will see to that part for your society, so it will not be a trouble.

We do ask that every society in whatever district write to me or our secretary and get leaflets and information, which will be gladly furnished free to any society or club. If you have members not in the church that is an advantage, and we wish to communicate with your officers.

Let us hear from some one in every local and come to a unity in sisterly love and unselfishness. We want to be humble and prayerful in our work and give help and encouragement. We do not approve of aggressive or inconsistent methods but rather we desire to convince you of our sisterly interest in the welfare of women.

In gospel lo Mrs. S. R. Burgess.

SOCIAL PURITY.

SOCIAL PURITY.

In connection with the Woman's Auxiliary, the Social Purity Board held a mixed meeting in charge of Elders John Garver, C. B. Woodstock and Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser. This gathering occurred at 8 o'clock Saturday morning and was well attended. While there were only forty-five minutes for the program, the time was well and valuably spent. Mrs. Etzenhouser, in characteristic style, put forth facts plainly and strikingly. Her talk was followed by Bro. Garver's in equally earnest style. The work of this committee has not been done in a public manner, but several leaflets have been published, among manner, but several leaflets have been published, among other work done, and plans for other work well on the way.

From the Notes of Mrs. Etzenhouser's talk we glean the following: That five children's courts show 10,791 the following: That fiverested; 1,538 convicted.

Of those arraigned there were from the ages of

1 to 7 years—boys, 589; girls, 445.

7 to 12 years—boys, 3,234; girls, 575.

12 to 14 years—boys, 3,941; girls, 439.

14 to 16 years—boys, 4,635; girls, 680.

Statistics show a marked increase of crime between the ages of 12 and 14. The majority of first commitments occured in these ages.

Causes: Lack of paternal control; indiscriminate as-sociations; unattractive homes. The harm of allowing shildren to stay away from home all night was sighted as an effective means of starting all night was sighted as an effective means of starting children to be deceptive.

Parental trust is too implicit. Children whose whereabouts after nightfall are not known to parents are usually in danger. More restriction usually placed on girls than on boys, which should not be. The street and its temptations are as bad for one as for the other.

We find boys and girls self-instructed in the most vital and basic facts of life.

Another item which statistics bear out; there are fifty fallen men to one fallen woman; we can do but little with the immoral woman, but we can educate the coming generation and cut off the supply and demand.

Bro. Garver urged emphatically that the question is imminently a man's problem. He also cautioned women, especially the young, concerning their styles of dress, arguing that they little realize the harm done by the extreme and suggestive styles of the day.

He cautioned parents against allowing children to grow up into their teens and even out of them without proper knowledge concerning the story of life. Sometimes is done carelessly, sometimes because parents dislike to destroy the innocence apparent in the young. But this oft times leads to folly and grief.

PASTORALS

To the Church in the Pacific Slope Mission, Greeting:

With renewed assurance in the divinity of our cause, we continue our labor of love and service toward our fellowkind. May the work of the Mission show at the end of the current year even better advancement than the past, as last year shows decided advance over the previous one.

commend you to our General Conference appointees

R. D. Davis and R. S. Budd will do missionary labor in British Columbia and Seattle District. They may report to Bro. Wm. Johnson for direction, whose address port to Bro. Wm. Johnson for affection, whose address is, 5618 Evanston Ave, Scattle, Washington. He is now president of the district there.

J. M. Terry will make Scattle and environs an objective point, and, if agreeable to the Branch, may be placed in charge as pastor.

G. M. Shippy and C. Norris Heading associate in missionary effort where led in Washington and Oregon.

A. C. Barmore may report to N. T. Chapman, president of the Portland District, for missionary work. Changes may come later. Bro. Chapman's address is, 828 East 29th St., South, Portland Oregon.

M. H. Cook will enter into active field work later in the year, when his circumstances will permit. C. E. Crumley will go to the Southwest Oregon District as heretofore.

C. A. Parkin will continue his charge as Bishop of Northern California District. His address is, 579 5th Ave., San Francisco, California. He will gladly respond to all offering financial assistance.

S. M. Reiste will labor with tent in Northern Califor-

Josquin Valley.

M. A. McConley may, when he can leave Hawaii, locate in Northern California District. Will arrange more particularly for him later.

In the Southern California District, R. F. Slve and W. A. Brooner will associate in tent work, following up the work of last year.

V. M. Goodrich will continue in Los Angeles as Pastor of the local church there

W. A. McDowell as Patriarch is at liberty to go to any part of the Mission needful.

W. Davis and C. E. Jones may arrange their work in Hawaii as they find the demands after they get there. Bro. G. J. Waller will be foung an essential counsellor from his long experience in that Territory.

Time for reporting is the first of July, October, January and March.

My mission address will be, 281 Castro St., San Francisco, California.

Most fraternally yours, F. M. Sheehy, Minister in Charge.

To those interested in Mission No. 3, comprising Maratime Provinces, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Massachusetts, Maryland, Conneticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and District of Columbia, Greeting:

The results accomplished by the united efforts of the ministry and membership last year were so encouraging that we look forward to this year's activities as likely to produce a large ingathering of souls, an extension of all the departments of church work, and a closer approach to the ideals of the church.

to the neess of the entren.

Our message to the world is "Christ, and him crucified."

Nothing should be allowed to come between that message and the world; in the nature of ambiguity of language, slothfulness, unattractive mannerisms, or philosophy that confuses.

In the difficulties to be met, and sacrifices to be borne may we support each other, and by God's assistance accomplish the important work assigned us.

We trust the following appointments of the ministry will be satisfactory to all:

To the New York and Philadelphia District: W. W. Smith, Fhiladelphia objective point; J. A. Koehler, Philadelphia second church objective point; E. B. Hull, Brooklyn objective point; George Morris; if assistance can be procured Bro. Morris will operate the tent in the tent

To the New York District: A. E. Stone; A. M. Chase, who will give such help to the Niagara Falls Branch as who will give such help to the Magara rains branch as may be deemed necessary.

Elder A. D. Angus will labor as an evangelical minister in both the above named districts.

To the Massachusetts District: A. B. Phillips; Wn. Anderson. These brethren will perhaps find it of advantage to be associated for a time in tent work; after the tent season is over, Bro. Anderson may wend his way to Maine where a good field awaits his labors. After con-sultation with the Presidency R. W. Farrell has been assigned to Providence.

Resigned to Productive.

To the Eastern Maine District: F. J. Ebeling, who will give support to Jonesport and vicinity.

To the Western Maine District: J. F. Sheehy.

Elder H. O. Smith will labor as an evangelical minister in the New England States, ister in the New England States.

My mission address will be the same as last year, 348 Medford St., Winter Hill, Massachusetts. Let all be assured I will be glad to learn of the triumphs and needs of the mission work. Times for reporting, July 1, October 1, January 1, March 1. Let a note be made of the above address and times for reporting; so there will be no delay made in the reports reaching the Presidency.

Paul M. Han Minister in general charge.

To the Saints and Friends of the Church in Missouri; Kansas and the Central and South Eastern Districts of Illinois, Greeting:

For another year the supervision of the work in this field has been committed to the undersigned; and we take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation for the good work of the brethren; missionary and local, by which this field was able to maintain its position in quality and quantity of results produced.

We also express our heartfelt thanks for the hospi-We also express our heartfelt thanks for the hospi-ality, goodwill and sincere co-operation which we en-joyed during our association last year. There were some parts of the field I was not permitted to reach owing to circumstances beyond my control but we hope to have the privilege of visiting those points this present year.

Some of the difficulties which existed when we took the field a year ago we are glad to note have been adjusted, though there are still some others which will need care and tact; above all, forbearance and conciliation on the part of all concerned. We shall approach this year's work in the hope that all will labor for the honor of the cause and extension of the kingdom.

It was very gratifying to observe the hearty co-operation which developed between the missionary staff and the local ministry last year and we hope to have that co-operation deepened and widened. We also appreciate the hearty support given in the attempt to systematize the local work and the effort made to bring the district organizations to a higher state of efficiency and to raise the norale of the ministry by the adoption of the Code of By-laws suggested.

It is a matter which we regret that the personnel of our staff has been changed somewhat and also reduced in numbers; but while we regret to lose the brethren who have been allocated elsewhere we welcome the new breth-ren and though we have a depleted staff we confidently expect our year's work to equal previous records. We commend the brethren to the goodwill, confidence and supof the saints and friends among whom they are ap pointed to work as follows:

Far West District: John Davis and John Elv will work together in the district.

W. P. Pickering will labor in St. Joseph making the Third Branch objective.

The First St. Joseph Branch has been deprived of the services of Bro. Scott by a post conference action which I sincerely regret, but we trust that something may be done for this branch which will provide for the continu-ance of the good work which was begun. In the mean-time we hope that the local brethren will take up the work and seek to meet the demands as best they can until such time as a successor to Bro. Scott is appointed by those responsible.

Northeast Missouri District: Brn. D. E. Tucker and F. O. Pritchett will continue the work they had in hand

Southern Missouri District: Henry Sparling, L. M. Mc-Fadden and J. F. Cunningham will look after the needs of the work in this district. We should like to urge that in this district there is need for the systematizing of the local work and of attention to some cases of delinquency which should be adjusted.

Clinton District: F. C. Keck, H. E. Moler, W. E. Rey-nolds and Walter A. Johnson will labor in this district. Bro. Keck is sick and will not be expected to travel or 'abor except at his own discretion. Bro. Reynolds as District Bishop's Agent will no doubt find sufficient to keep fully occupied. We suggest that Brn. Moler and Johnson work together as much as may be practicable. The interest created by Brn. Higdon and Budd last year we should like to see developed.

Bro. W. S. Macrae will labor in the Clinton District as much as possible and what time he needs to be at home because of domestic affairs he will labor in the Independence Stake.

Spring River District: T. W. Chathura, Lee Quick, A.

Spring Aiver District: 2. W. Chabburg, Lee Quick, A. C. Silvers and A. T. Gray.

Nodaway District: E. L. Henson, R. T. Walters and

A. McCord who will enter the field October the 1st, will meet the demands of the work in this field.

Independence Stake: The two missionaries in this part of the field will labor as best they can according to their conditions of home and health, under the direction of the Stake Presidency. They are George Jenkins and F. L.

North West Kansas District: J. D. Shower will be assisted by Bro. W. H. Harvey who is new to missionary work and we trust these brethren will have the support of the local ministers in their efforts.

Northeast Kansas District: Samuel Twombley. Bailey and George Edwards will labor in this part the field.

We advise that Bro. Twombley confine his efforts to e Blue Rapids Branch working to adjust the matters difficulty there until the branch is freed from the inthe Blue cumbrances hindering its progress.

The other two brethren will be free to meet whatever calls are made upon them in the district.

Southern Kansas unorganized territory: J. Arthur Davis, O. D. Shirk will work together in this part of the field.

Central Illinois District: A. M. Baker and R. L. Fulk will care for the needs of the work in this district.

Southeastern Illinois District: S. S. Smith, S. H. Fields and E. W. Sutton will labor in this district.

St. Louis District: W. A. Smith, Wardell Christy will take up the work which Brn. Sparling and Dowker had in hand last year, and we advise they consult Bro. Archi-bald the district president as to the points to care for. Bro. J. W. Paxton will continue the work he opened at the close of the conference year particularly working at the close of the conference year particularly working to develop the work in Quincy.

The Patriarchs William Jewis will labor at his discretion in the state of Kansas. I. N. White according to ability and health will labor in the Independence Stake.

Trusting that success may crown our efforts, with best wishes,

Sincerely yours, John W. Rushton.

To the Saints in the Eastern Oklahoma District:—
Inasmuch as Bro. Jn. Harp, who has been acting as distmassinuch as Bro. 3n. hardy, who has been acting, as district president in the immediate past, has been transferred by the appointing powers to another field, and inasmuch as Bro. J. C. Chrestensen, who is an High Priest, has been appointed to labor in eastern Oklahoma, we, the undersigned, suggest the advisability of his being placed in charge of the district as president

We therefore appoint him to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of Bro. Harp, such appointment subject to ratification of the next district conference.

Respectfully submitted, Frederick M. Smith,
For the First Presidency.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and Friends of the Eastern Colorado District:
Please take notice that upon the resignation and removal from the Eastern Colorado District of Bro. Arthur H. has been duly appointed bishop's agent for said territory in the interest of the Reorganized Church of Jesus tory in the interest of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We commend Bro. Tabor to the Saints and friends in this work, and Bro. Tabor has also the reccommendation of the former agent, Bro. A. H. Mills, and Bro. J. W. Rushton, missionary in charge, for this work.

The Bishopric extend special thanks to Bro. A. H. Mills for the good work he has performed in the office the past year. We trust he may be prospered in his business. We trust the Saints will be ready to help Bro. Tabor as one of the Lord's ministers and that the work placed in his hands may be promptly and fully carried out. May each one who thus labors for the Master's cause receive his special blessing. receive his special blessing.

FAILURE THROUGH UNFITNESS.

That a young man should fail to meet the ordinary requirements of active life because of needless lack of preparation is a misfortune to all concerned. That many young men in all lines of service are failing to meet the requirements is a fact well known especially to business and professional men who are under the necessity of entrusting a part of their work to employees. But why? Is it that education is defective? that home training is inadequate? or for other reasons?

The Kansas City Journal speaking upon this subject says:

Perhaps conditions have not changed greatly in respect to the opportunities that present themselves for young men of the right kind in the business world; but it is a fact worthy of serious thought that wherever business men of the present day congregate, some comment is usually made upon the scarcity of really competent and promising young men entering business careers. It seems to be the common verdict of those seeking reseems to be time common vertact of those seeming re-cruits to business enterprises that the boys now applying for positions are lamentably poor material either for training or advancement. This of course, does not apply to all business men nor to all boys, but it does apply to a very large number of both. And it indicates that some-where there is either social or educational disjointment.

The cause of so much failure seems to be somewhat indefinite, and may be too general to be easily specified, but some of the conditions may be noted with a certainty. The conditions leading to failure may be found mentioned in the following.

City boys appear to have the common failing of being the seriousness of business. Modern boys are less thoughtful, less carnest and less ambitious than their fathers. At least, this is the opinion of many business men. Today the right kind of a boy may have his pick of opportunities. But the right kind of a boy is a rara avis. He is not found nightly at picture shows. He is not seen hangiour about corner drug stores smoking cigar-ettes. He is not scorching over the boulevards nightly in his father's sutomobile. He is not fagged and blase at an high when he should be bright, hopeful and am-bitious. The right kind of a boy—that is what many business man is looking for anxiously and unsuccess-

An excess of "social diversions," picture shows and theatres, automobiling, and the less refined practices of smoking, playing pool hall games, not to mention more sinful practices, are the things which are destroying the capabilities of so many of the younger generation. Young men who indulge in these things do not get down to a thoughtful consideration of the deeper things of life. Their minds have become accustomed to the enjoyments which these social pleasures bring that the desire for such enjoyment has become fixed art of their natures and occupies their thought to the exclusion of the essential things.

An educator of Kansas City stated not long ago that of the pupils in one of the schools over half attended the picture show five times a week or more. This alone tells the story. The minds of the youth are turned too much to the passing delights and not sufficiently to the things which make for true development and by which they are qualified for responsible work.

Complaint is made that boys are not willing so serve apprenticeships but that they expect to enter at once into places of responsibility and trust. While defects are sometimes noted in the school education, the greatest trouble lies in the social environment. The liberal training provided by the school inclines the young man to the belief that he is competent, but the effect of the social life upon his mind is to make him unwilling to begin at the bottom when he enters upon his line of work, and work up. His social standing entitles him, in his own mind, to a prominent place in the business world.

Not only with the young men are the social attractions working disastrously, but with many other classes. The time and attention devoted to the search for pleasure and social enjoyment are leaving many young women unwilling and unqualified for the duties of home life, and paves the way for ultimate failure. The world is too much given over to pleasure which gratifies merely the fleshly appetites, though much of it is found under conditions of refinement which cause many to overlook its carnal tendencies.

Scholastic education alone does not qualify one for the demands of commercial or professional life, but a strong moral character made possible through proper instruction in ethics, and through voluntary effort to apply the principles learned, and the self-restraint imposed against seonddary considerations which interfere with those of first importance. Diversions and recreation of the proper kinds may be helpful when indulged in within proportionate limitations, but when they are made the principal thing, or when their form inclines to wrong-doing, then the higher ideals, the nobler impulses, and the strength of character, begin to fade away, and the only qualifi-cation left to man is that which insures failure.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY.

The first steps leading toward the organization of this auxiliary society, composed of the young people of the church, were taken about 1890, when a department was opened in Autumn Leaves for an exchange of views among the young. Within three months a systematic course of study began to be talked of, and two months later a suggestion was made for an organization for the systematic distribution of good literature, and the name "Latter Day Saints' Literary Exchange" was suggested.

These were but efforts to attain and accomplish things which were dimly seen to be necessary. but which could only be wrought out by moving forward to the extent that light was given. As further showing the tendency of the times in pushing out in the line of educating and developing the young of the Church, distinct societies were organized in a number of the larger branches of the Church under different names and with different policies, but all having the same general purpose.

The first formal step toward a general organization was at the General Conference at Independence, Mo., in 1892. A petition from the Young People's Mutual Improvement Society of St. Joseph, Mo., was presented by Elder M. H. Forscutt, on April 13th, and on the 16th a temporary organization was effected with F. M. Sheehy, President, and J. F. Mintun, Secretary. A committee on constitution and by-laws was appointed, consisting of J. A. Gunsolley, G. J. Whitehead, C. R. Duncan and J. C. Hitchcock.

The work of this committee was reported to a meeting called at the Lamoni Conference of 1893, which met on April 14th. A constitution was adopted and a permanent organization provided for the name which the society still bears, and which was suggested by Bro. Sheehy, was

The department in the Autumn Leaves was continued, and resulted in the publication of monthly programs designed to lead and help the societies in their study and work, including the literary part. In time the monthly program gave way to a special publication giving lessons for study and known as the "Religio Quarterly." Sr. Louise Palfrey Sheldon was for some years editor, to which office she was succeeded by R. W. Farrell, who still occupies in that capacity. J. A. Gunsolley succeeded to the Presidency, which he has held successfully for many years.

The society has grown and its work has branched out into many lines, and to-day it is truly fulfilling the original design, to be an auxiliry or helping society to the Church. The reports already published for this year show its strength as to numbers and extent.

JAMES E. KELLEY.

James E. Kelley holds the distinction of being the youngest member of the Quorum of Twelve, being thirty-four years of age at the present time. His father, W. H. Kelley, was an Apostle when the younger Kelley was born, and remained so until 1913, when he was released because of advancing years, and his son took his place according to the revelation received by the Church.

He was baptized at the age of 15 years at Kirtland, O., and when 21 was called through one of the Presidency of the Church to the office of elder, and the Sunday following his ordination preached his first sermon, and shortly after was sent on his first mission to Maine and other States of the East. He was ordained a Seventy in 1907 and an Apostle in 1913, and has labored in the Eastern States, Ohio, Nebraska, Montana, Canada, the Pacific Slope, and Arizona.

Before being called to the ministry he served in the Spanish-American war, going with the 51st Iowa to the Philippines. While on the way he Iowa to the Philippines. taught his first Sunday school class in Honolulu, indicating his disposition to serve the Lord even while engaged in military service.

Elder Kelley is unasuming, yet active in his work, his whole soul being concecrated to the service of God and his fellow men.

Hope proves man deathless. It is the struggle of the soul, breaking loose from what is perishable, and attesting her eternity.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

Rabbi Solomon, a converted Jew, addressed the Sun-day school last Sunday morning, telling of his work in trying to reach the Jewish children with the story of Christ. He seemed very earnest in his acceptance of Christianity and desired to convert others of his people, saying that the best opportunity was in reaching the children. He asked for help with which to purchase New Testaments for distribution among the Jewish children.

An unusual feature of Sunday school was the formal entrance of the Independence Patrol of Boy Scouts with Bro. W. O. Hands as scout-muster. The scouts of Kansas City and vicinity have acquired permanent grounds for encampment and other purposes near Leeds which were formally opened on last Saturday. Since the Independence Patrol leads in the number of membership, it was given first place in the opening ceremonics, the boys having marched to the grounds about nine miles, and were expected to remain until Sunday evening. Their loyalty pected to remain until Sunday evening. Their loyalty to the Sunday school however led them to start early on Sunday morning upon the return march reaching the school just after the opening exercises when they marched in on parade.

Elder Joseph Luff was the morning speaker and dealt with some of the vital questions which should concern all saints. The relative values of earthly things were shown, and the common question of business men—"Will was applied to other things of life than those connected with the search for wealth. The effort was one to lead each hearer to a searching investigation of his standing before God.

Brn. Parsons, Harrington, and Haas were in charge of the afternoon prayer service which was a time of refresh-ing to the saints. The evening speaker was Elder Alva H. Chrestensen who with his wife is about to start upon his mission to the Society Islands in the South Pacific Ocean.

Butterworth, whose home is in Australia will labor in this country this year while Bro. G. T. Griffiths takes his place in the island continent.

Monday evening a mass meeting was held at the Christian Church to consider the advisibility of making Christian Church to consider the advisionity of making an effort to secure local option this year. A committee was provided for to investigate the matter and report to a subsequent meeting next Monday night. Among the speakers who spoke in favor of the effort were Pres. F. M. Smith, W. H. Falcon, Colo., March 20.

Paleon, Colo., March 20.

Dear Ensign:—On February 24 I commenced a debate with H. A. Jenkins, Seventh Day Adventist, near Holyoke, Colo., and continued ten evenings, two housession each evening. General church propositions were discussed. His church proposition came up for consideration first and he started out on the Sabbath hobby and seemed to hold on to it and nothing else. I kept calling for him to set up his church until finally his moderator and some more of his, friends went to him and told him if he had a church to set it up and if he did not have had better mit. So the fourth evening he did say he had better quit. So the fourth evening he did say that they believed in having elders, presidents, and vice presidents, and that they believed that a person should be haptized but it was not essential unto salvation. Of course we were thankful for small favors and had to be contented therewith.

I had the early writings of Mrs. E. G. White and used them to good advantage. He tried hard to defend her writings and said: "If the Advantists had not proclaimed the second coming of Christ in 1843 and 1844 that even the rocks and the trees would have cried out." But we could not help remarking how quiet the rocks and trees had been since the 1844 disappointment.

The first night of the debate he tried to kill the force of my statement by asying Amer vary loud when I of my statements by saying Amen very loud when I would hit him the hardest. I endured it for a time, but it soon got tiresome, so I told the people of an incident that took place in Colorado Springs. I attended a revival meeting held in the Methodist church there some few meeting held in the Methodist church there some few years ago, and at the close of the service they had a testimony meeting, during which the evangelist told the people "That if any one got up to testify and said something that hit them real hard, just holler 'Amen' and then the rest would think it was not hitting them." This had the desired effect and the Amens very noticeably ceased; however, once in a while he would seemingly forget and say "Amen!" As soon as he would do so, some one or more in the audience would call out: "He hit him again!"

He made the statement that he had fixed a loophole for e and that I was a willing subject and had run my head right in the loop. So he went to the blackboard and wrote down, "Loophole No. 1," but when I showed the weakness of his argument and position, I turned to his statement on the board and said: "There goes his loop, and all he has left is the hole." This caused quite a laugh and all during the debate Mr. Jenkins never found Leophel. We Loophole No. 2.

Loophole No. 2.

Mr. Jenkims tried hard to show that the Book of Mormon contradicted the Bible. He objected to the night being so light when Jesus was born and to the three days of darkness at the crucifixion. He intentionally left out the reading about the "vapor of darkness" and the "mist of darkness." He was using the Utah edition of the Book of Mormon and said those statements were not in his best. Level these believes these book. I asked to see his book and when I showed that they were word for word the same and that he had told a falsehood, it killed his influence with the audience from that time on. I used Exodus 10:21-23, but he could be-lieve that because it was in the Bible. He stumbled over Moroni's rent coat and got his foot in the rent.

Moron's rent coat and got his root in the rent.

He objected to Afostles because there were going to be some false ones, 2 Cor. 11:13. I showed where there were to be false Christs and false prophets therefore they would have to reject them also.

He did not believe in speaking in tongues now and challenged me to do so; said they learn the different languages in colleges now a days. He said that the Sabbath was changed from Saturday to Sunday by the Pope in 364 A. D., but we showed his big mistake in this by a number of ancient writers also a foot note to Acts 20:7 in the Catholic Bible as well as from other Catholic authority. thority.

At the close of the debate we had the people nearly all on our side and he felt his defeat badly and told the audience just what he thought of them. I never heard a public speaker call down his adulence in such a manner (and the house was full). It certainly was a climax to his defeat.

We baptized six at the close as a result of the debate. His moderator's wife and the school teacher who was In smolerator's wife and the school teacher who was teaching at that place came up and asked for baptism at the close of the debate before I could get out of the stand. Dear Ensign:—I seldom trouble your pages with my thoughts, as there are those whose letters are so much more interesting and newsy, that I am willing they should have the benefit of the space in your valuable paper. However, since enjoying the many blessings of the out-pouring of God's Spirit since coming to this place last June, which I feel is in answer to prayers offered up to June, which I feel is in answer to prayers offered up to my heavenly Father, especially during the five years spent in isolation, except occasionally when the little band of faithful, big hearted saints would get together during my stay in and near Winfield, Kansas.

Yet I feel repaid for my stay in the beautiful land of sunflowers, coyotes and jack rabbits. For while there, we provided a home for the missionaries who oc-casionally were with us and administered the word of life to the honest hearted souls who were willing to come life to the honest hearted souls who were willing to come and hear.

Their efforts together with ours and others of the saints, awakened an interest, which has been renewed by the missionary force of that field since we moved away, and some have obeyed the truth. We hope to hear of oth in the near future, ere this conference year passes by.

Since locating in Independence, there has been a new branch organized, known as the Walnut Park Branch, branch organized, known as the Walnut Park Branch, which is located in the south-east part of the city. A beautiful portion of the city indeed.

As a branch, we are still in our infancy, yet we have the Divine assurance that if faithful, our numbers shall be greatly increased, the work prosper, and the Spirit of the Lord will move upon the people, and many will come to our assistance and help to climb up and estblish the work more permanently. We are noting a gradual fulfillment of this promise. At present we have I believe, something like seventy members.

As the shepherd of this little flock, my heart has recently been made sad, having to give up one of my little

Lambs, an exceedingly bright little darling, eight years of age. This being the first visit of the death angel to our family of seventy. The second call came in quick succession, this time claiming a bright business young man of twenty-seven summers, Bro. Orville Mosier. Bro. man of twenty-seven summers, Bro, Orville Mesier. Bro, Orville was baptized the 24th day of last January. At the time of his conversion he owned a barber shop in Kansas City, Mo., but owing to broken health, was compelled to leave it some wecks before he was baptized. He continued to grow weaker physically, but stronger Spiritually until released by death. His wife, Sr. Ethel, was baptized two days previous to that of her husband. During the confirmation of Bro. Mosier, while our hands were upon his head a beautiful vision was shown to Bro. During the confirmation of Bro. Mosier, while our hands were upon his head, a beautiful vision was shown to Bro. George Jenkins who assisted in the confirmation. Bro. Mosier was seen standing upon a solid rock, surrounded by a large body of water. The waves were seen dashing well nigh up to his feet, and fear was had upon the part of Bro. Jenkins, lest he should be carried off the rock and drowned. When suddenly by the side of Bro. Mosier stood two angels, while on the opposite side and a little above his head stood other angels. The assurance was riven Bro. Jenkins that if the waves should dash a little above his nead stood other angels. The assurance was given Bro, Jenkins that if the waves should dash sufficiently high so as to reach this brother, no ill should befall him, as the angels were there to bear him away. Our prayer to God is, that as death makes the inroad into our little branch, that upon each occasion, there may be found among the lambs the purity and angel innocense of the one of eight, and the true devotion, also the willing-ness to go, as the one of twenty-seven, when he for the last time kissed his devoted companion, then closed his eyes as one in peaceful sleep and breathed no more.

May the Spirit of God comfort all who mourn, encourage those who are discouraged, and strengthen the weak, lift un the fallen, enable us as brthers and sisters to have charity one for another, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

In gospel bonds,

Editor Ensign:—I am pleased to write a few lines to your paper, that you may know that there are still some of God's people here in this city, although we are few in number we feel that God recognizes us also.

May 6th was held our regular annual business meeting and officers were elected as follows: Bro. Charles Lundeen, President; Bro. Edward H. Bennett, Priest; Brethren Atkinson. J. R. Lloyd, R. J. Wildy and Hawks, Teachers; Bro. Charles Johnson, Deacon; Sisters J. R. Lloyd and Muriel Bennett, Organists; Sister Johnson, Chorister.

A year ago the Branch was unfortunate enough not to have a teacher, but the Lord has supplied us this year by giving us four faithful and ambitious men to occupy in that office. Some of them have had experience larger branches of the church and their will undoubtedly be effectual.

will undoubtedly be effectual.

We desire to advance the work here, and want to better our standing as a branch. The Saints enjoy their little church here which has been purchased by sacrifice, and take great comfort that God has recognized the sacrifice. and told us through one of his worthy servants.

We have a nice Religio which promises to advance in the near future. We have some splendid talent among its members and we also feel encouraged in our Sunday school, with our able Bro. R. J. Wildy as Superintendent.

Our recent business meeting was an entire success as ir as the right feeling was expressed by all, God's Spirit being present, causing happiness and peace to rule.

As our little band here goes on in the conflict we ask to be remembered by the Saints of other branches when they petition the heavenly Father for aid and strength.

Your brother in the gospel,

ENCOURAGING!

During General Conference the Independence Stake Quorum of elders invited Sr. B. C. Smith, then our president, to meet with them at one quorum session,—that they might become better acquainted with the work and aims of the Womsan's Auxiliary. They met jointly with the visiting elders.

Sr. Smith was accompanied by several of our officers and read a paper before the assembly. The Relation of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Elder." Great interest was shown and many questions asked and answered. The theme of their consultation being how to work together, and to obtain a spirit of co-operation and a knowledge of the work. This paper will appear in the Herald in the Home Column.

We have, as an organization, long hoped and prayed for the interest and co-operation of the eldership, because of the broad field of opportunity open before them continuously, to spread interest and knowledge of Woman's Work for the church (i. e. in the home!); hence we rejoice at this expression of increasing good will and interest.

AN ADVANCE STEP.

The school year is almost ended. It has been an unusually interesting one to Independence, in that the Parent-Teachers' Association has found favor in the hearts of school patrons and teachers; so that in each school we now have one of these organizations. The time has been short for the accomplishment of great things; but the fact that children do benefit from the earnest co-operation of parents with teachers has been demonstrated to our great satisfaction.

We are pleased to present the following article from the principal of the Columbian School, without whose willing co-operation, things might not have gone so well. This should have appeared in April, but the necessity of using Ensign space for Conference and Auxiliary matters crowded out some of our other work. This association was first organized in Independence in the Columbian School, with Sr. A. L. Yingling as president. She has just been re-elected to serve mother vear.

Look up the work of this Association. an important step in behalf of "Child Welfare."

PURPOSE OF THE PARENT-TEACHER'S

PURPOSE OF THE PARENT-FEACHER'S ASSOCIATION.
From the Teacher's Viewpoint.
A great deal of the personal friction of life is due to misunderstanding, either of attitude or motive. A close personal acquaintance is the surest guarantee againts the misjudging of the motives of teachers by parents, and of parents by teachers. Insofar as the association brings about acquaintance, it makes for the elimination of friction between the home and the school. In general, also, teachers have given more time and study to the theoretical problems of character building, which, of course, includes intellectual acquirements; par-which, of course, includes intellectual acquirements; par-ents, to the practical direction of child life, with a large tinging of materialism. I mean by that, that the very strenuousness of the struggle for material comfort, or even of physical existence, will lead the parent almost universally to subject any thing done in the school to the test question—"Will it help my child to make a living?" while the test most teachers will apply, will be, "Does it broaden the outlook, make for a bigger, happier or more useful life?" Both teachers and parents need the benefits of both these tests. I know of no means better calculated to redeem the school from the realm of mere theory, and at the same time preserve it from the slough of unidealistic materialism—industrialism, than the Parent-Teachers' Association.

the Parent-Teachers' Association.

Again, there are problems that arise in the school that are not met with in the home, due in some cases to the large numbers; for example, the necessity of system, the uniform treatment of varying intellects and temperaments, resulting at times in the retarding those of keen intellect and good habits and the bringing of too great a pressure on those of slower growth.

Even the same treatment for the same offense, so essential to a child's sense of justice, may be a real harshsentian to a chind's sense of spaces, may be a real marsi-ness to one of sensitive temperament, and entirely inade-quate to one of more study and experience. Parents can know these problems best by meeting the teachers and discussing their problems with them. There is always need of symipathy and understanding between the home and school, and at times, of active cooperation, as in the movement to beautify vacant lots, and to raise home gardens. The association not only forms an excellent medium for explaining the desires and needs, but furnishes leaders to carry forward the propa-ganda for good. Lastly, the thought and attention given by parents and teachers either in preparing papers, or discussion, results in broadening the view, stimulating interest, and determining public opinion in favor of broad-er, better, saner education, and a more liberal support

PRESIDENT'S REPORT TO GENERAL CONVENTION. Woman's Auxiliary in Convention Assembled, Greeting:

My Dear Sisters:-In reviewing the work of the past My Dear Sisters:—In reviewing the work of the past year, and looking over its present conditions, I must conclude that it is advancing. The demands are becoming greater, so that I feel like taking the admonition of the Savior to the Seventy when he sent them forth to labor. He told them to "Pray to the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the field, for the harvest is great and the laborers are few."

Thus the exceptibilities for this work are great, and the Truly, the opportunities for this work are great, and the demand for it is great also. There opens up before us in this work, unlimited opportunity for service in the Lord's vineyard. So I ask you all to pray that the Lord

Lord's vineyard. So I ask you all to pray that the Lord may raise up among us those who are qualified and willing to lay hold of these opportunities and use them to the honor and glory of God.

Much of the material that has been embodied in my report heretofore will be in the reports of other officers this year so my report will be grief.

I have tried to keep the work of the society moving as best I could by correspondence, sending out literature, and visiting in a few instances. More visiting might have been producive of good had I been able to do it; for it seems that there are many places where there are sisters desiring to engage in work of this kind but they sisters desiring to engage in work of this kind but they sisters desiring to engage in work of this kind but they have not confidence enough in themselves to take hold of it, or are uncertain as to what is best to take up, and only need some one to give them a start. We have sent out a great deal of literature the past year to the reunions. I think nearly every reunion received some. But we think this work would be productive of more good if we had a little different kind or class of literature to send out with the reading leaflets. It should be of a standard character explanatory of the work in its departments, and there should be a plentfull supply in its departments, and there should be a plentiful supply

This bring us to the all important matter of finance This bring us to the all important matter of finance again, and we cannot let this opportunity pass without urging the locals to do what they can along this line, that the work may not be hindered. We want the sisters in remote places to become interested in this Auxiliary, but it will cost something to acquaint them them with it. I did not realize so much that there were those who had no knowledge of this work until the other day, a sister said to me, "Well what is this Auxiliary any way?" She had been living in one of the far off places, and had not become acquainted with it I preany way?" She had been fiving in one of the far on places, and had not become acquainted with it. I presume there are many others similarly situated.

We have been reminded this year that this society should make some effort to preserve its origin and history. It would be well to do this while those who were its originators are still with us.

The work of the editors of our departments in the church papers has been very satisfactory this year. We had bond haven that the guestiqued to the diff.

had hoped, however, that the superintendents of the different departments would have contributed more largely to these columns. We have been particularly pleased with the readings that have been prepared for the Home and Child Welfare Department. In the Montesori papers we have been given the basic principles of child training. Two numbers yet to appear will conclude this series.

It is pleasing to note how the superintendents are taking hold of their work, and we are trusting to the future for the good that may come through the development of women's work by the effort of these de-

WHAT IS THE JUDGMENT? By Elder J. A. Koehler.

Is it arbitrary? Or is it a natural process under which we automatically reap the fruits of life's doings? Does it require the interference of some personage to make us suffer for evil and have pleasure for good?

"If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged." Many pass through the experiences of life without entering into their own bosoms to examine themselves as they ought. The history of the race shows this ever to have been so. Men do not judge thmselves as they ought. There seems to be a disposition to try to escape the consequences of a self examination. We think, perhaps, that we shall be able to force the prickings of conscience into such complete obscurity as to cause them to forever remain silent. But we are advised that for "The Lord will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the heart." "God will bring every work into judgment." Just how God will do this remains to be seen. God gives us our daily bread through the regular processes of nature, and we may discover that he will also pass judgment upon us through the regular processes of nature. At any rate "The counsels of the heart will be made manifest;" that means every man will sometime see himself as he is.

Every experience leaves a record somewhere. It may be in the brain; it may be in the nervous system; it may be in the mind (whatever that is); but somewhere, somehow, the things we experience leave their record with us. events of early life which have been long forgotten are, without any apparent effort, revived in memory. Psychologically speaking, things which had fallen into the area of subconsciousness have arisen into consciousness. It is surprising what a train of events is sometimes revived in memory by a simple reference to some circumstance that may not even be related to it, but which may only bear a resemblance to some contiguous event.

In the light of what we know about consciousness we can easily see how it will come to pass that "We shall have a perfect knowledge of all our guilt, and uncleanliness***" (2 Nephi 6:34.) We may pass through this life with no thought of justice, excusing ourselves for the things that should condemn us, but when the time comes that conscience compels a hearing we must attend. We may not bother about the matter now, but the word says "we shall" have some bother about it later.

But Why Wait for a Future Judgment.

It is much easier to pay our bills as they come due than to let them pile up so that we must meet them in a lump. "If we would judge ourselves," we should not be judged. We may carry the scar of some accident all our days, but we need not feel the pains always that we once felt as a result of the accident. When nature has been given a chance to repair the damage we are relieved of the pain. Similarly we need not always feel the distress of mind consequent upon some evil deed; we may pay the debt and be relieved of the distress. But it is useless to cover up the deed in an effort to escape the penalty attaching thereto. A thorn in the flesh is not gotten rid of through covering it up; it must be separated from the body, and healing agencies applied according to the nature of the case. Conscious sin is like a thorn in the flesh; it may be covered up, i. e. forced into the area of subconsciousness, but the act of covering up does not relieve one from ultimately paying the price that nature demands as a final relief measure; nature demands that the thing be expelled from the body, and the wound healed, before she will stop reminding us of the experience. Poison taken into the system must be expelled by some sort of reaction, and the pain is usually the concomitant of abnormal physical reaction, so distress of mind seems to be the concomitant of the kind of reaction that takes place in the mind looking to the elimination of the record of the evil act. normal man must have sorrow when he views his misconduct; "Godly sorrow worketh repentence," and nature seems to demand "judgment" and "repentance" as a final relief measure from future pains growing out of misconduct: "Repent ye, and become converted, that your sins may be blotted out." Let judgment take place now.

The Basis of Judgment.

All men have an intuitive sense of right. A child, who with much care and labor builds a house out of his blocks, becomes indignant at having his house maliciously knocked down. We do not need to tell him that it is wrong, he knows it intuitively. It is these councils of the heart that will in a large measure form the basis of the judgment that will finally be passed upon our conduct.

We hear someone speak evil of some close friend; or someone takes an unfair advantage over us; we resent the act instinctively. resent it because our sense of the fitness of things tells us that sort of conduct is not right. But what if (forgetting our standards for judging others) we speak ill of someone unnecesssarily? Or what if we take an unfair advantage of someone? Does our failure to feel indignant at our own act change the fact that in our inner- consciousness (subconsciousness) there is something that says such acts are wrong? Do we not occasionally "wake up" to the fact that we have been doing repeatedly the thing we have often condemned in another? And do we not have a sense of guilt, of self-condemnation, under such circumstances? Imagine a time when all our acts will press themselves upon our attention in the light in which we have judged others, in the light of our inner sense of the fitness of things, and we may get a prevision of the final judg-ment; "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged." My sense of right and wrong will be my condemnation for the things I have condemned in others. We cannot escape a judgment on this basis; and the sensible thing to do, it seems to me, is to try to view our own acts now in the light in which we view other's acts; try to make the same kind of adjustment in our own livés that we think others ought to make in their lives when we are doing our best thinking. Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whose ever thou art that judgest; for when thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou doest the same things." Rom. 2:1,

Inability and Responsibility.

It may be that conscience no longer condemns what it ought to condemn, and approves what it ought not approve. It may be that we have lost the power to measure right and wrong as we ought. It may be that we have not interested ourselves enough to determine what we ought to do and what we ought not to do; we may have been intellectually lazy and therefore morally delinquent. But will that excuse us?

If I fill my system or mind with narcotics so that I lose my powers of discrimination and judgment, whose fault is it? My loss is the natural fruit, the penalty, of my own misconduct. And the very acts which make for the loss of ability to judge are themselves the things which merit condemnation. I may tie my arm at my side so that I am not able to use it when occasion requires; but I need not tie my arm. Having tied it, all I need to do in order to gain my former liberty is to untie it. Similarly we are under no necessity of doing the things which lead to "blindness of heart;" and all that nature demands as a means of restoring to us our former ability to judge is to undo the thing we have We may do it if we will. But if we are not willing to suffer the labor and pains of extricating ourselves from a situation into which our carelessness or laziness has gotten us we must remain in our bonds. "Verily, thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing." Nature demands it; we must pay it. The judgment then is under which "wrong doing automatically recoils upon the wrong doer," and right doing automatically confers its beneficient effects. Nature is the agency that enforces the dictum: "Whatsover a man soweth, that shall he also reap." "A guilty conscience needs no accuser" expresses the concept of the race of the manner in which nature inflicts her penalties. When the brothers of Joseph had occasion to refer to their family relations (Gen. 42:11-21) many years after they had sold Joseph into Egypt, the circumstances of their offense were refreshed in memory, but this time under circumstances that brought remorse of conscience: "We were verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us." Now these men were in a situation where Joseph had been years before; now they were pleading for mercy; now conscience had a chance to speak; now was the time of judgment. Every exposure of self to self brought remorse of conscience; wrong doing was automatically recoiling upon the wrong doer. What else could take place?

We see then that judgment takes place when we are brought face to face with our own acts under conditions where our faculties are permitted to express themselves. We see what guilt we feel when we are brought face to face with those we have wronged. Is not one knowing look from an offended mother enough to distress the soul of the offending child? How much more then will there be anguish of soul and distress of spirit when those who have postponed judgment are brought face to face with "Him who sitteth upon the throne?" "The kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men,**** hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks; and said to the mountains and rocks: Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne." This might all be avoided if we would judge ourselys; but "If our hearts have been hardened, yea, if we have hardened our hearts against the word, insomuch that it has not been found in us, then will our state be awful, for then shall we be condemned. . . . Our thoughts also will condemn us; and in this awful state we shall not dare look upon God." Alma 9:22.

Doubtless most of us agree with Aristotle that "We are indignant beyond measure at being deprived of that which belongs to one's self in a peculiar maner." How then shall we feel when the circumstances of our having deprived others of the things that belonged to them in a peculiar manner stand out before us is bold relief? If we have discredited other's work in a way to deprive them of the confidence and respect to which they are entitled; or if the character of our buisness methods have been such as a careful inventory of our concept of right and wrong would condemn, how shall we feel when nature forces these things upon our attention in the judgment? Judgment on many things may be postponed, but it shall never be defeated.

King David was like thousands who pass through the experiences of life without entering into their own bosoms to examine themselves as they ought. His covetousness blinded his eyes temporarily to the real character of his own acts. When Nathan told him the story of his life as if the events were the experiences of another, David's anger was greatly kindled and his sense of the fitness of things declared itself in this language: "The man that hath done this thing, shall surely die." But it was another story when Nathan said: "Thou art the man." Then was David brought face to face with himself, and his anger toward the man who hath done this was turned to remorse of conscience and anguish of soul. Wrong doing again automatically recoiled upon the wrong door.

Eternal Judgment is God's Judgment.

It is an extension of God. His nature is expressed in it. All that we know about the Creator tells us that he works by law. When he made man he understood all about his nature, and how the laws of the universe would act upon him. He made man in his likeness—a free agent; capable of discrimination, and therefore responsible; responsible to God who works by law, and therefore subject to law. Since law automatically produces its effects, "wrong going automatically recoils upon the wrong doer."

Nature and God do not exact the impossible they insist upon what is just and right. What we may know we are expected to know; and if mental laziness has its fruitage in moral delinquency, and moral delinquency has its consequent pains, then mental laziness must suffer the pains consequent thereupon. The normal soul will "hunger and thirst after righteousness" and "shall be filled." If we are normal we will seek to be in accord with God and nature, and instead of incurring the pains of a judgment we will lay up for ourselves treasures which we may fully enjoy with the peace of God.

The words of Longfellow are appropriate in this connection: "It would seem, indeed, that He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, tempers also His chastisements to the errors and infirmities of the weak and sinful mind—while the transgressions of him upon whose nature are more strongly marked the attributes of the Deity, are followed, even upon earth, by severe tokens of divine displeasure."

"He who sins in the darkness of a benighted intellect sees not so clearly, through the shadows that surround him, the countenance of an offended God; but he who sins in the broad noon-day of a clear and radient mind, when at length the delirium of sensual passion has subsided and the cloud flits away from before the sun (his own conscience—mind), trembles beneath the searching eye of that accusing power which is strong in the strength of a godlike intellect. Thus the mind and the heart are closely linked together, and the errors of genius bear with them their own chastisements, even upon earth."

RULING THE SPIRIT.

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that ruleth a city." Prov. 16:32. It is more difficult for some people to govern themselves than to govern a kingdom. Besieging and capturing a city is not so great an achievement as it is to maintain absolute control of our hearts. In the passage quoted, "spirit" means the "inner man." Here the passions and appetites war against high aims and a noble standard, so that a certain writer said, "The heart is the greatest of battle fields." He that ruleth it, so that piece and order reign there, is greater than a military conqueror.

Many persons fail of success because they do not control their tempers. Others fail because of bad habits. Others still because they indulge a passion for some vice, and others because they pet an evil disposition. They do not rule their spirits. They lack self control. "The flesh warreth against the spirit," and they yield the victory to it. These facts show that control of one; self is of the highest importance in life's work.

Sir Isaac Newton had a beautiful dog, named Diamond, that spent much time in his master's study. The philosopher had been working for two years upon scientific calculations and the results of his arduous labors lay upon his desk in a pile of papers. In his brief absence from the room one evening, Diamond upset the lamp and all the papers were consumed. Did the philosopher give the dog a beating or kick him out of the house? No. He took him up in his arms affectionately and said, "O Diamond, you cannot understand the extent of the mischief you have done." Then he went to work with all his heart, and in two years of close study repaired the damage. The value of such self control is far above rubies.

Louisa M. Alcott, the authoress, of Concord, Mass., has beautifully portrayed this subject in her following poem:

MY KINGDOM.

A little kingdom I possess Where thoughts and feelings dwell, And very hard the task I find Of governing it well; For passion tempts and troubles me, A wayward will misleade

A wayward will misleads,
And selfishness its shadow casts
On all my works and deeds,

How can I learn to use myself,
To be the child I should,
Honest and brave, and never tire
Of trying to be good?
How can I keep a sunny soul
To shine along life's way?
How can I tune my little heart
To sweetly sing all day?

Dear Father, keep me with the love.
That casteth out my fear;
Teach me to lean on thee, and feel
That thou art very near;
That no temptation is unseen,
No childish grief too small,
Since thou, with patience inhinte,
Doth soothe and comfort spll.

I do not ask for any crown,
But that which all may win;
Nor try to conquer any world,
Except the one within.
Be thou my guide until I find,
Led by a tender hand,
The happy kingdom in myself,
And dare to take command.

QUESTIONS ON BAPTISM.

For what purpose did John baptize in the wilderness?

If baptism is not necessary, why did Jesus request to be baptized?

If it was necessary for Jesus, the just One, to be baptized, is it not necessary for you and I? If sprinkling is the proper mode of baptism why did John baptize in Jordan, and why did Jesus go down into the water to be baptized?

Why did Peter tell those who asked what they should do to be saved, to "Repent and be baptized"?

Why did Jesus say, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," if baptism is not a saving ordinance?

Why was it that "all the people were baptized," and "Jesus also being baptized," as mentioned in Luke 3:21, if it was not an ordinance generally observed?

After Philip had preached to the Samaritans (Acts 8:12) they were baptized, both men and women. Why were they baptized if not required by Philip as part of the divine plan?

If baptism was not necessary why did Paul demand that certain disciples at Ephesus who had been baptized (supposedly) with John's baptism, be baptized in the "name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 19:1-5)?

Why did the Eunuch to whom Philip had been expounding the scripture, ask "What doth hinder me from being" haptized?" and why did Philip baptize him unless it was a part of the plan of salvation he had been teaching the Eunuch?

Why, immediately after Saul received his sight did he arise and receive baptism unless Ananias required it of him. (Acts 9:18)?

Why were Lydia and all her household baptized by Paul unless it was necessary for them to comply with the same ordinance of baptism required of him by Ananias?

After the jailer at Philipi was converted why did Paul and Silas baptize and his household, or "he and all his," unless it was a part of the gospel plan?

In Galations 3:27 Paul says: "For as any of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Do we not gain from this the inference that those who have not been baptized have not put on Christ?

In 1 Cor. 12:13 Paul says: "we are all baptized into one body." Are we all in the "one body" if we have not been baptized?

Why did Peter say, as recorded in 1 Peter 3:21, "Baptism doth also now save us," if he did not understand it to be a saving ordinance?

Christ told John it was necessary for him to be baptized to "fulfill all righteousness." If it was necessary for him to be baptized to fulfill all righteousness, would we be justified in not complying with the same ordinance, after he had condescended to set us the example?

In Luke 7:29, 30, we read that "the publicans justified God, being baptized," and that the Pharisees rejected the counsel of God by refusing to be baptized. Can we afford to be like the Pharism to the country of the Pharism of the sees in "rejecting the counsel of God"?

If baptism is "the counsel of God," can we afford to take any other counsel differing from it?

RECEIVING A REVELATION.

While the Church believes that the Prophetic office is a permanent one in the Church and that the head of the Church is the proper one to speak to and for the whole Church, it is not to be understood that whatever the President or Prophet of the Church may present in the way of divine revelation is to be accepted without consideration or question. Though the principle of theocracy obtains in the Church, the Church is nevertheless highly democratic, and the voice of the people is the final arbiter of all things.

This does not mean that the people always decide aright, but that in deciding according to the will of God they follow the paths that lead to light and peace, and when deciding otherwise they fall into error and sin, reaping the consequences of their own mistakes. This was true in the time of ancient Israel when God through His prophet told them that they should not have a king to rule over them but that He would be their King. But they insisted upon having their own way until their demand developed the final decision and the Lord permitted them to have a king. National disaster followed.

The fundamental law of the Church provides that "all things shall be done by common consent in the Church, by much prayer and faith; for all things you shall receive by faith." In harmony with this law no man is ordained without the voice of the people approving, no man is placed in position of trust over the people without their consent, and most of the important acts of the officers and councils are not binding upon the Church until endorsed by vote of the Church. No man can be expelled from the Church without the approving vote of the people.

In like manner a document presented by the head of the Church purporting to be a revelation from God for the instruction and guidance of the Church does not become binding upon the Church until approved by the vote of the body in Conference assembled. The procedure has been that such a document is first presented to the several quorums of officers and by them examined and if satisfactory, approved. If it is approved by the quorums it is then presented to the General Conference as a whole and voted upon as to whether it is to be received for what it purports to be and to be binding upon the Church. When thus received it is incorporated into the law of the Church, or if it contains no point of law, the instruction given is received as being helpful in the accomplishment of the work entrusted to men by the divine hand.

In this way the injunction of the Apostle Paul to "Let all things be done * * * in order," is observed, the rights of the people are preserved, the Prophet is respected in his office, and God is honored. So far the Church has had no occasion to reject any document presented by its head, and such as have been received have proven and are proving the wisdom contained in them and their divinity.

Ex-President Taft Urges an International Supreme Court

In his recent lecture in New York on "The Federation Trend in International Affairs," former President Taft spoke of the advantages of an international Supreme Court, a court whose decisions would be upheld in all parts of the civilized world.

"Undoubtedly when such a court is established, and a series of judgments have been delivered," he added, "these will constitute great and valuable additions to international law. The newness of the controversies will invite applications of recognized principles to new facts and the variation that new applications will involve will widen the law and the court will be an authorative source for its growth and development. It will be judge made law, but the Judges will not be legislators and the growth of the law will be as the common law has grown, adapting itself to new conditions and expanding on principles of morality and general equity.

"It is, therefore, federation to the extent that a permanent international court offers the solution of the problem of how to escape war, how to induce nations to give up the burden of armaments, and how to broaden and make certain our system of international law.

"It will be natural that a court thus established and with the closer union that it will necessarily bring between the various powers, that the congresses shall be called at convenient periods in which by treaties an international code may be adopted to meet the defects in its accepted scope which the issues and judgments in the arbitral court may develop, and which the judicial discretion of such a tribunal may not supply.

"Such a court and such a code will greatly promote justice in the world and the peace of nations."

NO ADVANCE FOR DRINKERS.

Under this caption "The World," of this city, lately had a dispatch from Youngstown, O., saying that the Carnegie Company, located there, had just issued the following order:

"Hereafter all promotions of whatever character will be made only from the ranks of those who do not indulge in intoxicating drink. The heads of departments and their foremen will be expected to observe this rule in advancing their men."

This order, the dispatch said, bore the signatures of Thomas McDonald, general superintendent, and A. C. Dinkey, president, and would affect fully sixty-five percent of the men working in mills throughout the Youngstowne territory.

Youngstown went "wet" at the last election; and it is easy to understand why the above order has followed. It serves due and powerful notice upon drinkers of drink's effect upon them and their work. It is eloquent of the commercial benefitts that are lost where drink carries by popular choice.

Drink is everywhere the open enemy of labor. It is the constant curse of capital. When labor and capital combine against it the battle will not be long. The only capital that ever profits by it is that of the brewers and the distillers.

WILL SCIENCE DESTROY WAR?

The discovery of a process by Giulio Ulivi of Florence, Italy, by which mines and magazines containing explosives can be fired by the use of electric ultra-violet rays from a considerable distance, can hardly fail to either eliminate the use of explosives from warfare, especially upon the sea, or make war so dangerous that no nation will want to engage in it. Ulivi, from the top of a mountain ten miles distant exploded four mines sunk in the Arno River, and he asserts that with an improved aparatus upon which he is working he will be able to blow up any explosives within a radius of eighty miles.

With this invention perfected and in the hands of the governments no ship carrying explosives could come near a sea-port without the danger of being blown up. An unarmed vessel could blow up the greatest warship upon the ocean before the latter could fire a shot. Army magazines upon land might be destroyed by a balloon or aeroplane. It would seem that marine warfare at least under these conditions will have to be abandoned. Are not such inventions pushing the world to the point when "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."?

GLEANINGS FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.
Many M. Owens, Belville, III.—I could not get along without the Ensign. It is a welcome visitor bringing is into touch with others of the fold and giving us an exchange of thoughts and the news of those working for the Master.

Christina Tickel, Middletown, Ohio.-I was baptized Christina Tickel, Middletown, Ohio—I was baptized February 8, 1887, and have never regretted the step for when we know we have the truth what more do we want except fo live it. The many letters from the dear saints cheer and strengthen me. I give my papers to those who will read them, with the hope that the good seed may fall into good ground and bring forth fruit. May the Lord bless and strengthen us in the good way.

M. A. Simmons, Johnson City, Ill.—We are still striving for the faith once delivered to the saints and trying to let our light shine. I am thankful I made the start when I did for I have been trying to live a Christian start when I did for I have been trying to live a Christian life since I was fourteen. I had no mother to guide me but knew that God could guide me so I put my trust in him, and though I joined a church I was not satisfied and was left to still search for the straight and narrow path. Thank the Lord I have found it and I rejoice in the work that I am in. We have been healed, and in Jesus I always find relief in time of trial. It is a glorious thing to be a saint in latter days. I have been a member of the church for about twenty years, though I have heen is slatted most of the time. I have been isolated most of the time

Charlie Lehman, Hubbard, Iowa.-We enjoy reading the Charlie Lehman, Hubbard, Iowa.—We enjoy reading the Ensign very much' and especially the letters which come from the saints from different parts of the Lord's vine-yard. We are telling the grand truth to our neighbors whenever chance will permit. I think we as saints can all be co-workers with God by warning our friends and telling them of this glorious gospel. I am eighteen years old, and am a young man in the work and need your prayers.

Grove, Okla., May 14.

Ensign Greeting:—I am starting out on my ministerial work. I arrived at the Lamanite Branch, at Elder J.

D. Kelley's near Grove, Okla, finding them all well, and sound in the faith.

Together with Bro. Kelley, we held a nine day's meeting at the Buzzard School House, having good crowds with good interest. While here I baptized a fine young man by the name of Walter Bradley.

I find the saints here anxious for gospel service, given the saints here anxious for gospel service anxious

I mid the same are arxivous for gospet service, giving their assistance freely, and strong desires for better results in the future. While here I was made glad in the efforts of preaching the gospel to the people.

Closing our meeting on the thirteenth, together with Bro. Kelley, we are now going to Bro. Harris's near Wyandotte, Okla., to hold a series of meetings as long as interest will permit.

He made the statement that he had fixed a loopholet for gospel service.

Together we desire to build up the work and tell the angel message to the world.

We will continue our labor until district conference at Fairland, June 5th.

Dear Friends.—Please allow me through your paper to thank Sr. Lloyd of Kansas City Branch Number 2 for sending your paper to me for one year which will end about May 15. I have watched for its coming each week and have read it carefully as I promised her I would, and I thank her very much for it, and if the pleasure to her was ag great as it was to me to receive it—then it will be a pleasure that will not be forgotten.

Respectivity. Respectfully

PASTORALS.

To the Saints of the South Missouri District :-

I am still bishop's agent for this district, and would desire the co-operation of all the saints in the work. We have a few in the district that are paying tithes, and everal that have never had their names entered on the bishop's book.

The district is not self supporting. We have about 900 members in the district and are not able to pay the small sum to support two missionaries' families while they are sum to support two missionaries families while they are to the teach of ife, (which is the gospel we all love so well.) Dear saints as I cannot reach you in person, on account of the scattered condition, I wish to impress upon your minds, that only with your co-operation with me as an agent can this district be brought to the front, and made self supporting. Let us try and get our names on the bishop's book this year if it is only for a small amount. If we ever expect the church to come up to the mark that we are praying for, we will have to make the sacrifice the Lord has asked us to make. That is a tenth of what he has given us.

Yours in the one faith,
J. A. Davis.

To the Saints of Eastern Montana: Having been appointed by general conference to labor in Eastern Montana this year I take this means of askin Lastern Montana this year I take this means of ask-ing all the saints who wish preaching in their locality to address me at Fairview, Montana, and I will try to comply with your request. In my travels I oftimes find saints who would like to have the elders come, but they think their accomodation is not good enough. Now dear saints, don't let this stop you, for I can get along with your accomodations when I know I am doing the Master's will. We know this gospel must be preached in all the world for a witness, so the more we labor to this end the sooner will our Dear Lord be with us.
In gospel bonds,

R. Newby.

To the Saints and friends in Mission No.1. comprising To the Saints and Friends in Silssion No.1. comprising flows, Nebraska, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta, Greeting:

It has pleased the powers of appointing to return me to your mission for the conference year.

I am thankful to my heavenly Father for his power and love so wonderfully manifested throughout the mission during the year that is just passed.

There has doubtless been times in the experience of many, when discouragements have met us in the way and threatened our peace, but notwithstanding these experiences, it is indeed gratifying to know, that under these conditions when we have taken God unreservedly into our confidence the needed strength has been supplied and good has resulted therefrom. These assurances should comfort and cause us to know that God is with Israel, and his cause will ultimately triumph.

In harmony with conference appointments the following will be observed:

In Lamoni Stake J. R. Lambert of the Patriarchate will minister to the saints as far as his health will recent

REMEMBERING THE DAY.

Sarah B. Lawrence. If you sit down at set of sun And count the things that you have done, And counting, find

One self-denying act, one word
That eased the heart of him who heard,
One smile most kind
That fell like sunshine where it went, Then you may count that day well spent.

But if, through all the live-long day, You've eased no heart by yea or nay; If through it all

If through it all
You've nothing done that you can trace
That brought the sunshine to a face;
No act most small
That helped some soul and nothing cost-Then count that day as worse than lost.

THE GOSPEL OF SERVICE.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is a gospel of service. Christ as the chief Exponent of that gospel manifested its character by the life of service in which he sought the highest and permanent good of all men. The truth which he taught was for the healing of the soul by the elimination of sin and the assimilation of righteousness. The divine mercy and love flowing through his soul brought healing to the afflicted, hope to the hopeless, faith to the unbelieving, comfort to the mourner, life to the dead, and established the law of life in the place of "the law of sin and death." Nor did his service to humanity cease when he ascended to heaven for he still intercedes for men, and through the Holy Spirit his work is perpetuated upon earth.

His power for service was due to his righteous character because of which he had access to Godthe source of all power. This is shown by his statement: "And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him."

A Pure Fountain.

"Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter," asks James who proceeds to show its impossibility, and Jesus taught the same thought when he said: "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." That like produces like is a natural law having application in the spiritual realm as truly as in the realm of material things, and every man's activities among his fellows tend to produce results in them which are the counterpart of his own character. men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" It is impossible:

If then men wish to give active service for the good of their fellows, they must seek to possess the same qualities they want to develop in others, or as stated by Paul: "The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits." To do this he must have access to God, the fountain of all righteousness, and receive from him through faithful obedience to the laws of righteousness the fruits which he desires and see produced in the lives of others.

Getting Right With God.

The one essential thing to him who would truly serve his fellowman is to get right with God. Apart from God the soul can have no true motive for service, and no true conception of what the service should be. In the gospel "is the righteousness of God revealed," and by faith in its principles, and obedience to its ordinances is man brought into association with God through the Spirit, and he partakes of the divine nature. Without the ordinances man cannot have free access to God and his work must fall far short of his highest possibilities.

The Lord emphasized this truth when he said to Nicodemus: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God," conveying the thought that without the birth of "water and the Spirit;" man cannot discern the things cannot know the purposes of God and cannot labor in full harmony with him. says "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God;" he cannot know God. Getting right with God involves the casting off of all allegience to opposing powers, a turning from all sin, and through the divinely appointed ordinance establish a true sonship with God.

Service to Man.

With these qualifications a man will be a true follower of Jesus Christ, and will be in a condition to render full and acceptable service to his fellow men. A careful searching of the teachings of Jesus Christ will show the prominence given to this service. The merciful, the peacemakers, the patient under persecution, are the blessed of God, because these things work for good to his creatures. Men are urged to refrain from all things that work injury to their fellows, and to perform all things that work for their good.

Restrain Evil.

Smite not; speak no evil; return not evil for evil; hate not; are examples of gospel teaching against the things which bring forth a harvest of evil. Any disposition of will which if expressed in word or deed would do the least degree of injury to another, and thus tend to hinder or frustrate the purposes of God, is to be subdued and eliminated from our natures. Man's attitude toward his brothers must not be only passively good, but positive and active, for mere passiveness may be the cause of injury or loss to others when a word or deed would deliver them from . danger.

Do Good unto all Men.

The active doing of good is a necesssary rule of life. The principle of the part effecting the whole is stated by the Apostle Paul in regard to the Church: "Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." The principle applies to the whole world. To afflict or oppress any nation or people, or to lift them up, effects the wholde world corrospondingly, hence the war spirit which aims only at the crushing of another people is in conflict with the teachings of Christ and his gospel. The disposition in individuals and nations to do others good will work for the uplift of the world. The man who delights in war is far from God, just the same as the parent who takes delight in punishing his child. If either are ever necessary they should be performed with the sole purpose in view of bringing about untimate good to those dealt with. The field of opportunity for doing good is so great that all can find place therein. In the Church there are special opportunities which are offered for doing good through pro-visions divinely made. The Sanitarium and Children's Home, built by divine command—the command implying the necessity of supporting themthe Saint's Homes and the College built in harmony with the provisions of the law and which meet necessary demands in the Church, all offer opportunities for doing good to those who need help, and the doing of good to such tends to uplift the whole body. Beside these there are the numerous other opportunities of helping in the general and local work of the Church, of helping individuals in our immediate neighborhoods, and in our immediate families. All men in every condition of life should be the objects of our good

The Whole Law.

The matter of getting right with God and with man, and rendering the service that is due to each. embraces the whole gospel. Christ said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind**** Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Service for God and service for man should be man's greatest aim. Selfish ambition, desire for office, honor or fame, avarice, luxury, and other similar evils, destroy the power of service, and become the means of crushing others in conflict with gospel teaching. Humble service has always been honorable, but its honorableness was magnified in the eyes of men by the Son of God who walked and labored in the humblest walks of life and thereby reached the weakest and most oppressed of men. The greatest man is he who performs the greatest service for his fellows. The gospel is a gospel of service.

EX-SENATOR DUBOIS ON MORMONISM.

Ex-senator Fred T. Dubois of Idaho, has a lengthy article in the "Gem State Rural and Live Stock Journal" published at Caldwell, Idaho, entitled "The Case Against the Mormon Church," in which he severely arraigns the "Mormon Church" of Utah for its broken faith in perpetuating the practice of polygamy after having made solemn promises to the nation that it should be done away, and for its political interference in the affairs of state. A clear distinction is made between the "Mormon Church" and the Reorganized Church. Of the latter he says:

It is fair and just for me to say that there is a branch of the Mormons called the Josephites who ought to be separated clearly from the Brighamite Mormons. The Josephites claim that they are the custodians of the church Josephites claim that they are the custodians of the church as it was founded. They claim that Brigham Young interjected doctrines into the church which the Mormons did not accept in the beginning. However this may be, the Josephite Mormons with their headquarters at Lamoni, in the State of Iowa, and wherever they are, no matter in what part of the country, are among the best of our citizens in all respects. They do not believe in polygamy; they discountenance it. They do not believe in Church dictation in political affairs. They are the same as other Church organizations, and to their religion no one has any objection. any objection.

We appreciate this candid and fair statement from one who is so thoroughly familiar with socalled Mormonism in the West, and who knows of the persistency with which the elders of the Reorganized Church have kept up the fight against polygamy and other false doctrines, being the first missionaries to enter Utah in opposition to those teachings.

The Reorganized Church can only be considered a "branch of the Mormons" in the sense that it has an independent existence while holding a belief in the Book of Mormon as a divine record and in the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, and not because it is in any sense a division, or "split-off" of the "Mormon Church" in Utah. The contention of the Reorganized Church has been that the Church in Utah is the continuation of a body of members which left the original and true Church, discarded a large part of the original faith and doctrine, and adopted new doctrines and practices which were inimical to those had under the original leaders. This contention is supported by the decisions of the courts as may be seen in the following from a decision by Judge Sherman, in the Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, 1880.

That the Church in Utah, the Defendant of which John That the Church in Utah, the Defendant of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

A similar decision was rendered by Judoe Phil-

A similar decision was rendered by Judge Philips in the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western district of Missouri, Western Di-vision, in his famous "Temple Lot Case," in 1894. Both of these decisions held the Reorganized Church to be the legal continuation of the Original Church organized in 1830 and holding the same doctrine, organization and practice. Thus the Reorganized Church is not in any true sense a "Branch," but is in fact the original Church in perpetuity.

It has been twenty years since the saloons came back to Independence after four years of local option, and the conditions, to the minds of many right thinking citizens, justify and require another effort to eliminate the drink evil so far as relates to the open saloon, from the city. INDEPENDENCE SECOND BRANCH.

Early Sunday morning about thirty of the saints started to the county farm in Lafayette County, with the object of visiting the home and teaching the gospel to the inmates there. The effort was made on the suggestion of Bro. Foulks who has been employed there.

At 11 o'clock Bro. T. C. Kelley was the speaker,, who directed our attention to the fact that we are all called to be saints, a calling far more precious if we heed it, than any other.

The 2:30 afternoon prayer service was well attended considering the velocity of the wind, many taking an active part. In the evening Bro. C. A. Butterworth spoke from the text "I go to prepare a place for you."

Beginning Tuesday evening Bro. Butterworth will hold a series of meetings.

An arrangement has been made so that Sr. J. A. Gardner will instruct the young girls and young women of the branch along special lines, the first meeting was held Monday night.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

We were pleased to greet one of our new missionaries Bro. W. A. Smith, the morning of May 17. He gave a nice talk to the Sunday school, and at the 11 o'clock service he spoke from the text, "Examine yourselves and see whether ye be in the faith." His discourses had the true Latter Day Saint ring. We hope to see him again soon. He labored one week in Cheltenham and expresses a desire for good work to be accomplished in our district the coming year.

Bro. L. Joerndt of Landsdowne was the speaker the evening of May 17th, and his discourse was reported as having been fine.

Our Sunday school continues to have a good attendance and interest. The attendance May 24th, was 130. Our superintendent and wife Bro. and Sr. Rob. Lloyd are rejoicing in the arrival of a sweet little daughter which t to them May 23rd. May it be a great blessing to their home.

An excellent sermon was reported to have been livered by Bro. Archibald the morning of May 24th, his subject being one ever interesting to the saints. The gifts of the Spirit. Bro. Archibald and family have moved nearer to the city, now being located in Maplewood, Mo., and we hope to have him with the St. Louis Branch oftener. We were pleased to hear that Sr. Archibald was in attendance at the morning services Sunday.

Bro. Geo. Reeves gave one of his good talks the evening of May 24th.

We regret very much indeed to hear of the serious illness of Bro. Gordon Shaw. We pray the blessing he so much needs will be granted him. All who are interested in him, remember him in your prayers.

We were pleased to hear of Bro. Roy Remington who met with a serious accident, having been wonderfully blessed through administration.

Editor Ensign:—The Panama-Pacific International Ex-position will open its portals to the world ten months from today. From February 20, 1915 to December 4, from today. 1915. In the roll call of the centuries the year 1915 will loom with epochal greatness, for from winter to winter, there will be held in San Francisco a magnificent celebration of the most wonderful achievement of man. The Exposition will celebrate the completion of the Panama canal, man's most audacious correction of na-ture's work and his greatest triumph over unfriendly forces. The celebration will be worthy of the event it commemorates, and both go down in history as a world's gift to the nations from their youthful, stalwart brother in peace, The United States of America.

The multitudes of the earth will gather in San Francisco to contribute in a national, communal, and individ-ual capacity, to the celebration which San Francisco has proposed and engineered with the valiant assistance of her mother, California, her sister states and her related nations of the world.

Our mission conference is over. About 750 people from various islands, gathered in Kaukura Island, to take part in the mission conference, the auxiliary conventions, and some to gain money by selling goods, baking bread etc. etc. One Frenchman had a moving picture outfit, which venture failed and he went home about $200.00 poorer but a much wiser man. With the visitors and the people of the island, we had a total of 1,057 people here. The Sunday school and Religio conventions were held

April first and second, and a review of both on the third of April. The French Administrator visited us April 3rd and was formally received in our large assembly hall by and was formally received in our large assembly man of the whole population.

A new church, 24x60 ft. was dedicated on Saturday the fourth at 8 a.m. This ceremony was begun by hoisting a French flag to the top of a tall mast which had been planted for the occasion. The flag was saluted by eight guns, while a native anthem was sung. This was followed by prayer, then a hymn and then the native chief of the island turned the key in the door and the writer opened the door; the people followed in and the ceremony of dedicating the church was conducted in the usual manner. Bro. May preached.

Having received a suggestion from the Administrator of the Tuamotus to the affect that, insomuch as this country is infested with many contagious diseases, and insomuch as our common cup in the sacrament is talked about in official circles here, as a vehicle of disease, it would be better for us to do away with the common cup ourselves than to wait for the law, since it surely will be forbidden if we do not stop it ourselves. We called a mass meeting of the priesthood on Saturday afternoon, April 4th, and explained this matter to the brethren and asked them if they were willing to accept the suggestion from the administrator. The brethren agreed that it did not make any difference which way the sacrament was served just so the priest gave it to each member; so it was agreed that we try it on the morrow, April 5th the was agreed that we try it on the morrow, April 5th the above suggestion having been received by a unanimous vote of the priesthood. These brethren requested all the members of the church, who wished to partake of the sacrament on the following day, to bring his or her own cup, boul or glass. The cocoanut water, which is used here in place of wine, was put on the table in pitchers and bottles and when it had been blessed, the elders in charge poured out the portion for each priest acting there, and the priests in turn received the pitchers from the hands of the elders and poured out the same into the cups of the elders in charge and served the congregation likewise. The sacrament was received by all with appar-The sacrament was received by all with apparlikewise. The sacrament was received by all with apparent satisfaction. Many expressed their pleasure and not one complained. It was agreed in the priesthood meeting that if all went well and satisfactory that they would go home and use the individual cup in the sacrament meeting in their own islands. We are pleased and satisfied that this plan is better for the people here and everywhere else. May the light come more abundantly and make us one in deed; even as these were blessed in that received therein.

and make us one in deed; even as these were blessed in that sacrament meeting.

The mission was in conference from Monday 6th, till Thursday 9th, holding two sessions per day with other meetings in between. We had a prayer meeting of one half hour duration each morning. We had about the best representation this year that we have had in conference in this mission for years. And while some subjects were discussed longer than necessary, it may well be said there was no harm done and much good; and the Smitz of unity necessary and and much good; and be said there was no harm done and much good; and the Spirit of unity prevailed all through.

We have reports from 16 branches; there are two more who did not report. Reports turned in by the native brethren are more or less guess work and we are unable to get anything like an accurate report of what has been done. We know there were 225 people baptized this year in this mission. Seventy of these are people who expelled from the church because of certain troubles which arose in 1905 and 1906. That leaves us about 150 new members. There are 82 elders in this mission. Have

It was decided in conference that we build a new church in Papeete, Tahiti, this year; also an assembly hall to accommodate large congregations. The church will be 30x40 ft. and the assembly hall will be about 66x66 ft. octagonal, built on the back of the church with folding doors between so the both buildings may be turned into one to accommodate more people. Bro. J. C. May, the writer, Tetaku and Pori were elected as a building committee. All the branches in the mission are expected to help build these buildings as this is the headquarters of the mission and we have very few people in this branch but many visitors from the other islands coming and going all the time.

There is $700.00 cash on hand, so the foundation will be laid as soon as possible and if operations come up to calculations we hope to be able to finish the work in a year. A committee was appointed to invite Ero. F. Msmith to come and dedicate the new chapel next June if it is finished at that time.

A letter trom Sr. Lake was read requesting the conference to remove the body of Bro. Charles H. Lake from Amanu to Tabitt. Some little discussion followed. A motion to learn the leady of Bro. Lake where it is till the Lord shall come and raise it up was carried by 94 to 1. The native bretheren have a great respect for the 11. The native brethren have a great respect for the name of Bro. Lake, but they seem to think it is not just right to dig up a grave and move a body.

It was rescoived that the Conference sessions, quorum meetings, etc., shall be listed and posted up in the assem-bly building for the information of all concerned. Bishop's agent Tetaku reported total receipts for the year $996.35; total expenditures $519.80; balance on hand $476.55 which includes a part of the Tarona chapel fund, etc. This is French money, valued at 96 per cent of American money.

There were 18 bishop's agents and 23 missionaries sent out from this conference. The committee on ways and means for the district reported the consumption of 31 barrels of flour, 1,334 pounds of sugar and 66 hogs.

barrels of flour, 1,334 pounds of sugar and 66 hogs. Which food was distributed among the branches.

The little French gunboat Zelee arrived at Kaukura April 6th with a Government inspector reviewing the Tuamotus. The Commander of the Zelee, the Administrator of the Tuamotus and the Inspector came up by request of the brethren and met the congregation. The regular order of business was dispensed with to allow for speeches of formal greetings to be exchanged with the French officials.

The inspector complimented the church very highly for forbidding the use of intoxicating liquors, commenting on the absence of indications of drunkenness among our people. Editor Ensign:—Just finished reading a letter in the Ensign on Graceland College, and thought perhaps a few lines from one who desired an education in Graceland, but because of finances was not realized, would be of interest. Perhaps my letter may not be given space in interest. Perhaps my letter may not be given space in Ensign because so many are better written, but to me it seems the spirit of sacrifice in the gospel work is by too many not understood. Before I obeyed the gospel and afterward until I had obeyed the law of tithing, the law of consecration, offerings and the many appeals for help in the financial line, by those upon which this duty rests, looked to me like robbery, but I am thankful that I always believed the law of tithing, and by obeying that law I can have see the full heaving the great terms. can now see the full beauty of the gospel tem-

As I read a short time ago, "He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly." I love to see the thought carried by representatives of the Church, that the poor should not be robbed, but the very thought can be carried too far.

Graceland is an institution of learning and the good Graceland is an institution of learning and the good that it has done already can scarcely be measured. Some perhaps have helped Graceland, when they were not able, but I believe the majority of those who have given their mite to help some boy, or girl to get an education feel well repaid. The Lord has set his seal upon Graceland and while I did not have the means to pay my way, yet others who are poor have worked their way through Graceland. As a rule we are doubly repaid for the fifty cents, or two dollars, that we give to some worthy cause.

As the conference held at Indianapolis in November appointed a committee to solicit funds to purchase a tent at the next conference to be held at Louisville, Ky. in May, we would like to say to those saints who have not contributed to this fund to send your little sum at once to Chas. H. Fish, 645 W. 29th St., Indianapolis, Ind., and this will be one way of helping us make new openings, as we can reach many people in this way that we cannot otherwise reach.

Dodge City, Kensas, April 7. Editor Ensign.—I am sending in my subscription realizing it would be almost like doing without our daily bread to do without the Ensign, for it is food to our hungry souls, and is all the preacher we have. Elder J. Arthur Davis was here over a year ago and gave us one good sermon but could not get the building any longer, there being no saints here but myself and son, and being poor in this world's goods we don't feel able to get an elder to come here, though we would be so glad to have the work opened up here so us to show the people what we are and what we believe. I crave an interest in the prayers of all the dear saints that I may be faithful to the end. I am 71 years old and have been a member of the church for about 18 years, being baptized and confirmed by Elder John Alfred Davis now deceased, and to my great sorrow and shame have never been privileged to partake of the sacred emblems of the Lord's supper and I feel like it has been to some extent my own fault, as the elders have a number of them been at our place but some how I never did think to them been at our place but some how I never an anna sea ask them to administer the sacred ordinance. I feel my weaknesses and unworthiness but I sincerely implore the forgiveness of the blessed Savior and that it may the forgiveness of the other than the same that the same than the same than the same than the same than the soon be my privilege to obey this command. I understand that there are two good branches of the saints a little west of here, one at Larkin and the other at Hartland. Your sister in the conflict.

Editor Ensign:-I have been performing considerable missionary work in different parts of Florida and have visited the eastern part of the state as far east as the Atlantic Ocean. Efforts were put forth at several places to open up the work principally at the following places, viz., Valrico, Kissimmee Park, Umatilla, Green Cove Springs, and DeFuniak Springs. At the last place I preached ten sermons and baptized two, and found quite an interest manifested as well as some opposition. The Brig-hamites had been there and done considerable work and baptized several, but my efforts in showing up the latter day apostasy and the abomination that had been brought in by Brigham Young and others were much appreciated and well received by some of the members of the Utah Church. In fact all the members of that church present except one, as well as non-members were church present except one, as well as non-members were much pleased in hearing the differences in the two church-es set forth. I feel safe in saying it was a happy sur-prise to nearly all who heard in witnessing the great contrast between the true and the false as set forth by di-vine authority in much assurance and by the Holy Ghost.

One of their elders made an effort to defend Brigham Young and the revelation on polygamy and stated he was damned because he did not practice it. The plain reading of statements in that fundamental document was reading of statements in that fundamental document was sufficient to cause him to stop the open opposition, but he made a special effort in a private way against our meeting. His wife who I am sure is an honest woman but very much dissatisfied and disgusted with Brigham ism and who joined the Utah Church to please her husband, was very much interested in our position and very anxious to see her husband turn from the evil things in Utah Mormonism.

things in Utah Mormonism.

The Utah elders are very busy away out in new places where our work is not established and it seems they have no success at all where our work is well known. One of their elders was heard to say where I have been laboring he dreaded to meet the elders of the Reorganized Church, and it is no wonder why they feel so dreadful. The reason is plain. I am in the battle for truth to save poor weak erring mortals and to be worthy to wear the crown when the victory is won.

Mrs. Louetta Phillips, Pleasunt Lake, Ind—we don't hear very much preaching as there is no church of our own here. We have attended other meetings and heard all kinds of slang used and the people called all kinds of names. The people fairly fell over each other to get into the church. There were a lot of converts but what will such conversions amount to in a short time. Since they have been sent to Mexico I have thought why could not we send them some of our literature? There are many good hearts beating under the blue jackets. If we can only reach one or two it will be worth while. Eight hundred of our boys are at Mazatlan, and mail addressed to "U. S. Marines, Mazatlan, Mexico,"

Albert T. Davis, Ft. Liscum, Alaska. I still love to read the silent dispensor of the everlasting gospel above any the silent dispensor of the everlasting gospel above any other paper. May it always continue to spread glad tidings. Snow is about four feet deep on the flats in this section, but it is melting fast now, with beautiful clear weather at present. I was discharged from the army on the 19th of March last but am staying with the company for awhile. Hoping the gospel principles will spread spiritual light far and wide this year.

J. E. Winn, Dunlap, Okla. Am sending this to bear testimony that we still live. The first L. D. S. who came here was Bro. G. A. Swain who came with his family in September 1911. Growth has been slow but if things continue as in the past few weeks we shall be organizing a branch by this time next year. Bro. J. H. Baker on returning from conference baptized four yesterday and three was taken and the past for the past fo more today, and there are others honest in heart for whom we are praying. We now have fourteen in the church. Rejoice with us for these blessings.

A DREAM.

About four o'clock in the morning, I had the following, very impressive dream. I dream I was in a large building and the two floors were filled with saints; those on the lower floor, and also those in the gallery were singing the same songs and music; the platform was large and elevated about four feet above the floor; there was no one on the platform; the seats on both floors, as well as on the platform were arranged so that from any part of the house, the stand could be seen. I was sitting in the second tier of seats in the gallery; my wife was by my side.

In the dream I knew a very large number of those present; the singing was good and harmonious. As all were singing, suddenly a plain. but neatly dressed woman, came onto the platform; she walked to the center of the platform to what I thought was a telephone booth; she reached her right hand for the receiver, placing it to her ear. I thought that possibly she could not hear as all were singing, so I stopped and motioned for others to do so. My wife spoke, "You need not stop singing; it will not disturb her: she can hear every word; she is receiving good news; see her face how bright and cheerfull she looks," and truly as my wife stated, as the woman listened, her countenance got brighter and brighter, and all sang with more earnestness and spirit.

When the humble and intelligent person, as she was, placed the receiver back, she turned to the large and happy audience, who were still singing, and her face glistened with brightness beyond my power to describe—raising her right hand heavenward as a sign for all to be quiet, when all, (as one person) stopped singing; such a calm and quiet feeling like a mantel, rested on the assembly. It seemed as if all held their breath; not a move of any part of the body. She spoke in a plain, clear and distinct tone of voice so all could hear; "I have good news for you. Jesus, the Lord, is coming soon, and he will speak face to face with you." Oh, the joy that thrilled the heart and soul; Never had I witnessed such a degree of the spirit; my face was bathed in tears; yes, my pillow was wet with the same.

When there is such comfort in the dream, what will it be to witness the fulfillment of the same. As I awoke I was given to understand that the Savior would come to his saints, not to the world, before he comes in his glory, or before the ushering in of the thousand years. Reason and Scripture supports this thought. In Malachi, third chapter we are informed that "the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple." is generally understood that the temple referred to, is a building, but may it not be the saints. for in 2 Cor. 6:16, "For ye are the temple of the living God", also 1 Cor. 3:16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you." The statement of Malachi is, "The Lord shall come to his temple." it said "into his temple" we would believe that the prophet had in mind the house or building. However, the promise is, "the Lord shall come to his temple," the house or saints, or both, not unto the world. A very prominent idea is, that Christ is to only come once, and that in his glory at the end of the world; but we learn that he is to come with his saints. 1 Thess, 3:13. "And when the dead in Christ shall come forth; 1 Thess. 4:16, "And they shall reign with him a thousand years." The end of the world is not to take place until after the little season, which is to be after the thousand years. Rev. 20.

We learn that after Jesus was resurrected, he was seen by his disciples, and he appeared to different ones; was also seen by some upon the western continent, (see Book of Mormon.) He was seen about forty days by his disciples, giving them instructions, speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Acts 1:3. He did not appear to the world. Inasnuch as he visited his disciples then prior to the Pentecostal endowment, instructing and preparing them for that great event, (Acts 2), why not visit his disciples, (saints) prior to the latter day endowment, instructing and preparing them for the reception of the same, when his servants shall go forth clothed with greater power, when the promises made in D. C. 87:4, "For it shall come to pass in that day that every man shall hear the fulness of the gospel in his own tongue, and in his own language, through those who [have been educated to speak various languages and tongues in institutions of learning? NO.] are ordained unto this power by the [notice] administration of the Comforted, and shed forth upon them, for the revelation of Jesus Christ."

The following, in my opinion, is evidence that the Savior will come to his people before he comes with his saints, as already referred to; "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him up out of their sight, and while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1:9-11.

In what manner did he ascend? What were the conditions and surroundings? Only his disciples present; we hear of no great preparation having been made, no public demonstration for the public knew nothing of this wonderful event; so, the statement of the two messengers is, that Christ shall return in like manner. I can just as readily believe that the Lord will in the near future, visit his needy and believing children, as I can believe that he did so after his resurrection, and prior to his ascension on the Eastern and Western continents.

In the Millenial Star, Vol. 14, page 344, Joseph Smith Jr., in a letter to W. W. Phelps, says, "The Lord commanded us in Kirtland to build a house of God, and establish a school for the prophets; yea, The Lord helping us, we will obey, as on conditions of our obedience he has promised us great things; yea, even a visit from the heavens to honor us with his own presence; we greatly fear before the Lord, lest we should fail of this great honor, which our Master proposes to confer on us; we are seeking humility and great faith, lest we be ashamed in his presence."

Upon awaking from the dream I have related, the words of Malachi 3:2-4, came with force; "But who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth, for he is like a refiner's five, and like fuller's soap, and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he shall purify the sons of Levi and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness; then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in days of old, and as in former years."

I thought that in order to be able to abide in his presence, that we must be of the pure in heart, and of clean hands; our affection must be upon him first; worship him in spirit and in truth, with all of our heart, might, mind, and strength. While thus meditating, I was permitted to see a large number very sorrowful because they had been careless, and had taken more interest in the pleasures and things of the world. Others had not contributed of their means as freely and liberally as they should, and some that could have been self-supporting while in the service of the Master were not, and all that continued to so live, would not be able to abide in his presence. Doubtless, the best of us, if we examine ourselves in the true light, will find where we can improve. a faithful follower of the Master, all that we are and all that we have we should be willing to apply in the interest of his work, according to the law, "for by the law we shall be judged.

WHAT ARE THE THREE MEASURES OF MEAL?

By Elder W. A. Sinclair, M. D.

I shall choose for a text to-night a familiar passage of scripture found in Matthew 13:33: "Another parable spoke he unto them; The kingdom of heaven is like upto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

And coupled with this, I desire to use a few words found in Galatians 3:8. "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed."

We have here two peculiar statements, the kingdom of heaven, which we can interpret as the gospel, for it is used interchangeably in the scriptures, both having reference to the organization, of Christ's Church on earth. This kingdom, gospel, or organization is like unto leaven (yeast,) which a woman took and hid in three measures, or divisions of meal, till the whole was leavened.

That is to say, the kingdom, gospel, or organization of the church of Christ was to be planted, placed, or instituted in three different countries, peoples, or nations, until the three divisions shall all become leavened, or converted to one idea or standard.

Keeping this in mind, let us look at our second text: "And the scripture, [or those who were inspired to work for God, forming scripture] foreseeing [knowing what is about to happen] that God would justify the heathen [or Gentile world] through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed."

The leaven is the gospel, the same that was preached unto Abraham, the faith that was to justify the heathen, and this course of bringing about the leavening of the whole lump, was to be through the lineage of Abraham. "In thee shall all nations be blessed."

Considering the thought that if this course of blessing is to come through Abraham, it must needs be that the seed of Abraham shall become mixed in all nations, that through this seed the avenues of blessing may be poured out to bless, so we will trace this posterity of Abraham for a short time to try to discover what became of them.

In Genesis 48:19, we read concerning the blessing of the sons of Joseph: "And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it; he shall also become a people, and he also shall be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations."

Here we have a prophecy concerning Ephraim, one of the posterity of Abraham, who is to become a multitude of nations. This is indeed a dissemination of the seed of Abraham. The prophet Jacob said it should be, and a great many years later Isaiah takes up the thread of the story and tells us something more concerning this division of the seed of Abraham.

In Isaiah 7:8; "For the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus in Rezin, and within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people."

Ephraim is to be broken, that it be not a people; this is a peculiar statement, and must have reference to their political of tribal relationship. We read in Hosea 7:8; "Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people; Ephraim is a cake not turned."

Ephraim was to become a multitude of nations, and here Hosea tells us that he hath mixed himself among the people, in this sense, his marriage with the heathen made him broken as a people, so that his tribe ceased to exist as a tribe, and Nehemiah takes up the lamentation in the thirteenth chapter, twenty-third and twenty-fourth verses: "In those days also saw I Jews that had married wives of Ashod, of Ammon, and of Moab; and their children spake half in the speech of Ashod, and could not speak in the Jew's language, but according to the language of each people."

In this sense Ephraim became lost, and was no longer counted with the tribes of Israel. And in 1 Kings 12; we find Israel divided into two bodies, the one under the rule of king Rehoboam, and the other under king Jeroboam. Thus they continued until the year 721 B. C. when Shalmaneser king of Assyria came up against Samaria, and beseiged it. "And at the end of three years they took it; even in the sixth year of Hezekiah, that is the ninth year of Hosea king of Israel, Samaria was taken. And the king of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah and in Harbor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes."

This leaves us with Ephraim lost among the nations; Nine and a half tribes taken captive to Assyria, and two and a half tribes left at Palestine; thus creating three divisions in the posterity of Abraham.

Remembering that the nations were to be blessed through Abraham, according to our text, and that the blessing was to be through the gospel, the gospel to be planted in three different divisions, there to work until the three divisions became leavened; we now have a starting point for the focussing of our thoughts relative to the subject before us.

The proposition now demands that we establish the fact that the gospel was or will be planted in these three divisions before our contention becomes worthy of acceptation.

In Matthew 10:1-4, we find Jesus establishing his church, and he here names twelve Apostles whom he has chosen. He taught the church in Jerusalem for the space of three and a half years, at which time he was crucified; and in the Book of Mormon, Book of Nephi 5:31; we find he established his church on this contiment, and again chose twelve in this organization; he taught them the principles of righteousness, and continued with them at intervals for the entire forty days subsequent to the resurrection.

These people who were here were of the seed of Abraham, and Lehi was according to his own testimony, of the tribe of Manasseh; so Jesus has now planted the leaven in two measures of meal, or his chosen family. And Mormon tells us in Nephi 8:3, that he left the Nephites, he did so saying that he was going to visit the lost tribes of the house of Israel; those which were carried away by the king of Assyria.

We are justified in the supposition that he would use the other division equally as well as he did the former two, therefore, he would also establish his church among them, and that carries with it the presumption that he would choose twelve among them also.

This being the case we have the three measures of meal among the three divisions of the tribes of Israel; the only difficulty which seems to deny the fact that this is the complete fulfillment of the parable at this time, is that they were not all converted or leavened. With the Jews there were but a small gathering who ac-With the Nephites. cented the Christ at all. most of the people were destroyed previous to the visitation of Christ to them, and with the lost tribes we would expect similar results. But probably we are too impatient regarding this leavening process. Time with the Almighty is but as yesterday, and the time in regard to the leavening of these measures of meal is not specified clearly as to when the final results will be consumated, but the leaven will be hidden with them until they are leavened.

A long period of silence seems to dawn on the in habitants shortly after this most propitious period, and the leaven seems to have entirely disappeared from the earth. But God had not forgotten his promise to Abraham; and Jeremiah records a prophecy in the thirty-first chapter, in which he says the Lord will remember Ephraim and will have compassion on him. And in the eighth verse he says concerning the lost tribes. "Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together; a great company shall return thither.

And again in substantiation of the prophecy by Jeremiah we read in Doctrine and Covenants 108:6: "And they who are in the North countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their pres-And an highway shall be cast up in the modst of the great deep." And reading down a little farther in the paragraph, it says: "And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephaim my servants. And the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence, and then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy.'

We learn from this language that the gospel had been established among the lost tribes, and they had, and will have prophets who will lead them out. This is strictly in harmony with the practice of all time, so far as I am able to discover from the scriptures. The people of God in all ages were instructed and led by prophets.

The language read in your hearing also pictures two divisions of the seed of Abraham who have had the isaven, or gospel hidden among them, and it has leavened the whole measure in each instance, and not only leavened the two measures but brought them together so that in their almagamation it has partially fulfilled the prophecy of Jeremiah which is recorded in his book of prophecies, chapter three, verse eighteen: "In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."

And also that spoken by Hosea in chapter one, verse eleven: "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land, for great shall be the day of Jezreel."

The kingdom of Israel and the kingdom of Judah are to be under one head, and that of their own choosing, or appointing; such a thing as that has not taken place since the days of the division."

Our talk so far has been chiefly concerning Ephraim and Israel, they seem to be the first to receive the gospel message, and the Lord seems to favor them in permitting them to come together previous to the meeting with Judah. This may be for the reason that Judah as a nation does not accept the gospel nor the Christ until after Christ shows himself to them and proves his identity.

Jerusalem had been destroyed many hundred years ago, and the land of Palestine had become a parched land, forsaken by the Jews and the nations who formerly inhabited her. But the Lord said through the prophet Joel in the second chapter, verses nineteen to the twenty-seventh: "Yea, the Lord will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen:"

"But I will remove far off from you the northern, army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea, and his hinder part toward the utmost sea, and his stink shall come come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because he hath done great things. Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice; for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field; for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig tree and the vine do yield their strength."

"Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God; for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil."

"And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpiller, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you. And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you; and my people shall never be ashamed. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else; and my people shall never be ashamed."

The Lord also says through Isaiah in the forty-fifth chapter, and the seventeenth verse: "But Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation; ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end."

This is a wonderful promise, and the chain of circumstances leading up to it is equally wonderful. The Lord had cast off Israel, and rejected Jerusalem, and now after their wanderings, he is turning to them again; and Zechariah says in the second chapter, twelfth verse: "And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again." And in the eighth chapter he dispels our doubts as to the rehabitating of Jerusalem, for he says: "Thus saith the Lord; I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the Lord of hosts the holy moun-Thus saith the Lord of Hosts; There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for very age. And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof,"

The Jews have gathered home when this scene is depicted, but up to this period they have not accepted the Christ or his gospel, they still nold to the traditions of their fathers; nor do they accept the Christ until he comes visibly before them, and they are confronted with their folly. This scene does not take place until after they have been to war for some time with the nations who have come down on her to take a spoil, they are almost subdued, and the hand of opression is about to fall on them again, when the Christ comes as a deliverer; Then it is that they become acquainted with the fact that they have killed their king; and their sorrow knows no bounds. Then they accept the Christ.

He is now revealed to them, they have faith in him now; they repent of their evil and mourn for their folly; their condition is changed, their stony hearts are softened. Then they are ready for the leaven to be planted among them, and it is recorded in Zechariah 13:1: "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness."

The third measure of meal, or division of Israel, has now received its leaven, and Joel says in the second chapter, twenty-eight to the thirty-second verses: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your old men shall dream dreams, and your young men shall see visions; And also upon the servants and upon the handmaidens in those days will I pour out my spirit. And I will shew wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke."

"The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered; for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call."

This very clearly shows an acceptance of the gospel by the Jews, for it is of them that the prophet is speaking, and they enjoy the refreshing powers of the spirit in the gifts of the gospel; the leaven is surely working.

Again, it is very clearly and beautifully portrayed in Ezekiel 36:33-38: "Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded, And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by."

"And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced and are inhabited. Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate; I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it."

"Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock. As the holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the Lord."

Then to show the tranquility of the people (the Jews) under the gospel influence; Zechariah takes up the theme in the third chapter, and the tenth verse, thus: "In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbor under the vine and under the fig tree."

During the time that the Jews have been going through this transition, Israel have been gathering homeward towards the land of Palestine, and about the time that the leaven has gotten root in the stubborn minds of the Jews; they reached the borders of the land and pass into their former possessions; and then they mix with the people of Judah.

Israel had already obeyed the gospel and were in a condition to enjoy the blessings of the gospel, but not so with Judah; they had accepted the Christ when they could do nothing else; but they had yet to learn the principles of the gospel; the leaven had now been planted in the three measures, and it was working, but the Doctrine and Covenants 108:6; gives us to understand that Judah will not be sanctified immediately; It reads: "And they also of the tribe of Judah, after their pain, shall be sanctified in holiness before the Lord to dwell in his presence day and night forever and ever."

Auditing Committee.

This ushers in the millennium, the last days, and Micah says concerning these days, in the fourth chapter, first and second verses: "But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow into it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.'

Remember our texts, that in Abraham's seed, r, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

Israel, Ephraim, and Judah the three measure of meal, have had the leaven hidden in them, and it has worked, and now the whole has become leavened. Abraham's seed has become blessed; both those of immediate lineage and those who became Israel by adoption. Jesus the Christ is King of kings and Lord of lords, and the reign of righteousness has commenced.

Let us live so that we may be numbered with Abraham's seed, and our joy will be full, and our

THE LITTLE CORPORAL.

It is related that Napleon was once badly defeated at Coblentz by the Cossacks. After the battle he was surrounded by enemies and would have lost his life had he not been saved by the presence of mind of one of his soldiers, Corporal Spohn.

Realizing that Napoleon's only chance for life was in getting off the battle field unrecognized, the corporal begged the emperor to change hats and horses with him. The change was made ere the smoke of battle had cleared away and Napoleon, with his corporal's hat and mounted on a poor steed, rode away unnoticed, the Cossacks crowding round the corporal. Taking him prisoner, they led him in triumph to the Russian general. There the mistake was discovered and the corporal's brave act cost him his life.

According to the Coblentz legend, Napoleon, in remembrance of Spohn's self sacrifice, always after this preferred a corporal's uniform to any other, and wore it so often that his men came to speak of him familiarly as Le Petite Corporal. -Kansas City Times.

Note-The following talk was given by the assistant superintendent of the Young People's Department of the Auxiliary-Sr. Della Braidwood, during their program at General Conference.

Our hearts were touched by the zeal and plans of the sisters in charge of this department, and the realization of the great good which they do and will accomplish.

"Something Done" was a sketch of the work of one class of girls by one of its members. Truly we saw that the work of our Master (as Sr. Braidwood reminded us, was couched in the words "He went about doing good") has been applied by these young people in their lives. They aim "to go about doing good," and the aim of the department heads and teachers is to keep energetic youth in our girls pure and good, by keeping them busy in aiding the poor, the sick, the wayward and most of all the sinful. They lay great stress on not ostracising anyone because of poverty or sin, etc. from an opportunity to join with them in serving God through serving fellow

"Something Doing" consisted of an exhibition of quilt work (which will be finished by a class of girls in Sunday school and Religio) in time to be presented for a thanksgiving gift to several poor families. Also many baskets of dainty designs to be filled with wild flowers for the needy or lonely, or sick.

The aim of this department is to incur no expense or financial support except what the ten cent yearly dues supply, since there are so many avenues open for young hands, aside from the larger charities, which other departments of church work supply.-Editor Department.

TO BATTLE NOT TO DREAM,

Our Religion is the dream, but our Christian warfore is the battle.

To illustrate this point—which of you would choose as a successful florist, the man who spent his days roamas a successful norse, the man who spent in days roun-ing about the fields or woods admiring the beauty of the flowers growing at his feet? His success as a flor-iat would depend upon the amount of digging he did— putting his hands in the dirt if necessary to assist the tender plants in his care; and the degree of success which he attained would depend upon the amount of his life he gave to the lives of his charges—their perfection and beauty and growth.

In the same sense the Religionist who spends his time with his head in the clouds admiring the beauty of the gospel is not a success. He too must dig—must put his hands in the dirt if occassion demands that the struggling ones about him may be strengthened, and, like the floristthe height of success attained will depend upon the percentage of his life he gives to the lives of those within

It was said of our Master "He went about doing good." This is my ideal for the Young Woman's Department. If our girls can be made to sense the tremendous amount of suffering there is in the world and appreciate the possibili-ties within themselves to relieve it—the work will be only a pleasure to them. Suffering may be divided into four

Perhaps our girls can touch the suffering from poverty least, because as a rule they have little ready money, and yet if the spirit of sacrifice grows—even this may be relieved somewhat. The suffering of pain may be relieved by visits to the sick and a giving of part of their own cheery lives to those more sombre colored. The suffering of loneliness may be cancelled. A lonely person befriended ceases to be lonely. By touching the cause of sin, the suffering from sin is reached.

In a town where I once lived there was a young girl who was ostracised by all—not because she was a bad girl but she was a little queer-had not quite an equal start with she was a little queer—had not quite an equal start with other girls. Disaster overtook her family and everyone said "Poor girl—isn't it a pity?" Most assuredly. But the "Poor girl" and the pity came a little late. In all that town she had no friend and the most natural result in the world followed—she was thrown back upon herself and accepted what was offered her of society though it proved an injury instead of the blessing friendship should

In this same town two other girls were ostracised-not because they were queer or bad—but because they were very poor. If ever they were invited to a social gathering of young people their own age, I do not know it.

They grew to be fine young women and mothers all about the neighborhood said "Those girls deserve credit for making themselves what they have." And they did—for no one else could claim any share in it. Luckily they were sisters and had each other but if the tide had chanced to turn for them, no doubt, they too, would have come in for their share of belated pity. I believe we will be held accountable at the last day for our share in the sins of our community and just what our share nay surprise us then.

is may surprise us then.

If our happy, popular girls can only face this out—putting themselves in the place of the unhappy, unpopular girls—their hearts will so fill with love—there need be no neglected ones thrown out of wholesome good times into injurious companionship.

I could ask for no higher mark of commendation for any girl I know, than that it might be said of her as it was of her Master

"She went about doing good."

In addition to the above items, money has been sent In addition to the above riems, money has oven seen a different times from the various locals, direct to Bishop Kelley, to apply on the church debt, hence our report does not include all money raised by the women of the Auxiliary for all the general church needs.

Money raised for local purposes, should be disbursed locally, but in justice to the women of the Auxiliary, all money raised by them for general church purposes, should pass through the general treasury of the Auxiliary, since there is one.

However, there is such an improvement over past years, that we feel decidedly encouraged with the prospects of the financial department of the Auxiliary.

The loan of twenty-five dollars to the Leaflet account, from the General Fund, was made by order of the Board. An effort has been made to collect all unpaid sub-scriptions, but so far we have failed. We suggest that this matter be considered at the Convention, and some measure be adopted wherein our leaslets may be paid for without borrowing from the General Fund, as this method retards the work of the officers and superintendents, so far as pecuniary assistance is concerned.

The balance on hand is given as $104,79, which does not include twenty-five cents in stamps held by Mrs. B. C. Smith; one dollar and eight cents in stamps and thirty-five cents in money held by Mrs. H. A. Stebbins, making $1.68, including which our balance would be

The total amount of money that passed through the reasury since April 7, 1913, is $834.79.

Treasury since April 7, 1913, is $833.79.

Though the work haps been the regular routine work of a Treasurer, there have, at times, entered into our correspondence opportunities for a personal touch, here and there, which has been helpful to us, and we hope it has been mutual.

Mrs. J. A. Gardner.

Removing Stains.

"Alcohol," says an exchange, "will remove stains from Summer clothes." That is true, but it also removes the Summer clothes from the summer, also the Spring, the Autumn and Winter clothes, not only from the one who drinks it, but from the wife and family as well. It removes the household furniture, the eatables from the pantry, the smiles from the face of his wife, the laugh from the innocent lips of his children and the happiness out of his home. As a remover of things Alcohol has no equal.—Boy's World.

If you would be pungent, be brief, for it is with words the more they are condensed, the sunbeams deeper they burn.—Southey.

All that is divine in man comes from God. All that tends toward God in man is God's voice in the human heart.—Alexander Maclaren.

DEPARTMENT OF CHILDREN'S HOME. Statement and Needs,

"And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."—Doctrine and Covenants

We are desirous that the financial policy of the Children's Home may be in harmony with that of the Church. Consecrations of the church are made to the Bishops of the church who are the ones to care for such consecrations and disburse properties and means according to needs.

The Trustees for the Children's Home have selected as The Trustees for the Children's Home have selected as their treasurer a bishop who is duly authorized under the law to receipt for contributions made the Home. It is further the business of the bishop who has this specific work in hand to inquire into the needs of the Home and supply from the funds which come into his hands for the benefit of the Home. We make these statements to indicate to the Saints the disposition of the Management of the Home to keep in line with the Spirit, as well as the letter of the law, governing the temporalities of the cluwer. poralities of the church.

The treasurer informs us that there is not sufficient funds at his disposal to supply the needs of the Home without running in debt. The Home must not run in debt and to keep out and at the same time permit the Home to continue its mission is for the friends of the Home to make special offerings and consecrations to the institution. This should be a continuous effort each month and the necessity exists for a greater response along the line of special donation or offerings to the Home. The question to you individually is, What can I do now? Send your donations to the Home to Bishop Joseph Roberts I Among Lawre and you will be abled such as the form to the control of the Home. erts, Lamoni, Iowa, and you will be duly receipted.

CHARACTER-NOTE HYMNAL.

To the Saints of the South and all who are Interested:—Did you see the notice in Herald Vol. 61, No. 17, page 414, concernig a character note hymnal? In my travels in the south I have found a general demand for something of this kind either in Zion's Praises, or the Hymnal. Now is your chance. Let everyone interested write to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, stating how many books you will pledge yourself to take.

A good plan would be for every branch to appoint some one to solicit pledges, and write the publishing house stating the number of pledges received. Now is the chance to get your "shaped-note" Hymnal, if you will only work for it. I presume it would require about 2500 copies pledged to justify the expense. To the Saints of the South and all who are Interested:-

PASTUKAL.

To the Saints of Kentucky and Tennessee:
Having been chosen to labor as associate minister in charge, and realizing that success can come only by our working together, and that too with an oye single to the Glory of God. I send you this greeting. I want to keep in touch with the needs of the district and I want all to in touch with the needs of the district and I want all to feel free to tell me of the opportunities of their several localities. Please don't wait until you get everything ready for services before you notify us, for our missionary force is small and we can only meet the demands as we can reach them, but will do our best to fill all calls, especially in opening up new places. Dear Brethren of the local ministry: If at any time you can help us please let us hear from you. Those appointed to the district will labor as opportunity will permit until our conference which meets June 6-7. I will be glad to meet you all there, and let us come together praying that the Spirit of God whom we are trying to serve will direct in order that success may crown our efforts, for without him wethat success may crown our efforts, for without him we shall fail.

Your brother and co-laborer,

J. A. Roberts Home address, 1311 W. Short St. Independence, Mo.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission

Petre in Eastern Colorado; J. B. Barrett in Denver and vicinity for the present.

Please remember, brethren, that the quarterly reports are due July 1, Oct. 1, and Jan. 1; and the annual report March 1. It would be well for each of you to secure blanks at once from the Herald Office. My home address is 1420 West Walnut St., Independence, Mo., and my field address 336 South 4th East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. I hope soon to be in the field, and the quarterly reports may be sent to my field address.

We shall be glad to have the co-peneration of the legal

We shall be glad to have the co-operation of the local ministry in services, making new openings, etc. Let us labor together in the Spirit of the Lord and for the sole purpose of building up his kingdom.

I feel sure that the saints of this mission will give the efforts of the ministry their moral and financial support, as you have done in the past; and remember the financial side of our work by contributing to the general fund of the church according as the Lord may bless you.

I shall be glad to hear from any of the saints as to be opportunities for the labor in your localities and shall do my best to supply the needs.

Hoping for a successful year in the Master's service, I am your fellow worker,

In bonds. Peter Anderson.

To the Saints of the Virginias District, Greeting:-

Having been appointed assistant minister in charge of our district, I earnestly entreat you to seek first to build your district, I carnestly entreut you to seek first to build up the kingdom of God, and get the added blessings. God says we are co-laborers with him. If you know of any place where meetings can be held just notify me at Clarksburg, West Virginia and I will try and reach you.

Yours in bonds,

To the Saints in Central and Western Oklahoma and the Panhandle and N. W. Texas, Greeting:—
Having been appointed to take the oversight of the work in the above named territory, I come to you with words of greeting, asking you to write us the needs of the work in the various parts of the field, we have a grand good lot of workers, in fact the most we have ever had for this field, and we commend them to you asking your co-operation in the good work of the Lord. Brn. Arbor, Peak, and Chrestensen, will labor in the Central District, Baker, Bootman, Simmons, and Vanderwood in the Western District, also Northern Texas, and Panhandle Brn. Baker and Bootman will labor together as far as Brn. Baker and Bootman will labor together as far as practicable.

Principale.

Having been ordained as bishop to associate with Bro. Short in his work, we ask all the saints to send the tithe offerings to the writer, and thus do their part as the Lord has directed, and called upon us to do, please do not withhold the Lord's portion, keeping it invested in hogs, land, or anything else, for he has not yet told us that he desired his money so invested, but on the other hand he has said to "Bring all the tithes into the treasury of the Lord." Let us labor in cheerfulness and love doing our part, that the work may spread, Zion be built up, and his name be glorified. We have also the two Lamanite Brethren-Philip Cook and Reuben Taylor, who will put in their time among the various tribes doing all they can in this new field, so wide and so promising. tribes dome .... so promising. #### MARRIED.

Herndon-Cummins.—At the home of the bride's daughter 803 South Willis Ave, Independence, Mo., May 20, 1914, Bro. Abc. W. Herndon and Mrs. (Sr.) Mattie Cummins, both of Independence. Elder Cornelius Edwards officiating.

(F. M. Moore.)

I'm not good at branch hestowing,
Nor expert at board throwing,
For I do not be to talent that I often with I had;
I had;
I had;
I had to sentiment expressing
My unfitness is distressing—
But here's a little posy that I wish to toss to Dad.

And I haven't any notion
To discourage the devotion
You owe some other creature fair whose smile has made you glad;
But while you may be discanting
In those terms that are enchanting,
This little home-made compliment I'll pass along to Dad.

It may take a generation
For a full appreciation—
I used to think I know the most when I was but a lad—
But the years have brought reflection,
Honest, candid retrospection,
And now I grope for words to say just what I think of Dad.

When the banks refuse your paper, And your prospects turn to vapor, when the situation is looking rather

And when the studeon is bosony bad—
When, some hope you are pursuing,
You are met with "nothing doing,"
It's mighty nice to know that you can always count on Dad.

And when by some simple token
He conveys the word unspoken That tells how much he feels when you are sorrowful and 83d—
And when confidence is slipping.
You can feel his fingers gripping—Say, let's take off our hats right now and give a yell for Dad1

The following poem appears in The Outlook. The thought is, of course, very old, R65X-but it is here expressed with epigrammatic force.

EARTH AND INFINITY.

By Agustus Wight Bomberger.
There's a part o' the sun in an apple;
There's a part o' the moon in a rose;
There's a part of the flaming Pleiades
In every leaf that grows.
Out of the vast comes nearness;
For the God whose love we sing
Lends a little of his heaven
To every living thing.

To consecrate is to set apart, dedicate, or devote to the service of God; to make, or declare, sacred or holy. In a broader sense it may mean a setting apart to any special purpose. Consecration vitally concerns every Latter Day Saint as a part of the necessary service of God. Under Moses the tribe of Levi was set apart to a special service connected with the worship of God, and from this tribe Aaron and his sons received a special consecration, being called and set apart to act in the priest's office, and were required to keep themselves from every form of pollution for they were called to a holy work. The land of Caanan had been designated by God and set apart as the inheritance of Abraham and his posterityso long as they should serve the Lord,-and thus consecrated as the land for the worship of God. The tabernacle, and later the temple, were especially dedicated to the service of God and God's presence remained with them as long as they were used for his service. The lives of the prophets and ministers of Christ were devoted to the work and thus were consecrated. Gold and silver and other material things were also devoted to the service of God, being set apart or consecrated for various special purposes.

Thus we find that material things, individual men, tribes and nations, and the land upon which they dwell, may be consecrated to God and his work. Consecration under the law of God involves an offering, either a gift of material things or of service by man, and acceptance by God, for unless man reserves the thing consecrated for divine purposes and God accepts of it and approves its use it is not truly Remembering also that consecrate consecrated. means to make, or declare, holy, it follows that anything offered to God which is not holy cannot be accepted as consecration, or anything which of itself is not unholy but offered with an unholy object in view will not be a consecration so far as the giver is concerned.

Cain's offering was not according to the command of God hence not holy, and not accepted. The offerings of gold for the idolatrous calf by the Israelites, though done in sincerity, was for an improper and unholy purpose resulting in actual loss to the people. To make a consecration effectual the Lord must be a party to it, which can only be when man's part is done in harmony with his law and maintained in accordance with his directions, for the Lord may reject an offering even after accepting it should man turn it to improper use, as was the case with the temple at Jerusalem, and as was the case with some of the servants of God when they turned to wicked-

In harmony with the teachings of Christ who called his people out of the world, to be a light to the world, and to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," making consecration of their whole life to the service of God, the latter day revelations teach the necessity of consecration in very definite terms, and as in former times it is to be a consecration of life, of service, and of temporal

Consecrated Lives.

"O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength," is one of the requirements of revelation given in 1829 before the Church was organized, and applies equally to all. Nor did the commandment cease here for the Lord also said: "Seek to bring forth and establish my Zion," and "all are called according to the gifts and callings of God unto them." The gospel requires a consecrated life and service of every man and woman, a service which shall be in accordance with the qualifications and powers of each one to give. "Let every man who hath been warned, warn his neigrbor," does not necessarily require that every man shall be a preacher, but that every man shall give such service as may be within his power. A consecrated life is the least service that man should offer to God in view of what God has done for man. Paul expresses it thus: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."-(Romans 12:1).

Consecrated Service.

Not only in the work of the ministry may men render service to god, but in a multitude of The field is wide, and offers such a wide range of opportunity that all who are willing to labor may do so. The gospel is for the uplifting of humanity, in this world as well as in the next, and it seeks to save men from present ills whether physical or mental as well as from the terrors of lost souls. Hence the work of caring for the sick and afflicted, and extending medical or surgical help or special nursing, is a part of the gospel work requiring training as well as devoted service by doctors, surgeons, and nurses, and service so rendered is the service of God. When done in the spirit of the gospel it is a consequated service. So with those who care for the orphanz, the aged, the unfortunate, and those who engage in the work of teaching. All such service under the gospel is consecrated when done with the Spirit of Christ for the good of humanity.

Consecrated Means.

Some men's qualifications lead them into the necessary lines of business rather than into the direct work of preaching the gospel or any other service connected with the priesthood. Their energies are devoted to the acquirement of wealth. and while their line of work is legitimate, it must be apparent that for such to reserve all their accumulated possessions for personal and selfish purposes, that little or no service is rendered thereby to God. If then these men should serve God with all their might it would be by consecrating of their means such as they have to spare from their business to the maintenance of the work of God, In this way only can their lives be consecrated to God and his work, and they be made equal before God with those who are giving direct service to him. The law of the gospel teaches a consecration of means, and provides that it shall be done in a regular systematic way, and that the means so given shall be used in carrying on the work of God.

To place our whole lives, with all our powers, and all that we possess, upon the altar of sacrifice, yielding all to the will and the disposal of God, not for a day but forever,-that is true consecration. No man can afford to do less, for by seeking his own he will lose all. By doing this he will gain all.

A letter received from Frank McFarland of St. Louis, Superintendent of the Seventh Division of Railway mail service, in reply to a complaint regarding delay of the daily Ensigns in the mails during general conference, informs us that the delay was due to failure of the postal service to get the mail fully distributed at Kansas City in time to be dispatched on its proper routes, which, he says, "is very much regretted by this office." He also says:

"In this connection permit me to suggest that if you again contemplate issuing your paper daily for any temporary period, that you advise me as far in advance as possible and special arrangements will be made to take care of same,'

It is such interest as shown by Mr. McFarland that has made the postal service as near perfect as it is, and it is not often that the patrons of the post office have reason for complaint. We appreciate the assurance of special effort to give improved service in any future editions of the daily.

JAMES ARTHUR GILLEN.

James A. Gillen is one of the strong men of the Church. Though young and lacking the missionary experience which many others have had he has taken hold of the work as would a man of experience. He holds the distinction of being the only man of recent times who was called from local work into the Quorum of Twelve without experience in the missionary field.

Up to the time of his call to the Apostleship one year ago he labored locally, mostly in Kansas City. Mo., and Kansas City, Kas., often holding a series of meetings in the branches while working ten hours a day at his regular employment. For ten years he presided over the Argentine Branch, where he did a good work, and is remembered today as a faithful pastor.

He was born in Malad, Idaho, in 1869, and hence is about forty-five years of age, his father being a missionary and for many years occupied in the position which the son now holds. He was baptized when eight years old, and in 1899 was ordained an elder, in which office he served until 1909, when he was ordained a High Priest. As an Apostle, during the past year, he has had charge of the mission comprising Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesoto, Nebraska and Iowa,

In answer to a question as to what evidence he had received of the divinity of the work and his call, Elder Gillen said that as early as 1900 he received evidence from God that he would be called to the office of an Apostle and occupy in the Quorum of the Twelve, and other testimonies have come to him at intervals since, up to the time of the giving of the Revelation. When the Revelation was received at Lamoni, Ia., and before news of its existence had spread abroad, he had received evidence that he was then called and awaited calmly the news of the Revelation.

One of the spiritual experiences received by him was related as follows:

"Years ago a prophecy was delivered to me in Lamoni, Ia., to the effect that I would preach the gospel, etc. It was at a time when I was more or less in a state of rebellion, but upon retiring to my room I told the Lord that he could not expect me to preach the gospel unless I had some knowledge of it and that I would not do it. I felt that I could not be held under condemnation if I refused to preach without the knowledge by which I could be Whether asleep or awake I do not know, but I saw the Presidency of the Church, the Twelve, and various other officers in the Church (this was in 1895), marching in order, and the membership.

"In the hands of the ministry was a weapon of peculiar workmanship. A person at my side informed me it was the priesthood or authority.

These weapons were of various lengths, and the discharge from them, rather than inflicting injury, gave life and vitality to those that were struck by them. While standing there I saw Bro. Fredrick M. Smith and as he was struck by one of the weapons he instantly became possessed of one and took his place with the elders. After a little time a similar discharge struck me and bow-ing myself to the earth I said: 'Lord! what is man that Thou are mindful of him?' and I found one of those weapons in my hand and took my place with the elders.

"The scene suddenly changed, and I saw the Presidency of the Church, one of whom, Frederick M. Smith, was standing by his father, and upon whom his father leaned. (This was years before he was called to the presidency.) I was standing near them and the warfare was intense. What attracted my attention was the anxiety upon the face of the President, and the determination upon the face of his son. All were intent on winning the conflict by the firing of the weapons.

"I saw conditions and things change, and fall. Everything imaginable in the way of turbulency was going down into one chaotic mass, and that which remained was a beautiful white temple. As I looked I heard the words: 'None but the pure in heart can enter in.' As the scene suddenly passed I found myself still awake."

Elder Gillen feels that the assurances and experiences of divine guidance and support in his ministry of the last year have fulfilled every promise and expectation. His home is at Independence, Mo.—Conference Daily.

The flower committee of the Sunday school are surely doing their duty faithfully, as shown by the beautiful and profuse floral offerings, which lend beauty to our school room and inspiration to our service, each Sunday. They were especially fine on Memorial Sunday. Our services have shown a very marked falling off in attendance, this condition being due to the fact that we have no regular pastor, we presume. It is indeed deplorable that a branch as large as this one should be left without a shepherd. There is an important field for labor here, and it is sad that there are not enough reapers to go around.

Our branch officers are all true faithful men and do all in their power to keep up the interest, and we realize that a time like this is when the members should show especial faithfulness, we are sorry to say they do not, that is the majority of them. Of course there are always the faithful few, who stand by their post through sunshine and cloud.

Millett, Alberta, May 6.

-I have noticed time after time that there is seldom a letter from any of the saints here in Canada and especially Western Canada which is one part of God's vineyard which has seen some grand work accomplished, therefore why should we not write about it and thus cheer and encourage those in other parts instead of hearing all the good from them and giving nothing in return? Right here I also wish to make a suggestion, why could not a corresponding club be started after the nature of the Primrose Department in the Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal as well as in a number of other papers so that our young and old also be able to get in with others who would like to correspond with other saints in other parts and thus prove a source of comfort and help to each other as they could express their troubles and joys in a private letter better than in a letter that is open to all to read.

I am going to mention a few things I have experienced which may encourage some one else. Mother's people being all Methodists and father's all Baptists, I learned the teachings of both and in fact had attended all of the main different church services before I ever met a tatter Day Saint, had even spoken in the Methodist pulpit a number of times, therefore was well steeped in the traditions of other churches believing all to be a part of the one great Church.

But in the spring of 1906, I entered the Emigration office at Winnipeg looking for a job on a farm near the city as I had no money to go out with and poor health and not knowing whether I could stand farm work or not so wished to stop near the city so to get other work if I had to, but the agent after asking me a few questions told me that I had to go 90 miles out to a place or he told me that I had to go 90 miles out to a place or he would not give me a job as I was the stamp of a man needed there so I had to put my watch in pawn to get money to go with and there I met the first Latter Day Saint. Now I thank God that I was forced to go for if I had not gone I might never have met any saints, and would have joined the spiritualists in whom I was deeply interested. I worked there all summer and every day had arguments with the man I worked for. Well they moved to the city while I stayed in that town, joined and took an active part in one of the popular churches until I saw things and was used in such a way that I came to think there was nothing in Christianity, and decided to prove the Latter Day Saint teaching all a fake too, but was convinced after about a year that I had found something genuine which was about two years after meeting thing genuine which was about two years after meeting the first member. So you see God caused me to go there, see the folly of the other churches and led me to obey the true gospel, and I must say that although I have not always live as close as I should and have had my ups and downs, yet I must say that the closer one lives to God and obeys his gospel the more he will be blessed, and sustained in the hour of temptation.

I have also seen the Edmonton Branch spring up from only three or four members two years ago. Others were there but did not know of any saints in the city but those few were steadfast and pushed onward with the help of a few from outside were there for a few months only. Therefore saints, always pross onward and upward, and od will enable you to overcome if you prove faithful.

Do not think the man or woman who does not see at once the beauty of the gospel will not, for the time may not be ripe for it. Also always let your light burn for men may scorn you when with you but will defend you behind your back if you do not waver under trial and insults. Geo. W. Winn.

Editor Ensign:-Elder Barrett and I returned last Editor Ensign:—Elder Barrett and I returned last Ited-day on the S. S. Mauna Kea, from the Island of Hawaii where we have been doing missionary work for the past six months. And I thought some of our experience might be interesting and encouraging to your readers. Since last November we had been doing what we could to advance the work in Hilo and had made many short trips into the country adjacent, but the major portion of the Island had never been visited by any of our missionaries. So on March 25th, we left Hilo with our little sionaries. So on March 25th, we left Hilo with our little satchels starting on a complete circuit of the Island. The direct road around is 297 miles long, but by visiting all the little villages on the beach as we intended doing meant about a 300 mile trip, most of which was to be negotiated on foot. There are sections where there is no civilization of any kind (some as far as 24 miles), and our friends in Hilo were afraid it was too much of an undertaking. But we felt that with God's help, we were equal to it. Elder Waller had previously written to us that he felt we would be provided for and we were.

'mites, an auto carried our bagage to a more of any, And thus assistance was rendered in various ways, towing us that we were not alone.
While Conference was in session, we were tramping from village to village, telling them of the gospel re-

We had a chart in the Hawaiian language showing the We had a chart in the Hawaiian language showing the Church Organizations, Doctrine, etc., and were permitted to preach and explain it in three Hawaiian Protestant churches, four Mormon churches, and one hall, besides several meetings held in private houses, and some in the open air. At Keauhou, we preached to the fishermen and their wives on the beach. They left their nets and and their wives on the beach. They left their nets assembled under a tree and we had a good meeting, made me think of the time when our Master preac the same gospel to the fishermen of Galilee. In anot place we were refused the use of the Hawaiian Protest-ant Church, so we preached to the congregation after their service was over under the shade of a neighboring

We preached in fifteen different places, fourteen of then new openings. Also had ninety-three fireside talks, reaching altogether more than 650 people. Our friends in Toronto would not think this very many, but considering the nature of the country we thought it pretty good. We distributed ninety tracts disposed of twelve Books of Mor non, (two English and ten Hawaiian), four Hawaiian Doctrine and Covenants, ten Doctrinal References, one New Testament, one Bible, besides taking the names of many to whom to mail litetrature.

Besides preaching the gospel, we saw many places of interest and regret that lack of space prevents a detailed description. But one place we cannot omit is the Vol-cano Kilauca. This volcano has been continuously active as far back as tradition reaches, violent at times and at others quiescent. The crater has an area of 2,650 acres, with a fire pit in the south central part about 1,000 ft. in diameter. The day we were there no fire was visible but there was plenty of smoke. The surface of the for several miles around is broken open with cracks The surface of the earth 1 to 2 and 3 ft. in width, and all these almost were belching forth smoke and steam so that the whole country appeared to be on fire. On our first visit to Kilauea about a year previous to this, the whole floor of the pit was a vast lake of fire, and as the sulphurous fumes are in abundance, it made one think of the fire and brimstone preached by some a few years back.

We visited an ancient city of refuge called the "Hale O eawe," In the ancient Hawaiian laws circumcision was required, cities of refuge were provided for, and there others of their customs similar to those prescribe law of Moses. This confirms us in the fact th by the law of Moses. the ancestors of the Hawaiians came from America, where the people of Lehi were familiar with, and kept the law of Moses, as recorded in the Book of Mormon.

We also visited the monument erected where Capt. Cook, the discoverer of these islands was killed, saw the place where the first missionaries landed and other places which space forbids relating. Here a person may see all the various stages between a lava desert and a Garden of Eden and all the variations of climate. While the tropical sun beat down on our heads, we could look off miles to the summit of Mauna Kea, (13,825 ft.) covered with snow.

We are glad to know that Conference provided some one to continue the work here and wish our new brethren success. Elder Barrett leaves for San Francisco on May 20, on the S. S. Wilhelmina, while wife and I are booked for the S. S. Sierra leaving here July 4th. Though we for the S. S. Sierra leaving here July 4th. Though we are glad to be going, yet there is a tinge of sadness at leaving these kind people. It seems almost like leaving home folks. May our Father provide ways and means so that the seed we have sown may be cared for and

Thanking you for the space and wishing the Ensign and her readers a successful year,

Salt Lake, City, Utah, May 16. Editor Ensign:—We had fully contemplated another year's labor with the good people of Utah, but the powers that be have said otherwise, so we are preparing to leave that he have said otherwise, so we are preparing to leave here that we might reach our new field at the earliest possible date, and give things there the necessary at-tention. Such expressions as "We don't see why you have been taken away from us," and "We don't see why you couldn't have remained with us," are universal on the part of the Saints and many of the outsiders but whether it is wisdom or lack of it, we are soon ready to leave the city.

We have tried to be more than a mere iconoclast in our labors here, since we believe strongly in a constructive gospel, and reason that since like must and will always attract like, we can do far more good to our fellowmen through the spirit of love, kindness, and gentleness, thinking by merely destroying their idols.

Unless our love reveals Christ our precept will be of but little value, and if by the spirit of force we by to pour into others our own peculiar kind of doctrine we are apt to discover that our would-be Christlike service is precipiated into a more strife of words, and in place of our being light to those in error we become darkness of our being light to those in error we become darkness to them. So we reason that the only successful way to labor is to so draw out and so build that others will see for themsetve; such by the imparting of the proper spiritual food they will forsake their own idols, and to us that is the much better way.

Let us lead them, and not drive. Let us draw t rather than pour in, and do all in the spirit of kindness and love, remembering the injunction of Christ to: 'Feed my sheep.'

"Yeed my sheep,"
Our work then, and especially in this field, is to teach people the heauties of a Christlike life, what it means for the church, for our fellows, and for us, that the virtue of religion is in living the life of Christ and not in the arguing and denouncing of the peculiar tenets

Dear Ensign .- A few words from Eastern Montana may interest some of your readers. Over six years ago b. Wm. Sparling introduced the gospel to us. While the home of the only saints here at the time, Bro. wby's. He spoke by the Spirit that there would some Newby's. day be a church here. We now have a branch with all the officers though no building yet, but as our little flock grows we see the probability of such. Two were baptized a few Sundays past and two more have applied for admission next Sunday. These are the fruits of the missionaries' labors and also the Sunday school, prayer meetings and local ministry, both the ordained and the unordained, (the sisters).

Though holding only the lesser priesthood I have been appointed to labor in Eastern Montana, and hope to re ceive the co-operation of the saints as it is written, D. C 119:8. "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him 119:8. "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all." Those scattered about can help much by making their location known and the opportunities present in their neighborhood. My address is Fairview, Mont., and hope that no one will hesitate because of lack of accomodations or worldly goods. preaching and other meetings here are held in private houses, some in school houses and have brought forth good results. Thus we see it may be possible for all of us to do some good, let us therefore unite our prayers to God that he will open the way for useful labor.

Beardstown, Ill., May 18. Dear Ensign:-After a silence of several months from your columns, I once more essay the task of committing a few thoughts to paper. Having been appointed to labor in the Central Illinois District, will say that I am in the field nushing forward as best we can. We are anxious to hear from those interested in the work in regard to preaching. Although we have about all we can attend to until fall. But we can make future arrangements. The district tent will perhaps engage our attention most of the summer. Will say that we are quite well pleased with the present prospects before us for advancing and building up the kingdom of God.

I took leave of home the early part of May for Beardstown, Illinois, where I met my co-laborer, Bro. R. L. Fulk. The home leaving is the hardest trial of all the missionary experiences. The wife no doubt will receive the greatest reward. I find Bro. Fulk a congenial com-panion, and we hope to do much good throughout the The wife no doubt will receive We have launched a series of meetings in the Beardstown Branch, which has been in progress for over a week. Several outsiders are attending and the present prospects are encouraging. This is the home of the District President, Bro. M. R. Shoomaker H. is allowed. trict President, Bro. M. R. Shoemaker. He is alive to the interests of the work. The family is a great help to the work here as they all have excellent musical talent. I would not fail to mention Bro. Davis, the branch pdesident, who is doing all he can for the needs of the work. I have also met Bro. Pemdergraph and family who manifest a deen interest in this work.

Dear Ensign:—I wonder if any one would care to hear from a little band of isolated saints, who live away down in the sticks, among the ticks. It is so seldom that we all get together that we certainly do enjoy ourselves when we do meet for church and baptism, perhaps once or twice a year. If we were not so badly scattered I am sure we would meet oftener for we have such lovely am sure we would meet oftener for we have such lovely times on these occasional meetings.

Last summer Bro. Quinley, of Springfield, Mo., came down to assist Bro. Gale in the baptizing and confirming of Bro. and Sr. Dyer and their son George, who have proved to be fine saints. The seed was sown here by Bro. J. C. Chrestensen years ago and later on was cared for by Bro. Gale. At that time Bro. Chrestensen baptized Bro. and Sr. Hodges and Sr. Witty, all of whom a still extense in the faith.

are still strong in the faith.

On the first Sunday in this month we all on the first sunday in this month we all met against at Bro. Divers place, and this time Bro. Chrestensen was with us again. He preached us two fine sermons and in the afternoon we had prayer and sacrament meeting. Oh, what a feast it was for our hungry, lonely souls! The sweet influence of the Spirit was with us. One little child was blessed. There are other processes there who are almost ready to be gather There are other precious

As is always the case, where there are true saints of God, Satan too, is busy circulating falsehoods about the saints, and prejudicing the people against the truth, but we hope and pray that the day may not be far distant, when the honest-hearted ones among them will be gath-

We are all preaching the gospel, if not in the pulpit, by we attend preacting the gospet, it not in the pulpit, by our daily lives. Isn't that a beautifully thought? How careful we should be, for if we are not working for Jesus, we are working for Saten. We cannot stand still, we either go backward or forward. Let us strive to so live that the day may be hastened when Jesus shall come to dwell with us here on earth.

Your sister in Christ,

Rich Hill, Mo., May 26. Editor Ensign:—This writing finds the undersigned in his appointed field in the Clinton District—our first assignment to Missouri territory, although our home has been in Missouri more than eleven years. We appreciate this privilege, as we have long had a desire to learn more

We labored over two Sundays in the vincinity of Butler at the Star School House, and were persuaded that there are some good noble-hearted Latter Day Saints there.

We came to Rich Hill on the 18th inst. holding meetings every night.

We are favorably impressed with the country around Butler and Rich Hill. For saints of limited means, who would like to locate in a branch, there are splendid opportunities for securing cheap homes here in Rich Hill. Why not, instead all who are coming to Missouri rushing into Independence, some of the saints come to places like this. Property can be bought here for less han one half what the same would cost in Independence The saints here have a commodious chapel, and would hall with delight the incoming of other saints. This is a splendid place for those with limited means, to locate who wish to be convenient to branch, source, Religio privileges, or those desiring to retire in a beautiful quiet little town. I am satisfied if saints coming to Missioui would locate more in the "regions about" it would be better for many of them and better for the church.

Rich Hill is only seventy-five miles south of Independence; so it is not far from the "Center Branch. On one country between this (Bates) and Jackson County.

This field is new to us, but we want to get acquainted with those points where our work is more needed. Bro. Walter A. Johnson joined me yesterday. Farmers are very busy now, and will be till after harvest.

Any of the saints knowing of the possibility of making new openings in any part of this field, and who will we will endeavor to respond. My address is Box 144, Holden, Mo.

Yours in gospel bonds H. E. Moler.

Grannis, Arkansas, May 27.

Dear Ensign Readers:—Thinking that you would like to hear from this part of the field, will say that I have been in this part of the Lord's vineyard for one month since conference, and twelve have been baptized. I have since conterence, and tweeve nave neen deptized. I have baptized seven of them, one young lady out in Hochotown, Oklahoma about two weeks ago, and last Sunday had the privilege of baptizing six fine people here at Grannis three of them heads of families. The Spirit of the Lord was present at the Confirmation insomuch that almost the entire congregation was in tears.

While the writer was at Hochotown, Okla., I met the first Indians that I ever preached to. They opened their church for me and came out to hear. I sold their Chief, church for me and came out to hear. I sold their Chief, Samson Jefferson, a Book of Mormon, and one Instructor. At the closing of the services one evening some one threw three eggs but they missed me and hit one of the ladies, and on rushing out we got the young man's coat with eleven good eggs in the pockets, so we had eggs for breakfast the next morning. I am very proud to say of the young lady I baptized there, she is the best singer in that neighborhood.

have met some very fine people here. They are saints and have treated me very nicely. I have all the places to preach at that I can fill. I have five standing invitations that I haven't filled yet. I am now preachinvitations that I haven't filled yet. I am now preaching in Ozark School House with a full house. The Lord in the work here in Arkansas.

I remain your brother in gospel bond J. W. Dubose.

Lewistown, Mont., April 5. Editor Ensign.—As I have always wished to write a letter to the Ensign I will now do so. How very much I desired to be present at the general conference, as I believe it is one of the greatest gatherings of its kind in the world.

My husband is not in the church, nor does he believe the faith, and I desire the prayers of the saints that the way may be made clear what I should do that I may do his will, that my husband will be enlightened and walk in the light of God and that we shall be strengthened and helped and led by our Father who doeth all thing and helped and led by our Father who doeth all thing well. Bro. W. P. Bootman was with us more than a year ago and Bro. R. S. Smith last summer. We enjoyed their presence and have greatly desired to be able to hear preaching often, and sincerely pray a branch will be organized here in Lewistown and the pure and holy gospel expounded to the people. On the grief and sorrow because of so much corruption and wickedness!

May the richest blessings rest on the beautiful latter day work which is so pure and good, is the prayer of your sister in the one faith.

CHILDHOOD, HOME AND MOTHER.

Sermon by Elder A. C. Barmore at St. Joseph, Mo., First Church, Mother's Day, May 10, 1914.

As a basis for my remarks I call your attention to the reading of the following scripture:

It is written that Abraham had two sons, the one by bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he who was a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise, which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from ount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free which is the mother of all. Gal. 4:22-26.

We invite your attention especially to the last "But Jerusalem which is above is free, verse: which is the mother of us all."

The True Mother.

The first thought presented to us by this reading is that Hagar does not represent the true mother. In consequence Ishmael was born "after the flesh." His existence did not involve the sacredness of maternity. Polygamists or opologists for the social laxity find no encouragement here for his character partook of the circumstances surrounding his birth. He came into the world through disobedience to law and in consequence became a lawless character. He was the product of doubt the child of unbelief. Of him we read:

"He will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him."—Genesis 16:12.

He became the progenitor of the Arabian tribes who, until this day, are untamed and untamable. As a whole they have never been conquered. They are still the sons of the desert and the wild men of the wilderness. In relation to the civilized nations of the world they are yet our enemies and we are theirs, and toward the barbarous races their hostility is still intense.

Sarah is the example of the true mother. The voice of God to Abraham was: "Cast out the bondwoman and her son; for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." Hagar represents the Mosaic law while Sarah stands for the gospel. The former is comparable to the old Jerusalem, which is subject to transgression and destruction, while the latter is comparable to the New Jerusalem. And of this city the Apostle declares: "Which is the mother Hence the mother's love is the type of heaven's love for her children here on earth. How true the statement: "A partnership with God is motherhood." Maternal love is not compared with the care which the militant church Maternal love is not combestows upon itself, for the latter shows evidence of neglect, nor the love which the church has for God, but rather to God's love for the church.

It has been truthfully said that love is that sentiment or principle which, though keenly conscious of all the imperfections of its object, loves still. Such is a mother's love for her children, and especially for her boy. If he occupies a position of trust and honor, and everybody looks up to and applauds him as one of the foremost men of the nation, she is proud to admit he is her boy; but if on the other hand, he sinks down into the mud or mire, as it were, until he is almost beyond recognition, and every body else is ashamed of him she is still willing to clasp him to her breast and call him her boy. Why? Because she loves him. He does not need to be good to elicit her love. In fact the child who is morally weak or mentally or physically infirm requires and obtains more of the mother's love and care than any of the rest. This proves the unselfishness of her affection. She is not actuated by what the child may be able to do for her but what it requires of her. In fact the absolute dependence of the child upon her before and after birth is the mainspring of her love. Mothers as a rule, love children best when they are most helpless while fathers love them most when they "become interesting."

The Mother's Love like that of God.

The mother's love most resembles that of God for we read:

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosever believeth in him should not perish, but have exclusing life."—John 3:16.

All the descriptive adjectives in our language could not express more than is stated by the simple words "God so loved." His love was great because he made the greatest possible sacrifice in its vindication and illustration. The common law of humanity recognizes "his only begotten love of God and sympathy of earth ports. Heaven bent in sympathy with earth and earth must bend in obedience to heaven.

St. Paul says: "God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Again, he says: "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." This also: "The love of Christ constraineth us." And this too: "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance." speaking to ancient Israel God says: "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." Jer. 31:-3. And Christ himself says: "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me

All of these texts indicate the willingness of God and the helplessness of man. If man could have saved himself there would have been no need for a Savior but he could not. "All have sinned, and have come short of the glory of God." Men by nature "are dead in trespasses and sins," and it was man's lost and ruined condition that appealed to God. There was not an assembly somewhere on earth with Mr. Somebody as president. Mr. Someone did not arise and move That in view of our fallen and helpless condition we hereby petition God for a Savior." Mr. Someone Else did not second the motion. It was not put before the assembly by the chairman, and carried by "an overwhelming mojority." No!! Man's degenerate condition made him indifferent to and careless of his future welfare. The "grace" by which "ye are saved" means "unmerited favor or undeserved kindness," root or primary definition of the word is "strength We were "without strength" when the plan of salvation was provided. We were unable to do anything for ourselves. Even now all that we do would be useless apart from what God has done for us.

To illustrate: Let the number 550 represent the salvation of man. The 55 represents what God does and the nought what man The first has actual value. If a man has $55 he is that much ahead. He has that much money in his possession, but the man who has (nothing) is "dead broke." The value of the "naught" depends upon the right relationship with other numbers. In other words, it must come after them. So also what man does in relation to his salvation must come after and support what God does. If it comes before it prevents his salvation because it interferes with what God does. So also if we place the "naught" before the 55 and write the number thus: .055 it decreases the value of the figures in connection with which it occurs because it is on the wrong

When the Apostle Paul desired a certain favor the Lord refused him saying, "My grace is sufficient for thee for my strength is made perfect in weakness." 2 Cor. 12th chapter. Here the words "grace" and "strength" are used interchangeably which indicates their synonomous character, and the subordination of man.

In Acts 10:38 we are told: "God annointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him." Such work as he did could not be done by himself and since it was benevolent, that is, done for the helpless, it merited aid. It was by such efforts that Jesus triumph-And this principle of stooping to conquer represented in God and Christ is no where else so prominent as in mothers. And when we say "mothers" we include the mother's instinct in relation to others as well as her own. How often we have heard some young man, probably a rough young fellow, speaking of some loving, sympathetic woman, and we have seen the tears welling up in his eyes as he said, "She was a mother to me!" Someone has truly said: "God could not be everywhere so he made mothers." Jesus said: "I am among you as one that serves." mothers not say: "We are among you as those that serve?"

The Relative Positions of Father and Mother.

Nephi says in the opening words of the Book of Mormon: "I Nephi, having been born of goodly parents, therefore I was taught somewhat in all the learning of my father." Some suppose that 'goodly parents" in this case, means parents possessing wealth by which they were able to edu-

Son" as the greatest gift within his power. The cate their children, but I regard it as implying considerate, sympathetic, righteous parents anxious to impart to their children all the knowlparents edge possessed by themselves. How many children have suffered because they were not warned of dangers known to their parents! Nor does Nephi's mention of "the learning of my father" prove that such learning was not imparted, in part at least, by his mother. And besides, we should remember that in those days the patriarchal system prevailed hence the father was given first place always. In fact it is marvelous that we have so much mention of mothers in the Bible and Book of Mormon when we consider the customs which obtained.

In ancient and mediaeval times woman was not considered a unit in the social system. Husband and wife were regarded as one but he was the one and she was the naught. However, if we illustrate the married life by the number ten she, though of course she followed her husband, often counted, then as now, nine in the sum total. In those days woman's sphere was not recognized nor her work defined and encouraged as it is now. Women like children were supposed to be "seen but not heard."

One of the sacred writers says: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." Psa. 103:13. Some suppose this implies a mother's love is excessive. and not tempered by justice and correction so the father's pity is used as a type of God's; but as a matter of fact, it only reveals the tendency to give prominence to the father in preference to the mother. Generally mothers are not too fond; they do not "spare the rod" to the extent that it "spoils the child." In many instances children are kept from ruin by the restraining influence of the mother; the father is too easy,

A mother's love for her boy is often considered the acme of pure affection. This, however, has been called in question. Some assert that a father's love for his daughter is the least selfish and. therefore, the highest and best for the reason that she is an expense to him while he has her, and he willingly incurs that expense, and yet he knows that in time she will exchange his name for that of some other man. On the other hand a mother loves and cherishes her boy because she expects to lean on him in her old age. He is to her a kind of investment. If this comparison and contrast held good all the way through we would have to give the palm to the father but, generally considered, the love of fathers for theirs daughters bears no comparison to that of mothers for their sons.

Personal Experience.

Like Nephi it was my fortune to be born of goodly parents." I can, therefore, repeat the I can, therefore, repeat the grateful acknowledgement of David: "O Lord, truly I am thy servant; I am thy servant, and the son of thine handmaid: thou hast loosed my Psa. 116:16. We often hear that people converted to the church, from without, make better members than those born in it. Sometimes this is so, but at the same time, there is nothing equal to the life that has been filled opportunities the church can afford. This statement of David emphasizes the importance of inheritance and early training. has loosed my bonds;" that is unfettered me for service in my early life.

I am not going to speak of child training for I have had no experience along that line but every man has had a mother and is entitled to say some thing about her. My mother had read the Book of Mormon and other books and also papers published by the church before I was born; hence the name of "Alma" was fresh in her mind because of the distinguished Nephite prophet of that The result was that she named me "Al-And whenever you find that name applied to men, it is derived directly or indirectly from the Book of Mormon. In all other cases it is given to women.

I was born Nov. 4th, 1873. My parents were baptized the 18th day of the next month. missionaries were present, Elders B. V. Springer and I. P. Baggerly. The former officiated at the baptism but the latter had brought them to The former officiated at the knowledge of the work. I was a very frail child: mother feared she would not be able to rear me. One day when this fear was upon her she held me in her arms and dedicated me to God; told him to take me, preserve my life, and use me for the advancement of his work. I believe that prayer was heard, registered in heaven, and answered, and I am sure I reap the benefits unto this day. Elder Springer also encouraged mother by saying; "You need have no fears con-cerning this boy. The time will come when he will travel and preach the gospel."

There was not much missionary work done in our community while I was growing up, hence I was not baptized until Dec. 19th, 1887. however, read the church books and papers before my baptism. One day when I was telling my mother something I had learned she astonished me by asking: "Alma, did you ever try I thought, quick as a flash, "Mother, I am not a member of the church, I am not supposed to pray," but I did not say it. She continued: "You are studying, and you should ask God to bless you in your studies. And besides, there is something in learning to pray. When you do attempt to pray you may not be able to do as well as you would like." I found these words true in my subsequent experience. I found it difficult to take part in prayer meetings because of bashfulness. For this reason I dreaded them for a time. I felt that I ought to go but I feared I would not be able to take any part if This timidity, however, wore away be-T did fore I attempted to preach. In all my difficulties I found mother resourceful, always ready to say and do the right thing at the right time and in the right place and manner. I was never under the dictation of my parents nor were any of the rest of the children. We were ruled by persuasion, not by compulsion. We were their companions. No memories are so dear to me as those couched in "Childhood, home and mother."

When the children went away, it was mother who considered their interests, and provided for their welfare. The girls were sometimes absentees but the boys especially were absent. My older brother was a traveling lecturer and entertainer, and my younger brother was a soldier in Spanish-American War and continued to be absent from home after the war was over. It was mother who thought of and prayed for the absent missionary, entertainer, and soldier. It was she who knit socks and sent them away to the boy at the front. Once when she wrote to me she recounted the scattered condition of the children and closed with these significent words: "Yesterday, today ,and tomorrow are sad days for me."

She was somewhat accustomed to my abscence before I went on a foreign mission. I was in California three years and in Canada two years ere I left America vet the long trip and extended absence were great trials. I remained away so long that I became in most respects, reconciled to my absence. I placed Australia and the Australians in the place of America and the Americans, and the saints and the work of the church there in the place of the saints and the church work here but the ties of blood still bound me. I came back primarily because of my mother. I loved my father as well but he passed away eighteen years ago. I preserve his memory as a precious gem for I never knew a better man but to see him was impossible. Although I desired to attend the General Conference and visit my other relatives yet I came home to mother."

Parental Responsibility.

In Ephesians 6:1-4 we read: "children obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right. Honor thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." In Colossians 3:20, 21, we have this; "Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they become discouraged."

The substitution, in the first of these quotations of the word "earth" for "the land (Palestine) which the Lord thy God giveth thee." (Ex. 20:12) indicates the Lord's determination to make the fifth commandment of universal application. And we believe that children who obey thir parents, other things being equal, will be blessed with long and prosperous lives. We regret to say, how-ever, that people living in the "last days" would be and are "disobedient to parents" as predicted by Paul in 2 Tim. third chapter. This condition is doubtless due to the reaction from the old methods of family government the same as the extremes of democracy have resulted from those of mon-archy. The apostle endeavored to check this. He sought to inculcate the gospel ideal in the place of the Mosaic regime. Hence the admonition: Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." This would mean to rule by love instead of fear. In other words, liberal in preference to arbitrary government. Again, he says: "Provoke not your children to anger, lest they They may wish to do right. be discouraged." May desire to be obedient, but, at the same time, are in danger of being "discouraged" by nagging on the part of their parents. We cease to attempt what we despair of being able to perform.

We do not wish to take advantage of the language of the Bible, for we believe the apostle's words were prompted by the especial responsibility which rested upon fathers in those days, but we call attedtion to the fact that "fathers' are warned against stern measures in the management of their children. This leads me to ask; Did you ever know of a boy leaving home because of his mother? I never did, but I have known one to leave because of his father. Father was too severe, the boy could not get along with him. When he left father knew nothing of his departure and learned but little of his subsequent whereahouts. But he had a heart to heart talk with his mother and after his exodus the letters came regularly as promised. Need we wonder, in view of these conditions, and those like them, that when a boy talks of going back to the old homestead he says "I am going home to see mother?"

Home and Mother.

...It has been asserted that some marriage ceremonies require more of the wife than of the husband, in relation to each other, which is true but the Bible does not. They are, on the average, placed under equal responsibility. For instance The wife is required to "obey" but the husband is commanded to "love" and the husband who loves his wife will not expect nor require unreasonable obedience. There is, however, this difference; the Bible says "A man shall leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife." haA though, by assumption, the same rule is applied to the wife it is no where so stated. Evidently God recognized the wife's attachment for home, and implied that she should be moved as little as practicable. Women, in all ages, have led a local life. That is the reason all new countries have an excess of men. Australia has a quarter of a million more men than women. This is because so many single men have gone there from other parts of the world. Women do not emigrate as much as men. This fact involves one of the reasons why the boy who talks of returning home speaks of going "to see mother." He has been accustomed all his life to finding mother at home. When he has gone away with his father or some of the rest of the children, or has gone out with or later on "has gone with the girls' "the boys" when he returned to the starting point he has found mother in the usual place. of the reasons why the home coming is always for the purpose of "seeing mother." The boy who speaks as we have indicated does not necessarily imply disrespect for his father. He does so in response to a habit which has grown on him with the advance of years. This explanation is necessary in qualification of the statement before made.

How true are the words of Will Carlton where he makes Caleb say to the lawyer concerning Betsey:

Give her the house and homestead, A man can thrive and roam, But women are skeery creatures Unless they have a home! The Love that Cherishes.

While it is true that love sometimes chastens or punishes yet I prefer the love which cherishes and such love is associated with or related to pity or mercy rather than justice. It does not give us always what we deserve for in that event we might be upbraided or disowned. It gives us more and better than we deserve. Such love preeminently is that of the mother. Such too, is God's love for us. We could not be saved if he marked and insisted on everything amiss.

We read in Ephesians 4:11-13. "And he [Christ] gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ,"

In this representation it is not men as such that are under consideration but the gifts God gives them by which they are qualified to do his work. It is not man's but God's love for the church that is involved. The apostle concludes by affirming that

The whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

This work is accomplished and only by the

This work is accomplished not only by the gifts of those mentioned elsewhere. (Rom. 12:3-8: 1 Cor. 12:8-10). The divine love gives consideration to and makes provision for every permanent and contingent necessity; and that is why God's love is the antitype of the true mother's love. Hence we read:

"Ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of "Ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an imumer-able company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect."—Heb. 12:22, 23.

Truly God is able and willing to do "exceeding abundantly, above all we may ask or think."

In Rev. 21:2 we are told: "And John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." In Rev. 22:14 we have this In Rev. 22:14 we have this: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." It is not a matter of believing, knowing, praying and preaching, but of doing. We are on the home stretch; the door is open; we shall soon enter. And who is it that thinks and prays for the children while they are away; and gives them a royal welcome when they return? Mother! We are coming home again, and for the last time, and we are expecting to see mother "for Jerusalem is the mother of us all."

IS IT DEAD.

What? The United Order of Enoch?

This question has been asked the writer so that he thought a few words along the line of work performed might be of interest to some.

The work of this Order is so different from anything performed by similar organizations that it is difficult to get people to understand its workings. In the first place, we have to do with administering charity in different ways, and but few people want their business advertised or help received stated to the public. Article 2 says: "The purpose of this Corporation shall be to aid and assist the worthy needy and poor in obtaining employment and homes, help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in times of need. promote temperance, morality and equality."

This gives us a clear idea of the class this Order has to do for and in their doing it would be unjust for them to advertise broadcast what they have done and who has been helped, it should be enough for those who are helped and those who perform the service to know, there it should rest. I have emphasized two words by capitalizing them to attract attention. First:-The worthy needy, are to be helped; others should not apply would be the conclusive thought in reading this paragraph. It is one of the difficult problems the Board of Directors has to do with is to tell who is worthy. It is certain that they are not those who receive help asked for and then make complaints against the Board, as one or two parties have done.

It requires divine help to continue to work under such conditions when there is not the least evidence manifested upon the part of the Board to do other than help all as far as possible, and if they did otherwise they would violate their corporative principles. The least a person should do would be to express his appreciation for assistence rendered.

The sooner some of us learn the fact that we are incompetent to direct our own business and will seek for the assistance of those who have proven their success in business life the better it will be for us, and the work we have in hand. A man who has made a failure in the business world for forty years and right beside him men have been successful should wake up and ask why? And good common sense would suggest allying himself with successful individuals for help by way of instruction. We never can hope for equality till we discover our own weakness along these lines and put ourselves where we can be taught what to do, and how to do it, by those who know. It may not be my fault that I can not make a success of my business ventures, but it is my fault if I continue failing as a member of this great Church. There is not a successful man in business—as a member of the Church especially-but what would be pleased to render all the assistance possible in this direction. "But it is humiliating," says one, "to be forced to ask for such instruction." It is possible, but which is more humiliating-continual failure or the asking for information and making a success of your effort? Equality is not to be brought about so much by the division of the means in hand as helping one another to know how to operate to get the necessities of life. A minister can not give salvation but he can point out the procedure by which you can obtain success, and I believe it is true of the financial question-the getting of a thing also begets a knowledge of taking care of that obtained. And that is the secret of equality. When are we going to reach it?

A man told me that he earned four dollars per day and then did not have any money saved up and said he never had enough to eat—living in Missouri I am waiting to be shown this. I told him there was something radically wrong with the system of speding. This is only one case out of many that we might mention, but it is the cure , the remedy that we want to keep in mind. We have some of the best workers and some that earn good wages and many successful business men, why not find out how they make a success of life's work and try and work accordingly?

Religion is one of the things indispensable, but it is not the only thing necessary to make us a people that God wants and why should we hesitate to seek for knowledge along these lines that we find ourselves so deficient in? Wake up, O ye Israel of latter days and moke a success

I am vours. A. H. Parsons.

IF WE ONLY KNEW! Could we but draw back the curtain Could we but draw back the curtain That surrounds each other's lives, See naked heart and spirit,

Know what spar the action gives;
Often we should find it better,
Purer than we judge we should; We would love each other better, If we only understood.

Could we judge all deeds by motives, See the good and bad within, Often we should love the sinner All the while we loath the sin. Could we know the powers working To overflow integrity, We should judge each other's sorrows With more patient charity.

If we knew the cares and trials. Knew the efforts all in vain, And the bitter disappointment, Understood the loss and gain— Would the grim eternal roughness Seem—I wonder—just the same? Should we help where now we hinder. we pity where we blame?

Ah, we judge each other harshly, Knowing not life's hidden force; Knowing not the fount of action Is less turbid at its source; Seeing not amid the veil
All the golden grain of good,
And we'd love each other better If we only understood.

-Rudyard Kipling.

UNMARRIED MILLIONS.

The Equitable Life Insurance Company of New York, has prepared a table, giving some interesting facts in regard to celibacy in the United States. It shows that there are 17,000,000 of unmarried adults in the United States. It further shows that the death rate among the unmarried is greater than that among the married. The explanation given for this is that many men remain bachelors because of their delicate health and they deem themselves unfit for the obligations of married life. Again, unmarried life tends to make a man selfish and to tempt him to spend his money in self-indulgence, which finally breaks him down. Again, married life generally developes caution in the man, and surrounds him with the thought and care of a faithful and affectionate wife and children, which developes both his comfort and his protection.

Marriage is man's natural and divinely appointed condition, and when it is rightly consummated, it tends to his physical, mental and moral wellbeing. The refusal of an army of men to assume the normal responsibilities of family life results in another great army of women who are required to toil in stores, factories, and other business houses for the necessities of life. These women are thus exposed to conditions for which they were not intended; they increase the rivalry in the business world, and subtraction from the home robs it of its central influence, and weakens the family as the chief factor in the State and Nation.

This all makes the question of the unmarried a most serious one. It is fair to ask why do so large a number of men decline to marry? The answer now most commonly given is that the strain of living today is so severe; the things demanded are so numerous and great, and the cost of getting these things so expensive, and the demand made by women, for the rate of living is so high that an increasing number of young men hesitate to assume the obligations of married life. The demands of this civilization may not be for the large family, but it does demand that the family be good, and that it be increased in num-

The following table, covering New York State, with the exception of New York and Buffalo, compares the death rate of the unmarried with the married:

	Death Rate Unmarried Men	married Women
Ages	Per cent	Per cent
20-29	57 greater	18 less
30-39	119 greater	17 greater
40-49	105 greater	22 greater
50-59	69 greater	37 greater
60-69	60 greater	32 greater
	39 greater

This table has made it possible almost for the first time in this country to study mortality by marital conditions. This is a most important question, and the future welfare of our nation and our civilization compels us to face it .- The Presbyterian.

FROM THE REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF DOMESTIC SCIENCE DEPARTMENT. Wichita, Kans., Fed. 23, 1914.

Mrs. D. J. Krabi

Independence, Mo.

Dear Sr. Krahl:—In answer to your letter of recent date, I shall make you a partial report of the work under-taken and accomplished in the Domestic Science Depart-

Our pamphlets were not ready till last September. Upon receipt of the same we sent out five copies to each of thirty-four field workers, and to each of four district presidents. Eight local presidents have requested a num-presidents. Eight local presidents have requested a num-ber sent to them and in all of the eight there were seventy-four copies, making a grand total of 264 copies sent out. Up to date reports have come in from six locals. I have asked that reports be in by the middle of March, not knowing that I should have asked for them sooner. I may have further information for you before conference

Of the six locals Cold Water, Michigan seems to have developed farthest. Two had done little because the membership was scattered. One met opposition from brethren who "do not approve of the Auxiliary," One was fortunate in having sisters so well trained they felt they could gain very little from the work offered, and on had been slow to organize so nothing had been done.

While evidences of the harvest are rather few at present Lifeal that some gain has been junted that may develop and I sincerely hope the work may be continued.

Dear Sr. Krahl:—In compliance with the promise made you in my recent letter I am sending you a further re-port of the work accomplished in Domestic Science the Six more have reported but in none have any organestablish the work next year. The remainder find the membership so scattered that active work is difficult. Very truly yours,

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF EUGENICS DEPARTMENT.

I am pleased, herewith, to submit a report as super-intendent of the Eugenics Department. While the work, perhaps, has been a little slow, I feel that a good foun-dation has been laid and also feel justified in reporting progress along these lines.

I have written several papers, some of which have been I have written several papers, some of which have been sent to the Auxiliary, also printed in some of the papers. At the Massachusetts District Reunion there was a paper read and general talk regarding the work and several Eugenics Departments started.

I have received communications from the different Branches all of which have been answered to the best of my ability and have sent list of a dozen or more books pertaining to Eugenics.

Respectfully submitted. (Mrs.) Jennie M. Studley. Superintendent.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF SEWING AND AID DEPARTMENT.

Sr. President and members of Advisory Board:-I beg Sr. President and members of Advisory Board:—I beg leave to report to you the work done the past year. It has been mainly through correspondence. Have answered many of inquiry. Have suggested many ways for raising money and done all I could to encourage the Aid and Sewing Societies to join the Auxiliary. Sent the leafiets to different branches and have received some encouraging letters. Only two new societies have reported. One from Burlington, Iowa, and one from Pittsburg. Pa. Perhaps more would report but it is so early that not one of the old societies have reported so far. Feel quite encouraged over the work but sorry the report is so meager.

Mrs. M. B. Nicholson.

WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT.

To the Convention, Greeting:—We read in our report of five locals of the Young Woman's Department, but we have had no report of these as Superintendent; At the first of the year we chose Sr. Della Braidwood as our assistant, which appointment received the approval of the Board.

Together we have made several visits in the interest of the Department. Our experiences locally and generally have suggested a change in our plans which will be brought out in our conference on Saturday morning.
We urge you to attend this conference in this room

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF LIBRARY AND EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT.

OF LIBRARY AND EDUCATIONAL DEPARTMENT. I came near not writing any report because I have had no report from locals. But will just say, I am sure we are slowly getting in working order. I have met so many "snags" in what looked like calm seas, that I am getting so I expect them. One fine thing—I am receiving letters almost daily asking about the work. I have tried to answer all and am sure the time is near when we will be better prepared to tell them what to do and how.

We need a sort of folio of our work,—its mission and history and a bibliography, or classified list of our literature, both being included, i. e. leaflets and periodicals.

I have been hoping to be relieved of my position as I have been hoping to be relieved of my position as merintendent at this conference.

I am glad to say, I feel better about the outlook for our work than ever before, in a general way, and know that there are better chances to do than we have known in

PASTORAL

To the Saints and Friends in Arkansas and Louisiana Greeting :-

As the appointing powers have seen fit to appoint me to this field again and as I have also been appointed as assistant minister in charge of the field, I take this method of tant minister in charge of the held, I take this method or writing to all the saints and friends who have an interest in the extension of the gospel. I would be glad to hear from you, if you want any preaching in your part of the field just drop us a few lines and we will do all we can to reach you as soon as possible. Brn. John Harp, E. A. Erwin, J. W. Dubose and the writer are the only ones appointed to those two large states. appointed to these two large states, so you see we have a large field, therefore we will need all the help we can get. arge nead, increators we will need all the help we can get. So I want to give the local ministry throughout the field a special invitation to give us all the help you can in the way of preaching. Let all who hold the priesthood do all we can to magnify our calling, that we may be workers together with God in carrying out the great work of building up the church and sending forth the angel's message. The Scripture says the Lord "gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, prastors and teachers." For the work of the ministry and the ediffing of the body and the perfecting of the saints. We are all called to labor, but not called to sit down and wait for the other fellow to do our work. If some one has to do our work. If some one has to do our work. Remember the Lord has said "see that no man take thy crown," Rev. 3:11, so let us all be up and doing what we can that we may be worthy of the crown when the crowning day shall come.

I trust that we will all labor to make this the most successful year that this part of the great field has ever had, and let me say further, that I am acting as Bishop's had, and let me say further, that I am acting as Bishop's Agent under the appointment of Bishop Ellis Short and would be glad to receipt you for any amount of tithing, consecration, or freewill offering that you may want to offer for the aid of the church and the spread of the gospel. May the spirit of the Master be with you all.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

Being requested by the Minister in Charge, Elder J. F. Curtis to act as his assistant in charge of the South Curtis to act as his assistant in charge of the South Wisconsin Mission we would like to hear from you whereever there is a need or demand for the services and help of the missionary force. We would be especially glad to of the missionary force. We would be especially glad to hear from the isolated saints and friends so as to be able near from the isolated saints and friends so as to be able to open up the work in new places and spread the good news of the angel's message as we may. The appointing powers have alloted us four missionaries, Elders F. M. Cooper, J. W. McNight, A. E. Gratz and the writer who will be glad to meet the calls for labor as far as possible, with the help of the Lord Jesus.

We want to hear from you any time in regard to your needs and the opportunities in your locality. Letters addressed as below will reach me promptly.

During the last few years the deceased was very ill, and his once bright mind became deranged, so that when release came on the 20th May, 1914, his spirit was led out of darkness and bondage into light and liberty. Services conducted by J. W. Rush-

BE A GENTLEMAN.

Be a gentleman, young man, for it will pay you a golden rate of interest. You will never get anywhere by returning surly answers. You might be surprised to know that if you should meet the president of a railroad and ask him a civil question that you would get a most courteous reply. Walk into the biggest concern in any city and ask for the manager. He will meet you will a smile and return the signature tub in the country depart. It is the signature tub in the country depart of the window washer in the big office who hand back the discourteous answers. That's why they always remain cubs and window washers. The follows who reach the presidency of the railroads and the answersement of large concerns do so because they are gentlemen and always reacum the soft reply. It costs nothing to be a gentleman and besides you will find that such a route leads down beside still waters and up through green valleys. The churl plows through the mud of serfdom and breathes the dust of slavery. You choose the path—gentleman or churl.—Exchange.

To the diplomat who complimented him upon his sangfroid, President Wilson replied, with his dry smile, that he tried to imitate the gravedigger. Of course, this meant a story, and the President told it.

meant a story, and the President told it.

A certain grave-digger, he explained, had the habit of visiting the cometery every night about midnight to see that all was going well. Knowing of this habit, some boys decided to play a trick upon him. They dug a trench in a dark spot which their prospective victim always crossed, and one of them dressed in a sheet, hid behind a tree. At midnight the grave-digger duly appeared, and as duly fell into the trench.

The boy in the sheet at once stepped forth and said in hollow tones:

(What are your doing in my grave?)

"What are you doing in my grave?"
"What are you doing out of it?" the grave-digger replied calmly."—The (San

THE WORKING OF MIRACLES.

The "Word of Truth," a monthly religious paper published at Greeley, Colorado, E. C. Fuqua editor, gives light (?) on James 5:13,14 as follows in answer to a reader's request for an explanation of the passage:

James 5:13, 14: "Is any among you suffering? let him pray. Is any cheerful? let him sing praise. Is any among you sick? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save him that is sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; if he have committed sins, it shall be forgiven him."

if he have committed sins, it shall be forgiven him."
This is an illusion to the practice of the early church during the existence therein of miraculous power. One of the "gifts" enjoyed by the early church was that of "healing" (1 Cor. 12:28), and it is to the exercise of this "gift" that the apostle refers. Miraculous power having ceased from the church long centuries ago, no such results follow such performance today. While it is still true that the "suffering" should "pray" instead of faint ("And He spake a parable unto them to the end that they ought always to pray, and not to faint"—Luke 18:1), it is because prayer is perpetually to be observed "always" as the means of receiving from God that comfort and consorted the context of the context because prayer is perpetually to 66 observed always as the means of receiving from God that comfort and conso-lation we need. Likewise the "cheerful" should "sing praise." Some "cheerful" people like to become intox-icated; others like to dance and sing sensual songs; but Christians should give vent to their cheerfulness through spiritual songs and praise to God the author of all their spiritual songs and praise to God the autorr of all inter-enjoyment. But the anointing with oil and the raising up of the sick belonged to the age of miracles, precisely like the raising of the dead and the healing of all manner of diseases, none of which can be performed today. Mormons, or "Latter Day Saints," claim to be able to practice with former results the form mentioned here by practice with former results the form mentoned near ny James, but their claim is void of reality, and hence should not be countenanced by those desiring the truth. Not a Mormon, or "Latter Day Saint," on earth can, or ever could, bring about the result brought about by the inspir-ed men of the New Testament period. They can only profess to do it, but they will never demonstrate their ch Nor do these miracles have to be worked today to bring about the restoration of the New Testament church. The about the restoration of the New Testament church. The church is one thing, and the power to work miracles, which was given to some in the early church, is another thing. The church exists in all its originality, miracles or no miracle-working power today, there would be no church after the New Testament patterns when the patterns of the property of the patterns of the New Testament patterns of the patterns of the New Testament patterns of the patterns of the New Testament patterns Mormons ought to know this, and cease claiming to hat they cannot do.

All professing Bible believers agree that during the four thousand or more years of Old Testament history, and also the hundred years of New Testament history the working of miracles was a manifestation of God's presence among the people, but many believe that since the greater light has come through Christ, and under the gospel men have been brought into closer association with God, these miracles have ceased, and that they are no longer needed, having been given merely for the establishment of the Church and then withdrawn. It is strange that if man has advanced in the divine life as many suppose, until he is much closer to God than the ancients were, that there should not be a greater display of God's power in the working of miracles rather than that such manifestations should alto-gether cease. This thought leads to the question, "Are men closer to God now than formerly?" and also another, "Were miracles designed merely for the purpose of establishing the Christian Church after which they were withdrawn because no longer needed?

A search of the Scriptures fails to show any statement of revelation or inspiration indicating that under the gospel the manifestations of God's power in miracles were to cease, but God is declared to be unchangeable, and impartial, dealing alike with all men who come to him in the appointed way. The first mistake made by many of our friends is in supposing that miracles were given for the purpose of building up and establishing the Christian Church. The plain statement of Jesus is that "These signs shall follow them that believe," one of which is "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

The working of miracles was by no means made a leading feature of his work by Christ. True, he healed gentile as well as Jew, those who were not his followers as well as those who were, but in no instance did Jesus use his miraculous power of healing for the pur ose of inducing men to become his followers, and when he performed a miracle it was always upon the basis of actual necessity, and upon evidence of faith in those concerned. Believers were not made so by miraculous manifestations but by the preaching of the truth, and as shown by the statement already quoted the "signs" were to follow the believer and not to go before him.

Jesus, according to the Scriptures, is the possessor of eternal life, and he came to impart life to men distributing freely to all who were willing to put themselves in harmony with his law of life through obedience. The statement that "greater works than these shall ye do," was not necessarily restricted to the eleven apostles, for when Paul and others succeeded to the apostolic office they wrought works of similar character as those of the original eleven, and even others than the apostles also wrought mir-That the Lord designed that miracles should continue in his Church is sustained by abundance of Scripture, of which we can notice but little here.

The Holy Spirit was the power by which all these miracles were done and by which the believers received other gifts of faith, wisdom, knowledge, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, etc., as taught in the twelfth chapter of the first letter to the Corinthians. As reflecting exactly and fully the character of God, the Holy Spirit is as un-changeable as is God himself, and hence whenever it is operative it will be with the same manifestations and with the same results. But was the work of this Spirit restricted to the time of Jesus and the apostles, or was it designed to continue its work unchanged at all times?

When John taught regarding Christ that "He shall baptize you with the "Holy Ghost, and with fire," he made no restriction as to person or time, but indicated that the opportunity of receiving this baptism was open to all men who observed the requirements as it was with the water baptism. Jesus made no restriction as to time or persons when he said "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," except that they "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me." Winen Jesus taught the new birth of water and of the Spirit he used the evaterooB dorudO generic term "a man" mu spieglag & A ffly. Peter in promising the gift of the Holy Ghost to those who repent and are baptized in water said: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as of the manifestations of this Spirit referring to those in the Church, that "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." All of these passages show that the promise of the Holy Spirit with all of its gifts and blessings belonged to all men equally, regardless of time or place, upon the one condition only that they fulfill the necessary requirements.

The basis for the claim that these blessings were not designed for all men seems to be the historical fact that they ceased to be given after the days of the apostles, but this reason is unsound in the light of what Jesus promised that "These signs shall follow them that believe." He also said "My word shall not pass away," it cannot fail, and just as long as the gospel remains upon earth, and there are men to preach to, the promises of that gospel remain unchanged and unrestricted. If the results promised to those who believe do not follow today, it can be only for one of two reasons, viz., either that God has failed in fulfilling his promises, or that man has failed to fulfill the requirements. No Bible believer will admit that God fails in any promise he has made, so that the final conclusion as to why his promises are not fulfilled now is that man is not doing his part and placing himself right before 'God so that he might be entitled to the promised blessings.

In the midst of so many different creeds, and churches, some denying this part of the gospel and some denying that, and all both Catholic and Protestant denying the direct work of the Holy Spirit with all of its manifestations, it is not difficult to see that there has been a general apostasy from the original gospel of Christ, and that men believe such a small part of the full gospel and obey even less, that God cannot fulfill his promises to them.

It is hardly consistent for the "Word of Truth" to urge that "the working of Miracles" cannot be performed today, and because the Latter Day Saints believe that God is true to his promises, and that under the restored gospel those who fulfill the requirements taught in the New Testament do today receive the same blessings, to say that it is not so. These things have been taught by the Saints for many years and the many thousands of men and women who have obeyed the restored gospel have found to their soul's satisfaction that the promises of God are true. It is neither the desire nor privilege of the Saints to parade these things before the world to induce people to unite with them, but in harmony with the ancient teaching the signs "follow" the believer, their purpose being to "Confirm the word," as stated in Mark 16:20. If the Lord does not confirm the word as taught by the reverend editor of the "Word of Truth" and his co-religionists, it would be well for them to begin a searching investigation to determine the reason why. The Lord's confirmation follows his indorsement.

In every instance when men or devils sought a sign from Christ for the purpose of "demonstrating" his power, they were refused. Satan asked him to "demonstrate" his sonship by making bread of stones but the Lord held to the written word. Others who asked for a display of his power were rebuked, and shall Latter Day Saints boast of these things to the world and meet every demand for a "demonstration" by performing a sign? Should they do so it would be evidence sufficient to prove them unchristian and their practices unscriptural.

God is the same today, the gospel unchanged, the promises unrepealed, but the requirements are the same too and as men will fulfill these they will find every promise of God fulfilled unto them.

13 CORDENSION NOT THE WAY THE CCRRESPONDENCE

Manchester, Texas, May 27.

Dear Ensign.—I will write you in regard to a debate that took place at Manchester, Texas, last March between Elder W. P. Bootman of the Reorganized Chruch, and Elder R. E. Davis of the Missionary Baptist Church. I read an article that appeared in the "Baptist Flag" of April 9th, written by Elder Fletcher who was the moderator for Elder Davis in said debate. In said article he mis-represents the details of the debate to such an extent that the article is hardly worthy of notice

Elder Fletcher seems to want to enlarge on Elder Davis as a debater by saying he is at home in a debate. If Davis is at home in a debate he certainly didn't enjoy being at home, especially when W. P. Bootman was

In the first place Elder Davis failed to touch Elder Bootman's argument at all, he seemed to have centered his mind on "Joe Smith." He said that he was going to prove that he was a horse thief and many other things dishonorable but he failed to do anything of the kind, but did his own cause much damage.

Davis said if Bootman would show him in the Bible where John the Baptist ever baptized any one after he baptized Christ he would quit the debate, pack up his books and go home. Bootman read John 3:22,23, and told him to be true to his word but of course he failed. Davis the Book of Mormon was copied from Manuscrip Found, but Bootman produced both books, and he never rounds the again.

Bootman brought up evidence against the Baptist Church that I don't suppose Davis knew was in existence by the way it surprised him.

When Davis took the affirmative he never touched his

When Davis took the affirmative he never touched his church proposition in his first speech at all but jumped and howled "Old Joe Smith, the Impostor" 42 times. Fletcher stated in his article that Davis proved that all of Bootman's histories against the Baptists had the names of the writers clipped out. Such statements need no refutation. He also said Boothman said the church was in the wilderness or apostasy 1,800 years. Boot-man said 1,260 years and proved it. Fletcher stated that Bootman got angry and threw mud, but Davis had a smiling face and threw no mud. Davis would get so angry he couldn't sit still, and would jump up and interrupt Bootman every little while. He said at the close of the debate that a certain young lady told him that day that another young lady told her that Bootman was living at the time with two wives, and said the lady that told him was present in the church at that time. Bootman ask the lady to stand up but no one stood up. Davis afterward told some of the saints who she was. The lady who he said told him about Bootman having two wives the work before a with problem. two wives, then went before a notary public and made affidavit to the effect that she told him nothing of the kind. Fletcher got enough of the debate and wanted to go home but no one would offer to take him to the rail-road which was 12 miles away. He certainly went down

At the time of the debate there were only nine saints this branch and there were four baptized when it closed. My wife and I are two, and my wife's sister and her husband are the other two.

Bro. W. P. Bootman did a grand work here, he is a fine man. My father knew him when he was a boy, also his father and brothers, they were a fine family. Bro. Bootman and I were born in Cass County, Michigan, about two and a half miles apart, he was raised there, while I was raised in the west, therefore I never met him to recollect him until he came here to hold the debate with R. E. Davis, although I have heard father speak of him often.

I write this that no one may be deceived by the fabrication in the "Flag"

Editor Ensign:—If I mistake not, this will be the second time during this conference year that I have attempted to trouble the columns of our church publications, as I very much dislike to blow my own horn, as at times it may be somewhat out of tune, in fact to my mind it mever had a very charming sound, nevertheless, it is the gift of God, and amply good for what it was intended for if properly used—hence thankful for same. During the year I have in my weakness tried to make proper use of my time, but have nothing over which to boast The number can be counted on my hands, that have been baptized and trust that not one of them have been converted by the writer. In fact I do not know that I have ever converted a single soul in my life, lest they should be my own disciples but—prefer to believe that God by the power of his Spirit accomplished that part of the work,—hence his disciples. I can only be to God, just what a tool is to me while working with it part of the work—hence his disciples. I can only be to God, just what a tool is to me while working with it. God forbid that I should ever become top heavy and fall. I prefer to remain in the gospel net, and continue to he narrow constructed enough to be on the side of right, at the risk of being considered fogy, or over conservative. There is a possibility of becoming a crank on some things of course, but it's better to be a crank and be right than a crank and be wrong. I can afford to follow a man or set of men just as far as he, of they to follow a man, or set of men, just as far as he, or they follow Christ and his word, but no farther, as there is danger across the line, there can be no evolution in the gospel, as that as well as God is unchangeable.

I have no objection to evolution, but it must be in that we become better men and women, ever holding fast to the rod of iron that leads to everlasting life. May God help us so to live and advance.

help us so to live and advance.

During the year my mission headquarters have been at Malad City, Idaho, where we have a branch of some noble freehearted Welsh saints, who have done what they could to make the missionary comfortable, and at home, possibly somewhat against their own convenience. The night before I left the sisters prepared a farewell supper for me at the home of Bro. and Sr. D. J. Williams, a good and enjoyable time was had till about midnight. Their pocket-books had been converted to the gospel as well as their souls, as they kindly remembered me in a financial way, thereby enabling me to return homeward. May God reward them abundantly.

From there I went to Salt Lake City. Attended the Utah District Conference, Feb. 7-8. Attendance not large, but a good spirit prevailed from the first to last. I labored in the following places in Idaho,—Malad City, St. John, Elkhorn, Arbon, and Pocatello. In Utah,—Logan, Brigham, Ogden, Plain City, Salt Lake, City, Midvale, Murray'. Sandy, Pleasant Grove, Provo, Heber, Springville, and generally speaking the saints through-Springville, and generally speaking the saints through-out my mission field have been very good and kind to me. A night or two before departing for the east, the sisters of the Salt Lake Branch sprung a surprise on me at the hospitable home of Sr. W. E. Winkworth and son William, where a nice lunch was served, it was a pleasant far well of music, song and joy, which might have been full but for the vacant chair made so by the death and de-parture of our estimable brother and High Priest, W. E.

Winkworth, who on last July was called hence. Our loss is his gain. He was a noble man, and greatly missed, On about midnight we reluctuantly gave the parting hand to saints we had learned to love by reason of the gospel, and so ended my second year's labors in Utah and Idaho.

On my way East I stopped off at Denver twelve hours, thence to Lincoln, Neb., to visit a brother and family. Called at the saints meeting place and preached for them once by request of their branch president, Elder J. G. Munsell, the right man in the right place. My next stop was Omaha, thence to Independence, Joplin and home at Tigris Mo., March 14th. Found wife well but lonely. My first mission was at home by her side,—and my last may be,—although my greatest ambition is to do all the good I can and labor for the Master in the in-terest of souls, and to live and die with the gospel harness on, and would gladly return to Utah or any other mission field, near or far if conditions would permit, providing that God and the church so directed.

I am convinced more than ever that our labors among the Brighamites, can not and will not bring about very favorable results, until some great change takes place. Nothing short of a marvelous manifestation of God's pow-Nothing short of a marvelous manifestation of God's pow-er will ever open their eyes as a people. It is true there are many good honest people among them, yet blind as a stone wall, as well as oath-bound. Talk about the Latter Day Saints and the Brighamite church uniting, never, the breach is too great. They still stand pat for polygamy and are practicing it, both new and old, since the manifesto and are practicing it, both new and ois, since the minutesvas given in 1890, together with other doctrines that are contrary to the three standard books of the church. In fact they claim four. If ever that people are converted to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, it will be through the power of God, and loving kindness on our part, or the ones that are called upon to labor among them. We may be thankful if we reach the honest in heart among them, the same as among other denominations. God speed the re demption of Zion.

Yours in gospel bonds, J. C. Chrestensen.

Dear Ensign:—It has been some time since I wrote anything to your valuable pages. I cannot write as in-teresting letters as others although I hope it will not be amiss. There are a few saints located near Mays Hill who are trying to let their light shine. We are having prayermeeting every Wednesday night and we surely enjoy the blessed influence of the Holy Spirit. We are meeting every third Sunday with very good interest, although not without prejudice. There are several believing but is seems they are not ready to obey yet, but we hope to see a great harvesting in this part of God's vineyard. Pray for us saints that we may still forth until the victory is won. It has been six years be amiss. There are a few saints located near Mays God's vineyard. Fray for us same time, we may sain fight until the victory is won. It has been six years almost since I obeyed this glorious gospel and I would love for the saints to know how I am rejoicing, and I have reason to rejoice. My only child obeyed at the same time, and since husband and son-in-law, grand-son, one brother, and one sister and one brotherin-law. I have one more grand-son that has not obeyed but hope and pray that some day I'll see him with us too. I also have one sister-in-law, and my son-in-law is a presiding priest.

Pray for my brother who had a stroke of paralysis the third day of February. He was administered to several times and received a great blesing, but is not able to work yet. I also ask the prayer union for prayers in his hehalf.

I have never regretted the step I took in uniting with the church and am still growing stronger day by day. The way seems to grow brighter. Dear saints let us keep our lights burning brightly. I feel a deep sympathy for those that are isolated. Pray to our dear heavenly Father to come to you when you seem to be discouraged, for he said he would not forsake us if we will do his will, so let us live humbly, always praying for the upbuilding of this glorious. work. Praying for the welfare of Zion.

Your sister in Christ

Joplin, Mo., June 1.

Dear Ensign.—It has been some time since I contributed to your pages, it is with joy that I take my pen in hand to let you know that I am still in the faith and hope to continue to the end and receive the promised crown that awaits the faithful. I do know of a surety that the latter day work is of God and that the promises of the Lord do and will follow them that have faith in him and his word.

God has manifested himself to us in this Joplin Branch by his power in the case of Sister Mary Martin who the doctors thought would have to undergo an operation for tumor. Through administration God came to her rescue, and ten minutes later arose from her bed. She is able to be about and on Sunday May 31st, she came to church and was administered to again and the power of God was made manifest and she bore testimony to his goodness. Yours in the faith,

J. W. Thorn.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

J. E. F. Smith, St. Joseph, Mo.—I have been testifying to this latter day work for many years. I have received great blessings, although at times I have been very low in the faith, but God has renewed his covenant with me, and magnified his blessings. I give him the glory. I have often taken the advantage of the opportunity to pass the traveling elder's a piece of money. I want to do all of the good I can. Now dear young saints, I have known some good young saints, who had a nice bank account that thought because they were young, they could do nothing in a financial way even when the work was suffering. Let us do good and we shall receive a reward.

Belle Lenon, Wagoner, Okla.—I am thankful to be permitted to write to your columns once more. I am burdened with the cares of life, with trials, temptations, sickness, and the separation of loved ones, being left alone to care for my children, and having many hardships in my home. I ask the prayers of all the saints who read these lines that the Lord may direct me in what I should do Sr. M. A. Sargant, Fisher, Ark.—Nathing gives me more pleasure than this latter day work. When I came into the Church a year and a half ago I was not as thoroughly the Church a year and a half ago I was not as thoroughly convinced of its truth as I am now. I want to always do what the Lord wants me to do. Brn. J. T. Riley and J. Smith were with us in March and preached, and the good seed was sown. If they are not permitted to return to this field I pray the Lord to bless them wherever they go.

Elsie Coleman, Winslow, Ind .- We assure you that the Ensign is always welcomed, as we look forward from the reception of one paper to the coming of the next. They bring us the food which we need to keep us strong in the work as we are the only saints here. We are oraying that some good may be done here this summer. Death has come to our home and called away our darling baby and it seems that it is more than we can stand, we ask the saints to pray for us.

Joseph B. Lampert Jr., Independence, Mo. I am now a patient at the Sanitarium for weak heart and have been administered to. O, what a grand privilege to be among the saints. If the Lord had not come to my resthe Lord had not come to my rescue I would not have been here for the dectors had told me that I could not live. I thank the Lord for his mercy to me, and the saints for their prayers in my behalf.

Noah Johnson, Union Center, Wis. I feel that it is as necessary to have the Ensign as it is my daily food. It is the life giving stream for by it we hear of the won-derful works of God. Wife and I are the only saints we know of within twenty miles, and would love to be with the saints but if this is where God wants me, well and good. I have taught in the Methodist Sunday school. If any of the saints pass through our village we be pleased to have them call on us.

Bertha E. Buttery, Norwalk, Conn. We do not have very much preaching so the Church papers are very welcome. The Woman's Auxiliary Department is a great help to sisters living away from the larger branches, and I often feel to thank the writers for the many good things found therein. Also the letters from the brothers and sis-

Alice Richard, Bourbon, Mo. I have been in the Church about three years, having been baptized at Bourbon, September 18, 1910, by J. A. Dowker. I know this work is of God, though in looking back over my past life I see where I have made many mistakes. We have a branch of about forty-five members, with Sunday school and preaching every Sunday morning and prayer meeting every Wednesday night, also preaching Sunday nights. This branch is in a way to go ahead and by faithfulness hope to overcome. e to overcome. I ask the prayers of the saints, that I become useful in the service of God.

Mollie Jarvis. Dibble, Okla. We send fifty cents for the Ensign we have been trying to do without. Having taken it three years we miss it so much as it is our preacher. My husband is not a member of the church but he said "I wish we had the paper for Sunday." He wants to hear a ser-want the prayers of God's people for me and my family.

Mrs. Grace Austin, Montrose, Colo.—Please pray for my dear mother Nettie Roatcap, and Florence Blowers at your special meeting for the sick and afflicted.

Mrs. J. M. Smith, Excelsior Springs, Mo.—I have just moved here and am anxious to know if there are any saints living near here, if so I wish they would write or come to see us. If there is an elder near here he will be welcome. We live one mile and a quarter north of town on the old Bates Farm. I have lived among saints along as I can remember, and still want their association. My husband is not a member of the Church—is waiting to become good enough.

L. Wilson, Pleasant Hill, Mo .- I would like to s church debt paid off before next conference. Let us bring our tithing and offerings unto the storehouse of the Lord and pay off the debt and have a surplus in the treasury with which to help the poor and needy. In this way we can let our light shine, and prejudice will be removed from the hearts of the people. I desire prayers that I may do something for the cause of Christ.

A. C. Silvers, Vera, Okla.-The work is onward in the Spring River District, with more calls for preaching than we can answer. Last Wednesday night I had a little round with a Disciple minister. The people are losing faith in his claim of "The Bible and the Bible alone." I am now at Vera where Bro. Quick opened the work some few years ago and did such a grand work. There is a fine branch here now and a good interest is being manifested in our meeting.

ARE THE DIFFERENT CHURCHES PARTS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST? By J. A. Koehler.

Anybody interested in this question should read the whole of the twelfth chapter of First Cor-

As a sort of text for our argument we will use Eph. 4:16. "The whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body***"

One of the questions in which many religious people are intensely interested is whether the Church of Christ is composed of the several churches who worship and conduct their affairs separately and independently. This may be ascertained by the determining first what the functions of the church are, and second whether the churches in their present form and relations are performing those functions, or whether a union of the several parts of the church in other certain definite relations is essential to the performance of those functions.

If we allow that each of the independent church organizations is complete, so that (not-withstanding it has no connection with other churches) each performs the functions of the Church of Christ, then we must admit that there are more churches of Christ than one. Or if we grant that the different churches that operate independently are simply parts of the whole, then we must also grant that a part of the body is capable of doing the work of the whole, and that a union of the parts is not essential to the existence of the whole.

There is but one Church of Christ.

I give herewith three quotations which are very clear and definite on this point, and which ought to be final. Eph. 4:4. "There is ONE body,***" That this refers to the church is evidenced by the context. Rom. 12:5, "So we, being many, are ONE BODY in Christ, and every one members of another." I Cor. 12:20, "But now there are many members, yet but one body," I Cor. 12:13, "By one spirit are we all baptized into ONE body." If this were not true Christ would be divided. Perhaps we all agree on this point. The next question arising is:

Does This "One" Church Exist in Fragmentary Form?

That is, is the church in pieces, and are the different parts disconnected? Notice particularly: "The whole body" is "fitly joined together" and compacted. To compact means to unite, that is make one, and parts of a thing; to combine into a connected system as a whole: as, the parts of the human body are strongly compacted. See any complete dictionary). To join together is to bring together so as to form a whole, to combine. Manifestly the church cannot at once be a combined whole, a unit, and at the same time exist in a disconnected state.

The twelfth chapter of First Corinthians elaborates this thought still further: v. 24, 25, "God hath tempered the body together***That there should be no schism in the body." Nothing bearing upon this question is more significant than this statement. "Schism" relates particularly to the dividing or splitting up of a church into fractions or opposing bodies because of differences on questions of belief or administration. This is definite; there is to be "NO schism" in the Church of Christ. It is true that the primitive church became disrupted, but those who left it were a sort of "offal:" "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they were not all of us." 1 John 2:19.

If the Scriptures have the value attributed to them as a guide in matters religious, this point is settled: the Church of Christ is not in pieces having no inter-dependence, and operating under separate heads, and having no common bond of union.

The next question that arises is:

Is There Such a Bond of Union Between the Different Churches?

If so, what is it? "There is one Lord (that is one church or body or organization), one faith (that is one system of belief or creed), one baptism (that is one form of administration of law, one government)." Eph. 4:5. Now in all candor, can all or any number of independent churches be at once ONE church? The answer is patent-NO. Are our many contradictory creeds or beliefs, of faiths, at once in agreement with each other? Are they one? Common sense answers: NO. Do our different and independent administrations of law (government) have one form, and do they emanate from one centre? All must answer: NO. Then there is no such bond of union between the churches of Christendom as exists between the parts of the Church of Christ. We are compelled by the constitution of our minds to conclude that these churches are not all parts of the Church of Christ, and hence it cannot be that taken altogether they compose his Church.

Some of the Functions of the Church.

The real value of the church lies in its capacity to give "salvation" to its membership: "The Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved." Acts 2:47. "By me if any man enter, he shall be saved." Jn. 10:8. "Christ is the head of the Church; and he is the Savior of the body." Eph. 5:23-27. But salvation is the end or the result of the Church's effort or activities; it is not the beginning nor the process. The process, the kind of thing the church does to save its members, is its primary function; and it is also the thing above all other things that determines its value.

Concerning the manner that salvation was to be wrought out within the church, the Bible says Jesus gave himself for the Church "that he might sanctify and cleanse it (which is saving it) with the washing of water by the word." Eph. 5:26. What the washing, or cleansing, or saving process is then, is determined by "the word." New Testament is replete with evidence that the practices of the Church were those set forth in "the gospel," which is "the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1:16). It was the fulfillment of these gospel processes that made the Church an effective agent unto salvation: "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved,***" 1 Cor. 15:1,2.

Now then, Jesus gave the church (that is"He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets;" etc., which go to make up the church) to carry on these saving processes "until we all come into a unity of the faith," Eph. 4:14. The effects of this functioning was that "The manifestation of the Spirit was given to every man" 1 Cor. 12:7; Further the membership was thoroughly indoctrinated so that they were not "carried about by every wind of doctrine." In this connection we should remember that the principles of the doctrine (or gospel) of Christ are (Heb. 6.1,2) repentance, faith, laying on of hands, baptisms, resurrection, eternal judgment. This code of rules was observed throughout all the congregations of the Church of Christ, and gave the same results wherever practiced, as all students of the New Testament well know.

Again. When a piano puts forth its functions there is at least musical tone, and if operated harmonious musical sounds. If you were sitting beside what had the appearance of a piano that someone appeared to be playing on. and at the same time you knew that it was not putting forth any piano sounds, you would know at once that the piano was not functioning. Similarly we may know whether the Church is functioning or not by the presence or abscense of those things which mark its functioning. The marks of the functioning of the Church, that is the effects of the activities of the apostles, prophets, pastors, etc., are (among others) "Unity of the faith" "the manifestation of the Spirit," and the stability of mind expressed in the words "no more tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine."

Is This The Picture The Churches Present? This is important; it has a great significance. Have either the separate or combined efforts of

Have either the separate or combined efforts of the churches brought about any appreciable unity of faith? Are not the differences of faith in the churches the very marks by which we identify one as Latter Day Saints, another as Mormon, another as Catholic, etc. etc? We may more or less agree on the idea of the existence of God and Christ as the objects of our devotions; and that the end of faith is salvation; or even that the gospel is the means, but certainly not upon the all-important question of what the gospel processes are. This is important, for there is only one gospel (Gal. 1:6-10), and its processes are the things that give the Church of Christ its value.

Have our creeds been stable? Or have we added to and taken from them from time to time?

Answering these qutestions we paint the picture of Christendom; a picture whose distinctive features are entirely at variance with the features which characterize the functioning of the church of Christ. Honestly, what must we conclude;

Why Not the Churches Do the Work of the Church of Christ?

Different churches have different organizations. Some have only pastors, elders, and deacons. Grading upward we have many kinds of organizations until we reach that magnificient structure brought into existence by the Master himself with apotles, prophets, elders, pastors, teachers, deacons, bishops, seventies, evangelists, helps and governments, gifts of healing, etc.

Between the officers of one structure and the others there is no coordination or reciprocal action. It is evident therefore that there is no organic union. But in the Church of Christ there is unity, coordination, and reciprocal action. All the parts are "fitly joined together;" they form a connected whole. (Eph. 2:18-22, 1 Cor.12:18-25). This is necessary in order that it may do its work.

To illustrate: A sewing machine is one article. It is a body composed of many members. It has a tread, wheels, belt, drive-rods, screws, schuttle schuttle carries, bobbin, needle, presser-foot, and other parts. The object of the union is that there shall be "effectual working in the measure of every part," that is that it may do the particular work, or function, of good sewing. Now suppose we destroy the connection between the vital parts. if we just loosen the screw that holds the needle so that the needle gets loose from its socket, how much sewing will we be able to do? None. Simply because a sewing-machine is a piece of mechanism having certain definite parts in certain definite relations: i. e. "fitly joined together;" and unless the essential parts exist in these relations it should be called by some other name than "sewing machine." The absolute failure to produce the desired results throughout the churches which do not have the essential parts in their proper relations speaks the wisdom of God in ordaining that "there should be no schism in the body."

Suppose that wife's neighbors came into her house and took her sewing-machine apart, each one carrying off such parts as in her judgment would do the work as well out of their proper relations as all of the parts would in their proper relations. Would we say that these neighbors were each in possesion of a machine because she had certain parts of the original? Would the machine still have its existence, that is could we say that together these neighbors had a sewingmachine? Let us remember that a sewingmachine is an organization of certain definite parts in certain definite relations. A thing that looks like a machine that does not do the work of a machine is not a machine. It is true that the material which originally made up the machine may still exist; but the machine as a machine has lost its identity through having the arrangement of parts that makes a machine destroyed. A thing that cannot be made to do the work of a sewingmachine is not a sewing-machine.

The good Lord built a wonderful "saving" machine; it had all the parts necessary to do its work; it had only those parts which were necessary: "Those members of the body which seem more feeble are necessary," 1 Cor. 12:22. But the Lord also had some neighbors (so to speak) who got into his house (Acts 20:29, Jude 3,4) and destroyed its unity; some took elders and teachers; some took deacons too; some took some parts and some others in varying quantities. Each of these neighbors has been trying to make the part of the church he took do the work of the whole church. And now we have a sadder spectacle than if some sub-normal person had gathered up some fragments of a machine, and was now seated at his imaginary machine sewing (in his imagination); with the additional seemingly incredible fact of many people patronizing an imaginary, or at least very imperfect, machine, with the hope of sometime getting perfect results.

Even if all the parts that originally made up the Church of Christ were in the hands of Christendom, they might still not be the Church of Christ for the parts of the Church are "Fitly joined together and compacted." But the essential parts are missing. Note: the church of Christ is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets" (Eph. 2:20).

The foundation of a double-thread sewing-machine is a shuttle, bobbin, needle, feed, presserfoot. If we could do the kind of sewing desired without the parts that hold these together in proper relations we could have a sewing-machine without any other parts. The drawers, and certain other parts, may be dispensed with without destroying its sewing qualities; but who would be so foolish as to think they could sew with a foundation part missing, say a needle, or a schuttle? Or without the application of the power that sets, and keeps the machine in action? Yet this is the very mistake that has been made in relation to the church. The kind of machine that gave the results pictured in the New Testament-unity of the faith, the manifestations of the Spirit, etc .had for its foundation parts "apostles and prophets;" it had pastors and seventies, elders and many other parts, all of which were necessary to the kind of results produced. But Christendom has long since abandoned the idea that foundation parts are necessary, and have therefore abandoned the idea of "apostles and prophets," etc.; and it has been trying to get the same kind of results (to sew on a machine without a needle, or a bobbin) as was gotten anciently through the very means they have abandoned. Of course it has failed. Failure is the only thing that can result when we try to do with one sort of machine a thing that can only be done with a machine of a different type. In this connection we read Paul's description of the Church in action.—I Cor.

There is still a more peculiar feature than any we have mentioned. It would seem that anyone who was anxious to do sewing of a particular quality which no known machine would produce, would welcome the announcement that by some good fortune a machine capable of doing good work was now procurable. And yet when we annonuce to the world that GOD had rebuilt his Church by restoring the destroyed parts and powers, making it possible to enjoy the coveted blessing of old, the announcement was anything but well received, and people seemed angry because the very things they seemed to long for were now made possible through a Church with apostles and prophets, etc.

But the church is here; it has its original parts in their original relations, and with their original powers. The world now has its chance of profiting by its presence. Anyone interested in making his religious activities count to the best advantage can well afford to fight his way through opposition, pride, tradition, or what not (as men did in ancient times), into the ranks of that magnificent structure which makes possible today the greatest blessings that men ever enjoyed in this life; and which, through the wonderful sanctifying and cleansing processes comprehended in its constitutional law, the gospel, assures its devotees of the coveted goal sought through religious effort: eternal life in the presence of the great Creator.

TRUE RELIGION IS MORE THAN THEORY.

By Elder J. E. Vanderwood.

Viewing things as they appear before us from day to day, and observing the fruitage of skepticism and doubt, and also the fruitage of religiousness and faith we are forced to conclude, from a logical point of view, that of all things in this world the life and philosophy of Jesus of Nazareth are paramount. Hitherto men have laid considerable stress upon formality, creed, dogma, conventionality, and the like; but it occurs to us that now is the time to demonstrate by actual life, and not by theory only, the advantages of true Christianity. The world has al-ways been well provided with false religion in its multifarious forms, and the present generation is not altogether freed from it. Yet throughout all generations of the past there have been those who were a savor of life in their time, and we still have those who are "thesalt of the earth" so that generally speaking we can behold the dark or the bright side of the picture of life, according to our own fancies and peculiar notions; but we desire to be understood when we assert the fact that our life here and hereafter, is or will be, just what we choose to make it. For example, the sluggard or the spendthrift will always have powerty. The selfish and untruthalways have poverty. The selfish and untruthful will siways have distress of mind and unrest of conscience. The covetous and wanton will always have unsatisfied longings and bestial dethat can never be gratified satisfactorily. But the pure and the meek shall have peace of mind and satisfaction of heart; the true and charitable shall have joy and liberty, not only in the hereafter but in the present. It is just as natural for the pure and the meek to have a peaceful mind and a contented spirit as it is for grapes to grow on the grape-vine, such is the fruitage of that kind of life. It is just as natural for a truthful and charitable person to have joy and liberty as it is for the apple tree to produce apples. And what is more, the soil that now produces briers and thorns, or thistles and bramble-bush may in a few short months be converted into a bounteous harvest field, producing abundantly the life giving and life sustaining grain, or in a few short years it may be converted into a fruitful orchard or vineyard producing fruits that possess both flavor and nutrition.

So in like manner by the proper cultivating of our lives and characters we may grow the fruit that is both joyous and satisfying. Let it be distinctly understood that you cannot give me joy, but you can cause me to find it for myself. I cannot give knowledge to another, but I may cause another to find it for himself, so in like manner Christ is not going to give, and cannot give us life, but he offers us that which will enable us to find life for ourselves. As a man sows, so shall he also reap. And so it is that he who conquers self is the world's greatest benefactor, and as one writer has expressed it: "He who would reform the world, let him begin by reforming himself." When one has reformed himself he wields an influence for good in the world, since like must also attract like, and as the steel that comes in contact with the magnet becomes a magnet itself and thus attracts by reason of its magnetic power the steel that is near it, so likewise the lives that have come in touch with the Christ life and character, will by virtue of the Christ life within draw humanity to them and thus enable them also to partake of the magnetic power of his love. So it may be readily observed that true religion is not a dead form, but a living reality. It is not subscribing to a creed, formality, or dogmatic phases, but it is the unfolding and growing of a life, a character that approaches near unto the life of the Christ. It is true that a dark cloud may lie along our horizon, but the sun is still shining somewhere and will ere long shed its brilliant rays upon us, unless we so obscure ourselves that its life giving, life sustaining rays cannot penetrate our abode; so in like manner we may be traveling the barren desert of doubt and skepticism, but the refreshing waters, the sheltering palms of God's goodness and love may be reached and realized by us unless we persist in remaining and famishing in that parched desert. We may be carrying with us unnecessary things, we may be cumbered with theories and whims that make the journey of life toilsome and wearisome, and if this be true we have the greater need for an application of the Christ philosophy to our lives. And when we have come in touch with the Christ life and partaken of his nature we will slough off those unnecessary and cumbersome burdens and habits, and will bear with us on our way the spirit of good cheer that will make the journey pleasant and the burden light, while the path will be smooth. True religion then, the religion of Christ, is intended to be a source of strength and comfort, a help to mankind, in all the vicissitudes of life, and that which is not this and more too is not the religion of Christ. The religion of Christ is not an extra burden to be assumed, it is a relief; it does not hamper, it liberates; it does not stulify the life of man, it fertilizes, enriches, sweetens, and makes it more prolific. True religion comprehends all that is true and good, and it excludes all that is false and degenerating. God is good, and God is true, therefore true religion comprehends God, and God cannot be comprehended only as he is revealed to us in the life and character of Christ, so whatever may bear the name of religion in this world, and does not produce the fruits of the Christ life is religion in name only, and the individual who professes to be religious and does not manifest in conduct and conversation the life of Christ does not know Christ and does not in the least comprehend God, and is therefore only tinctured with false religion.

If therefore you desire to arrive at a proper conception of Christ and his religion, lay aside all your prejudices and preconceived notions and read carefully and intelligently the life of Christ as it is portrayed in the four gospels and you will diser the truth of his words werein he says, "seek and ye shall find," for you will discover the sim-plicity and grandure of his life and religion, and you will find it to be free from dogmatism, and unnecessary and cumbersome observances which hamper and stultify. But you will find it preg-nant with truth, life, liberty, joy, consolation, and peace, also love and purity.

No one can come in touch with Christ and remain ignorant, bigoted, selfish, malicious or intolerant. Christ said to the woman at the well in Samaria: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." thought is this; he that has been refreshed and rejuvenated by the Christ spirit and the Christ life, shall have that within him that will ever satisfy, that will keep him from fainting and famishing, and that will enable him to set into operation causes that will enable another to find the fountain of living water that will quench forever the thirst and fever of life.

True religion then is something that is practical, something that sustains and comforts the life of man, it is something that fits him for life and duty where all else fails. The man that possesses true religion possesses true life, and true life means a character that is fully developed, rounded out, properly poised, a joy to self and a benediction to others.

The religion of Christ if applied to the life will make man better fitted for the duties of life, it will make him a better citizen, a better neighbor, a better husband, a better father. It means the applying of a philosophy to life that can be utilized and made practical in all our intercourse with our fellowmen. True religion is something to be lived, not to be sung about only. So the final test is not what does a man profess, but what kind of a life does he live, what spirit does he manifest? And so the philosophy of St. Paul is yet true wherein he says: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." I do not manifest the Spirit of Christ I am an alien to the kingdom of God, no matter how many church ordinances and ceremonies I may have observed.

So it is that not all who are in the church are Christians, neither are all they who are without the church so far away from Christ, but the church of Christ is an organization wherein the life of Christ should be developed and lived by all who enter therein. April 11, 1914.

SYNOPSIS OF A SERMON BY O. R. MILLER.

"Beware of false prophets****By their fruits ye shall know them."—Matt. 7:15,20.

The reformers did a good work, but they all admitted that the church was only a fragmentary existence and should be completed by the setting up of the kingdom with apostles, etc., as it was anciently. Joseph Smith came claiming a restoration. The church was organized April 6, 1830. Six members composed the organization first, but it grew rapidly and fourteen years lated it numbered more than 150,000 throughout the world. They called themselves Latter Day Saints. St. Paul, St. Luke and other followers of truth, at the time and prior to Christ's mission to earth, were Former Day Saints. The church when organized in 1830 was given the name, "The Church of Jesus Christ." It still bears that name and always will. The people of God have always been called saints. The name "Christian" is a nickname which was given the followers of Christ by their enemies anciently. They were first called Christians at Antioch. The members of the church re-established in 1830, were called Mormons by their enemies because they believed the teachings of the Book of Mormon.

On the 14th day of April, 1832, one Brigham Young was baptized into the church. In February, 1835, he was chosen to be an apostle. On the 14th day of April, 1840, he was chosen president of the twelve apostles. In the month of June, 1844, Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were murdered by a cruel mob! The flock was left without a shepherd. Many false teachers and false prophets arose declaring themselves leaders. Brigham Young was one among the many. Later, he and a few members started for Utah and settled in Salt Lake valley, July 24, 1847. Others followed till about 10,000 of the 150,000 had been led away by him. They began to take unto themselves wives, each, as they journeyed to Salt Lake valley. In August, 1852, Brigham Young brings to view a revelation which he claimed was given through Joseph Smith. But remember, Joseph Smith had been dead eight years. It was not the fruits of Mr. Smith, for it did not resemble in the least any of his writings or revelations. You may examine the Book of Mormon, as well as the revelations given through him, and you will learn that they strongly denounce polygamy and concubinage, while they hold high the standard of ethics! By their fruits ye shall know them!"

courts of the United States have twice decided that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true and lawful successor of the original church and that Brigham Young and his followers have departed from the faith and pure practices of the church. When Joseph and Hyrum Smith were killed, Hyrum's widow and children were lured away to Utah by Brigham Young, while the wife and sons of Joseph Smith stood aloof. So today Joseph F. Smith is president of the Brigham Young apostate branch (Brigham Young having died in 1877), while Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith is president of the original church which was organized in 1830. Joseph F. Smith is living in Salt Lake City, married to five wives, living in open defiance of the laws of our nation and our God. Joseph Smith the son of the prophet, is living in Independence, Mo., a law abiding citizen, who has lived a noble life. I have simply related facts.

CHRISTIANITY UNREAL AND REAL.

Unfaithfulness to the light always avenges itself by and by. The punishment that comes to the man who knows and professes truth which he does not put into practice is of a peculiar sort: his light turns into darkness. He still, of course, holds the words, the statements of his belief, and he may thunder loud in affirmation and defense of his truth; but, somehow, the reality has gone out of it. It seems like a dream business, this whole matter of gospel and salvation, and trust and prayer, and hereafter, and such other spiritual principles as he holds. His declaration of them sounds hollow to himself, as sounding brass. His conviction is merely professional, or maintained through party zeal. whole thing seems unreal. He has not genu-ine personal intrest in those things, though he feels bound to God and men to keep up the appearance. He has no true faith, though he would shrink in horror from avowing infidelity. His service of God is a treadmill. His days are spent without joy and hope. Beneath all make-believe his inmost self tells him that his religious life is but outward "sound and fury, signifying nothing," and that he is not really serving God. And when his heart condemns him, he dimly recognizes the attitude of Him who is greater than our hearts and knoweth all things. Thus fades the light of truth, and with it joy and hope and love and power. The shell of the religion if Christ only remains; the kernel is gone. In its stead is a bit of brown powderthe dust of former life and glory. It is not at the outset of the Christian life that such a condition occurs, not often in the hearts of the younger Christians; but it comes after a time of believing without doing, of professing and teaching while not seriously endeavoring to practice. Just as the evening shades bring on the night in gradual deepening twilight, so does the dim, dreamy dusk of unreality and darkness of unbelief gradually settle upon the soul that tries to hold the truth of God in mere word and thought and emotion without faithful obedience.

There is a remedy for that sense of unreality and lack of vital conviction. It is "Repent ye." What is it back in your life that you have tried to back and straighten it out with God and men. back and straightn it out with God and men. What is that sin, that secretly nurtured all this time, has been gnawing and eating out your life? Give it up now and turn again to God for forgiveness, and he will abundantly pardon. is that good work which months ago your heart impelled you to do, and you refused to make the necessary sacrifice and surrender? It was God working in you to will and do his good pleasure, and you denied him. Go back now and do it: or, if the opportunity is past, ask God to use you now in true willingness. You will be surprised how like the withered grass when the rain falls upon it, quickly your heart will revive-how your interest in prayer, in the Bible, in the worship of God, will spring up as in the days of old; and that sense of reality which you have sorely missed comes back to you, and with it hope and joy and peace and love and genuine zeal for God. Only by repentance and a return to the path of obedience can you regain and retain the reality of the faith in Christ,-Gospel Advocate.

REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE HOME AND CHILD WELFARE DEPARTMENT.

During the past year, the interests of the department herein represented have been to a large extent my first nsideration. This may not have been apparent to ne engaged in its work, because I have not come as consideration. closely in touch with its membership as I should have heen glad to have done.

At the beginning of the year, I was furnished with a list of twenty-eight Home and Child Welfare local departments. This number has increased until it is now

Of this number, there are several where the Home and Child Welfare leaflets are not in use, though we have a list of fifty-four addresses to which the leaflets are going regularly, in packages of from ten to one hundred, evidently for department uses. The subscriptions are for evidently for department uses. The subscriptions are for the most part well paid, up. Four are one year or more in arrears, fourteen are a few months behind, and the remainder are up to date or paid in advance. We are now having a thousand printed each month, the mailing list calling for about eight hundred and fifty.

The preparation of these leaflets has constituted the arduous work of the year for this department.

After my election, last April, I chose Sr. Christiana alyards as my assistant, and this choice was ratified by the Advisory Board.

Together we considered carefully the needs to be met by the work of our department, seeing much to be done, and feeling the seriousness of the work entrusted to our care—that of helping to uplift the homes and to insure the welfare of the children of God's people. We felt that the work was to be carried on for the present, at least, mainly by means of the leastets. We found these making large demands upon time and strength at icase, mainly by means of the leaners. We found these making large demaids upon time and strength which were met with difficulty because of the pressure of many other duties. However we feel that we have received great benefit from the study made necessary and we have taken alconvenie in dairs the most. we have taken pleasure in doing the work.

Our first leaflets were called forth by demands of the Our first leaflets were called forth by demands of the times and of the summer season, and we planned to follow these with a study of child nature, alternated with that of some of the problems of later years. But we have continued with the study of the young child because we found what we considered sufficient reason for

Intending at first to devote one or two numbers to the "Montessori Method of Teaching," we found by careful study that this method is based upon fundamental educational principles which all should understand. system is commanding world wide attention. Because of this we should know its claims. Examining its theory, find much that is of value to the mothe to the teacher, and the seven or eight leaflets given to

to the teacher, and the seven or eight related given to the subject could do it but scant justice. In the earlier numbers we have sought to give an in-sight into the principles, to prepare the way for appli-cation of them in the home, and in the closing number it is our hope to make plain some of the many ways in which this application can be made.

The Montessori system provides for everything touching the physical welfare of the children, and we had hoped to include a study of foods in this connection, but we found our number of leaflets for the year complete without it.

We recommend the reading of the Montessori books by all parents or any who are interested in the development of the child. For our work, some of these books were furnished by the Advisory Board. Others were secured in other ways and we found them very profiable reading. The Board also furnished us books upon other subjects.

In the mailing of the leaflets each month I have been assisted by Sr. Mary J. Garner.

assisted by Sr. Mary J. Garner.

In response to a request from the Advisory Board I prepared a leaflet in regard to the work of the Homo and Child Welfare Department and have sent copies to each local department. I have answered all letters of inquiry or requests for advice in regard to the work, sending also such leasiets of instruction as I thought would be beloful would be helpful. The United States Government has, since April 1912, maintained a Child Welfare department. This is known as the Children's Bureau, of which Miss Julia C. Lathrop is chief. During the summer I wrote to the department, asking for literature or advice which might aid in our work. I received a very courteous answer from Miss Lathrop, in which she said she appreciated our good will and co-operation, and she offered to send from Miss Lathrop, in which she said she appreciated our good will and co-operation, and she offered to send bulletins from her department to any address I might send her. I have lately sent her a list of eighty names and addresses of general and local officers and field workers. She had only three bulletins ready for distribution in the fall, but others were in process of preparation.

Hoping that our Home and Child Welfare department may fulfill the great mission that is open to it, and with best wishes for the success of all the departments of the Auxiliary, I am

Your sister and

DIED.

Shearer.-Simon Shearer was born in Monroe Co. Mo. Sheater.—Simon Sheater was overn in John Se, Aoo, Aoo, Dec. 5, 1842; died at his home in Hannihal, Moo, Sunday May 10, 1914. He married Sarah Taylor in the year 1874, to them four sons were born, one preceding him in death, leaving wife and three sons to mourn. He was baptized in the year 1880 and shortly afterwards ordained to the office of a priest, and remained true to his covenant till the end. Funeral services held May 12, 1914, from the family residence to a large gathering of his neighbors and friends by Elder F. T. Mussell.

Davis .- Margaret Rees was born Oct. 11, 1839, at Penbrokeshire, Wales; married to James Davis Oct. 24, 1857. Ten children blessed this union, the husband and seven children preceding her in death. She was baptized Sep. 13, 18-71, and died May 17, 1914, at Bevier, Mo., where the family have resided for nearly half a century. She suffered a paraletic stroke fourteen years ago and has been an invalid since. She is survived by three daughters. Funeral services held at saint's chapel, Bevier, Mo, May 22, 1914, by Elders W. B. Richards and F. T. Mussell.

Stroup, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sr. Tallman of Lamoni, Iowa, aged 33 years, eight months, and 26 days. She was a sufferer many years. Husband and parents mourn their loss, also two brothers and three sisters. Her body was brought to Lamoni for burial in Rose Hill. H. A. Stebhins, presching the sermon, and Rose Hill, H. A. Ste John Smith assisting. Stebbins preaching the sermon, and Harris.—At Andover, Mo., May 19, 1914, after three months illness, Mrs. Nancy Ellen Harris, aged 40 years, 3 months and 24 days. Her maiden name was Barth, and 3 months and 24 days. Her manden name was Barth, and she married Alma Harris in 1896. Of eight children born, seven are living some of them quite young. Also four brothers and five sisters are living. She was not a member of any church. Funeral service was held in the saint's chaple at Andover, in charge of Bro. August Johnson, sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

Clark.—Leslie B. son of Charles A. and Lydia B. Clark, was born at Galien, Berrien County, Michigan, Oct. 29, 1883. Met his death at Lansing, Michigan May 44, 1914, in an automobile accident. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church October, 1893 and was true to the faith to the hour of his death. He was a member of the Berrien County Bar, had served in many positions of responsibility and trust, and at the time of positions of responsibility and trust, and at the time of his death was chief clerk of corporations in the office of Secretary of State at Lansing, Mich. In every work in which he labored he was always successful. His pleasant disposition won him friends wherever he was known.

He is survived by the parents, one brother Dr. S. A. Clark of South Bend, Indiana, a sister, Miss Winnie Clark of Galien, Mich., and one uncle—Bishop E. A. Blakeslee of St. Joseph, Mich., four aunts and many other near relatives. The funeral was held at the parents home in Galien, Elder Samuel Stroh of Coldwater, Mich., officiating. Many attended the funeral from far and near, showing the high esteem in which the young man was held.

Would You Relieve 11?

Place on the dining-room table a piece of flat thin wood about twenty by ten inches, and half an inch thick or less. Let about twe inches of the wood stick out over the table's edge and cover up the rest of the board with four or five newspapers. You can now deal that projecting end of the board quick downward blows with your fist or a hummer until it splinters and you cannot raise the other end of it off the table, although at a very light touch of your finger the end will fly up. Try it. This is a very old scientific demonstration of air pressure, and a very pretty trick. It is surprising how few boys and girls have tried it out.

THE PROUD PEACOCK
The peacock sat on the garden wall,
As vain as a bird could be;
With his tail, his crown and sheeny breast,
Oh, who is so fine as he?

The little brown birds cried. "Give us a song!"

And the blackbird piped, "Ah do!
"Twill be a beautiful song, we know,
From a bird so fine as you."

But when the poor peaceck tried to sing,
Then the small birds flew away.
They said, "Fine feathers don't make fine birds"
They say it unto this day.

THE BUDGET AND THE NAVY ESTIMATES

THE BUDGET AND THE NAVY ESTIMATES

Two documents recently published in England are illuminating when read togethner. One is the "Navy Estimates" for the year 1914-1915; the other is Lloyd George's new budget. From the one we learn that the navy costs the British government over 267 million dollars yearly and that its expenses have been increased 13 million dollars during the last year. From the other we notice that the British income tax harrisen to nearly 13 per cent upon the largest incomes. The exemption is only for incomes of $800 or below (with an added $50 allowed for each child under 16 in incomes under $2,500). In America incomes of $3,000 are exempt and the tax rises to 7 per cent upon incomes above $500,000.

The New York World says of this budget: "While the new British income tax is roughly double ours at the top, it falls upon a larger number of incomes by reason of its small exemption. A tax to which we have no parallel is that upon estates. Death duties, beginning at 1 per cent upon estates execeding 20 per cent upon the very largest estates.

The budget is called a "popular" one be-estates.

The budget is called a "popular" one because its increased burdens fall chiefly upon the very rich. There is no way to prevent such exactions from being in the long run distributed over the community. As for local taxation, some of the poorer British towns and boroughs are now so heavily burdened that the new budget for the first time assigns $21,000,000 to help them out with their local needs to avert bankruptcy."

One of the reasons for the Lloyd George budget may be found in the Navy Estimates.

BETTER TO CLIMB AND FALL .

Give me a man with an aim,
Whatever that aim may be,
Whether it's wealth, or whether it's fame,
It matters not to me.
Let him walk in the path of right,
And keep his aim in sight,
And work and pray in faith alway,
With his eye on the glittering height.

Give me a man who says,
"I will do something well,
And make the fleeting days
A story of labor tell."
Though the aim he has be small,
It is better than none at all;
With something to do the whole year through
He will not stumble nor fall.

But satan weaves a snare
For the feet of those who stray
With never a thought of care
Where the path may lead away.
The man who has no aim,
Nnt only leaves no name
When this life is done, but ten to one
He leaves a record of shame.

Give a man whose heart
Is filled with ambition's fire;
Who sets his mark in the start,
And keeps moving it higher and higher.
Better to die in the strife,
The hands with labor rife,
Than to glide with the stream in an idle dream.

dream, And lead a purposeless life.

Better to strive and climb,
And never reach the goal,
Than to drift along with time,
An aimless, worthless soul.
Ay, better to climb and fall,
Or sow, though the yield be small,
Than to throw away day after day,
And never to strive at all.

GETHSEMANE.

In golden youth when seems the earth A summer-land of singing mirth, When souls are glad and hearts are light, And not a shadow lurks in sight, We do not know it, but there lies Somewhere veiled under evening skies A garden which we all must see The garden of Gethsemane.

With joyous steps we go our ways, Light sorrows sail like clouds afar, We laugh, and say how strong we are. We hurry , and hurrying, co That waits for you, and waits for me-Forever waits Gethsemane.

Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams Bridged over by our broken dreams; Behind the misty caps of years, Beyond the great salt fount of tears, The garden lies. Strive as you may, You cannot miss it in your way, All paths that have been or shall be, somewhere through Gethsemane.

All those who journey, soon or late, Must pass within the garden's gate; Must kneel alone in darkness there, And battle with some fierce despair. And battle with some herce despair.
God pity those who cannot say,
"Not mine, but thine," who only pray,
"Let this cup pass," and cannot see
The purpose of Gethsemane.

SHOOK REVIEWED.

We recently received a copy of "The True Ori-gin of Mormon Polygamy by Charles A. Shook. It is a book of 213 pages, written for the evident purpose of proving that Joseph Smith Junior originated polygamy and passed it on to his followers, and indirectly upon this supposition prove that he was a false prophet and teacher. "Foreword" is written with reference to the Re-organized Church who, Mr. Shook says, "strongly oppose polygamy" yet it is evident to a reader who is a member of the Reorganized Church that the book is aimed at his faith and his Church rather than at Joseph Smith or the doctrine of polygamy. No argument is made against that doctrine, though it is attributed to Joseph Smith as if he were the foundation of the Church, and with him the Church must stand or fall.

Evidences Qiven.

Relative to the character of Joseph Smith this book says he was "reared in an atmosphere of superstition, bigotry, dishonesty and lust," and "his main occupations were fishing in the village mill-pond, digging out woodchucks, hunting for lost treasure, and reading the lives of the notorious Captain Kidd and the clerical scoundrel, Stephen Burroughs." (What a desperate character he must have been!) But as years went on he was charged with almost every sin named in the catalogue of evil. Mr. Shook does not give references for many of his quotations but they are familiar to Latter Day Saints and in common with those which are given are found to have been taken from works written with all the venom of religious intolerance which was possible to de-

But in alternating to attach all these things to the character of Joseph Smith, the book attempts too much, for no intelligent person who considers the work of that man in the light of all the evidences, leaving out the spirit of religious antagonism, could believe that he was of the character described. The early work of Joseph Smith in putting out the Book of Mormon and the revelations, regardless of whether we count them divine or human productions, could not have been done by any man of the character ascribed to him. Indolent, superstitious, and lustful men do not write books of the high ethical standard and constructive force of the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, nor build up followings of good and intelligent people, much less to organize a church which has stood the most searching tests as to its doctrine, organization, and results.

Mr. Shook reproduces numerous statements and affidavits mostly of persons steeped in the practice of polygamy affirming that Joseph Smith was the author of it. With these are associated such historical incidents as, in the light of the other statements, are made to lend color to the claim that Joseph Smith was involved in its origin and The charges of religious enemies, the claims of Utah polygamists, and utterances of friends, and even statements of the Book of Mormon and doctrine and Covenants, are skilfully woven together with suggestive implications,-the statements of friends and the books having been given a forced interpretation to favor polygamy and its authorship as charged, while the vast array of evidence which stands against the claim is ignored,—all for the purpose of proving Joseph Smith a false prophet. the claim of the book is given plausibility.

Many of the statements attributed to Joseph Smith and purported historical facts involving him, are taken from the "Millenial Star" and other works published subsequently to his death some as late as seventeen years after. We of the Reorganized Church, having actual and abundant evidence of numerous and apparently wilful changes made for a purpose in documents re-printed by the Utah Church, including the life history of Joseph Smith, may be pardoned for not taking Mr. Shook's quotations from their publicaions at face value, and more so since Mr. Shook himself says on page 205 that "the Mormon word of honor is not to be depended upon."

A charge of any kind against any public man may be sustained to the satisfaction of those open to the hearing of one side of the question only, in which case the most innocent acts and utterances of the accused by being interpreted and bent to fit the charge are turned into evidences of guilt. Several such acts and utterances of Joseph Smith magnified under Mr. Shook's ex-parte microscope appear somewhat damaging, but when examined in the light of the full evidence they, fall back into their proper insignificance.

In speaking of some of these things the author quotes: "Straws tell which way the wind blows." This is very true, but only out in the open away from the obstructions which turn the air into whirls and eddies. Straws may answer for Mr. Shook but we prefer to watch the tree tops and the clouds in determining the direction of the wind, and in judging of Joseph Smith we prefer to take all the events and teachings of his life, and his accomplishments rather than doubtful incidents, and the dark inferences of those who bitterly oppose him, and also the assertions of professed though erring followers who sought justification for their own practices.

The constructive work of Joseph Smith, the scripturalness of his teachings, and the moral force of his life as shown in the lives of thousands of noble men and women who have followed his teachings, are unnoticed in this book. Though we hold that his work was made possible through divine help, we do not hold that he was immune to temptation or infallible in his life, but liable to err as other men, and any judgment of the character of the man or the character of the man or the character of the man or the character of the character. cause he established, which has for its basis any act or acts of wrongdoing of which he was either correctly or wrongfully accused, will be an unjust judgment

As to the one point which this book is designed to prove, viz. Joseph Smith's connection with polygamy, we do not believe the evidence presented by Mr. Shook is conclusive. Should the author, or another man, succeed in proving the claim he would only prove that Mr. Smith fell below the standard of his own teaching, which would in no degree destroy the fact of divinity having been in his work and that divinity is in the work still. The gospel of Jesus Christ which Joseph Smith was instrumental in giving to the world, is not itself effected by the acts or failures of any man or men, but continues unchangeable. The Church though organized after the divine pattern and having divinity in it is also composed of imperfect human beings, and consequently will show many imperfections in its work. In the Church divinity and humanity are closely blended, and one who searches only for the weaknesses of men will surely find, but in doing so he will not see the beauties and glories of God shining in their better natures. Seeing the latter, one will not be disturbed by evidences of the former.

Mr. Shook's book is but another pebble dropped into the flowing tide of God's latter day work, which makes a momentary splash while the tide flows on.

ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Considerable interest has centered in the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, and frequently erroneous reports are published regarding it. One of the most recent of such reports is the following from the "Deseret News" of Salt Lake City, of March 25, 1914. In speaking of the visit to the East of President George H. Brimhall of the Brigham Young Universary, and Mrs. Brimhall, it says of their visit to Palmyra, New York, where the Book of Mormon was first published.

At Palmyra President and Mrs. Brimhall had the pleasure of meeting Hon. Pliney T. Sexton, president of the New York state board of regents, who owns the manuscript from which the first edition of the Book of Mormon was

In reply to a letter of inquiry regarding the manuscript Mr. Sexton wrote Bro. Ben. R. Mc-Guire of Brooklyn N. Y. as follows: We quote:

What I have, which was shown to President Brimhall and may have been referred to in some remarking by him, is the first perfected press proof sheets of the first edition of the said Book of Mormon, which was printed here at Palmyra in 1830.

Aside from the interesting fact that such sheets con-

Aside from the interesting fact that such sheets constituted the first printed Book of Mormon, they have the additional unique character of being sheets which were taken from the press by the Major John H. Gibhert the man who set the type and worked the press for the printing of the original edition of the book. He kept the sheets during nearly all of his life and gave them to me not long before his death, which did not occur until he was over 90 years of age.

This interesting statement of Mr. Sexton:

makes plain what he has, and makes it conclusive that he makes no claim to the possession of the Book of Mormon manuscript.

The manuscript was for many years in the possession of David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses of the book who testified that an angel showed him and others the plates from which the book was translated, and assured them that the translation was correct. Mr. Whitmer's home was at Richmond, Mo., where he died in 1888, leaving the manuscript to his daughter and sonin-law, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Schweich from whom it passed into the possession of the Reorganized Church, and now reposes in its archives at Independence, Missouri,

The latest edition of the Book of Mormon put out by the Reorganized Church, known as the "Authorized Edition," was carefully compared with this manuscript and many corrections made.

The longer men sin the more easily they can; for every act of transgression weakens conscience, stupifies intellect, hardens hearts, adds force to bad habits, and takes force from good example.

ITEMS OF INTEREST FROM JERUSALEM.

Two aviators recently made the trip from Beyrout to Jerusalem, and to the delight of seventy thousand almost frantic spectators, circled the city and the Mount of Olives. The airmen were feasted and given great honor during the four days of their stay. Jerusalem is fast losing its ancient aspect.

"It is roughly estimated that this season thirtytwo thousand visitors of all sorts and conditions have visited the Holy City, leaving behind them about three and a half million francs, [about $682,000,] which amount has greatly ameliorated the sad condition of things here."

The foundations for a great library for the University of Jerusalem are being laid by liberal contributions of private collections by prominent men of different countries. A rich medical library has been received from the widow of Dr. Borichevitch-Kogan of Tcherinoff, Russia," Gifts have been received also from Dr. Karl August Von Blædau of Berlin and from Dr. Otto Wanseloff of the same city, both Imperial librarians, and from many others of the literary and scientific world.

"The extraordinary meteorological changes still continue to the astonishment of all, even the oldest residents in Jerusalem. The latter rain still falls in great abundance. Thunder and lightning, almost unprecedented for Palestine in the middle of May, has occured for the last few days consecutively. Is this intended as a harbinger of the restitution of all things?"-The Truth.

WORK TODAY

By C. W. Chappelow. Work while it is called today, for the night cometh, wherein no man can work.

While shines the Light of Life as glowing day, Before the staring gaze of rigid clay Proclaims the darkness of the tomb, Proclaims the darkness of the tomb, And dirges sound our earthly doom, And night so dark, with dreadful silence fraught Hides the clay-that faithful here has wrought; Or that near-sighted, looked and did not see, The outstretched hand that points the way And lays out work by line today.

Now earthly life is here in common clay, But ebbing swift to end its little day, A day of work that fruit shall bear If men do all their duty here. y of work that true band. en de all their duty here; fruit more white than eyes More sweet and rare than earthly things can be; Or, bitter as the dregs of lives That selfish stand as time goes by, And will not lift a hand to save.

Now shines the day, God-given by his might, And points, his hand, the way in evening's light; The falling night comes on its way And darkness overcomes our day. we must feel, the chilling touch and call That rich and poor must answer with their all; It surely comes and will not stay While men in listless waiting stand, Or, active, fill their lifelong day.

Work in this life must claim our fullest might; We may not hide our candles' faintest light; As sait of earth, of hope the sign To fuifull all the Lord's design; Earthly saviors, a working leaven, To crush the power of darkness given; Or, failing then as saviors here, On us shall fall the tread of men And we shall share their hopeless fear.

On men today, waits Zion's helpful work, For those so weak, will strength its duty shirk? God charges men, with work begun, Nor gives his promise to the one Who selfish, in his wants and needs, witholds His wealth, or brain, or brawn, like one of old Who sorrowing, turned him back again To earthly things that perish here, More dear to him than future gain.

'Tis Zion's ensign now unfurled we And now today our testing fires will be; "Or ever the silver cord be loosed, Or the golden bowl be broken, Or the pitcher, be broken at the well, Or the broken wheel at the cistern fall." So cometh night when day shall fail, So ends the work of men on earth, And just today can work avail. Independence, Mo.

Smith, uncle of the bride. The sweet solemnity and impressiveness of the ocassion was made raore so when, after the official coremony, the venerable President and grandfather offered a prayer of benediction and blessed the bride and groom. It seemed so fitting, and so much like Israel of old blessing his grandchildren, when this father in Israel, he too being blind, was conducted to where the bride and groom stood and there exhorted them and in a beautiful prayer asked and there exhorted them and in a beautiful prayer asked God's blessings upon them. About ten o'clock they left in an auto, it was said for Kansas City, where they would take train for Omaha, their future home, Bro. Hulmes being employed as traveling salesman for a firm in that city. Their departure, however, was looked upon with some doubt, as often is the case to sidetrack would-be prank players on wedding parties. This worthy couple have the best wishes of the Ensign.

Last Sunday was a great day for the children—Children's Day. The regular exercises, beginning at 9:30, were had, and without any intermission except in changing positions, after the lessons a very pleasing program was carried out, in the forenoon. This was by the Primaries, Beginners and Cradle Roll. It was all so good that to mention part would compel us to mention all. However, we will mention one, the solo by wee little tot Rena Bullard, just three years old. She sang so loud and clear that every one in the hir auditorium could distincticera that every one in the big auditorium could distinctly hear every word. Applause could not be suppressed.

She was accompanied on the piano by her mother and on the violin by little Velton Loar, seven years old. Also we mention the piano solo by little Rogene Anderson. Although all was good these were the distincttransfer the mention of the mention of the property of tive features of the morning's exercises. In the evening the program continued with many pleasing features, among which we mention the violin solo by little Velton Loar, and music by the Junior Orchestra which has been under the tutorage of Sr. Royal Brocaw. The whole exer-cises of the day showed great care, patience and ability in those who had charge of the work of training the

At the regular Sunday School service there was an attendance of 997, including 103 teachers. There are 170 in the Cradle Roll and 126 in the Beginners department. 41 little tots were promoted from the Cradle Roll to the 41 little tots were promoted from the Cradle Roll to the Beginners department, receiving their diplomas during the morning's program. Nineteen were baptized and confirmed in the afternoon. Also several from the Englewood Branch were baptized by their president, Bro. Zahnd, and confirmed there in the evening. Two of those baptized and confirmed are from Grain Valley.

Last Friday night 'in Religio held its semi-annual election of officers, resulting as follows: J. F. Rudd, president Liek Wester size confident of P. Rudd, president Liek Wester size confident with P. Broscow, second Gray, superintendent temperance department. The officers are elected a month prior to the time they are to be installed in order that some preparation may be made for the duties and responsibilities they are to discharge.

Last Thursday afternoon a short, but severe hailstorm visited Independence and vicinity. The damage to vegetation was comparatively small, but the large hail, some as large as hen's eggs, driven by a flerce wind from the north, played havoc with windows facing that direction, residences as well as business buildings looking as though residences as well as business buildings looking as though they had passed through a fire. It is safe to say that three-fourths of the windows facing that direction which were unprotected, were broken out. The Ensign office suffered with the rest, the glass in eight sash and one circular art glass window, aggregating in all over sixty square feet was broken. Immediately after the storm all dealers in glass were beseiged with orders, the order for the Ensign being placed before the rain had hardly abated. Wagons and motor trucks for the next day or two were keet husy bringing glass from Kanass City. In less abouted. Wigons and motor trucks for the lext day or two were kept busy bringing glass from Kansas City. In less than forty-eight hours after the storm there were approximately twenty-five tons received from there, and from five to six thousand dollars worth sold by the dealers here, and purchases will continue to be made for days to come. The greatest loss was no doubt with the green-houses. They sent directly to the factories. A safe estimate we think would place the amount not less than fifty tons of glass broken. Although a great loss, distributed among many, the storm brought relief from drought, which had an ominous forboding for the summer months to follow. The last month was said to be the dryest May on record. The stone church was struck by lightening and two stones thrown off.

prophets that there would be no rain during June, one prognostication being that the weather of the month is governed by its three first days, as if nature took such particular notice of days formed into months for chronilogical convenience. Another sign often depended upon is the way the new moon hangs. The believers in this sign never stop to reason how absurd it is to think the moon never stop to reason how absurd it is to think the moon adjusts itself to the conditions of all localities—one a deluge and another a drought. At the same hour and the same minute one locality in the north may be suffering from too much rain, while in the same longitude a locality south may be suffering from drought.

The Saints everywhere are more or less interested in Independence and its development. Independence is dear to many and they enjoy the news chronicled from time to time, especially that tending towards the good of the place. At present there is a local option movement on foot looking towards the discontinuance of saloons. Petiting were sirvalisted and more than double the number. titions were circulated and more than double the number of names necessary obtained to call an especial election. This was presented last Thursday night. The ordinance calling the election had to be passed immediately be-cause of time limit. This would have brought the election on Saturday, July 11th, which some of the city council on Saturady, July 11th, whene some of the city council thought was not a proper day, and as consequence it failed to receive a majority vote. New petitions were immediately drafted and circulated which were presented to the council again Tuesday hight, and an ordinance was passed providing for an election on Tuesday, the 21st of July. An organization was formed of temper-ance people to effect a vigorous campaign, and a mass meeting called for Thursday night to more fully perfect 21st of July.

The powers that be have taken ye editor from us and located him at St. Joseph, Mo., to look after the work there, they thinking it of enough importance to make the change, though the Ensign may suffer some thereby. Los Angeles, Cal., June 12. Editor Ensign:—Since returning from General Confer ence, the work in various ways has been moving so rapid-iy and steadily that there has hardly been time to write about it. A very remarkable prayer meeting was enjoyed at the Sacrament service in Los Angeles the first of this at the Sacrament service in Los Angeles the first of this month, the house being filled with the good influence and power of the spirit, and the gift of prophecy was present, through Brn. Speneer and Goodrich, Bro. Goodrich and Bro. The Schute and the promise of success and care in the time of necessity. cessity. The Saints were much built up in spirit and good results were seen in the following Wednesday night prayer meeting.

Brn. Roy F. Slye and W. A. Brooner are already busy with the tent work at Pomona. Evengelist W. A. McDowell is at present holding special meetings in San

Bro. Fred Adam and the writer were at San Diego last Saturday and succeeded in getting the order of court authorizing the sale of the church lots to Bro. Clark, which has been hanging for nearly three years. In the meantime the buyer of two of the lots backed out, so another will have to be secured before the church gets the money, also some technicalities in the title will have to be worked out. Both enjoyed a visit with the San Diego Saints Sunday.

The San Diego Home Class Religio was formally organ ized into a Local Sunday evening by the writer. Splen-12cd into a Local Sunday evening by the writer. Splendid feeling prevailed together with the influence of the good Spirit. Something over twenty names will be shown as charter members, with officers, President, Sr. Mearl Kniesel; vice president, Sr. Ruth Knapp; secretary, Alden Johnson; treasurer, Sr. Anna B. Clark; librarian, Harvey King; Home Department sup, Sr. Elizabeth A. D. Pickles; King; Home Department sup., Sp. Silzabeth A. D. Pickies; chorister, J. Edmund Clark; organist, Sr. Francis L. Hol-enbeck. A touching vote of appreciation was tendered Sr. Tina Salter who has been the president of the Religio work and is about to move to Santa Ana.

Two young men have been added to the ranks at Long Beach by baptism, also a valuable addition in the ar of Bro. C. C. Smith and wife, of the Oakland Branch.

Bishop's Agent, Fred Adam, and the writer visited the San Bernardino Branch Saturday and Sunday a week ago, attending the Sunday School picnic in Devil's Canyon, occupying in the church morning and evening to good con-gregations, and at the Mission services at Redlands in afternoon. Bro. George Wixom is certainly making good as branch president, and the branch officers are showing a good working organization. Bro. T. W. Williams was a good working organization. But I we will wise there and occupied the Sunday previous; a large number of non-members were out to hear him, and one very intelligent gentleman was sufficiently impressed that he is now persuing the investigation of the Church work.

The Santa Ana Saints are diligently working on their new Church which is rapidly being erected. Bro. Paulson there about two weeks assisting in its construction. The Santa Ana sisters have taken a substantial hold and their latest move was to secure the contract to do the cooking for the cafeteria at the coming reunion, and under the name of "The Economic Catering Club" they have been serving several banquets with success, and while the work at Runion will be done at the expense of their atwork at Runion will be done at the expense of their at-tendance at the meetings and foregoing the recreational pleasures they feel that the $175 it will add to their building fund will be sufficient reward. We would sug-gest that the Santa Ana brethren fall in line to do the heavy work of the kitchen, so that all may have part of the enjoyments as well as the financial benefit. The annual meeting of the District committee and Stockholders meeting of the corporation for handling "Convention Park" was held June 9, all arrangements were completed for Reunion. Henry F. Backer, W. E. Badham, Wm. Schade, Fred Adam, Nathaniel Carmichael, R. T. Cooper and George H. Wixom were elected as the board for the ensuing year with Fred Adam president and the same secretary for another year.

and the same secretary for another year.

Probably the most interesting news of the district is the work started by Bro. V. M. Goodrich among the Armenian and Russian settlements of the City of Los Angeles.

Some time ago Bro. John W. Inman's sister-in-law told her father who had been stricken with paraylsis, (one whole side was paralized) that our elders had power like olden times, with the result that Bro. Goodrich was sent for. He administered and the man was healed. The man's name was John Muschagan, and he is one of the preachers of the Armenian Church; the results are, Bro. Goodrich of the Armenian Church; the results are, Bro. Goodrich preached in their church and a couple of services were held in the residence. Last night another preaching service was held in the church; about 100 people were in attendance, including a few of our members, some Armenian and Russian and the preaching was done through two intrepreters. Bro. Goodrich did the preaching, using the Old Testament and New Testament, clearly setting out the coming of the restored gospel and then section one of the Doctrine and Covenants as the word of the Lord ushering in the fulfillment of the prophecies in an invincible manner. The order was, Bro. Goodrich read or spoke in English for the Americans present, then Mr. Ferrehean of 665 East Adams Street, translated, it into Armenian, for the Armenians present, then Mr. A. Melet, the school teacher, translated from the Armenian into Russian for the Russians. It was inspiring to see the angel's message going out in such a manner, and one involuntarily wished the gift of language might be en-joyed to speak in their own tongue. Those people are Bible students, and their questions clarly show that they are familiar with the Bible, as well as a good degree of education, is intelligence. education and intelligence,

Mr. Frrahean proved to be a very valuable translator, e manifested a surprising familiarity with the Book Mormon history and could answer many questons with readiness and more forcibly than to have depended on getting every thing from Bro. Goodrich. Both interpreters were Atheists, but were perfect gentlemen and their de-portment indicated a faithful translation and true presen-portment indicated a faithful translation and true presen-tation of the word to their people.

At the close we sang, "Tis a Glorious thing to be in the Light," and they responded with two songs one of which was about the Millenium and Zion.

The leader of the Russians then made a date for a preaching service in their church for Friday night of next week. What it may lead to no one can tell, but may God's grace help that all that can be done may be done. R. T. Cooper

Editor Zion's Ensign.—We have just received four copies of the Conference Daily and we are very much pleased with it and its contents and make up. Bro. Miller and I truly appreciated reading the convention news, also the conference news, what little we have, and we are waiting longingly and anxiously for the rest of the prowaiting longingly and anxiously for the rest of the pro-ceedings. However, we will have to wait two more weeks. It has been very gratifying to us to learn that our be-loved President Joseph Smith was enjoying such a good-ly degree of health and that he was able to be present at the opening of the Conference and take part therein. The day after the sad news of Bro. Blair's sudden demise reached Kirtland Bro. Joseph and I were in Cleveland, Ohio, and as we were walking to the hall where we were going to have preaching, Bro. Joseph remarked to me that the Lord had made it known to him that he would live to a great old age. Well, the Lord has truly been true to a great old age. Well, the Lord has truly been true to his promise, for our President is getting to be an old man in Israel. May God continue to bless him, and con-tinue his life in health and with a reasonable degree of mental activity.

It made us feel very sad to hear of the death of our dear old Bro. Lake and wife. He and the writer were associated together for many years, both in the quorum of Twelve and also as neighbors. I called to see them just before I left for this mission and I shall never forget our last parting. We both knew that we would never meet again in this world. He held on to me for the length of a whole block and put his arms around me as we said a whole block and put his arms around me as we said good-bye for the last time on earth. He was a saint indeed, as also was his good companion. They have gone to their reward to rest from their labors and their bodies lie pencefully in the old Kirtland cemetery under the shadow of the Temple of God, where they loved to worship.

The longer I am in Australia the more I love the country and the people. The Saints here seem anxious to learn and are sustaining the efforts of the ministry. Melbourne is a most beautiful city, with its wide streets

SERMONS AND ARTICLES

IS THE CHURCH ORGANIZATION OF THE LATTER DAY SAINTS IN HARMONY WITH THE ORGANIZATIONS IN THE DAYS OF MOSES AND CHRIST? By Elder W. A. Sinclair, M. D.

Our text this morning is familiar to all. It is found in 1 Thessalonians 5:21: "Prove all things hold fast that which is good."

This is one of the most sensible statements in regard to religion that the great Apostle Paul ever gave voice to. Paul was not much of a sentimentalist, nor was he much imbued with superstition; but on the other hand, he was a close analyst, seeking the hard facts for the satisfying of his skeptical mind. And what he himself sought, he advised others to seek in like manner; and that they might be firmly grounded and settled in the truth, he gave voice to our text, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

If this advice was good in Paul's day, it is doubly so now, for deception and superstition has increased many fold, but it has come upon the people in such a surreptitous manner, that we are inclined to think our particular code of religious teachings are founded upon nothing but solid facts.

God has ordained in his wisdom, the recording of certain facts relative to his work, and that has been preserved throughout all the ages, so that man has access to the written word and is able to make a comparison of former, medieval, and latter day teachings, and is able thereby to prove the foundation principles of their religious fabric, whether it is founded on fact or otherwise.

Considering this happy arrangement of things, my friends, it becomes my duty to inquire of you, how is your church organized? Is it in harmony with the written word? Shall we hold it up to the light of investigation and see if it measures up to the standard in all things? That was what Paul admonished us to do, and that is what our text warrants us in doing this morning.

We read that the law was a type or shadow of that which was to come, and if this is true, as I verily believe it to be; then the shadow would have the characteristics of the real, and by a discovery of the shadow and the real, we would have a knowledge in fact. The law was given to, and by Moses for the instruction of the children of Israel, therefore, it is of interest to see the construction of the organization of Moses' church in the wilderness.

In Exodus 17:11,12, we read of a peculiar arrangement of things: "And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady nutil the going down of the sun."

Did it ever strike you as peculiar that Aaron and Hur should be with Moses instead of being in the center of the fray? Why were they with him? It was because they were associated with him as counselors, they represented the presidency, which always consists of three. That was the position of Aaron and Hur in the camp of Israel. This fact is perhaps made stronger by referring to Exodus 24:14, which reads: "And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you; and behold Aaron and Hur are with you; if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them."

These three men represent the presidency of the organization under God in the wilderness.

Referring to Joshua 4:4; we find the second quorum of the organization. "Then Joshua called the twelve men, whom he had prepared of the children of Israel, out of every tribe a man." Thus was the quorum of twelve selected.

In Numbers 11:16,17, it is recorded: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be elde. s of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there; and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone."

This not only signifies the setting aside of a seventy, but it also outlines some of their duty. The same spirit which was upon Moses was to be given to them, for the purpose that they might bear the burden of the people, regulate the affairs of the people, if you please, having presiding power and spiritual insight sufficient to regulate and set in order.—Thus were the seventy selected.

In Leviticus 21:10, we find mention of another officer. "And he that is high priest among his brethren, upon whose head the annointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes."

This High Priest had a particular function to perform in the church in the wolderness, he was a servant of the people, seemingly to be with them, and bear their sins by reason of certain rites delegated to him. So we place the high priest as the next officer of the institution.

In our reading of Nnmbers 11:16, I noticed a peculiar phraseology used which suggested more than that which we emphasized at the time of reading. Let us look at it again. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be elders of the people, and officers over them, and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand with thee."

These seventy who were chosen for a special work were selected from among the elders, suggesting other elders who were not in authority among the people as the seventy chosen. Hence we have elders.

In Exodus 28:1, we read: "And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's sons."

The context shows these priests to be of a lesser order than those officers which we have inumerated previous to this order of priests, and to honor the one on whom he first conferred it, the Lord caused that it should have the name of the Priesthood of Aaron.

Referring to 1 Chronicles 25:8. In the choosing of the choir for the temple service, were a chorus of 288 voices were elected to sing, we have mention of those who cast lots. "And they cast lots, ward against ward, as well the small as the great, the teacher as the scholar."

Whether the "small and great, teacher and scholar," had reference to those interested in the song service, or not, is not perfectly clear, but as it mentions the teacher, we take it in the sense of "one who teaches." This is more firmly settled when we refer to Probverbs 5:13. "And have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me."

The singers who were chosen to sing were compelled to render their service as much as any other officer of the church, it was their duty to sing, they must perform that duty before they were permitted to leave the service.

2 Chronicles 35:15: "And the singers, the sons of Asaph were in their place, according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthum the king's seer; and the porters (deacons) waited at every gate; that they might not depart from their service, for their brethren the Levites prepared for them." And in 1 Chronicles 9:21. "And Zachariah the son of Meshelmiah was porter of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation." In this we find the deacons.

In 2 Chronicles 31:4,5; we discover the office equivalent to that of a bishop. "Moreover he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give the portion of the priests and the Levites that they might be encouraged in the lay of the Lord. And as soon as the commandment came abroad. the children of Israel brought in abundance the firstfruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly." And in Nehemiah 10:37. "And that we should bring the firstfruits of our dough, and our offerings, and the fruit of all manner of trees, of wine, and of oil, unto the priests, to the chambers of the house of our God, and the tithes of our ground unto the Levites: that the same Levites might have the tithes in all the cities of our tillage.'

The Levites were virtually Bishops, as we understand the word. Those who have custody of the tithes collected from the people.

According to our research we find Moses had an organization composed of a presidency of three. A quorum of twelve. A quorum of seventy. High priests. Elders. Bishops. Priests. Teachers, and deacons.

This was the type or shadow of the real church of Christ which was to come, according to scripture (Colossians 2:17.) therefore, we would expect to see these same officers in the Church set up by Christ when he organized his Church in the middle ages.

How was the Church under Christ organized?

Matthew 17:1-4; "And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with them. Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord it is good for us to be here; if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias."

We have here mention made of three, who are continually mentioned as the head of the church. Therefore we have a presidency of three.

In Matthew 10:1-4 we discover more evidence of the construction of the church; "And when he had called unto him twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease. Now the names of the twelve apostles are these: The first Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother; Philip, and Bartholomew; Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alphaeus, and Labbaeus, whose surname was Thaddaeus; Simon the Cananite, and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him. Here we have the twelve.

Luke 10:1, records another factor in the organization: "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come."

Some say the Lord had no great following, but this language portrays a considerable following at this time, for here is at least a second seventy of elders, which would be one hundred and fortyfour elders in the field without the Apostles and himself, and their converts must have been considerable, so that he had quite a church at this time. We will add to our list now the quorum of seventy.

In Hebrews 3:1. "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." Here we have the high priest.

In Acts 14:23. "And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed." Thus we find elders.

The following quotation is supposed to be a priest of the lesser order, because of the peculiar circumstances surrounding the event. Personally, I am not prepared to say that such is the case, in this particular instance, though I firmly believe there were priests of the lesser order in the church over which Christ presided, in its early organization.

Acts 8:39,40. "And when they were come up out of the water, the spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the Eunuch saw him no more; and he went on his way rejoicing. But Philip was found at Azotus; and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea."

Acts 13:1. "Now there were in the Church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers, as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius and Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul." This adds the teacher to the list. Phillipians 1:1. "Paul and Timotheus, the Phillipians 1:1. "Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons." This completes our list with bishops and deacons.

According to our research we find that Christ had in his organization a presidency of three, a quorum of twelve, two quorums of seventy, high priests, elders, bishops, priests, teachers and deacons.

How about the church of the Latter Day Saints? Does it compare with the shadow, and the real church as set up by Christ in organization?

We have a presidency consisting of Three.

We have twelve apostles.

We have quorums of seventy three, with provision for seven.

We have high priests, Elders, Bishops, Priests, Teachers, Deacons.

Oh, well, says one, we know you claim to have these officers in your church, but Christ only had twelve Apostles in his church and you have had several times twelve in your organization, by your adding to and releasing.

Yes, we acknowledge that there have been quite a number who have labored in the office of the twelve, but not more than twelve at any one time, and this in strict harmony with the Church of Jesus Christ which he organized in his day. The Reorganized Church has had at least thirty-two Apostles. But how about the early church? Did they allow this quorum to be depleted and gradually become defunct? Let us see.

Matthew 10:1-4 gives us the original twelve. Acts 1:23-26 tells us of the choosing of Matthias —thirteen. Acts 13:1-3 Barnabas and Paul are called and in Acts 14:14 within a year both are called apostles—fifteen. Galatians 1:18, 19. James the Lord's brother is an apostle—sixteen 1 Thessalonians 1:1, Silvanus and Timotheus are called—eighteen. 1 Corinthians 4:6-9 Apollos is called an apostle—nineteen. Romans 16:7 Andronicius and Junia are apostles—thenty-one. Hebrews 3:1 Christ is an apostle—twenty-two. So we see that in Christ's organization there were twenty-two apostles and probably more at a later date.

The twelve chosen by Joshua were continued also in the same way, and by choice, and the casting of lots.

We will all concede that Christ's organization was the correct one, considering which, how does these other organizations compare wit it?

How about your organization, my friends? Are these several officers in your church? If not, can you truly say it is like the church Jesus organized when he was here? Turn on the light and be not satisfied with a shadow but seek for the true church, the bride, the Lamb's wife.

THE UNITY OF FAITH.

"Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; be ye therefore wise servants, and as harmless as doves."—Math. 10:14, I. T.

This language spoken to the apostles was particularly appropriate as applied to the character of the work to which their office assigned them. Latter Day inspiration indicates more fully the character of the work, and the need inferred of experience, wisdom, caution, foresight, and spiritual direction in the administration of the duties of their office in the following statement:—

"The twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations." D. and C. 104:12.

While the charge of our Lord may be applied with something more of emphasis to the twelve apostles in their work than to those in office holding less responsible or important positions of trust yet, in this last statement, containing as it does, the unwritten and unspoken summary of necessary qualification for successful leadership, it would seem to exclude, many times, the masses from an assumption of judgment,—power of regulating, or of discernment as to when and how, a minister called to be a servant of God, and Christ, first, and of men, afterward, may be justly criticised or commended for his action.

"Have faith in God," was Jesus' enjoinment to the disciples who had witnessed his exhibition of power over natural forces in the matter of the destruction of the fig tree:—but the power to know when a man is acting in concert with God in the regulating of affairs, the detail of which, we may be partially, or wholly ignorant of; to be able to know whether or not he has "the mind of Christ," and is really acting under his orders or not, is a matter that calls for other than a partial, or superficial judgment that oftimes may provoke hostility and hindrance to permanent work.

"The fear of the Lord," is said to be, "the beginning of wisdom," and when we allow personal prejudices, favoriteism, special likes or dislikes without reference to the good of the whole to control us, or to express a willingness to substitute these for spiritual direction because we have neglected to "take the Holy Spirit for our guide" as the only guarantee against possible deception, is a mistake to be avoided.

If "by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body," why should we so soon, after baptism be persuaded to walk in different paths, or follow different spirits?"

All men are subject to mistakes, but all under the law cannot be reasonably supposed to be equally subject to mistakes in the regulation of affairs of the church:—such a contention would involve an acceptance of the idea that the term AUTHORITY, was a meaningless word—an idea which is becoming so prevalent in the world today.

"To some, it is given to know, that Jesus is the Christ,—to others, that they may believe on their words."

The call to leadership from authoritative sources presupposes in reason, that those selected, are near enough to the fountain head by reason of physical, mental and moral qualification, and power of spiritual discernment, etc., to become effectual leaders and workmen as an aid in "the perfecting of the saints," under the rule of duties imposed by the law, i. e., if it be really true, that God and not men, has really called and "set" them in the church for that purpose.

"Wherefore, let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed in all dilligence," etc. D. C. 104:44.

All are entitled to spiritual direction and blessing under the gospel covenant, but a spirit, or spirits that contravene the law may be safely discarded for it is certainly true, that as in the Apostle John's day, no now—are there "many spirits gone abroad into the world," and counterfeiting agencies of a most deceptive character are more prolific in successful warfare against the church of Jesus Christ and the restored gospel and the welfare and enlightenment of the people than in any other quarter, or among any other people in the world; and-when differences arise, or strife ensues, shall we conclude that the masses of the people may at once withdraw or ignore delegated authority in the question of settlement of questions pertaining to the regulation of affairs in the Church?

"Judge not acording to appearancs, but judge righteous judgment," said Jesus.

Is there provision made in the law by which we are more liable to be right, and less liable to be wrong in our conclusions, and our judgment than we might otherwise be?

For example:—Supposing there is an "exortation, a tongue, a doctrine" promulgated, or a prophecy given, among, or in the assembly of the saints? Are they the only people among whom deception is possible? Supposing there may be a difference or divergence of opinion?—to whom, or where are we to look for judgment, or most liable to find safe counsel?

"And again, I will give you a pattern in all things, that you may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations; wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances. He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek, and edifieth, the same is of God, if he obey mine ordinances." ** ** "And again, he that is overcome and bringeth not forth fruit, even according to this pattern is not of me; wherefore by this pattern ye shall know the spirits in all cases, under the whole heavens." D. C. 52:4.

There are plenty of even profoundly religious people that have been, and are still liable to be deceived by carelessness or failure to study or heed "the word."

Many, very many, are the agencies and arguments with which Satan is enabled to successfuly approach all classes and grades of intellectual or moral development in the world or the church, by which he is enabled to stir up strife and success.

ful opposition to the truth, or the peace and well being of the work of Christ.

To "be a wise servant, and harmless as doves" does not argue that he may always be able to prevent some one else from stirring up strife, or doing harm.

Indeed, it must be concedeth at the outset by of undertaking to defer for peace's sake to any or everybody's judgment is, and was in Paul's day, who said;—"For do I now seek to please men, or God! for if I seek to please men, I should not be the servant of Jesus Christ," not only a thankless, but profitless experiment in government.

To "give to everyone their portion of meat in due season," suggests the thought that other appetites, desires, opinions, or needs than our own will have to be considered:

Indeed, it must be conceded at the outset by any man who is really called of God to do a work, that his mind should be made up beforehand that he will be called upon to encounter opposition,that "spiritual wickedness in high places" among the possibilities that he may be called to encounter, a knowledge of which, everybody is not supposed to possess, and that vindication of his work as a whole, will never be accorded by the masses, and hence, a resignation to the discomforts that arise from ignorance or misjudgment by those who may assume that he has not understood his business, or has neglected the performance of duty; and consequently must be obliged to console himself with a faith that God alone, who is able to survey the whole field of service and performance;—who is "a discerner of the thoughts and intent of the heart" as well, that he will finally, and openly reward him for a faith acquired that enables him to await the time of final settlement of the question as to whether, or not,--so far as the facts were concerned,--or to what extent he was "A wise servant, and as harm-

FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS WORTH OF GOLD ORNAMENTS

For several years there has been talk of, and several attempts, by different nations to build the Panama Canal but they have failed. Finally the United States by act of Congress decided to complete the great project, and their decision pleased us, believing as we did that the builders could not use the pick ax, the spade, the steam shovel, etc., in making that waterway of so many miles in length, through that country without uncovering and presenting to the veading world more archaeoligical evidences that the historical account in the Book of Mormon is true, and that the angel Moroni did visit Joseph Smith the prophet. In this belief we were not disappointed.

One point in evidence by Logan Marshall in his book "The Story of the Panama Canal" page 70 is as follows: "It is estimated that gold ornaments were uncovered to a value exceeding four hundred thousand dollars in the space of five or six years. They were sold for weight, or value in coin, and went into the melting pot." Wonderful indeed, but no surprise to students of the Book of Mormon for the sacred record gives account of the ancient inhabitants of that country becoming very numerous, having great wealth in gold, etc., and that they had "workmen who did work all kinds of ore, and did refine it; and they did become rich." (Helaman chapter 2.)

Over four hundred thousand dollars worth of gold ornaments was found, sold by weight and "went into the melting pot" says Professor Marshall. That being true it is probable that many dentists have bought of that precious metal, and it is also probable that some of the aching teeth of the anti-Mormon Association will have some of that Nephite and Lamanite gold pounded into their heads as well as quietly placed in their money purses,-a double cure for troubled minds. And when these same men lecture against the Book of Mormon they may be wearing and gazing at their audience through gold bowed spectacles rimmed with ore mined, refined, and worn by some of the accredited characters of pre-historic civilized times who helped to make the history, and who lived the blessed gospel principles outlined in the sacred volume they are laborously trying to expose and disprove. Not only gold ornaments have been found in the Panama country but temples, palaces, and parts of ruined cities of former ages have also been uncovered by workmen in recent years, all of which is foretold in the book referred to, "the sealed book" of Isaiah, chapter 29. The expenditure of the

in building the Panama Canal will doubtless be the means of taking thousands of land speculators, and hundreds of colonizers into that tropocal country both north and south of the canal, who will in time subdue the land, build road-ways, which work will bring to the world's reading tables additional evidences of a wonderful civilizarin that flourished there centuries before the coming of Columbus. Hence as a church we are being benefitted directly as well as indirectly by that great expenditure of money by "Uncle Sam" our faithful missionary (?)

The special favors just mentioned have been supplemented by the expenditure of Twenty Thousand Dollars

by the Yale-National Geographic Society under the able direction of Professor Hiram Bingham who with a company of archaeologists and other workmen discovered and uncovered the ruins of an ancient capital city in Peru, South America of about two hundred edifices built of white granite, and including palaces, temples, etc. The expedition did their work of uncovering the city about two years ago, and Professor Bingham furnished the National Geographic Magazine (April, 1913) of Washington, District of Columbia, with a graphic account of it, together with over two hundred fine photographs of the buildings claimed by him to have been built over two thousand years One question arising in the minds of these men who uncover the ancient temples on this continent is "What has become of the sacred text book, or any part of it, used by the highly civilized people who held religious services within those hallowed walls?" Echo answers "Where?" But every Latter Day Saint could, with the Book of Mormon as his guide answer, hence the scientific and literary world must come to us for the coveted information.

.mere have been during the past few years books written against the faith of the saints making special efforts to discredit their claims for the Book of Mormon and the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith the Martyr. But while our enemies have spent hundreds of dollars publishing their stereotyped falsehoods there have been tens of thousands of dollars expended by the United States Government and private corporations PROVING the sacred claims of this church to betrue, and the gospel of Christ restored to earth by a holy angel from heaven which we teach, is the world's great need today.

As a church we are very grateful to the army of willing workers who have such treasures of money, time and talents, who are spending some of them in our behalf, although they do not know it.

Saints, it will only be a few more years and the evidences in proof of the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon will be so wonderful and inspiring that we will appreciate the following words in hymnology better, if possible, than ever before. The first of the four verses reads:

"Book of Mormon, hid for ages On Cumorah's lonely hill Written by those ancient sages Whom Jehovah taught his will: Glad we hail it, Fulness of the gospel still."

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.

Dear Reader:-Did you ever stop to think how simple the gospel of Jesus Christ really is? We don't refer to such questions as the Godhead, or transubstantiation, or what and where hell is, or other similar questions about which men have quarrelled for centuries, but to the essential principles which every man needs to know in order to set himself right before God. Were we to judge the gospel by the learned discussions of men we would likely conclude that it was beyond our powers of understanding, but judging it by the Scriptures we find it very simple and within the mental grasp of every man and woman of ordinary intelligence.

The gospei was adapted to the common people of the world of whom Jesus himself was one. He selected for his apostles unlearned men and empowered them to teach it. In the beginning of his work he chose an unlearned man to prepare the way, a man who had been taught of God in the wilderness—John the Baptist who was sent to make straight the way of the Lord. Hear what he taught:

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins .-- Mark 1:4, 5.

Repentance and Baptism.

Here we see that John taught and practiced baptism for the remission of sins. That baptism was associated with repentance; in fact John would not baptize the people who did not show by their lives that they had truly repented of their sins, but when some who were hypocrites came to be baptized he said to them:

Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance. Luke 3:8.

So baptism is only for those who sincerely turn away from their sins and are willing to keep the commandments of God. and upon that basis baptism brings them a remission of their sins.

Faith.

Though faith in God and Jesus Christ is not mentioned directly as a part of the gospel taught by John, yet it is clear that he taught it for he pointed to the promises of God and their fulfillment, and testified of the Messiah, instructing the people to look to him for salvation, telling the people that "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." This was the burden of his message-to tell the people of their Savior and to prepare them for his coming. Faith went before their baptism.

Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

While John baptized only with water, he gave the promise that the Messiah who should come after him would baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire. Jesus affirms the correctness of these teachings on the two baptisms, which are in effect but one; when he said:

Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3:5.

The baptism, or birth, of the Spirit is as essential as the baptism of water in order that a man may have a full entrance into the kingdom of God. The baptism in water takes away sin and prepares the candidate for the implanting of the divine Spirit which gives him spiritual quickening, and makes him alive in Christ, Paul speaks of this Spirit as the "seal of our adoption." It is the means by which God and his truth are revealed to us, and by which we have communion with him, and are able to know of our sonship.

The Kingdom of God.

John also said: "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus spoke of the new birth as the means of entering into the kingdom of God. Paul says we are baptized into Christ, that is into his body, or his church. The kingdom of God, the kingdom of heaven, are often used synonomously with the Church. Jesus says he came through the door into the sheepfold when the porter opened to him, which can only refer to his baptism by John. So baptism, in addition to being for the remission of sins, is also the means of entrance into the Church or kingdom

Taught by Others.

All other things in the gospel are but the developments of these simple beginnings. Peter confirmed them on the day of Pentecost when filled with the Holy Ghost. When the people who believed the apostles' teachings asked what they should do, Peter said: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2:38). Here again faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost are taught. Paul also taught them, as we read in Hebrews 6:1, 2, where he speaks of "repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands" which is for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Many other scriptures teach these principles, and Jesus commanded his apostles to teach them "every creature." That means you and me. These principles apply to all men. They are so simple that all can understand them and obey them, and all who will may come into the family and fold of Christ. Ministers and churches, strange to say, have wandered away from them, :

but Christ has sent them again to the world, and makes the same promises today as anciently, so that every man who obeys may know for himself that God is true. Will you investigate farther?

AN ECHO FROM THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

Dear Sr.——:As I have a picture of our darling little girl for you, I thought I would write a few lines and send it. We do not know how we could get along without her. There is a west life. out her. There is a vast difference in our home; even surprised us. Janie returns thanks at the and she and I have our prayers and we pray that the time will soon come when we as a family can worship together. I believe her father will not wait many months reading the Ensign I always am glad to read the Auxiliary department. I never used to care much about it—but since we have our girlie, I feel as though am a mother, too.

You know how I always wanted children—but if it is to be that I am to raise some orphan child, I hope to do so in a right way. If we were better off financially, her father says we would take another child.

This is only a part of the above letter, but reading between the lines one can find so much to rejoice over; so much of good has come to a neglected child through our Children's Home first, and then through the good and lonely hearted woman who so fervently desired to fill her mission in life as a woman, a mother. And so much of good to the parents who so longed for a complete home, the impetus to lead and guide them into a fullness of life here and hereafter.

And the father is likely to come into the church in the near future! Who knows the far reaching influence of a child in the home, its love, its innocence and prayers!

I dare say these two who have lived several years alone together, can far better appreciate their added blessing now, than many who have the tie of flesh and blood to bind them to their children. This is no pleasant thought to those who realize its truth and so must spur us on to diligently examine ourselves and to study our children, that we and many others may all grow in knowledge and realize and receive the best in life for us as parents and guardians.

> ONLY MOTHER. Nobody knows of the work it makes To keep the home together. Nobody knows of the steps it takes, Nobody knows—only mother.

Nobody listens to childish woes, Which kisses only smother; Nobody's pained by naughty blows, Nobody only mother.

Nobody knows of the sleepless care Bestowed on Baby Brother; . Nobody knows of the tender prayer, Nobody-only mother.

Nobody knows of the anxious fears, Lest darlings may not weather The storm of life in after years, Nobody knows-but mother.

Nobody kneels at the throne above To thank the heavenly Father, For the sweetest gift—a mother's love, Nobody can—but mother.

SEWING AND AID DEPARTMENT, OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

At the last general convention of the Woman's Auxiliary, held at Independence in April, the undersigned was chosen as general superintendent of the Sewing and Aid department; and it is in this capacity that I desire to address every Woman's organization of this nature, in the Church the Church.

The last convention of the Auxiliary was marked by a growing interest, a deepening knowledge, a firmer basis for its work, and official recognition of its value as department of the Church, that was very gratifying to those who have so faithfully and prayerfully labored to this end. We are growing as an organization. The work is spreading abroad. Are YOU a part of it?

We know that nearly every branch of the Church has a Woman's organization of some helpful nature, principally of a financial character we presume. These various societies are doing a great amount of good; but we believe that more can be accomplished by working under one general organization, than in scattered independent societies. Therefore we invite every "aid society" in the church to become indentified with the Woman's Auxil-

We assure you that doing this will not in any way interfere with your work or the purposes of your organization. You will be free to devote your funds to whatever purpose you have banded yourselves together to raise them for. But we believe, that the knowledge that you are a part of a great body of "workers" whose great aim is to help on the noble cause of Christ, will cheer you on to continued effort; and when you see the published reports of the work that has been done and the money that has been gathered together for various worthy purposes, by the combined efforts of these societies, or will be astonished at the magnitude of the work. terfere with your work or the purposes of your organworthy purposes, by the combined ciforts of these societies, you will be astonished at the magnitude of the work, and you will rejoice that you are aligned with so great an organization. You will be helped and you will help others. You will have an interest in your sister societies and their work.

You will be interested also in reading from time to time in the space allotted to us in the Church papers, of the work of the Auxiliary, and will be glad to know of the successful operation of all its departments, and expecially of the one in which you are particularly inter-especially of the one in which you are particularly inter-

The sewing and aid department being our especial care, The sewing and and department being our especial care, we shall try to give all the help to this part of the work that lies in our power. No doubt most of the aid societies now in operation are raising funds for specific purposes. This is indeed a commendable work and should be encouraged, but let us not submerge the "aid" idea in be encouraged, but let us not submerge the "ant" idea in a financial sea. There are so many ways of aiding. Christ our Lord had neither purse nor script, nor even "where to lay his head".—so destitute was he of this world's goods, and yet how he blessed mankind. The poor, the sick, the maimed, the sorrowful, were all the recipients of his loving kindness. He went about doing us walk in his steps.

May we not do likewise? To the loving heart many avenues for service in this respect, will be opened. us walk in his steps.

One of the especial objects of our care should be the Children's Home, and we would suggest that a certain amount of the yearly earnings of each society should be devoted to this worthy institution, the amount to be decided by vote of the society. A full report of all work done, and all funds raised for whatever purpose, should be made annually on the first of January to the super-intendent of the department, and to the secretary of the local. In case you have no local organization other than local. In case you have no local organization other than your society, report to the general secretary, Minnie E. Scott, 309 So. Fuller Ave., Independence, Mo. An annual per capita tax of ten cents, should be sent to the general association, to heip bear the expenses incident to the carrying on of the work.

A complete society of this department may be affected by electing a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer; and by the appointment of committees necessary to the exercise of the work such as nurchasing. sary to the carrying on of the work such as purchasing, social, relief, etc. Rules for properly conducting your work should be formulated and kept in mind by the members. BOOK REVIEWS.

We are in receipt of a copy of "The Coming and Kingdom of Christ," published by The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 North La Salle St. Chicago, Ill.,252 pages, paper cover 60 cents net, cloth $1.00 net, postage 10 cents extra.

This book contains the addresses of prominent ministers of various denominations delivered at the "Prophetic Conference," which met under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute, at Chicago, February 24-27, 1914. The principal theme of the addresses is the Coming of Christ and the prophecies relating thereto. Some of those whose addresses appear are Rev. Robert McWatty Russeli, D. D. LL. D.; Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D.; Rev. W. B. Riley, D. D.; Rev. Canon F. E. Howitt, M. A.; Rev. R. A. Torreve, D. D.: and others. rev. D. D.; and others.

rey, D. D.; and others.

These addresses fairly represent the views of the leading denominations relative to the Coming of Christ, and offer many suggestions to the Bible student for new lines of thought and research in the word of God. The subject is considered under the various topics covering almost every phase. The book is just the thing for ministers and became who wish to familiaries thousaging with this and laymen who wish to familiarize themselves with this very important subject.

Wicks.-Christiana Klock was born in Chautaugua Wicks.—Christiana Klock was born in Chautauqua County, New York, eighty-four years ago. On December 25, 1852, she married B. F. Wicks and with him went west to Illinois. From Illinois they went to Iowa, and were among the first pioneers of Crawford County. They come to Independence in 1906. Her husband preceded her in death two years, dying June 12, 1912. They had two daughters, Annie, who died in young womanhood, and Carrie, the wife of W. J. McKim, with whom they have lived the left sears were. Though not resized in the lived the last seven years. Though not raised in the church, and not hearing of it until maturity, they readily accepted it when brought to them in Western Iowa, and were ever devoted to it. She died May 24, 1914, after a brief illness from pneumonia. For sixty years she lived and worked with her husband with unbroken interest, and since worked with her hubband with unforced mucless, and since his death, she had but waited to join him. Death came to her without dread or pain, and as the crowing blessing of a life of usefulness. Funeral from the home of Bro. and Sr. W. J. McKim, May 26, sermon by Elder W. H. Garrett, assisted by Elder G. E. Harrington. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

At Independence, Mo., May 24, 1914, Bre McGuire.—At Independence, Mo., May 24, 1914, Bro. John Alvin McGuire, nged 74 years and 8 months. He was born at Allentown, New Jersey, September 25, 1839, the son of Lewis and Margaret McGuire. December 16, 1876, at Bordentown, New Jersey, he married Miss Emmaline Ivins Bills, of Allentown, and to them were born two daughters, Nita now Mrs. Paul C. Thompson, of Independence, Mo., and Emma W. who died in infancy. Sr. McGuire, died June 11, 1882. Bro. McGuire heard and accepted the gospel at Allentown, April 28, 1878, being baptized by Elder J. A. Stewart of Philadelphia, Pa. He was ordained a deacon at Allentown. Stember 7, 1878, and tized by Elder J. A. Stewart of Philadelphia, Pa. He was ordained a deacon at Allentown, September 7, 1878, and discharged his duties with idelity and dilligence. He came to Independence, 27 years ago and has made that city his home until his decease. His daughter, Sr. Thompson, a brother, George A., of Long Branch, N. J., two sisters, Mrs. Sarah A. Hopkins, of Long Branch, and Mrs. H. H. Robinson, now of Holden, Mo., and four grand-children are chief mourners in this bereavment. Bro. McGuire was highly esteemed for his integrity and sterling honesty, preferring to suffer rather than do a wrong. Funeral from preferring to suffer rather than do a wrong. Funeral from the church, May 27, sermon by Elder W. H. Garrett, as-sisted by Elder G. E. Harrington. Interment in Mound

BREAKING OFF CIGARETTE SMOKING. By a Contributor in American Magazine. I am a young man 24 years old. I have smoked eigarettes since I was a boy until four months ago, and entire outdoor life had partially counternated the bad effects and, moreover, I was naturally strong and well; but I knew they were hurting me, and I wanted to stop.

Just about this time it happened that I changed my job. I had been driving a public taxicab, but I went home to see my folks in another town, and there I took the job driving a private care I only old companions and I hought: Now is my chance I am going to quilt For a few days I smoked two or three cigars a day, and then I quit sure enough and told myself about it afterward. The only thing I allowed myself was chewing gum. I found that a "present help in time of trouble," but I gradually broke myself of that.

I wouldn't go back to the old habit for nything. I feel better, I look better and I know I am better morally and physically, but it has been a fight, a fight that has taken every bit of corusge, strength and endurance that I possess.

The desire was with me day and night. Twented a digarette worse thin anything I had ever wanted in my late. We smoking in the bottom of my heart.

A FIFTY-YEAR LEAP.

How great a change has taken place in Rome during the last half century! It is almost impossible for travelers in Rome to realize that but little more than fifty years ago there was no kingdom of Italy. Upin March, 1861, Italy was what Prince Metternich described it, "a geographical expression," and the idea of Rome becoming its capital was considered "an extunsiast" dream." Yet on March 14, and the idea of Rome becoming its capital was considered "an extunsiast" dream." Yet on March 14, on the Italy was contacted, and on March 21, on the Italy was contacted, and on March 21, on the Initiative of Cavour, Rome was declared its capital, to become so in reality on September 20, 1870, when the temporal power of the Pope was overthrown, never again to be restored.

It is also difficult for travelers to realize the change that has come over Italy since then. During these few years she has gone from idleness to industry, from ginovance to knowledge, from poverty to wealth, from crime to virtue, from darkness to light, from death to life.—The Christian Herald.

Prayer is an action of likeness to the Holy Ghost, the spirit of gentleness and love—like simplicity in initiation of the holy Ghost, the spirit of gentleness and love—like simplicity; an initiation of the holy Jesus, whose spirit is meek up to the lody Jesus, whose spirit is meek up to the lody Jesus, whose spirit is meek up to the low marches slowly, and is without transportation, and often hindered, and never hasty; and is full of mercy; prayer is the peace of our spirit, the stillness of our thoughts, the evenness of recollection, the seat of meditation, the rest of our cares and the calm of our tempest; prayer is the issue of a quiet mind, of untroubled thoughts; it is the daughter of charity, and the sister of meekness; and he that prays to God with an angry, that is, with a troubled and discomposed spirit, is like him that retires into a battle to meditate, and sets up his closet in the outquarters of a mrmy, and chooses a frontier garrison to be wise in. Anger is a perfect alienation of the mind from prayer, and, therefore, is contrary to that attention which presents cur prayers in a right line to God.—Sel.

THE RELATION OF CHURCH AND PROPHET. It is inevitable that Mormonism shall make the will of its prophet the law of its being.

The above statement taken from an editorial in "The Christian Statesman" the official organ of the "National Reform Association," while written with reference to the Church in Utah, presents a point of criticism which has been often made. and we believe unjustly too, against the original Church organized in 1830 and presided over by Joseph Smith until his death in 1844, and also against the Reorganized Church which was organized from the faithful remnants of the disrupted Church in 1852 and presided over by Joseph Smith, son of the first president, from 1860 to the present time.

This criticism is evidently based upon the unusual and misunderstood claim of the Saints that the head of the Church is by virtue of his divine call and ordination by the voice of the Church, a prophet, and as such is entitled to the Spirit or revelation, by which means God can speak to his Church whenever he shall choose, giving a revelation of such things as he may deem proper and necessary for the guidance of his work. The truth or falsity of this claim is not under consideration here, but rather the correctness of the criticism that has been so generally made against the Church that "the will of its prophet is the law of its being."

The effect of this criticism is to make the head of the Church an absolute dictator, and the members abject slaves religiously, which would no doubt be equally surprising to both prophet and people whose knowledge of the conditions within the Church gives full and convincing proof that the criticism is without proper basis whatsoever. The constitutional law of the Church is a perpetual bar to despotic dictation, nor would the liberty-loving people of the Reorganized Church consent to any such attempt upon the part of its officers. The history of the Church also shows that the attitude of its leading officers from the beginning to the present has been otherwise than The Church acknowledges its presiddespotic. ing head to be the leading representative of the Church, being made so by the voluntary choice of the members in general conference. It also acknowledges him as God's leading representative because of its recognition of his divine call, and the responsibility placed upon him by the voice of the Church, believing that when men are so placed in their offices agreeably to the divine will God acknowledges them and uses them as his instruments in the performance of his work, or his mouthpiece in the expression of his will. Such privileges and powers do not place in the hands of such officers any right of arbitrary control or power of dictation, but leaves them subject to the law which governs the whole

In the inception of the work, even before the Church was organized, when the divine command came for the ordination of the first elders, there came with it the command to defer the ordinance until the approval of those who had been bap-tized should be had. Men who are ambitious for office, or seeking) dictatorial powers seldom wait to consult the wishes of the people, but here was a precedent established by Joseph Smith holding the right of the people to determine who should be their officers. A revelation given through him giving directions how to proceed in the organization of the Church among other things says:

No person is to be ordained to any office in this Church, where there is a regularly organized branch of the same, without the vote of that Church.—Doctrine and Covenants, 17:16.

Shortly after when the time for organization came this rule was observed, and no steps were taken except upon the approval of the members. As setting forth the law of the Church covering this point the following may be noted:

And all things shall be done by common consent in the Church, by much prayer and faith.—Doctrine and Cove-

This rule of common consent is recognized in every department of the Church. It is a part of the fundamental law and every officer and member is subject to it. For an officer to force his will upon the people against their consent is for him to become a transgressor, and as such amendable to the courts of the Church from which the law says none are exempt. The law further says:

further says:

Thou shall take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my Scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my Church.—Dectrine and Covenants 42:16.

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this Church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon in the which is the fullness of the granul.—Dectrine and Covenants 42:5

the fullness of the gospel.-Doctrine and Covenants 42:5.

These statements show that the ministers of the Church are to be governed in their teachings by the Scriptures which had been acknowledged as the basis of faith and doctrine, and not that they were to heed the dictation of any man who might in disregard of the law advocate doctrines or practices contrary thereto. While the head of the Church is acknowledged as its chief exponent, his teachings and policies are to be judged by the law equally with those of every other man, and adopted by the common consent vote of the body before they become the doctrine and order of the Church.

It has been urged by some that notwithstanding these things, the fact that the head of the Church also occupies the position of a prophet gives him arbitrary powers to impose upon the Church any doctrine he might desire in the form of a revelation, especially since one of the revelations says that "his word ye shall receive as if from my own mouth." But this is a mistake for the rule of the Church has been to examine carefully the documents presented by the prophet purporting to be the revelations of God, and not until they have been approved by all the quorums and finally by the body in general conference do they become binding upon the Church. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants containing the earlier revelations was so adopted by a general assembly of the Church in 1835, and subsequent revelations are received in a similar way.

The prophet is respected and honored by the people of the Church because he is worthy of respect, and because the position which he occupies in honor also entitles him to their confidence. But the Church does not hold him in any other light than as one of its own number, subject to the same laws and rules as all other members, and liable to err or fall into trans-gression as are other men. His advice and coun-sel are considered with all due respect, though they are not forced arbitrarily upon the body, and are approved or disapproved according to the judgment of the body as to their wisdom. His position as prophet gives him no power to make his will the law of the Church only as the members may by vote make his will their own. At the annual conferences he is sustained by the voice of the people, and should the vote decide against sustaining him his office would be vacated. This rule applies to all the leading officers of the Church,

There may be some justification for the criticism as applying to the Utah Church with reference to which the quotation at the head of this article was made, but with that we have nothing

The true Church of Jesus Christ organized under the law before mentioned and continuing in the Reorganized Church is not under this criticism either in its doctrine or its practice. Space will not permit us taking up any of the facts of history, nor even the many points of Scriptural teaching, touching upon this point, but what has been given will show the general intent of the law.

The Supreme Court. It is said that the su-preme court of Missouri is over two years behind in its work of hearing cases. The court disposed of 702 cases during last year, and there are 1,011 others awaiting disposal. This may indicate somewhat the condition of the times, not alone in Missouri but in all other states as the crowded condition of the Missouri's court's docket is practically the same as in other states. Were the people living up to the law, and dealing with each other in equity and justice, there would be nothing for the supreme court to do except to adjust difficulties which might arise through unavoidable misunderstanding. But most of these cases represent wrongdoing upon the part of one or more defendants, if not upon the part of the plaintiffs, and make a sad comment on the loyalty to law of the nation's citizens. A higher regard for law and less desire for wealth would enable men to more fully keep within the bounds of the law and thus avoid facing it in judgment to the sorrow of many.

Does death deliver? In a farewell note left by a young woman who had taken her life was found the words—"Death before shame." effort to escape the consequences of sin is one of the many similar ones reported each week in the daily press. The banker who mis-applies the funds of innocent depositors, the man who forges the check upon the man who has befriended him, the man who because of some crime has brought disgrace upon his family, often seeks to escape the results by plunging himself into eternity. It is a most serious mistake. Life gives opportunity for repentance and restitution, but death releases no man from the penalties of sin except it be the penalty of the civil law. Such a course adds a greater sin to become accounted for before the bar of God, and it is far better to avoid such contingency and bravely face the demands of the law here, patiently bearing the penalty while courageously renewing the battle for the right. In this way one may live down past wrongs, and many a soul who has made the attempt has gained the respect and honor of men and has secured the forgiveness and blessings of God. A rash act plunges one deeper into spiritual death and cuts off the opportunities which life affords.

The unprecedented wheat crop. The whole nation, if not the whole world, ought to rejoice with Kansas and Oklahoma over the very large yield of wheat which is now being harvested. estimated that in Kansas alone the yield will amount to one hundred and fifty million bushels, or more than one and a half bushels for every man, woman, and child in the United States. With an abundant yield in other parts of the country the high cost of living ought to come tumbling down some. Calls have been going out for laborers to work in the harvest fields, and hundreds have responded because of the good wages offered until some of the countries have said "We have enough." The Lord has said of his harvest field in which precious souls are the wheat "Behold, the field is white already to harvest, therefore, whose desireth to reap, Let him thrust in his sickle with his might, and reap while the day lasts, that he may treasure up for his soul everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God," but there has been no rush to this field and the laborers have indeed been few. It is that earthly gain appeals to men so strongly, and that eternal gain is undiscerned, that men answer so readily to the call of one and give no heed to the call of the other.

Elder Joseph Luff was the preacher at the morning service. He read a part of the 10th chapter of St. John, using for the basis of his remarks the latter part of the 10th verse, which reads: "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." The sermon was full of good instruction. In the evening Elder A. H. Parsons preached the first of a series of sermons on the first principles of the gospel, this one being on faith, which was admirably handled, classing it under three heads: faith that cometh by hearing, faith the fruits of work and faith a gift from Goil, as is experienced in case of divine healing.

The president of the Branch called a meeting lost Thurs day evening of the officers of all the auxiliary, to discuss a readjustment of the meeting times of these societies. proposition was preented that the Sunday school, A proposition was prsented that the Sunday school, Re-ligio and other societies whose work is of an educational nature hold their meetings Sunday afternoon similtane-ous or otherwise, discontinuing the Sunday School in the forenoon, and that the prayermeeting now hold in the afternoon be held in the forenoon. The object of this, evidently, would be to conserve time, as it seems hard to find time for all the nesessary meetings. An objection to holding a number of meetings at one time would confront holding a number of meetings at one time would controut those who wished to attend more than one. For instance, if the Sunday school and Religio were held at the same time a person could not take part in both. Did the Creator make a mistake in not providing enough time? or is the church making a mistake in following the strenuous allwork life of the business world at the sacrifice of the home-life? A prominent Elder in a sermon not long ago said it was rush, rush, till a man hardly has time to kiss his wife and babies-get up early in the morning and off to work, home at night just bearly in time to s bite and off to meeting, with no time to get acquainted once and of the meeting, with no time to get acquainted with his family. Is it not setting the example to the young that home is only a place to eat and lodge over night, and a tendency to destroy the family circle? These are thoughts for reflection. No action was taken on the proposition, but the Religio will discuss it Friday night.

A mass meeting was held at the city hall last Thursday evening by the leading workers in the local option move-ment, and effected an organization with president, vice presidents and committees. A vigorous campaign has been outlined, and a semi-weekly paper will be published for a month or during the time of the campaign. With the there are great hopes of a successful issue. As one man was heard to say, "What good are the saloons, any way? Can any body tell any good they are?" Though he prefaced these questions with language it would hardly do to repeat here, he put questions that it is hard for any one to try to Judge James Peacock, said to be the oldest citizen in Independence, died Sunday evening at the home of his son in Frankfort, Kansas, at the age of nearly ninety years. He had lived in Independence for seventy-two years, or since 1841, coming here when seventeen years old from Richmond, Ky., where he was born in 1824. When the Mexican war broke out he volunteered and enlisted under Col. A. W. Doniphan whom Latter Day Saints look upon as a friend in time of need, spoken of in the church history as General Doniphan. Mr. Peacock perhaps knew more of the early history of Independence than any other living person. He served as police judge for some sixteen years up to about four years ago, always being nominated by the Democrats and endorsed by republicans. The remains were brought to Independence Tuesday and the funeral held Tuesday afternoon.

Several months have passed since our last report but for this the correspondent was to blame, illness having prevented activity along this line and also many others. Our branch is doing fairly well and we are progressing in many ways. Some of the meetings are well attended. but we have quite a number of sleeping soldiers. The Lord has been very kind to us and many blessings both spiritual and temporal have been given.

Several of our active workers who have been absent for some time have returned, among them Bro. Thomas Newton from the Isle of Pines and Bro. Ray Lloyd and wife from Minneapolis. We rejoice to have them with us once more and that they still have a desire to assist in the Lord's work. Bro. William Hott and Sr. P. J. Raw will be in charge of the Religio for the balance of the year, and it is their desire and ambition to make the Religio even more interesting than ever before and to try to persuade some of those who have become weary in well doing to again become active members.

The Sunday school is doing well considering that the majority of those who attend come from homes where the parents are not members of our church.

Many sick ones have received strength and comfort through administration by the elders and many prayers have been answered. The correspondent desires to gratefully acknowledge that had it not been for the prayers of saints, lofe's dream would have passed for her several months ago.

Have had no baptisms for some time, but quite a few ot of our faith attend our meetings and some are investigating.

I so much desire to see the work built up at this place. My heart is often made sad because of the indifference of some of the saints.

I humbly ask the prayers of the faithful in behalf of the work at this place.

With a prayer for God's people and his glorious work, I beg to remain your sister in the one faith, Leona Martin. Chetek, Wis., June 17.

Dear Ensign:—The work is progressing in this part of the Lord's vineyard. We have Sunday school and preaching Sundays, Wednesday evening prayermeeting and Friday, Religio. There is quite a good attendance at each. We have a full code of officers here. My husband is deacon of the branch. They take turns preaching. I have belonged to the church for about seven years. This latter day work grows brighter and brighter to me. I am so thankful for the knowledge I have of the gospel, and I realize the more we study the greater light we receive. We have two children—an adopted boy who was baptized last year, and a little girl, aged three. She has so much faith in the church. If she is sick or gets hurt the first thing she calls for is olive sick or gets hurt the first thing she calls for is olive oil, and she is always healed. Hope we may live to set a good example always before our children, that they may see there is more pleasure in serving God, than to partake of the pleasure of this world. It makes our bearts and when we can a many things the serving God, then to hartase of the pleasure of this world. It makes our hearts sad when we see so many things to draw our young people astray. It causes us to watch and pray always. For the Savior says the Spirit is willing and the flesh is weak. The priest of our branch, Bro. McGimis, is sorely afflicted and we sympathize with him. He has tubercolosis of the bone. No earthly power can help him. We ask the saints to pray for him that if it is the Lord's will he may be restored to health again, as we need him in our branch. He has a wife and three children that also need his assistance. I also ask an interest in your prayers in my behalf. I have a skin trouble on my face. Doctors say they cannot cure it. I so much my face. Doctors say they cannot cure it. I so much desire to be healed of it. The Scriptures say the prayer of the righteous man availeth much.

I realize there is much affliction in the land, and many of God's people are afflicted. It behooves each of us to live humble and faithful lives, so the Lord will bless and heal us.

Let us move on with patience, knowing from whence our strength cometh that in the sweet bye and bye we shall reap on abundant harvest, when reward shall be given to the faithful, is the prayer of your sister in

Dear Ensign:—I belong to the Reorganized Church. There are not many Saints here and the people are very prejudiced and bindly lead, so they cannot understand. There is much wickedness in this city, but it makes me all the stronger in the faith. I am seventy-two years am strong and can do as much work as half of the middle aged women.

We are holding forth with a tent in this town where M. R. Scott lives and we expect to baptize some tomorrow. Three have asked for baptism, and the end is not yet. I had to run down to Louisville to speak the words that made Bro. James Welsh and Sr. Louisa Schmett one. We wish them a long and prosperous life. As I came back to this place our train struck a hand car and killed the section boss instantly and hurt another man very badly. We have a rented tent and can't keep it long, but we will labor for the progress of Zion.

WOMAN'S VALUE IN THE COMMUNITY.

By Mrs. J. A. Gardner. (Read before the General Conference, as Auxiliary program Friday evening, April 10th.) Evidence of a woman's capabilities and independence began when the first woman mounted a bicycle and rode out of her father's dooryard, or when the first woman successfully operated a typewriter, and proved that her work of a commercial value."—Alice Hubbard. It is not woman's independence we want to tell you about tonight so much as woman's value and capability outside of her own home. When ever I meet a wom: who believes "Votes for women" 1 am curious to know he who believes you would have the sale cady at hand to do, and if she is doing what she has already at hand to do, and if she is doing it well, otherwise she would no doubt vote as poorly as she does her present work. Let the woman as poorly as sine does her present work. Let the woman qualify for voting by doing what is up to her now—well.

The ideal of motherhood must always remain as high as it is now, but the vision of her future work must grow bigger and stronger. If a woman's life is narrow it is because of her failure to see the opportunities for service in her community. Never in the history of the to make the world a better place in which to live and never to make the world a better plice in which to live and never were there so many things to do, and in this willingness to do is always the object of serving others.

Competition js as keen today for the life and soul of the young people as the competition in the business world is for dollars. When you locate the young people of the community you may know which is making the most appeal to them, the church and the home or the bright lights. .

The church has failed because its gospel has been more The church has failed because its gospel has been more of a tradition in the minds of the young people than a living thing to be sued today. The home has failed because of the same lack of understanding between the woman of yesterday and the girl of today. The church and home have been supercueded in a social way by the theatres, moving picture shows, dance halls and so forth. Women are thoroughly convinced, because they have seen the results of evil, that the "wages of sin is death," and are sincered in before efforts to save our girls and boys from the rice of today.

Lyman Abbott, the veteran preacher, says: "I do not ish to be critical of the Christian Church of which wish to be critical of the Christian Church of which I am a minister, but it geems to me that the women and men who work in the settlements for crippled children, the music and art studio, are more nearly following the example and the teaching of the Master, than those who gather in their separate churches, in factoryville to sing and pray and listen to sermons."

If a woman has any talent towards social reform it is not lessened because of her becoming a mother, but it grows greater because of her experience, and gives her a more sympathetic understanding of mothers who are delinquent, and the over increasing number of unmardelinquent, and the ever increasing number of unmar-ried mothers whose condition depreciate the community life. The value of the community work is no longer questioned, and until it has been proven that it is not productive of a fuller and richer life, do not condemn it. Ellen Key says: "Woman observes and man reasons. By their co-operation we get the clearest light and most complete science of which the human mind is capsble." A woman who really senses her obligations knows she has not fulfilled her duty until she has not only cared for the children of her own home, but also touched the

for the children of her own home, but also touched the personal lives of the children in her neighborhood. The individual woman can teach her own children and influence many, but much more can be done by co-operating with others

Organized effort should be made to prevent vice rather than to cure it. Of course we must deal in a measure with the effect of vice, but our greatest effort should be in seeking the cause which takes us back to the home and mmunity, whether they be rural or town, hence the and T. Association, Big Sisters, Woman's Civic Club, I so forth. The question comes to every woman then, and so forth. "How much time can I conscientiously spare from my family, and how can I conserve that time to the best interest of those around me?"

A mother gave as her excuse for not attending a Parent-Teachers meeting that she wished to finish em-broidering a dress for her daughter. Some time later the daughter contracted a case of scarlet fever because of very poorly ventilated school-room, the result being that left very deaf.

A little boy of the town was badly cut with a barb-wire fence on the school grounds. The mother had no time for Parent-Teachers meetings in which to investigate for Parent-Teachers meetings in which to investigate conditions, yet she spent many anxious hours fearing the development of blood-poison. When such tragedies as these come home to us our vision is far too narrow.

Winston Churchill says that, "A new religion is being made—a wonderful transformation is taking place—a partment of life, the home, the office, the factory, the laboratory of the scientist, and the work shop of the literary man, as well as the synagogue and church.'

The idea of dealing out meat and drink to the poor, and putting delinquents in public institutions, placing girls in rescue homes, is losing ground, and the new way is gaining. Means are being placed in the way of the in-tellectually, morally, and spiritually needy to help them to efficiency and morality.

The gosnel of service today means the saving the young woman of the street, or the young man who inhabits the city den, by the personal contact of the clean woman of our homes and towns, which demonstrates the re-ligion of James, wherein the needy are helped by those who keep "themselves unspotted from the world."

We attended a meeting of a club in Kansas City, which was organized for the purpose of getting in personal touch with women and girls. The members were telling their experiences. The chair asked of Mrs. D. "Tell us how you succeeded this week." Mrs. D. very promptly answered, "I went to see Nellie's mother and told her answered, "I want to see Nellie's moture and tool her that her little daughter was friendly with a very bad girl, and together with the mother we succeeded in breaking up the friendship." As she told it there was a suspicious quiet in the room, the impression seemed to be that something was wrong. The woman who assisted the presiding officer said, very impressively, "I wonder what became of the other girl?"

"The method of ostracism is as cruel and cold and as silent as the coming of winter."

I know a woman with nine children into home a child of the community was welcomed who had been driven from other homes, because he was such a "bad" boy, and beause he swore so. But this mother of nine, most of them boys, permitted him to come. She never heard him swear, and the children said, "he always choked back the swear-words." This because of the influence and supervision of the mother.

Did you ever have a boy who shunned other mother's because they called him bad, come to you fearlessly and with confidence, tell you somthing of little interest to you, but of vital importance to him? If so you have felt the inspirational joy that comes from realizing that you have made that boy think that you believe in him. If you have not had such an experience, try it.

The records will show that those who fight white slavery tell us the greatest supply comes from the rural community. Is it so in your community?—you who come from the rural districts? Are your children left at recess and noons during school days to seek their own pleasure, or is their play supervised and encouraged? Go to your school such as are conducive to good health and morals, or do your boys and gorls attend what is called a "box-car school house?" If so, make things better, and give good healthy, moral, and social surroundings to your children, by getting acquainted with your school board, finding out why conditions are so, and what you can do to help. you can do to help.

There is nothing in the farming community to hold a There is nothing in the infining community to noid a boy or girl, the fun and sociability are lacking. The life, nusic, fun, glare, and something doing of the city attract and they go. The parents are willing they should go, because of the excellent advantages for greater edugo, necessite of the excellent auvantages for greater enti-cation. But why not have it in your own schools? You may have to hand over a few additional dollars for taxes in order to pay for additional advantages, but think of the effect on your boys and girls. You pay for the taxes for your school houses, you continue to pay taxes for the up-keep and improvements on them. Why not use them as second convers? They belong to you social centers? They belong to you.

If you use your school building for social centers in both town and rural communities, it will change entirely both town and trant communities, it will change entirely the attitude of the young boys and girls toward the town or rural school and finally the home. Your boys and girls will stay with you and the greatest conservation for our country that can be made—will be made—by bringing back to the farming community those who have been reared there and trained for that kind of work.

Sadie came to the city—got a position paying much less than a livine way.

Sadue came to the city—got a position paying much less than a living wage. She grew thred of work without play. One saturday evening she kept out just ten cents of her salary to attend a moving picture show. It was the beginning of a good time for her with a man of the streets who convinced her that her life was much too simple and unattractive. She was afterwards picked up by the police.

Jennie came to the city, earned $6.40 a week. She had a good time at first at the shows and soda fountains, but after a time her clothes got shabby and her salary went for new clothes. She had nothing left for five-cent shows and she was unhappy and lonesome. The man she met on the street brought pleasure into her life of a very facinating kind. The usual evil resulted. Thousands of girls yield to just such temptation every year, and yet they are just like other girls. But these girls have not had their social wants met.

There is a field for women here in the church or as an individual. Church halls or parlors may be thrown open for social evenings, simple suppers, and so forth, always supervised. Rest-room may be provided for girls, church parlors or private homes, to receive her compar Why not! In such an environment rather than the street or the park or the hall-room.

Then the individual work is always before you, if you are in earnest, planning pleasures for one, two or more of these girls by inviting them to your home. It was not an impossible task for one mothers' club to get the use of a school ground and fix up a tennis court. And it was not sensoi ground and nx up a tennis court. And it was not a difficult task for them to organize a girls auxiliary to meet in one of the school rooms. A vacant building was fitted up for winter evenings, one night to be devoted entirely to girls. Neighborhood parties were given all wintirely to girls. Neighborhood parties were given all win-ter by the young people and the get-together habit became a fixed thing.

In one community the mothers of boys formed a club, the kind that included the boys, and did not send the boys wandering the streets while the mothers were in session. wandering the streets while the mothers were in session. The plan was that once a week the boys would meet in the home of one of them to spend the day. At the first meeting the boys erected an Indian tepee with blankets, copper kettles, etc. The day included a lunch, the presiding mother taking care to use her influence in teaching the boys of the later was the statement of the section of the fair play, courtesy, etc.

Women have been untiring in their zeal to better ditions for shop and factory girl and their work has been, in a measure, successful. But in an institution in New York statistics show that eighty per cent of the girls and women criminals sent there, came from their own homes, that is from among those engaged in general house work, which is postive proof that we must come back home to which is postive proof that "the girl next door."

The per centage of girls doing general housework is The per centage or girls using scheme about forty out of one hundred, not including the dress-makers, milliners, etc. The larger numbers of those girls who leave domestic service, for factory work, do not object to the hard work in homes, but to the loneliness and lack of recreation and pleasure. These conditions may be met, a cure may not be effected in a year or several years, but the termination control texther and wake a start. but the women can get togther and make a start.

but the women can get togener and make a sast.

Every woman should have a quest, all her time, talents and personality be "poured out" for her quest. A singer, a student, a musician gives her time and talent for the object of her quest. The other Wise Man gave his life to his quest, that of the New Born King.

All cannot be physical mothers, but we can be spiritual mothers. Our work is not in physical creation alone, but every woman can send a part of herself out to work. You and I can get in touch with God's eternal plan and help and I can get in touch with God's eternal plan and help work it out, not only by prayer, but by some one we touch. If our quest is a worthy one we get something for our souls. If our quest is unworthy our souls die. It is worth more to put yourself into a thing than to put money into it. A woman with a dead soul has given of her physical being only from which there are no returns to her soul. "Life is not a cup to be drained, but an offering to be poured out."

SERMONS AND ARTICLES

AN ACCEPTABLE SACRIFICE.

Sermon delivered by Evangelist Frederick A. Smith, at Kansas City, Mo., November 11, 1913.

Reported by Belle Robinson James.

Reported by Belle Robinson James. In the 12th chapter of Romans you will find this language, beginning with the first verse:

"I besech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. Having then gifts, differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering; or he that exhorteth, on exhortation, he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness.

giveti, let him do it with simplerty; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with cheerfulness.

Let love be without dissimulation. Abbor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer; distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality. Bless them which persentle way, bless and curse not them which persecute you; bless, and curse not. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep. Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits. Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves! but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

I have sometimes thought when reading this chapter very carefully that a person could just read that and stop. It is so applicable to the conditions in which we find ourselves today. It is so wide in its range, finding a place for nearly every one of us, touching us in some vital spot. The Apostle undoubtedly felt the touch and impress of the divine Spirit when he gave utterance to it, but the chief thought we want to call attention to tonight is found in the first and second verses.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that your present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God."

Now I am conscious of the thought that will come into the minds of a good many, that what the Apostle Paul has asked here means effort upon our part; service, diligent service, close application, and I am also aware that when you talk about service, doing something, workingwell, we don't like it. Most verybody seems to think they have work enough without calling attention to it in connection with our religious And it is just possible that there is a feeling in the world that they would like to have this religious question made just as easy as possible. But when we come to canvas that question. there is another one that presents itself and that one must have consideration. The brother told you last night in his talk that in every place you go, no matter what stage of life you may find humanity, you will discover that the question of religion enters in. It is true, whether of the savage, the semi-savage or whether you go to the civilized nations-no history of those people is complete without the history of their religion. You will find no history without finding that feature of it mentioned, and it is an interesting

Whoever has studied the history of the world has been forced to recognize in that history that one of the features that performed its peculiar work, played its important part in the civilization, or of the life of the family, of the community, of the state, has been its religion. It is true now, and whether we worship the true and living God, or whether it be an idol or a totem pole or what it may be the fact remains that we cannot get away from that peculiar part of human nature. It will find vent somewhere, and the individual may scoff at God, despise the idea of Diety in every sense of the term, and yet set up his peculiar idol and bow down before it. For in some way, in some place, it must find vent, for it seems to be a part of our being.

Now while that is true why not take into consideration the thought that it becomes the duty of civilized people to see to it that their religion is a reasonable service unto God. Now when we use that term "reasonable service," I want it to be used not only with the idea that it is reasonable that we render a certain service unto God, but I desire that you should exercise the further thought that that service should be of a reasonable, rational character. In no place in the Scripture have I discovered anything that would indicat that God asks at the hands of his children here upon the earth a fanatical, unreasonable, religion. He doesn't ask that. On the contrary, the more I have studied his requirements of the human family, the more it has appealed to me that he has had an object, a purpose, deeper and grander than the majority of the human family have been willing to give him credit for.

Now I want to examine that thought a little while tonight and see, for I know just how some of the human family today are looking upon the idea of the service that we are supposed to render to God. They look upon it grudgingly. Now I want you people here that are members of this congregation, that worship in this church, to just gather that thought. Some of them are looking at the service that they are asked to render unto God as being arduous. It takes too much time. They are too tired; they have other things that they want to do. It costs too much to meet their share of the expenses. All these little details enter in and become a part of the excuses that we make in justifying ourselves, possibly, in neglecting the service that we believe justly belongs to God. If you didn't believe it, you wouldn't make these excuses; you would simply stand back upon the ground that "I don't believe I don't consider it necessary and won't do it:" but no! you make an excuse; you justify yourself in not doing, and the fact that you seek to justify yourself becomes evidence upon the face of it that you recognize and believe down in your heart there is a duty that devolves upon you.

Now in making yourselves "holy, acceptable unto God," offering your bodies a living sacrifice there is a deep-seated purpose, and I am going to try to bring that out tonight, if I can; for we are living in an age of lightness, of frivolity in many things, when we don't want to think seriously. People would like to have someone else do the serious thinking for them. So that in the canvas of these questions, we want you first to take up the thought-what does it mean to offer yourselves "a living sacrifice?" That would not mean that he wanted you to offer your bodies a sacrifice upon the altar, for you see that would be the burning of the sacrifice and would end the He doesn't want that; he doesn't want a dead sacrifice, but a living one.

There are many ways, possibly, in which this could be accomplished, but what is the especial feature that he asks in this? That this sacrifice shall be "holy, acceptable unto God." Now the Apostle says that is a reasonable service. If it is a reasonable service there must be some good and sufficient reason why humanity should offer such a sacrifice.

I am frank to make the statement that in this proposition that the Apostle has presented unto us, he has unfolded before us a work that means everything, and I told you last Sunday night that the responsibility rested upon us to do the will of God if we would enter into the kingdom of heaven. In that very lesson that we read our attention was called to the fact that Jesus presented this idea: "He that hearth these sayings of mine and doeth them" was likened unto a wise man that built his house on a rock and it stood the storms of time and could not be beaten down. "He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not," he is likened unto a foolish man that built his house on the sand and as soon as the winds came and the floods beat upon it, it fell. Now we don't want to be foolish; we want to be among the wise, so that in reading the sayings of God, it means to do them.

Now if we do anything let us do the things that God has required, this making of a sacrifice is comprehended in that thaught; the bringing of ourselves to that condition of holiness that will be acceptable unto God is the required feature of the work. Now that may mean something to do for each of us, and in the careful consideration of a few of the little items that I shall mention tonight, I want you to bear in mind this thought; that what is hard for one and with which he has to struggle with all his might to overcome, another person would not be troubled by it in the You mustn't get the idea for a moment that because you don't have to struggle over that and it is no difficulty for you, that it is not a trial, that is not a struggle, that it is not a sacrifice for the other; for you will probably discover, if you watch carefully that something that staggers you and that compels you to hesitate even to stumble on, the other individual smiles at as being insignificant and not worthy of noticing at all, and you discover again that you cannot afford to take any stand foolishly along that line for you are meeting a trial and making sacrifice, just as he was on the thing that did not bother you.

Now that feature I want you to keep in mind, so that when we refer to these things, if they don't strike you, just congratulate yourself that you are getting along easily but remember that others are having troubles along that line.

What does it mean to make ourselves "holy?" What has the Master asked at our hands who says, "Follow me"? "Keep my commandments"? And when we begin to look over those commandments-he enumerated them in the 19th of Matthew to that young man—"Thou shalt not kill: Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not lie; Thou shall not commit adultery"; "Honor thy father and thy mother" and a few others; the young man replied "All these things have I kept from my youth up, what lack I yet?" You may have had no trouble with these evils. You have easily avoided them all, and haven't broken those commandments; but Christ says to him: thou hast and give to the poor, and come take up thy cross and follow me." There is the Master's statement. We are told that the young man was possessed of great worldly goods, and he went away sorrowful and sad. Now, my friends, I have thought of that question. I have tried to study it thoroughly and have asked myself the question-Where was the struggle for the young Now, where was the struggle? these things have I kept from my youth up.
What lack I yet?" "Sell what thou hast" does not imply that he must sell everything he had in the world, but it implies, "Sell what thou hast to sell and give it to the poor-that which you can spare." That was the real thought in it.

But the selling of his possessions was not the only thing required. That would not bother much. He might have sold all and made himself famed as a philanthropist, but that would have been the hardest thing. The thing to my mind that actually tried the man was the call to "Come, take up thy cross and follow me," for being a young man of great riches, a man of influence in his community, a man that moved in the higher circles, as we sometimes call it, to yield to the call would be a terrible blow to his pride! He must humble himself. He must give up his associations, for he knew that his associations that he had been accustomed to, were opposed to the lowly Nazarene--His friends had no use for him. Why? They questioned his birth-they called him an impostor, a fase Christ. To heed the call was to make a sacrifice, humiliating from a worldly standpoint at least, which the young man could not do.

So we discover in this case he had something to meet. With some of you it may be an easy matter to resist certain evils, or do the things required. You may be perfectly willing to lay down the associations of the world, to cast them to one side in order that you may interest yourself in Christ and follow him, let him lead where he will. Your struggle probably comes in something else. You may be of a very fiery temper that gets you into trouble every once in awhile by virtue of setting your tongue loose just at a time when it ought to be still, and you say things that you can repent of at your leisure, though it is a very humiliating thing to repent of it after you have said it, and that is a trial for you, a conflict my friends, and you must learn to bring yourself into subjection along that line, if you would make yourself holy, like unto God. It is a duty then and becomes a part of the responsibility that falls to the individual that would follow Christ.

There may be others who are not troubled in the least with a flery temper or with a disposition to talk too much. They may have another fault which is bad or perhaps a little worse in some way and they have to fight to overcome that. There is another thing that sometimes presents itself that I often like to call attention to and that comes to us in this: How often, Oh how often, we know of those little things in our own hearts. in our own disposition that we subject to a certain kind of covering up and hiding from the eye of our friends and those around us and they don't know it-but we do. We know it is not right and because we know it is not right is one of the reasons that we are so particular and so careful to hide it from view; and yet, my friends, how many of us have fought and struggled and prayed and wept alone that we might overcome this thing? That we are conscious of the fact that no one else knows, possibly but ourselves and our God, but he knows it. They don't know that we are making that struggle, but, my friends. did it ever occur to you that to make ourselves holy, acceptable unto God, will require sacrifice. We must do it. We must cleanse ourselves. It is a part of the peculiar work that lies before us, that we must rid ourselves of sin in some manner. Work we must! We cannot afford to relax our diligence, or for one moment to step off guard, for if we do the danger is there.

Think of the individual who has an inherited love for strong drink. It is there, that craving gnawing constantly at his vitals? Nobody else may know it. He may keep it in subjection-hidden from his friends: but how many of the friends know of the fight, the sacrifice, that is being made by that individual to overcome that terrible thing which if yielded to must bring sorrow to his loved ones and destruction to himself? There is where some of this neculiar work comes in-a living sacrifice. We have appetites that we yield and give up. Why? Because we know we dare not gratify them. We have desires, we have ambitions often that we would not whisper to a soul, not one. We cannot possibly yield to them and be holy, acceptable to God. We must put them away. We must sacrifice them.

We say sometimes to the individual who goes out as a minister for Christ, a missionary-you must lay down your ambitions to accumulate in this world, your ambitions to be a success in the professions, your political aspirations; all of these must be laid aside. You must sacrifice the interests of your family; you must leave the home and the home comforts and pleasures and go outfor what? In the interests of your fellow being? We ask them to do that. Only those who have gone and those who have remained at home can answer the question as to what it costs, what it means. It is a living sacrifice, friends, for one that does it, and for those that remain at home it is a constant one.

Now then, you stop a moment and say: that is a sacrifice. Oh, I should not put it that way, should I? Why? Because you say: "You will be rewarded." Well, you too will be rewarded. won't you? As members, as followers of Christ, as believers in him looking out into the world longing for better conditions, are you not looking for reward? Do you not expect it? What sacrifice, what effort are you making?

You say to the minister who goes out: you must walk in the paths of righteousness, of virtue, of honor, of honesty, of uprightness all the way through. You say to that minister's family: you must conduct yourself in such a way as to reflect credit and honor upon the man who represents Christ that you call husband and father. What right have you to dictate the conduct of these people? What are you doing? Are not similar sacrifices made of every one?

You say you are sacrificing. What are you sacrificing? Are you maintaining righteousness, unrightness, virtue, honesty-all of those poculiar characteristics that go to make us like unto God? If not friends, what about the teachings these men have been giving you, the instruction they have laid down, the example they have set, and that the Master has set? Right there you will begin to discover at once the responsibility that comes home to the child of God.

You talk to the world. You invite them to come to Christ, to accept of him and the gospel. You tell them of its beauties and of its power to save, of the glory in the world to come. They look at you and ask in their own minds—"What has it done for you?" If your life has not been what it ought to have been, holy and acceptable unto God, I want you to answer, what influence will your advocacy of the gospel of Jesus Christ have with the world? Think now, all of you! And the more you think of it the more you will discover that as each individual assumes this responsibility of making himself holy, and moves along in the accomplishment of it, there will be reflected from the general body the light of the gospel of Jesus Christ and its power to save that will speak and bear witness to the truth of the testimony borne by the minister and by you and by the Christ himself.

Now then, as to its reasonableness, and why ve should bring ourselves into this condition of holiness, of uprightness, sincerity and earnestness and develop our individual and spiritual features to such a point that we shall reflect the Christ and his truth. What are you asking for? What are we in the gospel for? I told you that God had a deep-seated purpose in all these things, that he is asking at our hands a deep-seated I want you to think for a few minutes nurnose. this evening on just this thought-what are you looking for? What is the most valuable thing that you have got in the world? You answer-Life. It is the one thing in this world for which you would sacrifice every material thing. Think of it! That mortal life, which is surrounded with trouble, disappointment, conflicts, sickness, sorrow and separation you prize so highly. There comes to us the little mead of happiness and joy and satisfaction along this line, it is true, but at the end lies separation, death; and vet, my friends, you will give everything you have got in the world to save your life; and why not? What are worldly things without life?

say, "Of no value at all."

I remember a little incident that impressed this upon my mind quite forcibly a number of years ago when I was working in the mill. They sent me out to settle some difficulty that had arisen over a contract they had made, and I was required to go out into the country to an Indian agency in order to accomplish my work. I anticipated getting back the next morning on a certain train. Having accomplished a settlement and finished my work. I then drove hastily to the depot only to discover that I was too latethe train had gone. It meant a good deal to me. for my work was piling up at home and it meant 24 hours' delay before I could get there. There was nothing to do but to wait and I confess that it was not a pleasant situation and I was not in the best of humor over it. I frankly acknowledge that I didn't control my temper as I should have done. I walked restlessly up and down the hotel Back of me was a row of rocking chairs; seated in one of which was a gentleman of about sixty years of age-a very nice looking man, but he bore the marks of disease. After I had tramped around there awhile and given vent to my impatience, this gentleman said in a very kindly tone: "Young man, sit down here a moment; I want to talk to you." I was a voung man then. I sat down, glad to do most anything to divert my attention. If he wanted to talk, I was willing to let him. I didn't stay there but a few moments until I was interested. He says: You are disappointed; you are anxious to get to your work." I told him I was. He says, to your work." "You are fretting under it." I had to confess I was fretting some under it. Now, he says, "My boy, stop it. Stop it. I know just how you feel. I have been through that mill. You are anxious to succeed and make success in life. I was anxious myself and determined to do it; he says, "I fretted, I worried, I stormed, I did everything of the kind that a nervous man does. I finally made success as far as this world counts success. I am a successful man. I have got plenty of money, and now after I have made my success I am spending my money to correct my error."

Wall I looked at him then straight. "What He says: "I fretted, I worried, I worked error?" until I suceeded financially and ruined myself physically. I am spending my money now to try and prolong my miserable existence." were the words he used. "Young man, don't count I'd give every success in dollars and cents." dollar I had in the world if I could be back where you are without a single thing but my hands and my brain. Every dollar of it," He'd give it all for the few years that lay before him; he'd give his fortune if he could have life and enjoy it. Everything.

Friends, did you ever realize that in the religious service that you are rendering to God, you are working for life? Everlasting life? The most precious thing that the human family can That is what you are after, and in carefully watching and guarding yourself along this line, my dear friends, this service is to bring eternal. Is it no a reasonable service that God is asking at our hands. Now when I think of that, I begin to ask, what do we ask of What do we want God to give us? And I will tell you, friends, I have heard people talk about getting the world and having a fence around it, or wanting it-but, don't you know that the most of us are not steisfied with that? We want more than that. We want the world, without question, but we want God to cleanse it and purify it and glorify it to make it just as levely as God can make it, clear beyond the comprehension of man's power; and then we ask him to give us life eternal to enjoy it and to give us every glory that would be for the good of man-We have no limit in asking, but let me ask you the question: "What are you willing to give for that? Do you want to receive this glory for nothing? Is that the thought? Are there any of you who like that policy? Why, no, you say. You would like to come up there with a consciousness in your own soul that you have done something worthy, had qualified yourselves and put yourselves into position to entitle you to some reward, wouldn't you? Surely, and you would like to feel when you get over there that you have fought a good fight, you have kept the faith, you have done the duty that God asked at your hands; and when he says: "Blessed art thou-enter thou into the joys of thy Lord," oh, what a sense of satisfaction will come to you! Think of that and you will get just a little glimpse of why Jesus Christ has asked us to keep his commandments, to make our lives a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God.

And now, just a little more. I will try and make it plain. It is not simply the thought that he is going to reward us in the world to come, alone, that comes there; for when I go back and begin an investigation of the commandments of God and investigate what the underlying object and purpose of God has been, I am forced to recognize that God knew humanity a good deal better than humanity knows itself, and in the recognition of that, he knew their weakness, He knew their peculiar disposition, and consequently he has laid down these rules and commandments and requirements for the governing of our lives, the regulating of our existence here and for the directing of our good-yes, our good.

When you carefully examine it, you will discover that God has never given to us one single commandment that has not been for our betterment-for the upbuilding, the uplifting of the human race; and when you look at it again thoughtfully you will make this discovery that every time man complies with the requirements that God has laid down, it makes him a better citizen, a better husband, a better father. It makes the woman a better wife, or mother, or teacher. It increases our influence and our use-It increases our happiness-it makes us free in the full sense of the word; and when you grasp that, my friends you will begin to discover that in the service God asks us to render, it is a service unto ourselves and for our betterment and final redemption. Yes, every service you render to God, every service you do in the interests of Christianity; every time you fulfill the commandments of God and move in direct harmony with the divine will that God has mapped out for us in the gospel of Jesus Christ, you are doing that much toward your own advancement and your own eternal glory and welfare.

The service that God asks at our hands of making ourselves holy, acceptable unto God, and putting ourselves into a position to enjoy life is a reasonable service. Why, my friends, if you only obtain the thousand years that have been promised to the faithful to reign with Christ upon the earth, and work the whole allotted time of man, seventy years, to accomplish that, I wonder if that is not an ample reward for which such service could be reasonably expected? It is a pretty good return on the time spent. Seventy year's service brings us ten hundred years of glory, honor, life, happiness, peace, joy. I wonder what kind of an investment you people want that would be better than that!

I am confident you will discover when you look at it carefully that the service of God, gives advantage over that individual that does not render any such service, or does not believe in any-thing of the kind. Take two men starting out in this world; one of them says, "I don't be-lieve in God. I am not going to serve him or haveanything to do with religion for when we die we are like Rover, "dead all over." He goes out to have a good time in this world, and he has it. He enjoys the worldly pleasures of all description until death comes. If there is nothing after this life it is all done. What has he done? Anything in the world? Has he bettered humanity much? He has been out for a "good time"—he has had it. That is the end of it.

The other starts out and says: "I believe in God, I am going to serve him." He takes joy and satisfaction in that service. He attends his meetings. He does good to his fellow-beings as he thinks he ought to. He may make sacrifices and give of his means and all that; and when he gets through he dies. Now if there is nothing in the world to come, one is just as well off as the other, isn't he? But what is the record of his life? Who has the advantage in history? Who stands the highest in the community? Who has left the best record? You answer. And if perchance, when they both step from this scene of action and stand on the further shore looking into the eternity before them, they discover that the belief of the Christian is true, that there is a God, and that God has an eternity, and there is within man a spirit that shall live. Who is in the advantage there? Who has gained then? It is too late then for the first one to say; "Well, I will correct my mistake now." He has gone too far. The other individual has the advantage. He has prepared for that condition; he enters in to enjoy it. He is qualified for it; he has earned it. Now, just think a moment! Who has the advantage then? What does this service offer to humanity? The more we dwell upon it, the more comes the statement of the apostle home to us over and over and over again, "It is your reasonable service." You are working for yourself; you are working for your own interest; you are working for your happiness; you are working for your salvation. And then some have said it is selfishness on the part of God to ask us to do that for the glory of God and the establishment of his kingdom; but oh, who inhabits that kingdom? Who enjoys its glory? Who enjoys its beauty? Who is the dweller in that kingdom, I wonder!

Now, friends, get the thought again and let it come home to you once more; the servant of God, the child of God, the individual who accepts God and moves in lines with his divinity, inher its that kingdom, reaps the benefits of the kingdom, becomes the citizens entitled to all its privileges and benefits and glories and honors that God has to give.

I have tried to picture this scene, and with this I am going to close. The time that shall come when we have got to stand gefore the bar of judgment. Turn to Revelation 20, and you have a picture of it there. The great white throne, and on that throne sits the King of the universe; at his right hand Jesus, the Redeemer: on his left hand the angel with his records. Back of him the hosts of heaven. Before him the nations of the earth both great and small. I have thought often of it. My imagination cannot do it justice. My vocabulary will not admit of my telling you the story, but I have thought this: when we come before that great white throne, we look up into the face of that King, there will come to us the keen consciousness that we cannot hide anything from him. We may have deceived our friends, deceived our enemies, but we cannot deceive him. He knows our every thought, our every act, everything about us and we have that consciousness come over us that he looks right down into our hearts and souls and sees us uncovered and naked before him.

I have thought, that as we stand there and that consciousness comes stealing into our souls and we begin to tremble under its influence, there would come a hasty retrospection, and we would go back ever the life that we have lived. Like a little apan in the moving picture, it would flash rapidly before our brain and we would see ourselves just as we are, without any modification-naked and bare. We have neglected our duties; turned our back upon God; refused to obey his commandments, or to heed his invitawhat must our feelings be? tion to "follow him," I have thought, my friends, that with downcast eyes we would turn our backs upon the white throne and start away; we would not wait for the angel to say: "Nay, Lord, his name is not written in the Lamb's Book of Life," and hear that declaration: "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." We would not wait for that; "Depart from me, ye workwe would have that keen consciousness of our own guilt, of our own mistakes and sorrows, our own failures, our own wilful negligence and gratification of desires and pleasures contrary to that that was right, and we would turn away! And Oh, the regret! The sorrow that would well into our soul! The lamentations that would be ours to carry out into that darkness where there is weeping and wailing, and gnashing of

Then I have thought of the other picture. If we have striven hard-we may have fallen down and had to get up—we have made mistakes and had to apologise; but if we have striven faithfully, earnestly, diligently, thoughtfully, to qualify ourselves to be acceptable unto God, and holy in his sight by doing all that we could, we look up into the face of that King, and that consciousness come to us that he could see everything and know everything; then, my friends, when by retrospection our past comes rushing past us and we look upon our past life we see it speckled and spotted, weak and failing in many respects, yet showing the sacrifices and struggles to overcome, the Lord would speak up quickly: "Father, this is my child; he has kept my commandments; he has fought against the temptations and the evil that beset him; he has striven hard and diligently; and the angel hastily running over the leaves of the book of life would say, "Yea, Lord his name is written here." Though we might recognize our faults and failures, there would come to us overwhelming satisfaction as the great King would say: "Blessed art thou! enter into the joy of thy Lord," and we would turn to the beautiful gates of that kingdom, walk into the glories of it and when there, there would come to us the consciousness that we had enternity to enjoy; eternal life was ours; all tears vere wiped away; sorrow was no more, and death had been forever banished from us.

How our hearts would rejoice! How they would swell with gratitude unto God! Our tongues woul break loose in praise and thanksgiving unto our King, our Redeemer, our Lord who sacrificed and died for us and redeemed us; when he looked out over that throng and heard that song, oh, how his soul will swell with joy and he would say? "Father, it is enough. It is enough.

You may remember that when he had finished his work on earth he did not ask for any glory more than he had before the world was. "Father, give me the glory that I had with thee before the world was" was all he asked for.

I plead with you to think, to study over the situation, to answer for yourselves the question, Will we serve him with all our hearts, with all our souls, with all our power, that we may be worthy? That you may stand redeemed in the great and glorious kingdom of God.

I plead with you in Jesus' name to look at it and see and recognize what it will do for you, and realize that it is a 'reasonable service' that he asks at your hands. And may God grant that when you shall have carefully canvassed it, that you may be able to decide to walk in the paths that he has laid out and do his will and keep his commandments making yourselves "holy, acceptable unto God" which is your reasonable service, that you may be crowned with everlasting life.

THE CHURCH ORGANIZATION

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers.—I Cor. 12:28.

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers.—

Experience 4112.

Ephesians 4:11

These officers, with bishops, (1 Tim. 3:1); elders (Acts 14:23); and deacons, (1 Tim. 3:8); were ound in the early day church, having been set there by the authority of God. How long were they to remain? Upon this point the Christian world has not agreed. Most churches agree that apostles and prophets were intended to remain only until the church was properly set up. Other churches reject also evangelists, and some reject bishops. Some reject all except elders and dea-The churches are not agreed as to the position in the church and the duties of such officers as are retained, all of which show that the churches have wandered from the original design of God.

But what did the Lord and his inspired ministers say about the matter? If these officers which God set in the church, or any part of them, were intended to be only temporary, surely Jesus or some of the apostles, or others would have said so. But not one word is found in the New Testament which says the Lord did not want them all to continue. The purpose for which they were set in the several offices remained the same, the need remained the same, the same gospel to be preached, the same church needed to be cared for and built up if it was to accomplish the work for which God established it.

The New Testament shows that the apostles were to be permanent, or should have been permanent, and the only reason that the office has not continued until the present is because men became so corrupt that they killed the men whom God placed in the Church, and substituted others which more fully pleased them but which God could not approve, and thus the Church went into apostasy and was rejected of God. When Judas fell by transgression leaving only eleven, it would have been a good time for the apostles to have said that there could be only twelve, and so they would not dare to look for another to fill the vacancy. But no! as soon as the Lord has ascended they began to look about for a successor to Judas, (probably by the Lord's direction too) and being uncertain they selected two whom they presented to the Lord asking him to show which he had chosen. The lot fell upon Matthias "and he was numbered with the eleven apostles."-Acts 1:26.

Some years later there seemed to have been other vacancies. At least the Holy Spirit said: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Acts 13:2. These men were ordained, and immediately after were spoken of as apostles. (Acts 14:14). Others are mentioned in the New Testament as being associated with the apostles, which shows that the policy of the early Church was to perpetuate this office. It is clear that the office was permanent though the individual occupying it may be only temporary, for in the case of Judas it was said: "and his bishopric [or office, see margin,] let an-another take."—Acts 1:20.

In the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians the Church is compared to the human body having a head, feet, ears, eyes, and all other parts, and the apostle says about this figure: "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." After commenting upon this illustration he applies it to the Church when he says: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the Church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers," etc. illustration is worth anything it shows that the officers God placed in the Church were intended to be just as permanent as the various parts and organs of the human body were designed to be permanent when placed there by God in the creation. We would not think of a man fulfilling the divine purpose in the things of this world with a majority of the parts of his body taken away. No more can the church fulfill its purpose with a majority of its officers taken away.

The Apostle Paul speaks plainer yet upon this matter in the fourth chapter of Ephesians where he says of the gifts given by Christ: "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Here is stated plainly the work of the officers, and the time when their work would be complete, which is when the saints are all brought to a unity, to a full knowledge of God, and to the standard of righteousness as measured by Jesus Christ. Such a great work will not be completed this side of the righteous reign of Christ upon earth, and these offices will remain whenever Christ's church has an existence on earth until Christ shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father perfect in all things.

In this chapter last mentioned the apostle does on to say that through the help of these officers the saints "may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." The same particles which compose the hand do not remain as part of the hand, but the hand remains a part of the body because new particles are supplied to take the place of those which decay. So the individuals which compose the apostolic quorum may not remain always in the church upon earth but the office remains as a part of the body, new members being divinely called to take the place of those who because of age or other reason pass away. In this way only could the work of the officers and the Church be consumated.

The rule holds good in all the offices of the Church and with the men who fill them. men pass away, and new ones take their places by divine call and direction according to the pattern given in the New Testament and as these officers work in harmony with their calling the Spirit of God works with them confirming the word which they preach with signs following in the same manner as anciently, for not only the officers are permanently in the church but the gifts of the Spirit and the signs which Jesus said should follow the believer. A prayerful investigation of these things will bring you confirming assurance of truthfulness.

PASTORAL

the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District Greeting:--

As per resolution our semi-annual conference convenes As per resonated the Westminster Branch at Vancouver, B. C. After consultation with the saints of said branch it was decided that Vancouver was the best place to provide for the visiting saints, etc. It was also voted at the February conference held in Seattle that we have at the reprutity conference held in Seattle that we have a reunion in connection with the conference, but the mat-ter was to be left to the discretion of the B. C. saints and the district officers, after due consultation with the and the district oneers, after our constantion with resistant of B. C., and associate officers. It was decided to cancel the reunion, therefore there will not be a reunion this year. The Religio and Sunday school conventions will convene at the same place one day previous to conference, details of which will no doubt be given by the proper authorities. Those attending conference will take the East Broadway car to Scott St., which is only a half block from the hall. The car is easily identionly a nair locer from the final. The car is easily identified by the number sign 2. This year we expect to have several new faces there. We have reasons to believe that our missionary in charge will be there, also Brn. Terry, Davis, Budd, and possibly Brn. Shippy and Hedding.

Branch clerks will please have their reports sent to the district clerk at least one week prior to conference.

There is another matter I will call attention to: the demands on the Bishop from our district are greater than ever before. You who are consistent with your testimony of the work of God will need no farther reminder than that faith unsupported by works is an abomination to the Lord. Dear Saints, the consistent and persistent observer of the law is the true disciple, "Thou hast over many." Shall we lose our reward? God forbid.

Come in the strength of the Lord.

the Saints of the Mobile District, Greeting:

Having been elected to serve you for the coming year syour District President, and realizing the responsibility of the position, I take this means of expressing my appreciation of your confidence, and ask for your support and co-operation in every way that will be conductive of good. There is a lack of system and unity in our work. This we must correct. New problems and advanced thoughts and ideas are confronting us day lay. These we must meet and handle judiciously. need more co-operation upon the part of the District and Branch officers, and a more united effort in every de-partment of church work. Branch Presidents are repartment of church work. Branch Presidents are re-quested to report promptly, and to feel at liberty to report conditions as they exist, so that if there are matters requiring special attention they may be adjusted. Let the Sunday school and Religio officers co-operate with the Branch officers, and if there be any criticism to offer, let it be friendly and given in the spirit of love and meekness, thus proving benefical.

Let us all remember the Divine injunction that one can assist in the work unless he is humble and full Let us seek to manifest the Christ Spirit in all our deliberations, and in fact seek first to buld up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness. If need the District officers in your Branch, Sunday ol, or Religio Work, do not hesitate to call on them. We have some grand promises if we do our part. every one learn his duty and do it.

Presumably there will be an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Suppose the technical point for the brewers should prevail there. Would not that really be rather dangerous for the liquor interests? Would the 70 per cent of the territory of the United States, which is "dry," and the majority of the people, who are "dry," be content to be "absolutely helpless" as against an unwelcome but pushing liquor traffic?

Why Socrates Charged Double.
A young man who was a great talker was eart by his perents to Socrates to learn oratory. On being presented to the master the youth talked incessantly. When the bargain came to be struck Socrates asked double price. When saked the reason for this unusual charge he roplied: "Because I must teach you two sciences; the one to hold your tongue, the other how to speak."

THE MASTER'S QUESTIONS. "If any man serve me, let him follow me: and where I am, there shall also my servants be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor."-John 12:26,

Have ye looked for sheep in the desert For those who have missed their way? Have ye been in the wild waste places, Where the last and wandering stray? Have ye trodden the lonely highway, The foul and darksome street? It may be ye'd see in the gloaming The print of my wounded feet.

Have ye folded home to your bosom The trembling neglected lamb, And taught to the little lost one The sound of the Shepherd's name? Have ye searched for the poor and needy
With no clothing, no home, no bread?
The Son of Man was among them—
He had nowhere to lay his head.

Have ye carried the living water To the parched and thirsty soul? Have ye said to the sick and wounded, "Christ Jesus makes thee whole"? Have ve told my fainting children Of the strength of the Father's hand? Have ye guided the tottering footsteps To the shore of the "golden land?"

Have ye stood by the sad and weary, To smooth the pillow of death, To comfort the sorrow-stricken, And strengthen the feeble faith? And have ye felt, when the glory
Has streamed through the open door And flitted across the shadows, That I had been there before?

Have ve wept with the broken-hearted In their agony of woe?
You might hear me whispering beside you,
"'Tis the pathway I often go!" My brethren, my friend, my disciples, Can ye dare to follow me? Then, wherever the Master dwelleth, There shall the servant be!

ON WHAT DOES THE DIVINITY OF JESUS REST?

In the examination of the candidates for the ministry of the New York Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church recently, one named Wicks expressed an uncertain belief regarding the divinity of Christ, but was nevertheness granted a license to preach. While under examination Mr. Wicks

I am in the fullest sympathy with the all-important truths of Christ's divinity and full humanity which the virgin birth enables many persons to hold. As to the historic fact I do not think the evidence for it is as historic fact I do not think the evidence for it is as strong as for many other facts of the gospels, but it is by no means so insufficient that I can deny it, I am more than ever inclined to believe it. As to preaching it I don't feel that there would be any reason why I should. As far as I can remember I have never heard a sermon on the virgin birth. The question was asked about my teaching it, and I replied that I should endeavor to show that the divinity of Christ rested on deeper reasons than the virgin birth; the character and sinlessness of Christ make the virgin birth intelligible and reasonable.

There has been a growing tendency to question, if not deny the virgin birth of Christ involving his

if not deny the virgin birth of Christ involving his divinity, as also to deny other important his-torical events recorded in the Bible. The spirit of unbelief in those who have no association with organized believers is usually absolute in its denial of the divinity of Christ, but when found in those who are associated with a Christian organization it is indefinite and subtile, often expressed with "I don't know," or a more verbose statement having the same import.

To us it seems strange that a minister of the gospel should hold that there is no reason for teaching the virgin birth of Jesus, nor do we see 'deeper reasons" could be presented in favor what ' of his divinity than the virgin birth. While the historical evidences given by Luke are not so conclusive of themselves as to come up to the rules of evidence required in a civil court, yet when taken in connection with the statements of prophecy given long before, with the remarkable character which Jesus manifested before the world and which has not had a perallel before or since, with the exercise of wonderful power in the works which he did, and in the remarkable fulfillment of his many prophetic statements, the truth of the event which is doubted by this young minister is fully sustained.

As far back as Eden God said to the serpent (which is the devil, or Satan, Revelation 12:9) that the seed of the woman should bruise his head, and this prophetic statement is almost universally understood to have reference to Christ who as the Son of God would be born of woman. Christ is not snoken of as the seed of Adam. The history of the Old Testament points unmistakably to one who should come, mightier than Adam, mightier than Abraham or Moses, or Joshua, greater than David or Solomon, and these were among the greatest men of earth, but the lives and work of all these and many other grand men pointed to the mightiest of all, who ultimately came in the person of Jesus Christ. Was he altogether of man? If so then we have the fact to meet that man is able to save himself, a thing which the Scriptures everywhere declare to be impossible.

Isaiah declared centuries before its fulfillment: "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Immanuel means "God with us," and hence it must appear that this prophecy clearly speaks of the virgin birth of the Son of God. He was to be the seed of the woman but not of man, being the Son of God. Of the absolute superority of this Son over all other men, Isaiah further says:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever .-- Isa. 10:6, 7.

Could mere man ever claim so much for himself? Could he attain so much? An unending government belongs to no man under the conditions of this world, for death makes it impossible. Such a kingdom belongs only to one who has the power of an endless life, and there is only one such-Jesus Christ the Son of God, the Son of the virgin. He said:

For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself.—John 5:26.

He held the power of life. Of it he said: "I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." From whence came such power? If it came to him because he was good, then others who might also be good would have the same power. If it came to him through a consecrated life then others who have consecrated their lives to the service of their fellow men and to God would have the same power of life. Many have desired it, some have claimed it, but only one ever gave evidence of possessing it, and that was Jesus Christ when he rose from the dead. From whence did it come? higher source than man. It came from God through Christ's virgin birth. It could not have been given through any other channel.

Jesus Christ was what he was by virtue of his virgin birth. Without that fact there would not have been, and could not have been a son of God.

But God sent HIS Son; he was God's Son when he came into the world which can be said of no other one, but it is said that "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his Others may become sons of God THROUGH HIM by faith and obedience, and there is no other that can give them this power:

Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, where-by we must be saved.—Acts 4:12.

If the young minister who doubts the divine birth of Christ finds support for his doubt in the fact that he has never heard it preached, he might do well to take that subject for his first sermon and make a thorough search of the Scriptures for the direct and corroborative evidences, and by comparing these with the need of man manifest everywhere today, he would find that history and reason sustains that doctrine. The divinity of Jesus Christ rests upon his virgin birth, otherwise he is not divine. His power to make others sons of God is dependent upon his sonship. The gospel of salvation is likewise based upon his claim of being the Son of God. Destroy faith in that fact and you destroy the only hope of sonship in man, the only means of salvation, you take divinity from the world and leave mankind prostrate and helpless at the feet of the old serpent who brought death upon all men.

The virgin birth, as one part of the great scheme of redemption, fits perfectly with every other part-with the doctrine of the atonement wherein God and man were united in the one person by whom others might also be brought to the same unity, the resurrection of Jesus, the resurrection of all men through him, the judgment, the establishment of his everlasting kingdom. Without this birth the whole scheme becomes useless and death like a river with its water diverted or dried up. To leave out the virgin birth would be to sever the one link which connects man with God, to close the one door through which divine light and power can come to this world. Can we afford to yield it?

It has been said that other teachers taught long before the high ethical principles expressed by Jesus in his sermon on the mount, and therefore he was nothing in advance of them. Others have truly taught noble principles but Jesus Christ is the only one who made those principles effectual for the salvation of man. His presentation of them was with a deeper purpose than any other man ever knew. Others gave promise of present good and perhaps of indefinite good in any indefinite and uncertain future life, but Jesus couples his ethical teachings with the doctrine of his sonship and his divinity, his right as a leader and a commander, and his dominion over the world; and required specific things of man in the way of allegience, and upon the condition of the requirements being fulfilled gives definite promise of a certain and definite future life. No man ever dared to make such promises as he made,promises which would in part have their fulfillment in this world, coming from heaven itself. The fact that many have had these promises fulfilled proves their truthfulness and his power to fulfill even now. No man has approached him in his power to discern truth, in having a proper and effectual remedy for every need of man, in the greatness of his love and selfsacrifice, depth of sympathy and compassion, in humility and forbearance. He towers so exceedingly above the greatest of men in every quality of character that the mystery of his greatness can only be solved by an acceptance of the doctrine of his immaculate concepton.

"Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning. I am in the Father, and the Father in me; and in me hath the Father glorified his I came unto my own, and my own rename. ceived me not. And the Scriptures, concerning my coming, are fulfilled. And as many as have received me, to them have I given to become the sons of God; and even so will I to as many as shall believe on my name, for behold, by me redemption cometh, and in me is the law of Moses fulfilled. I am the light and the life of the world. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. * * * Behold I have come unto the world to bring redemption unto the world, and to save the world from sin: therefore whoso repenteth and cometh unto me as a little child, him will I receive; for of such is the kingdom of God. Behold, for such I have laid down my life, and have taken it up again; therefore repent, and come unto me ye ends of the earth, and be saved." Book of Mormon, (3rd) Nephi 4:44-52.

The following lines were given to a brother during the early part of a sacrament service. He had thought of refraining from partaking of the emblems, as he had done for some time, because of feeling unworthy, but when the saints sang "Arise, my soul, arise! Shake off thy guilty fears," these lines were given him, bidding him partake. They may help some other doubtful soul.

Arise thy soul, shake off thy fear, The Lord thy God hath brought thee here; A promise true to thee I give-Drink of my blood and thou shalt live.

The bread my body doth contain Nor think it is a thing in vain— Partake, obey the Lord thy God, For thou shalt live by every word.

O trust my word, turn not away Thy Lord will shield thee day by day; And when temptation tries thee sore, Thy God will strengthen to endure. -T. Hamilton.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

At the Stone Church in the forenoon at eleven Elder T. C. Kelley delivered a very interesting sermon and in the evening Elder T. J. Sheldon delivered the first of a series of sermons on the Book of Mormon, dwelling mainly on the mission and object of the book, one of which ly on the mission and object of the book, one of which was to restore many of the precious things taken from the gospel of Christ, bringing to pass that in Isaiah 29:24, "They also that erred in spirit shall come to under-standing, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine." The local option campaign is now in full blast, with fully organized corps of ward captains and committees, with Dr. Elmer Twyman as president and general manager. with Dr. Elmer Twyman as president and general manager. After a long period of silence—in which period has been crowded some of the most important experiences of our missionary work of twenty-one years. Our trip to and attendance at general conference was filled to overflow with rich experiences and educational ob-servations—the superabundance of kindness shown us in Independence and St Joseph (our old home) has left an indelible impression in our memory—wish we had space to mention names, who gave us a welcome and home during mention names, who gave us a welcome and home during conference. Our short visit to St. Joseph after cenference was brim full of happy greetings.

The Oakland and San Francisco saints gave us a farewell gathering at which over sixty asserbiled and spent a social time together. Bro. Sheehy was present and gave a talk on "Why Brown left Town" but turned it to "Why Bro. and Sr. Terry were sent to Seattle." Tears gave evidence of the sadness of heart at separating, and we gave the parting hand with sadness of heart.

Arrived in Portland after two nights and one day's traved where we remained till Monday morning in the pleasant household of Bro. Joseph Larson and estimable wife and children. We visited Vancouver on Saturday night where we spoke to a nice auditence by invitation of Bro. Marcus Cook the president. We met there Bro. Shippy and Bro. R. D. Davis missionaries, Bro. Davis enroute to B. C. and Bro Shippy being hindered by an affliction of his vocal organs. We spoke twice in Portland on Sunday and attended their good Sunday school and Religio, under the charge of Bro. L. B. Shippy and V. Schultz respectively. Here we met Bro. N. T. Chapman the president, Bro. Appleman, Bro. Wm. Russell, Bro. Walter Baker and others, who made our short stay very pleasant. our short stay very pleasant.

Our first impressions are very favorable concerning our new field, but we turn with earnest love and concern toward the flock we left behind. The little beginners, primaries and juniors were the principal entertainers in the morning, and did justice to their instructors. The Sunday school orchestra also favored with some selections, and is one of the drawing features of the school. In the evening the choir rendered a number of excellent anthems; a trio by Mrs. Paul N. Craig, and Misses Lorena Leeka and Anna Hicks was much appreciated, as also a solo by Miss Cora Schwartz. Elder Rudoiph Etzenhouser favored us with an instructive talk at three of the services. Fremming, the son of Bro. and Sr. Karl T. Self was baptized and confirmed. Burton F., the infant son of Mr. B. Dear Ensign:-As some would be glad to see a word Dear Ensignt—As some would be glad to see a word from me in your interesting columns, more especially those in the Clinton District, where I have spent more than 30 years of my life. With pleasure and interest I call to memory the spiritual and profitable meetings we had together. Since moving to this place I seldom see any of those of former acquaintances. I fondly cherish their memory. I have visited several of the branches near Independence and in Kansas City, and find good, faithful saints that are alive in the gospel. I was called on a special ocassion to the home of Bro. and Sr. F. A. and Elizabeth Evans to say the word that made two one in the marriage vow between Mr. James A. Myers and Sr. Esther J. Evans, in the presence of a few relatives of both contracting parties. The ocassion was a happy and joyous one.

Let us as God's children renew our diligence in keep-ing all his commandments so we may be worthy of his protecting power, for we are warned that we are living in the day of his judgment—(Rev. 14:7) and so told to worship him that made heaven and earth and the sea and the fountain of water and we are admonished in later revelations that we must be faithful in order to be protected from the dire calamities that must shortly come upon the disobedient. So may we contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.

Editor Ensign.—As you are a dispenser of news and the saints in one part of the world are interested in what is going on in another I will try and tell what has occurred in this "neck o' the woods." Fremont District, The conventions of the auxiliaries started out on Friday afternoon with the machinery in good working order and our anticipations for the evening program was of a very pleasurable nature, but alas "the best laid plans of men and mice oft gang o' wee," and so it is with our joyous anticipations. About 7 o'clock it seemed as our joyous anticipations. About i o'clock it seemed as if the sky had become a sieve and a heavy pressure bore down from above and just forced the water down in such quantities that it had no time to form into drops but just came down in streams, and what was a blessing to the growing crops was our temporary loss in missing the program that night. The disappointment did not end with us that was already present. The saints who were passengers on the "limited" between Malvern and Tabor, the fastest and finest equipped train on that division of the road, was on a train behind time and some of them did not escape the pour down, and with wet skirts and disheveled hair they found a welcome among the saints that knew how to make old friends and strangers feel at home.

Hindrances and disappointments of times spur us on to activity and so it was in this case, when conference convened next day, with Brn. T. A. Hougas and Nathan convened next day, with Brn. T. A. Hougas and Nathan Mortimer as the presiding officers, the business was disposed of in an expeditious manner and we were able to enjoy the delayed program with an increased audience. There was good and appreciative audiences to greet the speakers at the three preaching services on the Sabbath day who enjoyed to a goodly degree the good Spirit of the Master. At the close of the morning service the writer counted seven automobiles in front of the church and quite a number of buggies and carriages. Thanks to the modern inventive genius, and suggestive inspir-ation, for the modern mode of travel if some do prostiation, for the modern mode of travel if some do prostitute its use to wanton and wasteful pleasure, others find a better service for it. Bro. T. A. Hougas' family came 32 miles and was on time at the Sunday school session at 9:30 a. m. The conventions, conference and social enjoyments among the saints were pleasant and profitable, and all went home feeling that it was good "to be a saint in latter days." Those present of the missionary force were the writer and Elder H. N. Pierce.
With hopeful anticipations I remain your brother in gospel bonds.

It has now been two months that I have been busy most of the time, holding meetings. In the town of Fort Towson, Okla., I held meetings for nine days with good interest, having occupied the Holiness Church at that place, making friends for the cause and left with that place, making friends for the cause and left with an invitation to come back and occupy their church again any time, as they were not using it. I went from there to Paris, Texas, preaching twice at that place, and from there to the Old Manchester Branch, Red River County, Texas, where the gospel was first planted in this country. Found the saints much revived since Bro. Bootman met the champion Baptist debator, Roy Davis, at that place, in discussion. I preached there two Sundays.

On the 2nd of June I was permitted to baptize an intelligent young man. Formerly he belonged to the Methodist Church, and had been preaching some for them. His great desire is to preach the gospel. I believe the Lord will use him for good.

Cove. Arkansas. June 10. Dear Ensign:—Thinking some of your readers might be interested in news from this part of the Lord's vineyard I will try and write a few lines. We had Bro. J. W. were the most we were able to get to come to the Town Hall. Bro. DuBose had the pleasure of baptizing four of them. One man, Bro. Hegwood, is 62 years old, and Bro. and Sr. Bilbray and their thirteen year old daughter. At one time twelve or fifteen years ago we had a fine branch of saints here in Cove, but they have moved away and scattered to different places and now the people here seem indifferent about the gospel.

My husband and I have been members of the church about sixteen years; we were baptized by Bro. Ellis Short and this latter day work has grown brighter day by day, and I have had some beautiful testimonies of the goodness of God to his children. We are tired of living away from church privileges and hope some day that we may be permitted to live among the Saints. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

We have seen mothers of whom the first eight lines is a fitting description; many of them! But still, the sad lack of kindliness and peace, brave words of hope and the patient care, among the countless homes of men, have seamed many faces with other lines-traces of care, worry, temper, disappointment!

Let us remember each other. Let us study each other. Sometimes, oftimes those lines are easily removed. And we all want to be what we should be. We all want the beauty that purity and happiness, contentment bring. Remember we cannot enjoy this blessing without bringing lines of beauty to another's face, and the note of pleasure to another's voice. "The pebble is dropped in the water."

-"It takes so little to Says Dr. Frank Crane,make people happy. Just a touch, if we but knew how to give it; just a word fitly spoken; just a trick it is, a knack, the cunning that can readjust some bolt or pin or bearing in the delicate machinery of the human spirit.

INDEPENDENCE IN THE CHILD.

A thought that appeals to me as very important is this one,—A seed is precious because in it is the germ of life which may become an independent being under the proper environment; and it ceases to be precious if it does not become an independent being. Our child is precious to what degree of soul development attained through the freedom of independent action, and only to degree.

The lower forms of life force their offspring to independent living, while we parents or especially we mothers, cling to our children, thus making for their dependence rather than independence.

True—we should make sure that our children are equal to the task of independent living—that their self-control is strong enough to direct their life. In the tiny babe, we begin training for the physical self-control spreading from its own individual self to that of conduct between members of the family and its piaymates. The training for the moral and spiritual control followers and little selection to account of the control of the contr lows and links so closely to the physical, that by the time it is eight years old we are admonished it should be sufficiently able to decide between wrong and right and have the strength of will to choose in the momentus question of its eternal salvation.

At twelve years of age Christ kindly but firmly rebuted the clinging solicitation of his parents by saying "Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business?" So do we think it possible for our children to choose for themselves at twelve years? Indeed not! And when they reach that older time, the so much misunderstood period of adolescence, and the very forces of their beings compel them to wrench themselves loose from our clinging solicitation, our hearts ache and we think them rebellious. But if we have used our opportunities wisely. rebellious. But if we have used our opportunities wisely, they will be fully equal to the task of choosing, and their wills will be strong enough to support their choice.

Then we will rejoice at the assertion of independent

selfhood rather than sorrow.

But sourow will be ours if that age finds our child

"dodder like," depending upon us to decide the issues of life for him. Chas. Sumner says "Three things are necessary for success; first, back bone; second, back bone; third, back bone." It is our privilege to protect and to train so sturdly, the child lent to us, that when he feels within him the assertion of the great mystery of life and independent action, he too shall say "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business,"—we can gladly say "between him and thee my father, I have discharged my parent duty as thou gavest me wisdom." discharged my parent duty as thou gavest me wisdom."

GOVERN BY LOVE.

"I'm so glad you're my mama;" "O, I'm glad you are y mama"—reiterated the little daughter of a dear sister as she fairly flung her arms around "mama's" neck and began to cry as if her heart would break.
"Why Dolly, so am I glad; that's nothing to cry about.

Presently she was calm enough to explain that in the home she had just come from, circumstances caused un-pleasantness, "and she said such mean things, mama;— you don't talk to us like that;—you say nice things and make us want to be good. Why don't other mamas do that way?" she questioned out of breath with crying and talking so fast.

Many times this incident has come to mind, when tempted to speak harshly; and not only children, but grown people feel the power of loving intercourse and the reproof that helps us to "want to be good."

Couldn't the women of the church take a lesson from this-help whenever and wherever we can, but endeavor to hurt no one?

Always remember our sister has as much right to her opinion as we have—maybe she is in the light more than we;—at any rate we can never convince by force or

To say "mean" things never won a friend or helped a

Some one said of the early followers of Jesus, "How these Christians love one another" and it is our ambition to have those of the world note our attitude and say, 'How the women of that church love each other.'

We can all give as much as "the widow's mite;" yet Jesus said "She gave more than all of them." Surely it was the love and consecration and self-denial of the gift that enhanced its value.

We trust that the women of the Auxiliary will learn to "say such nice things" that all the sisterhood of the church will "want to be part of us."

Do you know if your standing is good?
Do you ever take stock of yourself and check up Your accounts with the boy, as you should?

Do you ever reflect on your conduct with him; Are you all that a father should be? o you send him away when you're anxious to read? Or let him climb onto your knee?

a book more important to you than his talk; Do you find that his chatter annoys? Would you rather be quiet than have him about; Do you send him away with his toys?

Have you time to bestow on the boy when he comes With his questions—to tell him the truth? Or do you neglect him and leave him alone To work out the problems of youth?

Do you ever go walking with him, hand in hand: Do you plan little outings for him?

Does he ever look forward to romping with you, Or are you eternally grim?

What memories pleasant of you will he have In the years that are certain to come?
Will he look back on youth as a season of joy,
Or an age that was woefully glum?

Come, father, reflect! Does he know you today, And do you know his, as you should? Is gold so important to you that you leave It to chance that your boy will be good?

What sort of a father are you?

A TREATISE ON PRAYER.

By Elder S. S. Smith.

Figuratively speaking, on the map of the ages there is said to be three places of refuge and strength, to the souls of men,—the "Island of the "Desert of Meditation," and the "Mount of Prayer." This mountain stands out boldly on the landscape of time as a noted landmark, and has furnished a reputable resort to the lowly travellers of earth. All nations have had pilgrims who have resorted thither. What then is this secret allurement that has urged mankind to this refuge of prayer?

Proposition Stated.

We introduce the subject with these texts. 'And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint." Luke 18:1.

"Pray without ceasing."-1 Thes. 5:17.

"Ask and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find: knock and it shall be opened unto you.' Matt. 7:7.

In this treatise we desire to show reasons for prayer. We hope to point out that it is a becoming acknowledgment of the all-soverign power of God: that it is the appointed means for the giving of spiritual and temporal blessings; that it is a spiritual exercise that is especially ennobling to the individual; that it strengthens the faith and gives mankind confidence in God; that it should be offered for things necessary and in harmony with the will of God; and that it should be attended with a confession of our sins and a genuine repentance of the same. We will try and demonstrate prayer is not unreasonable, but highly justifiable, and in every way when rightfully observed is of great utility to us, and thus contributes to the salvation of men. We believe prayer should consist of thanksgiving, praise confession and petition, without fixed forms of expression, only so far as the scriptures may justify, in as brief and simple, yet comprehensive manner, without unnecessary repitition to the one and true God in the name of Jesus Christ his Son and mediator. The proper prayer is not one of a mere form of words but that which springs from the deep recesses of the heart, and in the language of the worshippers.

Chambers defines it, "A universally acknowledged part of the worship due to God, a simple and natural expression of dependence, which seems almost necessary to follow from a belief in the existence of a God."

Webster explains it as "A solemn address to the Supreme Being consisting of adoration of an expression of our sense of God's glorious perfections, confession of our sins, supplication for mercy and forgiveness, intercession for blessing on others, and thanksgiving or an expression of gratitude to God for his mercies and benefits."

And too, we might add Montgomery's beautiful lines.

> Prayer is the soul's sincere desire Uttered or unexpressed; he motion of a hidden fire That trembles in the breast.

Prayer is the burden of a sigh, The falling of a tear;
The upward glancing of the eye
When none but God is near.

Prayer is the Christian's vital breath, The Christian's native air; His watchword at the gates of death, He enters heaven with prayer.

Prayer we then say is truly an expression of our faith in providence, for it is the offering up orally or otherwise of our desires to God in the name of Jesus Christ for the things agreeable to his will, with a confession of our sins and a thankful acknowledgement of the excellency of his greatness and perfection, and the unbounded mercies of his being. It is the seeking for, the realizing that oneness through the agency of the Spirit which begets a condition of unbounded trust in God. We believe it can be expressed orally or by deep feeling and thought, and holy desire that is sincere. It is the true art of devotion that leads to that self-inspection, and the overdawing of thought and emotion toward the object of our desires. By no means is it a talisman of a superstitious and fanatical brain, but the simple communication of the rational mind with that of God by which our will merges into his.

To Whom Shall We Pray?

It would hardly seem necessary to treat on this sub-heading of the subject, considering what has been written before in defining the proposition. The true and living God of course is the object of our devotions. Our reasons for writing on this is; there are so many false conceptions of God, there are so many skeptics and infidels ready to challenge the fact of a God as a falacious idea, and then only about one-seventh of the population of the world is nominally Christian. It was Ingersoll that said, "If you can ever find a God, just let me know, and I shall kneel. Until then I shall stand erect."

The gross injustice of the foregoing statement to the overwhelming evidences of God, found, in the Christian religion, and outside of it, is apparent to the candid mind. To ignore these evidences means the substitution of an unseemly materialism and even atheism. The irrationality if this is noticeable when they say this wonderful systametic and law-governed universe is merely the result of chance and not that of intelligent mind. This Idea would destroy the only basis for true brotherhood, for such brotherhood can only exist by reason of a common Fath-Such decay of belief has its tendency to drift outside the eternal province of law and produce such a condition as that which obtained when this experiment was tried during the French Revolution. In fact it is a denial in toto of all the human witnesses, Christian and otherwise, of all ages, who have affirmed from positive knowledge there is a God. The spiritual consciousness of these myraids of humanity who have borne witness is challenged, yet their testimony and veracity would never be questioned only on religion. To falsify this chapter on human experience, and history, is a piece of credulity we are not prepared to accept.

Thus the "God of saints" is the only one to whom we should pay our respects devotionally. He is not a being of fiction or imagination, "without body, parts or passions," but the true God of Israel whose being possesses all. The strictest injunction of ancient time as also in latter days "Thou shalt have no other gods before me.." "That they should love and serve him the only living and true God, and that he should be the only being whom they should worship."-D. C.

A sense o'er all my soul impressed That I am weak, yet not unblest, Since in me, round me, every where, Eternal strength and wisdom are. --Coldridge

To create a vagary of an indefinite, indefinable something without material form or members not even capable of exercising the passion of love or hate and call it God, would be tautamount to erecting a false god as truly as did the children of Israel when they worshipped the golden calf. The true God will admit of no substitute. He is immutable. Our estimate of him is one of continual growth and enlargement, for as we study his wondrous attributes and commune with him. our finite minds grasp new accessions and are continually becoming more and more increased and refulgent. His character and being borrows no splendor from any source, for he is the acme of perfection, the magnet of all power, and subordinates to himself all things. He sits as the center of the universe, and is the highest ideal of dignity, order and perfection. He indeed is the object of our worship, our prayer, and our praise, as the established and perfect precedent, of moral excellence, by the contemplation of which through spiritual communion, the human nature rises above the groveling things of earth and level of carnal flesh. So then, as we contemplate this effulgence, and transcendent elegance, and beauty of his real character, cannot we in humble reverence to his great and holy name, pray, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name," etc.

Purposes of Prayer.

In the consideration of this question it is oppertune to state, it is a rational belief that prayer produces in us a condition of moral fitness to receive whatever blessing God sees fit to give. Some have supposed by the act of prayer the divine Being is led to suspend some of his infinite regulations which otherwise would not have obtained. In other words, by the willing act of prayer on our part, God the infinite One has become convinced by our special pleading, and argument of our prayers, that the thing that he had intended was not for the best and he therefore changes his mind. By persistent entreaty, we are thus told by some, God is led to cease a certain course and is induced to go another. This concept of Deity is wanting in rationality. Such a notion is gross and crude, to say the least.

By prayer it should more properly be said, has wrought in us that moral preparedness of soul that the humble act has induced, and by reason of such we are brought to that condition where God can bless us. It is not therefore, the swerving of God to our purpose, but the humanity of our nature being conformed to the image of the divine. The secret of the giving of the blessing is not because God has changed, but the evidence of regeneration with us. This evolution or change in us causes repentance, and such fits us for blessing afterward. Prayer is therefore one method of sanctifying in us nobler resolves, and higher ideals to do right. The soul's desire, sincerely expressed, brings that oneness of agreement with the Infinite, that passeth all understanding. A prayer may be formulated in speech, or it may be unexpressed vocally, but to be attuned to the Father's ear it must express the heart's desire and longings in sincerity. Such desire expressed in faith, coming from the heart that is at one with God, is sure to merit the Lord's approval.

The discord between God and humanity is explainable in this way. For us to act in harmony with law, sanctifying the character, we have come from discord into harmony and our nature is become at least to some extent like that of God, hence we get the blessing because no barriers exist. We conclude then, the most acceptable prayer, is that, where all obstacles that impede spiritual force, be removed. How then is it possible to come fully into union with God's law of love, when there is that lack of forgiveness, and malice rancor and ill-will are manifest in our hearts? Reason would teach us, to get the benefits craved, the finite mind must be attuned to the vibrations of the eternal. Before there can be perfect unity, and intercommunication, the human mind must divest itself of every agency of evil. Neither can there be acceptable prayer, unless there is sincere desire coupled with abstraction from the things of carnal sense, concentrated upon the thing desired, with a living, glowing faith. When such conditions are complied with, we know "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." For-

He prayeth best who loveth best All things both great and small; For the dear God who loveth us, He made and loveth all.

-Coldridge.

So we say, the Father must rule supreme in our thoughts—in our lives, to have the medium of divine correspondence open continually.

We then, are not prepared to accept, that our allwise Father has contemplated that before the time we asked, he had concluded to do a certain thing, he will then modify this intended action, and do something else in obedience to our importuning. Such a conception, we must say, would denote God's erudition was so defective that our entreaty could persuade him to change his design. Would it not signify his purpose was fluctuating, and therefore invalid, if he would surrender his will to our solicitation? Those who believe Jehovah would thus deviate from his designs in honor to our simple petitioning, and disrupt law and order, and rearrange the divine schedule to satisfy our every wish, and then still venture to call upon God, would indicate they had an un-enviable interpidity. To do so, would show they believed, God was willing to surrender the throne of his mighty authority to the rulership of finite men. If we entertain this fickle idea, are we ready for this tremendous responsibility?

In view of this position, it may be asked, how is it God apparently has changed his plan in certain instances of past time? Citation may be given where, "The Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man, and in consequence, instead of the sun pursuing its naturay course, it 'stood still in the about a whole day."—Josh. 10:12:14.

Here it may be asked, did God not give this mighty exhibition in consequence of the faith and prayer of the general Joshua? Another instance may be called up, where Jonah was commanded to go to Nineveh and tell them. "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown."—Jonah 3:4. It may be asked, was not God's original decree changed, when he says in the tenth verse, "and God turned away the evil that he had said he would bring upon them"? Again, in the circumstance of the translation of the plates by Joseph Smith, when one hundred sixteen pages were stolen through the lack of faithfulness on the part of those who had them in charge, and to fraustrate the evil designs of men, God apparently changes his course and instructs not to translate those particular plates farther. It may be asked, was the Lord's mind faulty at first not to have forseen this difficulty and warded it off by not translating those plates in the first place?

In answer to these queries we might remark, the respond to prayer is not an irregular thing, but the very rule of the universe. Answers to all prayers is not adverse to the divine code, but in unision with it, and illustrates the very method of the egency of law. Such is merely the provisional decree provided in the interminable foresight given of God. True, God does hearken "and his ear is open to the cries of his children, but that hearkening is contingent on the spiritual reliance, and humble yielding of our wisdom, to that of his immeasurable erudition, and perfect benevolence and mercy. It may appear at times, God has overstepped the system of eternal law and fixed arrangement, (such as Joshua's experience) to gratify the wishes of his faithful, but who can say, such intervention was not premeditated and thus intended? It is evident, in the case of Joshua, God so instructed him while in prayer, to tell Israel what to expect, so when the opportune time arrived, the prophet general so said the words that was honored of God. Thus what appears as prodigies and wonders to us, may be natural events with God.

Some may say, the reversal of a former decree to destroy Nineveh, certainly was to change or modify his original intent; but we should remember, this circumstance when viewed in the light of God's soverignity, and infinite wisdom, what appears as a change of plan was that which was intended provided the citizens of the city came fully up to the requirements and truly repented.

Again, what may appear as a deviation from the plan first inaugerated in relation to the one hundred sixteen pages of manuscript, was evidently a circumstance designed of God, to test the faith and fidelity of those having the great and important work in charge. Certainly we could not say, the scheme of heaven was defeated by the unwise and evil intents of men. Thus, the true conception of prayer is one that must correlate with the design of Providence.

Its Benefits are Ours.

We have endeavored to impress the fact that the benefits of this significant exercise are wholly ours. The condition of sense, which expresses itself, in humble devotion is the indispensible stipulation of our welcome through the threshold of these gifts of divine beneficence.

The objection is urged, since God is infinitely wise and good, his crudition and allwise jurisprudence will lead him to give whatever is suitable for us without petition, and if it is not the thing for us to have, we cannot secure it by petition: hence he will always do that which is for the very best, from the maturity and perfection of his nature whether we pray or not. To this we reply, we have the specific command to pray. (Isa. 55:6; Matt. 7:7; 26:41; Luke 18:1; Rom. 12:12; Eph. 6:18; Col. 4:6; 4:2; 1 Tim. 2:1; D. C. 18:6; 30:4; 32:3; 61:6; 2 Nephi 14:12; Alma 16:218-234.) To those who believe in God, this really is the best answer we have to offer, and is no small confirmation in our judgment.

It is no doubt agreeable to the perfect attributes of Deity, to grant that acknowledgment to our entreaty, which would not have been compatible to the same wisdom to have supplied us with, This objection without the effort on our part. as above stated, supposes, there is but one, and only one manner of graduation of acting for the best. Upon certain conditions, we will say, the lack of duty, a certain mode of precedure is for the best, yet had we been more active and consecrated there may have been a radical change of the attitude of God toward us, and who will say in either instance, His wisdom was not for the very best? It is unfair to say, the Divine will is always committed to one mode of action only, and cannot reach the results contemplated any other way. True, God will always do that which is best, yet it will always be the thing most consistent with his perfection and holiness. When we have a disposition to pray, the very achievement on our part may involve other circumstances, and bring into operation new conditions of unending variety.

When we anoint with oil and lay on hands, and pray for the sick of our number as is authorized in the Word, (Jas. 5:14,15) this action within itself is a part of the eternal arrangeent of moral and spiritual ethics, the carrying out of which brings the benefits to us, provided, of course, that our action meets that approval of God. It may be reasoned, if healing the sick through the intervention of Providence is a natural event with him, and so designed, why pray at all-why spend so much time in importuning for that already arranged and settled by eternal law? We answer, while God's line of demarkation may not be according to our standard, yet we can see by the exercising of ourselves in a certain way, and elevating our lives to a certain condition of righteousness purity and faith, certain benefits come, while if we failed to do this they may be withheld. These benefits, as well as all others that effect our immediate lives, are conditional; in fact the reconciliation of mankind to God, is one in which terms are specified and which is contingent on gospel law. To tell you, upon your fulfillment of a certain contract you would get a settled renumeration, you would understand, unless you diligently complied with your necessary part the stipulation would be withheld. God has so stated, and it is an unalterable decree that our actions and wishes must be conformable to those of his. An example of this was set by Jesus when he said, "Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find." If we ask amiss, it signifies we have not fully understood the Divine mind, or in some way we are out of harmony with him. It is for this reason, we should always try to be in possession of the Holy Spirit, so when it is necessary to ask for specific gifts in true faith, we will get what we pray for.

It does seem that many of the saints take a narrow view of prayer, and think it wholly consists of asking for something. Can we not see the greatest incentive is to get our hearts and minds in rapport with the divine, that we may sense the larger and higher attainments? More time then should be spent in praying for holiness of life, and purity of purpose, that our low condition may be elevated to a higher altitude of spiritual existence We should remember prayer is not necessarily definite or specific petition, as the crying child coaxes and pleads for the tempting dough-nut, but in its broadest range and elevated sense, it is the fellowship of holy communion of the human with the divine. While our Father has not barred us from asking for the little trivial things, and specific benefits, yet we should remember the highest and best results accrue, when we seek him in holy life, and genuine communion of true devotion and filial love. In other words, it should be a companionship of holiest bonds and associations. When this condition is reached, if it ever is fully, what more can the soul desire, truly, than to realize this oneness with our heavenly Parent, to be conversant with the fact that his omnipotent arm protects. to realize that his omnificient mind overrules, and to be encircled with his love: The potent thing is, to be subject to his wisdom and to be subservient to his will. When we are conscious of such association, all other things pale into insignificance. What need we care for the material wealth of earthly possession, when we have the riches of the Father at our command? should we be provident for earthly sagacity, when the Father's wisdom rules us? Why should we be concerned for fame and earthly honor, when we are vassal of a havenly King? So we join with Kipling and say:

God of our fathers known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle line,
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine:
Lord God of Hosta, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.
How, and For What Shall We Pray?

A set form of prayer should hardly be insisted upon, only so far as restrictions are justifiable in the word of God. A few suggestions on this may not be amiss. Some seem to get the idea it is a continual dinning into God's ears, or a transmission of informaticu which he does not know, or possibly putting him in remembrance of those things he is in danger of being neglectful of and is liable to forget. Is God so absent-minded we have to do this? Christ seems to want us to know differently, for he says, "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye asked Him." While God evidently has not restricted us from asking him for the oft recurring wants and needs and things of a less specific value, yet we should not continually ask for specific favors and leave the larger and better significence of this holy privilege neglected.

The utility of supplication lies not in the uniformity of its rhetoric, with high sounding praises of theistic philosophy, or extravagant metaphors; but in genuine natural expression, showing unbounded trust laden with desire, and expressing filial companionship, and mutual agreement. We have heard of those who have used some big or uncommon word in their prayer, and then follow it with their definition for fear the Lord might not know as to its mean-Some may pray for a Pentecostal shower and then deny, and fight bitterly the gift of tongues. Some are prone to pray for the sick, and then restrict the power of God to the ages gone by. A miracle of this character with them, can only be canonized by age. Such praying is inconsistent, and discordant. It invites skepticism. In life as we move onward we have a deepening experience, and as our concept of Divinity and the law enlarges, it is possible our prayer will also express in a larger sense the manifold grace of God; but in every period of moral, intellectual, and spiritual development, the order of prayer most acceptable is that which is natural and springs voluntarily from the recesses of the heart. Above all our hearts should breathe loyalty to God, loyalty to his cause, and loyalty to the brotherhood. "Lovest thou God as thou oughtest? then lovest thou likewise thy brethren."-Longfellow.

In endeavoring to impress this fact, that prayer should be honestly expressed, and come from the heart of the righteous in holy communion, yet we would not justify the idea that no other should pray. We are told "for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."—(Rom. 8:26.) This text may lead us to the conclusion one should possess the Spirit that a proper intercession should be made.

Again, "The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight." Prov. 15:8. A literal rendition of this may deny to the wicked any rights to our Father's grace and love. Such texts should be viewed in the light of all that has been revealed on the question. Prayer without desire, it truly has been said, "is like an altar without a sacrifice or without the fire frome heaven to consume it." The very act of prayer itself is an evidence of repentance. All prayer to be acceptable, should be offered in faith at least in a believing frame of mind. "If any man [no matter whom] lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith nothing wavering."-Jas. 1:5-7. Again, "O thou that heareth prayer; unto thee shall all flesh come."—Ps. 65:2. This coming must be by faith, for "He that cometh unto God must believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."-Heb. 11:6. So from this it would appear, all men may pray and come to God, but in making the effort the act is one seasoned with faith, and not of unbelief. Prayer without faith and a corresponding desire for betterment is no prayer at all, for these conditions enter into every nature of the thing itself. Daniel's prayer was accompanied by confession,-"I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession."-Dan. 9:4. Paul besought the saints at Rome to pray for him, that he may be delivered from those of unbelief, that his service he had for Jerusalem may be accepted and that he may come unto them with joy by the will of God, and may with them be refreshed. (Rom. 15:30-33.) Here was a welling up of desire, as it were, by this effective missionary, for his soul felt his insignificance, and was in need of divine assistance that his soul might burn with love and zeal.

The question is often asked, what posture shall we assume in prayer? We believe the most acceptable one, is bowing the knees,—at least we have the greatest number of precedents on this way, although other attitudes certainly are acceptable. Jonah prayed from the belly of the fish (hell)—Jonah 2:1. The congregation of Israel fell on their faces-Num. 16:22; Joshua fell on his face---Josh. 5:14; Solomon stood before the altar,-Kings 8:22; again he kneeled-2 Chron. 6:13; David lifted up his hands,-Ps. 28:2; Jesus fell on his face, Matt. 26:39; he instructed "when ye stand praying,"—Mark 11:25. He also kneeled down,—Luke 22:41; Paul with the elders kneeled -Acts 20:36; so we have a variety of postures represented in precedent, and we have no reasons to doubt they were all acceptable when performed in singleness of purpose and purity of

When we address the throne of grace our common sense should teach us not to ask God for some things. Shakespeare rightfully says:

"We ignorant of ourselves, Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers Deny us for our good; so find we profit, By losing of our prayers."

It would be a foolish thing for the brotherhood to ask God to lengthen all future days to twentyfive hours instead of twenty-four. We should not expect God to change the seasons, and make summer come in the winter time, or do away with the law of gravitation, or change the great sysmet of nature. Such would be asking amiss. We should ask for those things, if need be, that are consistent and reasonable. Having faith as a grain of mustard seed is said will remove mountains, but we should remember when asked to give a demonstration of our faith, by those inclined to scoff, that if God wanted a mountain, (or a sycamore tree either, removed by faith, the faith to that quantity would certainly do it. It is really consistent to expect it when he uses it as an illustration, unless God has so willed it? We have but one illustration where such was done (Book of Ether 5:30,31) to "manifest thy-self unto thy disciples," so today if it was needful, God's power would be unchanged. It is fallacious to give argument or exhortation to those who may be praying with you, like the zealous brother who not having a favorable opportunity beforehand to exploit the belief, and raid the domain of another preacher that belonged to another denomination while at his meeting, and explain the virtues of his own; when called upon to offer the opening prayer for this minister bowed down and there under the sanctity of this holy obligation, told that preacher just where he was wrong and disparaged his faith, and for twenty minuts there was rehearsed the good features of the gospel which he believed, and of the goodness of God in bestowing the gifts to the church.

We can express our desires with brevity with-out fixed forms of speech. We should avoid circumlocution, and oft repetition. We can hallow God's name without prefacing each sentence "Heavenly Father" or "Oh God." should remember it is God we are addressing and not man. We should bear in mind it is an holy act, and not a formula of words. It is an occasion of joy and happy privilege, and not a lament or a reproach. Amid all the variation of earthly change, prosperity and adversity, our faith should be serene and triumphant, as been so beautifully expressed by the Psalmist:-"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul."

We are told "always to pray and not faint," Luke 18:1, and to "pray without ceasing,"—I Thes. 5:17, and "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit,"—Eph. 6:18, and "for I pray continually for them by day, and mine eyes water my pillow by night,"—2 Nephi 15:4. All these references surely does not mean we must be on our knees continually, and without ceasing give an unending petition of words. A broad conception is here taken; for it is understood as being not so much of a specific act, as it is an habitual state of life and consecration. Such a view shows it is a perpetual recognition of God in all the details of life. It is therefore a business-an occupation in life, for it enters into the warp and woof of our very being. Humility and meekness of the spirit wherever found, is indicative of this state of being in the lives of those who possess it. He who attains this true ideal of prayer will have no reason to regret, in their finality of numan endeavor.

PERFECTION OF CHARACTER.

By Elder J. E. Vanderwood. The prime object of all religion is the unfolding, developing, and perfecting of character, since character of man must determine his piace both in this world and that which is to come. therefore it is quite obvious that the making of character is paramount.

In the first place it should be understood that no man's character or life can transcend his conception and vision of Diety, and it is there fore very essential that we observe certain fixed and immutable laws in the growing of that thing we call character. Character is grown from seeds just as plants are, and the nature of the seeds we plant determines the kind of a character we shall reap, and it is well therefore to remember that the thoughts we permit to enter into our minds, are the seeds that will eventually grow for us a character, a life. Our thoughts are the causes that eventually produce the results, and when we become conscious of the fact that we are able to govern our own thoughts and make them just what we would have them to be, how essential it is that we exercise that function and begin by a process of careful meditation to plant the seeds that will day by day unfold and grow until they shall in a day to come ripen into a perfect character, a complete and transcendant life.

James Allen has said that "spiritual meditation is the pathway to Divinity," and it is indeed very suggestive since meditation is a dwelling intently in thought on any given theme or object, it is quite obvious that if we desire to grow a perfect character, to produce a perfect life, we must meditate daily upon that which is pure and perfect, and it is well therefore that the object of our meditation, our secret musing, be noble and exalting so that every time our mind reverts to it we are lifted up. Let us not forget that thoughts are forces, and that our most secret thoughts will take form in action and word, an act, or a word repeated becomes a habit, and the aggregation of our habits determine the sum total of our character.

Before we can develop a character that is Christlike in its nature, the sole object of our meditation must be Truth; mere opinion and theory must be entirely eliminated and a love for truth must be enthroned, and thus by dwelling intently in the truth, contemplating nothing but truth, we will open our hearts and lives to its Divine inflow and thus acquiring, thus conforming ourselves to the demands of truth, do we admit into our lives the Spirit of Divine love that emanates from Christ and by its purifying influence do we subdue, and transmute our selfish propensities into the pure gold of Divine and altruistic love, and by reason of that Spirit operating within us we will admit into our minds the things that are related to that Spirit, since truth begets truth, love creates love, and knowledge attracts knowledge, and as we bring into our lives the things that are Godlike, do we more and more attract to ourselves that which corresponds with the Divine, and the things we invite or admit into our lives become working forces gradually by slow degrees at first, and by more rapid strides thereafter transforming our lives and purifying and perfecting our character, that it shall eventually become one with God, completed and rounded out in all its parts, a glory to God and a benediction to men.

If you would attain unto these blissful heights, relinquish all selfish desires, subdue and conquor every uprising of self, cultivate your heart, water it with the refreshing dews from heaven, of divine love that is so absolutely pure that it seeks nothing for self gratification. Curb all your fleshly passions, and continually open your life to that Divine and rejuvenating spirit of peace that is so replete in the Christ life and by it thou shalt mightily prevail for thou shalt be one with God. Thy life will correspond with the most perfect of all environments, and the fruitage of your planting shall ripen into a perfect character, a divine life, and the blessedness that comes to one by reason of a Christlike service will more than compensate for every trial he may have endured in the beginning, or for any sacrifice he may have By this means shall the life that is more abundant be realized, and our lives will preach many eloquent sermons. By this process shall we know the truth, and thus knowing will attain unto that condition of freedom that can only be understood by a clean mind and a pure heart.

Great possibilities await those who learn, that apart from the Divine character, there is and can be no real life, and our exhortation therefore is that our religious life should be such that it brings us into constant rapport and conscious oneness with the Divine. And as the grandeure and beauty of this greater life is unfolded to us, we shall wonder how we could ever have been content or satisfied with a warped, stunted and self-centered

The appeal and admonition of the wise Solomon to his son was "with all thy getting get understanding," but our paramount appeal to the human race is With all thy getting get a pure heart and a clean mind that a perfect character may be thy graceful adorning, that in your very person the Sun of Righteousness may arise with profound and perpetual healing in his wings. #### DARE TO BE A DANIEL.

It requires more courage in the average youth to do right than to do wrong. Strange as it may seem, it is easier for both young and old to do the latter than the former. Hence it is that he or she who dares to do right at all times and in all places stands forth prominently among the rest. Only here and there one of this class is to be seen, and these few win golden opinions.

This virtue is indispensible to a really successful career. There are so many opinions among men on both secular and moral questions, and so much opposition, even to the noblest action. that one must do and dare in order to be true to God and man.

Every Bible student knows the story of Daniel and how the enemies of God sought to remove him out of their way by having him cast into a den of lions. You know the result, if not read the sixth chapter of Daniel. There is both truth and inspiration in the following extract from Faber's well known poem.

> THE RIGHT MUST WIN. Oh, it is hard to work for God
> To rise and take his part
> Upon this battlefield of earth, And not sometimes lose heart!

He hides himself so wondrously, As though there were no God; e is least seen when all the powers Of ill are most abroad:

Or he deserts us at the hour The fight is all but lost; And seems to leave us to ourselves Just when we need him most.

God is other than we think; His ways are far above,
Far beyond reason's height, and reached
Only by child-like love.

Workman of God! Oh, lose not heart, But learn what God is like; And in the darkest battlefield Thou shalt know where to strike.

Oh blessed is he to whom is given The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when he Is most invisible.

And bless'd is he who can divine Where real right doth lie, And dares to take the side that seems Wrong to man's blindfold eye!

Most strange in all its ways, And, of all things on earth, least like What men agree to praise.

For right is right, since God is God: And right the day must win; To doubt would be disloyalty, To falter would be sin

MARVELS OF ELECTRICITY.

At the convention of the National Electric Light association, which was held recently in Philadelphia, among the other speakers was Dr. Steinmetz, the leading man in his line. In a substantial, accurate and humble manner, he told of the marvels which were already looming up in the electric field. According to him, the electric automobile is to come within the reach of every man of moderate means, and will supplant the ordinary means of locomotion, as the bicycle supplanted walking. The common possession and use of these machines will destroy their present exclusive character, and they will cease to be used as a means of pleasure, and will become wholly means of utility. Already the wearisomeness of long driving is being felt and acknowledged, and when the exclusiveness of it is gone, this fad will lose its facination. It was also said in this convention that the waste of coal in the production of electricity would cease, and this would be produced in great water-power centers, and be cenveyed over the country.

It was also predicted that soon there would be a four days' voyage across the Atlantic, by the use of electric power. This has gone beyond mere prediction. Dr. Steinmetz has already invented a turbine driven motor for steamship propulsion, which is now in use on the U.S. Steamer Jupiter, and which goes far to prove the four-day transatlantic voyage.

Billy Sunday Says:

"Religion is being killed by a whole lot of formalism. Our danger is not in the boiling over of the religious cauldron. It takes a live fish to swim up-stream, but a dead one will drift. Oh we have a lot of floaters in the churches. We've had enough of this godless social service nonsense. I'll go with you in eugenics, in social service, oyster soup, and institutional churches, but when you leave Jesus Christ out of it, good-night. The church is the one and only divinely appointed institution to feed the spiritual hunger of this world. You don't wonder that the world is going to hell so fast that it's breaking the speed limit, do you. I don't. It is ever to the church that humanity must turn for salvation. People are dissatisfied and disgusted with philosophy and science and new thought. Christianity is the only sympathetic religion that has made its way into this world."—Sel.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

The two great social curses of the ancient world were slavery and war. Christianity made no attempt directly and openly to interfere with either. Paul says never a word to Philemon about emancipating Onesimus, al-though both master and slave were Christians. Peter says never a word to Cornelius about leaving the military service of Rome, which constantly waged wars of conquest and oppression. Meanwhile Christianity, like the hidden fires of a subterraneous volcano, was eating away the crust upon which these institutions stood, and preparing, in God's fulness of time, to substitute for them institutions demanded by a higher conception of right and the sacredness of life. The mustard seed had been cast into the earth, and it was swelling and bursting cast into the earth, and it was swelling and unusing beneath the soil. The leaven had been thrown into hu-man thought, and its subtle influence was quietly, but none the less thoroughly, permeating the whole lump.— The Christian Herald.

GREAT SALT LAKE PRESERVES

anticipated by the engineers who built the treatles are transcontinental telegraph line, built before the railroad, extended west from Sait Lake City through the prosperous mining camps of Eurekia, Austin, and Virginia City. When the railroad was built, the telegraph line was transferred to follow its right of way and the old poles sawed off at the ground. An engineer who recently examined the butts left in the ground in the sait desert near Fish Springs found that, although fifty years had passed since the poles were cut off, the old butts were perfectly sound.

Telephone and electric companies in the Sait Lake valley have used the local sait for preserving poles. When set up, about 75 pounds of sait is placed around the poles on the ground. This method can not be used, however, when the pole is on or near a leavn, or in any place where vegetation is desired.

It is pointed out that the reason why the lawn, or in any place where vegetation is desired.

It is pointed out that the reason why the waters of Salt Lake act as a strong preservative, as distinguished from ocean waters, is because the lake water is so much a preservation with salt is of no use in coean piling against the attack of teredos and other marine borers.

Experts in the forest service who have been investigating the preservative treatment of timber offer the suggestion that ties one time in the total to the suggestion that ties one time in the value of the lake ought to be impervious to decay if the salt is not leached out by the action of the elements. It has been suggested that this can be guarded against, for example, by painting the butt of the post of the construction of the construction of the salt.—Sel.

THE LIFE OF THE BODY.

The development of every physical organism is primarily due to its inherent germ of life which operates from within outward. Other things are essential to such development but they are acquired from without, being appropriated by the living organism and made a part of itself, and having the same quality and degree of life possessed by the other parts. In its early stages of development the organism may lack many of the parts which will be acquired later on, while some other parts, though present may be in a dormant condition, but in every case the line of development will be according to the kind of life from which the organism springs. Thus the life of the oak centered in the acorn will of a certainty develop an oak tree; that of the apple will develop an apple tree, and so with every other kind.

The rule holds good in the animal kingdom, also, each form of life developing its own kind according to the perpetual law of creation established at the beginning of the world. Were it otherwise there could be no knowledge beforehand of what form of life would be developed from the seed planted in the ground, or other forms of young life, and man would as likely gather "grapes from thorns" and "figs from thistles," and vice versa, as the fruit "after their own kind." Animal life would assume new forms and characteristics, some the most ridiculous to imagine, and even man himself would not be free from extreme variation until many new developments would produce creatures having little resemblance to the original man. All nature would be chaos.

But the law of life relating to natural things is invariable; like produces like; the development of each form of life is along fixed lines and the result can be known with certainty. By this law order and permanency are maintained and the purposes of the Creator fulfilled.

In the Spiritual Realm.

But does the rule apply in the spiritual realm? The Scriptures say "Yes." They teach that a man not only may be, but must be "born of the Spirit," if he would have the life of Christ. That birth of the Spirit is the complement of the birth of the water, the two constituting the means by which a man becomes a part of the living body of Christ. As an individual organism having the germ of divine life implanted within him, his development will be along a definite line, so long as the inherent life force is given opportunity to work, producing results as absolute and certain as those of the growing acorn. These results are mentioned by Paul as love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance, and Jesus embodies them all in one term—eternal life. There can be no other result of the operation of the Spirit of life within him.

The Body of Christ.

The individual man having the life of Christ within him is however but a single part of a greater organism—the body of Christ which Paul is the Church. The term "body" Paul so frequently uses with reference to the Church carries with it the thought of life—to be a body it must have life-and that life will produce after its own kind, developing a form and character as absolute and definite as any physical organism.

The body of Christ, or the Church, of the New Testament times was possessed of this life. It is generally held that its life was given at Pentecost and that the Church was born that day, but we hold that the Church as a living organism existed before that time, for Jesus spoke of it as existing in his day (Matt. 16:18; 18:17; 23:-13.) Multitudes were baptized prior to Pentecost and Paul says "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." Being baptized into Christ can only mean into his body—the Church. Paul says "God hath set some in his church; first apostles," etc. The apostles were set in their place before Pentecost, and as Jesus sent them out "he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease." (Matthew 10:1). So not only were the apostles set in the church before Pentecost but the power-life was also implanted within it by which it could grow. Pentecost brought an endowment upon the already living Church.

The life of the Church was given it of God, and under the law governing the development of all forms of life, that like produces like, the development of the Church was along definite and fixed lines after the pattern designed of God in the beginning. As to outward form the Church was composed of apostles, prophets, evagelists, pastors, teachers, bishops, deacons, etc., besides the local organizations and individual members; as to qualities of character it was the embodiment and exponent of truth and righteousness; as to its manifestations of life there were the spiritual gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, and interpretation of tongues. (The results designed of God were to bring all the parts to a perfect unity, a perfect knowledge, a perfect character-"unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." This final development of the body of Christ is spoken of by the prophets as Zion, the city of God. Zion is the full-grown body of Christ.

Maturity Not Reached.

It seems apparent that the Church in the early centuries did not reach maturity. Through wickedness and corruption the vital parts of the body were removed-the God appointed officers no longer being retained in their places, while men heaped "to themselves teachers, having itching ears." Men turned away their ears from the truth unto fables, and the manifestations of divine life ceased within the body. The results designed of God were never reached and there has been an increasing division instead of unity, a confusing rather than a clarifying of truth, There has been no Zion.

Living Church Renewed in Latter Days.

But the purposes of God were to be accomplished. He has restored the Church in latter days to its former life and it may be found today just as it was anciently having the same form, and characteristics, and aiming at the same results.

It is a notable fact of Church history that when the six individuals met at Palmyra, New York, on the sixth day of April, 1830, according to previous command of God, to begin the organization of the Church, the Holy Spirit was poured out upon them to overflowing, imparting divine life which has remained with the Church until the present. Search the history of any other church of modern times and such an implanting of divine life at the time of its origin will not

Follows the Same Line of Development.

The developments of the Church of Jesus Christ organized under the manifestation of divine life in 1830 have been along the same lines as in the New Testament times. Having the same life the same form has developed having all the parts had by the original body. There could be no other line of organization under the Spirit of God. It has the same characteristics, the same manifestations of life, the same aims. True it is not yet fully developed either in form or character but the line of development is indicated and the perfect Zion set for its final attainment.

Other Forms.

Apart from this divine life other forms of church organization have sprung up which seem to be governed by no law, each becoming a law unto itself, determining its own line of development in opposition to all known law. Under these conditions it is not strange that a multitude of organisms have developed all radically different from the one true body of Christ, Instead of apostles some of them have substituted bishops and archibishops; instead of prophets other officer's have been installed. Others dispense with many of these officers altogether. The life-manifestations are rejected altogether, and the final collective unity and perfection, termed Zion, are lost sight of. In the natural world similar things would be looked upon as monstrosities, but in the realm of religion men have become accustomed to them and think of them as the divine forms of creation. Is it that the true body of Christ is so little known that men fail to discern the true nature of the others?

.The fruits of these strange forms of religious life are indefinite and uncertain. They give no promise of maturity in this world, and the anticipated results in the world to come differ in the different bodies. In the body of Christ law governs its development, and the operation of that law will produce the same form, and characteristics and results at all times.

Evil in the Body.

But some may say "Has not the evil grown out of the organization formed in 1830? and does not that prove that it is not the Church of Jesus Christ having his life within it? Evil men have gone out of the church following the corrupt doctrines, but the evil did not spring forth from the spirit of life within. It is neither strange nor new that evil should be found in the body of Christ, but the life within operates to eliminate it, just the same as the life forces of the physical body tend to eliminate disease which has found place within it. When the body is diseased or sick we do not say it is because there is no life in it, or that it sprang forth from the life within. The Church, like the net cast into the sea, gathers of every kind, and the individual parts which do not cast evil from them must themselves be cast away. The spirit of God working in the Church will expose evil and seek its elimination. So the fact that evil men have gone out of the Church with their evil practices is but one evidence of the operation of the law of life within.

The Church is moving along its appointed lines; not all discern its developments perhaps, but the purposes of God for which it was established are being wrought out. Those who come in and continue in obedience to its law will share in the joy of an ultimate Zion.

"And again, verily I say unto you, That which is governed by law, is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same. That which breaketh a law, and sanctine by the same. That which became a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy. justice or judgment; therefore they must remain filthy still."—Doctrine and Covenants 85:8.

The Sabbath dawned beautiful and the weather throughout the day was all that could be wished for, the attendance at all meetings being excellent, showing that the national holiday festivities had not materially if at all, an effect on their spirituality to the extent of keeping the saints from the church next day. ing service in the forenone litter M. H. Bolint was the speaker, first reading the 28th to the 36th verses of the 8th chapter of John, laying particular stress on the 31st and 32nd verses: "If ye continue in my word, then ye are my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." This freedom is from bondage and sin, and not freedom to do wrong. The speaker also read the first of the 5th chapter of Romans: "Therefore, being justified by faith," etc.

In the evening Elder M. H. Seigfried delivered the first of a series of sermons on Church History. In his introductory remarks he said that everybody is liable to make mistakes, and mistakes made honestly are excusable. He said church history began long before the organization of the church, that it really began at the signing of the Declaration of Independence, soon after which Lucy Mack, mother of the prophet, was born. He told of her visit to Vermont where she became acquaintold of her visit to Vermont where she became acquaintold of her visit to Vermont where she became acquain-ted with Joseph Smith Sen., of their marriage, their farm life, their business career which resulted in failure, of their turning over the farm to liquidate the indebtedof their turning over the farm to liquidate the indebted-ness, and subsequently the thousand dollars that her brother had given her as a wedding present, showing how strictly honest they were. He left off where Joseph Smith had just got a view of the plates of the Book of Mormon, but was not allowed to touch them. The first half of the sermon was preliminary, and consequently not much history was rehearsed. These sermons are going to become very interesting, if we do not misjudge.

day night. On account of a heavy rain between seven and eight o'clock, the attendance was small. The semi-annual reports of branch officers were presented, showing the labor done the past six months. A reso-lution was discussed which provided for finger bowls for Elders officiating in the sacrament service, but it failed to be carried. I think all Elders who break the bread to be carried. I think all Elders who break the bread and administer the wine should do so with hands clean-er than they can be made by simply dipping them into a little water in a finger bowl. There is an admonition in Isaiah 52:11, like this: "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." Not only should the Elders advessels of the Lord." Not only should the Elders administer with clean hands, but the Priests also; and not only those who administer, but those who receive it from them—those who partake should do so with clean hands and pure mouths. If all elders would observe a practice of washing the hands just before leaving home in clean water and soap, then with a clean handkerchief just before breaking the bread wipe off any prespiration that might be on the hands, it would be far better than a finger bowl to dip the ends of the fingers in. I heard one Elder say that he always wanted to be clean outwardly and inwardly, that he took a bath of the entire body on sacrament day and also made himself right he body on sacrament day and also made himself right be-fore God, so that his entire body was clean and his mind was pure. I also heard another presiding Elder say that in partaking it should be done with the ungloved right hand. Everybody washes their hands at least three times a day, but gloves are worn day after day for weeks and accumulate dirt and disease germs, and some sisters think they are clean enough to partake of the sacrament with. Is that consistent? The emblems after being blessed are supposed to be holy, possibly more holy than any other tangible thing we have to do with. They are emblematic of the blood and body of our Savior. Being holy, then, those who administer should do so with absolutely clean hands, and those who partake should do so with clean hands and mouths not befouled with toso with clean many and mounts not occurred with re-bacco or anything that is in any way the least offensive. The mouth should be brushed clean of food. There is no time better to observe Paul's admonition to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit" than just prior to administering or partaking of the sacra-

Pacific Grove, Calif., June 8. Editor Ensign:—I have just listened to the reading of Bro. Wm. Lewis' dream, published in the Ensign of May 28, and it certainly is a message of comfort and strength to His children who are now much in need of it. The woman who neceived the glad news and communicated the same to those present represents the church, or rather the prophet of the church, who is to utter the midnight cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." Matt. 25:6. This cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." Matt. 25:6. This will awaken the entire church to the fact that He is coming, a fact that all had gone to sleep, because He had tarried—been longer in coming than they supposed He would be. This announcement is to be immediately followed by His presence, as will be seen by the fact that there is no time for further preparation after the cry

Some have made light of the idea that the church is now, or ever will be sleeping when He comes, but in doing so they are treating lightly the Master's words, "they [the church] all slumbered and slept." When? At the time of His return to the church. That When? At the time of His return to the church. That was the subject under consideration. What will follow this general awakening of the church? The endowment, represented very fittingly as a marriage supper. This will take place in the Kirtland Temple, a building crected at no very distant date by command of God and by a devoted, pure hearted, sacrificing people, a building that has been secepted and protected by Him who authorized its construction. In this sacred edifice will be witnessed the mighty power of God and the person of our Sayior. Perhaps there never was a time when His persence was needed as now. Savior. Perhaps there ne persence was needed as now.

From reports coming in from heathen lands it would been there is a general awakening and a desire for the hrist. Today I heard a returned missionary say that Christ. Today I heard a returned missionary say that in her district there were forty thousand demanding baptism whom they could not baptize for the want of missionaries to look after them. If these reports are to be-relied upon, and I am not disposed to doubt them, it would seem that the time was near, and that there It would seem that the time was near, and that there is a pressing need for God's servants to go to them endowed as they were on the day of Pentecest. And as stated by the Doctrine and Covenants they will be "when every man will hear the gospel in his own language and his own tongue by those who have been ordained unto this nearest better Computers." this power by the Comforter."

But who are those sorrowful ones referred to in the dream and by the Master as foolish virgins? who will not impart of their means according to the law; also those who receive support for preaching when able to be self-sustaining, and elders supported by the Church and sent out to open up new places, but who spend their time in visiting. Such will certainly be among that number.

Let us pray God that his coming may soon be and that we may stand when He appeareth, for he is like refiner's fire and fuller's soap and will thoroughly purge the ministry.

Dear Ensign:—It is with pleasure that I write to you today. I am a young laborer in this blessed work of our Master. After attending one conference ot Coldwater, Mich., and one at Clear Lake, Ind., I began to see where my soul was going. Shortly after I attended conference at Clear Lake, Brn. Clyde F. Ellis and W. H. Dowler came to my home to hold a series of meetings in our vicinity. Before they began meetings I told them I was ready to begin a new life. Bro. William Dowker led me into the waters of the Maumee river where my sins were washed away. From that time the 16th day of Nov., 1913, I have been doing my best to live for my Although I am weak in this work I see much more happiness in my new life. Although some people are against this blessed work it makes me all the stronger when I see how others are doing. There is no branch of the Saints near me and very few Saints also, but we enjoy reading the dear Ensign.

I would be very glad to have some of the Saints write to me as I enjoy reading letters from the dear Saints very much. I will answer all those I can.

Dear Ensign:-This is not to extoll Kansas because of her mighty stream of golden grain, which is estimated at 182 million bushells, exceeding any other crop in her history, which if baked into 5c loaves, placed end to end, would girdle the earth more than three times. Nor do we wish to present or praise the virtues of old Missouri, the Zion state of a world, whose "hen crop" alone souri, the Zion state of a world, whose "hen crop" alone far exceeds in golden dollars the mighty wheat crop of Kansas, and if the eggs of the Missouri hen laid in the past year were placed end to end they would encircle the globe with 5000 miles to spare, according to Gov. Major's speech in Carthage, a few days ago. Then with hadors speech in Cattalage, a lew vays ago. Then when the ballance of the crop in broilers, and roosters, to-gether with wheat, corn, fruits and other serials raised in Missouri, Kansas is left still "bleeding" at every pore in comparison.

However, this is merely to say "bravo" and congratu-lations to the Saints of the Tennessee and Kentucky district with whom we have mingled our voice, our district with whom we have mingled our voice, our prayers, joys and sorrows in the past, who have so recently passed the "rule" "that no one addicted to the use of tobacco or strong drink should hold office in district or branch." Surely the "last is becoming first," a state where tobacco users are born and raised, because of their individual of the property of th work in it, and with it, passing such a rule is indeed indicative of progression, setting an example worthy of initiation by districts not so unfortunate—Bravo we say. In the Spring River District the war has been on for

In the Spring River District the war has been on for a year or more to pass such a rule or similar one. Our worthy Bro. Rushton, minister in charge, presented the rule and asked for its adoption. It has been tabled and laid over from time to time. Brethren and sisters whom we least expected fought it, and there were others who sustained it, whom we least expected to do so. But they had a desire to honor the law, "avoid the use of it," and to pay due defference to authority who was seeking to enforce it.

Democracy in the church has degenerated into personal rights—a party "afraid of power," which is the death knell of all theocracy. The man who has accepted ordination in the church, and rebells against the authority that gave him power to act, has no authority whatever, except in his mind and to be betrayed is martyrdom and confidence destroyed in those we think the grandest of men, leaves mars and scars that never heal.

The minister in charge, district president and others, together with the rule received a share of undue criticism during the year. However, on the 20th of June last at our conference at Fairland, the rule was sustained by a safe majority, and we hereby give due notice that the Spring River District has moved up into the "no-tobacco" column and we feel encouraged that under the new rule the minds of men will finally become clearer and their teaching by example more effectual in adding others to come up higher.

Let us all sing "When the battle's over we shall the crown." It is a battle and we sympathize with all who are slaves, and pray they may have power to over-come, for, "he that overcometh shall sit down with me in my Father's throne." With enmity to none and love for all, I am your humble servant,

T. W. Chatburn. P. S. Remember our reunion August 7th to 16th, 1914.

O'Fallon, Ill., June 30.

Dear Ensign:—For some time I have been much impressed that I owe it to the many who for a year and a half or more, have by my request been at times fasting and praying for me for my recovery from the sore affliction that has troubled me for many years, and caused me to have to give up altogether the missionary work the last eighteen months. Nine months of this time I was a patient in our Sanitarium in Independence, Mo. For one year and three days I wore a ten pound brace extending from around above my hips to four inches below my left foot, and under these adhesive strips on each side of the left limb extending from my ankles nearly to my hip, and over these a wrapping of cloth of three or four thicknesses. On my right foot I wore a heavy five pound shoe, and all this time had to use crutches. Time and space would not admit of me telling of all the interesting experiences connected with all this. of all the interesting experiences connected with all this.

The surgeons said I would have to wear this brace and remain in this condition for a year and a half or two years. After one year of pain and suffering and great inconvenience, being deprived of many church priviledges and other rightful priviledges, the surgeons examined me again and said I would have to wear the brace one more year and if possible lie in bed all this time making the hipjoint straight and solid as the bone be-tween the knee and hip.

But I am glad and happy to write that through ad-ministrations, the exercise of faith, fasting and prayer, that about a week after this last diagnosis and decision of the two leading physicians and surgeons, I was so blessed of the Lord as to have confidence in God and so blessed of the Lord as to have confidence in God and bls promises so I had the brace and fixtures all taken off and could walk about the room, and was so in a few days I could walk with a cane only and had the happy priviledge of attending all the sessions of the Generay Auxiliary Societies and Conference, except two forenoons the latter part of the conference.

Many years before the brace was put on the hip joint had become so near rigid I could not sit square on a chair but sat on the side of a chair so as to allow the limb to hang straight down from the body, only bending the knee so I could extend the foot back of the chair, but to my glad surprise just the day after I began to walk I found that I could sit square back in a chair putting both feet outle sits equare back in a char putting both feet out before me in a comfortable position.

By careful measurement for many years the diseased limb was near an inch shorter than the other, but after the blessing of God came we found by careful measurement that both limbs were exactly the same leastly

Now I have written this for the purpose that I have stated in the beginning of this letter and testimony of the great and wonderful goodness and power of the God we as Latter Day Saints serve and claim to worship, and to heartily thank all saints who so kindly and carnestly remembered me in exercising faith in my behalf.

It is all wonderful and marvelous to me and I certainly appreciate the privilege, that of getting so great a blessing, and that I am gaining in health and strength every day and am hopeful that in the very near future I will be better able physically, mentally, and spiritually to engage more diligently in ministerial work than ever before in my life.

To this end I ask all who read this or whose attention is called to this letter that they then and there ask God in silent prayer to continue His blessings to me so I will be fully restored to health and strength to His honor and glory and for the advance of His work

Editor Ensign:—We moved last November from Pond Creek, Okla., to Sesser, Ili., 80 miles south of St. Louis. There are no Saints here that we know of, and the church papers have been our only comfort. If there are any Saints near we would be glad to meet them, and if any elders are in this part of the country we would be glad to have them come to see us. This is a coal mining town consequently all classes of people are here. mining town consequently all classes of proper and little lock-

It is also a saloon town, with men often put in the lockup for disturbing the peace.

There are four churches here and some very nice people, who with the women's help are trying to vote saloon element. There is poor water here, having to depend on cisterns and by buying water brought from springs several miles in the country. They have to go deep for well water and then it is so bad stock will not

If any of the Saints know of a good place to work, carpentering and other work, where there is a branch of the Church, we would be pleased if they would write to us, as we don't want to spend the winter here—the to us, as we don't want to spend the winer here—the cold is too severe for us after living in a milder climate. It is low and damp here. This is called Egypt. I would like to hear the call as Joseph and Mary heard it—but of Egypt have I called my children. We want to live where we can have the influence of the gospel for our children, and ourselves, and where we might do more good. We have been isolated since coming into the church over

Sixteen years ago.

Oh, that we might be where we could grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord and his laws. We want to be worthy to be gathered with the faithful. With love to all the Saints we are yours in bonds,

SERMONS AND ARTICLES

PHENOMENAL REPATRIATION

The following article from "The Truth," a Jerusalem paper, is interesting, not only as showing the progress of the Zionistic movement and the gathering of the Jews to Palestine, but as showing the attitude of at least some of the Jews toward Jesus Christ in whom they have never believed. Many Jews take a modified view of him and freely admit his greatness, but it will take the mighty workings of God's hand to convince them all that he is their Savior and Redeemer. The Lord has promised to reclaim Judah: "Behold, I will save my people from the east country, and from the west country; and I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness."-Zech. 8:7,8. -Editor.

When we reflect upon the amazing fact that, notwithstanding the stringent edicts and exceptional restrictions promulgated and enforced during the last decade by the Ottoman authorities for the suppression of Jewish immigration into Palestine; yea, when we realize that, notwithstanding the base underhand intrigues of Judeophobian Germany, pagan Rome, and chauvinistic Islam; yet, in spite of all these adverse influences, the number of Hebrews in the Holy Land has increased from twenty thousand to two hundred and forty thousand, we cannot but exclaim in the words of the royal Psalmist: This is truly Jehovah's doing, it is marvellous in our eyes!

We well remember that when we arrived here, about eighteen years ago, we only found here and there a few struggling and forlorn-looking Jewish settlers-dry bones-; whilst now we can count sixty flourishing model colonies with seven thousand robust families, thriving by their own labor,—colonies adorned by sumptuous synagogues, gymnasiums, schools of art and music, Maccabean clubs, philanthropic institutions, lecture rooms and many other requirements, social and religious, so that even the most hardened Anti-Jewish Ottoman statesman and legislators are constrained to own, like the discerning magicians of Pharaonic memory, that it is nothing short of the finger of Jehovah that has wrought the great miracle of transformation and remarkable change of attitude on the part of the authorites towards the Jews.

One has only to visit Palestine to see and hear for himself how the old dead Hebrew tongue has become, as it is this day, a living language, with all its pristine beauty of expression and fluency.

We have interviewed a good many intelligent Hebrews, who have just returned from the Diaspora, as to the immediate circumstances that led them to Palestine, with the result, that one and all acknowledge a divine purpose in the peculiar ways and means by which they were urged on to take up there abode in the land of their forefathers.

Beilis, for instance, when asked why he preferred to make his permanent home in Palestins rather than in America, where he was promised substantial pecuniay help and other mundane advantages, replied to the following "I am thoroughly convinced that my uneffect: told sufferings and afflictions have been ordained by the All-wise Jehovah in order to purge me from my stoic indifference towards him and his revealed word. Whilst yet in bonds, I vowed in my heart that when once liberated I would direct my steps to the Promised Land, to which, previous to my unmerited incarceration, I never gave my attention. Now, I intend to spend the rest of my days in meditation and prayer for the redemption of my people."

Positive evidence of a more palpable and tangible nature is not wanting to prove to demonstration to all reasonable thinking men, that Zionism and her kindred associations tending eastward are divinely-appointed agencies for the carrying out of the last part of the prophetic programme of Israel's historic drama.

Indeed there is not a ghetto, of Jewish community in the whole civilized world, that has not heard and responded to the bugle call of Zionism.

The message: "Ye brethren of Judah that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still, remember Jehovah from afar, and let Jerusalem come into your mind," has echoed and reechoed throughout the diaspora.

Zionism is the breath of Jehovah which is gradually, but miraculously raising an exceeding great and mighty army from the dry bones of the house of Judah, as so beautifully depicted in the thirty-seventh chapter of the book of Ezekiel.

This must be obvious to all who have eyes to see and ears to hear!

But alas! there are still to our knowledge, not a few benighted clergymen of the Church of England who persistently maintain that all those Hebrews who have dared to escape from the throes of relentless persecution and sought a place of refuge in the land of their forefathers are doomed to destruction.

According to these excellent ecclesiastics, the Holy Land is intended as a trap, intently laid by Jehovah in order to ensnare the christless Jews for their utter ruin.

It is perverted men of this calibre who also assert that it would be a gross iniquity on the part of British Israelites to purchase land in Palestine, because it is written in the book of Leviticus that no land should be sold or transferred in perpetuity.

Oh! what a preposterous incongruity! what idiotic irrelevance!

What connection, one may ask, with amazement, can possibly exist between redeeming the land from its present Gentile possessors, and the Old Dispensational Mosaic laws and regulations of mortgage between the children of Israel themselves?

It is beyond our comprehension how men so ludicrously illogical, and ignorant of the true spirit of the Hebrew Bible should occupy important positions in the church as exponents of Holy Writ.

But, of course, the rules of reason and logical deduction, as taught at Oxford and Cambridge, may possibly differ from those inculcated by the Hebrew theologians in Jerusalem.

After all, what can we expect from narrowminded mentalities of the Athanasian type that can conceive a threefold diety in the Almighty God? and moreover consider it quite logical that the man, Jesus of Nazareth, is at the same time his own Everlasting Father and His only begotten Son!

Horrors of horrors! what blasphemy! what an absurb anomaly! what ignorance! what aberration of intellect!

Is the judgment or opinion of such ignorant divines worthy of consideration or regard?

We scarcely think so.

PRAYER FOR MOTHER. Lord Jesus, thou hast known A mother's love and tender care; And thou will hear, while for my own

And thou wilt hear, while for my own Mother, most dear, I make this birthday prayer.

Protect her life, I pray,
Who gave the gift of life to me;
And may she know, from day to day,
The deepening glow of life that comes from Thee.
As once upon her breast
Fearless and well content I lay,
So let her heart, on Thee at rest,

Feel tears depart and troubles fade away.
Her every wish fulfill;
And even if Thou must refuse
In anything, let thy wise will
A comfort bring such as kind mothers use.

Ah, hold her by the hand, As once her hand held mine; And though she may not understand Life's winding way, lead her in peace divine.

PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY AND MODERN SPIRITUALISM COMPARED.

In a paper called the "Light of Truth," will be found the following statement, "Primitive Christianity and Modern Spiritualism are identical, and per consequence a pure Christian, and a pure Spiritualist are identical."

As there may be some honest seekers after truth, both among the saints, and the cult known as Spiritualists who may be halting between two opinions, who may have read the above statement, it has seemed best to the writer to tute a comparison between Primitive Christianity and modern Spiritualism. While the writer is willing to admit that there is some truth in what is known as Modern Spiritualism, it is safe to affirm that whatever of truth there is therein Satan has stolen from primitive Christianity for the sole purpose of catching the unwary, and thus entrapping them into practices foreign to, and forbidden in the word of God. The first thing then is to enquire, What is primitive Christianity, as to its teaching and practice? and for answer, it is evident that we should go to the Bible as the rightful expositor of that teaching and practice, not forgetting the injunction, "To the law, and to the testimony, if they [the professing teachers] speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

The Bible teaches that the law and the testimony consist of what Christ and his followers taught and believed. And what was that? He taught that his Father, Jehovah, was a personal being, and that he, Christ, was his only begotten Son, through whom alone salvation from sin and its environments must, or can come. Also the necessity of repentance, to be followed by baptism in water for the remission of sins. Then the reception of the Holy Spirit as the seal of regeneration, or the new birth. It is thus very easy to identify a primitive Christian on the basis of belief. And it is neither consistent or fair claim or admit that primitive Christianity has been, or ever would be changed, or modified, in any degree. The term itself precludes any such thing for if any system of faith and practice other than the original, were presented to the world at any time, would not be primitive Christianity, at the best it could be a counterfeit and may be a poor one at that,

Any change or modification of the basic principles of any system, would be a change, or departure, from the original, and compelling a change all the way through would be in effect a new system. Primitive Christianity may be briefly defined as God's plan for the uplift of humanity and its reconciliation to himself. And as to the possibility of any change or modification of his plan, we need only refer to the fact that Jehovah, or the God of the Bible declares himself to be unchangeable and that when he devised the plan he knew just what was needful for the unlifting and redemption of the human Jesus Christ declares that he "came not to do his own will but the will of him that sent him. We must therefore believe that whatsoever he taught by way of ordinance or precept, for the government and conduct of the lives of his followers was but an expression of the will of Jehovah, his Father. To conclude otherwise would be equivalent to an assertion that Christ was a deceiver, or was himself deceived, when he said, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." To conclude this part of my subject I suggest that whatsoever was the will of God in the past must be his will today.

Modern Spiritualism.

So far from being identical with primitive Christianity, its utter dissimilarity will appear as we proceed. As before remarked, the mere fact that a few scattered truths that may be found in modern Spiritualism can never establish its claim of identity. For there is no system however false it may be in the main, but must, or does have in it some truth, or truths, to give it a seeming appearance of cohesion. We have seen that primitive Christianity is based upon the alleged fact, or truth, that there is a personal God, known to both ancient and modern times, as Jehovah, and his son Jesus Christ, and one Holy Spirit, the co-worker of the two first named.

For, this Trinity modern spiritualism has no use save for purposes of denial or ridicule. For it also denies and ridicules the personality of God, and the divine sonship of Christ, the fact and office work of the Holy Spirit, the resurrection of the body, the second personal appearing of Christ to reign on the earth, for a thousand years, and its final renewal and restoration to its primitive or Edenic condition.

Modern spiritualism teaches as a substitute for the revealments of the Holy Spirit from an unchangeable God, the wild vagaries, and senseless ravings of any, and all, unembodied spirits no matter how low they may be in the scale of intelligence, and mental and moral development, who may be so fortunate as to find some one as a medium of communication between the deniens of the spirit land, and those of the earth life. Mediumship does not demand a pure life on the part of its practitioners.

In place of the miracles, and sublime wonders of primitive Christianity it presents for our acceptance all the absurbities of table tipping, slate writing, and materializing seances, and to this category we might add ringing of bells and playing of musical instruments, seemingly affoat in the air without any apparent visible means of support, and various other meaningless performances ascribed by others than spirits, to sleight of hand, legerdemain, etc. Thus modern spirit-ualism is altogether lacking in the straightforward simplicity and dignity that was ever characteristic of primitive Christianity.

In the domain of physical healing modern spiritualism exhibits a most painful and anxious consideration for the dimes and dollars, (mostly dollars) desired by the practitioners along that line.

What a contrast between their practice, and the principle embodied in this injunction of the great Founder of primitive Christianity, "Freely ye have received, freely give," and its practical application in this, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk."

Modern spiritualism is modern only in name. In all its essential features it has been known in former ages under the names of witch-craft, necromancy, astrology, soothsaying, and exorcising. Whenever one phase of this great perversion of the truth began to wane and lose its power to deceive and entrap the unwary, a new phase was invented with some slight variations of the "modus opperandi," but was ever based upon the supposed or real power of certain gifted ones to put themselves at will in communication with, and receive the aid of supermundane forces. But the purpose has ever been the same, antagonizing the truth at the expense of those who were unwary, or ignorant, enough to be there dupes. To prevent serious thought on the part of the masses, resort is had in modern times to buffoonery, and meaningless trickery.

Robert Fuller.

HINT TO THE ILL TEMPERED.

When you've snapped up a youth who was doing his best, And sneered at the error he'd made,

When you've poured out your wrath in a manner distressed, Have you found that your conduct has paid? When your temper you've lost through the day,

And before you in terror has stood he young man who tried, but whose work went astray, Did your bullying do any good?

Did you get better service from those you employ Because of your rage, let me ask?

If he's fearing your frown, does your messenger boy
Perform any better his task?
When you've flown off the handle because things went wrong wrong

And said all the mean things you could, and thrown in some cuss words to make it seem strong,
Have you found that it did any good?

If not, why not treat in a kindlier way The youth who is trying to serve? Why not point out mistakes that he makes in a day Why not point out mistakes that he makes in a d Without undermining his nerve? Why not gently reprove for the errors he's made And help him the way that you should, Instead of the useless and senseless tirade? Stead of the useress and sensored some good.

You may find that you're doing some good.

DOUBT AS A DESTROYER.

Shakespear has said: "Our doubts are traitors, and make us lose the good we oft might win by fearing to attempt.'

Jesus said to Peter: "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?"

Doubt is uncertainty, and uncertainty spells failure, no one can be possessed of that damaging and destroying unfluence and condition of mind, and be successful in any undertaking. The doubter is a ressimist, and a pessimist is always out of harmony with the whole creation. Pessimism spells discord, and discord will ripen into abject failure.

The doubter has no anchorage, no sure foundation, no peaceful resting place, he is tossed about on the billows of strife, confusion, discontenent, envy, malice, and anxiety, he has no ideal, no goal to which he can aspire; he has no hope to cheer his life, no faith to light his way, and he gropes about in the midnight of darkness, railing at the one who stands serene and poised by reason of a trust in God and in good.

The doubter can make no effort, no strides towards achievement, because his doubts give him no incentive for such thing as achievement, and if even by the influence of another he should arise to walk, the moment he should discover the tempestuous waves boistrously playing about him, he, like Peter, will immediately begin to sink;-he who doubts loses the good he might win by fearing to attempt, and if he fears he will also fail to do because mankind usually fail to do the things they fear to do.

Life becomes a burden, a heavy load, to the one who fosters doubt. He looks out of his little prison, with its dingy walls and darkened windows, and the whole world, this beautiful world of ours, looks gloomy and unhallowed to him, the magnificent mountains, the refreshing rivers, the sparkling brooks, the towering trees, the green grass, and the beautiful fragrant flowers become azym to him, entirely destitute of life. The song of the birds, the grandeur of the heavenly orbs, the perfect harmony of nature, have no charm to the one possessed of doubt. has no friends in whom to trust; he has no God in which to confide; he even doubts his own existtence and reality; he does not live because he has no conception of life, he is simply eking out a miserable existence here, without any hope to light up his dying bed. His little dwarfed and stunted life is not a life, it is a living death.

O the anguish that comes of doubt, it paralyses every tissue of body and soul, it impairs the mind and weakens the heart, it destroys the morals, it debases the life, and yet in the face of all this men will go on and on and persist in clinging to that traitor that robs them of all that is beautiful and good in he world.

"Wherefore didst thou doubt." Why should men doubt, can any intelligent reason be given for doubt? If not, then pray tell, why created in the image of God should yield himself to it.

He that doubts, like Peter, will and must sink, and except the Lord in his tender mercy stretch forth his hand as he did to Peter and lift him up he must go down and perish in the sea of life. Let us consider this thing from the rational point of view, is there anything in the elements of doubt that can console, benefit or cheer in the least? If not, why then should men cling to it, and perish with it? Is there anything about doubt that can enlighten, enoble, uplift, or bless? If there is not, then there is, and can be no reason why men should entertain for one moment the spirit of doubt.

The facts are quite evident however that doubt has in it the elements of destruction, failure, suffering, remorse, depression, and bondage, and therefore we have good and sufficient reasons why men should forsake, and part company with that traitor, who is day by day robbing them of the beauty, joy, comfort, blessedness, and opulence of life.

The writer being an optimist, sees the destructive elements of doubt, and therefore appeals in the spirit of fair mindedness to all who may be afflicted with that corroding influence to stop and ponder well these thoughts, and then lay hold of the transcendent life that awaits the man of faith.

A GOOD LITTLE ANECDOTE FOR YOUR RESTLESS SON. Where Lincoln Was.

Everybody, of course, has heard all about Strickland Gillian's little verses—or they might have been written by Frank L. Stanton—or anybody might be proud to have written them-about the little youngster who wound up his tale of woe:

THE RELATION OF HABIT TO DISCIPLINE.

Eva Bailey-Short.

(Read before the Independence Woman's Auxiliary.)
To me has been assigned the task of discussing the relation of habit as applied to discipline or, of habit as applied to the art of teaching, instructing and training the mind and manners of our children.

the mind and manners of our ehildren.

Very significant are the words of the wise man, "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it." No doubt many a disconsolate parent, as he weeps over a wayward child who has "set at naught all his counsels and would have none of his reproofs," is inclined to doubt the truth of Solomon's language, yet probably, if he would think the matter over carefully, he would find that he had given his son "counsels," only, teachings us to the right way, but has never trained or disciplined him in the right way at all.

but has never trained or disciplined him in the right way at all.

We can understand how training leads to habit, when we note the unconsciousness with which the fingers of a musician touch the right keys of an instrument, thus producing beautiful harmonies; or when we observe how apparently without thought, the stenographer writes correctly the proper character and how the fingers of the man who manipulates the key board of the linotype falls into place. There fingers have been trained, disciplined, and the habit has been formed.

Dr. Richardson has well said, "We are not thoroughly trained in anything till it has taken on the form of habit."

In other words, habit is the form which all true education or training takes.

How important then, it is, that as parents we properly How important then, it is, that as parents we properly discipline our children when young, by guiding them to the formation of good habits. Scolding, threatening, and whipping children is not disciplining them; more often it is the lack of control upon the part of the adult, often shown by such expressions as the folowing: "How dare with the part of the state of the shown by such expressions as the folowing: "How dare you disobey me?" "I tell you I'll make you do it, sir; I'll soon teach you who is master"—and then consider what the words, the tone and the manner imply. Sad to say, a habit is being formed, but what kind? And what of the discipline? Wrong, all wrong.

Again, in every family where there are young children, there occur almost daily, cases of what mothers call "making a litter." A child has had its box of toys and scattered them about the floor. A little girl making doll clothes, has disarranged the room. In many cases, doll clothes, has disarranged the room. In many cases doll clothes, has disarranged the room. In many cases, the task of rectifying this disorder falls anywhere but in the right place. The child should be taught that the labor of putting things in order is the inevitable consequence of having put them in disorded.

I once heard a mother say: "It takes too much time

I once heard a mother say: "It takes too much time to make Bennie put up his blocks, I'd rather do it myself than to bother training him." I wondered if she thought of the years and years she would have during which to follow Bennie, and, to use a common expression, "pick up after him," not to mention the still worse result of Bennie's growing up with a bad habit irretrievably fixed in his character through lack of discipline in youth pline in youth.

I saw another mother who spent probably two hours in playing with her boy, building houses, putting the blocks away, again building houses and again putting the blocks away, it! Tommy knew that playing with blocks, meant putting blocks away, and any failure on his part to do so, meant he would not have them the next time he wanted them. Thus his new-born desire was balked at the moment of anticipated gratification and the strong impression so produced, could scarcely fail to leave its effect on the future conduct of the child. He was early taught the lesson which cannot be learned. He was early taught the lesson which cannot be learned too soon, that in this world of ours, pleasures are rightly to be obtained only by labor. Labor stimulates thought. Action, we know, is the result of thought; therefore, teach the child that thinking good thoughts forms good habits, and good habits bring satisfaction and happiness, while on the other hand, punishment comes just as naturally as the result of wrong doing. Teach him, also, that a man's true character in all respects is indicated by his it be wrong to say that his habits make him what he is.

Did you ever hear a mother say to her boy, "Now and keep still, I won't hear another word; don't ask me any more questions, I know what is best for you."

The boy is not old enough to understand the future his mother has in view, but he does understand that he is hourly forbidden to do this, that and the other, which he was anxious to do. Would you wonder at his becoming skeptical of his mother's love, or of his mother's wisdom?

When we stop to think how few the years within which it is given us to discipline the children, by helping them to form good habits, dare we neglect the opportunity? Or try to shift the burden, no matter how hard the task may be, for training properly, does require infinite wisdom and patience on our part, and it is often a perplex-ing problem, as each child has his own individuality with peculiarity of character and disposition.

While young, a child can be easily coerced into doing your way, but when old enough to assert his own will, where is your authority? I believe there is but one way to avoid the inevitable result of such training, or rather lack of training, and that is to encourage the child from the start to think for himself and to choose the better way, always holding out to him this thought, that inas much as God has given every soul born into the world his own free agency, he can do what he wills to do, but escape the conse he can not under and circumstances, quence of his acts. Compare the child inbued and early trained with this thought of personal responsibility, with the child coerced into doing right, and the result is ob

I could call your attention to dozens of habits which how discipline, or lack of discipline, but I hope I have made the distinction clear by these few illustrations and will conclude by saying that the parent who helps his child to form good habits is the parent who has a properly disto form good mades is the parent who has a property dis-ciplined child and I believe he will agree with Solomon in his declaration, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Habit is a cable; We weave a thread of it every day,

And, at last, we cannot break it.

THE ONE BAPTISM. "One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism." Eph. 4:5. Elder Charles Derry

Those religionists who ignore the baptism of water, often refer to the above text as evidence that the water baptism is not necessary to salvation, and claim that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is all the baptism demanded in the sacred record. They forget, or ignore the fact, that both the baptism of water and the baptism of the Holy Ghost are frequently set forth in the scriptures. And Paul cannot be charged with ignorance of that fact, since he received the administration of both and taught both.

But if he, in the above text intended to do away with one of these, it would be interesting to learn which one it was that he desired to expunge. He does not tell which the "one baptism" is unless he considers both as one, constituting the new birth, as the Father, Son and Holy Spirit constituted the one Godhead. (I John 5:7, 8.)

This would be in accord with Christ's teaching respecting being born again, for when the Jewish ruler requested an explanation of the words, "Verily, verily I say unto thee except a man be born again he connot see the kingdom of God." Jesus explained that new birth in this emphatic language, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3:5,

This language shows that the birth of the water and of the Spirit constitute the one baptism, or the new birth. Christ came into the world to teach the great plan of salvation to mankind, also to be an example for us that we should follow his steps, as well as to be a ransom for us (1 Peter 2:21.) that his life might be a perfect example for our lives; and in order that he should be such an example, he laid aside his glory which he had with the Father before the world was, (John 17:5.) and took upon himself our nature in the seed of Abraham (Heb. 2:) "Being tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." (Heb. 4:15.)

He was the greatest and grandest of all teachers, for he not only was perfect in his teaching, but he practiced that which he taught, in all things. He tells us, "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will but the will of him that sent me." (John 6:38.) Hence his life was a per-fect representation of the will of God. John says there was a man sent from God whose name was John. (John 1:6.) Luke tells us, "The word of God came to John the son of Zecharias in the wilderness. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." (Luke 3:2, 4.)

With this statement all the four evangelists agree, He preached the word of God; baptism was a part of that word; the word of God is the expression of his will, hence the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins was the will of God. Christ came to do the will of God. He demanded the baptism of water by John, saying, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Father gave his approval of the act, acknowledged him as his son, and baptized him with the Holy Ghost. (Matt. 3, Mark 1, Luke 3.)

If it became Christ to fulfill all righteousness by thus being beptized or "Born of water" as a part of righteousness, can we be acceptable to God if we neglect to thus fulfill it? Christ preached the gospel. Baptism is a part of that gospel (Heb. 6:1, 2,) hence he preached baptism. practiced it, not only in his own person, but he baptized others. (John 3:22, 26.)

We would not charge Jesus either with submitting to be baptized himself, or baptising others as a mere form, or to gratify a whim, as Talmadge did, when at Jerusalem! Would you dear reader? The word and ordinances of God are too sacred to be trifled with. None knew that better than he.

I know of no more emphatic language that can be used in the teaching of a principle than was used by Jesus in his interview with Nicodemus. both as to the baptism of water and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. They evidently constitute the new birth, or one baptism referred to by Paul.

The claim that some make that the word "Water," used by Christ, means "Spirit," is very weak, and evidences a desire to dodge the real issue. The teaching of John the Baptist and the submission of Christ thereunto, the commandment of Christ to the apostles, when he sent them out to "teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," and the fact that they carried out his instructions to the letter, preaching the gospel of repentance for the remission of sins, and also teaching the necessity of their being baptized with the Holy Ghost, (Acts 2:38, Acts 19:1, 6 also Acts 10 and 11, and many other evidences, is proof to all who are not blinded by narrow human creeds that both the baptism of water, by one authorized of God, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost by Jesus Christ are essential to our acceptance with God as his children.

Paul says, Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify, and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, etc.," (Eph. 5:26.) The same apostle says, "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil concience, and our bodies washed with pure (Heb. 10:22.) water"

Reader, Paul never intended to convey the idea that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was all that was necessary for us to comply with. In doing so he would deny the testimony of Christ, the apostles, and his own life teaching and practice. There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the word and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one. ( John 5:7, 8.) Reader, you cannot reject either of these and find acceptance with God as his child. For Christ has said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3.)

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (Rev. 22:14.)

. CORRESPONDENCE.

Kansas City, Kan., June 15.

Editor Ensign:—Yesterday was Children's Day at our little Chelsea, and we had a delightfully well rendered program of just one hour and a half. Had a good audience too, despite the fact that our nearest neighbor (the Congregationalist) either by accident or otherwise held their exercises at the same hour. Thinking that some of the Ensign readers might feel interested in our progress, might thus be reminded of pleasant meetings and hours spent within these walls wherein was presented to us last evening a mose delightful service of song and literary

We are admonished not to think too highly of ourselves; however, feeling that it is always justice to give merit to whom merit is due. Never since its occupancy by the Saints has the house been so nearly in perfect order as upon this ocassion. We cannot look upon a group of such children without the thought crowding our minds—herein lies the future of every home. church state and nation. And long years hence the whole nation may be made to rejoice over the teaching of these days and hours. Forty years from now will tell more plainly than now can be imagined or described how well we of today did our whole duty towards prechildren for the later and riper years, and paring these its responsibilities.

Methinks in that great day when we come together with the saints at the river when the heavenly Father comes to gather in his golden sheaves and garner them comes to gamer in his goneen sneaves and gamer them for eternity, when he comes to make up his most precious jewels the Sunday school workers will be in the midst of those to receive the welcome plaudit "well done thou good and faithful servant" etc.

And here, beloved teachers, is the final reward found the end of the race. We feel that our children here at the end of the race. We feel that our children here in Chelsea are most perfectly blessed in their preparation

With my experience of living for forty years outside of any church and forty years in another church, and a little over two years in this church, I can assure all such children that this one fact amounts to much indeed and possibly more than all the rest. Hence ye little ones of the Saints behold your advantages, use, enjoy, and appreciate them to their fullest and completest extent and your salvation and safety will be the final result.

GLEANINGS.

Ida M. Brown, Sweetwater, Okla.—We are very busy at present with our crops, but in a few, weeks we could arrange for one or two elders. I am anxious to let the people here know something of the principles of our people here know something of the principles of our doctrine. Can secure the school house any time. Just now the Holiness people are holding prayermeetings there every Sunday afternoon. I would also like my little daughter blessed. Have not heard a sermon since Bro. Aylor blessed by little son, who two months later enterthing the statement of the blessed. Aylor plessed by little son, who two houlds later datered the kingdom at Oklahoma City. I am wondering if there are any Saints in this or adjoining counties (Roger, Mills). Hope an Elder will come this way soon and give us some sermons.

Marion H. Bennett, Woodburn, Ind.—There are no Latter Day Saints in this vicinity except our family. There were a few here, but they have all gone searching for a more suitable location, presumably for church privileges. Two elders were here not long ago and they gave us some interesting sermons, in which some of the people were interested, but others went just for some place to go. Some people will not hear because the gospel truths cut too deep. If all had more confidence and faith in God and looked to Him for guidance and protection this would he a better world to live in. and protection this would be a better world to live in.
I wish some one would let me know if there is a branch in Rusk county, Wis., and if not, the nearest branch

Mrs. J. S. Stauts, Santa Ans, Calif., June 4.—It seems that I could hardly get along without the Ensign. When I am thinking over some subject just as sure as I open up the Ensign I will find an article on that very subject, so it looks like the hand of God was in the work. I wish to thank the faculty, teachers, students and all of Graceland College who showed such kindness to my sick boy Thomas and his sister. It was a great disappointment for them to have to come home before the term was out; but O, the true brotherly and slaterly love that was shown them. I prayed that our children might be able to go to Graceland, and my prayer was answered. When I hear my daughters talk of Graceland and of what those noble boys and girls are doing it shows me that God's hand is over Graceland. God's hand is over Graceland.

Her children are all married and members of the Church, and were all present at the funeral service. Sr. Lawn was a faithful, devoted saint; and it was said of her by her neighbors who lived by her for thirty years, that they never heard her speak ill of any one, nor any one speak ill of her. What a beautiful record to meet on the other side.

She has borne many testimonies to the truth of this latter day work. Her life was in harmony with her testimony, and her reward in the celestial kingdom of testimony, and her reward in the celestial kingdom of God is assured. This was revealed to the writer at a reunion camp meetings one time, after she had borne testi-mony. The funeral services were held in the M. E. #### THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.

Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.—I Timothy 4:16.

Doctrine is defined as "that which is taught or set forth for acceptance or belief." The doctrine of Christ includes all that he taught and which he sent his servants out to teach to the people for their acceptance and obedience.

The Means of Salvation to all People.

As the chief Exponent of the gospel—which is but another name for the doctrine of Christ— Jesus came as the Light of the whole world. The angel which promised his coming declared that the good news should be to all people. The doctrine which he taught Jesus held was given of his Father and it was given as being assential to be believed and obeyed, and he at the same time warned men against receiving any other doctrine as the means of salvation. Paul urges Timothy to continue in the doctrine because in so doing he would both save himself and those that heard him. John wrote:

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed.—2 John 9.

To be without God and Christ is to be without life or salvation, and in order to have God in our lives it is absolutely essential to abide in the dectrine of Christ. Outside of that doctrine, or outside of an obedience to it there can be no salvation.

The Scriptures also emphasize the universal application of that doctrine, showing that it is the same to all men in every land and in every age. Jesus said it was to be preached to "every creature," "all nations," and Peter in giving promise of the blessings following those who receive it said "the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Nowhere has the Lord made any exceptions to the necessity of men receiving his teaching but the universal adaptation and unchangeability of the gospel are clearly set forth.

The Doctrine of Christ a Unit.

The teachings of Christ are all included in that system of doctrine known as the gospel and which is complete and perfect within itself. Every part is an essential part, having its proper relation-ship to every other part, in a similar manner as every part in the mechanism of a clock is essential and hear & proper relationship to every other part. Any occasion or change of any part of the clock by which the relationship of the parts is changed will destroy the utility of the mechanism for the purpose designed in its creation. The adjustment of the several parts to the whole of the doctrine of Christ is so perfect that no part can be rejected and yet the divine purpose in giving that doctrine be accomplished. omit some of the vital principles of mathematics in the solution of a problem and expect to get the result as to omit some of the vital parts of the doctrine of Christ and then expect to attain the salvation for which that doctrine was given as the only means of attaining. As well omit some of the sections of the United States Constitution and dispense with some of the officers provided for therein and expect the affairs of government to run smoothly after the original pattern as to discard some portions of the teachings of the gospel and dispense with some of its officers and expect the Church to carry out the divine purpose.

The gospel is a unit, indivisable, unchangeable, indispensible. Paul says there is "one faith," as well as one Lord. Jesus could not have taught more than one system of truth, nor could he have included conflicting teachings as are found in the religious world today in that system as to do so would have been to defeat the very purpose for which he came to the world. He presents his teachings under the figure of a rock, saying "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." (Matt.7:-24.) The contrast with the teachings of others is also made, which teachings are represented by the sand which is shifting and uncertain being susceptable to other influences such as wind and wave. The rock gives the impression of fixedness, and endurance and fittingly represents such qualities of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

No Effectual Substitute Possible.

The doctrine of Christ being perfect and complete within itself, having been formulated by the infinite mind of God as the effectual means of salvation for man, needs no substitute from God, and can have none from man. Any attempt upon the part of man to supply a different system purporting to effect the salvation of man, even though that system embody much of the truth which Jesus taught in his gospel, must utterly fail in the attempt. That men have sought to substitute their own teachings for the doctrine of Christ is a fact of history and is in evidence at the present time. Jesus warned his disciples against the leaven of the Pharisees which he said was their doctrine. Men arose in the Church which taught doctrines out of harmony with the true gospel, and Paul said to the Galatians, "I marvel that we are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ." No substitute of the gospel can take its place for the gospel is made effectual because of the fact that God is the Author of it and that it was given through Jesus Christ his Son who sealed it with his own blood, and both stand back of it to fulfill every promise made in it both as pertaining to this world and to the world beyond. Nothing is promised outside the gospel and neither God nor Christ guarantee any promise of men based upon substitute teaching.

Systems of doctrine originating in the minds of men though containing much of the truth of God may sometimes pass as the gospel in this life, like the counterfeit bill which may be received by innocent parties but which when presented to the bank of the government will not be honored nor paid. The doctrines of men may satisfy some in this life, but when those who have followed them demand of God the fulfillment of the promise of salvation their demand will not be honored, because the conditions upon which God made the promise have not been complied with. doctrines of men are formed in close imitation of the system given by Christ and most generally have the name of Christ stamped upon them, being called "Christians" and received by many for what they purport to be. Paul reproved the saints at Colosse for remaining subject to ordinances which were "after the commandments and doctrines of men, which things have indeed a show of wisdom in all worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body." So the fact that a doctrine may appear good, having a show of wisdom, and being taught in humility and with-out apparent selfish motive, does not make it divine and effectual as the means of salvation, but the more nearly it imitates the true doctrine the more deceptive is becomes and the more disappointing will be the ultimate result.

Jesus gave no credit to the doctrines of men but discarded them as worthless for the purpose for which he gave his doctrine, and urged a full reliance upon the things which he taught and upon them alone. He required of his servants that they teach "all things whatsoever I have commanded you," showing that no part of his teaching was to be omitted, all being essential to the welfare of the children of God.

Teaching Doctrine Today.

Many pastors and most evangelists of the Christian churches today avoid the teaching of doctrine because it is held to be the cause of division between the many churches, and in order to develop a closer unity it is necessary to avoid it. As already seen the doctrine of Christ embodies all his teaching, but sometimes it is applied to the basic principles of the gospel. The New Standard Dictionary says: "Doctrine primarily signifies that which is taught, principle, the fundamental basis on which the teaching rests." This agrees with the statement of Paul in Hebrews 6:1, 2, in speaking of the "principles of the dectrine of Christ," and which principles he names as repentance, faith, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrestion of the dead, and eternal judgment. These are the basic principles upon which the teaching of Christ was based, and without which the teaching would be valueless, yet some of these principles which professing Christians and ministers today reject as the cause of a division but which the Lord gave as the means to unity. The moral precepts, the ethical teachings of the gospel will accomplish little toward the work of salvation without the basic principles upon which those teachings rest.

The Scriptures should be our guide in determining the truth and in the manner of obedience. "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

Having been appointed to pastoral work in the City of Saint Joseph, Missouri, the editor and his family have removed to that city. He will however continue the work as editor of the Ensign, caring for the editorial department and the articie and sermon department. Other matters must of necessity be under the charge of those in the office and hence letters for publication, notices, announcements, reports, etc., should be sent to the Ensign Publishing house or to Bro .W. H. Deam manager. Articles and sermons, and all personal matters should be sent to the editor at 720 So. 17th St., St. Joseph, Mo., though if they are sent to him at the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Mo., they will be forwarded. Matters of business should not be sent to the editor.

We take occasion here to again invite the brethren of the ministry and others to liberally support the periodicals of the Church with their literary contributions. A little effort, and especially repeated efforts, upon the part of many who think they cannot write will bring results which may be surprising to the writers and helpful to the readers. A variety of authors gives a variety of thought thus reaching the varied necessities of the readers. The inspired thought preached to a few with profit when put into print becomes profitable to thousands and is well worthy of the effort necessary to write it.

The Bible is like a wide and beautiful landscape seen afar off, dim and confused; but a good telescope will bring it near, and spread out all its rocks and trees and flowers and verdant fields and winding rivers at one's very feet. That telescope is the Spirit's teaching.—Chalmers.

We held our first real mission meeting last night in a suburban part of the city at the humble though very clean and pleasant home of Bfo. and R. L. Hays formerly of southeastern Kansas. The room was neatly arranged and seated and was filled to overflow with anxious listeners, some Saints who traveled long distances to be there. CORRESPONDENCE CORRESPONDENCE IN columns the General Conference has come and passed. It was a great privilege to me to be able to attend it in view of my long absence from the headquarters of the church. My previous General Conference was that of 1902 -twelve years ago. Those twelve years, though away from my country and people, were the happiest of my life. Naturally I had no wish to leave Australia, but I had some desire to return here. All the pleasure was in the arrival. There was none in the departure. Some of my very best friends are in Australia. That's why I intend to return there some time.

I intend to return there some time.

Returning to America as I did the 15th of May, 1913,

I had the most of last year in this country. The time was spent chiefly in my home district, Southern Indiana.
While there I visited relatives and old friends, and school mates, and preached at the places (some of them) visited in my early ministry, and a number of others. I was not, however, able to respond to all the calls that came but did the best I could. I heard that some were offended because I did not call.. For this I am sorry but I did all that was posible under the circumstances and in the time. I gave preferences to those places where meetings could be held to the best advantage and that could ings could be held to the best advantage and that could be reached at the least expense. In spite, however, of my efforts to practice economy my expenses exceeded my receipts. I missed some of my relatives that I intended to visit, and failed to reach some points where I desired to preach. Personally I wanted another year of ministerial labor in Indiana, but my wife had been accustomed, all her life, to a warmer climate, and in her interests, I asked the Quorum of Twelve for a charge And healths, both of us desired a head warmer. In her interests, I asked the quotum of Iverse in a change. And besides, both of us desired a broad range during our stay in America for the sake of increased observation and experience. During the General Conferobservation and experience. During the General Conter-ence I had an impression that I would be sent west. Oregon however, was not on my mind but California was, Since, however, the former is my appointment we are both satisfied. We may visit the latter state too, before we cross the sea again.

After the General Conference we paid short visits to Lamoni and St. Joseph. At both places I was kept busy in a ministerial way and both of us had a pleasant time. So far Sr. Barmore has appreciated America very much and has not been home sick in the least. I must not omit to mention that while in Lamoni I gave my illustrated lecture on Australia in the Saint's Church. The night however, was stormy and the expected crowd was not there. Subsequently Bro. Daniel Anderson and the other managers of the Colineum requested me to repeat the lecture there. I did so with better results. I was grateful for this privilege as such and for its returns as well. It was the first time I had received financial assistance at the headquarters of the church. I include in this attement the lecture at the church also. Both were, in some measure, hindered by inclement weather. On the 21st of May I paid a visit to the Independence Sanitarium where I was a patient nistecten days. I underwent an operation for hernia. I stood the ordeal remark-bly well and am now recuperating from the after effects.

went an operation for hernia. I stood the ordeal remark-bly well and am now recuperating from the after effects. My side is still sore but I shall soon be able to renew my usual exertions. I was well pleased with the Sanitarium as an institution. It fulfills all my expectations. Many of the patients are non-members. In fact I was pleased with the non-sectarian spirit which permeates the institution. This is due to two causes: One is that people generally understand us better than formerly; the other is that we are getting bronder as we grow older. grow older.

We expect to arrive in Portland, Oregon, the middle of this month.

In gospel bonds, A. C. Barmore

Marion, Ill., July 7. Editor Ensign:-Bro. Shields has been with us and held some good meetings. This is a new field and the people never heard the gospel as presented by him. Some seem to be interested and I give them my paper to read. It is a joy to be able to heart the gospel preached, as the only times when we get to attend preaching services is when one of the Elders comes along. I could hardly get along without the Ensign. My little granddaughter was baptized while Bro. Shields was here. I want to be able to bring our children up right. Sometimes I think I do so little, and again I think that if I can just lead my own family in the straight and narrow way I will have won a great victory. To that end I ask the prayers of all of God's people.

Editor Ensign:-I drop a few lines to the many readers of the Ensign from this part of the Lord's vineyard. Bro. Robert McClain, Bro. J. A. Roberts and the writer met at Bro. John Adair's homestead near the Farmington Branch on the 5th of this month. We were received by these noble Saints of God and an enjoyable time ensued. The next day, the 6th, conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee District convened at Farmington Branch at 10:45 with a very good attendance. The good Spirit prevailed with us and all went well to the development of the work. The preaching was by Robt. McClain, J. A. Roberts and the writer.

On the Lord's day quite a number congregated at the church with well filled baskets and a basket dinner enjoyed. The Saints participated in sacrament services renewing their covenants with the Lord and received measure of the Spiritual bread of life. ference is now another record on the fair pages of his-tory and the Lord's servants wending their way to other parts spreading the gospel and endeavoring to be loyal to that entrusted to our care.

Dear Ensign:—I am happily associated with Bro. A.

M. Baker of Independence, Mo., for this conference year, who has wide experience in mission work. The first series of meetings we held at Beardstown, Ill., in which we enjoyed good liberty in the preaching of the word. A lady from Chicago who was visiting at Beardstown, attended almost all of our services and after reading Bro. Daniel Magregor's "Marvelous Work and a Wonder," was baptized into the fold. She said she had tried all the sections of the truth and the sectarian churches but could not find the truth, and because she believed in the spiritual manifestations she was criticized by the popular churches.

After coming into the church she went back to Chicago and returned to the church to which she belonged prior to accepting the truth. She said she "did not find the Spirit there" and returned to Beardstown again.

From Beardstown we went to Springfield, The Capital

From Beardstown we went to Springfield, The Capital City and there opened up on the streets and the bombshells of truth fell thick and fast among those who stopped to hear. We discussed the gospel plan in all the plainness, after which we always made the distinction between the true church and that of the dominant Church of Utah which apparently was news to many. We also had several tilts with the Utah elders, who are operating with much zeal in that city. Bro. Baker and the writer called upon the said elder one afternoon to discuss "authority." Of course we didn't convert them but I feel stronger in the faith since said discussion. We were also fortunate in getting an article in two of the city papers setting forth the truth in regards to the true succession of church and Presidency, using the court decisions, etc., as proof, bringing out the differences as

There are some sixteen Saints residing at Springfield, There are some sixteen Saints residing at Springfield, whom I believe are in earnest to push the work. I assisted in reorganizing their Sunday school. Bro. Baker assisted in organizing a ladies' aid society of some eight ladies who are determined to offer aid wherever they can, Sr. Amy Bolt being president. The work looks promising in that part of the vineyard and we expect to make a special effort in the near future at that place.

We came to Taylorville, Ill., irom Springfield and on June 20 we set up the tent and commenced operatons. On the whole we have enjoyed good crowds, good attention and good liberty in the presentation of the truth. The local choir has rendered valuable aid in the song service at our meetings. Dear Ensign:—Bro. I. M. Smith closed a series of meetings here about two weeks ago. While here he gave a lot of instruction and advice to the Saints. On Sunday he preached especially to the little ones which applied to all, only he made it easy for them to understand it. All enjoyed it, especially the children.

The Sunday school and Religio are moving along nicely and the work of our Masfer is slowly building up at this place, and we are thankful to be numbered with the Saints, and hope that we can do something to help in the cause of our loving Savior. There has been many calamities in this part of the country. Surely the Scriptures are being fulfilled, for perilous times are here and men's hearts are failing them for fear. So let us as men's hearts are failing them for fear. So let us as true Latter Day Saints be living the gospel, praying and trying to walk upright and just, so that we may be prepared to meet the things that are coming on us.

That we may hold out faithful unto the end, and that we may not shirk any duty that is encumbered upon us.

We are weak and need strength.

It does my soul good to read the good letters and mons from others bearing testimony of this glorious work. May it go onward and upward until all is accomplished that was intended by our heavenly Father. Will close wishing the Ensign much success.

Editor Ensign:—The writer is a stranger in a strange land, so to speak, in this part of the country, but we find the conditions here quite like that of other parts of the country where we have labored, so we are not altogether unacquainted with the needs of the people, and we therefore hope to be able to render service that result in the eternal good and uplift of our fellows. V our success will be remains yet to be seen but it is at least gratifying to know that the truth must triumph and that the measure of our success in life is determined but the measure of our success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the measure of the success in life is determined but the success in by the measure of truth we appropriate to ourselves as by the measure of truth we appropriate to ourselves as a working stock, or reserve fund.

Tradition, prejudice, intolerance, and envy is the stock in trade of those who generally oppose our work, and the part of wisdom on our part is not to retaliate and by so doing lower ourselves to the same level, but it is by so doing lower ourselves to the same level, but it is to employ such means as shall be required to lift our fellows out of the mental state in which we find them by gently, and meekly, and in the spirit of love, imparting unto them the sincere truth that will enable them to see that our claims do not rest in words alone but in actual life.

We can never cure the maladies of life by simply railing at the short comings of others. It requires a kind, meek, and gentle service to convince the erring and at the same time teach him the way of his errors, and at the same time teach him the way of life. So there is nothing short of divine love that can fit us for effectual work in the church of Christ. When we are able to love humanity in spite of their short-comings we are beginning to approach the gateway of Christlike service.

Hopefully, J. E. Vanderwood.

Elitors Fusign:—Your weekly visits have been a great comfort to me in the last few months, more than usual on account of my sickness. I have been sick a little over five months. Three months and two days in the Sanitarium at Independence, Mo. I was five months and a little over in the Sanitarium last year and came out feeling good, but I went out into the field and preached dred and ten sermons, overtaxing my strength and bringing the disease back on me. I left the Sanitarium July 3rd, and came home feeling the best kind. The condition I was in when I went there and the condition I am now in is miraculous. I am eating victuals and have been for weeks and they agree with me the best kind.

best kind.

Some few have a wrong idea in regard to the Sanitarium as though it was run by outsiders. The physician and business manager hold the priesthood in our church. Dr. Harrington finished his medical education in Germany under the highest of authority. He is a great Diagnostician, and is very thorough in his work.

mostician, and is very thorough in his work.

The head nurse is not a member of our church, but all the rest but one are; and the nurses are God-fearing, God-loving workers. The e'ders administer to you when needed. They have chapel service every morning, and prayer meeting every Sunday afternoon. Last Sunday we had a pentecost. The Spirit spoke to the Saints in general. Dr. Harrington, and Bro. Weston and the writer received words of cheer and comfort. It told Dr. Harrington he was raised up for that institution, and promises in regard to his future work.

Dr. Green is a member of the church and a good surgeon, so if you want members of the church you can have them in any line and they are qualified. Dr. Harrington is a son of Elder George Harrington, President of the Independence Stake.

of the Independence Stake.

The Saints in Independence are so good to visit the afflicted ones in the Sanitarium. The elders all come to the Sanitarium when called upon, but Bro.Garrett is one of the regular attendants to administer to the sick. I was blessed in all of my administrations. On Sunday I received a special manifestation when Bro. Foss and Bro. Abner Lloyd administered to me. I thank all the dear Saints who administered to me. I thank all the dear Saints who brougth me flowers and visited me while in the Sanitarium.

If I continue to improve as I have in the last three If I continue to improve as I have in the last three weeks it won't be long before I can preach again. I am going to try and exercise a little more wisdom than I did before, and not overtax my body. I owe my life to the good physicians, nurses, and God's power, and having a Latter Day Saint Sanitarium to go to.

There is a spirit of praise and thankfulness with me all the time. If I wake up in the night that feeling is there.

My sickness has been a blessing to me. It has brought me nearer to God than I have ever been. May the Lord bless the church in its entirety.

Bayfield, Colo., July 8. Dear Ensign:—Bro. Higdon and I began meetings in the Union Church of this place on June 4th and have been holding each evening since that time. Our attendance has increase from the first, and last night the church was full, some sitting on the restrum and some standing outside who staved all through the service. Twice we have set the time to leave, but the people urged us to stay so we left it to a vote and both times they decided by a unanimous vote for us to stay. So we have decided On June 25th the Free Methodists commenced a camp meeting and closed July 5th. We attended some of their meetings and intended to be listeners and no more, but they made repeated attacks on us, so one evening after they closed their meetings, one of their ministers was in-structing (?) a man who had attended our meetings that we were teaching a delusion, and as this same minister had called on a lady who had attended our services and told her that we were leading her to hell, we thought it time ner that we were leading her to nell, we thought it time to ask him for some of his proof. As he could not give the proof satisfactorily to some of his associate ministers, they tried to help him out and I soon had five or six to take care of. I tried to get them to divide the time with me but they would not, so I had to take what time I could get. When they saw their defeat they cried "Put him out! The devil is in the tent!" and some prayed very loudly and others shouted and some sang, but the discussion went on. One man shouted until he fell exhausted or under the power as they call it. He fell backward across the plank seats and his head happened to strike between two planks and he was not seriously hurt. He continued to cry at the ton of his voice: "Devils! Demons!" and the like still under the power some half an hour afterwards when

One lady who had been stretched out in the sawdust that was around the altar came to and got on her hands and knees and looking toward us screamed some of the most unearthly yells I ever heard. I tried to get them to meet us before the public and prove some of the statements they have made, but they said they had a right to preach against us if they pleased, but would allow us no reply. We attended on the last night of their meeting and they had three women and one man, the same that I spoke of before, under the power. The man was crying, "Devils! Demons!" and such stuff again. The women would throw their hands up and kick up their feet and it took someone to look after each of them to keep their clothing in proper place. One woman barked like a dog and someone yelled like a coyote. Indeed, this was unknown tongues of a different kind than I read of in was unknown tongues of a director that than I read of in the Word of God; the interpretation was not given, how-ever. Some were singing, some praying, others shouting and others calling for joiners. We heard so much about hell fire that we could almost smell the brimstone. They said if people would not get religion any other way it was right to scare them into it.

In conversation with one of their ministers yesterday in regard to the heathen, whom he thought would be saved through ignorance, he admitted that we would all be better off if we were all heathen and had never heard the gospel. I replied that then we had better close our mouths, burn God's Word and never mention the gospel to our children, so that the future generations would all be saved. This is surely fanaticism gone to seed. A debate is germinating with the Church of God people but nothing certain

We are enjoying the work but find it a trial to leave home and loved ones for so long a time. I think we make a mistake in having so many of our men traveling from place to place instead of locating men in places until they have time to build up and develop the work. There is little good done in bringing people into the church and then leaving them without a shepherd to establish them.

We would be glad to hear from any of the Saints in Western Colorado but will not promise just what we can do for you, as we have work enough ahead now to keep us busy until about November or December. However, we would be glad to know your needs. With a prayer for the success of the work. Sincerely, J. D. Curtis. Falcon, Colo.

GLEANINGS.

Otto Fetting, Port Huron, Mich., July 7.—The work in Eastern Michigan is on the move, 40 having been baptized in the district in the last 30 days. Others coming. We want to make this a banner year. God's Spirit is working with the people.

Mrs. Lizzie Eulitt, St. Paul, Ind.—We do not feel that e could do without the Ensign, as we are the only Saints we come as without the dissipling, as we are me only samus here that we know of, and it would be lonely without the paper. We have not heard any preaching since Bro. Jacob Halb was here a year ago last March, and we enjoy his visits so much. We are especially lonesome since Bro. John Eulitt and wife died last March. We have since Bro. John Eultt and wife died last March. We have their twelve year old son with us, and I wish we were where we could send him to Sunday school. We want to do something on the church debt this year. Last year we had very poor crops. We think it our duty to pay tithing. Saints, pray for us as we are weak in body.

D. J. Simpson, Witcher, Okla.—I wish to let the Saints of this district know that there is one more family added to this district, and I would be glad if there are any Saints near if they would make us a visit. I was baptized June 25, 1913, at Seneca, and in a short time my companion followed me, and we went to work for the Lord, taking up the Sunday school work, I acting as superintendent and she as assistant. We had prayer meetings and enjoyed the association of the Saints, but here we are deprived of all those privilegs; still I am trying to hold high the banner of truth, and live so that I here we are deprived of all those privilegs; still I am trying to hold high the banner of truth, and live so that I may be a living testimony to the world for the cause, and I am reminded of the words in that good old hymn, "Yet how rich is my condition, God and Christ are still my own." This is eleven miles north of Oklahoma City, the first station north of the city.

A. N. Hazelton, Lamoni, Iowa, June 11.—I consider it (the Ensign) very interesting. We have taken the paper only since last conference time. There certainly should be none more interested in giving the latter day work at thorough and honest investigation, as I was born and raised right here in Lamoni; and though I have been very neglectful of giving the work a proper investigation, for which I am greatly to blame, as I was prejudiced and would not investigate except very superficially, because I did not like the ways of some of the leading members in politics, etc., which I can now see was very wrong, as we all have our human failings.

Ruby Motti, Watkins, Mont., July 1.—I am living on a homestead 45 miles from a railroad, and there are on a nomestead 45 miles from a railroad, and there are no Saints nearer than one hudred miles that I know of. If there should be any Saints in or near Terry, Glendine, of Watkins I would be glad to know where they live. When we sell our little home at Navada, Mo., we will pay our tithing. My husband is not a member of the church. It is so lonely here and sometimes I feel that church. It is so lonely here and sometimes I feel that I cannot bear it any longer, but I have had the priviledge of explaining the Angel's message to a number who never knew anything of the Latter Day Saints before, and classed us all with the Mormons. I have four copies of the Voice of Warning loaned out. I ask for the prayers of the Saints.

F. A. Rowe, Louisville, Ky., July 6.—Trying to get the isolated Saints to take the "Silent Preacher." May God bless the Ensign, and may we do our part to bless it. The adage: Some white people were expressing their sympathy and sorrow for the poor old Indian who had just been burned out. An old Indian stood by and said, "How much you sorry. I sorry about $5.00.

W. A. Pearson, Conway, Ark., July 6.-I am isolated and deprived of the privilege of hearing any of our Elders preach, and I enjoy reading the good sermons the Ensign brings to me. If there was not so much prejudice here against our people I would make an effort to get some of the Elders here to preach, but our Elders are treated so shamefully here that it seems like casting pearls before swine.

Running like a Gulf Stream through the sea comes the affirmation that God has manifested Himself to man, and the best men have affirmed it most persistently. Wherever this affirmation has made its way, the icebergs of skepticism have disappeared, the temperature of virtue has risen, and the sweet fruits of charity have ripened. If the belief be false, then a lie has blessed the world, and the soul is so organized that it reaches its highest state of development in an atmosphere of deception; for it is a fact that man is purest and woman most virtuous where belief in God's manifestations is most intense and real.

O. P. Gifford.

THE ORGANIC FORM OF THE CHURCH.

All life operates through organic forms. There can be no manifestation of life in this material world without organic form. The church is the organic body through which God works for the perfecting of character and the salvation of men: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."—Acts 2:47.

Associated with this is the thought that every organic form that God has created is perfectly adapted to perform the work that it was originally intended to do. Every part of every organic form is perfectly adapted to the work that it was originally intended to perform. The foot of the camel is perfectly constructed for its work of treading the desert sands. The wings of the eagle are perfectly adapted to their work of beating the upper air. The fins of the fish are exactly in accord with the needs of the fish as it moves in the channels of the great deep. Every creature is organized according to its wants and needs. Otherwise existence would not be possible.

The human form when in a normal condition cannot be improved upon in any particular by the skill of man. To remove a single organ would be to impair, perhaps destroy. To add some part not included in the original plan of anatomy would be to produce a deformity.

In the church, the pastor should, not say says that the church is the body of Christ: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

He also says: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." Also: "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him."

He goes on to say that the eye can not say to hand: "I have no need of thee," nor can the head say to the feet: "I have no need of thee."

In the church, the pastor should notz say, "We have no need of the apostles and the prophet." Yet we have heard pastors make that declaration in apparent sincerity. Evidently forgetting that God has set the members in the church as it-pleased him.

For when Jésus organized his church, in full accord with and in constant communication with God the Father, he organized it after a certain plan. Some people argue that Christ never built up the church. But he himself said: "Upon this rock I will build my church."—Matt. 16:18.

He kept his promise. He did build his church. And to assume that he proceeded in a haphazzard manner is to discredit divine wisdom. He followed a carefully considered and foreordained plan upon which the divine architects were fully determined and agreed. Human presumption could go no further than to attempt to altar or improve that plan.

When Jesus built his church he set in it certain officers, including apostles, prophets, seventies, bishops, evangelists, elders, pastors, priests, teachers, and deacons. The reader is asked to consider carefully the following passages of scripture:

"And God hath set some in the church, first, apostles, secondarily, prophets, thirdly, teachers, after that miracles, then the gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tengues."—1 Cor. 12:28.

"After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two."—Luke "And when they had ordained them elders in every church."—Acts 14:23.

"Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers."—Acts 13:1.

"Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the Saints in Christ Jesus which are at Phillippi, with the bishops and deacons."—Phil. 1:1.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some. Dastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto the perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Eph. 4:11, 17.

The passage last quoted is especially fruitful of thought. From it we learn that Jesus set these apostles, prophets, and other officers, in the Church for certain purposes. They were for the work of the ministry—surely the work of the ministry still needs to be done. They were for the perfecting of the saints—surely the saints still need perfecting. They were to keep the people from being tossed about by every wind of doctrine—that work still needs to be attended to. They were to continue their ministry until we all come in the unity of the faith and attain to the stature of men in Christ—we have not yet reached that stage of development, is attested by the lack of unity among so-called Christians.

Thus Jesus set these officers and members in place, "joining" and "compacting," that the body might increase and grow, and they were to continue there. The Apostles understood this, and they kept these offices filled by direction of God. Even in the quorum of twelve apostles, when a vacancy occurred it was filled, and that was the rule from time to time, for these were perpetual offices in the church. (See Acts 1:23-26; Acts 18:2; Acts 14:14; Gal. 1:18, 19; 1 Thess. 1:1; 2:5, 6.)

The church had a certain organic form through which to express life, growth, activity, power.

This was a divinely appointed form. In the organization of the church Jesus and the Father brought to bear upon their work the same divine wisdom that designed the form of man, and all other organic forms, so perfectly adapted to perform certain acts.

The church, as they designed it, was perfectly adapted to perform the work which it was originally intended to do.

Consequently in these latter days, when God moved upon Joseph Smith the Prophet to restore his church, he directed that it should be organized after the original plan. When Joseph Smith began his work of organization, April 6, 1830, he proceeded upon that plan; and though he started with only six members, and there was little to indicate that in his poverty and with his limited influence, he would ever have more, God worked with him, drawing the hearts of men toward the great work that had been projected.

And so men came, as they were led, from here and there, and in due time were called and ordained, as of old, until the church was fully organized according to the New Testament plan.

It seems strange that other church builders had never thought to organize after the original pattern. But they had failed to do so. There were fragmentary organiations, some with elders, and some with deacons, or pastors, or evangelists; but none like the original, until this church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints stood forth in the nineteenth century, unique, unlike any other spiritual organization on the earth, yet exactly like the old New Testament Church, in which God had "set these members as it pleased him."

This is the manner of church to which we invite your attention and allegiance.

Through this organic form, God, true to himself, works for the perfecting of the Saints, and for the salvation of men, and to it he adds daily such as shall be saved.

HOW FAR DOES THE PRIEST'S DUTY EXTEND IN AN OFFICIAL CAPACITY, WHEN THE PRESIDING ELDER IS PRESENT?

By Elder W. A. Sinclair, M. D.

I take up this subject by request, and not from choice, for I consider the subject one of a nature that might cause considerable criticism, and that too, of an unjust nature because of the limited amount of research done by the majority of our people; nevertheness, I am always ready to voice an opinion that has been formed by an array of facts gleaned from the written word, and not from the private interpretation of any individual or class of individuals.

Believing that facts should be presented on all subjects that our knowledge may be enlarged, and our minds clear, so that we may work harmoniously, and for the best good of all, the following is submitted.

There have been many opinions set forth on the latitude and restrictions, that are enlarged, or curtailed, relative to the priest's office, under the presence or absence of the presiding officer; some of these have a fair amount of facts to substantiate the claim made, while others are but the opinions of men, regardless of fact, and unsupported in almost every particular.

The law seems to be very plain on the major portion of the duties of both officers; but there are some points which it seems are left open for discussion, and in order to solve properly and clearly, may require the interpretation by spiritual intervention.

In the Doctrine and Covenants, Section seventeen, paragraph eight; latter part, when speaking of the elder, it states: "And to take the lead of all meetings." This of course, seems very plain, and coupling it with paragraph nine, it adds strength thereto; if such a thing is possible. "The elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God."

This makes it imperative that the elders preside over meetings; and as we analyize the thought presented, it seems to point more particularly to those meetings where the saints take part as a whole, such as the prayer meeting, sacrament meetings, meetings for instruction, etc.

Now if a close analysis places the interpretation thus; that an elder must (if possible) conduct the prayer meetings, it also presupposes a cause for such an arrangement, and it is our duty to fathom if possible the underlying cause for such a demand.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants section one hundred and four, paragraphs seven and eight: "The high priest and elder are to administer in the spiritual things, agreeably to the covenants and commandments of the church; and they have a right to officiate in all these offices of the chuhch when there are no higher authorities present. The second priesthood is called the priesthood of Aaron, because it was conferred upon Aaron and his seed, throughout all their generations. Why it is called the lesser priesthood is because it is an appendage to the greater, or the Mélchisedec priesthood, and has power in administering outward ordinances."

Now we begin to see a light perculating through the gloom of our minds; The prayer service is the spiritual service wherein spiritual manifestations are presented, and it becomes necessary for one of the Melchisedec priesthood to preside, in order to direct the workings of the spiritual evidences as they are presented. For while he is specifically mentioned as the one to lead; the gifts are distributed to the membership composing the assembly, and as Paul has very plainly outlined it in 1 Corinthians 12:7-11; for our instruction, we will read what he has to say:

"But the manifestations of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

And also in 1 Corinthians 14:26: "How is it then, brethren? When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation,"

These gifts being distributed throughout the congregation, it becomes necessary to have one who can discern from which source they come, because, John's admonition to us in his first epistle, fourth chapter, first verse reads: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, bue try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."

And the Doctrine and Covenants, section 120, paragraphs 4-7, sets forth the order of things beyond the shadow of a doubt: "Wherefore, beware, lest ye are deceived, and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given; for verily I say unto you, They are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments, and him that seeketh so to do, that all may be benefited, that seeketh or that asketh of me, that asketh and not for a sign that he may consume it upon his lusts."

"And again, verily I say unto you, I would that ye should always remember, and always retain in your minds what those gifts are, that are given unto the church, for all have not every gift given unto them; for there are many gifts, and to every man is given a gift by the Spirit of God: to some it is given one, and to some another, thall may be profited thereby; to some it is by the Holy Ghost to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was crucified for the sins of the world; to others it is given to believe on their words, that they also might have eternal life, if they continue faithful."

"And again, to some it is given by the Holy Ghost to know the differences of administration, as it will be pleasing unto the same Lord, according as the Lord will, suiting his mercies according to the conditions of the children of men. And again, it is given by the Holy Ghost to some to know the diversities of operation, whether it be of God, that the manifestation of the Spirit may be given to every man to profit withal."

'And again, verily I say unto you, To some it is given, by the Spirit of God, the word of wisdom; to another it is given the word of knowledge, that all may be taught to be wise and to have knowledge. And again, to some it is given to have faith to be healed, and to others it is given to have faith to heal. And again, to some it is given the working of miracles and to others it is given to prophesy, and to others the discerning of spirits. And again, it is given to some to speak with tongues, and to another it is given the interpretation of tongues; and all these gifts cometh from God, for the benefit of the children of God. And unto the bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church, and to be elders unto the church, are to have it given unto them to discern all those gifts, lest there shall be any among you professing and yet be not of God.'

This very plainly explains why an elder should be placed in charge of every prayermeeting, as it is their right to possess the spirit of discernment, and to so conduct the meeting that nothing of an evil nature be allowed to disturb the tranquility of mind or spirit, by interjecting false ideas or impressions upon the receptive assembly.

We find that the lesser, or Aaronic priesthood has not this gift given to them, but that their work more specifically, and I might add absolutely is, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 104:8: "And has power in administering outward ordinances." But says one, are there no modifications of this? According to the law regarding the subject, I know of no modification of the above statement with the elder present. But in his absence, there is provision made as we shall see later.

Now if this interpretation regarding the elder holds good in relation to the prayer meetings in general, how does it fit in the special or specific prayer meeting, where the sacrament is administered, and the gifts more abundantly displayed?

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants states regarding the Priest. "The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties; and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons, and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires."

We have here rather a peculiar state of affairs; It states what the priest may do, and then immediately modifies the same duty under certain circumstances. You will note particularly that he is not to take the lead of meetings when there is an elder present, that is specifically stated.

There are two emissions in his qualifications, which he is qualified to perform under conditions wherein the elder is absent; but which seem to depart from his authority as soon as an elder appears upon the scene.

We contended before in our argument that the priest should not be in charge of a prayermeeting when it was possible to obtain an elder for that position; that thought is made iron-clad by this statement that, "he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present," there is only one interpretation that can be placed on this language, and that denies the right of leadership, when the elder is present.

Now how about administering the sacrament? Is ha denied the right to administer the sacrament also when the elder is present? He is surely not to take the lead in this meeting, that is expressly stated. Then how far shall he assist the elder during the service?

Some contend that he has the right at all times to officiate in the sacrament, that that is his specific duty! but is it? Have you analyzed the statement carefully? Let us see! A specific word or duty, would be that which under every circumstances would be unaltared. Have we such a duty described in relation to the priest? We read twice in the one paragraph regarding the priest's duties, and that which is written must be of particular moment.

Here is what the Lord says a priest's duty is when an elder is present, and it appears twice to lend emphasis to the instruction: "He is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties,"

According to this, you will notice that he has nothing to do with the sacrament, or the leading of meetings when an elder is present. On the other hand, it would be his duty to pass the emblems as that is one of the outward ordinances. And the closing thought of the paragraph states, that he is to assist the elder in all the forgoing outlined duties if occasion requires. The blessing of the sacrament is a spiritual exercise and belongs to the higher order of priesthood particularly, therefore the priest's assistance would naturally come under the outward manifestation.

Reviewing the argument, it looks to me, that the priest can under certain conditions, i. e. when the elder is absent, administer the sacrament and take the lead of meetings; but when he is present, for reasons set forth and probably others known to the Almighty only, he is denied that right; it only becoming justifiable under the conditions eited.

EVOLUTION, OR CREATION, WHICH?

Does truth, and reason, most favor evolution, or creation?

In the "Century Magazine," issue of May 1886 in an article by T. T. Unger, entitled "Evolution and the Faith," in which an effort is made to show that God's method of creation was by evolution. In a paragraph beginning on page 113, the author presents some thoughts, which appear to me, fatal to the theory of evolution as accounting for man as the ultimate end, or purpose of creation. Speaking of evolution as taught by Darwin, and endorsed by Huxley, and Tyndall, he says, "But this theory is now an outcast in the world of thought, and is branded with rejection by every science that uses thought, for the simple reason that it renders thought impossible. These fears would be well grounded if the theory were established, that what is called force or the forces were invariable-never more, or less, that they worked by transmutation and within the original limits. That that force itself is an entity." This theory also, has no tenable place in philosophy. What is called force is the method of the action of a cause (Force and will are synomonous, and interchangeable, and one of the attributes of intelligent personality, i. e., every intelligent person has will in proportion to the intelligence developed and that will is the force that results in action.)

It is therefore absurb to say of any inanimate thing, that it has force or will. It may transmit force, but only as it has first received it. "Force cannot be conceived only as proceeding from will, nor can it be observed, except as acting under a thought relation—that is intelligently working towards an end by design. Nor, is it the invarible and eternal thing it is claimed to be. [This last clause has a rather uncertain sound.] Matter exists logically, if not otherwise before force; [Better to say that matter existed co-eternally with force, or will] and must have received its force (or impulse to action) from some source, or resource or resovoir, and as it works in thought relations, it must have come from an intelligent source, that cherished design." "Force begins—where we know not, till we postulate God * * * and it is idle to say that the changes wrought by man on the face of the earth are not the products of his creative will."

All change is creation, or reconstruction, for will is ever active, never absolutely at rest. If evolution even in its milder and more modern form be true then revelation is false, for there is in revelation not a single word that even hints at evolution, but on the contrary it plainly taught that man was created, but not evolved, from the dust of the ground. Revelation says that, "in six days the Lord made heaven and earth and all the host of them." But evolution says not so, six days, or six thousand years is not enough.

Evolution demands more than this and as taught by Darwin, doesn't need an intelligent designer, for "All nature aspired to be man." But revelation says that God said to some one other than himself, Let us make man in our own image, and in our likeness. It is reasonable to suppose that it required five of more long periods of duration, for an intelligent personal Being, such as God is represented to be, to study, and experiment just how to make a man? Just as if he didn't know just how to do the work, and had to take a million or more years to study over the

That the truth of God may prevail over error is the prayer of the writer.

OUR SANITARIUM.

It is greatly to be desired that every Latter Day Saint should feel that the Sanitarium at Independence is our institution. Could the ambitions of those in charge be known and appreciated all would feel an interest in its success not now felt in many quarters. That ambition is succinctly set out by Dr. Harrington in a letter to the undersigned. He wrote:

"The goal is to make this institution that which God intended: a place where God is sought for His direct blessing on the sick and also for the direction His divine counsel will give to the workers that represent the human part or side of the institution."

Wide as is the field of activity and usefulness of the Sanitarium as at present organized, its activity and sphere of utility could be much widened under proper conditions, to the benefit of many not now reached but who are needing its help. There are many Saints who desire to send to the Sanitarium their tuberculous relatives, while other requests have come to admit cases of mental disorders, some of which, without doubt, under proper observation and treatment would be found to be temporary and curable. Cures in such cases mean lives saved from restraint in asylums. Neither tuberculous nor mental cases are admitted to the Sanitarium now because of lack of proper quarters and facilities for such.

From our Sanitarium should radiate activities tending to inculcate and propagate among our people a better and more adequate knowledge of the laws of health. To do this demands a corps of workers to go into the homes and teach not only the care of the sick but those not sick as well, so disease may be prevented. Theraputics are good but prophylaxis is better. Not infrequently there are those who while not suffering from any organic troubles are yet unable to coordinate their activities with the demands of duty, who could by proper rest and a rural sojourn be so recuperated from overwrought nerves that functionizing as a worker and citizen would again become a pleasure.

The foregoing contains a hint of the possibilities before our institution. I shall hope that its supporters and friends will be so many and strong that before long it shall be enabled to enter into broader fields of activity.

Many have already been blessed by its good work. May its good work go on.

Bro. Leonard Harrington, now in charge, comes to the institution peculiarly qualified for its work. Along with a splendid training and long study of medicine that has qualified him as a pathologist and diagnosticican, he brings a consecration to service that is cheering to us upon whom great responsibility has been laid. We feel that his devotion to the cause we love cannot but have a good effect as an example to others who have talents to consecrate to a good cause. We suggest that those of the Church who are studying medicine and allied subjects get in touch with Dr. Harrington with a view to broadening the scope of the Sanitarium by Saintly coordination of consecrated effort and co-operation.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

Synopsis of a sermon by Elder D. A. Kemp, Conifer, Colo. For my Scripture reading this morning I wish to call your attention to the twelfth chapter of Luke, the 31st to 40th verses inclusive. rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you. Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching; verily I say unto you that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat. and will come forth and serve them. And if he shall come in the second watch, or in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those serv-And this know that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through. Be ve therefore ready also; for the Son of man cometh at an hour when you think not."

We wish to notice one statement as recorded in Matt. 16:27; "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels and then he shall reward every man according to his works." We hope we shall have to offer no apology this morning, if we read one or two statements recorded in Doctrine and Covenants, which is the word of the Lord reaffirmed to his people in this the last gospel dispensation. God being unchangeable, has also spoken by the mouth of his prophets to this generation. It is in keeping with what has been spoken by the ancient prophets.

"And it shall come to pass that he that feareth me shall be looking forth for the great day of the Lord to come, even for the signs of the coming forth of the Son of man; and they shall see signs and wonders, for they shall be shown forth in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; and they shall behold blood and fire; and vapors of smoke; and before the day of the Lord shall come, the sun shall be darkened, the moon be turned into blood and the stars fall from heaven, and the remnant shall be gathered unto this place; and then they shall look for me, and behold I will come; and they shall see me in the clouds of heaven, clothed with power and great glory, with all the holy angels; and he that watches not for me shall be cut off."—Doctrine and Covenants. 45:6.

"For behold, the Lord shall come, and his recompense shall be with him, and he shall reward every man and the poor shall rejoice." 6, D. C.

"And that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke so shall it come to pass; for I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness, with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand," D. C. 28:2.

An appropriate text is found in Heb. 9:28. "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Another text is found in Mark 13:37. "And what I say unto one, I say unto all, watch."

The books seem laden with scripture, which speak in thunder tones, as it were, to the nations of the earth, to every kindred tongue and people; of the coming of the Messiah, even a Savior, Christ the Lord.

The Jews nave been looking for this Savior, for even twenty centuries. However those who comprehend him, whose minds were made clear, and who were convinced that he was the Christ, have only been looking for him since his return into heaven; and the angels that stood by, as he ascended, exclaimed, this same Jesus whom ye see ascend, in like manner shall also descend. he shall come again to earth, to complete the redemption of man. He says "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also; if I go away I will come again and receive you unto myself. Yes, the angels chant his praises, telling us of his return, and the Spirit of the Father, in each anxious heart doth burn, and proclaim to all the true believers he is the Christ of Bethlehem. Does it not seem a pity that the Jews could not comprehend the Savior, and realize the message of the angels, that chanted his praises to the shepherds years ago on Judah's plain, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior which is Christ the Lord.' Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." The Jews realized not the saying of peace on earth, good will to men: they were looking for a national Savior, one that would come as a great king, and deliver them from bondage, and also deliver other nations into their hands. Exhaltation and superiority, were their desire, and when he came as a peacemaker and a mediator between God and men, they rejected him, hung him on the cross, and consequently have never realized a Messiah. The same prophets, (and many who spoke not of his first comhave foretold of his second coming, when he shall come without sin unto salvation, as King of kings and Lord of lords.

"And what I say unto one I say unto all, watch." Can we comprehend his near return, or will we go heedlessly on, blinded by the traditions of men, and in the face of all the evidence, will we say, "Our Lord delayeth his coming, and to eat, drink and be drunken. The Lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers, I tell thee thou shalt not depart hence, till thou hast paid the very last mite." (Luke 12:46, 59.) Can we not discern the signs of these times, shall we be as the hypocrites, who can discern the face of the sky, and not discern the times of the coming of the Son of man. There shall be signs in the sun, in the moon, and stars, upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and waves roaring. Is not the distress of nations discernable, regarding the great treaties, and conferences, for the benefit of solving some of the conditions that confront the world, surely men's hearts are failing them for fear of those things coming upon the earth. Wars and rumors of wars, that are so prevalent through the nations, wickedness and crime of every nature, increasing together with the portentious notices of the great sea disasters, pestilence, earthquakes, and other disasters, which God says shall be his judgments, and his testimony, as a witness of the end, surely indicates to the careful observer, that the time of his coming is near, even at the door. Lift up your heads and rejoice ye people, (ye that have named the name of Christ,) for your redemption draweth nigh.

O, that the world would receive the words of God unto this generation. O, that it was not blinded to the fact, that we must live by every word that procedeth out of the mouth of God. Look out into the world and especially upon the waters, that seem so turbulent in their nature, and then say there is no more need of God's revealed word. In former days and even until some time after the landing of the Spaniards upon the American continent, when it took months to cross the mighty waters, there seemed but very little loss of life, but in these last days, when we are equipped with the great steamships, that can cross the waters in a very short time, we see more destruction, and disasters taking place; many are caught in her snares.

It is conceded now by a great many of the religious bodies that the end of the world is near, or that we are living in the closing scene of man's mortal probation, nearing the second coming of Christ; and many things are now admitted in regard to his coming which when uttered by the latter day prophet nearly a century ago, were almost wholly denied. So God made known unto man, what it has taken years of study and research for others to find out, and had the world heeded the message it could have been prepared even now, for Christ's return; but because of the blindness that cover their eyes, and hardness of heart, the world is not prepared for his return, neither will it be, even to the day of his coming. Jesus said: "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth." (Luke "And as a snare shall it come upon all who dwell on the face of the earth." 21:35). It will be a surprise unto all, even those who profess to have obeyed the gospel. Saints, take note! Discard vanity, pride, and all wickedness, and worldliness, with its many lustful, and covetous pleasures, and watch ye therefore and pray always, that ye may be worthy to stand before the Son of man, have on the armor of righteousness, and be God's people at heart, as well as in name, lest this day come as a thief in the night, and find us wholly unprepared. Be on your watch tower, lift up your heads, rejoice for your redemption draweth nigh. Ye are living in the evening time of the world's history, when he shall come to wed his ready bride; even to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

While looking at the betterment of the world along inventional lines, and also educational, fail not to see the great storm of trouble among the nations, that rush like the rushing of many waters, and make a noise like the noise of the seas, they shall be rebuked, and chased as a rolling stone before the wind; and in the words of the prophet, "Ye shall see him in the clouds of heaven. clothed with power and great glory. Therefore I say unto all, WATCH."

Yes sin increasing, crime pdevailing, tell us that the end is near;

War and bloodshed, men's hearts failing, Causing grief and causing fear.

The boisterous sea and wild waves roaring, heaving way beyond their bounds;

Causing many souls to perish, listen to the resonant sound. Soon we'll see our Lord in person-he who was pierced on

Then we'll know him as our Savior, he who died to set us sent to us a message, listen to the gentle call.

Tis the gospel of salvation, we must heed it one and all. from sin;

Just have on the wedding garments, and he'll bid you into jays of life eternal, free from sin, and pain, and death; And with God, and Christ the Savior, ye shall have eternal rest.

BABY'S SUMMER FOOD.

My neighbor's baby was fat and extra large for six months; just fine! I happened one day, to ask her if she kept it entirely on milk. laughed derisively and said, "Oh, I couldn't be so cruel. Why the poor little soul just sits in her chair at meal time and jumps and begs and keeps her arms a-waving in her anxiety for some of our food. I let her try everything. Never hurts her a speck."

In vain I argued that it was likely merely the baby's desire to imitate its elders, that caused its excitement. Baby's think of their mouths most of their waking hours at any rate, if it is only to chuck in needles, pins and thimblesor fists. It must be something, for a year or so.

And I also argued that moreover, had she never have let such a baby taste the food of its elders, taste anything but milk or strained gruels, its excitement would not have been so keen. spoon with a sip of milk therein would have filled the bill from the start, and all risks have been

Now in its second summer, poor little baby "What's the matter? cries much night and day. "What's the matter?" we ask. "Oh, it's his teeth. He is cutting this one, that one and another one all at once, and it is so hot.

This mother is one among the great majority who harbor the false notion that infants must suffer teething disorders. Why cannot mothers realize that an infant's digestive organs are not developed sufficiently to care for foods other than liquids-milk and water, and later fruit juices (orange especially), strained gruels or bread and milk.

Just because the baby has one or several teeth. is no reason it is ready to eat solids. Teeth can not come all at once; teething is a gradual process; nature is wise. When the double teeth-the grinders, arrive, one might be excused for expecting a child to chew some things. The ability to chew properly comes also as a gradual process Even when these teeth are through, one can easily notice that suction is the predominating motion in caring for the food. As long as you can notice this, care must be taken as to what a child is given to masticate.

Next in importance to the food eaten should come regular hours for meals. Five times a day -and only water between meals. I do not instil the habit of "piecing" into a child's life, if possible to avoid it.

And next to these in importance comes proper clothing. In order to have the food act right the stomach and bowels should be kept warm. Keep the baby cool, but inside its gauze shirt, have flannel pinned or sewed across the front, to protect the bowels from chill. Some mothers use a flannel band. If the little dress is left off any part of an extremely hot day, all right,-but have it on again at even time, by all means,

These precautions will avoid many of the cases of dysentery, catarrah of stomach, cholera infantum and diarrhoea, in the child; and if indigestion and many troubles—stomach and otherwise, "which flesh is heir to," which burden mankind in its grown up stage of life—as a result of unreasonable feeding in childhood.

MOTHERS FOR LOCAL OPTION.

Many mothers in Independence are at present engaged in a heart to heart house to house effort in behalf of Local Option. Our Auxiliary members are lively workers with leading church women of the town.

With their petitions and posters (the latter they leave pasted on a front window in the home of the signers); -in hand, they face people of all classes. With various experiences and one of two results, they press on in the good work.

In spite of the hot days, they prefer worm receptions; but severe rebuffs do come. However, the longing for a "dry" town at last—and less temptation and trials for old and young of the now and future, is there incentive to brave the unpleasant feature of the attempt.

Men are working equally hard with their plans and working with the women, giving them encouragement and appreciation.

No doubt many of their experiences would be heartrending, interesting, as well as instructive, could we but hear of them.

We hope and pray for the success of this effort. that one more step toward purity and temperance for our town, may soon be ours to enjoy.

SOMETHING FOR MOTHERS TO KNOW.

By Bro. F. B. Wilson, D. D. S. Children at the age of two years should have twenty teeth, or all of their temporary set. Great importance is attached to the maintenance and care of them.

No tooth should be extracted before time for the erup-

No tooth should be extracted before time for the eruption of the permanent tooth that takes its place.

Many persons do their children a great injury, and not realize it, by not taking them to a dentist once every six months and having the teeth examined for cavities. Often they ray these are only "baby teeth," and that they will soon be out any way, and, that it don't make any difference. List there is where they are mistaken. It loses make a difference, and a very great difference in the structure and quality of the permanent tooth that takes its place. In the first place, it often saves the little fellow from weeks of suffering; not saying anything about from weeks of suffering; not saying anything about the nights the parents have to be ousted out of bed to apply some home remedy in order to get relief to the child and themselves.

Next, it helps the child to properly masticate its food, thus keeping the child's stomach in good condition,—re-sulting in general good health to the child, and hapiness comfort to the parent.

Third, if the temporary tooth is not preserved and is allowed to decay, it is only a short time until the nerve dies in the tooth,—thus endangering the permanent tooth lying just below.

No doubt you have seen children with one tooth miss-ing in the front part of the mouth and often two or yen more. Most invariably that is caused by just such conditions as I have just referred to, and some times by eruptive fevers and inherited diseases.

Most grown people brush their teeth once or twice a day, but never think of caring for the poor little dependent child clinging at their feet or playing around the home. It is right that they should brush their own teeth, but it is also important that the child should have its teeth brushed. A tooth would never decay if it were kept perfectly clean (do you get that?), if it were kept per fectly clean.

Decay comes from food becoming lodged between the teeth, or in the deep crevices of the tooth and being allowed to stay there and decompose. In the process decomposition it ferments, forms lactic acid, which tecomposition in terments, joins factic acid, which will be hot house or breeding place for the germ of decay, which quickly commences work, once it is in existence. There are two kinds of decay, the white and the black. The black is easily detected owing to its color,—the white is harder to detect, and also is the fastest worker, and made the property contents to the fact. and much more dangerous owing to that fact. (Strange how nature seems to assist the bad.)

As to the proper food for children, it is a hard subject. Our best scientists discuss it pro and con, but it is generally conceded,—those that contain the lime salts, cilicates and calciums are the best. Lime water, whole cates and calciums are the best. Lime water, whole wheat flour, cereals with husks, which contains cliicates, fruit acids, etc., are considered good.

A few words about the time and manner of the removal of the temporary teeth. At about the age of six years the child looses its incisors. Uusually they loosen and are removed by the parent. Generally the lower ones loosen first, and in their places come the first permanent teeth. Also at the same age the child cuts its first permanent molars or jaw teeth above and below on each side. Remember this, for so many people think this to be a baby tooth and allow or have it exthink this to be a baby tooth and allow or have it extracted. Always save these permanent molars, as they are the Keystone to the arch of the mouth. Then at the age of about seven the child looses its lateral incisors, and permanent laterals take its place. About the eighth year the child looses its first temporary molar and the first permanent bicuspid takes its place. Next, the child looses its second temporary molar at about the age of nine to ten years, and the second permanent bicuspid takes its place. Next, the child looses its next the second permanent bicuspid takes its place. Next, the second permanent bicuspid takes its place. Next, the second permanent bicuspid takes its place. Next, the second permanent bicuspid takes its place. think this to be a baby tooth and allow or have it extakes its place. Next the stomach and eye teeth or canine teeth are lost at about the age of ten to twelve years, and the permanent cuspids take their place. The child then has its twelve year molar come in from twelve to fifteen years. The third molar or wisdom tooth comes any where from eighteen to twenty-five years

You see now that a child of twelve years of age should have lost all of its "baby teeth," and have twenty-eight permanent ones.

I will at some future time, try and give you some points on the preservation, repair and function of these

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Oregon: Greeting:

Having been appointed to your state, I take this means of addressing you concerning the work in which we have a mutual interest. To begin with: Some of you live in branches while others are "scattered Saints." While we have a desire to build up and strengthen existing organizations. zutions yet we should not forget the necessity of makng new openings. My calling committs me to the latter ork but I am willing to do the former as occasion pering new openings. mits or necessity requires.

My certificate of appointment assigns me to the whole State, and, so far as agreeable to the missionary in charge, it is my intention to visit all its various parts. This I desire both in the interests of the work and my own education and experience.

education and experience,

I especially invite the attention of the isolated Saints.

Please write me regarding the need of and opportunity for missionary work in your several localities I don't want any of you to be able to say, "Bro. Barmore wouldn't come." I'll come if I know where to go. You must tell me. I have been in your state only once. I crossed over the line into the southeastern parts when I was a missionary in Galifornia fiften years, are. Of other parts. I ary in California fifteen years ago. Of other parts I am largely ignorant.

Please address me at 1941 Washington St., Portland.

In gospel bonds,

A SAINT'S DESIRE.

Stay thou oh Lord, do stay with me While others hide their face from thee. Each burning heart, each tear-stained eye, May they bring blessings by and by.

In darkened hours be thou my Guide My troubled thoughts, dear Savior, hide, And give me strength my trials to bear, Let thy dear Spirit guide me here.

For I do neav with earnest heart From worldly ways my life to part; Oh let my life, my soul be thine, That in thy love my light may shine.

And when at last in peaceful rest I fold my hands upon my breast, May thy sweet voice say to me, "Come And enter in, it is well done.'

WHAT MAKES THE DRINK EVIL.

(Dr. T. Alexander Muc Nicholl.)
The great problem of drink is not the drunkard. He is a victim and not an enemy. If the drunkard was the great evil we could relegate the whole question to the asylum, rescue mission and potter's field.

The great problem of drink is not the

His badness does not make saloonkeeper. saloonkeeper. His badness does not make the saloon evil. As a grocer or tailor he might be recognized as a respectable member of community.

The great problem of drink is not the saloon, a place of business or a place of meeting. A saloon is not bad because a needing. A shoot has because certain man runs it or owns it. It is not a menace to the community because certain citizens meet there; these same cititain citizens meet there; these same citzens might meet in a hall or a school house and yet be law abiding citizens.

Alcohol is the enemy that makes the drunkard, the saloonkeeper and the saloon evil. There can be no good saloon where alcohol is the stock in trade.

Alcohol is the great enemy that must be destroyed. For political reasons we have ignored the alcohol issue until, fettered in ignored the alcohol issue until, fettered in chains of crime and disease, our nation faces destruction. We have spent millions to protect society against crime, vice and disease, while we have protected the hot bed of crime, the liquor traffic, and the main spring of vice and disease, alcohol. We must adopt scientific methods and remove the cause, alcohol, if our nation is to live.—

IS THIS YOUR MINISTER?

We have almost forgotten what that word "minister" means. It means servant. And this view of the ministry ought to be impressed upon the young men who are plan-ning to take up that work. Not to be edu-cated up away from the people, but to be trained down to learn how the masses live and think and feel and work; not to think of getting high honors and comfortable homes and big salaries, but to long to bring justice and comfort and gladness to other hearts and homes; not to preach profound sermons and write learned papers, but to snatch men away from sin and hold them to lives of righteousness; "not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many"—that is what it life a ransom for many"—that is what it really means to be a minister. And the really greatest minister is the one who really becomes "the servant of all."—The Christian Herald.

HEALING AS RELATED TO THE GOSPEL.

During many centuries of the Christian era healing as a divine gift in common with other gifts given by the Spirit of God was denied by nearly all professed followers of Christ, but within the last generation a change of belief has come and now many people regard it as a prominent part of the gospel work. Some in an extreme zeal have made it the all in all of their religion, and it is often pointed to as a sure evidence of God's presence and approval of the whole system of doctrine of which it is the leading part, and of the organization in which it has place.

That divine healing was a part of the gospel work in Bible times no Bible believer will deny, but that it has any place in God's work today many do deny and those who accept of that principle seem to give it a place out of all proportion to that given it by Christ and the apostles. Believing as we do that the gospel is unchangeable, being adapted to and having application to all men everywhere, healing must remain a part having the same relationship to the whole as it had anciently if the gospel is to appeal to us at the present time. Any other gospel in which healing is either omitted altogether, given an unwarranted pre-eminence, or otherwise removed from its original purpose and relationship, will not be the gospel to answer to our ideals according to the Scriptures.

The Gospel Paramount.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting This was the mission of Christ to the world, to bring to man everlasting life. No greater necessity exists nor higher purpose be found in that mission, and all else done by Christ during his ministry, and all the work done by the ministers of Christ under his direction. and the ministrations of the Holy Spirit as they are perpetuated in the Church, are all for the purpose of consumating God's greatest purpose in the world, viz., "To bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."

Healing Incidental to the Gospel.

In this great work man has a part; he must believe and co-operate with God in order to attain this eternal life. But oftimes the afflictions and diseases of body retard or altogether prevent his accomplishing the work, and then it becomes necessary for the Lord to extend relief and healing if the work is to be accomplished: hence healing meets an absolute necessity in the work of God. But it is incidental to the divine purpose.

Christ ever held his power of healing in its proper relationship to his advocacy of the truth. and in his instructions to his disciples the same re-The following lationship was observed. tures may be noted:

tures may be noted:

And Jesse went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their syragogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people. Matt. 9:35.

There twelve Jesses sent forth * * * and as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils. Matt. 10:5, 7.

And they went out, and preached that men should repent. And they cast out many devils, and anionted with oil many that were sick, and healed them. Mark 6:12, 13.

From these passages it may be seen that the primary work of Jesus and the apostles was the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom by which men were called to repentance, and in that work the appeal was made in behalf of the truth and not in behalf of healing or any other outward Healing was never held out as an inducement to an acceptance of the message which these men bore. That the work of healing was incidental to the preaching of the truth is more fully set forth in Mark 16:15-20 where Jesus said to his anostles

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every reature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be aved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover * * * and they went forth and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following.

The great mission of the anostles was the preaching of the gospel by which salvation might come to all men. Every man needs the gospel, but few men proportionately need physical healing; they are the exception.

The last quotation also sets forth the thought that by the signs here promised the Lord confirmed the word, again showing their subsidiary character. The word of truth is the great vital force in the lives of men; it works for reformation of character, a transforming of man's sinful nature; it aims at the healing of the soul, and if the soul be healed it matters little about the body now. But as before stated physical disease may stand in the way of perfect soul healing, in which case the power of truth, living truth with which God works, is sufficient for the healing of the body as well. Nothing, whether disease, satanic power. or death can stand in the way of God's purpose when men conform to the divine truth of the This brings us to the next topic:

Healing is Dependent upon Faith.

The purpose of physical healing being to clear the way and make possible the healing of the soul, it at once appears that there must be some desire upon the part of those afflicted or diseased, or of those most vitally concerned, leading to such an attainment. Physical healing with no other motive or purpose attending than to be physically well will bring only incidental good to the one healed and add nothing to the glory of God, thus failing in the purpose for which it was given. The faith required is not merely a desire or expectation to be healed, but faith in. God, in his promises, and in his truth. It must be a faith born of repentance, or at least a desire to repent, and which has been begotten by a hearing of the truth. In God's work we have seen how that the preaching of the gospel is paramount and healing the sick incidental, so upon the part of man--to believe the gospel is paramount, faith in which is justification for God to interpose in his behalf and heal the distressed body, such healing coming as one of the secondary though necessary results of his faith-it was to "follow them that believe" the gospel.

It was the people who "came to hear him," that Jesus healed. (Luke 6:17). The healing practiced by the apostles was done as they "went through the towns, preaching the gospel." 9:6.) The centurion manifested a faith in Christ which secured the healing of his servant. (Matt. 8:13). It was the multitude of believers which were added to the Lord who brought their sick for Peter to heal. (Acts 5:14, 15). The healings by Philip at Samaria came because "the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake." (Acts 8:6.) In no case did the Lord or his ministers use the power of healing for display to satisfy the curiosity of any, or for the purpose of making believers. Believing the message given for the healing of the soul indicates a desire to co-operate with God in that work, and if physical defect stands in the way of its accomplishment God co-operates with man and heals the body of that defect. Sometimes man becomes indifferent to the great purpose of his life after having once delieved, or loses sight of it altogether, and yet when sickness comes he desires to be healed. If his desire for healing be without greater purpose it is liable to be unavailing.

Forgiveness and Healing Associated.

As showing still further the relationship of body and soul in the matter of healing may be noted the connection of healing and forgiveness in the Scriptures. David praised the Lord "who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases," (Psalms 103:3). The man sick of the palsy received a forgiveness of sins before being healed, (Matt. 9:2-6). In showing the manner of dealing with the sick James instructs them to send for the elders of the Church who are to pray over them, anointing them with oil in the name of the Lord, and gives promise that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." (Jas. 5:15).

Spiritual and physical healing are so closely related that it is difficult to consider them separately, though we often lose sight, in large measure, of the spiritual as to see only the physical need. We plead with God for physical help while often indifferent to the spiritual conditions and doing little to bring ourselves to a right attitude before him,

Can Healing Come when Conditions will not Admit of Spiritual Blessing?

Since healing of the body is so closely associated with the healing of the inner man as expressed in the forgiveness of sins, it may be assumed that if conditions are such as will not admit of forgiveness that the same conditions will be a bar to healing. Some cases of sickness are brought on by man's own sinful conduct. It must be apparent that so long as the man continues such conduct that he could not receive from the Lord either forgiveness for his sins nor healings from his infirmities. The impotent man whom Christ healed, and who presumably received a forgiveness of his sins, was told to 'sin no more, lest a greater evil come upon thee." Since the Scriptures show that forgiveness is also dependent upon repentance, we may safely reason that repentance is one of the pre-requisites of healing, at least in such cases where the sickness is the result of sin.

It is said the disciples of old "sought occasion ngainst one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened." (D. C. 64:2). Some of the elders of the early Church failed to observe the commandment to teach their children the gospel by which they were brought under condemnation and as a result the Lord said, "that wicked one hath power as yet over you, and this is the cause of your affliction." (D. C. 90:6). In these cases it must be apparent that in order for these men to have received physical healing they must repent of the evils which caused the affliction upon which repentance they would not only receive healing but forgiveness and other spiritual blessings as well. The man who is consciously under condemnation can have no other than a wavering faith, of whom James says, "Let not that man think that he shall receive anything from the Lord." he be unconsciously under condemnation the blessing may be withheld in order to stir him to a self examination of his condition and bring him to a right attitude before God.

Many suffer innocently and from causes which cannot be determined, and notwithstanding prayer and administration the blessing is not received. There may be many reasons for this, but in any case the sick are in the hands of the Lord, many cases are known where great spiritual blessing has been given but without physical Perhaps afflictions are sometimes essenhealing. tial for working out of spiritual development and the transformation of character in which cases they prove the greatest blessing that can be given, and require patience in order that they may accomplish their work. "Our light affliction ** * worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of Glory."

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

The Sunday morning's discourse was delivered by Bro. Elbert A. Smith, using for a lesson part of the 30th chapter of Deuteronomy, his subject being "Waiting at the Door." Jesus said, "Behold, I stand at the door and the Door. Jesus said, Brondi, Israina in the door a shadow also stands there, who is the devil, and we must make choice between the two, not only as individuals, but as a nation and as a church. He quoted from Rom. 7:21—"When I would do good, evil is present with me." He briefly reviewed the establishment of this great Republic when I would do good, evil is present with me." He briefly reviewed the establishment of this great Republic when God dictated its foundation, but evil was also present, and slavery was granted in the Constitution. As an evil we also have the saloon, an institution of the devil, but the church placed itself on record over eighty years ago against that evil. The Latter Day Saints were pioneers in the temperance cause. Away back in 1836 Kirtland declared against the sale of intoxicating liquors. In the 1911 State Election in Missouri, according to the Kansas City Star, the Latter Day Saints carried the election in Independence for prohibition, and the Star said the saloon keepers would starve to death if they depended upon the patronage of the saints. Passing along, the speaker said that while God stood at the door of the church, evil stood there also—referring to the evil that crept in through the apostasy (meaning, no doubt, polygamy). When one would do good evil is always present. Some have said, "Why does not God kill the devil, so all would be compelled to be good," and "Why not make it so one cannot do evil." God gives the devil his free agency, and he gives his children their free agency. He does not want slaves. He wants his children to be tree agency, and ne gives his children there agency. He does not want slaves. He wants his children to be free to choose, and if they choose right it will be more to their credit than if compelled to be good. Bro. Smith said we should be boosters and not knockers, that we should help the weak climb, by our efforts and by suggestion. By suggestion one may be discouraged and sent on the downward road, or by suggestion he may be encouraged to ascend. He told the story of a man who had been given a job of building a fine house, and that instead of doing his work honestly and putting in good material he idled away his time and used poor material. When the no linea dway into and copy of material. Where when a man came home and found the building had been finished he deeded it to the man who built it. The builder said that if he had known it was to have been his he would not have cheated in its construction. The moral is that when we attempt to cheat God or our fellowman we are cheating ourselves.

The afternoon service, usually a prayer and testimony meeting, was in the interest of local option, and rousing speeches were made by Brn. Joseph Luff, E. L. Kelley and B. J. Scott on the side of local option, also at the close Rev. Pendleton made remarks in regard to the buying of the negro vote, dishonest officials, and the local option work that was being done and that to be done in the two nights and two days preceding the final results of the election, of the work of over two hundred men to patrol the business part of the city all night Sunday and Mon-day nights, included in which were the full quoto of Latter Day Saints, the Ensign force being well represented. These men were assigned beats, in twos and fours, and were to go about in an orderly manner with their eyes and and ears alert for any crookedness that might be attempted. The object being to "get on to" all that was irregular and make strenuous efforts to prevent vote buying and election stealing. Our Elders and ministers ouying and election stealing. Our litters and ministers of other churches were among the number. As many of these men who could possibly do so were to be at the polling places, especially where the worst deals were exd, a half hour before opening, at 6:30 in the morn-This was all outlined by Rev. Pendleton. Hundreds of women also to be there. A petition on a large sheet and containing the names of about 3000 women signers was printed and sent out to the voters. Who could turn down such a great army of wives, mothers, sisters and down such a great army of wives, mothers, sisters and daughters? (This is before election—results later.)

In the evening Bro. John W. Rushton occupied the stand, discoursing somewhat on sociology and making oneself worthy of the gospel of Jesus Christ. This a sort of preliminary or basic structure for a short discourse on local option, the all-absorbing question.

A beautiful poem entitled "A prelude to Voting," appeal to Jesus to know how he would have the christian vote in the local option election, was composed by Bro. Luff, and five thousand were printed and distributed in the virious churches the last two Sundays prior to election. The poem in beautiful word-setting of ninety lines appeals to the Savior as to how the petitioner should vote, naming various conditions and excuses given for voting "wet;" and how to vote in order to receive His divine approval, and concludes with the following four lines: "As your pro-fessed disciple, Jesus, I cannot well afford To aim at less than this, lest I betray my Lord. In view, then, of these circumstances, and clam'rings that beset, How would you have me cast my vote, dear Savior—"dry" or "wet."

This poem would be splendid for the "drys" in similar con-

This poem would be splendid for the "drys" in similar contests in other places, in behalf of consistency on the part of the professed Christian.

No such interest in any election has ever been manifest. Great crowds of both men and women were on the streets all day, many of both being on hand as early as six in the merning and staying till after sundown when the polts closel. The women did effectual work, not only by the effect of their presence, but also in their detective work ferrting out suspicious charactrs and questionable places where crookedness was or might be carried on. While this had a tendency to check boldness the While this had a tendency to check boldness the crooked work was done under cover so it was hard to detect it. In doing this work the women did not dis-grace themselves nor lower their dignity or womanhood in the lenst. God bless the women. If the influence of their vote could be had as well as the influence of their personality and work of detection, such questions as the one before the voters of Independence on Tuesday would soon be settled.

Cameras were focussed on the polling places to get snap-shots of suspicious characters, also numerous kodaks snap-shots of suspicious characters, also numerous kodaks were carried around by women and men for the same purpose. There was quite good order as a rule, but an accident happened in the early part of the day that reflected discredit on the "wet" side, and 5,000 dodgers were gotten out by the "drys" giving an account of the affray, in which Rev. H. K. Pendleton and Mr. E. R. Lee were brutally assaulted and a revolver thrust in the face of Mrs. Twyman, wife of Dr. Elmer Twyman, because the systems of the surface height supposed to said these she protested, the police being appealed to said they were too busy to look after the matter.

Dr. Twyman has probably been the foremost citizen in Dr. Twyman has probably been the foremost citizen in the local option movement, giving a large amount of money for the prosecution of the campaign, besides sacrificing several weeks' lucrative practice. But the real live wire, the one who planned the work, organized the men, and organized the women and planned their work, was E. F. Jones of St. Louis, once a citizen of Independence with the reason of the cost of St. Louis, once a citizen of Independence. dence, who has won fifty out of fifty-two campaigns dence, who has won hity out or hity-two campaigns he has conducted. We would not fail to mention Dr. Bushnell of Kansas City, an old soldier in the temperance cause, who assisted Rev. Jones in managing the campaign and in editing the independence Issue, of which there were seven issues of 3500 each put out at the Ensign Office. besides the manmoth petition from nearly 3000 women, circular letters, dodgers, etc. Two stenographers were kept at work at local option headquarters.

Later.—The battle is over, and, praise the Lord, the victory is on the side of the right. It was a hard fight. Nothing was left undone that could be done. All the forces of evil were arrayed against the forces of rightcoussess and good government with a wet council and a wet police force to encourage them. Mr. Jones, however, thanked God that we had a mayor, a real mayor. At though the mayor was on the side of the "wets" he showed no partiality, stated that if Independence went "dry" he would see that the law was enforced.

The Kansas City Times said: "Probably there was never an election like it in any community." Nothing never an election like it in any community." Nothing anything like it was ever seen in the experience of the writer. Hundreds, thousands of people thronged the streets, men and women. The negroes hated to face the white women and the kodaks, and consequently, it was stated that not over half of the negroes in the second ward voted. Most of the colored people live in that ward. The second ward went "wet" by 166 majority and the third ward by 69. The first and fourth is where most of the Latter Day Snirt live. The first ward went day by third ward by op. The first and fourth is where most of the Latter Day Saints live. The first ward went dry by 192 majority, and the fourth ward by 148, making a net for the "drys" of 105 out of a total vote of 2343. Before the election the Kansas City Star said that the "wets" were worried about the Latter Day Saints, as they are almost solidly "dry." Independence is the largest city in the State to go "dry."

From the Independence Examiner we take the fol-

Bro. Arch McCord gave the Sunday school a nice talk the morning of the twelfth. A number of our Sunday school and Religio workers attended the district convention which was held at Far West last Saturday and Sunday. A good time was reported. Our school has a fine large

ST. JOSEPH, MO., SECOND BRANCH,

Our Wednesday evening prayer meetings are still prov-ing a source of strength to all who attend and the instruction from God, given through our presiding elder, Bro. J. L. Bear, might be of benefit to such of the Saints Dro. J. L. Bear, might be of benefit to such of the Saints who are anxiously watching developments toward the preparation for the coming of our Lord and Savior. The Saints were instructed to buy properties around the Church and the promise accompanying this was, that God would so move upon the present owners through different channels that they would gladly offer them for sale to the Saints. We are glad to report that Brn. F. R. Gist, F. Rapp and J. L. Bear have already bought between the forest two house having house the same house. homes, the first two having built pretty modern homes at 6508 and 6506 King Hill Ave., respectively and Bro. Bear who traded his former home for a fine residence, 6022 Pryor Ave., just one block south from the Church.

Friday evening July 10th, the Religio held its first ession in charge of the new officers, and a good interest session in charge of the new officers, and a good interest was reported. Sunday July 12th, made a mark so far as the mercury went, it registered 100 in the shade but still we had a good attendance at Sunday school and preaching service following at which W. S. Hodson occupied the pulpit, using for his text John 15:14—"Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you," comparing therewith D. and C. 17:13, 25, asking how far do we as a people dare to digress from the commandments of Him and still feel that we are his friends? Certainly we had much your to think along this line. Prayer service at and still feet that we are his friends? Certainly we had much room to think along this line. Prayer service at 6:30 was profitable. The Spirit gave warning and ad-monition through different ones. Bro. J. L. Bear divided to us the word of God in the meeting following, the question "How long should the speaker hold the audience," furnished the basis of his sermon. He read Psalms 92, 119, 97, 100, and proved to us that one hour of meditation could be well delivered in half an hour. Let all speakers take note how the Second St. Joseph Branch is progressing with the time, even the hastening time, where there is no time for vain repetitions, but even as Jesus himself set us an example in the Lord's prayer—nothing repeated there and every sentence full of meaning and to the point.

Our two days meeting was on Saturday and Sunday,

July 18 and 19, weather was cool and ideal for Sunday school. Bro. W. P. Pickering preached Saturday even-ing and H. B. Taddiken at the 11 o'clock service. The presence of so many of our young people just growing up inspired the elder to use the words of Jesus recorded in the Bible for his foundation remarks; "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

After the evening prayer meeting he again was the speaker of the hour, commenting on the Lord's prayer to a good sized audience.

Sunday was a lovely day and an excellent attendance was the result. Elder Harry Passman of the local force was the speaker in the morning, giving good instruction in a manner easily comprehended. Street service was continued last week every night except Friday and we were blessed with an excellent at-tendance which gave very good attention. Bro. Dowker was the speaker and, to disabuse the minds of his hear-ers of the idea that we were affiliated with the Utah people, announcement was made at the conclusion of each people, announcement was made at the contents of the service that a lecture would be delivered Sunday evening at our chapel on "The Difference." This lecture was given and we are glad to say was attentively listened to by many outsiders, among whom were four ladies of the Utah faith, who remained long after adjournment in conversation with several of the brethren and apperaed May God add his blessings to the words that were

Our meetings are spiritual and God in his infinite love and mercy deems it wise to speak to his people in this place from time to time. On Wednesday last at our prayer service the gift of prophecy was given to admonish the Saints to come to service with more singleness of heart, in the spirit of true worship. On that occasion we had with us our aged brother Patriarch J. J. Bailey, who had a special message to deliver to the people of God on the next evening. Mrs. S. R. Burgess,

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE SEWING AND AID DE-PRATMENT OF THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

Having been elected superintendent of this department the last general convention, I take this method to give such encouragement and instruction as I can, to the cieties belonging to it, in regard to their organization and lines of work.

I assume that you are all organized, with a full corps of officers: President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer; also such committees as are necessary to carry on your work successfully. Be careful that you have a strict system of accounting between your secretary and treasurer so that at the end of the year you may be able to give a splendid report of your work and your finances. Without the exact figures you will not be able to do this.

The secretary should keep a record of all work done and she also should receive all money coming into the funds of the society, and after recording the amount, should turn same over to the treasurer, always being careful to take a receipt for the same.

The treasurer should keep a close account of all re-ceipts and disbursements, with vouchers to correspond. By this system all mistakes and confusion will be avoided. As to your work. Let us try this year to introduce some As to your work. Let us try this year to introduce some new and interesting features into our work. Of course we always have dinners, "uppers, socials, bazarıs, sales, etc, this to be according to your pleasure and opportunities. You can make quilts and sell them, also aprons, dusting sets, or any saleable articles you care to undertake. You can do quilting for other people, go out to sew by the day, and if you can think of an original way to make money, all the better. Concerts, where you have mustical talent, are easily arranged and can be made very successful. Try to interest those we cannot attend your weekly meetings to make things at home that you can sell at your bazarrs. Monthly dues of ten cents for each member help to swell your funds. So much for the financial part of the work. Now for the "Aid" part. This is a very important part, indeed, and should be carefully considered. Do we know a poor, over-worked mother who cannot keep up with the demands upon her strength and time? Here is a chance to exemplify the "aid" idea by giving a day to sew for her, or help in any way most needed. Are there any sick among us? Let us take cheer and comfort to them in whatever way is necessary or possible. The poor we have always with us and many a helpful thing we can do for them by the expenditure of only a few hours' time. Dear Sisters, let us not forcet the denandary little once in the Okid us not forget the dependent little ones in the Children's Home and make a special effort to help along that line. Five cent monthly subscriptions make a nice showing at the end of the year. However remember that your money is your own to dispose with as you see fit. All that th is your own to dispose with as you see fit. All that the Auxiliary requires is a per capita tax of ten cents a year for each member, in order that its work may be carried on. Now let us talk about the entertaining features of our work. Wouldn't it be niee to have informal social gatherings at the home of some member occasionally? Let each one take a piece of fancy work which, when finished, could be disposed of at your sales. You could get better acquainted, talk over your work and make plans. Light refreshments could be served, if desired. At your quilting would it not be nice to provide some entertaining book which one of your number could read aloud while book which one of your number could read aloud while the others work? Afterwards you could discuss what you have heard and exchange views upon the subject you have heath and exchange views upon the subject matter. We would suggest such books as "Ben Hur," "The Prince of the House of David," "The Throne of David," "The Pillar of Fire,"—all by Lew Wallace. Ralph Connor's works: "Black Rock," "Sky Pilot," "The Man from Glengary," etc. "The Harvester" and "Laddie," by Gene Stratton Porter; "The Shepherd of the Hills," by Harold Bell Wright; "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," by John Fox.

Now dear Sisters of the Sewing and Aid Department, let us work with right good will this year. Let us try to realize how much there is to do and how short the time. Please write me often, letting me know of your success or of your difficulties. Any assistance I can give you in any way will be cheerfully and gladly given.
We hope you will all take an interest in our annual dis-play of work at Conference and prepre some good exhibits. No not forget that organized effort is the key to success, and let us all pull together for grand results.

Yours for the dear cause,

Edith M. Cochran. Sup't Sewing and Aid Dep.

EVERLASTING LIFE.

Funeral Exercises of Mrs. Riley Briggs held at her interesidence, Independence, Mo., Saturday, June 27th, 1914, 10 a.m.

Sermon delivered by Elder Frederick M. Smith.
Reported by Belle R. James.

The hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light" was sung by a choir composed of Mesdames Brackenbury and Brocaw, and Messrs Bullard and Brocaw, after which the following prayer was offered by Elder W. H. Garrett:

"Our heavenly Father, we are made to feel that truly in thee we live and move and have our being and that thou hast appointed the bounds of our habitation; thou hast decreed because of a broken law that man, this mortal man, must decay; that there must come a time when the end of mortality shall be reached, and though we have filled well the measure of our creation in that work that thou hast given to us, thou hast given us also the blessed assurance that we shall enter into thy rest. And as we assemble here this morning with our hearts touched with the grief that has come to this home, we humbly pray that thy presence may comfort our hearts and may cheer our spirits and make us to realize that indeed thou hast ordained all things wisely and for our best and eternal happiness.

We thank thee for the hope of the gospel, that after the fitful scenes of mortality, after its disappointments, its griefs, its strifes; after its conflicts and after its victories, that we are permitted to enter into thy rest and to associate with the good and the pure who have through all ages, manifested their love for God and that which was right.

O, our Father, we are grateful this morning to thee that this was the faith and the hope of our sister, departed. Thou didst give to her a work to do in the earth; she has filled that sphere well; she has wrought good in her life; she has blessed many through her kindly ministrations, and her children, her companion, have felt the uplifting force of her life and her influence, impressing them with that which is noble and true and upright, impressing them with the joy and with the blessings that follow those who are obedient unto God. We realize that she has done what she could and she has well filled the work that thou hast given her to do, and having completed it, thou hast taken her unto thyself that she might rest from her labors, that she might rest from the work in which she has toiled these many years, and await the coming of the loved ones in those blessed conditions that thou hast prepared for them who love thee and serve thee in life.

We pray, dear Father, that the memory of this sweet life may ever abide with those who have been so influenced thereby and that they may look forward to the time when they shall see this loved one again, not as they look upon her today—though peaceful and composed—but coming in the brightness of the glory of God with her face shining with his glory, they shall again enter into communion and association with her and with all who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Gracious Father, do thou remember her loved companion and aid him in the lonely hours that are before him. Oh God, do thou be with him as a present help in his time of need. Bless these dear children upon whom she has lavished so much of love and of earnest and faithful service; may they realize that in parting with mother today that it is but for a season and that she has gone into those conditions for which she has eminently fitted and prepared herself in following the dear Lord; and may those precious and beautiful traits of character that so adorned her life and made her so precious in their sight and in the sight of others impress them, that they also may make the world better because they are a part of it. And while we all realize, dear Lord, that we have a loss today, may the comfort and the assurance of this fact that our loss here is her gain, may that indeed comfort every heart and may they take up the burdens of life and the conflicts that are before them with that cheerfulness and with that energy that shall enable them to endure unto the end.

We pray that this dear mother who has watched over this life these many years, who has given that assistance and that comfort that only a mother can give, who sees this daughter laid away today, may be comforted in the thought of the rest and peace and the joy into which this dear one is entering. Remember the brother and the sisters who have faithfully done their part in making this life a happy one as far as they could, for their associations have been indeed joyous and happy and comforting, and so may they be comforted in the thought that this association—broken for the present—shall again be renewed and resumed under better and higher and holier and purer conditions and those that shall never end.

We pray that thou wilt bless thy servant in the remarks that he shall make this morning. Oh, may such a message that shall do us all good be given to him for us, and may we be profited thereby and comforted and so glorify thee. Hear us in our humble petitions.

We pray again, also to remember the absent one. Thou knowest how his heart is turned to this scene this morning and though unable to be present, how he longs to be here. We pray thee, dear Father, that the peace and comfort of thy spirit may abide with him.

And now into thy hands we commend us. We pray for thy peace, blessing and direction and that thou wilt lead us all kindly through life, and ultimately may we have so wrought that we may be found worthy to stand among the sanctified and the redeemed and receive that crown of everlasting life, the welcome that thou hast for those who serve thee faithfully and endure unto the end, as has our sister, we ask, in Jesus name. Amen."

The choir sang, "Some day we'll understand," and Bro. Smith addressed the gathering as follows:—

"This morning, in coming to offer a few words at the bier of our departed sister, I cannot but feel a degree of pleasure—if such a term can be used on an occasion of this kind—that even though the preacher may not be able to bring to you in his message a lesson which could be deduced philosophically that would be worth our while, still if the life of the sister who has departed can but momentarily be held before your vision, the strengthening of your Christian fortitude, the vivifying of your saintly courage by that picture, ought to be worth the while of every one here.

Two passages of scripture come to my mind this morning as perhaps affording an adequate basis for the few remarks we may make. One of the old sages whose words have been worth while recording and which have as a consequence, been handed down to us, exclaimed: "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" And ages after that there came an answer to it in the language: "And God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten Son, that whosoever beliveth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

In a proper perspective of these two passages there is contained all that is worth while in both philosophy and religion, that which will give us a vivifying answer to the question, "What is man." and also give us hope of what man will be.

The importance of the first quotation, couched though it be in very few and simple words, might be sent out by repeating the question three times, laying the emphasis in each instance on different words: What is man? What is man? What is man? What is man? An answer thereto involves all that might be found in the field of biology in attempting to determine man's place in the animal life of the world. It will encompass all that scientists are able to produce towards determining what man's place is in the universe; it will encompass all that has been developed in the way of philosophy to determine why to man alone has been given the powers of reason.

A superficial attempt to answer the question biologically will run counter to difficulties. I talked not long ago to a learned medical man, one whose experience in the medical world has not only been wide but whose mental processes have been greatly exercised in attempts to determine man's place and his attitude toward his Creator, and to answer the question, Is there anything beyond the grave. And be thought he had answered the difficulty when he said he was forced to believe contrary to the faith that had been instilled into him by his mother in his early associations that man lived afterwards because of an experience he had when he had been rendered uncouscious for a number of hours. said that during that space or period of unconsciousness, had his arm been amputated he would not have known it; had his foot been taken off he would have been none the wiser, and his argument was that because he had thus lain for hours totally unaware of time and happenings, therefore there was no continuity of personality that in the physical functions of the brain lay all there was of personality. He said: "If there is an individuality that lives beyond death, why was not I conscious of being somewhere and of being something?" The answer to this is: If there be an after life, if there be a continuity of personality and individuality outside of or extraneous to the physical body, it takes the very thing that we call "dissolution" to bring about or engender consciousness after death, and this simple answer had not occurred to the man. Have we not all observed facts to substantiate this? When beside the bed of our passing loved ones we see the light of life leave the eyes. Instantly that light goes out we know there has been brought about a change. The chemist is not able to detect that change in a chemical analysis of the human body, nor the biologist in the physical structure—the soul has departed amidst the mystery connected with death. There are some things over and above us, beyond our heads, beyond the reach of our mental vision or grasp that we cannot understand, that are touched only or approached when we enter into the fields of hope and faith.

Man, because of his reasoning power occupies a peculiar place in the life of the world. What that place is is perhaps given to philosophy to answer, hence philosophy enters into a discussion of the question; "What is man?" I have not time this morning, even if I had the ability, to make a digest of what the philosophers of the world have attempted to give in the way of an answer to this. There is some reason why he has been given the faculty peculiar to him alone, why he alone is able to determine what his attitude is and to become conscious of his co-ordination with other animal life.

Besides the answer of biology and philosophy the question, What is man? there is yet the answer or religion which answer is found in attempts to determine our sonscious attitude towards a higher power. Philosophy is an attempt to co-ordinate available facts of knowledge having a bearing upon our question of determining what man is. Religion goes further and tries to determine our conscious attitude toward God. And this brings us to the second part of the question, What is man, that thou art mindful of him? The first part calls our attention to biology and philosophy and the latter part to religion, as giving an answer perhaps more important than that given by philosophy or biology as to what man is-that of determining his attitude toward this great overruling power that we call God.

When we have thus briefly looked into or examined the fore part of the question, there comes to us, after our minds have traversed the intervening periods of history, the other quotation we used: "And God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life."

The "Son" here referred to we of course, know to be the Christ; and whether we believe in him as Jesus the man, or as Jesus the Christ, it still remains true that through him has come to us the great message and doctrine, that gives no uncertain answer to the question. What is man? At this juncture let us recall that the study of the development of mankind reveals the fact that there is a universal belief in something beyond death; that there is a belief in a supreme power, the supreme being. A superficial examination of the ethnic religions might indicate that there are many instances in which a belief in the future world, or in the other world is extremely chaotic and perhaps nothing more than a belief in the activity of the souls or spirits of the departed, whether that activity be benigh or malignant, many of the religious ceremonies being efforts to placate the angry spirits or retain the good will of those not angry. These apparently very crude beliefs in the existence of the spirits departed resulting in ancestry-worship, may upon a more thorough and sympathetic examination reveal the fact that underlying the worship of departed ancestors who as spirits still interest themselves in mundane affairs is a fundamental belief in the great all-powerful ruler of all spirits, God.

So with the Fire-Worshippers and various other religions they are tribal or racial; they worship things symbolical of God. The idea of this great Power is persistent and quite universal.

For the purpose of the hour we need go no further in speaking of the Christ or this "Son" that the passage we have quoted refers to, in speaking of his teachings or philosophy, than to call attention very briefly to his belief or his teaching in regard to this phenomenon we call death. Briefly, the message that Christ brought to us is that there is a purpose in all creation, that God has created man for a specific purpose; that he has placed him here to work out his destiny; that it is a probationery period; that contingent upon his activity here is the degree of celestial glory in the state of his future activity. This brings into view the idea of a future world, and Christ has taught us to hopehas given us that buoyancy of spirit that comes only from a faith in God and in the plan that Christ has revealed to us, that the activities of an individual are not at an end when dissolution takes place, but they are taken to a place where their activity becomes more important because of their closer association with the all-pervading power of Deity-that these activities may be more directly under the supervision of the One whose hand is guiding the motion of the planets and the forces of the universe and that when our loved ones leave us they go where not so much of the disadventageous exists and where not so much of the pain is suffered, but where more of joy and peace is had, and we speak of that place as a place where they are at rest.

Whether this religion be born of a desire to have something better or whether we admit that it is natural and universal in the human race because it is a fact, still we must admit that an enormous amount of good has come to the world because of the doctrine, because of the buoyancy with which it enables us to tide over these difficult times of separating from our loved ones, because of the hope that is instilled in our hearts, that the activity of our departed friends—especially those who have left a good record—is not at an end, but they are able to continue their individuality and their works of good and acomplish still greater usefulness in some other place.

It is customary on occasions of this kind to read some facts and figures in regard to the life of the departed one. This we may well dispense with this morning. As I look around upon this audience I am made to feel that the reading of an obituary notice is unnecessary; that to those who have come here the mere dates of the birth and marriage and the other epoch-marking dates of our departed sister are unnecessary; for I cannot but believe that to every individual here stands out at this moment other things of greater and more far-reaching importance, the kindly acts of the departed one, the faithfulness of her service, the beauty of her character, her sincerity of purpose, her grace, her integrity-all are before us this morning. Had our sister been one, who, because of keenness of intellect, or perhaps because of a determination to engage in those activities, leading to the accumulation of wealth and had she been able to leave a large amount of accumulated wealth, as compared with records she has left, her life's work would have weighed but little with this audience, and as far as her life in our memory is concerned, it would have been extremely fugacious. But today her records stand out before us in brilliancy and stirs our hearts perhaps as it never has even during her life, as well as we loved to meet her. And I can conceive how as time passes and we can get further away from the direct memory of her association and therefore forget the humanity that after all was with her, her life's record, the heritage she has left to us will become more val-Why? Because unconsciously we throw aside the false criterion of the world in which success is measured by the amount of wealth a man accumulates and we put in its place the criterion of altruism and service. Consequently our hearts are today touched with that fellow feeling that makes the whole world kin. Our deceased slater has left a record that we can point to with pride and say "She was a child of As a child of God she was a sister of men and the record of her service has been that she showed her devotion to God by serving mankind." And no greater record can anyone leave than that. In no truer, more significant or in no broader way can a person show his devotion to God than in service to his fellowmen.

Today we are touched by the tender fellow-feeling of sympathetic grief, but in the hour of our affliction and in the depths of our grief, we can still rejoice that there has come to us that hope, that faith that causes us to believe in and to have assurance of a life beyond. And hence we are not as those who mourn without hope. So even in the midst of our sorrow we can lift our hearts to God and rejoice that our sister who has just left behind her such a record of sweet service to man that if the message that Christ has left to the world is divine we have the assurance that buove us up and even dries our eves from tears, and we can believe it is well with her because she has gone to the paradise of rest where under the benign influence of God who gave her life she can still exercise her sweet activity in blessing others. And for this hope and for this faith, I this morning, bless God.

WHERE THE REORGANIZED CHURCH DIFFERS FROM MORMONISM,

(The following article is from the Brookly (N. Y.) Daily Eagle" of July 5th and was written by Bro. E. B. Hull, pastor of the Brooklyn Church in reply to statements made by Miss C. T. Swartz, to the effect that "The Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints is really worse than the original body, and, although it claims to forbid polygamy, it is practiced by the members."—Editor.

In a letter to The Eagle, the Rev. E. B. Hull, pastor of the Brookdyn Branch, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Park Place and Schnectady avenue, takes issue with the statement recently made by Miss C. T. Swartz of the National Reform Association, at the Central Presbyterian Church, when she said that "the reorganized church is worse than the original body, and its members practice polygamy."

Mr. Hull, in his letter to The Eagle, says:

"This is clearly an error on the part of the lecturer. She evidently is not conversant with the history of the two organizations (the Reorganized L. D. S. and the Utah Mormons), or she would know that the Reorganized Church is in no way connected with the Utah Mormons, and is distinctly anti-polygamous; has been so from the beginning to the present time.

We do not care to assume any of the odium which attaches to those who believe in the pernicious and heretical doctrine of plural marriage, We openly denounce such obnoxious doctrine, and affirm that such teachings were never a part of the original faith of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, as founded by Joseph Smith, Jr., in 1830, or of the Reorganization, but was introduced by Brigham Young, after the emigration to Utah, in 1847, at which time he led thither a band of about 10,000 from the membership of over 150,000; this was three years after the death of the prophet Joseph Smith. The main body of the church refused to follow Brigham Young. and from the remaining members a reorganization was affected, in 1860, with Joseph Smith, the oldest son, as their leader and president.

"This man is still living, having served the church in this capacity from 1860 to the present time. He now resides in Independence, Mo., the headquarters of the church.

"We have not the least objection to what any may say of the evils of Utah Mormonism. We recognize that many evils exist among that people, and it is a fact that the Reorganized Church has done more to put down those evils (instead of being a party to them) than all the other Christian churches combined.

Says Reorganized Church First Sent Missionaries to Utah.

"Our church was the first to send missionaries into Utah, to call these people back from the vile practices and heresies into which their leaders had led them. We do not teach, practice or believe the doctrine of polygamy, nor have we ever done so. We regard it as unscriptural, unscientific and contrary to the nobler sentiments of manhood.

We do not believe in political interferance. Our members are free to support any political party, without dictation or interference from the priesthood.

We do not believe in commercialism within the church, as exhibited in Utah. While we hold to the law of tithing as a Scriptural doctrine, the paying of tithes is optional with the membership, and the spiritual authorities are not permitted to enrich themselves from the tithes gathered.

We are democratic in principle, to this extent; that in the annual Conference, legislation may originate with any delegate, whether of the priesthood or the laity, male or female; and that all proposed legislation is freely debated on the floor of the assembly, and is decided by majority vote.

We believe that the laws of the land should be strictly obeyed, and hold to the principle laid down by Joseph Smith during his life: 'He that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land.'

Our pulpit is open to the representatives of any Christian organization to debate the question. We court investigation and challenge the world to prove that we, as a body, have ever taught or practiced polygamy or any of its kindred doctrines that have been practiced by the Utah Mormon Church.

Writings Show Aversion to Polygamy.

"Our opposition to polygamy comes from not only an innate horror of its effects, but because our sacred books mention it as especially displeasing to God. One of the commandments given to the Church as early as 1831, says:

"I say unto you that whoso forbideth to marry, is not ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh."

The Book of Mormon says:

"Wherefore, my brethren, hear me and hearken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife."

"Three other places does this book inveigh against the abomination of polygamy and the reorganization, recognizing that those who would trample on God's laws would also trample on the laws of the land, began early to look with suspicion upon the pretentions of Brigham Young and his followers. Naturally they were sufferers in the introduction of these abominations, for they knew that they would be classed with those who were steeped in this iniquity. So, in 1863, we established a mission in Utah to protest against the evils practiced there, and to endeavor, so far as possible, to turn the people from the wrong, They found that their fears were well grounded. They found that the people out there were not only treating the laws of God with contempt, but they were trampling on the most sacred privilegs of citizenship in the Republic.

Consequently, we took early measures to bring these things before Congress, and recommend legislation to put a stop to these abuses. On April 12, 1876, a memorial was sent to Congress pointing out the abuses and asking that such measures be taken that would in the future bring about a better condition of things.

Says Reorganized Church Led Crusade Against Evils.

"I mention these things to show that the organization of which I am a member, and a representative, proceded other religious organizations. not only in the field of religious endeavor, to show these people the error of their ways, but preceded other bodies in recommending legislative enactments that would blot out this foul stain This has caused many of the on the Nation. newspapers of the day to draw the distinction between us and the Church in Utah. The people composing this organization were fully alive to the dangers lurking there, and not only did they begin in 1876, but they have continued to advocate national intervention looking to the blotting out of polygamy. Twelve years ago last April, this body of religious workers met in general conference in Lamoni, Iowa, and on April 17, the following resolution, with its preamble, was presented and unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, It is currently reported that polygamy is still practiced in Utah and Adjacent States and Territories, in defiance of the laws of God and the laws of the land; and

Whereas, the laws enacted by State legislation seem to be inadequate to prevent or prohibit the practice of polygamy without the intervention of Federal enactment; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in General Conference assembled, favor the enactment of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy in all the States and Territories under the jurisdiction of the Republic."

"I presume that the question of Mormonism never had a more thorough investigation than it had during what is known as the Smoot trial in the United States Senate, in 1906. Of this, U. S. Senator Julius C. Burrows, chairman of the committee on Investigation, says:

"In order to induce his followers more readily to accept this infamous doctrine, Brigham Young himself invoked the name of Joseph Smith the Martyr, whom many sincerely believe to be a true prophet, and ascribed to him the reception of a revelation from the Almighty in 1848, commanding the Saints to take unto themselves a multiplicity of wives, limited in number only by the measures of their desires. *** Such the mythical story palmed off on a deluded people."

"We also have the decisions of two United States Courts, showing that the Utah Mormoo Church departed from the faith and afterward incorporated into their system the belief and practice of polygamy and other false doctrines, contrary to the original Church, of which the reorganization is the lawful and legal successors.

Joseph Smith, the eldest son of Joseph Smith, jr., the prophet, is now acting as the earth head of the Reorganized Church; he is the foremost anti-polygamist. Joseph Fielding Smith, the head of the Utah Mormons, is the son of Hyrum Smith; he is a polygamist, with five wives, and has a family of forty-three children.

Not one of our leaders has even been arrested or charged with violating the civil law, nor has the Government ever had the least trouble in dealing with us. The Mormon Church has been a continual source of annoyance to the Nation, and by upholding polygamy it places a blotch upon the pages of our history that belongs only to the ages of barbarism. Their leaders are now living in self-confessed violation of the law, and thousands of dollars have been spent by the government in prosecuting them.

Now, let any fair-minded man consider these facts and he will readily see that for us to say nothing, when these two churches are represented as the same, would be a sin of omission of which we do not wish to be guilty."

JACKSON COUNTY. By Elder Edward Rannie.

In the revelations to the Church Jackson County is made an important place, and whatever fame may come to other places it will not rob it of its pre-eminence as a locality in the building up of Zion. Within its borders will be located a city called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety," the place for the city of Zion, a consecrated spot. Independence is the center place and the place for the temple. It is one of the places where the saints were commanded to purchase land. (Doctrine and Covenants 45:12.57:1.98:9.)

Because of the facts stated above, it ought to be of interest to the saints to know something about the present condition of Jackson County, and what are the opportunitiess for people who may locate within its borders. The writer has lived within its borders for five years, and during that time has learned some things by observation, and others by diligent search where it is possible to find them, and although it is but a small part of what can be obtained, the few facts to be presented will be of value to those who may contemplate moving into that region of country. I am not in any way connected with any real estate firms, either direct or remote, by which I could receive any renumeration, my only motive is to be of service to the saints. It possesses rich and valuable agricultural lands at prices from $100 to $500 or more per acre, depending on its location to the important markets. and the improvements that may be thereon.

On five acres of land within a reasonable distance from Kansas City, or Independence, an honest, industrious man, one who possesses a knowledge of how to raise vegetables, small fruit and poultry, can have a larger income, a better home, and more of the real comforts of life than the common laborer who receives from $1.50 to $2.00 per day. The same kind of a man on ten acres will, with some care and diligence, have more of the comforts of life and home than the average mechanic who receives a daily wage of from $3.00 to $4.00 per day. And the man who has the ability and means to farm larger tracts, up to the hundreds of acres, his income will be correspondingly larger.

Jackson County has a population of more than 300,000, and Kansas City, Mo., had in 1910 a population of 248,000, and the preceding decade it had increased 85,000; the same ratio of increase from 1910 to the present year would make the present number 280,000. Kansas City, Kansas, is only separated from it by the state line; a person can stand with a foot in each city and at the same time be in two different states; it has a population of about 100,000.

Independence has a population of more than 10,000 and is connected by street railway with Kansas City; the distance between the business centers of the two cities is about ten miles, and the running time for the street cars is about fifty minutes. The distance between the corporate limits of the two cities is about two and onehalf miles which is largely occupied by suburban residences. Kansas City is a great industrial community, it has great mills, factories and shops; it is the commercial metropolis of the Southwest: it is the second in importance in the world in the live stock trade, with its mammoth packing houses; it is a great railroad center, twenty trunk lines entering it, handling its monstrous passenger traffic through the second largest passenger station in the United States; it is to have one of the ten reserve banks to be located in the United States, as a result of recent legislation at Washington, D. C., changing our entire banking system. Independence and all the County shares in the wealth that comes to the community because of the great importance of Kansas City in the commercial world. Jackson County contains great stone quarries and large cement mills which are very valuable to the building trades. The county has nearly 300 miles of macadamized roads, and is adding to it each year at an outlay of one-half million dollars. The Standard Oil Refining Company has great refineries at Sugar Creek, two and one-half miles from Independence, which gives employment to several hundred men. Kansas City has two large public markets, where the farmer, truck gardner, and fruit grower can dispose of his products to the very best advantage to himself and the consumer.

Both Kansas City and Independence can feel an honest pride in her public schools. In the former city the building of schools is a continuous proposition; the constant increase of the population will not permit them for one year to cease building operations. In the latter city two new eight room buildings are just completed, which shows the continuous growth in the city in which we have a special interest.

The extensive coal fields near to our county is a valuable asset to those engaged in manufacturing, and a help to the home consumer in obtaining fuel at reasonable prices. The great lumber regions southwest being near to us is a boon to the home builder, making it possible to obtain a home at less cost than it is possible in the country, farther north. The climate is temperate, the winters are not severe, springtime comes early and the autumns linger well on to Christmas time. This makes it very desirable for the agriculturest and those engaged in out door labor. In other parts of the country there are several towns ranging from several hundred to more than one thousand in population, all being connected with Kansas City by railroads and wagon roads.

In a religious way the opportunities are excellent for our people, and conditions for future growth are very favorable. In Kansas City, Mo., there are four branches (Kansas City, Kansas, six). In Independence there are three branches and two missions, all of which have church buildings; the difference between the branch and a mission is that the former has an organization with the usual set of officers, and the latter has no organization, and is in charge of some one appointed by the Stake Presidency, and has all the usual meetings, including Sunday school and Religio; it is the preliminary work for a branch. There are two branches between Kansas City and Independence: Mt. Washington and Englewood, and one at Lee's Summit, fourteen miles from Independence, and missions at East Independence and Courtney. The membership is quite near four thousand in the county.

In the light of the above facts, from every view point, Jackson County is an important place to which our people can come. It offers opportunities to all classes of labor; the farmer, gardner, fruit grower, poultry man, mechanic, common laborer, stenographer, salesman, salesladies, business men, professional occupations, such as law-yers, doctors, surgeons, dentists and educators. There is not a place in our country where the opportunities are better for the honest and industrious man or woman to obtain the comforts of life. The one that will succeed in other parts of our country can do the same in Jackson County, and the one that is a failure elsewher, if it is because he lacks honesty, industry, and business ability, will likely continue on in the same old way. When we consider the great natural resources of the county and what is tributary to it, and that it is a midway between the two oceans, and far north from the Gulf of Mexico, so that if troublesome times come with foreign nations and we must needs "flee to Zion for safety," it will most likely offer the safety desired. The provision is a loving expression of our heavenly Father's watch care over his children.

Wickedness is found here as common as elsewhere, but in the gathering of the righteous of our own people, in co-operation with the other good people in the community, many of the evils will be removed that we now suffer from. It is cowardly to run in the face of danger, and then come back after the victory has been won by the villent soldiers for the right.

Our heavenly Father knew that Zion must have a small beginning, it must grow out from the center, and extend as far and wide as there are righteous people to occupy, and he selected a part of the country that was rich in natural resources. Many of our people are making mistakes that bring to them financial and spiritual loss, because they locate in communities where the opportunities for earning a living are not good, and they must soon move elsewhere, which is often to Jackson County, which, had they done in their first move would sometimes have saved the price of a good home. The Lord does not want us to move to Zion because we cannot earn a living elsewhere, but for the reason that he has a marvelous work to accomplish in the latter days that the prophets from the time of Enoch to that of Christ have prophesied of, and we are to be coworkers with him to bring it about. If we had some cellish motive in view, just to go there and have a pleasant time while some one else does the work, we petter stay away. I will venture an opinion in the application of the law concerning the gathering and what the attitude of the elders should be in giving instruction to the saints, and should the reader have a doubt in his mind as to the interpretation given, write to the presiding bishop of the church, and if the writer is in error he will be just as willing to correct the mistake as he is to write this paper. It is unscendy to have a controversy in the church papers, or in private, when it is so easy to appeal to the persons whom the law makes the counsellors in such matters.

1st. The party interested, when it becomes necessary to change his location, his first effort should be to locate in Jackson County, for Zion must be built from the center out.

2nd. There is not another place in Zion and the regions round about that offers so many opportunities for all classes of labor, business, and professional work by which it is possible for men to earn a living and help spread the gospel. This will not in any way conflict with the law that refers to gathering to the regions round about, but the first effort should be in that region of country, and should conditions not be favorable then go to some of the near counties, this is not because some of the surrounding country does not offer good opportunities, but because we must concentrate our energies and not waste them by too much scattering. It is no more necessary under present conditions for all to move to the central community than for every one holding the priesthood should go out in the field as missionaries. The deciding of the matter is one of the very important things in our life and which will affect the Lord's work in building up Zion. The law points out the way, "for according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion." (D. C. That does not mean that you must sell 72:3). your farm or home or business where you live and put the money all in a sack, and lay it and your personal effects and children at the feet of the bishop. The interpretation put on the law by the bishopric and approved by the church is, that you should file an inventory with the bishop which would inform him as to your wealth, your indebtedness, your occupation, the number of children, and with it any information that would help him understand your condition and that of your children, their needs and plans for the future in regard to their occupations, the conditions where you live, whether in a branch or in an isolated condition. This is not wanted because the bishop wants to rob you, or dictate to you in your private affairs and be an autocrat, and domineer over you like some despot. He wants to be your friend, to help you so that you can do the best possible for yourself and children and at the same time help build up Zion; and this applies the same to the Stake Bishopric whom the law contemplates should be workers together for the welfare of the saints to be friends and helpers. One of the great needs in the world and in the church is the assistance of kind hearted and sympathetic friends, persons who are not actuated by selfish motives to make money out of you for their personal gain.

The law says (D. C. 128:4) the saints should consult the elders and bishops before moving. It is a very important question as to how far an elder can go in instructing the saints in these matters. He surely cannot take the place of the bishopric, any more than he would one of the twelve in appointing a missionary, for that is a part of their special work. The only thing he can consistently do is to help the saints in giving them an understanding of the law, and in that way help the bishopric, just as he can help one of the twelve in his work by teaching the saints and the priesthood their rights and privileges under the law, and pointing them to the one who has a right to administer it. To attempt to persuade saints to go to some particular locality because they live there, or because there is cheap land there, and then move away the first chance they get is reprehensible, and lays the party open to the imputation that he has a selfish motive in view and is sharing in the commissions with some real estate firm. The bishopric of the Church, assisted by the Stake bishopric, has this important branch of the Lord's work under their care, and what the elders and others should do is to help them, and not usurp their office; and so long as the saints will seek to carry on their business through real estate firms and elders whom the church or the Lord has not appointed to do that special work, they will have financial loss and other troubles to annoy them. It is not very long since two parties informed me of their losses; one of $800 and another of $1000, and also stated that they had disregarded the advice of the bishop in locating, and after their loss they then proceeded to do what they were advised to do in the first place.

The high price of land in Jackson County is not a barrier to our people locating in that county. It is no higher than in other parts of the country where the population is as great; if the Gentiles can pay the prices, is a Latter Day Saint less capable, is he less industrious, is he so much of a weakling that he must have a miracle to take the place of industry and economy. Under the Lord's co-operative plan, by saving rent, every honest, industrious, worthy person can obtain a home, whether in the city, town, or country. Independence the Order of Enoch has one of the most beautiful locations in the city, with a temporary church located on it where all the regular services are held and the prices of the lots are from $125 to $275 each and can be paid for at the rate of $10 per month. You cannot buy them and speculate on them and make money out of your brother's labor; they are for homes. It is the intention of the Order to do the same in regard to farm lands when it has money to buy with. No higher or holier duty rests upon the saints than to help in the work of helping our worthy poor to obtain homes. The Lord reproved the saints for failure in this line in 1834, and they suffered the chastening hand of God through mob violence for their failure. (D. C. 102:2.)

The only thing that stands in the way of every honest, worthy, Latter Day Saint having a home is our own unrighteousness, a failure to honor God's law. It is a conservative estimate to say that one quarter million dollars in the last ten years has been spent by our people unwisely by the advice of our unwise elders,-in mining stock, and in other foolish ways that had not much business stability in them; speculating, to get something for nothing, and it is still going on. No greater blessing, in a temporal way, could come to our people than for some of our people who have the means, and are good farmers, to buy farms in Jackson County, and for others to help with their money, so that through the church and the Order of Enoch honest, industrious, capable and worthy ones, could be helped to obtain the same. Then we could have a storehouse in Independence, and very much tithing could be paid in the products of the farm. With only the number of missionaries' families that now reside in Independence, and receiving one-third of their allowance in produce, would save the church more than $3000 per year in cash, and the saving in the cost of living would also go into other homes and institutions like the Sanitarium, and the old folks home would be able to get a large portion of their needs supplied from the same source.

Jesus said: "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." (Luke 16:8) and it is just as true today as when uttered by the Master. Men of the world are not complaining about the prices of land in Jackson County: they are buying it. They know that it is valuable as gold; an investment without any The people whom the Lord told that it was wise to purchase the land prefer to invest in mine speculation, and other doubtful enterprises, and in so doing confirm the old saying "that a foolish person and his money is easily parted." The Lord said that the saints should send their treasures up to Zion, and blessings would be theirs in this life and in the life to come. (D. C.

As a concluding paragraph, the reader's attention is called to Doctrine and Covenants 72:5 where instructions are given concerning persons going to Zion, and the elders should be careful to teach this important feature of the law. It provides for a certificate from a local bishop or from three elders to the bishop in Zion. What for? The bishop wants to know what kind of a man he is dealing with. He cannot know everyone person-Has the party been faithful to his duties outside of Zion? Has he observed the law? Does he render financial help to the missionary? Does he help in financial matters in the branch? he has been faithful in these matters, the bishop will know that he is dealing with an honest man, and not an idler who wants to live from the fruit of other's toil, or that the person is so blinded by selfishness and covetousness that he cannot see the beauty in the sweet gospel story.

To the Saints of the Utah District:-On September 1st we have due on the Salt Lake church building the sum of $2000.00, and are desirous of raising as much of this on $2000.00, and are desirous or ruising as macro or ruis sum as is possible among our own people in the district. Each one of us who can should help, even though it may be with but a small amount, and I carnestly urge upon one and all to make extra effort towards this fund. The general church funds have a great many pressing de-mands upon them just now in carrying on the work of preaching the gospel in practically all parts of the world, and I am sorry to say that Utah does not appear to have done her share towards the financial needs of the district and the church at large. The Saints should determine to make the Utah district self-sustaining, and I have been laboring to this end in the past six months, but regret to say that we have been compelled to call on the Presiding Bishopric several times for help, and I have felt humiliated each time. The responsibility is ours; it is our business to see to it that our financial needs are supplied. Some of our people have done well, while others done very little, and some, I am ashamed to say, do nothing at all. Let us each try to help. Those who have done well, try to make a little more sacrifice; those who have done little, do more; and these who have done nothing at all, let them awake, remembering that we are all to work together if we are to succeed. And who wants to An immediate response is imperative.

DIED.

Brackenbury.—On the morning of July 8th, 1914, In-dependence, Mo., the little infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. Leo Brackenbury, who was born on the Nation's holiday, and had lived but three or four days after birth. Funeral services were held, conducted by Elders E. L. Kelley and G. E. Harrington.

Patrick.—At Lamoni, Iowa, July 1, 1914, Sr. Rebecca Patrick, aged 93 years, 7 months. She was born in King County, Nova Scotia, December 1, 1820, and was baptized at Stewartsville, Mo., October 9, 1893 by William Summerfield; confirmed by B. J. Dice and Summerfield. She loved her Savior and the gospel to the end. During eight years living at the Church Home she was loved for gentieness and patience. Funeral held at the Home, sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by A. S. Cochran.

Deller—At Rich Hill, Mo., July 12, 1914, Pearl Miller. She was born at Shobetown, Mo., Oct. 19, 1891, was married to Joseph Deller, Nov. 1899. Baptized April 28, 1901, by John C. Foss. She leaves husband, two daughters, mother, and two brothers to mourn. Funeral from the church, sermon by James Moler. Interment in Green church, sermon Lawn Cemetery.

Higgins.—Leo Lafayette was born Sep. 24, 1884, at Liremore, California; baptized at Lamoni, Iowa, when 10 years old by Elder Joseph Snively. Died July 7, 1914, in Kansas City, Kan., funeral services by I. N. White. The brother was a great, but patient sufferer for a number of years but dies firm in the faith of the Saints. He leaves years out dies him in the latter of the Saints. He leaves a mother, two sisters, and two brothers, and while mourn-ing their loss, was exceedingly comforted to know he left a testimony with them of his acceptance with his heavenly Father.

LABORERS TOGETHER WITH THE LORD.

An Epistle by the Presiding Bishop. The assumption is all are laborers. If not, why There is certainly plenty to do; every kind and class of necessary work. And it may be truly said that if there are any who are not helpers, it is neither the fault of our heavenly Father nor the church, for due provision is made for all and for the good of all, and each made responsible only according to his ability to do.

Whatever may be the policy of men in the world, it must be admitted that in the Lord's work opportunity is extended to all: To some five talents, to some two talents, and to some one, but to every one according to his special ability; and all are instructed to be diligent, honest, true and Christ-like in labor, each preferring his brother to himself. This was the order followed when Jesus was personally instructing in the cities and regions of Galilee, hence we notice in the assemblies for good, the ministers, apostles and elders, also the members "who ministered unto him of their substance;" but every one a recognized helper.

No, not everyone, says the objector, for some who followed after did not do so to help. True; but these are marshalled in a different body. They had followed with improper motives. Jesus said to them: "It is not for the doctrine that you follow me but for the loaves and fishes." These certainly should represent no class of the saints. They are neither preachers nor helpers as tithe payers.

The apostle in the Corinthian letter sets forth the measure of true saints: "We then, as workers together with Christ, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." This is in perfect agreement with the instruction to the church in our own time: are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all." D. C. 119:8.

A little more than two months of the 1914 conference year has now passed and it is expected that every minister whether general officer or missionary is long ago at his post of duty. But we must not forget that the same strict rule which requires these missionaries in their places in the firing line applies to each bishop and agent and every other officer and member in the body. Truly, "All are called according to the gifts of God unto them.

The work of the year outlined in the business of the conference may well be said to extend to nearly every part of the world. As rapidly as possible the missionary work is being extended to "every kindred, tongue and people."
To accomplish this, under the guidance of our heavenly Fether, requires faith, sacrifice and the fervent discharge of duty on the part of each and all. The burden is upon all; the expense is incurred by the body which undertakes the work. Not simply by the missionary who moves forward in all the world to teach; not by the Bishopric which reaches out to help all and supply every just demand; but the Church under divine help and direction; each member responsible for his part or lot in the work; each to use the serength and wisdom possessed to carry on the work and each to be divinely rewarded by and by according to his faithfulness as a true laborer in the work of the gospel of Christ.

The present conference year the mission work has been duly provided for in America, and extended in the countries of Europe, Asia, Australia and the Islands of the Sea. The missionary must be provided for as he moves forth to occupy in the special field assigned, and the support required for the successful worker, under the conditions in many places today, is much as it was when Paul labored in Thessalonica and was supplied by the faithful saints at Philippi.

This slight suggestion of work outlined in home and foreign mission fields it is hoped will be sufficient to awaken the earnest, thoughtful saints everywhere to present demands for diligent and faithful duty wherever they may be in the body, for the families alone of this gospel army require about nine thousand dollars per month in addition to the proper expense of the minister.

But there are many essential features of the work, other than the home and foreign mission fields, which must be sustained and strengthened if we are to win final success in bearing a proclamation of the gospel to all the world.

a. The church must look after and care for the destitute, aged and helpless, and assist as becometh saints the industrious and worthy poor and needy.

b. The sick and afflicted must be cared for and supplied with proper comfort and surroundings as the law especially provides, thereby requiring in case of need the extension of special help to laymen and ministers.

c. Due provision and care is to be furnished homeless and needy children, and orphans furnished with proper home and opportunities in life, if we are to do to others as we would that they do to us, and this rule of action is announced and commended in the work and preaching of

d. Proper educational work on the part of young men and young women is essential in establishing and maintainig the church of Christ and all should help this special work of assisting the needy in the attainment of such true wisdom and knowledge as will qualify them in the discharge of life's grave duties.

e. It is essential in carrying on our work that we "live by every word that procedeth from the mouth of God," hence, we cannot succeed if we fail to move along the lines of the law which bring about equality and oneness among the people. It is therefore necessary to continue and more fully carry out the provisions for furnishing employment and assisting the industrious and upright in obtaining homes by the church in its work, and also through the benevolent, helpful societies incorporated for this purpose.

f. Laboring for the redemption of Zion, is one of the highest and most worthy thoughts to be entertained, as we move forward in our warfare and work. It should not be for self, but "seeking the good of our neighbor" instead of self. And if the work is performed in this spirit there will abound profound rejoicing in our labors instead of selfish feeling and criticism of others, as they move in their work. Each then should be equally interested in the purchase of sufficient lands as commanded and feel as ready to extend a helping hand to the body in its work as himself and if we can build in this spirit it will be evidence that we have overcome the spirit of distrust and selfishness which in 1833 defeated for a time the hope of the saints. This too was right, for if we cannot build with an eye single to the glory of God, and with a spirit ever ready to help our brother and neighbor, the Lord could not accept the work if accomplished and it would be in vain.

In the building in this country it was absolutely necessary to provide for ample ground and accommodations for a headquarters and work. The lord in his wisdom specially directed this and yet fallible man occasionally complains. The laborer with the Lord, however, will extend his hand as a helper. In other countries, especially Palestine, there is urgent necessity not only for mission help but also for suitable headquarters in Jerusalem. To postpone this latter will be as serious mistake as was the postponment of purchases in Zion for twenty years. Twenty thousand dollars for this work now would help the work wonderfully in Jerusalem.

Twenty members could answer this call at once and with the helping hand, fully and forever relieve the situation, thus blessing themselves and the Lord's work. May we not get a ready re-sponse from this number for the timely establishment of so importment a work?

The claim is made that we are not now strong enough for such important step. This is an error of selfishness and fear, having nothing in common with true faith. The instruction of the Lord is "Bring ve all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Poverty and failure accompany those who do not put forth the helping hand, not the faitful who This is the incentive to true success so often noted in the instruction of Jesus and without faith it is impossible to please him. It is for the good and growth of every department of the work, wherever the same may be located that we write. The burden of the heart of the faithful should be the helpful prayer and the helping hand for the Lord's work. So may we all labor.

E. L. Kelley, Independence, Missouri. July 17, 1914.

WORTHY OF CONGRATULATION.

Independence is worthy of the congratulations of all good people in its victorious local option campaign against the forces that work for the perpetuation of evil. The drink evil with all that it entails is to be checked for four years at least, and it is to be hoped that during that time the forces that stand for better civic and social conditions, and the protection of the weak and innocent, will gather such strength that never again will the peace and prosperity of the city be endangered by the opening of saloons. The fight upon the part of the "dry forces" was honorably though energetically made, and the victory fairly won. That the city may not be robbed of its victory, a number of the citizens stand pledged with a fund of several thousand dollars to see that the law against the sale of intoxicating liquus is enforced.

Under these improved conditions Independence will be a better place in which to live. Our mothers, wives, and daughters, may walk the streets to the stores or places of business without having to meet the offense which the saloon al-ways places in their way. Our young men will not be subjected to the temptation which drink offers, and no doubt many will be saved from starting in the path which leads to a wreckage of life with all its hopes.

Sooner or later the liquor question in America must be settled, and will be settled once for all. The disastrous effects of the liquor business are too apparent to be unseen or ignored, and we believe there are enough good people in the country to deliver it from this evil. A constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors as beverages can be passed, and will be passed before many years. All good people should work for it.

No Escape From Conscience.-- A man who recently committed a crime in Arkansas recently surrendered himself to the police of Kansas City though he had never been suspicious of the crime. He declared that his conscious would not let him alone, that the nights were hell to him, and though he knew that it meant long imprisonment or even death for him he must give himself up. The consciousness of guilt is destructive of all peace and happiness; it makes life a misery. Some there are who because of a hardened conscience may throw off the sense of guilt, but it can be only for a time. Sooner or later the full sense of guilt must come to every man for his sins and he will be anxious to either put himself in an attitude of repentance and thus secure mercy, or to suffer the penalty through justice and judgment that he might be again free. The demands of conscience when coming in harmony with the requirements of God's law, should be heeded even though to so do brings suffering for to do otherwise is merely to postpone the meeting with the consequences to a less opportune time.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

Following a beautiful anthem by the choir under the direction of Bro. Leo Brackenbury, the 1914 edition of "O for the Wings of a Dove," Bro. D. J. Krahl, the superintendent of the Sunday school, delivered a sermon princi-pally on the events of the past week, first reading the 4th chapter of 1st Corinthians. He rejoiced in his heart 4th chapter of 1st Corinthians. He rejoiced in his heart because the result, of the election of the past week was a step towards the redemption of Zion. It is a step towards purification. Spoke of the object of our coming here. If we have not come here influenced by the right Spirit our coming will be in vain. Compared the gospel to physician's prescription. Among the, ingredients of the gospel prescription is brotherly love. Christ, the physician, cannot heal unless we do our part. Speaking of woon down he would have she who breeks the law of the land should of wrong doers, he who breaks the law of the land should be turned over to those whose duty it is to put such laws into execution. Revenge should never be in the heart of a brother. Speaking of spirituous liquors he said that the medical schools have found no place for alcohol in the materia medica. We should not permit any one to become a drunkard through our vote.

On account of illness we attended nother the afternoon or evening service. In the evening Elder T. J. Sheldon delivered his second discourse of the series on the Book of Mormon, but we cannot give items concerning it.

We cannot refrain from saying something more on cal option. Now that Independence has gone "dry," a permit has been granted by the court to hold a local option election for Jackson county outside of Kansas City and Independence, which will be the 22nd of August. Of this Jackson county election the Kansas City Star says: "Th local option election August 22 is going to make it (Jack son county) an ideal place in which to train boys and girls son country an ideal place in which to train boys and girls into splendid men and women." With the influence of the Independence victory and the sentiment already prevailing in the county outside of Kansas City, there is no doubt but that it will carry by a large majority. Mt. Washington and the more rural districts are decidedly for local option, or against the sale of liquors. The towns in the eastern part of the county may show more resist-

It is stated that there was no election ever held like the one last week in Independence, and its influence is already felt, not only state wide, but to some extent all over the nation. Although men and women worked shoulder to shoulder from daylight till dark, and many glaring steals prevented, yet under cover, where it could not be observed, vote-buying was carried on. It had be-come a common practice in Jeckson county, and public officials have declared that little could be done to prevent it under the present election laws. A movement has just been started in St. Louis, asking Kansas City to has just been started in St. Louis, asking Kansas City to join with them in asking the Governor to appoint a commission to revise the election laws so that an honest election may be had. As it is now the crooks run the elections and justice is defeated and the honest, law abiding people are thwarted in any effort for that which is for the good of all the people. The work of the Independence victory is only begun. Meetings are to be kept up at intervals, a league has been organized for the purpose of seeing that good men are nominated and that. per the value of the purpose of seeing that good men are nominated and that honest elections are held, as well as for the enforcement of the local option law, to break up gang rule, and to nominate men not controlled by the saloon interests and by crooks.

The following editorial appeared in the Kansas City Times of July 23rd:

CITIZENS IN EXCHANGE FOR BOOZE

"Independence has made a great step forward in bid-ding for good residents in exchange for booze. It has traded off its saloons for a fine future as a residence suburb of Kansas City.

As a city grows it always develops favorite suburban towns where its people enjoy living. These towns give their residents the advantages of life in the amplitude of a quiet, wooded place, combined with those that come from nearness to a big city.

Fich out any group of men in New York City, and you are apt to find one living at Cornwall, another at Hastings, and a third at Summit, N. J. They prefer these places for their families to the distractions and congestion of Manhattan itself.

gestion of Manhattan itself.

This suburban growth is going to come in the vicinity of Kansas City and Independence, by its vote Tuesday, is insuring its future as a splendid suburban residence town. It has fine natural advantages in its nearness to the city, and in its accessibility. In addition it is a heautiful old place, with its shaded streets and its attractive homes. Now it has added the crowning advantage of providing wholesome conditions of living by doing away with the action.

Whatever may be a man's personal views of drinking, it is impossible not to recognize that the saloon, as an institution, is demoralizing; that it is a liability to a town, Saloons encourage loafing. It is only necessary to turn to the muncipal farm of Kansas City to find that a large share of the disorder and crime of a city comes from liquor. Independence has voted to rid itself of this liability.

By this very act it has invited the people of this community to consider its advantages from a residential stant-point. A home in Independence is more valuable today than it was on Monday, because of the decision to stop the sale of liquer there.

That substantial Missouri town has adopted the wisest possible course to assure its prosperity and future growth."—Kansas Gitv Times.

The Times and Star have had many good things to say about the Independence election. It is a temperance paper. Bro. T. W. Chatburn came home about two weeks ago, having been overcome with the heat in Oklahoma, where it was 107 in the shade. He was immediately put in a cooler (not the kind of "cooler" that drunks are put in) till his fever had abated, and through careful nursi in a day or two was able to take a sleeper for home. in a day or two was able to take a sleeper for home. On election day he had recovered sufficiently to go to the polls and cast a "dry" vote. After the victory had been won Bro. Chatburn said, "Now we have made a good start towards the redemption of Zion." With cursing some of the "wets" lay the blame of their defeat on the Saints, or as they term it, "the——Mormons." We are willing to take the blame, but want to give credit to others for helping. It is said that some of the "wets" have stated that they would like to trade Mormons for nerroes. Well, Independence has exchanged home. negroes. Well, Independence has exchanged booze for more good citizens, whether Mormons or otherwise, and these would-be traders will have to fall in line or trade themselves for more better citizens.

In justice to the negroes here will say that they have been taught that they have a right to dispose of their ocen taught that they have a right to dispose of their vote as they please, and that many whites also sell their votes. There are some honorable negroes who hold principle above a few dollars. Ten young white voters were heard to say that they each received five dollars for their votes. Another thing, credit should be given to E. F. Jones of St. Louis for all the details in organizing and drilling both men and wowner for the garantize. and drilling both men and women for the campaign.

Now just a word about reunion. As per notice already given the N. E. Ill. reunion will meet at Plano, Aug. 21-30. Please send your orders to me not later than Aug. 12th. The tents are shipped from Madison, Wis., over two roads so must have time so they will be sure and get there on time.

Be sure and order your springs at the same time. Let us come with the spirit of worship and a desire to get close to God first and then let us enjoy the things of nature and all else that tends to our good. member of the Southern Wisconsin Committee let us remember the date Aug. 28 to Sep. 6. Send your orders for tents for the Madison reunion to A. E. Gratz, Dunning St., tents for the Madison reunion to A. E. Grazz, Duming St., Madison, Wis., not later than Aug. 20. Please order your springs at the same time. The prices of tents have already been published. And now the question is will you be there?

Lynn, Nebr., July. Dear Ensign:—As I love to read your pages and the various letters from the Saints, it seems that I should contribute something. We have no church or branch here, and I am isolated from church privileges so the Ensign and Herald are my preachers. They keep me posted on the church or the work of the church. They are a great help to the church and the Saints.

I live in the sand hill country 7 miles east of Lynn,

Nebr. I have belonged to the church since June 9, 1902, and I feel grateful to God that I united. I know it is God's work. I want to admonish the Saints, one and all, to live faithful and humble. I believe there is great destruction coming on the earth and if we don't live right we wont escape them. I am trying in my weakness, to get the people to see the light, but it seems like the things of this world have blinded their minds, so they can't see.

If any of the elders will come out here before the first of August I think I can get a place for them to preach. They can send me a card to Lynn, Nebr., and I will meet them at Angora, Nebr.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. A. Norris.

LOCAL OPTION WINS IN INDEPENDENCE.

In the interests of Home and Child Welfare, the mothers of all denominations, turned out in great numbers on Tuesday, the 21st, to try to counteract the tactics of election crooks and crafty polititians.

The fathers had patroled the streets in relays of one hundred, during all the two nights previous, the same idea in view. On election morn at daybreak, their companions began joining them and the battle was on!

The efforts of the day opened with a genuine battle—a brief account of it and appeal to men to leave home and business and "stand up with these good women and men, and help us hold these legalized thugs until we get a fair vote and a square count"-was quickly printed on hand bills and the crowds kept supplied. Mrs. Dr. Twyman, (wife of the young physician chosen some weeks ago to lead the local option movement here) had a revolver shoved in her face as she protested when two respected citizens were beaten brutally by "wets." The police when appealed to said they were too busy to look after the matter. This was the only violent scene, (although in one ward especially the voters were very insulting at times), the saloon element exhibiting a spirit or tolerance born of the realization that they must (or mustn't); that it's of no use; of curiosity, of surprise and pent up anger.

Why? because wherever their men met to buy votes or congregated for whatever reason-there the mothers of the opposition were also. groups were invariably scattered; no word or action could escape their eves or ears or the quick snap of the dozens of cameras in action every where.

Without the courage of their convictions the women would undoubtedly have failed in their campaign, for it was a trying experience, but they proved brave and undaunted. Their convictions were born of sad experience with the evil effects of liquor on the home and individual. They might have failed because the majority was only 105 votes as it was. (In the ward where there should have been over 200 negro votes, one hundred did not vote. It was generally understood all day that the negroes were afraid of the women and cameras; and as a consequence, whenever the "paymen" who were easily "spotted" approached them, the groups were scattered They had no opportunity to by the women. empty their full pocket books.

Especial vigilance had to be exercised from four to seven o'clock in the evening, for the saloon men were getting desperate at being foiled in their attempts to accomplish much if any thing. The corners were guarded from early morning till after eight at night, by especially appointed women (Sr. B. C. Smith and Sr. I. N. White were among those who performed this duty, the long day through.) Men and women notaries took affidavits at the poles as another safeguard.

The leader of the saloon forces is a leading county "politician", and was much in evidence all day, but merely because, whether in his auto or walking the streets, he was accompanied by two women, who also had an auto as well as a camera. One of these women had been especially requested two weeks ago to take him in charge for the day. This was our Sr. A. L. Yingling. Being acquaintances and friends for some twentyfive years past made this duty less trying, although she accepted it with considerable hesitation. But having entered into the fray, it would never do not to succeed, and so he was everywhere headed off by a very persistent, very pleasant and jolly little women, who had determined to call no one names, to spend no time trying to convert at the last minute, but merely to entertain and keep the harrassed one in a good humor and out of mischief, until the polls were closed.

He was the perfect gentleman from early morning till late at night, never losing his patience but once, when as he approached a telephone and discovered her at his elbow, he exclaimed, Well if you must hear, I suppose you must," and he proceeded to send two messages which were promptly reported to anti-saloon headquarters. These were of such a nature that they called forth an eloquent plea from Sr. Yingling, during Yingling, I wish you would not continue this." Then later, in reference to her tactics, "When are you going to stop all this?" "Just whenever you stop Mr.—" said she and smilingly continued to follow him about town.

Once as they entered saloon headquarters, and noted the wrath on the faces of his co-workers there assembled, one of these exclaimed, "Well are you a prisoner, that you have to be guarded by two women and a youngster?" To which Sr. Yingling replied, "Gentlemen he is not a prisoner, but he understands! He just can't help the circumstances; nor can we; we just have to know what is going on!" Soon one of the men called out, -, what are we going to do about-An uplifted hand stopped him and Mr-"I can only get that by wireless," and sadly departed.

Other women had similar experiences, guarding certain bar-tenders, saloon porters, men and corners and groups, wherever Dr. Twyman or others in charge directed them.

One of our sisters heard the most prosperous of the eight saloon keepers say, "Well they'll find we are good losers," to which she could not resist replying, "Yes, but you must give the women credit for the victory."
"Yes, indeed that's true," said he.

"And some of us may be sick in bed for a week,

"I sincerely hope not, lady!" "But we've fought a good fight."
"Yes, lady"

The plans and organization for this campaign were most systematic from start to finish. Added to this, as aids to the venture, were—the extraordinary July day, it being actually cool and breezy. Otherwise the women might not have held out in such numbers. Also the special services and prayermeetings and programs in various churches; and on the court house lawn during the week previous ministers and state prohibition officers held forth at night, were of great assistance. That Providence has had a guiding hand in the affairs of the election is the opinion of the churches.

Independence is the largest "dry" city in the The next big effort on foot now is to have the whole county outside of Kansas City and Independence go "dry" in the coming fall election.

To the women goes the credit of winning the election. Undoubtedly the vigilence of the women prevented the buying of votes and if any votes were bought Tuesday it was done mighty carefully. The method was now and effective. Two or more women were assigned to follow each suspected man and stay with him all day. suspected man and stay with him all day. And they obeyed orders to the letter. The men did not like the procedure but it was taken good naturedly. There was no escape. It was said that one man started out in the morning with $600 in his pockets and when night came he still had the $600.-Independence Examiner.

THE WOMEN OF INDEPENDENCE.

When the women undertake a job they usually put it trough. Without their help at Independence yesterday the men could never have won the election which made the town "dry."

The women organized the vigilance committee, the camera squad, the detective agency. They followed suspected repeaters around. They kept tab on the "wet" leaders. They photographed men who might be voting illegally. In every way their energy and efficiency were

"Tell me a story!" We mothers hear this almost daily. We are not all story tellers. But we do have minds, and should cultivate our memories, and accumulate bits of information which will satisfy and delight the children about us. She holds her children close. They enjoy life together, their interests are more nearly one; The children are among the brightest and most original at school. #### THE COMING OF THE LORD.

By Elder J. M. Stubbart.
But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? Mal. 3:2. If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinners appear?-1 Pet. 4:18. In considering the above subject, I will try and show who shall "stand when he appears?" who shall abide in his presence? and what the conditions shall be at the end of the earth.

Destruction of the Wicked.

In the 11th chapter of Isaiah we are told of the reign of peace on earth, but before he tells us of that peace, he says, "He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." This destruction of the wicked must be complete, or universal harmony cannot reign.

Peter, in the above quotation, gives us to know that the righteous shall scarcely be saved; and, if so, how can the ungodly and sinners stand?" Isaiah in the 24th chapter, in speaking of this destruction that the transgression of God's law brings, says: "Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth * * * The inhabitants of the The few earth are burned, and few men left." are the righteous.

Present day revelation teaches us that "at the hour (the coming of Christ) cometh an entire separation of the righteous and the wicked; and in that day will I send mine angels, to pluck out the wicked, and cast them into unquenchable D. C. 63:13. This shows that the separfire.' ation of the wicked from the righteous and their destruction at the coming of Christ is complete. But, for fear the reader may be doubtful, and think still there may be some way to escape for the unrighteous, I will notice some other statements.

In D. C. 98:5 (please turn to these pages and read them) we are told that "in that day" "every corruptable thing, both of man, or of the beasts of the field, or of the fowls of heaven, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon the face of the earth, shall be consumed, * * * and in that day the enmity of man, and the enmity of beast, yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face." In section 28, the Lord says his people 'shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, against the day when tribulation and destruction are sent forth upon the wicked, for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth, * * * for I will reveal myself from heaven, and dwell in righteousness with man on the earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand." This proves that the wicked "shall not stand" when he appears.

Who Shall Stand?

"And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins: for they that are wise and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, they shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their king and their lawgiver." D. C. 45:10.

This tells us "who shall stand when he appeareth:" they are the wise virgins, the truly righteous. The rest are hewn down and cast into the fire; but the righteous will not only stand, but they "shall abide" after he come

Righteous Mortals Shall Abide.

After Christ comes and establishes his reign, these wise virgins will continue to abide in mortality. They shall continue to "multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst," and there shall be no temptation to do evil, for the devil is bound during the thousand years. See Rev. 20:2. Ezekiel in the 37th chapter tells us of the union of the sticks of Judah and Ephraim and the gathering afterwards of the children of Israel into their own land, that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children forever; * * * and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore. My tabernacle also shall be in the midst of them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people." Verses Here we have it from the Bible that 25, 27. while God reigns with his people and his tabernacle is in their midst they shall multiply and "they and their children and their children's children for ever" shall dwell in the land.

In the Land.

I call attention also to the fact that these mortals who are to have children, while Christ is here, are to dwell in the land of Palestine, as well as those referred to in the above quotation shall have the earth for an inheriance. land of America, Zion, is to be the inheritance of the decendants of Lehi and the gentiles associated with them; while Palestine, as we note above, shall be the inheritance of the Jews.

In the City.

"Yea, and blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth, when the Lord shall come, and old things shall pass away, and all things become new, they shall rise from the dead and shall not die after, and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord, in the holy city, and he that liveth when the Lord shall come, and has kept the faith, blessed is he; nevertheless it is appointed to him to die at the age of man; wherefore children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye." D. C. 63:13.

From this we learn that the resurrected are to receive their inheritance "before the Lord in the holy city." Palestine and Zion, with their cities, are to be occupied by the righteous who abide in mortality at that time, while the resurrected are to inherit the holy city. What city is that? To find that city, let us go to Rev. 21: 9, 10. The angel said to John, "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God." Can there be any question that this is the holy city, the abode of the resurrected?

He went with the angel to see the bride, the Lamb's wife, and saw the great city, the holy Jerusalem, "the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." v. 2. The church is the bride, the Lamb's wife. (See Rev. 19:7, 8.) She shall prepare herself for the marriage and be robed in linen clean and white, "the righteousness of the saints," and as he went to see his bride. the Lamb's wife, the church, he saw the holy city coming, it must have been the church of all passages coming to the resurrection. They will come at the beginning of his reign, when he comes and brings "all his saints with him." Zech. 14:5. This is not the old Jerusalem of Palestine, nor the one built by the saints here, but is to come from heaven already built, and is fitted with the spirits of the righteous that Christ brings with him, and as the holy city is to be the inheritance of the resurrected, they must be the object God has in bringing it.

Those who are changed to immortality during his reign, "shall be caught up, and their rest shall be glorious." D. C. 98:5. Why "caught up?" because that is to be an exceeding high city. See Rev. 21:16. The nations of the saved (mortals) are to walk in the light of it and bring their glory and honor into it, v. 24, "The glory of God did brighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." v. 23, Yes, God and Christ shall be there; for Isaiah, speaking of this time, says, "The Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and thy God thy glory," Isa. 60:19.

This cannot refer to the time after the earth has gone through its final change and has become the eternal abode of man in the immortal stage, for "the nations of them which are saved" are to walk in the light of it, and bring their glory and honor into it. These are evidently those who are yet living in mortality.

Death During Christ's Reign.

John, in speaking of the time when the holy city comes, says, "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21:4. Of course in that Holy City, where the resurrected are these things cannot be, for we know in the above quotation from D. C. 63:13, that after the resurrection they "shall not die after." Yet in the same quotation it says of the mortals; "It is appointed to him to die at the age of man; children shall grow up until they become old, old men shall die; but they shall not sleep in the dust, but they shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye." In D. C. 98:5, we are told, "There shall be no sorrow because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep (that is to say in the earth), but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious." There will be no death as we now see death, the result of sickness and pain, but there shall be an instant change from mortality to immortality. When they are "caught up" "and shall receive an inheritance before the Lord, in the holy city." Isaiah puts the age for this change at one hundred years. He says "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that has not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed." Isa. 65: 20. If a child is ten years old when Christ comes, it will continue on in mortal condition, building houses, planting vineyards, and eating the fruit thereof and "shall be blessed of the Lord and his offspring (children) with him," for ninety years; but that is till he is "an hundred years old;" then he shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye to immortality and retire to the "holy city."

The Little Season.

At the end of the thousand years Satan is to "be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations," and shall bring them up to battle against the "camp of the saints," the holy city; then follows the great and last battle; Satan and his hosts are overcome and destroyed; "and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire; and the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire." D. C. 43:7. The time for accomplishing this, the Revelator calls a little season. This closes mortality on the earth, the wicked are all destroyed, while all that are living in righteousness, shall be changed to immortality. These nations that Satan deceives are the children that have been born during the millenium and have not been changed "And again, verily, verily I say unto you, that when the thousand years have ended, and man again begin to deny their God, then will I spare the earth but for a little season and the end shall come, and the heaven and the earth shall be consumed, and pass away, and there shall be a new heaven and a new earth; for all old things shall pass away, and all things shall become new." D. C. 28:6. At this time it appears, men of their own free agency will "begin to deny their God," then Satan is permitted to tempt them as others who are willing to deny their God.

After the close of mortality on the earth, it vill undergo a complete change, and all things on it shall become new, and it shall be fitted for man's eternal abode in righteousness.

Lamoni, Iowa.

THE FINAL DESTINY OF MAN.

By Elder W. A. Sinclair, M. D. That man was created for the glory of God is the theme of all the writers in the sacred scriptures. For this purpose God created him in his own image, and gave him dominion over all the other creations, charging him to be faithful, to multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it. Genesis 1:28.

In this sense man became the chief instrument in the hands of the Almighty to bring to pass his will in the earth. He also set laws, which were to govern his occupancy here, attaching thereto the promise of reward for service rendered, but at the same time not compelling any man to do other than that which he would voluntarily do; as he said to Enoch:

"Behold, these thy brethren, they are the workmanship of mine own hands, and I gave them their knowledge in the day that I created them. And in the garden of Eden gave I unto man his agency, and unto thy brethren have I said, and also gave commandment, that they should love one another, and that they should choose me their Father. But behold, they are without affection, and they hate their own blood, and the fire of mine indignation is kindled against them." Genesis 7.39.41

In this we find that man was given his own agency, coupled with knowledge, and that his final destiny will be governed by the use he makes of this knowledge. It is somewhat singular that it has been recorded thus, and yet it could not be otherwise and the work of a just God.

Knowledge is the antecedent of spiritual punishment, and the all wise Creator has arranged his plans that knowledge must precede condemnation.

Disobedience is the failure to apply that knowledge, and is only applicable to those who have been enlightened and elevated to a position in which they are able to comprehend the commandments which are given for the government of mankind.

The plan of the Almighty has been so wonderfully constructed, that this knowledge will eventually become universal, every son and daughter of Adam will have heard the divine law, and understand it, but their agency will never be taken away, their ultimate destiny lies in their own hands. We find this very beautifully set forth by Alma, 19:11, B. of M.

"And now we see by this, that our first parents were cut off, both temporally and spiritually, from the presence of the Lord; and thus we see they became subjects to follow after their own will. Now, behold, it was not expedient that man should be reclaimed from this temporal death, for that would destroy the great plan of happiness; therefore, as the soul could never die, and the fall had brought upon all mankind a spiritual death as well as a temporal; that is, they were cut off from the presence of the Lord; it was expedient that mankind should be reclaimed from this spiritual death; as they had been carnal, sensual and devilish by nature, this probationary state became a state for them to prepare, it became a preparatory state.

"And now remember, my son, if it were not for the plan of redemption, (laying it aside), as soon as they were dead, their souls were miserable, being cut off from the presence of the Lord. And now there was no means to reclaim men from this fallen state which man had brought upon himself, because of his own disobedience, therefore according to justice, the plan of redemption could not be brought about, only, on condition of repentance of men in this probationary state; yea, this preparatory state, for except it were for these conditions, mercy could not take effect except it should destroy the work of justice."

According to this, man used his own agency and he willed to do wrong thereby placing himself under the judgment and condemnation of the great Law-giver.

We can understand how justice will overtake the man who contrary to his own knowledge will forfeit his freedom, and if all men were in possession of this knowledge the solution would seem more easily comprehended. But, this is not the case, for there are, and have been, millions of people who have lived and died, never receiving any knowledge of God or his redemptive plans. What of these? where will they come to a knowledge of the truth?

The Apostle Paul must have had this problem in mind when he wrote to the Corinthian Saints. He realized that God had made provision for all humanity, but, every man in his own order, hence, he says:—"There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial; but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star different from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. 15:40-42.

He fixes at least three places signifying that there will be at least three grades of human souls. Jesus said:—"The kingdom of heaven (the church of God) was likened unto ten virgins," (or would be, just at the period when he should make his advent to earth at his second coming). "which took their lamps, and went forth to meat the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. Afterwards came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not." Matthew 25:1-12.

Here we find two classes of souls, but one significant fact stands out in bold characters, and that is, the two classes arise simultaneously. One class gains admittance to the marriage, while the other is not permitted to enter.

We understand from the record of John who will be made partakers of the joys of the millennium, as he states:—"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Rev. 20:44.

Paul says: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. 15:22, 23.

"Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trump shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptable, and we shall be changed." I Cor. 15:51, 52.

"And again, we bear record for we saw and heard, and this is the testimony of the gospel of Christ, concerning them who come forth in the resurrection of the just: They are they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, and were baptized after the manner of his burial, being buried in the water in his name, according to the commandment which he has given, that by keeping the commandments, they might be washed and cleansed from all their sins, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands of him who is ordained and sealed unto this power; and who overcome by faith, and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon those who are just and true.

"They are they who are the church of the Firstborn; they are they into whose hands the Father hath given all things; they are they who are priests and kings, who hath received of his fullness, and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedec, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the only begotten Son; wherefore as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God; wherefore, all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present, or things to come, all are theirs, and they are Christ's, and Christ is God's; and they shall overcome all things; wherefore let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet, these shall dwell in the presence of God and his Christ forever and ever.

"These are they whom he shall bring with him, when he shall come in the clouds of heaven, to reign on the earth over his people; these are they who shall have part in the first resurrection; these are they who shall come forth in the resurrection of the just: these are they who are come unto Mount Zion; and unto the city if the living God, the heavenly place, the holiest of all; these are they who have come to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and the Church of Enoch, and of the Firstborn; these are they whose names are written in heaven, where God and Christ are the judges of all; these are they who are just men made perfect through Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, who wrought out this perfect atonement through the shedding of his own blood, these are they whose bodies are Celestial, whose glory is that of the sun, even the glory of God the highest of all: whose glory the sun of the firmament is written of as being typical." D. C. 76:5.

These, no doubt, will be permitted to enter to the marriage and will in all probability be characterized as the wise virgins. He designates these as the people of his church, his kingdom; they who received the testimony of Jesus, and believe on his name. These are the wise virgins certainly.

The other department of his church or kingdom, though foolish, would also have his testimony, as it is only given to those who are members of his body—the church. These foolish virgins arose with the wise, but not being able to enter with the wise, they must represent another glory, hence, we read:—

"These are they who are not valient in the testimony of Jesus wherefore they obtain not the crown over the kingdom of our God." D. C. 76.6.

In other words, they have not completely brought themselves into subjection to the divine mandates, and have not reached that point of perfection in which they are fitted to dwell with sanctified beings, but must abide a lesser glory until their education has been perfected.

However, they are brought forth in the first resurrection to receive that instruction, that happily they might progress during the thousand years and graduate into the blissful realms of celestial perfectness.

The torrestrial glory certainly comes forth during the thousand years, for the inhabitants of it are of a teachable character. Here is displayed the great provision of the Almighty, and his wonderful loving kindness towards his creatures, for it is in this sphere or glory that the final adjustment is made and the glories of the celestial abode is held out for their acceptation.

The first resurrection is a second probationary state for those who were denied the priviledge of gaining the knowledge of the great work of Christ. And that justice might be meted out to all, God has made it possible for these souls to come forth and receive the necessary instruction that would permit them to be made partakers with their brethren of the celestial abode, providing they will accept the requirements.

The millenial reign seems to be the period in which the final destiny of many of the inhabitants is determined, probably the major portion of the children of men.

In our former talks we outlined the nations that would be upon earth during the millennium; Briefly stated, they were:—Of the higher glory, Jesus Christ with all the sanctified from the days of Adam, down to the morning of the millenial reign. These will dwell in the camp of the saints, or the beloved City. I don't mean by this that they will remain in these two places during the thousand years; but, that they will belong to the places designated; though their teachings, and their labors will be out in the world among the nations who are reserved for this time that they might hear the gospel of Christ.

Concerning those who will be on the outside, Scripture intimates that the following people will be thus privileged:-The Jews as a nation so says Zachariah; the whole house of Israel, according to Ezekiel; remnants of all the nations of the earth who take part in the last great battle against Jerusalem, according to the word of Archariah; the foolish virgins, according to the words of Jesus as recorded by Matthew; the in then nations and they that knew no law, acto D. C. 45:10. All the prisoners in the ph who received the teachings of the Master abon he went to preach to them after his resuraccording to Peter and D. C. 76:6, and 85:28; the honorable men of the earth; according to D. C. 76:6; at last, all those who are alive when the Master shall come, according to D. C. 63:13.

This plan of teaching goes on during the thousend years, each generation as they reach the years of one hundred, are judged and assigned to their dwelling place for the remainder of the thousand years, when the general judgment will set to judge the souls of those who were not obedient to the mandates of the gospel, and the rewards are meted out according to the merits of the judged.

Then John says: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

We find on investigation of this, and the succeeding chapter, that the saints are permitted to dwell in this city, in which everything is made pleasant for them; and the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it, and while they will not be able to eat the fruit of the tree of life, they can feast on the leaves of the tree. Besides these two divisions named, we undoubtedly have a third, which are servants of the most high, as we find recorded in D. C. 76:7. Concerning the star glory, the statement seems to be definite as to their final destiny; for we read: "These all shall bow the knee, and every tongue shall confess to him who sits upon the throne forever and ever; for they shall be judged according to their works; and every man shall receive according to his own works, and his own dominion in the mansions which are prepared, and they shall be servants of the Most High, but where God and Christ dwell they cannot come, worlds without end."

This to my mind seems to dispose of this class. Then regarding the celestial world, we read in D. C. 76:7. "They who dwell in his presence are the church of the Firstborn; and they see as they are seen, and know as they are known, having received of his fulness and of his grace; and he makes them equal in power, and in might, and in dominion." And again in the fifth paragraph, "Wherefore, as it is written, they are gods, even the sons of God; wherefore all things are theirs, whether life or death, or things present or things to come all are theirs, and they shall overcome all things; wherefore let no man glory in man, but rather let him glory in God, who shall subdue all enemies under his feet; these shall dwell in the presence of Cod and his Christ forever and ever.'

This leaves us but the terrestrial to dispose of, The Scripture seems to be silent regarding their final destiny, leaving the assumption that they will merge into the greater, and finally come under their glory.

THE REUNON.

(Held at Hagerman, Idaho, June 13-23, 1914.) A reunion, it was stated Would be held in balmy June, In our cherished little valley Where all nature was in tune.

Promptly at the time appointed, Many Saints from far and near; Came together in reunion, Bringing joy and gladness here.

So with hearts full of rejoicing Met we in the gospel tent,
Where through God's acknowledged servant Was to us a message sent.

Thus we met each morn and evening, And received the bread of life; Felt encouraged to press onward And to conquer in the strife.

Hungry souls were filled, as promised, With the bread of life from God; And our faith was greatly strengthened-Smoother grew the path we trod.

In prayermeetings, testimor Caused the very soul to thrill With the joy of the true gospel, For God loves his people still.

Earnest prayers to God ascended, And his blessings came to us; His children were rejoicing,— It was good to gather thus.

There were given special blessings. E'en the sick restored to health; nd we felt that through his mercy We received a promised wealth.

In the afternoon that followed The morning service of each day, There was time for recreation To engage in work or play.

Many loved to seek the wonders, Of fair Nature here and there, Loved to see the mighty waters Dashing from their lofty stair.

Oh, to see the thousand streamlets Gushing from the mountain's side; Or to watch the shining river Where the waters swiftly glide.

When the evening shades were falling,
We would all our voices blend,
And anthems of thanksgiving
To our heavenly Father send.

Thus the days passed all too quickly, And the last day was at hand, Though the elements were restless We were still a happy band.

In the afternoon we witnessed By the shining water's side, The baptising of God's children In his kingdom to reside.

Then the meeting which soon followed To confirm the Spirit's power Gave us comfort, cheer and courage, Till we had no thought of fear.

When at close on air was wafted "God be with you till we meet,"
For aias! 'twas time for parting—
"Till we meet at Jesus' feet."

THE ART OF BEING GOOD.

By C. B. Smith.

While most of us remember that it is part of our Christian duty to care for sick and aged human beings, yet there are some who forget to be kind to the dumb creatures that depend upon us for their comfort and happiness.

There are the horses that work through the long hot days, pulling heavy loads up hill and down dale. Three good meals a day, plenty of fresh water and a comfortable stable at night will make these creatures work better and feel happier.

And do not forget those homeless, wandering cats and dogs that sometimes pass along the street or through your yard. It is a good, charitable plan to keep a pan of fresh, clean water in the yard, where animals and birds can have easy access to it.

This seems a very small thing to do, but you will be surprised to find how much pleasure it will give an observer to watch the jay birds, robins, sparrows, and other birds taking a daily bath or drinking thankfully after a long and dusty search for food.

Those children and grown-ups who belong to the Bedtime Stories Club will no doubt agree with me that a small outlay of water and crumbs brings a very large return of pleasure in watching Mother Nature's children.

And the birds are our steadfast, loyal allies, you remember, against the ever increasing army of insects. So let us not forget all of these humble and useful creatures. It is some satisfaction these hot days to think that one has made a homeless, foot-sore dog or cat feel more like trying to lead a respectable life. And doing these little things must always lead us on to something larger. So let us not forget to be kind.

North Dakota Reunion.
For the encouragement of the Saints we would like to For the encouragement of the Saints we would like to note of the happenings of our reunion this year which was held at Logan, N. Dak., from June 19th to 29th, in the beautiful grove of Bro. and Sr. H. L. Tilton. The reunion committee consisting of Wm. Sparling, Thos. Leitch, and J. W. Darling were chosen to preside, and others of the ministry present were J. E. Wildermuth, Jas. C. Page, J. W. Wight, J. S. Wagoner, R. Rasmussen, and W. Mc-Elwain, who dispensed the word. The attendance was good, especially were there a large number of young people of the district present, and the music and singing from them, was fine and complimented by many attending. Baptism took place on two occasions during the meetings and 15 in all were added to the church. Bro. Wight was kept busy giving blessings, and his sermons were enjoyed by all. In all we consider great good was accomplished for the Lord's work. The Saints were instructed, their hearts warmed to the work and encouraged to press on, and many received a better understanding of the restored gospel.

Logan was selected as the place to hold the reunion next year and the following brethren were selected as the comstitute to a remove for same: Wm. Hummbry. Vernis

Logan was selected as the place to hold the reunion next year and the following brethren were selected as the committee to arrange for same: Wm. Humphry, Vernis Packard, Wm. Hecker, of Logan, Chas. #### EASTERN MICHIGAN DISTRICT REUNION

With the closing of our fifth annual reunion in the city of Port Huron, there comes to mind the happy days of spiritual enjoyment spent in the service of our God and His Christ.

With the Saints of the Eastern Michigan District, reunions have been an annual feature for the past five years, with another one scheduled for next year. Those who have participated in them thus far, have had a small foretaste of the "Great Reunion" that shall take place in the near future. But since that "Great Reunion" has not as yet materialized, they are content for the present with the annual ones. The very fact of this continuation from year to year ought to be evidence to even the casual observer of their benefit to the uplift of God's people, and the spreading of the glorious gospel to others. The meeting of old acquaintances and the making of new ones, with that comfort and consolation of mind that we are all one great The meeting of old family of Israel's God, brings to us a slight feeling of the glorious time when we shall be permitted to behold and grasp the hand of those former and latter day worthies and martyrs of the Church of God. I think it is near time that we all were getting more interested in reunion work, for the sincere preaching of the word, the singing of praises, and the bearing of testimonies from day to day, creates in the very soul of those who attend, a feeling of dentition and account of the second of the devotion and service that can not easily be quenched. These things can not help but draw and focus the mind of a Latter Day Saint on the things of God, and thus be drawn close to him.

On the evening of the 19th of June, at 8 o'clock, the bell on the tree announced the service hour. Organization was affected, after which brief talks were given by brethren Allen, F. A. Smith, Curtis, and Fetting. The next Organization morning saw things in full swing, and they continued to wing all week.

Institute work every morning at 7:30; regular prayer meetings at 9:00 A. M.; preaching at 10:45 A. M.; preaching at 2:30 P. M.; generally followed with social purity meetings for young women and young men, married wo men and married men. Preaching again in the evening at 8:00. These services were as a whole repeated daily at scheduled hours, with but few changes. In connection herewith Elder Curtis got busy down town on the street corner every evening, with the able assistance of the Flint Orchestra, and singers from the camp, and did some swinging in the preaching line, assisted by Elder F. A. Smith and Elvin Ellis. Well, these things help move things in reunion circles. We let the people of the city know who we were, where we came from, (and by the way Curt's told them he was from Missouri, and they way. Elder show him,) and further what we were here for. Did the the crowds gather? Had you seen them, you would have thought so. Did they stop and listen? They did. Did we unought so. Did they stop and listen? They did. Did we invite them to the camp grounds? We did. Did they come up? They certainly did, and remained through service and continued to come all week. We expect they will come again next year. We'll give them a chance anyhow. We published a pencil newspaper on the grounds, which added a little amusement to the occasion.

A social purity board for the district was organized, with Elder Arthur Allen, of Detroit, as president, and Elder Wm. Grice of Crosswell, as vice-president. We expect to Wm. Grace of Crosswell, as vice-president. We expect to do something this year, too.

Other features were enacted worthy of note, but too numerous to mention. Our meetings were well attended, spiritual and uplifting in every sense of the term. We all went home well repaid.

went nome well repaid.

If you are not having reunions in your district, just try one, go at it as if you meant business, everybody "WORK," then watch results. If you are not satisfied all the way around, don't blame Eastern Michigan, for we have proved them a success. Once you are enthused with this reunion spirit, you will want them twice a year. "Come," said Isaiah, "let us reason together." Get busy, advance God's work and thereby advance yourself, and if you don't suc-ceed the first time, try again and keep on trying until you do. A good way to get in touch with reunion work is to do. A good way to get in touch with reunion work is to wist an up-to-date reunion. If you don't get a chance this year, keep your eye on Eestern Michigan, for our next reunion, and pay us a visit. We'll use you like a brother. Elder Allen of Detroit and the rest of the committee will show you how to conduct a successful reunion, and you'll go away happy, stronger, and a bostser for "reunions." go away happy, stronger, and a bostser for Let us then cheerfully laborated us then cheerfully labor on in the Master's cause until the trumpet shall sound for that Great Reunion, Christ shall preside and when the present shall terminate into the long looked-to-future, where we'll know as we are known and enjoy what we are laboring for now.

May our talents in this direction yield to the Lord's vineyard a hundred fold is my prayer.

DANGER IN HELL-FIRE SERMONS.

DANGER IN HELL-FIRE SERMONS.

Much Insanity a Result of Such Preaching, a Doctor Says.

Chicago, July 14.—Hell-fire religions and preachers who hurl the fear of future punishment at their congregations were attacked by Dr. Henry S. Murnor of Omaha, Neb., in an address today before the National Convention of Aleinists and Neurologists.

Doctor Munro asserted the promulgation of "Hell-fire" doctrines is increasing the insanity rate. Much of the Church's hold on men and women, he declared, is due to fear, and fear, he said, is utterly destructive to both mind and body.

"Fear. whether inspired by the preacher or the holdup

"Fear, whether inspired by the preacher or the holdup man, has the same result," said Doctor Munro. "It arrests the normal activity of every bodily organ and cell. It kills."---Kansas City Star.

Seattle, Wash., July 22.

Dear Ensign:-I have belonged to the church and enjoyed this glorious gospel about seven years, and I can testify to its truthfulness and blessings. The Lord healed me of crysipelas about five years ago, which I had been having every fall and spring since twelve years old. did all I could in the medical way, but when I put i trust in God and was administered to I was healed this awful disease. I feel to give all the praise to God. We were living in the southeastern part of Kansas, at Weir. The saints there know of the case.

There are many other blessings I can testify to which od has given us. Dear saints, my health is not good at present. I ask that you remember me in your faith and prayers, that

The Lord has told me in my blessing that insomuch as I was faithful I would be healed. I also have a request to make in behalf of my dear sister who is not a member of the church. She belongs to the Christian Church. She is 31 years old and has been a cripple since

She is all years on and has been a cripple since 18 years, caused by a fail.

She got so she could go on crutches and when almost 17 she started to school, at nincteen she taught, when 20 she graduated. She was a beautiful girl and liked by everybody. She was operated on seven years ago, It did her more harm than good. She taught school again and while teaching she fell again and she had as bad ā tinc as ahe did at first. At Springfield, Mo., a specialist told her no man could heal her. Now, dear saints, it was given to me in a dream that she would never be healed until she accepted the gospel. My mother was to visit me before my sister had her limb amputated. I told her that the emputation would never do her any good, but she acted as though she thought I was possessed, but she can now see that I was under God's influence in talling her this. teaching she fell again and she had as bad a time as she did at first. Editor Ensign:—Yesterday I received by letter from home and newspaper clippings the good news that Independence had gone "dry." It was a great victory and a moral triumph of the good people of our city, and I was greatly pleased to see that the 1st and 4th wards, where most of our people live, gave majorities in the cause of right. I also received a copy of the "Roll of Ronor" containing the names of about 3000 of the good women of Independence who are the standard the state to each the belief of Independence who asked the voters to east the ballots for the protection of the home and the young against the evils of a "wet" town. The women with their patient dogged persistence in watching for the illegal voters and snapping them with their kodaks was something new in American politics and it may introduce a new, but novel idea, to catch the man who would east an illegal vote. In the language of another great fighter against crookedness in politics, the women beat the men to a "frazzel," old "John Barleycorn" was beaten by the people he despises and they did not have the ballot either. He was afraid of that of Independence who asked the voters to cast the ballots

-I love to tell the story of Jesus and his Dear Ensign:—I love to tell the story of Jesus and his love. Am glad I heard the gospel in its fullness. I have much to praise God for. Elder McNight and wife are here holding meetings, and Bro. McNight is giving us such food for thought. May the Lord bless him in every effort to do good, and may the seed he has sown bring forth a hundred fold. We are trying to let our light shine, but, as Bro. McNight says, the cares and pleasures of this world almost choke out the love of God. So many are a careless about their soul's salvation forest. many are so careless about their soul's salvation, forgetwe have done. We should so live that we will not be afraid to meet Jesus when he comes and not cry for the rocks to fall on us. I know we will receive a white robe of righteousness like unto his if we are faithful here.

Situated at Lompoc, Santa Barbara Caunty the mountain is really a heap of millions and millions of tiny decomposed sea shells. It is sold as "infusorial earth," and a high value for insulating purposes and for jeweler's grinding pastes. The earth is white in color, fluffy in consistency, and exceedingly fine in grain. BROUGHT GIRL BACK TO LIFE.

Rome—Doctor Vanuecl, chief surgeon at the hospital at Pistola, literally brought a dead girl back to life. The patient, Maria Tondini, was being operated upon for the recovery of a needle accidently imbedded in the flesh near her heart. During the operation, while Doctor Vanueci was holding the girl's heart in his hand, pulsation suddenly ceased. The physician declared the girl dead, and his colleagues confirmed him. As a forlorn hope, Doctor Vanueci began to massage the heart. The organ was gradually stimulated into activity and uegan to massage the neart. The organ was gradually stimulated into activity and the girl lived again. Then the operation was concluded. There is every hope that the young woman will recover.—Sel.

It is somewhat strange that the severe criticism of recent years which has sprung up in the churches of things supposedly Christian has been so largely confined to the fundamental doctrines of Christianity as clearly taught in the Bible while the "doctrines of men" which have been brought in since the days of Christ and the apostles have been passed by with scarcely a notice. Of the latter class may be noted baptism as applied to infants. Critics within the churches have attacked the miracles of the Bible, the truthfulness of the Bible text regarding the creation and other matters of history, the divinity of Christ, his resurrection, and other points, but in those organizations holding infant baptism that doctrine has rested undisturbed through all the storms of modern criticism. Had the same diligence been shown in attacking such doctrines of human origin as has been shown in casting doubt upon the teachings of the Bible the world would have been improved thereby, but as it is the faith of the masses has been weakened in the most vital points of Christ's doctrine while the doctrines of men are left for them to cling to.

Not a Bible Doctrine.

All the teachings of the Bible are against infant baptism, and the few passages quoted to support it do not do so. "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven," does not imply that they have to be baptized, but rather that they are already worthy of a part in the kingdom of heaven because of their innocency and fredom from sin. The several references to households being baptized ought not to be construed into an indorsement of infant baptism unless it is definitely stated that infants were included. But no such statement is made. Scriptures nowhere require it.

The Purpose of Baptism.

When John the Baptist who was sent of God came preaching the gospel in preparation for the coming Messiah, Mark says that he did "preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of On Pentecost when Peter under the power and authority of the Holy Ghost told the people what they should do said: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Again when Paul had been converted and by command of Jesus had come to Ananias to be "told what thou must to," Ananias said to him: "And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." These with other scriptures show that the divine purpose in the ordinance of baptism was the remission of sins. The candidates coming with faith in God and Christ, and having repented of their sins, by obedience to this ordinance are entitled to forgiveness at the hands of God.

Infant Baptism Denies the Atonement of Christ. The purpose of baptism being for the remission of sins, to baptize infants implies the supposition that they have sin and must needs be baptized for its remission in order to be saved in the kingdom of God. This is the teaching of some churches who go so far as to say that an unbaptized infant is forever lost. Such teaching, and such practice misrepresent God, and deny the atonement of Christ. The sin of the world is taken away through Christ. (John 1: Whatever sin may have rested upon mankind through Adam's transgression has been long since forgiven through the atonement of Christ who was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," and men are called upon to answer for their own sins only, which sins are forgiven through a proper obedience to the principles and ordinance of the gospel. On the point of original sin the Inspired Version says:

"And the Lord said unto Adam, Behold, I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the garden of Eden. Hence came the saying abroad among the people, that the Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world."-Genesis 6:55, 56.

Little children having come under the forgiveness of Christ for whatever sin attaches to their natures through the transgression of Adam, and having no individual sins, are free before God being pure and innocent, and have no need of baptism either for original or individual sins. They are acceptable to God and are received into his kingdom even as they were acceptable to the Lord when he received them into his arms and said "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Christ sent his ministry into the world to teach "all things, whatsoever I have commanded you," but nowhere is any teaching of Christ recorded authorizing or directing the baptism of children, hence there is neither need nor authority for baptizing them, and to do so denies both the justice and mercy of Christ by supposing that children are yet sinful and that God holds them accountable for Adam's sin. The book of Mormon records the words of Christ on this subject as follows.

Behold, I came into the world not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; the whole need no physician, but they that are sick; wherefore little children are whole, for they are not capable of committing sin; where fore the curse of Adam is taken from them in me, and it hath no power over them. Moroni 8:9.

And Mormon taught:

And Mormon taught:

Behold I say unto you, that this thing shall ye teach, repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sin; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized, and humble themselves as their little children; and they shall all be saved with their little children; and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism. Behold baptism is unto repentance to the fulfilling the commandments unto the remission of sins. But little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world; *** Little children cannot repent; wherefore it is awful wickedness to even from the toundation of the world; "Thittle children cannot repent; wherefore it is awful wickedness to deny the pure mercies of God unto them, for they are alive in him because of his mercy. Moroni 8:11-113, 20.

These teachings are plain and are in harmony with all the teachings of the Bible, holding that children are proper subjects of the kingdom of heaven without baptism.

Infant Baptism is Opposed to the Right of Agency or Freewill.

The right of every soul to be left free to act for himself is divinely given, and God in all his dealings with man as recorded in the Bible account, or seen upon the pages of history has ever preserved that right inviolate. Men however have often denied that right to their fellow men, and Satan has always sought to take it away in numerous ways. Christ as the leading representative of God presented the message of truth to the world and invited men to accept, and he sought to cast about the children by the blessing of his hands the divine influences which would help them to have light and power as they grew up to choose aright, but never did he attempt in any way to bind man or child to him. Men were left free to act for themselves without undue pressure or persuasion; children were left free to await the years of accountability when with an enlightened and developed mind they would be capable of acting intelligently and voluntarily according to their own freewill.

But infant baptism makes the child a member of a church before he is accountable, or capable of acting for himself. In the ordinance he

A 4.00 MH 30 MOUNO, must have sponsors who speak for him and make promises for him which he is expected to fulfill in later days. He becomes obligated and bound by a covenant made in his behalf by sponsors without his knowledge or consent and in disregard of the divine right of agency. Thus it may be seen that infant baptism is utterly in conflict with the will of God.

Faith and Repentance Pre-requisites of Baptism.

Jesus did not say to his ministry "He that is baptized and afterward believes shall be saved," but when the gospel is preached, "He that be-lieveth, and is baptized, shall be saved." Peter said to the Jews who believed: "Repent and be baptized every one of you." Since baptism is for the remission of sins, and since remission cannot come without repntance, it is apparent that repentance must precede baptism. But little children cannot either believe or repent so that baptism does not belong to them at all but is an ordinance designed for those who are accountable before God and are capable of choosing between good and evil and intelligently acting by their own free will.

When Do Children Become Accountable?

The development of mind is coordinate with the development of the body, and under favorable conditions of training and education the mental faculties begin to be exercised at an early age. As soon as children are able to discern between right and wrong and to exercise the power of will in choosing the one or other they begin to be accountable before God. The particular age will depend somewhat on the teaching and training the children have received. If properly instructed under favorable conditions, the Lord says in latter day revelation that they may be baptized at eight years of age. Some may be unfitted at that age, but the ordinance should be performed upon the volition of the child after he has been so taught that he understands the nature of sin, the doctrine of repentance, and the purpose of the ordinance.

Infant baptism conflicts with every feature of the gospel, and only under the darkness of the great apostasy could the doctrine have ever have been brought in. The light of latter days betrays its true nature and origin. Little children have their place under the gospel whether in this world or the next without any ordinance of baptism being performed in which they are not conscious or willing parties. Their nurture and training are provided for with a view to the development of their intellect and will by which they will be capable of choosing aright.

Sin is defined as "Any want of conformity to or transgression of a rule or rectitude or duty * Disagreement in thought, word, deed, or desire, whether by omission or commission, with the divine law; also the state or condition of having thus departed."

John says "Sin is the transgression of the law." It must appear that where the law requires a certain thing to be done that a neglecting or refusal to do that thing is a violation of the law the same as where a thing is done which the law forbids doing and constitutes a sin. The first definition taken from the New Standard Dictionary goes so far as to say that even a thought which is in disagreement with the divine law is sin, as also a desire, from which it may be concluded that to entertain a belief which is not in harmony with the teachings of Christ is sin, which conclusion is confirmed by Paul when he says that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

What a variety of forms and conditions sin may assume! It may be a thought, a word, a deed, or a desire. It may also be the absence of a thought, word, deed, or desire which ought to have had To have no proper thought, motive or reality. desire in life is wrong, for a man can develop his own thoughts, form his own motive, and order his own desires if he will. To allow his baser nature to rule in these things is to surrender to sin, leaving the man in a condition of sin. His thoughts and dear a will also determine the character of his words and deeds.

Men's conception of sin is too nearly restricted within the limits of the Mosiac decalogue, but its range is far more reaching than that. who keeps merely within the moral law may yet be a long way from full agreement with the law of Christ, and again, the man who has complied in word and deed with the outward forms of the law may be very far out of harmony with it in thought and desire. Righteousness to be complete must spring from the heart, manifesting itself in every thought, desire, word and deed, and leading to an active obedience of every requirement made in the law.

The law of God is the expression of God's character and purpose, and hence as men come into obedience to the law they are coming into harmony with God in his character and purpose, and are being fitted to dwell in his presence. Harmony with the natural law through obedience tends to preserve the natural life in all its health and vigor, while a policy of disobedience either of comission or omission brings man into conflict with the law which itself becomes destructive. The same rule applies in the spiritual realm: Obedience to the law of Christ and harmony with him will bring preservation to the individual while disobedience will bring him into conflict with the law and by the law he will be condemned.

The law of Christ provided for a change of life through faith and repentance, a transplanting from the state of sin into the kingdom of God by the ordinance of baptism, and further prescribes a course of conduct by which perfection may be attained; the whole purpose of the law being to eliminate sin from the human character and the establishment of a character patterned after the divine. In this work man must exercise the volition to do, while the Lord renders the help necessary to overcome every obstacle and the gaining of every blessing, the way having been made possible through the atonement of

Bro. W. H. Garrett präched an excellent sermon Sunday morning, the subject being the relation of pastors to their flocks, first reading Acts 20:28:—"Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he halth purchased with his own blood." In connection therewith he read from the 21st charges of St. John the instruction of the Savjor to own blood." In connection therewith he read from the 21st chapter of St. John the instruction of the Savior to Peter, after he had questioned Peter in regard to his loyalty or love for him, to feed his lambs and to feed his sheep. He spoke of character building, that some had been disposed to criticise because so much had been said on that subject, and asked if there was any subject paramount to it. If we expect to meet the Savior and he agreepted of him we must have characters that he d be accepted of him we must have characters that he On the ministry is laid an important and will accept. will accept. In the evening Bro. M. H. Seigfried delivered the second sermon of the series on church history. In the beginning he stated that as a rule future actions were governed largely by that of the past. He took up the narrative about the appearance of the angel of Joseph Smith, and of his unsuccessful attempt to secure the plates of the Book of Mormon. Explained the seeming conflicting statements in regard to the name of the angel. contincting statements in regard to the name of the angel. In the Doctrine and Covenants it is given twice as Morroni, while in the history of Joseph Smith it is given as Nephi. The latter is evidently a mistake in the manuscript, or a mistake of the printers. Explained how Joseph Smith got the name of "money digger." We hired to a man by the name of Notice and as part of his work was to dig where this man Stone directed him because he, Stone, had hoese of finding money, and had he found any money it would have belonged to Stone and not Mr. Smith, because the latter was being paid for his labor. Joseph Smith made his fourth visit to the Hill Cumorah in November, 1827, and was again met by the angel who delivered the plates to him, and delivered to him the greatest words

This caution was well needed, as all kinds of means were employed to get the plates from him, and finally he had to go to Pennsylvania, Martin Harris giving him the means to go with. Spoke of Joseph Smith letting Mr. Harris have the first 116 pages of the translation, of their being lost by Harris, of Joseph's rebuke for not obeying the instructions of the angel, and of the plates being taken away from Joseph.

The branch business meeting was held Monday night. A good deal of the time was taken up with propositions to obtain branch funds, with a final result of the deacons being instructed to call on the membership for donations for branch expenses, the deacons being authorized to call to their assistance such help as they may need in soliciting. About four per cent of the membership at present are paying the expenses. A report was read from the secretary of the Sunday school, showing an average attendance for the last six months of 1045, indeviding 120 classes. A report was also read from the Religio, and one from the Aid Society, showing as the result of the efforts this society in eight years about result of the chorts this society in eight years about $2500 has been paid to various church purposes. Three were received into the branch on letters of removal. A motion prevailed that hereafter communion services shall be held in the upper auditorium with overflow meetings in the lower.

Bro. Vernon W. Lee, the bookkeeper in the Ensign office, left with Sr. Lee on Monday for a visit in various parts of Wisconsin their native state, expecting to take a wellearned vacation of four weeks.

Bro. I. N. White Jr., writing to his father from Detroit, Mich., and speaking of the the part his mother took with other ladies in the late local option election, says: "She is taking up politics rather late, and you bet we are proud, though surprised, to learn that she, our own dear mother, had a hand in making Independence a decent place in which to live. I only wish her five big boys had all been there to follow her noble example. If a principle is worth believing in it is worth fighting for. I am certainly glad Independence went dry and hope she stays dry.'

Local option is spreading. One victory paves the way for others. It is eatching. Old Buchanan county is working simultaneously with Jackson. By word from Bro. Fry at St. Joe, he says: "The influence of the local option victory is being felt outside of Independence, and it is a stimulus to the dry forces in other places. The fight is on in Buchanan county outside of St. Joseph, and there are hopes of success. The election will take place the same day as in Jackson county, and we hope both will be as successful as Independence was. Reference is frequently made to Independence.

It is strange that some good business men will make the assertion that to do away with the saloons will injure business. What is there about the saloon business jure business. What is there about the saloon business that will induce people to spend more money for the necessities of life? How is the man who spends his earnings or any part of his earnings, in saloons going to have more money to spend for the necessities of life than he would have of he did not spend any of his earnings in a saloon? When the colored people were in slavery in the South the whites there thought that to do away with slavery would ruin them. Before the Civil War slave owners were indolent and had no enter-Givil War siave owners were indoined and may no encer-prise, going to the north in the summer and leaving every-thing to their overseers. The saloon business is worse from a business standpoint than slavery, because there was some income from slavery, but money spent in a saloon is

At the meeting of the city council last week the mayor said it would be necessary to economize inasmuch as the revenue received from saloon license would discontinue after next January, the amount for soloon and pool hall license being $14,000. He thought that expenses could be cut and revenues increased so as to overcome that loss. The mayor and council showed a loyal spirit to the results of the election, and were not loyal spirit to the results of the election, and were not inclined to injure the good services of the city in any department as was predicted by the wets would result because of the loss of the saloon money. The council voted to do away with this week's meeting and save to the city the amount that each one would draw should amount that each one would a session be held.

The primary election of Jackson County was held Tue day, and as far as Independence and the county outside of Kansas City was concerned, it was a contest between the "drys" and the "wets," and pretty much the same tactics were observed as were in the Independence local option election. Women were out (in fewer numbers, though) with cameras, watching for suspicious looking characters. The local option league of Independence had united on the best of the candidates running for nomination on the Democratic ticket, knowing that by so do-ing lay the only possible chance to defeat some of the most objectional candidates, as all other parties combined could make no showing against the dominant party. most objectional candidates, as all other parties combined could make no showing against the dominant party. Thousands of sample tickets were printed with all the candidates on them, and all the objectionable names crossed out. The "dry" voter would take one of these sample ballots with him to the polls and mark the regular ballot accordingly. Then if there was suspicion that he was not a full fledged Democrat he was asked if he had been a Democrat prior to this electon, and if not he was required to make an oath and sign an affidavit, swearing allegiance to the Democratic party and that he would vote the Democratic ticket as nominated, at the election in November. This quite a good many of our brethren refused to do and consequently were refused the priviledge of voting A good many did, however (the writer being one of them) though it was a hard pill to swallow. Finally a deputy county prosecuting attorney told the judges of the election they must eliminate the clause pledging alleginnee to the Democratic party. Mr. Gabriel, the attorney, is a Democrat. This decision to his credit. He was a candidate also. The entire "wet" and objectional part of the ticket was nominated. Those who signed the affidavit will be compelled to refuse to yote at all at the coming tell election. pelled to refuse to vote at all at the coming fall election. pelled to refuse to vote at all at the coming fall election. That is the only consistent course they can pursue. This ticket is as good as elected now by a great majority, and and Zion is not redeemed yet. Our Sister Yingling had acid thrown on her twice and her camera jerked from her, which was finally rescued from her tormentor. A Mrs. Bush also had some acid thrown down her back, and had to be treated by a physician, but she was soon back on her job. The political situation of Jackson county, to put it mildly, is deplorabe. The local option election of the county outside of Kansas City and Independence will be half above. held August 22.

Friday night after the close of the Religio several young any might after the close of the Religio several young folks surprised our two young sisters, Eche and La June Johnson, daughters of Bro. and Sr. William Johnson, who recently moved back here from Texas, where they had been for several years past. A good time is reported and this branch is surely glad to have them here again, as they are all valuable in song service.

Sunday morning, July 26th 10:45 a.m., Sunday school was well attended. The review part of the lessons by two young senior sisters, was especially interesting. Bro. I. N. Gore occupied the pulpit in the morning, using for his remarks 2 John, 9:10. The evening prayer service was marked by the Spirit's presence. Bro. Bear admonished the saints with powerful words to remember that this branch shall not return to the Lord void, but it must go on and on. Even though the weak will fall. others will be raised up in their places to take it on to the final victory. He also dispensed the word at the evening preaching service.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE.

Editor Ensign:—Kentucky and Tennessee District Re-union is a thing of the past. Good bys and hand clasps were the order until all dispersed to the various parts of the country from whense we came. We were loth to part after ten days of association together as one family. Certainly the reunion is a time of enjoyment after a year of isolation, as many were in an isolated condition. Oh how pleasant to come together and feast on the bread of life. Certainly the association of God's children is pleasant to behold.

Word was passed along that this was one of the best reunions held in the district while not so many were added to the fold there was good done. We think there should be thoughts taken under consideration that not always the numbers of baptism noted but the truths taught and the good will towards men manifested. Evidently this was manifested among us when we noted in a marked degree the ties of brotherhood strengthened. Our marked degree the ties of brotherhood strengthened. Our reunion was a grand success, notwithstanding the drouth throughout Rentucky and Tennessee. Many were forced to remain at home because of the inefficiency of water for their stock. Pastures also were almost burned up. Some were also forced to drive back and forth to care for stock, where they had to supply water from wells or drive them to the streams.

with all of these hindering causes we had a time of rejoicing, and many faces were seen in our midst not hitherto seen.

Foundry Hill is a grand location for a reunion under the foliage of the forest monarchs, where there is abundance of pure water and ample room for stock. also had the district tent which afforded sufficient room for the people. The only unpleasantness we encountered was the dust which was caused by the drouth or lack of rain. Notwithstanding all these things we had a time of rejoicing and the good Spirit was with us in power and surely we need not murmur nor complain and continue to walk in the light.

This district contains many noble and honest hearted This district contains many noble and honest hearted Saints that are striving to keep the banner afloat, and to build up God's kingdom. We must not think God has withdrawn from us because the land has been invaded with a drouth. Bro. J. R. McClain was chosen to preside over the reunion and certainly we did well in preside over the reunion and certainty we did well in our choice.

Bro. J. A. Roberts was not permitted to remain with us only from Sunday the 17th to Tuesday the 21st. Bro. Roberts had been failing in health and he had to return to his home to Independence, Mo. He was much needed at our reunion but the conditions that existed hindered. Bro. Robert Ross of Foundry Hill was selected to fill his place as chorister. The music was fine considering our force. The preaching was by Bro. J. R. McClain, J. A. Roberts and the writer, of the missionary force, and Brn. Wm. McClain, S. E. Dickson, John Overcast and Wilis Oliver of the local elders.

J. R. McClain returns to the region of Fulton, Ky., while the writer is proclaiming the message at Bethel Chapel near Cottage Grove, domiciled with Bro. John Hendrix. There was an addition of two last Sun-day and others are near the kingdom, and we trust they will fall in line soon.

Georgetown, Ind., July 25. Editor Ensign:—As some would like to hear from this district, I will drop a few lines to the "Silent Preacher," the preacher that the saints, all, or most all, rather like to hear from once a week. I have been holding meetings at the home of old Bro. and Sr. Wynn near Corydon, Ind. They are saints indeed, as all missionaries know, that have a ways hear at their home. Bre Wynn lets that have ever been at their home. Bro. Wynn lets people know that he is a Latter Day Saint, and alive in people know that he is a Latter Day Sant, and alive in the work. I was at their home a week and baptized five, one lady 77 years old, another 25, and a little girl 9, one man 61, another 29. Others are thinking of join-ing. I don't think they could do any thing better, if they only live it after they accept, do you? The old lady 77 never had joined any church before, and when I asked her way she had never joined any other church, she said they never preached to suit her, and that when she went to church the preachers talked about horse racing, or something like that. Paul said the time would come when they would not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and would turn their ears from the truth, and be turned unto fables. The time is here.

FROM THE OZARKS.

Ava, Mo.

Editor Ensign:-After an absence of seven years I am again returned to my old stamping ground, and I assure you I feel at home again, amongst a poor, but kind and as hospitable people as ever breathed the pure air of this or any other country. It certainly is a pleasure to get away from the large congested cities and the more populated districts where pride and outward show has largely took the place of what once was humility and neighborly equality. Those who want a home free of debt, where living springs of pure cold water gush out from the hill sides, a mild climate, plenty of fruit, best free range for sheep, hogs and cattle, and soil that will grow anything if tended right, and a good honest hearted people who come nearer practicing the Golden Rule than any other country I ever was in, and a people that is nearer on an equality with each other where styles and fine clothes are not counted a standard of either wealth or good morals, and powder and paint is no recommendation of pure womanhood, nor plug hats and polished shoes alone make a gentleman. People with thousands mingle freely with those less fortunate, and to one unaccustomed to these people it is quite difficult to tell one from the other.

these people it is quite difficult to tell one from the other. There has a great deal been said and written concerning this Ozark land. This country has many advantages and some disadvantages. Of course amongst the latter it is a rough rocky country, which makes it very difficult to both travel and cultivate the land. It is a poor country to rent as a rule because you can only cultivate about half as much ground as you can in a more level country, and on account of the rough roads a few miles is a "right smart" peice here, and a few hundred pounds is a "right smart" load also.

Yet with these disadvantages there are so many advantages, such as fine healthy climate, an abundance of pure cold spring water, fine free range for sheep, cattle and horses and an abundance of acorns for your hogs, on which they get fat without cost. I know hundreds of farms in this country where the springs would furnish water to make an up to date modern house and irrigate the second bench and valley land at very small cost of here are only a very few that have taken advantage of these God-favored opportunities, but those who have are reaping a nice reward. Then these nice cold springs are reaping a nice reward. Then these nice cold springs furnish a fine place for your butter and cream which is kept for a week and sold then at 22½ cents for butter fat. There has been a decided change both in country and the people. There is a general air of prosperity discerned all around. With so many advantages I cannot see why more of our people don't avail themselves of the oppormore of our people don't avail themselves of the optunity of getting a good home where land is cheap.

But whatever you do don't go much in debt. It would be better to buy 40 acres and stock it with sheep, hogs, be better to buy and milch cows than to buy a larger farm and go into debt and find yourself without the very things you need the most. Above all things don't trade unsight and unseen, for there is land here not worth 25 cents an acre for farming purposes.

I have lived in this country 26 years. I will gladly write any one on receipt of stamps.

WILL THERE BE ONE COMING OF CHRIST OR TWO.

I was very much interested in the article by Bro. William Lewis in the Ensign of May 28, 1914, wherein he related his dream about Christ's second coming and gave reasons for his belief that the Lord will "come to his saints before he comes in glory." He states that both "reason and scripture support this thought," yet he remarks that "a very prominent idea is that Christ is to come only once." He says that he was given to understand in his dream that one coming would be "not to the world," but to the Church only, and he believes that his dream is in accord with revelations given in the past to the church.

Having myself received testimony many years ago that this idea is correct, I therefore give herein some other proofs and arguments on this important subject which is so vital, for the saints to consider.

For instance the record of Luke is of great value, wherein he gives Christ's own prophecy—words which are made still clearer in the Inspired Version that he was to come three times, and that there yet remained two comings after that first coming nineteen hundred years ago, and that both these should be expected by the saints and prepared for. Luke's record reads as follows:

prepared for. Luke's record reads as follows:

"For, behold, he cometh in the first watch of the night; and he shall also come in the second watch, and again he shall come in the third watch. And verily I say unto you, He hath already come, as it is written of him; again and when he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, blessed are those servants when he cometh that he shall find so doing; for the Lord of those servants shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them."—Luke 12:41-43.

Evidently the space of time between the watches does not matter, and the third watch cannot be at the end of the millennium, because the saints will then have been living with Christ a thousand years, and they will not any more be looking for his appearing.

Then examining the scriptures further, we find that the Lord is to appear in two very different characters and to act on two widely different scenes in the great drama and tragedy of the world before the millennium is ushered in. He is to come once as the tender, loving, faithful bridegroom to meet and be united with his bride, in accordance with the divine plan announced in Matthew 22:2, Matt. 25:1-10, Rev. 19:9, Ephesians 5:22. His other character and work is to be when he comes as an avenger of the wrongs that have been done during the six thousand years of man's misgovernment, and to punish the ungodly world for its wickedness, for its shameful and awful deeds.

Now the things prophesied as to be done by the Lord in these two characters differ so much from each other that the deeds mentioned cannot be performed at the same time. The purposes and works are the very opposite of each other and they will not be brought to pass as one event nor at the same appearing. To John the Revelator it was made known that when he comes in judgment every eye shall see him, "and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." (Rev. 1:7). And no doubt Paul meant the same time of trouble when he prophesied in 2 Thess. 1:8 that Christ will come "taking vengeance." But his coming to his church will not be for any destruction, nor to cause anybody to suffer. That event is everywhere spoken of as a time of gladness, of joy, and a fulness of love, both human and divine. Isaiah prophesied that then God "will wipe away all tears from off all faces," and that his people will say, "We have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Paul declares that the Lord will come to be "admired" of his people. Yet these two comings are so near each other in time that they are spoken of in a general way as one coming. And they are only different parts or scenes to one great event, namely the final and glorious coming of our lard Jesus Christ to reign over the earth and over the nations thereof, along with his disciples and saints as prophesied in Isaiah 9:7, Dan. 7:13, Ps. 2:8, Rev. 5:10, and Zech. 14:9.

Also the parable of the ten virgins is very plain in showing that the Lord will come directly to his church, although he will find his saints devoid of the measure of light they should have, and when he must waken both the wise and the foolish virgins from slumber by a cry that will be sounded from above, then will come the auxiety and commotion among the virgins as to whom of them have laid up a store of divine light that will entitle them to go with Christ in to the marriage and who of them may not go in. The parable is very clear that only one half of the saints living will be "ready" when He appears suddenly to the Church to take the accepted ones to the place where the ceremony will be had, even that which is called the "marriage of the Lamb." Now when a man comes to be married he does not come to all the people in city or country, but he comes to the chosen bride, and in the presence of a select company the marriage takes place. So it will be with Christ and his bride when he to her, but there may be a select "company of comes only to her, but there may be a select "company of angels" as witnesses of this notable marmiage.

Also when a man takes a wife she becomes a partner with him in all that he possesses. In like manner I understand that after this marriage Christ's Church will come into possession of gifts, blessings, and powers hitherto unknown to it, even through a heavenly endowment, which will give light, wisdom, understanding and intelligence, such as will be far beyond anything previously received. No longer will there be uncertainty, hesitancy, differences and divisions in views and plans, but instead a universal understanding of the work to be done and how to do it. All the hitherto perplexing questions, all the matters of controversy in the past, all the mysteries will be solved, and the straight, plain way will be pointed out by the Holy Spirit, and by the "One mighty and strong," who shall speak "Eternal words," who is to set in order the house or God and arrange by lot the inheritances of the saints," even the Lord Jesus himself.

Then those who are to be missionaries will be endowed with the divine gifts to go to all nations and in their language preach the gospel, convincing and converting people as never before done; and they will gladly gather to Zion. This missionary work will be with such power that kings cannot prevent, nor prisons hold, nor men kill. At the same time those appointed to manage the gathering and to build the city and temple will be endowed with wisdom and intelligence to accomplish that work successfully. And thus all parts of God's great purpose will go forward harmoniously and in acordance with the divine plan.

Perhaps some have not noticed that there will be two gathering times for the saints, the last one being at the great crisis in the world events, when Christ's time is up for the final coming. These last saints to be gathered are spoken of by him as "the remainder;" and it is plain that they are suddenly gathered from great danger by angels who are sent for them in haste. We read as follows:

"Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed. In that day the disciple who shall be on the house top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and he who is in the field, let him likewise not return back. Remember Lot's wife. Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it. I tell you, in that night two shall be in one bed, the one shall be taken and the other left. Two shall be grinding together, the one shall be taken and the other left. Two shall be in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left. And they answered and said unto him, Where, Lord, shall they be taken? And he said unto them, Wheresoever the body is gathered in, or, in other words, Whithersoever the saints are gathered, thither will the remainder be gathered together. This he spake signifying the gathering of his saints and of angels descending and gathering the remainder unto them, the one from the bed, the other from the grinding, and the other from the field, whithersoever he listeth."—Luke 17:30-38, Inspired Translation.

At the first gathering both Christ and the Church regard the legal rights of husbands and wives, the world and its conditions continuing as they have been in all past time, so that husbands and wives are not taken from each other, nor are those who are involved in business obligations to their partners, or upon which business the support of their of their families depend But when the time has come to the full, when the day of peril and calamity is near, when Christ is at hand in judgment, then God will send angels to take the faithful and devoted "remainder," from the evils to come as well as from their companions and partners, even by God's own power, and his only. And who shall deny his right.

Thus we see the two gatherings and the reasons why the second differs so much from the first one, the first being those who are accepted by Christ and spoken of as "the body," while the last is composed of those whom Christ calls "the remainder," those whom the Father gathers by his own special power that they may not be involved in woe and destruction. It appears very plain in connection with the previous events narrated, not one gathering but two, the first when Christ receives and marries his bride, the last when the Father brings home the scattered ones that they may not lose their well-earned right to reign with Christ, along with the other saints.

There is also a plain promise in the Book of Covenants that Christ will be with his people in person at the redemption of Zion. After giving assurance that such redemption shall take place the revelation reads as follows:—

"Therefore let not your hearts faint, for I say unto you as I said to your fathers, mine angels shall go up before you, but not my presence; but I say unto you mine angels shall go before you, and also my presence."—Doctrine and Covenants, 100:3.

Through manifestation in vision or dream this very point was made plain to the leading man in the church a few years ago, after he had repeatedly expressed disbelief in such personal coming and work by the Savior before his final appearing. Certainly this promise in very definite, and it should be carefully considered by all who wish to come to understanding on this subject.

The ministry have preached everywhere that the Lord will come to the world when the people do not expect him and are not prepared for his coming, but the strongest prophecies made by Christ say that he will come most unexpectedly to his own people, and that they will be taken unawares. The Inspired Version contains his words by Matthew, Mark, and Luke as follows:—

"Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."—Matt. 24:51.

"Watch, therefore, for ye know not at what hour your Lord doth come * * * Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."—Mark 13:53, 55.

"Verily I say unto you be ye therefore ready also; for the Son of Man cometh at an hour that ye think not. Then said Peter unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or unto all? And the Lord said, I speak unto those whom the Lord shall make rulers over his household, to give his children their portion of meat in due season."—Luke 12:47-49.

All this agrees with the parable of the virgins, that he will appear to his people unexpectedly. Not only so but also Christ declared that when he comes some of his servants will be found beating and smiting their fellows, and that because of existing wrongs the love of some will become cold. It is clear that some now have lost their hope and become cold in the gospel, though they ought not to lose faith in God and his truth because of evil doers. Christ said that his kingdom was like a net that gathered all kinds of fish, both good ones and bad ones. If so when he was present with them it cannot be any less so now when he is away. As for those foreseen beating and smitting, it means any personal injustice, any wrong in business, and any misuse of ministerial or temporal power, any lordly assumption of right to do so and so because of office, or opportunity, when those acts and words trespass upon justice and break down the lesser, and he has to submit whether or no.

All these things have been apparent, but instead of saints losing faith in God, the fact that Christ himself foretold that these very conditions would exist just before he appears to the church, all this should give strength to the saints to endure a little longer. Christ said; "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." Also, "Offenses must needs come." But we find that endurance is the triumphant virtue in such cases.

Another thing to be noticed is that Christ, in Luke 12:47-49, gave a special warning to those who should have charge over his saints just preceding his coming, that they were the ones he referred to, as he informed Peter. This warning we can see the need of from 1844 and onward, and every servant of God needs to take heed lest he hurt or do wrong to some one.

Another thought: Christ said that some will say, "He delayeth his coming." There must be some cause for this, perhaps in part because of the longer time elapsing than was expected, but I believe chiefly because it is argued that He cannot come until the Jews are gathered, and Jerusalem is so nearly taken by the wicked nations that Christ has to come as their deliverer; and at that coming he will also come to his church. But I understand that there will be quite a number of years between the two, and that one is not dependant upon the other. And the idea that he cannot come until certain things have been accomplished in Jrusalem and in Zion is chiefly responsible for the error in saying that he delays his coming. The general idea has been that the leading authorities of the Church will certainly know when the preparation for the Lord's coming is to be made, because they will institute the "gathering" as the prelude to that event. "There is no cause for haste until they move and tell us to get ready to go." That is the thought that a financial preparation is the chief need, whereas the Savior shows that a great amount of preparation is to be moral and spiritual.

You may notice that Paul says that "There shall come out of Sion the Believer and shall turn away ungodlinss from Jacob." He must first be in Zion to go from Zion to Jerusalem for that deliverance. See Zech. 13:3. 4.

deliverance. See Zech. 13:3, 4.

Another point is that all the ten virgins must have received the gospel and had the Holy Spirit to some degree, because when the cry comes from above they all accept it. They believe in revelation, and are not like those of other religious bodies who reject all messages from God. All have been "called to be saints," and those who do not go in to the wedding are not left out because they have not believed the latter day message, but because they have not used their lives and their time as God wants them to do. They have not been busy in the Lord's cause, or in doing good to others, as commanded. In Doctrine and Covenants 76:6 it says that a portion of those having the glory of the moon will be those who have not been "valient" in the gospel, "wherefore they obtained not the crown." were saints in name, but they failed to put their hearts and lives into the Sunday school work, or as ministers filled not their calling, or if they had neither of these obligations they failed to let their light shine out to those around them, in accord with the command, "Let him that heareth say, Come," or else they failed to aid the poor, the troubled, the sick, and to lift up the fallen and the despairing of the earth, who needed them.

Yes, there will be a temple built before the final victorious appearing. In his promise to Abraham God set one hundred years as a generation, and the generation spoken of in September, 1832, lacks eighteen years of completion. When the wedding endowment is given, of wisdom and power, there will be no halting, no hindrance, and the "short work," sometimes spoken of, will find its fulfillment, and rapid work will be done. Yet sufficient time will be had for preparing a city for the final coming of the King to his waiting people who then will be looking for him.

Those who have been acquainted with the gospel work in the Reorganized Church for thirty or more years remember well the time when certain men in high office caused much commotion and distress in the Church, and that finally they withdrew and were released in April, 1886, and went their own ways. However, some time before this result, my mind became perplexed and my heart greatly concerned because of that trouble, and because of the continued conflicts taking place in revelation to authorities, governments, methods of procedure, and courses of action about both spiritual and temporal affairs. So many things pertaining to church progress appeared in controversy, as to how, and by wheel, and in what manner such or such things should be done. Though the law was cited yet the interpretation put upon the passages quoted varied a great deal, and the conclusions reached were widely different as to the proper course of action.

But greater than these was the wonder in my mind as to how and when there could ever come the unity, harmony, and seeing eye to eye, in brotherly love, such as is according to the divine purpose, while the diversities of view existed, and indeed were then increasing. Under such conditions how could the church be prepared and ready at any near time for the expect-d gathering unto the riches of full spiritual communion and joy, such as is clearly the intention of the Lord for his people when they become his bride? Then I saw in Matt. 25:1-10 the Savior plainly taught that at his second coming he would find his church asleep, all asleep, both the foolish and the wise, and this was in conflict with the idea that one thing needful is to gather together, when we are strong enough to purchase land, and then the Lord will come. If that parable is true I wondered how we could expect that all would be in Zion, and all very much awake and anxiously looking for the Lord to come at any moment, so that all may welcome him and all be welcomed by him, as has appeared to be the full expectation from the beginning of my experience with the Church fifty years ago.

So I prayed and meditated, seeking for a solution. And suddenly there came to me an illumination of mind which assured me and convinced me that Christ will come and find his people unprepared, as said in the parable, as yet on the journey and asleep by the wayside, and only onehalf of them ready for acceptance as wise and faithful virgins in their service to God and humanity. But I considered that God intended for all the church to be ready, and for all to make the gathering, but owing to their failure to keep his commandments this was prevented. Not only had Christ said, "How often would I have gathered you, but you would not," also he had said in this dispensation, "They might have been redeemed even now, but behold they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands." D. C. 102:2.

Then Luke 12:40 to 56 was opened up to me, and later D. C. 100:3 and 85:18, 19. This last promise is yet to be fulfilled, I believe. The past supposed fulfillment really fulfilled so little that it was but a small thing compared with the evident intention of these promises.

Thus I have for over thirty years studied this subject carefully, prayerfully, and with earnest anxiety to know the truth. And I now present my reasons for this belief, largely because others who have long known of them have urged their publication in order that some may seek and pray take heed lest they be taken unawares. I may be so taken, but my soul desires to understand and to be among the wise.

The important questions are, Which of the five are we likely to be numbered with? Are we making ready to be counted with the five wise, if it is possible? Are the shepherds and pastors doing all they should do to comfort, to strengthen, to cheer, and to inspire the flock and to give daily encouragement by example, and kind advice and counsel by word, as the sheep go on the journey? Some are being sorely tried, and some are fainting, and perhaps some are falling by the way because they lack food and drink divine, which only can sustain them. Christ may come to the Church at any time and find it sleeping on the road, and only half of those who can be called virgins ready to go with him to receive their portion of the wedding endowment which will entitle them to remain.

A few days after sending the foregoing for publication I decided to append the following fact because it may comfort others who have been troubled and discouraged.

A number of years ago in a time of trial and uncertainty as to probable results of conflict in authority and purpose, a letter came to me from a brother living many hundred miles distant. I had not written him, nor had others, and he was at one side and unknown, hence there could have been no suggestion to start any thought or any response. He wrote that a message had been given him for me, and he was told to write it, but he did not know why it was sent. It reads as follows:

"Fear not. O my servant, concerning the troubles that are among you. For lo, and behold, I am the Lord God, and I am at the head.

And I suffer these things to be so for a little while until all things shall be discovered and made plain to the Church even as they are plain before me. But behold, it shall not be for long, for I will not allow my work to be destroyed nor my people to be divided; but the chaff must be separated from the wheat. Amon."

I read it then to one of the old Lamoni standard bearers, and he shed tears and said, "Thank God, he has not forgotten his people." The words so unsought and unexpected, coming in a time of stress, have often strengthened me, and I will be thankful if they prove of comfort to others also. I will be glad to know if they do.

DAILY PRAISE.

The writer tells of a visit to the famous Calumet and Hecla mines, in northern Michigan, shortly before five o'clock in the afternoon. As they came to the mouth of the mine, a friend said to him, "Stand here and listen." There was silence for a moment, and, coming from the earth beneath their feet, faint sounds were heard. They grew stronger and more distinct as they waited, seeming like the weird melodies played by the wind on telegraph wires. Nearer and nearer they came, mingled with the creaking of machinery, and resolving themselves at last into the familiar notes of "Nearer, My God, to Thee." In a moment the cage reached the top of the shaft, and the day shift of Welsh miners, who had been singing their way up from the depth of hundreds of feet, stepped out, and, baring their heads, joined in "Praise God, from Whom All Blessings Flow," and then quietly turned homeward. "They do this every night when their work is done," said the friend. "It is their expression of praise and thanksgiving."-American Messenger.

IMPORTANCE OF BATTLE OF BANNOCKBURN.

Various communities where there are many persons of Scotch ancestry, on June 24, held exercises commemorative of the six hundreth amiversary of the Battle of Bannockburn, in which famous engagement, fought on June 24, 1314, Robert Bruce, with 30,000 Scotch, gained a signal victory over Edward II, with 100,000 English, and secured his throne and the Independence of Scotland. Of this momentous battle, affecting as it has done the entire English-speaking race, Andrew Lang, English critic and historian says:

Perhaps, if the first dreams of Edward I had been realized, and union had been achieved on terms which respected Scottish national sentiment, there might have resulted a strong and contented kingdom. In that case, France would have fallen before English arms, and there might have come into existence an unweildy empire stretching from Cape Wrath to the Pyreneesrich and imposing, but internally as uncomfortable as Austro-Hungary. But if the War of Independence had ended, as at one time it seemed likely to end, in irretrievable defeat, Scotland would have become a second Ireland. National sentiment in Scotland was a real thing long before the days of Wallace; and all national sentiment is a thing which cannot be conquered by force. Had Edward II become King of all Britain, he would have spent half his strength in dealing with the chronic discontent of the north. Ireland was conquered, and has always been a fruitful source of anxiety and danger. Scotland won her right to work out her destiny in freedom; and when her destiny led her, as was inevitable, to union with her "auld enemy," she brought to the empire only additional strength, because it was the willing contribution of a free The victory of the Scots at Bannockburn seems on the surface to be only an incident in three centuries of war; in reality, it was one of the facts which in the long run made for the stability of the British Empire.

One must be careful not to attribute too much to any single historical event; for, even the most outstanding is only a single link in a long chain of contributary causes. But Scotland, England and France were all vitally affected by Bannockburn; and thus it becomes not merely a notable event in local history, but an important event in the records of Europe, which in turn has affected vitally the history of America.

TOWER OF BABEL.

The explorers of the German Oriental Society believe they have discovered the foundation and basement of the Tower of Babel. They were able to trace the wall of the city built by Nabupolassar, the father of Nabuchadnezzar, and the royal castle where they found a huge lion of basalt. Their work at Assur is bringing to light many most valuable objects of Assyrian art. On the opposite bank of the Tigris they explored the palace of King Ninib, who reigned B. C. 300, several temples and discovered a large number of wall paintings illustrating the advanced civilization of that epoch.—The Presbyterian,

Dear Ensign:—On the 16th of May, I left home and loved ones, for the Central Oklahoma District, my field of labor. I stopped a few days in Pittsburg, Kansas, and preached one sermon. I was pleased to meet the few faithful ones that I have known from my childhood, that

I visited my daughter's (Ferol) school and was satisfied with her work as a teacher. Her school closed on the 23rd and she came to me at Sperry, Okla,, and re-mained with me for six weeks. She enjoyed the meet-ings and the association of the saints, and was quite a

Since coming to this mission I have preached in Sperry, Javina school house, Skiatook, Teriton, a school house near Teriton, Yale and Agra.

Bro. W. W. Chrestensen has been with me much of the time and is making putte a successful missionary. The future is bright for many of our young missionaries if they do not learn it all, before they see the real scope of the gospel. Bro. Chrestensen left for home yesterday to prepare to attend the Joplin reunion, and I am continuing the meetings here. We have had the best interest and the largest audiences in this mission that I ever had. I am feeling well and enjoying fine liberty.

ever had. I am feeling well and enjoying fine liberty.

I am interested in the two articles on the atonement that have been published in the Herald. It is a big subject and like all the works of God, we only understand it partially. It is only the ignorant that can be positive and dogmatic. But the more we read and meditate on any subject the more we will learn. I am pleased to see these articles in the Herald, although the writers are looking at the subject from entirely different view points, and I hardly think either will be affected by the other's arguments. This is the way of many of our debates and both sides claim the victory, saying the other did not answer his arguments. But after all is said we will have to conclude that under the circumstances that have prevailed it was necessary for Christ to have been crucified. It is not a question as to what would have been necessary if conditions were different, but what must be done under existing conditions. The unfortunate must be done under existing conditions. The unfortunate man with a mangled leg, finds that it is necessary to have it amputated. It does but little good to tell him, if it were in a different condition it would not need amputation. The question with him is what is necessary under present conditions.

"And now the plan of mercy could not be brought about, except an sman reneem his people." B. of M.1723.5. "And now the plan of mercy could not be brought about, except an atonement should be made; therefore God himself atoneth for the sins of the world, to bring about the plan of necey, to appease the demands of justice."—B. of M.

There may be questions that are asked about this subject that one does not understand and that an other can not satisfactorily answer, but that does not justify me in repeating these plain statements, any more than it would be wise for him to say the grass does not grow, because he does not understand how it is done. grow, because he does not understant how it is one. The whole subject is complicated and puzzling, and so is every other subject that pertains to the work of God, and the man that sees no puzzles is the one that knows very little if anything about the plan of salvation.

We may not fully understand why or in what sense Christ is called "God," but such is the case. Nor are we told when or how he became God or if the same methods that made him God would make others the same. He may have been simply a representative of God, a minister, but something more is implied by these statements, and these harmonize with the Bible and Doctrine and Cove-nants. In the Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 18:2, Christ says, "For behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all * * * which suffering caused myself, even God, * * * to bleed at every pore," etc.

If he had stated that he was a representative of God and was not God in any sense, any more than any other minister, only a more faithful one, he would have conveyed quite a different idea. Then we would have had simply a human "sacrifice" which would not have been sufficient, for "a sacrifice of man" will not do, but the sacrifice must be "the Son of God," and he is also called "God himself." Perhaps when we have the atonement question settled we will have this part of it settled also. It is very hot and dry here. The corn is ruined and the outen is suffering. The pastures are about dried up If he had stated that he was a representative of God question settled we will have this part or it seemed and It is very hot and dry here. The corn is ruined and the cotton is suffering. The pastures are about dried up and many are feeding their stock. This will cause hard times in Oklahoma and thus affect the finances of the

as possible and the saints should do what little they can by paying in their tithes and offerings. Many say they are anxious to have preaching in their neighborhood, and they are, but they can help carry the gospel to their neighbors and others, if they will pay as much tithing and offerings as they are able. When a missionary comes to your place and you enjoy the preaching of the gospel, remember that some one is paying the expense of that missionary and his family and you are getting the benefits. Can you realize this without feeling that you should do your part? If all should quit paying tithing the missionaries would have to go home.

The signs of the times indicate that all should be alive and in line of duty.

Dear Ensign:—You are a weekly comfort to me. I receive so much strength and light from you pages—the letters from the dear Saints, the sermons and articles are all dear to me. The church papers are my only preachers. I love this great latter day work and long to be where I can take an active part in branch services. All we can do now is to speak a word here and there, and sometimes give out tracts, all of which brings persecution. But we are thankful to bear this for his name's sake, for He is very good and mindful of us in our and sometimes give out tracts, an accuration. But we are thankful to bear this for his name's sake, for He is very good and mindful of us in our isolation. As truly as God loved and cared for Elijah, so he loves and cares for his isolated children. I know there are those who, if the law would permit, would take our lives because of the gospel we love and advocate; yet right in the midst of the enemies of truth we live. We have some friends who are non-members, but they are few; yet God blesses us, keeps us, and comforts us with the sweet peace which the world can not have they are few; yet God blesses us, keeps us, and comforts us with the sweet peace which the world can not have or understand. They can't understand how we knows, and if people would listen we are able to to give a reason for the sweet hope we have within us. Praise God for this assurance. Twenty years or more ago I read a poem in the Ensign entitled "Rum's Victims." I don't remember the author, but I taught the poem to my little brother who recited it one Friday afternoon at wheel I to a pleased by the teacher that the school. It so pleased his teacher that she sent him to the professor with a note, when he was asked to speak it to High School pupils and from there to every room in the school house. I am sending you the poem. I write from memory, so if I misquote I hope I may be pardoned. With love to all I am as ever your sister in the faith once delivered to the saints.

OPEN LETTER TO ALL THE LOCALS. DOMESTIC SCIENCE WORK.

As Auxiliary workers we are greatly hadicapped in the matter of taking up the Domestic Science work. It is not because the different locals are not interested in this line, but that there is such a crying need for competent persons to present and teach it. It is true that the theory of the subject in hand is very essential, but furthermore the actual presentation of the practical work-furthermore the actual presentation of the practical workings of it is equally important.

As superintendent of this department, let me urge that as many locals as possiple take it up as a regular part of their work. If there is no one in your midst who has had opportunity for special training in this course—obtain textbooks on the subject and study them out for yourselves—outlining lessons of moderate length and then in your meetings discuss the results obtained by the different members in their practice work, such as making the tests which are their practice work, such as making the tests which are suggested, and making use of the receipts.

"Elements of the Theory and Practice of Cookery" by Williams and Fisher is the textbook suggested by Sr. Donaldson, the former superintendent. This is indeed a splendid text to use and may be obtained through any a splendid text to use and may be obtained through any book store from the Macmillan Co., New York City, price $1.00. If you have already made thorough study of this book, I will gladly suggest other books on the subject. Please feel free to write me at any time for I am wil-ling and anxious to be of service in every way possible. EDUCATION IN THE HOME.

There are so many phases of home training that come to the mind at the suggestion of "Education in the Home." To some the subject sounds big-embracing the idea of private schools and the endless study of books, dull and uninteresting. Such a definition is appalling to the woman who has each day full of duties and no library or else a library full of books with a title that means little or nothing to her.

The secret of the value of a literary side of home life lies within the mind and soul of the woman who has learned that in spite of work she may keep in touch with life and its meaning. Not all throught experiences.

A few moments each day may give the home maker information to impart at lunch time or at the dinner hour about, "What one City did for its idle Boys," "Why Pres. Wilson objected to this or that law," or "What one school did in arranging healthful sports for its girls," A short poem, giving, as poetry always does the ability of the company of the shift o ories. A brief perusal of the lives of our great men and women, the real characteristics of daily life make one forget the wearisome tasks and fill the mind with new aspirations and ideals which cause the trivial duties to fit in their places as necessary parts in working out those ideals. those ideals those ideals.

In fact, the best definition of what "Education in the home" may mean to the busy worker seems, the daily acquiring of bits of information, inspiriation, and wisdom which will give them a cheerful and wholesome outlook on life and will make them entertaining and helpful leaders in the home.

Many may not have access to the beautiful things of Many may not have access to the beautiful things of a literary nature. The Woman's Auxiliary may fill a real need along this line. True helpfulness may be shown if the sisters who have material will loan it and if they will exchange the ideas they have gained. The Educational and Literary Department, it is hoped, will get these matters before the women of the church in a tangible form and place them on a working basis.

Many of the best magazines seems expensive, but why Many of the best magazines seems expensive, but why not have the members of the society in each locality put their funds together and subscribe for some of them, selecting wisely the ones that will give the widest range of subject matter. For instance "The Mentor" for excellent work on modern artists, "The Literary Di. for excellent work on modern artists, "The Literary Di-gest," and a good magazine on current events. Read these at society meetings and carry their truths to others in the home. The beautiful pictures, brown prints of the masterpieces, which come with each issue of the "Mentor" could be given to the members, each taking one in her turn and before long there would be in the one in her turn and betore long there would be in the home pictures expressing ideas well worth study. This magazine gives explanations of pictures, lives of artists and many beautiful ideas to be passed on to the whole family by mothers and sisters who are thoughtful and have the standard of the home at heart.

There are topics of a literary nature or of every day experiences which many would like to talk over or ask questions about. It will be noted in the work outlined for the literary department study, which will appear in the August number of the Autumn Leaves that topics are the study. ics are to be added later. This gives any one having any particular topics they would like to study a chance to send them to the Superintendent who will give them due consideration.

THE RUDENESS OF CHILDREN.

Lamoni. Iowa.

THE RUDENESS OF CHILDREN.

The rudeness of our children is a standing disgrace to American social life, and a serious reflection upon American mothers. In Europe, one is impressed upon every hand with the politeness of children and young people. Here, one is constantly shocked by the almost total lack of courtesy among children on the streets, and the Here, one is constantly shocked by the almost total lack of courtesy among children on the streets, and the general lack of respect among children everywhere. The rush that characterizes life in the city tends to produce, in old and young, disregard for the rights of others. Our boasted liberty easily degenerates into license, and among certain classes of the foreign-born population, into a total lack of restraint. But we get at the root of the trouble only when we come back to the home—The home is the place where children the latter that the contract of the place where children the latter than the contract of the of the trouble only when we come back to the home—The home is the place where children should be taught good mainners. Mothers and fathers have grown careless about enforcing the simple rules of politeness. Schools cannot take the place of the home. The boy who tips his hat politely to a lady, who gives his seat to a lady or an older person in a car, or who apologises when he jostles you in the street, is becoming a rare product. The English have an expression "I am sorry," which they use where we would say "Pardon me" or "Excuse me." Imagine an American boy taking time to say "I am sorry," when he had bumped against you in a crowd. It is up to the mothers of today to give to their children a course of the mothers of today to give to their chanter a course of training in the little courtesies of life, which in grand-mother's day had a prominent place in child training in the home.—Leslies Illustrated Weekly, July 14, 1914.

ADDRESS AND TRIBUTE TO BISHOP R. C. EVANS. During the Reunion of the Toronto Saints at Lowbanks the following address was read. A resolution prevailed that copies of the address and song be sent to the church papers for publication.

Florilice Miller Reporter for Reunion.

To Our Beloved Bishop and Reunion President, Greeting:
We, the campers of 1914 Reunion, are taking this opportunity of re-assuring you of our high esteem for you, and our great appreciation of all you have done for us, and for the work we all love so dearly, throughout our fair Dominion.

We realize that it has been largely through your unstinted labors that the Great Latter Day work has been spread abroad in the land of the maple leaf, and has attained the heights of success all the world is recognizing today.

The majority of us here first heard ahe gospel message—given with no uncertain sound—in the golden tones of the Church's orator, and since we have obeyed the gospel commands we have often been encouraged and strengthened through your counsel and sympathy.

So we desire while here at this Reunion to show our loyalty to you and the church and Canada.

The poet has said, "To God, thy country and thy friend be true," and we have chosen these pennants to proclaim be true," and we have chosen these penuants to proclaim we are, and ever wish to be true to our church, our Canada, and our R. C. The letters "C. C. and R. C." stand for that, and the colors signify truth and purity.

We are proud to wave these penuants in your honor and to place them on our tents, and when we go home they will be to us souvenirs of most blessed and happy experiences of the Reunion which you have labored and sacrificed for, to make it so enjoyable and beneficial to your children in the gospel, also such a great success and means of spreading the work in this part of our country. Our Bishop, our brother, and our friend, we trust that you will ever remember that the love and true friendship of the campers have called forth this expression of appreciation and that you will kindly look pression of appreciation and that you will kindly look upon the manner in which it has been given, for words are feeble things to convey the heart throbbings and highest and purest thoughts which are entertained by all for you.

May the giver of all good prolong your life until you have accomplished all that He has so efficiently fitted and qualified you for, and leave you with the true Canadians who love and take great pride in you.

Signed in behalf of the campers,

While Mrs. Miller read the address several of the campers held up the blue and white penants, then Mrs. W. S. Faulds sang the verses composed by Mrs. Washington for the occasion, to the tune of "The Maple Leaf Forever." The Bishop said he was completely surprised and was deeply touched by the expression of love and appreciation.

A TRIBUTE TO BISHOP R. C. EVANS. (Tune, The Maple Loaf Forever.)

The gospel message is restored unto us in Latter Days. We hail its glory and rejoice and sing aloud its praise, Through storm and shine the chosen few Have braved the world's displeasure; We'll rally round our standard true, God's chosen saints forever.

CHORUS:-

The church restored in Latter Days Our country's fame increasing; Our Bishop dear, beloved by all God's chosen saints forever.

The gospel message has been spread over our Canadian home;

We love our country's fame and strength and glory in its

Our fair Dominion God will shield. His angels guard His mission; We'll rally 'round our standard true, God's chosen saints forever.

A true Canadian God has called To proclaim His gospel here His fame has spread throughout the world, His name has comfort given; His cheer and counsel and advice Has raised the weak and fallen; We'll rally 'round our leader brave God's chosen son forever.

> SHALL WE KNOW HIM? Now I hear my Savior calling; Sweet his voice does sound to me; And I long to be made perfect, That his face I soon may see.

From his mansion far away. And his face will change this gloaming Into everlasting day.

Oh, what joy awaits the weary, Who have toiled with earnest heart; Soon this burden will be lightened With the love he will impart.

Oh, that all in truth would some him Till that glad, glad day shall dawn, When we'll meet our Lord and Savior And shall know as we are known.

HOW TO KILL FLIES.
To clear rooms of flies carbolic acid may be used as follows: Heat a shovel or any similar article and drop thereon twenty drops of carbolic acid. The vapor kills the files. A cheap and perfectly reliable fly poison, no which is not dangerous to human life, is bichromate of potash in solution. Dissolve on dram, which can be bought at any drug store, in two ounces of water, and add a little sugar. Put of this solution in shallow dishes and distribute them about the house. Sticky flypaper, traps and liquid poisons are among the things to use in killing files, but the latest, cheapest and best is a solution of formaline or formaldehyde in water. A spoonful of this liquid put into a quarter of a pint of water and exposed in the room will be enough to kill all the files.

To clear the room quickly where there are many files, burn pyrethrum powder in the room. This stupefies the files, when they may be swept up and burned.

If there are any files in the dining room of your hole, resturant or boarding house, complain to the proprieter that the premises room of the control of the proprieter of the files.

are not clean.

BEING A GOOD FELLOW.

The word loyalty is, however, in some other connections often overworked. Loyother connections often overworked. Loy-alty among the polititians means that a man must stand by his political associates and his party organization whatever they may do. Very often when the cry of disloyalty do. Very often when the cry of disloyalty is raised against a politician it means that he has decided to go ahead on a new and hard path of honor. Social loyalty often means that one must stand by his friends, his "crowd," no matter what his conduct. This is false loyalty. A man must be loyal to truth, loyal to honor, loyal to justice; and when his friends waver or halt; or turn aside, he must go on alone.—The Christian Herald.

THE GOSPEL OF PEACE.

For many years efforts have been made toward the maintenance of peace among the nations of the earth. Peace conferences have been held, temples of peace have been built, the cause of peace has been endowed with great sums of money for its strengthening, and representatives of the different nations have met in council and agreed upon the elimination of some of the more brutal methods of modern warfare, and in fact the disarmament of the nations was hopefully talked of, with the ushering in of universal peace. But the sudden bursting out of the war flames involving practically all Europe has dispelled the hopes of the most optimistic, and the early stages of the war show a tendency among the governments to throw to the winds all agreements and treaties which may in the slightest degree stand in the way of their progress.

With so much effort why has peace failed? Why should nations forget the Christian civilization which has enabled them to know the value of good will and brotherly love, and follow the course of savages who seek only to destroy human life and all that life holds dear and sacred? Can humanity turn suddenly from peace and love and righteousness to strife, hatred, and vengeance? Hardly, but the primary causes of war may be traced to the depths of human hearts where its fires have been nurtured and kept smoldering for time indefinite. Greed, lust for wealth, lust for power, and lust for luxury and pleasure, with vanity, pride, extravagence, and a disregard for human rights, are the things which lead to war as certainly as a flowing stream leads to the sea. So long as such conditions remain in human hearts, peace conferences, treaties, and peace funds can not stop the inevitable results.

The Prince of Peace.

One of the titles divinely given to the Son of God was "THE PRINCE OF PEACE," yet in his coming he never acted as the mediator between warring nations or factions, and the world did not recognize in him even a peace-maker, much less of having earned the title of "The Prince of Peace," but his method of procedure in establishing peace is fully set forth when one of the Jews who was at variance with his brother over some property cause to him asking that he meditate in his behalf. (Luke 12:13) Jesus refused to intorvene as the man desired but said: "Take heed, and beware of covetousness," and enlarged upon this teaching with a parable. As the Prince of Peace he struck war at its very root: there could be no peace so long as covetousness existed. Lord Roberts, commander of the British armies, said not long ago: "While greed and strife dwell in the heart of man, war will spring up among the nations," but Jesus the Messenger of peace recognized that fact long centuries ago, and taught the remedy by which the human heart could be converted.

The Gospel of Peace.

One of the purposes of the mission of Christ was the establishment of "Peace, good will to-ward men." Of his fore-runner, John, Zacharias prophecied in part that he was "to guide our feet into the way of peace." The things which John taught as leading into the way of peace were "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," and preparation for accepting the "mightier than I" who was to follow. The way of peace is found through the gospel and by no other means. Paul calls the gospel "the gospel of peace." It was preached by Jesus and his apostles to Jerusalem, but the city rejected it, and it was most proper for Jesus to say to Jerusalem "If thou hadst known * * * the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee," etc. In the work of bringing about peace the gospel begins with the individual, seeking to change his nature by the elimination of all that tends to strife and with the development of all that tends to peace. The first words of Christ's teaching were "Repent ye, and believe the gospel;" his message was one of peace to those who obeyed, but those who refused he could promise nothing but the sword.

No Peace to the Wicked.

"There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked," (Isaiah 48:22.) "And the work of righteousness shall be peace." (Isaiah 32:17.) Sin is destructive of happiness, peace, and love, and they cannot exist together; righteousness is unifying and tends to harmony. The curses pro-nounced upon ancient Israel in case of their turning to wickedness had their climax in war; the result upon the Jews of having rejected their Messiah with his message of righteonsness was war and destruction, such wars being but the terminal of the road which people had chosen to follow. The Scriptures speak of some who will cry peace, peace, when there is no peace, and the great discussions of peace of late years have seemingly come at a time when peace is farther away than in any time past. Paul speaking of the last days says: "For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." (1 Thess. 5:3.) upon them."

A Way of Escape Prepared.

In consequence of men having lost sight of the right way, the Lord in these last days restored the gospel that it might offer a means of escape from the disasters which he saw were impending. At the time of restoration the Lord said:

Wherefore the voice of the Lord is unto the ends of the earth, that all that will hear may hear; prepare ye, pre-pare ye for that which is to come, for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people; for they have have broken mine strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image

The Lord recognizes the light which the world has received under the teachings of Christianity though indicating that the world had failed to to ocme up to it. The preaching of the full gospel would make greater demands upon the world for obedience, and those who accepted would be blessed thereby, but of others it is said: "He that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received for my Spirit shall not always strive with man, saith the Lord of Hosts." The Lord further says: And again, verily I say unto you, O inhabitants of the earth, I the Lord am willing to make these things known unto all flesh, for I am no respector of persons, and willeth that all men shall know that the day specifly cometh, the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand, when peace shall be taken from the earth, and the Devil shall have power over his own dominion; and also the Lord shall have power over his saints, and shall reign in their midst, and shall come down in judgment upon Idumea, or the world. D. C. 1:6.

Whether the day has come when peace shall be taken from the earth we may not say, though the rapid spread of the war spirit and the terrible hatred engendered between nations, would lead to the conclusion that if it has not come it can not be very far off. Other statements of latter day revelation declare that "the day of wrath shall come upon them as the whirlwind," Behold, and lo, vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly, as the wrirlwind, and who shall escape it? the Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day; and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet it shall not be stayed until the Lord come." (D. C. 63:2; 94:5.)

Is it not time that men were seeking their God, if it is not already too late? In this land where peace yet reigns the opportunity is yet extended of hearing the gospel message, an acceptance of which will bring to each seeking soul an assurance of peace and safety through the divine Spirit. "Great peace have they which love thy law" say the Psalms, and the promises of God are assuring to those who obey the gospel, for the Lord will care for his own. Zion rejoice, while all the wicked shall mourn. For over eighty years God has been pleading with men through the restored gospel by the power of his Spirit but comparatively few have accepted it, but to such is promised salvation both temporal and eternal if they continue in obedience to the commandments. The promises and prophecies of the Scriptures, both of ancient and latter days, are being fulfilled regarding both the righteous and the wicked. Shall we be on the side of peace?

COMMENTS.

The War Spirit.—The suddenness with which the war spirit flared up and spread over the entire world is astonishing, and very few could perhaps give any cause for it becoming so general. Like many other things of evil, its immediate cause is very trifling reminding us of the words of James: "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! A forest may be set on fire by a spark which is counted the immediate cause, but the weeks of drouth constitute a cause running back for some time and which made it possible for the spark to do its work. Conditions of readiness for war have been developing for many years, and a mere spark was sufficient to start the flames. What the result will be is difficult to imagine.

Our Missionaries in Europe.-A number of missionaries sent out by the Church were faithfully carrying on their work at the time of the breaking out of hostilities. Bro. H. N. Hansen and wife were in Denmark at last report, Bro. Peter Muceus and family in Norway, Brn. O. K. Okerlind and C. A. Swenson in Sweeden, Bro. Peter T. Anderson in Denmark, and Bro. Alexander Kippe in Germany. A considerable number of conference appointees are in Great Britain most of whom are residents and citizens of that nation. Bro. R. May and wife are in London. How far the war may affect Palestine is uncertain, but we have in that land Brn. U. W. Greene of the Twelve,, Rees Jenkins and wife, and A. H. Koehler and wife. All of these brethren may find their work interfered with if not stopped altogether by the unsettled conditions, and governmental restraints in these countries. They should be remembered in the prayers of the saints.

In all things throughout the world, the man who looks for the crooked will see the crooked and the man who looks for the straight will see the straight.—Ruskin.

The Sunday morning's discourse was by Apostle J. Curtis. He was introduced as Bro. F. J. Curtis. Bro. Curtis said he did not know why Missourians got his initials reversed, unless it was because he was frequently called Frank, but it is J. Frank instead of Frank J. For Curtis. the basis of his sermon he read the entire. 12th chapter of Romans which is an excellent exhortation of Paul's on Christian graces and virtues, duties and responsibilities one towards another. The speaker said that possibly he would not be the only one who would make Quoted Paul's words to Timothy that in the last days perilous times should come. Referring to the first verse perilous times should come. Referring to the first verse of the chapter read, in which the words, "that ye present your bodies a living secrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service," said that some gave as an excuse why they did not comply with that admonition was because of the acts of others. He also admonition was because of the acts of others. He also stated that the Saints as a rule where he went were striying to live their religion. Told of a man who said that God did not consult him when he was brought into the world, and that he did not think God had a right to compel him to do just as he thought best. Bro. Curtis said he asked if his children were consulted by him before said he asked II his children were consulted by him before they were brought into the world, and if he did not think his children should obey him in doing what he thought was right. In speaking of the great war he asked what it was for, and what it would accomplish for the good of humanity, if it would benefit the poor or bring comfort to those who need comfort, or prevent other wars in the future. We are called to be soldiers, he said, and as such we should have on "the whole armor of God," having our "loins girt about with truth," and have on "the breatsplate of righteousness," the "shield of faith," "helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit." This is the armor recommended by Paul. He asked if every one present were in a position to say that they had on the "full armor." He said that it had been stated that all great questions would now be settled by arbitration, and that there would be no more war, and from that he had had to defend the Doctrine and Cove nants where it says war shall be poured out upon all nations. How is it now? Referred to Zion's location far inland from foreign attacking nations, should there be such a thing,

We are sorry that we did not have a chance to report the evening's sermon, being the third of a series by A. H. Parsons on the first principles of the gospel.

Sunday afternoon Bro. B. J. Scott delivered a ringing speech on local option at the Maywood M. E. Church. He used a good many Bible quotations in support of positions taken. Bro Scott is speaking throughout the country districts and at Mt. Washington every night in

The Independence City Light department has lately installed a large Allis-Chalmers engine which is capable of developing from 200 to 700 horse power. The fly wheel of the engine is 16 feet in diameter and weighs thirty thousand pounds, and the engine proper weighs sixty thousand pounds. This new engine will effect a saving of one-half in fuel and will be large enough to furnish electrical energy for the city when much larger than at present.

The flag on the Government building has been at alf mast since the death of Mrs. Wilson, wife of Presi-Wilson, and the postoffice was closed during the time of the funeral Monday afternoon.

I have often thought of what Gen. Sherman said about war, that it is "hell." Whether he had a proper conception of what hell is like or not, he certainly knew what war is. War is the most flagrant violation of about war, that it is moral obligations enjoined by civil governments on their subjects. It is wholesale murder, it is highway robbery to the greatest degree, not simply holding up a train and taking a few hundred dollars, but taking whole trains and monstrous ships with all contained therein including millions in money. War is incendiarism on a large scale, therein including and monstroom. War is incendiarism on a large sum, millions in money. War is incendiarism on a large struct, it is ravage, it is plunder, it is merciless, it is cruel, all to satisfy greed, to settle a disputed point or avenge a trifling insult.

VISITS ENOCH'S HILL

I was a visitor at the Sunday school conducted on what the Saints please to call Enoch's Hill, on the United Order of Enoch grounds, and surely it must be, for there seems to be an inspiration that fills the souls of those who attend, and inspires the mind with new thoughts. When you visit the place, you will hardly be able to refrain from taking a retrospective view of the beginning and the end, so far as I can do, and count the number that attended the little brick church on the hill east of the city, and then follow the time along to the present, noting the fact that the time had come for the beginning of the gathering, and slowly but surely the numbers multiply until now we see the stone church with a capacity of about 1,500, the south side church capable of seating about 600, the Walnut Park Branch with perhaps 150, and a little church building that will seat about 200, then the mission on north Liberty Street, and last but not least, the Enoch Hill Branch, and sure a wide awake little gathering, very enthusiastic in the work, anxious to give a ready answer to all questions propounded. The superintendent, Bro. C. S. Warren is very alert, and seems to take a pride in bringing out the best thoughts, for when questioning the primary classes about their leszon, i could not help but note the the gathering, and slowly but surely the numbers classes about their lesson, 'could not help but note the promptness of the answers from the little ones. The attendance was 58, collections $1.06. There are seven classes. The time of meeting is 9:30 a. m.

The Santa Ana Saints have just cause for pride in their new Church which nears completion. Located in a desirable portion of the city convenient to the main electric line adjacent to the populous and business center of the city, and centrally located for the members as well; it is a beautiful building of modern architecture and pleasing design, that gives one a spontaneous desire to enter. Haven't heard for sure, but believe the one service is to be right after reunion, probably August Tent meetings at Pomona closed about two ago and since then have been held at Cucamonga.

The meetings of the Elders' Quorum was held at San Bernardino, Sunday, July 12, and a good time was en-joyed by those present, the only regret being that more were not in attendance. Incidentally while there Brn. were not in attendance. Incidentally while there Brn. Editor Ensign:—I arrived at this part of the Lone Star State on yesterday from Avery, Texas, where ended our ten days reunion on the 2nd inst. The attendance was better than we had expected, large crowds being present at the night meetings, notwithstanding the fact that one of the Split-in-two Baptist wings, or ciurch, started a series of day and night meetings in their arbor, and from house to house, for the purpose no doubt to counsel and prevent their membership once saved, never unsaved, from attending our services, lest they might taste of the good milk of the word and be lost or fall, regardless of once in grace, always in grace. These hirelings almost compel us to believe that they dare not trust their members out from under their ministerial wings, or that they have not enough brains to take care of timeslews, forcing upon us the right to question their thread-bare theory of once saved, never unsaved. However dry pasture and short dry grass or food caused many of these noble souls to jump the fence and come nightly to hear-us, and well might they when such towering minds as those of Elders John Harp and J. M. Smth, in thunder tones broke the bread of life to them. Another drawing card was the good singing by the choir while Sr. Harp made the organ talk with no uncertain sound. Elder B. F. Pollard with just -a few helpers had done all in their power to make the reunion a success, and as such it will go into history. Our meetings were spiritual and orderly from first to last, without any disturbance of any kind on the grounds. We have met with a noble band of Saints in this state as well as at Wilburton, Fanshawe, Halleyville, and Manning, Oklahoma, and some of them have kindly remembered our financial needs; hence have no complaint to make. I shall remain a few days, thence northward, and all being well, be at Halleyville, Okla., in time to attend the ten days reunion and district conference to begin Aug. 21.

Field address, Wilburton, Okla.

Manchester, Texas, Aug. 4.

Dear Ensign:—I have just returned from Avery, Texas, where 1 have been attending the reunion of the saints held at that place, closing on the night of the 2nd. We had a grand time and I think everybody enjoyed them.

held at that place, closing on the night of the 2nd. We had a grand, time and I think everybody enjoyed themselves regardless of the hot weather and dust.

There were some fine sermons delivered by those of the missionary force, Elders John Harp, J. C. Chrestensen, and J. M. Smith. We had very good attendance at night. The Baptists were holding a meeting there at the same time, but several of their members came to our meetings, just the same. I think there are a good many people around there who will obey the gospel sooner or later. There were two or three who gave their names for baptism at the close of the meetings.

I think I can safely say that they were all true Latter Day Saints and I hope that I will be able to meet them all again some day, and if not in this life, let us all pray that we'may so live that we shall all meet again when Christ comes to reign a thousand years here on earth. I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end. For Christ said, "He who holds

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end. For Christ said, "He who holds out faithful to the end the same shall be saved."

There are only a few of us here and the clouds look dark sometimes, but we rejoice to know that there is a brighter day coming for us if we will only do our part. Yours in bonds.

Pond Greek, Okla., Aug. 3.
Editor Ensign:—I came here (six milles south east of Pond Greek) the 21st of June to visit with my son and his family, coming about the beginning of the wheat harvest.

It surely has been a great harvest. And now that threshing is nearly done it will enable the many farmers who lost so much last year from the failure of crops, to square up most of their indebtedness.

My son's father and mother-in-law came bere in 1893 on their homestead, and now they have a good farm. They have been isolated ever since. They with this son and wife, are the only Latter Day Saints in this part of the district, except a few at Enid, over twenty miles away. Very seldom has an elder of the Reorganized Church come this way but when one did come, this brother and sister would have a feast of good things. Some times two men of the Utah Church would stop and this brother, Joseph Cooper, would entertain them as men needing food and shelter, but not as servants of God.

They didn't like that part, for they saw that Bro. C. knew too much of the inside workings of the Mormon Church.

Now I want to tell you of the great surprise we all had yesterday, Sunday, Aug. 2nd. We went to spend the day with this brother and sister, and when we got there our surprise was great, to find Bro. L. C. Hopkins and his family from Enid and Bro. Joseph Arbor who had been holding meetings in Enid. After dinner we repaired to seats under the shade of some trees and heard what Bro. Arber had to say to us.

Two of Bro. Hopkin's children who had been baptized on Friday were confirmed. The words were good instruction to the children and encouraging to their parents. Then the secrament was administered, after which testimonies were borne. All were so thankful of having a chance to again renew their covenant, Bro. Joseph Cooper in particular, it being the first time in fourteen years.

The subject of Bro. Arbor's sermon was The Gathering. He could have chosen no other that would have interested more. We enjoyed it so much and received much information along that line that was new to the lonely saints.

Yours for the Truth, Mrs. (Sr.) Emma P. Wheeler

GLEANINGS.

Mrs. John Randall, Scottville, Mich., July 30.—We have a fine Sunday school, held in the school house, and meetings every Sunday night by an elder from Free Soil, Mich. We have spiritual prayer meetings in homes of Saints when we are humble. We had an edifying prophecy given to us Wednesday night, July 29. We are very much encouraged in this place.

Mrs. Theo. S. Caffey, Manistique, Mich., July 31.—I love to get the "Silent Preacher," as all the sermons we get now are in the Ensign and Herald, but I would like to hear a good sermon again. Although this is a town of about 6000 we are the only family of Saints here. There are eight or nine churches. In our family of ten, seven are in the church, and two more would like to be baptized when an opportunity is offered. Would be glad to have any elders who might stop here to come and see us. We live in the Soo Line section house, just west of the S. L. Depot. Think this would be a good town. for street preaching. It is the only way to reach the people here. Pray for us.

NOT IN VAIN.

My God, I thank thee! may no thought E'er deem thy chastisements severe; But may this heart, by sorrow taught, Calm each wild wish, each idle fear.

Thy mercy bids all nature bloom;
The sunshines bright, and man is gay;
Thine equal mercy spreads the gloom,
That darkens o'er his little day.

Many a throb of grief and pain
Thy frail and erring child must know;
But not one prayer in breathed in vain,
Nor does one tear unheeded flow.

Thy various messengers employ;
Thy purposes of love fulfill;
And 'mid the wreck of human joy,
Let kneeling faith adore thy will.
—Hymn Book.

RACE TOLD BY HAIR.

Scientists are able, by the use of the micrascope, to tell from a single human hair to what great racial division the original wearer belonged. If a cross section of the hair is elliptical the man was black; if round, the man was yellow or red; while the white man's hair is oval.

The Australian native has hair with the least diameter, the bushmen of Africa the next, then the American Indian, the Chinese, the white races of Europe, and lastly, the Japanese, the coarsest of all. The beard of a white man is 50 per cent thicker than his hair, and is almost identically the size of the hair of the chimpanzee. The strength of human hair is, as a rule, in direct proportion to its thickness.—Popular Mechanics

HELPING HIS INFIRITIES.

There is a beautiful story told of Professor von Herkomer, the celebrated sculptor and painter. His father, who was himself a sculptor, lived to a great age; and in his declining years the keen sight and sensative touch, so necessary to the modeling which up to the end of his life he delighted to do, departed to a large extent from him. The modeling he did in these later days was, of course, far from reaching his accustomed standard.

After he went to bed, however, each night the brilliant son who loved him would go into the studio where the old man had been at work and, taking his work in hand, would correct all its deficiencies, giving it here a touch and there a touch, and rounding off its corners and crudities, as he was so able to do. Then when the old man came to the studio in the morning, the time when his failing eyesight was keenest, he did not see the imperfections and was happy in the work, all unconscious that someone else who loved him had been correcting his work and beautifying it.

We do not know if the story is true, but we are sure that is what Jesus does for us when we honestly do our best for him. He who has begun the work by inspiring us to begin, will overrule its mistakes and transform its poorness by his own beautifying touch until it is something of real value to his cause in the world. His faithfulness is our security, now and always.—Selected.

SATISFIED OR UNSATISFIED.

There is little hope for the person who is perfectly satisfied with himself. After all is said and done, nothing is so stale as a satisfied man.

Within the breast of the purest, noblest, and best there is some slumbering ambition which is ungratified. We are always looking forward to something better than we have known. "It is better farther on." better farther on." The sweetest joys are set before us to win. Even Paul says: "Not that I have already attained, or am already made perfect: but I press on, if so be that I may lay hold on that for which I was laid hold on by Christ. Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." There can be no perfect rest There can be no perfect rest and satisfaction until we land in the heavenly port. Being filled with gratitude for the blessings we enjoy, we should reach out after lasting joys and unfailing treasures.

CARE AND WORRY.

You have heard of Care and Worry-dark visitors they Say,

Who stalk about familiar as Hamlet's ghost at play,
They come and tarry with you, unbidden and unasked,
And flaunt their gaunt arms o'er you—add weight to every task.
They watch the rays of sunshine, and guard your open door,

Lest Light and Hope may enter and sing the songs of yore.

Lest Light and Hope may enter and sing the songs of yore. Close friends are Care and Worry, they laugh and dance with glee,

And pile the faggots higher at each white lock they see.

They glory in the shadows their black robes fling about,
And while the cloud is o'er you they laugh and dance and shout.

They ever walk before you, for should they fall behind,

They ever walk before you, for should they fall behind, Their forms would vanish from you like mist before the wind.

But over on the other side wait Love and Hope and Joy, Mother and wife and sister, and little Bob, your boy. The robin sings in the willow and the skylark chants his lay.

And flowers blossom about you from the morn till close of day.

Fling back at Care and Worry their black robes of despair, And know as the years pass swiftly God's hand hath rested there.

Smooth out the great furrows cut wide on brow and cheek, For trouble lies in the valley—you are nearing the mountain peak.

PRESERVE MILK WITH ELECTRICITY.

Important results have been obtained at Liverpoel with an apparatus for killing by electrical treatment bacteria of all kinds present in milk, and an extensive plant is now in practical working at the Earle Road Corporation Milk Depot, from which 100 to 125 gallons a day are distributed in about three thousand bottles.

Dr. J. M. Beattie, the Liverpool City bacteriologist, states in a report that the apparatus was designed by Mr. F. C. Lewis, assistant lecturer in bacteriological methods at Liverpool University, by whom also all the preliminary work was carried out. The first experiments with uni-directional electric currents failed to produce sterilization and caused undesirable changes in the constitution of the milk. By the use of uni-directional and slowly alternating currents and the addition of minute quantities of salt to produce chemical reactions, it was found that all kinds of bacteria could be killed; but the milk was spoiled from the consumer's point of view.

The foundation of the system which has now proved successful was the use of a rapidly alternating current which practically sterilized the milk during its passage through a long tube fitted with copper or other electrodes. In the large scale plant now in operation the continuous tube has been replaced by three electrode chambers connected by glass tubing with rubber joints. The work with the experimental aparatus established that "the invariable result" was the "complete destruction of all colon becilli and bacilli of similar nature, with an enormous reduction in the total number of bacteria of all kinds." periments with tubercolosis milk showed that the bacillus of tubercolosis was destroyed, while bacteria which caused blood poisioning were also stroyed, or so reduced in number as to be harmless. There was also a great improvement in the keeping qualities of the milk, the chemical composition of which, according to the city analyist, so far as chemical analysis can ascertain is unaltered.

Two guinea pigs inoculated last February with the untreated milk showed definite tubercolosis, whereas the animals inoculated with the treated milk from the same samples were not tuberculous. —The London Times.

THOUGHTS ON EVOLUTION.
"Thou makest thine appeal to me;
I bring to life, I bring to death:
The spirit does but mean thy breath:
I know no more." And he, shall he.

Man, her last work, who seem'd so fair, Such splendid purpose in his eyes, Who roll'd the psalm to wintry skies, Who built him fames of truitless prayer.

Who trusted God was love indeed And love Creation's final law— Tho' nature, red in tooth and claw— With ravine, shrick against his creed-

Who loved, who suffered countless ills, Who battled for the True, the Just, Be blown about the desert dust Or sealed within the iron hills?"

In Memoriam

The history of the nineteenth century will be famous because of the discussion of two hypothesis which attempt to account for the existence of the innumerable species of living things which inhabit the earth: the theory of creation and the theory of evolution. According to the theory of creation, all the individuals of every species existing at the present day are derived by a natural process of descent from a single individual, or pair of individuals. On this hypothesis, these parent forms—which precisely resembled in all the essential respects, their existing descendants—came into existence by a so-called supernatural process known as Creation.

According to the theory of descent or organic evolution, every species existing at the present day is derived by a natural process of descent from some other species which lived in a former period of the world's history. According to this theory, if the individuals of any existing species could be traced back far enough, their characters would be found gradually to change, until finally a period would be reached at which the differences were so marked and extensive as to require the placing of these ancestral forms in a different species from their descendants at the present day. Also if the species of any one genus could be traced back they would gradually approach one another in structure until they finally converged into a single species, differing from those now existing, but standing to all in a true parental relation.

It should be remembered that the theory of descent or organic evolution is not concerned to show how life itself came to be; its existence being taken as a fact which does not fall within its range of discussion.

Darwin's own view of the doctrine of descent is set forth in the following quotation from the "Origin of Species." "It is interesting to contemplate a tangled bank, clothed with many plants of many kinds, with birds singing on the bushes, with various insects flitting about, and with worms crawling through the damp earth, and to reflect that these elaborately constructed forms, so different from each other, and dependent upon each other in so complex a manner, have all been produced by laws acting around us. There is grandeur in this view of life, with its several powers, having been originally breathed by the Creator into a few forms or into one: and that while this planet has gone cycling or according to the fixed law of gravity, from so simple a beginning, endless forms most beautiful and most wonderful have been and are being evolved."

Professors Jordan and Kellogg have this to say in 'Evolution and Animal Life:' "The term evolution is not wholly acceptable as the name of a branch of science. The term 'bionomics' is a better designation of the changing of organisms influenced through unchanging laws. It is a name broader and more definite than the term 'organic evolution,' it is more euphonious than any phrase meaning life adaptation, it involves and suggests no theory as to the origin of the phenomena it describes."

The doctrine of spontaneous generation certainly finds no support among evolutionists of the present day if the following strong statement of David Starr Jordan in "Footnotes to Evolution" is authoritative:

"Nor is evolution identical with the notion of spontaneous generation. There is no necessary connection between the one theory and the other. If there is now spontaneous generation of protoplasm, it cannot take the form of any creature we know. An organism fresh from the mint of creation would be too small for us to see with any microscope. It would be too simple for us to trace by any instrumentality now in our possession. It would contain but a few molecules, and a molecule in a drop of water is as 'small as an orange beside the sun. Such a race of creatures, spontaneously generated, without concessions to environment, would grow hoary with the centuries before it came to our notice. Its decendants would have belonged for ages to the unnumbered hosts of microbes before we should be aware if its creation."

Furthermore, this same authority disclaims the supposed evolutionary theory that man is a developed monkey. While he supports the evolutionary doctrine that life first began in simple protoplasm from which have been evolved the almost numberless species known today and that therefore organisms are blood-related; descended from one another; he claims that the question of the immediate origin of man is not the all-pervading question of evolution.

To quote again from his "Foot-Notes to Evo-"It is perfectly true that in the higher lution. or anthropoid ages the relations with man are extremely intimate; but man is not simply 'a dveloped ape.' Apes and men have diverged from the same primitive stock-apelike, manlike, but not exactly the one nor the other. No ares nor monkeys now extant could apparently have been ancestors of primitive man. None can ever develop into man.. As man changes and diverges, race from race, so do they. The influence of effort, the influence of surroundings, the influence of the sifting process of natural selection, each acts upon them as it acts upon man.

"The movement of monkeys is toward semianity. The movement of cat life is toward felinity, that of the dog races toward caninity. Each step in evolution upward or downward, whatever it may be, carries each species or type farther from the primitive stock. These steps are never retraced. For an ape to become a man he must go back to the simple characters of the simple common type from which both have sprung."

"Humanity is not the 'goal of evolution,' not even that of human evolution. There will be no second creation of man, except from man's own loins. There will not be a second Anglo-Saxon race unless it has the old Anglo-Saxon blood in its veins."

In contrast with the foregoing thoughts on evolution it is interesting to consider the following quotations from an article entitled "Life, Death and Immortality," by William Hanna Thomson:

"But when man appeared an immeasurable advance took place, whose nature is often obscured in the minds of many by their too exclusive attention to the progressive series of animal forms which preceded it. As man is the perfected animal, they think that he is still only an animal, and, as such, closely allied to those anthropoid apes, the gorilla, the orang, and the chimpanzee. But as a being, the chimpanzee can no more approach man than he can grow wings to fly with.

"We cannot too earnestly call upon our intelligence to dwell upon this great subject, for often it is very imperfectly appreciated. Man is a being who could do and could know everything in the universe if only he had time instead of the few years of his earthly existence. What he can do or make now he shows by covering his globe with wonderful creations which comes into existence solely by his own purpose. What he can know he shows by making a small glass prism which enables him to tell that a star is double, when no telescope could reveal it as such, and which of the two stars is approaching and which receding from him. His world in short, is not a chimpanzee's world in any sense, for he takes up Shakespeare to read, or investigates the ether to make it his messenger to the ends of the earth. In all this he is not partial nor circumscribed, for he can do anything well, be it the tasks of a statesman or the problems of a scientist.

"These are incontestable facts. But what causes this transcendent difference between man and any other animal? Nothing whatever in his physical frame and nothing particularly in his brain. In his brain he closely resembles the chimpanzee, as all anatomists know.

"But in mental rather than physical effects, biologists have discovered evidences of a marvellous difference between the human and any animal brain. The agency which causes that difference also explains why man is so immeasurably above all animals in his powers and capacities. Though man's brain, like that of all mammalia, is composed of two completely matched hemispheres, yet it is only one of these two which is the human brain in its wonderful faculties. It is only the left hemisphere in right-handed persons and the right hemisphere in the left-handed which can speak, read, write, remember, think, recognize, reason, or perform any mental act whatever. All the other hemisphere can do is to receive bodily sensations or execute muscular movemnts, but never an idea nor word nor purpose can arise in it.

"It is here that we meet with that new and tremendous fact in this world's life which came into it with the advent of man. It is facts about the brain which make this revelation. At birth man's brain knows nothing in either of its hemispheres. After a time he developes the exclusively human faculty of speech, whose material seat is in this left hemisphere if he be rightnanded or in his right hemisphere if left-handed. But as he grows in years he may wish to add another language to the mother tongue which he first learned. How can he do this? His brain can not now help him in the least. Neither one hemisphere nor both together can offhand speak any language. It is not the business of brain matter to know how to talk, for if so we should all talk as soon as we were born. What a person must do to learn a new language is to do it all himself. No one can learn that language for him, and he can do it only by long, tedious practice which takes at least months, if not years. During this practice he, and no part of his brain, has slowly modified a thin layer of brain matter so that it can talk, say French; and then this French layer he then lays upon the similar previous layer for English, as one would lay the wax leaves of a phonograph one over the other. This is proved by the fact that when an apoplectic clot from below has ruined his English sheet, but not damaged his more recent French sheet, he then is not able to speak a word of English, but can still talk French.

But just the same process must be gone through with in the case of evry faculty which is not congenial but acquired. As Euclid said to King Ptolemy, there is no royal road to geometry. In fact, there is nothing so personal as the knowledge of any science. No one can become a great mathematicism, nor chemist, nor geologist by having any one else spare him the trouble of becoming so. The reason is that for every special kind of knowledge there must be a special place slowly organized in his brain, and no one on earth can do this but the man, that is the person himself just as learning a new language is solely a personal accomplishment. A highly accomplished person is literally one who has accomplished a great deal in fashioning his own brain.

This revelation of the personality in us doing everything with the brain to make one of its hemispheres human in its capacities, proves that the difference between man and the chimpanzee is not one of degree but altogether a difference in kind.

"The reason for all this is that man is a person, which no other creature on earth is.

He himself recognizes this as his greatest certainty in the world, for he can truly say of himself, 'I am.' Whatever else there may be outside himself, whether it exists or is only an appearance, he knows that he unmistakeably exists, and that he is endowed with personal powers which no other living thing can approach.

"It is, we repeat, his ever invisible personality which makes one of his brain hemispheres human in faculty, and which of these two collections of brain matter it will be depends on which hand he used most when he began this marvelous work; for it was not the brain that made him, but he who made it the instrument for his manifold wants. That his conscious personality is quite indpendent of his material body is shown by the undoubted fact that when he loses an arm for example, by amputation, all that he loses is an important instrument which he uses; but no part of his personality goes with it, any more than when his hair is cut. And so modern science proves that his brain also is an important instrument for him to use, as he does his hand, but that his brain is no part of himself. This slender connection between man's physical frame and his real self is one reason why I believe that the universe of personal minds is vaster than the universe of insensate and lifeless matter.

"One result, therefore which only pesons could attain to and which therefore we find to be exclusively human, is a fixed conviction of personal immortality. This is so universal in the human race that it is as generic as the faculty of speech itself. It may take different forms here and there, but its essential oneness remains the same through them all."

It will be noticed that the writer of the foregoing article has made some very strong points against the evolutionary theory—against evolutionary materialism at any rate.

In showing that the difference between man and the chimpanzee is not one of degree but altogether a difference in kind. He furnishes strong corroboration of the account of the creation of the vegetable and animal kingdoms contained in the Book of Genesis: "Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yeilding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so."

"And God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind."

The language here used contemplated that each separate genus or kind should through the laws of propogation and procreation, always maintain its individuality and not become merged into something else. As a matter of fact the numerous forms of life which we can observe at the present day, including the microscopic forms, are always individual and particular. Nor do they ever merge into another or into anything else. Professor Agassiz relates having found in a reef off Florida, the remains of insects estimated to be thirty thousand years old, and they were just like the living insects of today. So there are evidences of marked fixety in certain forms of life, at least. And this holds good so far as the genus "man" is concerned: at least, so far as it has been possible to trace his history in the geological cycles.

It is always well to keep in mind the fact that the conclusions of science are not final. They are merely its last and best. This must necessarily be so when scientists themselves admit that no ultimate fact is known to science. Science speaks hypothetically, not conclusively. In replying to certain questions through the columns of a leading newspaper Professor Lucien Larkin said: "You use the word 'origin.' I do not know the origin of anything. I do not know all there is to know about anything." So there is good reason for believing that as science becomes acquainted with new facts its sentences are apt to be modified somewhat, and that if such modifications bring it in closer touch with the teachings of true theology it will not be the first time that "revelation" has shown itself to be in advance of "science." Take for instance the fact recorded in the book of Genesis, that light appeared on the first day-before the sun was visible from the earth. This used to be a standard difficulty with skeptics. So much so that a skeptical writer said of the Mosaic narrative, "It would still be correct enough in great principles were it not for one individual over-sight and one unlucky blunder!"—the blunder (?) being light apart from the sun. But science has made progress toward revelation since that Professors Dana and Guyot, the distinguished geologists confirm the testimony of Genesis on this point. Dana says: "In the first place, it may be observed that this document, (referring to the book of Genesis) if true, is of divine erigin. For no human mind was witness of the events; and no such mind in the early age of the world, unless gifted with superhuman intelligence, could have contrived such a scheme-would have placed the creation of the sun, the source of light to the earth, so long after the creation of light, even on the fourth day, and, what is equally singular, between the creation of plants and that of animals, when so important to both; and none could have reached to the depths of philosophy exhibited in the whole plan."

Guyot, under the caption—"The Beginning of Activity in Matter"—says: "In such a beginning the activity would show itself instantly, by a manifestation of light, since light is a result of molecular activity. A flash of light through the universe would therefore be the first announcement of the work begun." So the impeachment proceedings against Moses on this point have had to be withdrawn; the "cosmogony" of the Mosaic account is proven correct; should not this fact inspire confidence in the "biology" of that account?

Passing now to the creation of man as related in the Mosaic narrative, we are told "God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him." And again: "the Lord formed man of the dust of the ground." Some people claim there is a contradiction here. Is there any contradiction? Are not both statements true?

We know that man's body is formed of the dust of the earth. Chemistry discloses the fact that the same elements enter into the composition of man's body as are found by analysis in the dust of the ground. Hence this statement is true in a very literal sense. But the creation of man was one thing and the formation of his body another thing. As Dr. Thomson points out in his article, previously quoted, there is a transcendent difference between man and any other animal—not physically, but psychically. The part of man that God created was the "ego" which can say, "I am." On the physical side of his nature he may approximate the mammals, but on the mental, moral and spiritual side he can approximate God. Horatio W. Dresser, in "The Power of Silence" says:

"At any rate, evolutionary materialism is a failure. There are decided limits beyond which mere evolutionism has been unable to go. It is difficult also for natural science to advance into the inner world, for science deals with the universal, and the inner life is in a peculiar sense the home of the individual. Even experimental psychology fails in the attempt to discover the true character of the inner life. The most interesting questions are still unanswered when psychology has completed its description of our states of consciousness.

"Personality-what is it, whence came it, and what does it mean? Your world and my world, how much alike, yet how dissimilar! How many and varied the aspects of a single personality as presented to different people, all equally true perhaps, all drawn out from a single source under ever changing conditions! Self exists within self-the social self, the self with impulse and emotion, and the self of reason, the conscious self and the subconscious-wherein we view ideas in all their aspects until they become fixed habits of thought-the fleeting ephemeral self, which reveals itself in an endless variety of moods, opinions, and feelings, and the permanent self which we call 'soul'-that deeper consciousness which is intimately related to the Supreme Self.

"Either then-note the alternative-God put forth his own life in the world, and is immanent yet transcendent, is present in it, transforming it in this age as truly as in the irrevocable ages of the past, or there is no God. Let me repeat: Either God is revealed through the cohesive force which holds matter together, and holds the planets in their positions in space, through the love which draws man to man and the fortunes and misfortunes which characterise his progress, through the insensible gradations by which our politics are changing and our own conflicts are making us true men and women, or there is no Divine Father. For the true Father is the God of experience, the Supreme Reality which experience reveals, which makes experience possible. He is the God of action, the God of the concrete. It is our own concrete experience that makes God's presence known. God is not the same as our experience. He is not identical with the world. But the world from moment to moment real by virtue of his immanent presence.

The omnipresent Spirit aspires through, cooperates with, and seeks co-operation from the individual soul to whom it is ever trying to make itself known. God is immanent in evolution."

Truly, if there does exist a process of "continuous progressive change, according to unvarying laws, and by nicans of resident forces" it cannot be a process of annihilation if God is immanent in it. It may be true that the earth will finally lose its energy of rotation, as well as that of revolution round the sun. The sun may wax dim and become useless as a source of energy and our solar system become a lifeless mass. For it is only a garment, this visible universe; glorious indeed, but not immortal. But what matters it if this process of divine evolution shall then unroll a new heaven and a new earth in which shall dwell righteousness? For in terms of theology this process is not known as "evolution" but as redemption.

FIRST THINGS FIRST.

It is frequently asked: What is the first step for the union of the Church? Certainly, it is an important question, and we do not have to go very far to find an answer.

As applied to Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians, it should be wiping out the memories of the Civil War, which the nation has long ago for-The fault is not with either section alone. Both the Northern and Southern sections of these communions are at fault and, consequently, both should make concessions for reconciliation. It is a blot on the whole Church that what the nation divided on long ago and settled, the Church is still divided on and keeps alive by an unbrotherly division. For either section to say that it is not ready for union is a self-condemnatory confession that ought to make us all bow our heads in shame until grace shall be supplied for the victory over the fiesh. Out of the fine experience of the complete adjustment of this difference will doubtless come the union of the sixteen branches of Methodists, the fifteen branches of Baptists and the twelve branches of Presbyterians.

As applied to the Lutherans, it is wiping out national animosities in the remembrance that God hath made of one all nations on the face of the earth. To keep alive these national distinctions is contrary to the will of God. As applied to the Episcopalians, it is spanning the chasm between the Episcopal Church and the Reformed Episco-However small numerically the latter may be, there is a chasm, and the Episcopal household should seek for its bridging. As applied to the Disciples, it is reconciling those brethren who have instrumental music, who contribute to a general foreign missionary treasury, and who practice open communion, and those who just as conscientiously practice the opposite of these. Had the apostles divided on so trifling a thing as instrumental misic, missionary offerings or the observance of the Lord's Supper, conscientious as they may have been in it, Christianity would have perished in the first century.

Here are six of the great communions in America with their own households in schism, not to speak of the six kinds of Adventists, four kinds of Plymouth Brethren, seven kinds of Eastern Orthodox, two kinds of Catholics—Roman and Polish, twelve kinds of Menonites, four kinds of Reformed, two kinds of United Brethren, etc. As one reads the list he is led to inquire whether each one of these represents a separate God as they stand for a separate infallibility. It is a scandalous condition and bespeaks a forgetfulness somewhere in human conscience of the cross upon which died the Savior of the world.

It must be remembered that these are not creedal divisions which come in for so much present-day discussion, as though agreement upon a creed were the essential thing to a united house. These divisions have to do with pride, conceit, impatience, love of power, jealousy—the very things of which the apostle said: "The works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: fornication, uncleanliness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, parties, envyings, drunkenness, revelings, and such like, of which I forewarn you, that they who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." It is no mistaken utterance of the apostle and it applies with significant force to our divided Christendom. not time to clean our own houses of these filthy practices? Each neighbor has as much as he can do to get his own house clean without tendering his services to another. It is a serious task.

Our first work is at home in our own communion. The scandal of our pride, conceit, impatience, love of power, jealousy, and other works of the flesh are known around the world. They must be got rid of as the drunkard gets rid of his drunkenness and the fornicator of his fornication, and the idolater of his idolatry. As important as is raising great sums for missions, education and benevolences-and it is necessary that this be done—it is far more important that, before we bring our offerings to the altar, we first bring ourselves. Our difficulties are not beyond us, but within us, and reconciliation comes of the spirit and not of the letter. It is well enough to work for the larger interests of Christian union, but these matters which have to do with the union of our local households must not be overlooked, for here is the real beginning of union. Christ deals with individuals. It is the willinguess of the individual Christian to enter the league of reconciliation of interests nearest at hand that means union of the Church at large. ### THE MAN WHO COULDN'T LET GO.

By Rev. Frank T. Bayley.
Walking on the street one day he saw a wire lying on the ground. Without thinking much about it, he stooped the ground. the ground. Without thinking much about it, he stooped to pick it up. That was natural enough; why shouldn't he? It seemed harmless, to be sure. But when he grasped it he couldn't let go! He tried to but he couldn't. It was a "live wire." A strong current of electricity was running through it. It was burning him electricity was running through it. It was burning him cruelly and he cried out with the pain. His whole body was writhing in distress. But his hands still gripped the wire, and when men came running to help him, they had to drag him away from it by force.

That is one of the dangers of a live wire. If you once lay hold of it you cannot let go, no matter how much it is hurting you. I know a boy who grasped a live wire a while ago and it is hurting him cruelly. But he doesn't let go. He says he can't, even though his mother and father are begging him to and the doctor says it will kill him if he doesn't. The live wire is the circarette.

He has a weak heart already, poisoned by tobacco. He has to give up some of the sports he loves because of it and he knows it is killing . Yet he is clinging to it still, smoking every day, nobody can stop him. If he were holding a live wire he might be dragged away from it, but no one can

The only way to be safe with a live wire is never to touch it. And the cigarette is the live wire.—Congregationalist.

WHAT DO YOU KNOW?

The above was the usual greeting of a brother who belonged to our branch several years ago. So the Auxilbelonged to our branch several years ago. So the Auxiliary asks the sisters, do you know anything that would help some one else? Do you want to know more about home-making in any of its branches? If so, the Auxiliary home-making in any of its branches? If so, the Auxiliary wants to become a bureau of information and help you. At this season of the year when there are reunions in so many districts, will not some one in each place where reunion is to be held write for leaflets and ask for one session from the presiding officers of the reone session from the pressung oncers of the re-union, then endeavor to make a short instructive session that every one who attends will enjoy? Have music by the local talent, especially by the children. Ask those of the sisters who are capable to prepare short talks (three to five minutes, not longer) on some home subject.

At our district conference we assigned one subject to each local. Out of six locals five responded and the sixth was prepared but the sister appointed was too sick to attend. For subjects we used some of the questions asked an our general conference sessions, such as, (1) Should chibbren's acts of disobedience be referred to the father for correction? (2) Is commanding the best way of secriting shedience? (3) Is it wise to give small children something to do?

These and many other subjects could be suggested and arguments supplied to those needing material. We urge you to try at the reunions and district conferences to give instructions to improve homes and children in health, mind and soul.

We are going to give some samples of papers read at our Landsdowne session.

Sr. Gall had the question of referring children's misdeeds to the father for punishment. She said:

"Coming over on the car I asked our missionary in charge what he thought the effect of such action would be, and he replied, 'I don't think it would have a bene-ficial effect..'

ficial effect."

"Talking with a young mother a few days ago, she dwelt on a mother's responsibility in caring for her children, but not a word about the father. We well know this must be so, as the father so seldom sees the child. frequently only in the morning, or, if he goes early to work, not until the evening. Is it fair to him to re-quest that he spend his short period of intercourse in correcting misdeeds?

I was surprised to find she was a friend of my girlhood days. She had a son about the age of my boy—what good times our boys would have together! I was delighted to have them there. She came of a fine family and of course her son would be a desirable companion.

I was soon undeceived. Her son went to picnics, ball games, or fishing on Sunday. I asked her if he could go to Sunday school with my boy and she replied that when she was young she was made to go to Sunday school every Sunday and had to stay to church, it was so unpleasant to her that she would never send her children, she believed in letting them have a good time.

"I discovered that I could not let my son associate with the boys her son made campanions of. The boys were near 15 years old, and one day she came home to find that her boy was locked up in jail with some of his companions.

"The mother was responsible for this-not the fathershe allowed him to choose his associates and gave him every liberty(2) to "have a good time." The father was a traveling man, so she had entire control. Here was a case where the father must be "referred to," not to inflict punishment—the law was seeing to that—but to effect a release from punishment.

"We as mothers are responsible for our children. We love them and want them to be happy, but we must teach obedience, correct when necessary, but not necessarily by whipping. Some parents are so often using the switch or strap that a "whipping" has no terrors and the child becomes more wilful and stubborn. A loving remonstrance and a teaching them to love right and to avoid the wrong can be made more effective even with very young children. Teach them to respect your authority
Do not let it be said of you that your children pay no attention to what you say—I have met such mothers in my visits.

"I read an article lately by a lady who has had much experience with children. She says: 'To make your children happy teach them to do something. You can begin when they are very young to teach them to occupy their time, to be obedient and helpful.' If you do this they will be ready at the age of accountability to enter the kingdom of God. This is a mother's duty. Thank you for your attention."

Minister in charge Mission No. 1.

To the Saints and Friends of the Independence Stake:—
The committee appointed to provide for holding of a reunion which already was advertised to convene at Pertle Springs, Mo., August 13th to 23rd, met again August 5th, and after due and serious consideration decided that in view of several serious matters it was our wisest course to cancel those arrangements and declare the reunion postponed for this year at least. The reasons for this action may be briefly stated as follows:—

Very few comparatively had expressed any intention of attending, too few by many to warrant the assumption of a heavy expense.

At the present time there is a general stringency finan cially which our church is feeling acutly, in common with the community at large and to run the risk of increasing church debts even locally is not desirable.

Again, the recent developments in Europe in which all the large powers with a tragic suddenness have become invelgled in war, make it imperative that every unnecesexpense be eliminated and the strictest economy and prudence be exercised by all.

While we are deeply sorry that this course had to be taken we feel sure that all concerned will approve our action as the only safe course to adopt.

Very Respectfully, Pro. the Commi

THE MISSIONARY'S FINANCIAL CARES.

The writer of this paper is a missionary and the many years he has traveled gives him an opportunity to write knowingly on the subject as above stated. The missionary has grievances and unpleasant things to bear and while he may sometimes complain of his lot it is more often that he bears patiently and without murmuring.

Much of the giving of money to the missionary is without order or system, and more from this, and not from lack of sympathy for him and his needs, that he often needlessly suffers many inconveniences and annoyances. Paul says those that "preach the gospel should live of the gospel," (I Cor. 9:14,) and that the elder should be worthy of double honor, "especially they who labor in word and doctrine," and that "the laborer is worthy of his reward." (I Tim. 5:17, 18.)

in word and doctrine," and that "the laborer is worthy of his reward." (1 Tim. 5:17, 18.)

In a revelation given to the church in 1832, (D. C. 83:13) the missionary is commanded to go without purse or script, which simply means that he is to depend on the public whom he labors among to provide for his daily needs, and in paragraph 16 he informs us that the daily needs, and in paragraph 16 he informs us that the one who receives the missionary receives Christ and he will feed, clothe and give him money and in so doing will show that he is a disciple of Christ and for such will receive a reward, "and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple." The missionaries are not expected to call on the bishop, or his agents, only in case of an emergency, when those whom he has traveled among fail to provide for his necessities.

It is not necessary that all communities, branches, districts and recursors should have the same method of meeting the needs of the missionary, but all should have some system by which their needs should be properly met. The isolated one can give to the missionary personally, so can individuals in a branch where a system of collective giving is not provided for.

Some of the evils resultant from a lack of system, and because individual members do not properly realize or perform their duties unselfishly, are as follows.

it. Discrimination is made because of official stand-also because of being popular as a result of a fascinating personality, or for other reasons known to the persons and not to the writer. None but the missionary knows the keen sense of dsappointment and humiliation that he is made to feel because he is the victim of selfishness and the vanity of human nature. His faithfulness to his ministry and his pressing and just needs do not appeal to them.

2nd. Trancients making a short call to see old friends or passing on to their field of labor are sometimes the recipients of lavish kindness and the missionary appointed to that particular field of labor may find it necessary to ask the bishop's agent for assistance to get out of town. There is nothing specially wrong in remembering the old friend but it is most decidedly wrong to neglect the one whom the church has appointed in a neglect the one whom the church has appointed in a particular locality.

3rd. Because of overlooking the needs of the missionary it compels him to go to the bishop or his agent for assistance, and that is an additional burden on the church for money that is needed for the missionaries' families and other legitimate purposes, and in the elder's financial reports it will have the appearance that he is a special burden to the church. The writer of this paper has not been made a special victim of these unfavorable conditions so he does not write as a disappointed grouch but more as an observer of the misforpointed grouch but more as an observer of the misfortunes of others.

Suggestions.

If the saints will think about the following suggestions or originate some better ones and put them into practice it will in a large measure add to the comfort, convennce, and happness of many of the missionaries.

When a missionary comes to your home or neighbor-

When a missionary comes to your home or neighborhood, whether in a branch, or if you are an isolated one, he is your guest as a representative of Christ sent out by the church, and in proportion to your ability, consistent with your other duties and responsibilities give to him of your store that you have been blessed with. Do not excuse yourself with the thought that he may have received abundance at the last place he visited, perhaps he has not enough to buy a postage stamp to send a letter to his wife. send a letter to his wife.

sond a letter to his wife.

In a branch a fund could be created for that purpose and paid out by the officers, or at the time of the visit of a missionary a collection could be taken up in a private or public way and given to him by the officers.

The above plans are used in some branches where the writer has traveled.

In the district in connection with the conferences the plan referred to above in use in some branches can be adopted with profit. It often happens when the missionary arrives there that he has not money to take him to his next appointment. Most districts in which the writer has labored have the above method, but some have not has labored have the above method, but some have not and the missionary often feels the need of it.

The important thing is to help the missionary, to supply his just and proper needs, and not have any quibbling over the method.

James in writing to the church said "my brethren, ye cannot have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the cannot have the latth of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, and yet have respect to persons." James 2:1 (I. T.) Do not make any distinction between the missionaries on account of official position or social standing. Be kind and considerate of their needs, they are God's servants and your brethren, and when the church knows that they are unworthy of your confidence and support it will call them home.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

A Missionary.

Are You in It?

It is a dreadful thing that the word "society" in the worldly fashionable sense has come to mean exclusiveness. It means that a small circle of prosperous people have shut themselves away from real social followship. In fact many of those who reign in so-called "society" have made their way to this high place of exclusiveness by treading on the rights of others. They have fought the way for them, at the expense of others into this exclusive circle. It is a worse than foolish thing to have ambitions to get into society in this sense. To get into society in this sense. To get into society in the sense that Jesus interprets society and in the sense in which interprets society and in the sense in which he wants us to be truly social.—The Christian Herald.

A PERFECT LIFE SAVING COAT. A PERFECT LIFE SAVING COAT.

Bathers at McKinley Park Beach recently attempted to drown each other, but none succeeded, despite the fact that superintendent French had given permission to go as far as they liked. The occasion was the introduction to Milwaukee bathers of the "Noversink" garments. These garments, which have the outward appearance of ordinary Norfolk jackets, are lined with a light fluffy substance, said to be found in Java. They are buoyant and it is impossible to get the wearer's head below water.

Hundreds of bathers tried the coats and though their friends tossed them into deep water not one got his hair wet.

One of the most important features of the new life-saving device is that the wearer finds no inconvenience in swimming, a fea-ture not found in the old fashioned life pre-

It is said to be compulsory for the crews of the United States torpedo boat destroyers and hydro-aeroplanes to wear the coats while in action.

THE HEART AS WELL AS THE MIND NEEDS EDUCATING.

With the rapid increase of sin and crime of almose every kind, and that in the face of an advanced standard of education, we are led to ask "What is the matter with the present system of education which admits of moral laxity to such an alarming degree?" History reveals neither age nor people having a more universal and advanced system of education than is found at the present time among the civilized nations, yet the percentage of violations of law, of moral delinquencies, of divorces, and other evils, is increasing year by year. Dr. Arthur J. Brown in a recent address at Chicago, said:

"Of 522 men who were sentenced to the penitentiary for fraudulent use of the mails in 1912. 106 were college graduates, and of 1,026 inmates of an inebriate asylum in England, 970 had a high school or college education, and some had won high university honors."

It seems that modern education in very many instances does not restrain the baser impulses of human nature, but rather places in the handsor in the minds of the evilly disposed the means which enables them to more effectually accomplish their evil designs. Is not this due to the fact that education is so largely directed to the training of the mind while the moral and spiritual natures are left almose untouched? Notwithstanding it is boasted that the people of America constitute a Christian nation, we believe that Christ is not given his proper place in the great system of education, and that consequently the most vital element in education is neglected.

The tribute paid to Jesus by Nicodemus is acceded to by Christian people everywhere: "Thou art a Teacher come from God." He is the embodiment of truth, the light of the world. The Holy Spirit which he promised to send was to "guide you into all truth," and we must recognize that the field of truth into which the Spirit was to guide extended farther than to cover merely the doctrinal points of the gospel. No line can be drawn, and as the light of the morning sun opens to view the realities of the material world, so the light of "the sun of righteousness" reveals to the spiritual man the whole world of truth. "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" was the exclamation of the never learned?" Jews as they heard Jesus discoursing in the temple, and who will say that his learning was restricted to the few fundamental principles of "the doctrine of Christ"? The whole field of truth comes within range of the work of Christ and the Holy Spirit which he sends.

All truth leads toward God, but this fact is not considered in modern education. heavens declare the glory of God," but the astronomer seldom thinks of them that way, God being left out of the science, as he is left out of all sciences taught in the modern institutions of learning. It is strange that graduates who have had God ordited from their education wander about in the mazes of uncertainty and error, and many sooner or later fall into some form of sin or crime? The Scriptures declare that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," showing that true learning is based upon a proper recognition of God and a due regard for him, and system of education which leaves God out will fail in accomplishing its proper purpose.

In latter day revelation the Lord has said: "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith," and in doing this there was to be established "a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith," clearly showing that in the matter of education God was to be given his proper place. That this seeking for knowledge was not to be restricted to doctrinal subjects is also shown by the command to "study and learn and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people," and also "to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and of man."

The teaching of Christ that "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God * * * is the first and great commandment," and that "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" is second, offers a parallel in the matter of education: The teaching of God and his laws being of first importance, followed by teaching of the things of men and of the physical world. Then will the things coming under the natural sciences be seen in their true light, and then will the Lord also appear to the mental vision in his glory. Not only will the heaven declare the glory of God but every science will help in the unfolding of his character and work.

With Christ given his proper place in education the moral character will be reached and trained as well as the intellect, and the mental power and knowledge gained will be directed and used in the further development of right conduct, and the present increase of sin will be stopped. The training of the mind in theory must ever be secondary to the training of the moral and spiritual natures in righteousness.

CUMULATIVE EVIDENCES.

The convincing evidences which have given assurance to many of the truthfulness and divinity of the restored gospel and which have led them into the Church of Jesus Christ are not the only evidences which the child of God may receive showing the divine origin of the gospel and the Church which bears it to the world. That the evidences are cumulative is clearly implied in the statement of Christ "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine," and the blessings promised upon the condition of obedience when received are confirmative, adding daily evidence in favor of those things which have been believed Knowing the doctrine is frequently understood to be knowledge gained through divine revealment, and we by no means disagree with this view, but it should be understood that the work of the Holy Spirit in its revealing to human minds the things divine, is often accomplished by a gradual process of unfoldment rather than by an extraordinary manifestation of divine power. The working out of truth by daily practice under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit may bring just as strong and abiding assurances, giving the individual stability and safety, as a direct manifestation giving him knowledge of its truth. The astronomer may photograph objects instantaneously where light is abundant, but the distant unseen star requires an exposure of the photographic plate many hours in order to gather the cumulative rays of light and cause the plate to record them, but when once recorded the picture shows the existence of the star as certainly as those which are in plain view.

The reception and application of truth to the daily life broadens the vision and enlarges the understanding, and brings other truth into view which before was unseen, and since truth is of God, God is revealed thereby, and the recipient of truth comes to know God. Such a knowledge is no less the work of the Holy Spirit than that which comes suddenly by the immediate manifestation of divine power, for the work of that Spirit as stated by the Lord is to "guide you into all truth," which clearly indicates that it is a constant work, or as Isaiah puts it "For precept must be upon precept * * * line upon line * * * here a little, and there a little."

The daily work of the Holy Spirit in the gradual unfolding of truth may be undiscerned by the child of God, except as he may discover from time to time that advancement has been made, and that his knowledge of God is far greater than in former years. He may even mourn the thought that so far as he knows there has come to him no spiritual manifestation, and he fears that he is out of favor with God, but what are the gifts of faith, wisdom, and knowledge, which Paul says come by the operation of the Holy Spirit, but the gradual development of man's most useful qualities under the constant direction of the Spirit of God? These gifts can be had in no other way, for to place a vast store of knowledge suddenly in the mind of a man unprepared for it would be overwhelming, and must result disastrously. So knowledge is cumulative and with it come the evidences which confirm more and more other truth which has already been received.

It is not strange then that the discoveries and revelations of truth in chemistry, physics astronomy, and other sciences, as also in archaeology and ethnology, appear as new truths which confirm the old, and thus the gospel finds support on every hand. Evidences are being added continually to the divinity of the latter day work, both by the revelations of men who are engaged in scientific work, and by the operation of the Holy Spirit upon those who are open to its influences. The faithful man need not lack abundant assurance of his faith in the gospel.

COMMENTS.

The Navy and Liquor .- A radical change was made in the United States navy when the order forbidding the use of intoxicating liquors upon board of any vessel or in any navy yard of the United States after midnight of June 30th. The supply on hand had been reduced to the minimum against the time when the order became effective, and some ships had none left over-unless it was stored under some officer's waistcoat. In several cases the small quantities of liquors left on hand were thrown into the sea.

Prohibition in West Virginia.-At the same hour twelve hundred saloons in West Virginia closed their doors to open no more,-at least not as saloons, for the most rigid prohibition law ever passed by any state became operative at that Even drug stores are not permitted to sell intoxicants, not even on a physician's pre-scription except upon a personal examination of the patient and upon evidence that he is not addicted to their use.

New York Intoxicants.-New York may be a long ways from being a prohibition state but the recent Workman's Compensation Law will have a far-reaching effect in stopping the use of liquor. The law bars from compensation the man whose injury results solely from intoxication. Many large employers will not employ men who drink, but when men who work come to see that in drinking they forfeit their rights to compensation in case of injury, they will have a practical reason for letting it alone and they will not await an order from the employer before doing so.

Constitutional Amendment.-There is little likelihood of the Shepherd-Hobson Bill providing for National Prohibition coming up at this session of Congress. The liquor interests have urged its early consideration, probably knowing that delay will only give it strength. There is little doubt but that such an amendment will sooner or later be passed by Congress and approved by the requisite number of states. Nine states are now under prohibition and in a number of others the majority of the people are living in dry territory under local option. The liquor business is in bad repute and cannot stand against the enlightenment and progress of the times.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

In the morning service Bro. A. H. Parsons delivered an excellent sermon on duties and responsibilities. It came with no uncertain sound. He quoted Rev. 16:15, "Behold, I come as a thief," etc., the effort being to show that all should be prepared. This was followed by quotation from Gal. 6:7, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. Said the bride must make herself ready, and recovered to the viteriax who folled to make themselves ready. reap. Said the bride must make never ready, ferred to the virgins who failed to make themselves ready We must not be deceived. It is easy to deceive ourselves but he cannot deceive God. We should take heed unto th things that we have heard, that we might become the sons of God. The great conflict going on now admon-ishes us to live higher, more perfect and holy. Spoke of how suddenly the present great struggle had been preor now sunderly the present great straggle had been cipitated, showing that we, never know when we safe, that "When they cry peace, peace, then beware, sudden destrution cometh." Now all the great nat when we are Now all the great nations Europe are engaged in war with a possibility of the tire world participating. People are fleeing to this entire world participating. People are fleeing to this country, but are they safe anywhere? Speaker read a beautiful poem, commencing, "The day of the Lord cometh, it cometh like a thief in the night." etc. Only a few hours and all the nations of earth are in arms for a few hours and all the nations of earth are in arms for war. He spoke of sacrifice, and of each one doing their duty along financial lines. The man or woman who does nothing towards paying their share of the branch expenses were allowing their neighbor to sacrifice for them, and was likened to a tramp at the back door asking for a "handout." Do we want to be church tramps, allowing others to pay our way when we can pay some thing ourselves, be it much or little?

In the evening Bro. T. J. Sheldon delivered the third of his series of discourses on the Book of Mormon, His sermon, he said would be especially to the young, and that he would endeaver to give some external evidences in support of the Book. Said the question may be asked why the Book of Mormon was needed. Quoted from third chapter of First Nephi where it is stated that from third chapter of First Nephi where it is stated that the great and abominable church had taken away many of the plain and precious parts of the gospel, that it was necessary for a book to restore these parts, and quoted Isaiah 24:5—"they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the evrlasting covenant changed the ordinance, proken the evriusting covenant. The book settles many disputed points, such as the mode of baptism, which some claim should be by sprinkling, others by pouring, and others by immersion, etc. This because the plainness of the scriptures has been taken away, but the Book of Mormon makes it plain as language can make it. Spoke of the land shadowing with wings, and referred to Dr. Rice as saying that the scripture speaking of a land shadowing with wings referred

Bro. J. F. Curtis left last Friday morning for the Nauvoo reunion which began last Saturday morning. Usually this reunion has been held at Bluff Park, just across the river from Nauvoo on the Iowa side, but we understand it is being held on the Illinois side this year. Bro. W. M. Aylor also left last Friday morning for his field of labor Govenor Major has appointed a commission of two Democrats and one Republican for the purpose of revising the election laws. It is to be hoped that the next legislature will do something to amend the election laws that an honest election may be held. Even if all sides desired to be dishonest, as it is the ones in power control everything, and when the saloon element and grafters once get control they continue to control in spite of the wishes of the people, because if they cannot win by fair means they do it by foul means. Zion is not altogether the best place to live in while rotten politics control through ineffective laws.

On Thursday evening at the home of the bride, Sr. Hazel L., second daughter of Bro. and Sr. Joseph A. Brackenbury, was united in marriage to Bro. Edward Brackenbury, was united in marriage to DIO. Edward
A. Curtis, son of Bro. and Sr. Emsley Curtis and brother of Apostle J. F. Curtis. The wedding was a quiet affair, no invitations outside of the immediate families concerned being given. Bro. J. F. Curtis was the officiating minister. We are glad to chronicle in these columns this sacred and holy ordinance uniting two so exemplary young people of the church as are Bro. Edward and Sr. Hazel. May the dear Lord bless the union thus affected, and may they be controlled by the true principles enjoined by holy

...atrimony to their eternal joy and peace. It is of great importance to the "dry" son County that a vote on local option be taken before the general election in November, for the reason that it is expected that the legislature will pass the county unit law and then the vote would necessarily include Kansas , and it would take nothing less than a miracle to Kansas City "dry," and the "wets" knew this and tried their best to prevent the election at this time by tried their best to prevent the election at this time, by seeking to get an injunction from the circuit court, having some of the best lawyers in Kansas City, but Judge Robinson ruled against them, evidencing that there is some justice in Jackson County. However they still show fight, and no stone will be left unturned to prevent the election next Saturday, August 22. With Independence and all of the county outside of Kansas City "dry" it will stop some of the liquor traffic. The "wets" are contesting the Independence local option election, because an election judge, one of their own men, either intentionally or otherwise folials to give the property of the contesting the contesting the stop of their own men, either intentionally or otherwise folials to give the contest of the contesting the cont or otherwise, failed to sign his name to some of the bal-

INDEFENDENCE, SECOND BRANCH.

As usual the Sunday school met at 9:80. The orchestra of six pictos grov excellent service to the musical department. At the 11 o'clock hour two meetings were held. Bro. P. A. Sherman interested the little folks in the basement, and in the upper room Bro. A. C. Martin held the attention of a good sized audience, showing by the Scriptures that we should always be on the watch tower, as we know not when the Son of Man cometh. He also preached at Grandview in the evening.

E. Guinand was the speaker for the evening hour, having good liberty, his text being, "He that is not for me is against me," showing while the war spirit is in the land the church is engaged in a warfare against evil, as we cannot occupy neutral ground and still be on the Lord's side.

On Monday evening, the 11th, a local option meeting was held at Mr. Luther's place south of town. Bro. B. J. Scott was the speaker, and succeeded in creating quite an interest in the "dry" movement. Bro. J. F. Curtis having secured the location also took out a load of singers for the occasion. The same was repeated Wednesday evening at Young's chapel about four miles south of tow

Things have been very puict among us for the past few weeks. All the regular services have been held, to few weeks. An the regular services have been heat, to the benefit of the few who attended and the loss of the many who remained away. Why is it that God's people who must recognize the significance of the times, are who must recognize the significance of the times, are not more awake to their opportunities for service?

Bro. Fry, our pastor, has been giving us food for thought in his sermons, and they have been encouraging and strengthening to the Saints. Let us encourage and strengthen him by showing by our presence at service that we appreciate his efforts in our behalf.

At our last, monthly business meeting it was decided to change the hour of our Sunday evening prayer meeting from six to six-thirty o'clock, the meeting to close at seven forty-five, thus shortening the service fifteen minutes.

Our Sunday school and Religio have begun to feel the effect of the continued hot weather severely, though there is no abatement of the interesting features of the sions. Vacation time is upon us, and we hope all absentees will return, refreshed and vigorous and ready for another year of active campaign.

Bro. and Sr. Goold of the Second Independence Sunday school, were visitors at our session Sunday morning. Goold addressed the school briefly. The primary department gave an interesting little exercise entitled Builders."

Brn. Fry. Winning and Fifer, also Bro. C. Archibald

On last Thursday evening, a picnic was given at Lake Contrary by a number of our people, in honor of Srs. Ethel Kinnamon, Nell Scott, Pearl Gardner and Bro. Hugh McNutt, all of whom are visiting among us. The party attended the concert given by Pryor's band in the evening, particularly to hear Sr. Ethel sing. The outing was a pleasant sociable occasion.

At the Sunday evening preaching service the darling little son of Bro. and Sr. M. S. Ross was blessed under the hands of Brn. Charles Fry and Roy Fifer, and named Howard Vinton. If this meets the eye of Bro. V. M. Goodrich he will know that he is still cherished in the earts of the people here. Bro. and Sr. John Nixon are the happy parents of a dear little son.

On Sunday evening the 8th, Bro. Coventry Archibald administered the holy rite of baptism to his little daughter Nellie, who was afterward confirmed by Bro. Fry and him-self. Thus we "Bring the little ones to Jesus." Sr. Tilford Bell lies very dangerously ill and not much hope is had for her recovery.

Bro. O. K. Fry of Independence attended all our services on Sunday and bore a strong testimony at our evening prayer meeting.

The preaching services on yesterday showed an increase in attendance over the past few Sundays. At the evening hour, Sr. Ethel Kinnaman sang "Save me, O evening hour, Sr. Ethel Kunnaman sang "Save me, O God," touching the hearts of the congregation by her beautiful interpretation of the subject. Her year's study in the east has wonderfully improved her splendid voice, and how ardently we wish we might be privileged to hear her often, but she returns east shortly to resume She was accompanied on the organ by her sister, Mary Sours.

Davidson, Okla, Aug 5.

Editor Ensign:—The Bootman-Nunery debate is now history. It came about in this way: Bro. S. W. Simmons had done considerable preaching and had baptized some of the Baptist members, and the Baptists challenged him for discussion on church propositions. Bro Hubert Case having the work in charge, asked me if I would do the debating. The Banking country in the continuous propositions of the continuous propositions. debating. The Baptist people had selected J. N. Penick of Martin, Tenn., to represent them, but just before time for discussion he notified them he could not come; so they selected A. Nunery, Editor of the Baptist Worker of Granite, Okla.

The debate commenced July 21st holding ten sessions, five to each proposition. Mr. Nunery came with no indorsement and his brethren would not indorse him as and mis preturen would not indorse him as a gentleman, only as a debater. He claimed he had had one hundred debates. I did not call him a debater, only a mud debber, for all of his evidence was from Utah. He only had one book against our work, that was written by Dr. Folk, who had spent some time in Utah, obtaining evidence from those polygamous wives of Brigham Young, and that was his stock in trade. He was not a posted man at all, and failed to answer any of the scriptural arguments, and the Book of Mormon and the D. and C., he was perfectly ignorant of the teachings of these two books. When he could not find section 132 of the Utah Book of Covenants in our book, he was lost.

I laid the four volumes of the church history, the Inspider translation, the Book of Mormon and the Docspider translation, the Book of Mormon and the Doc-trine and Covenants on his table, and told him to use them against me, but he would not touch them, and he took the turkey buzzard trail all the time in our propo-sitions. When our proposition closed he was convinced that he had made a failure. He rolled up his sleeves and told me I could have any kind of a game that I wanted, that he was open for any engagement. I told him just to be quiet that we would have a nice quiet debate and maybe I, would henrice him when we get the that maybe I would baptize him when we got through. In his first speech on his proposition he used the very same scripture and took the same position as did Elder Chism of the non-progressive Christian, (Campbellites) did when I met him last December, that is to establish his church, taking the position that there had been no apostasy, but I had eight Baptist histories, all of them but one admitting there had been an apostasy of the church.

With the statements of other Reformers and Jesus With the statements of other Reformers and Jesus Christ, the apostles and prophets, I was able to produce the evidence to the satisfaction of my opponent and the large body of people present that there had been an apostasy of the church, and he dropped that issue. When I placed the chart up on the wall, explaining Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel's visions, carrying the subject through, taking in Rev. 2:13, 17. This was new to my opponent and he let that rest. He defended once in grace always in grace, and total depravity, stating that children were horn with a lie in their mouths. Areain when we used the scripture on him against this doc-trine he denied that they taught such doctrine, but I had their catechisms and read to him where they teach that infants were damned and never can be saved, that is those who are not the elect infants.

who are not the elect infants.

He accused me of believing in a God that had a body and parts. Said that was a Mormon God. I turned to the Scripture, Gen. 11.5; Ex. 24:9-11; Ex. 31:18; Ex. 33:11, 12; Numbers 12:6-8; Heb. 1:3; Dan. 3:25, and several other passages and proved that God has a body. Two quotations I left out, I will now mention Gen. 1:27; eGn. 5:1, 2. Then I took up his creed and read what it taught about God, as the Baptists believe and teach. That is that God has neither holy parts on passion. That is that God has neither body, parts, or passion. See Philadelphia Confession of Faith, page 18. I did not use any book against them but their own books, except History of Religious Denominations, one more,

A very large attendance all through the discussion, people driving 16 miles and some 20 miles and camped on the grounds. When we closed my opponent would not stop to speak to me. The moderator for my opponent left his seat when I was talking several times and returned when time was called. We are well satisfied with the results. We baptized fourteen of the best people in the community, and, like Mary said to the angel, "My soul doth magnify the Lord," for his loving kindness and his condesentions in recognizing such a weak mortal as I. The Saints rejoice greatly and many friends were made to the cause.

Bro Simmons has done a good work in these parts, and he is known all over the country as Uncle Sam, and he planted the gospel seed here first. So like Paul we can say "I have planted and Apollos watered but God giveth the increase. To Him be all the glory, who hath given us the victory through our-Lord Jesus Christ."

Hopefully in the conflict, W. P. Bootman.

According to promise we will endeavor to reach through the Engign columns the readers the items of probable interest to many regarding the features presented of in-terest to all who have come in contact with the inspiration to be found only in as-sociation and fellowship of the great latter dav revealment.

Arriving at Fall River near midnight of Saturday following our departure from home the evening of our day made notable in the history of Independence through the defeat of emmisaries of the traffic in souls in exchange for supposed temporal advantages which in its best assumption could only reach the few of our citizens. It truly was a great moral victory and a lasting credit and honor to all and every body who worked for its accomplishment, nody who worked for its accomplishment, and no matter what the future may reveal, the character test has been made and applied, and sincere lovers of righteous rule will honor the men who stood at the head of the fight for a clean city and citizenship, and the small army of men and noble women the resurgestilly contributed toward the who so successfully contributed toward the defeat of our nations menace and disgrace as applied to the force of example to all, and of immediate or local result.

Monday evening, July 27th, found the writer entering reunion grounds at Onset, situated near Buzzard's Bay, Mass., Sr. Bond being unable to venture through fatigue of journey and enfeebled condition of body, the uncertainties of comp life, without beforehand preparation. Our anxiety in this regard was soon dispelled by the royal old time welcome among the loved and cherished associations of former and early years of gospel education and ministry.

We are short of time and power of adequate expression by or through which to convey anything like full expression of joy and comfort that came to the children of God who have been and are trying hard to keep the covenant made with Him, sacred and inviolate. The value of gospel edu-cation had its accentuation and emphasis in the Divine co-operation manifest in Auxiliary work, prayer and testimony and in nary work, prayer and testimony and in the preaching of the word.

That it is "good to be a saint in latter days," was had in intellectual, moral and spiritual argument and emphasis that could only serve to obliterate doubt, disquiet or fear, and tend to farther or more fully and complete equipment of that much of the Lord's army for successful warfare against the combined forces of evil

Personally, we have been made to know and understand that God is good, patient, longsuffering, and as the em-bodiment of the expression of the term Love, in its graded application to the capacity to understand and appreiate this wondrous truth.

A modern writer has said that to no church, or association or aggregation or congregation of Christians does Christianity mean the same thing to all of its membership. A thousand people may subscribe to one confession of faith, but to hardly two of them does it mean the same thing; and while this is quite true in a measurable sense when applied to Latter Day Saints, yet to the faithful doer of the word as it comes to them through their obedience to infalable rule laid down in the doctrine of Jesus Christ, the real fundamentals of life as God and Christ have interpreted through the mediumship of his Spirit and by which and through which only the "deep things of God" and essentials necessary to rich and poor, learned or unlearned according to worldly A modern writer has said that to no church, or associrich and poor, learned or unlearned according to worldly standards of wisdom are alike, made known and manifest, no matter whether or not, contact or communication with "the wisdom of this world" is had.

Quite a few requests have been received for the poem:

A PRELUDE TO VOTING.

I'm your disciple, Jesus, and I want to learn of you
Just what, Dear Savior, you, in this event, would do:
Some people tell me it is foolish to vote our city "dry,"
(They say they're Christians, too) and when I ask them why,
They tell me that the "powers that be" would not the law enforce,
And "clubs" and "joints" would multiply and make conditions worse.
And that we need the revenue that whiskey brings to pay
The bills that otherwise would multiply and make conditions worse.
And that we need the revenue that whiskey brings to pay
The bills that otherwise would multiply and make conditions worse.
And that we need the revenue that whiskey brings to pay
The bills that otherwise would multiply and make conditions worse.
And that the result of the worse the conditions worse.
The present out of the worse than do alloons today.
Now, Savior, while I surely know that all this is not true,
Though men devoid of hone did that move eschew
And by their brazen processes and lawless means prevent
The greater good in quest of which was virtue's efforts spent;
And while I know that certain men (p'r'aps devils too) decried,
And by base words and deeds did oft and fiendishly deride
The movement, yet (like yours on Calvary's cross) 'twas made
To save our fellow-beings for whom we hoped and prayed.
But what I want to ask you, Savior, is what you would do now
If you stood in Independence as you did on Olive's brow?
Would you heed these "failure" preachers and this "revenue" parade?
And fail to do lest some should seek your action to degrade?
Would you forget your mission and be moved by "policy"
Would you vote "wet" because the "drys" once failed to make complete
Their purpose, and their enemies cried everywhere, "defeat?"
Would you vote "wet" because the "drys" once failed to make complete
Their purpose, and their enemies cried everywhere, "defeat?"
Would you truss to vote at all although your conscience said
The "drys are right in principle," because of "

Was Calvary a failure because sin still holds its way?
And do you think 'twas folly to have thrown your life away?
Did you not die that man from sin should be divorced?
(Conscious the while that your blest law would rarely be enforced.)
Thus I have learned you, Master, but there be those now with me Who counsel otherwise and urge "expediency;"
ditness within the synagogues appear, too—men of church fame,
Who fill the seats of dignity and use your sacred name
In holy Sacrament and Psalm and services like thine,
And tell me thus, ostensibly, their mission is divine.
What will thou, Master? Shall I vote as do these men advise
And make myself responsible for crimes I now despise—
Give my consent to evils, lest my effort to expel
Shall he outwitted by the forces that engineer for hell?
Or shall I—right adoring—on the altar place my trust—
Bly offering of love for man—to perish if it must?
I know these ills existent would not flourish if Gost will
Was being of love for man—to perish if it must?
I know these ills existent would not flourish if Gost will
Was being of one for man—to perish if it must.
I know these ills existent would not flourish if Gost will
Was being of love for man—to perish if it must.
I know these ills existent would not flourish if Gost will
Was being off one of the control of the will be and the still,
Was being off one of the control of the will be a will
Was being off one of the control of the will be a will
Was being off one of oreshalowed does not yet upon us break.
And he mine the blessed fortune to find when life is done
That my actions all accorded with the spirit that there shone.
I ask not if the "revenue" of mammon shall be more
Or less if I my duty do, but simply thus implore
That you will place your hand in mine and lead me so that I May know I move in harmony with agencies on high;
That, come what may—defeat today, or victury won
I'll rest in peaceful consciousness of duty rightly done.
Hence my desire to know the right—to know what you would do rell, John Sheehy and others of the ministry from various localities and saints from Buffalo, N. Y. Wednesday, July 29th, we were priviledged to be present in company with President Frederick M. Smith, Paul Hanson and others of the brethren at the opening of the Cape Cod Canal, at Bourne, Cape Cod, and saw the inaugeration of an event importent to New England especially. Cape Cod is now an Island and its southern end to Provincetown is reached over bridges, that space this eight mile waterway. This canal obviates from 60 to 130 miles of travel by vessel—according to size or draught, through calm water—shelter from dangerous and frequent storms, and saving of time between northern ports, Boston to Newfoundland, and southern coast cities. Heard addresses by Hon. Seth Low, Mayor of New York, August Belmont, Gov. David Walsh of Massachusetts and others.

War's alarms from all Europe comes something like the "crack of doom," for nations where God is not "the Lord," and the struggle for territorial conquest, su-premicy or for revenge will go on until the consumption decreed by prophets of the living God in all ages, concerning our times, shall vindicate our gospel "witness to the nations" terminating in "the end of the world or destruction of the wicked" as foretold by the Savior.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 26. Dear Ensign:—We have had some missionary work done here this spring by Bro. J. W. Smith. He reached Soo Falls, June 18, and after a survey of the lay out he began to preach in the home of Abner Hetricks and conbegan to preach in the home of Abner Hetricks and continued for several evenings, and a week ago today he baptized seven precious souls. Abner Hetrick, Ethel, Rollo, Pratt, Forrest, Bessie, Hugh, and old Bro. Cherles Wilbert. It was a nice warm day and the writer borrowed a carryall, and about eleven of us drove out about three miles to West Soo Falls, at a beautiful place in the Big Sloux River, nice gravel bottom as deep as four feet—an ideal place. And after the confirmation meeting that evening there were some more gave their names for baptism, so Monday morning we filled our dray with chairs and loaded up another bundle of sheaves for the Master's garner and repaired to the same place and Bro. Smith led five more into the waters of regeneration. Miss Jessie Hetrick and Zephry and Herbert Hetrick, and Joy and Fredde Pratt, making 12 persons in all. Bro Wilbert is an old soldier and was in the Andersonville prison where so many Union soldiers starved to death. He was in the stockade when the Lord caused that famous spring to break forth right in the sight of over 1000 prisoners who were almost famished for water. He is about 68 years old. I believe he will make a strong member, as he has a strong desire to serve the Lord, and has a good years old. I believe he will make a strong member, as ne has a strong desire to serve the Lord, and has a good understanding of the work. A week ago tonight the Saints replenished Bro. Smith's exchequer, and Wednesday he left for Mt. Vernon to baptize another sister. Mt. Vernon is 12 miles west of Mitchell or about 70 miles from here. He did not know when he can return. Dear Ensign:—We certainly appreciate the good sermons and excellent letters in the paper from time to time. At the eleven o'clock prayer meeting we were blessed with two prophecies, given mostly to the young men, in the way of encouragement. It stands us in hand to be faithful, for the time is near at hand when we will have to flee to Zion, and how many of us will be prepared to go. I can truly say that God is blessing me since I asked for the faith and prayers of the Saints in my behalf. I thank God for his blessings, and still trust in him to be healed. Bro. and Sr. Davis, who were on their way to the islands, were at our home last Friday. and preached a fine discourse for us at the church Sunday night. We pray that God's blessings may attend

SYNOPSIS OF A DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH, SUNDAY MORN-ING, JULY 12, 1914, AT THE STONE CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

By Elder G. E. Harrington.

He said he was going to do the unusual thing this morning, he was going to talk about himself, that he was going to have a chat with the folks. That he had held the responsibilities of his present office for 12 years; that he had discovered that he had been misunderstood. That the people had the right to criticize a public man, and this criticism made it necessary for the public man to explain and defend himself.

However, he said he wanted to take the saints into his confidence, and tell them of his ambitions, and motives, or in other words make confession to them.

In the year 1902 I was called to the office I now hold. When that call came I was 28 years of age. I was not qualified to perform the duties that were placed upon me, and I was reluctant to accept. I saw nothing but hard work ahead—the work was a work for a man of experience, an old man's burden. The line of study I was engaged in before that time was of a different character to that that would have qualified me for the work I was called to do.

My life's work that I had mapped out for myself was steam and electrical engineering; my desires were trenchant for the sciences. I was the cause of starting considerable mischief in the school at times, and the school teacher having made a study of my case, came to the conclusion that I was getting my lessons too easily, and to prevent me from making further trouble he decided to increase my studies. He told me this, and added to my studies Natural Philosophy. Well, he accomplished very little by giving me that study, for I took to it like a duck to water, leaving me plenty of time for a continuation of my mischief.

However, I would not have you understand that I did no hard studying during that time. At the age of 15 years many a night till two o'clock in the morning I was poring over my school work; nor would I have you believe that I was always engaged in sober reading, for I plead guilty of reading such literature as "Diamond Dick." Cannot say why I wanted to tell this, except to indicate to you the bent of my mind and efforts put forth.

At the time of my call I was not proved, and I gave a great deal of thought to the course I should persue to improve myself so as to be in condition to do effective service, and I remember that upon one occasion when called upon to preach I took for my text "Study to show thyself approved," leaving out the two words following, for which I was severely criticised in a letter sent me by a brother, who could see no justification for leaving out those two important words "unto God."

My thought was to emphasize the word "approved," presuming it would be taken for granted the reason for doing so would be apparent; but I am not going to take any chances of criticism upon that this morning; so I will read the text with these two words added. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

Since that time I have put in a lot of hard work. However, my efforts may have been misdirected, for which I do not feel responsible, since I was acting with the best judgment I possessed.

At that time I was on the editorial staff of the Saints' Herald and about the same time secretary of the Board of Education, and permitted myself to be associated with various committees, preventing me from any systematic course of study I now see I should have made. By being on these various boards and committees I was literally swamped with details, and systematic study was going by the board, and in viewing the situation as it was I became desperate, because of the lack of mental and spiritual development, and I wondered when the time would come that I would be able to successfully care for the various interests in church work. I can assure you this responsibility has not rested on my shoulders easily. It became apparent to me that if I was to be of service to the Church I must study social science, or sociology, and to do this I must be liberated from the many responsibilities then held, consequently you may have observed that I have taken up considerable of the time of General Conference in releasing me from committees and boards. One of the hardest places I had to fill was chairman of the Sanitarium Board. In some of these boards at times there was considerable friction of personal character, and doubtless I have lost friends because of it. I have been accused of being tactless, and too frank in expressing my views, and not being a diplomat I have paid the penalty that follows. And now I have decided to refuse to accept any further responsibility of that kind except it can be shown to be the will of God.

There is considerable difference in the consideration of the social sciences, and those of the physical, such as mathamatics, physics, astromony, etc. I find in the occult sciences the laws are not so invariable. I know some say, "Why don't you pray, Brother Fred?" What would you think of a man getting on his knees in prayer, and praying for fruit to eat when all around him were numbers of fruit trees loaded with fruit? I knew what I wanted, and could see where to get it, and for that reason it appeared to me unnecessary to ask for something already within my reach. It was my duty to go the limit of my powers in an effort to get what I needed, and failing, then, and only then, would I ask for what I needed.

Because I appreciated the handicap of having no systematic course of study I engaged myself to the Seminary of the University of Kansas, at Lawrence. That demanded my time from 4 o'clock in the morning till 12 o'clock at night. The night each week, I studied sociology under Professor Blackmar, one of the finest sociologists in the United States.

Beside my regular studies, I found it necessary to do some special research work. One thing I refer to is the Indian Mescal religion, an idea of which I got from our Elder Cook our Indian brother. This religion has to do with a small Cactus found in Mexico and other parts, and is called the Anhalonium, only one of which I ever saw alive. There is what is called the Mescal button which grows upon this cactus. The physiological effect when taken into the system is to produce color vision.

This class of religionists begin their services in the evening with prayers, and have ceremonies that are continued throughout the night, at periods throughout the services they eat these buttons, with the result that many pleasurable visionary experiences are enjoyed. They claim to be able to heal the sick, which I have no doubt is accomulished, which doubtless occurs through the faith in the processes they go through with, rather than through the means themselves. We agree with them the prayer of faith will heal the sick.

This one subject has caused me to do a lot of research work, in several cities, in many libraries. I have read from 20 to 30 books to find out what I could in reference to this religion.

A brother who had heard of this religion came into our office some time ago, and told us something of what he had heard concerning it; stating that he thought our brethren of the ministry should familiarize themselves with the same, whereupon I requested Bro. Newton my secretary, to produce some of the matter I had upon the subject, and when he was presented with what we had, he was surprised, realizing that some of the ministry had information relative to the subject.

One peculiarity about this religion is that there are two tribes having the same ideas about it though not known to have any connection with each other.

Another thing we have been doing is making changes in our office. When I went into the Presidency's office the information available for use could all be placed in the President's vest pocket, the rest was in the splendid memory of our venerable President, and when it became necessary for me to get any information I needed to have it was necessary to hunt up father and have him tell me what I wanted to know. Incidentally I will say I have been misjudged for my lack in this respect; people naturally expected me to be possessed with the same kind of a memory with which my father was gifted, which you who are intimately acquainted with him know of; but I do not possess it, and because of this fact I decided to start in for an office record, and to keep it in such a way that no matter what should happen to me, any one might get what information he needed.

Another thing is the reorganization of our priesthood quorums. I remember being at one of our eastern reunions, and taking observations I noticed the priesthood were practically doing nothing. Immediately I made a note of the same, wrote out and presented the idea of priesthood reorganization to the other members of the presidency, and was sat down on because of its apparent impracticability; but the more I thought upon the matter, the more I thought it could and ought to be accomplished. It cost me a great many efforts, but I finally succeeded in getting the matter favorably acted upon by General Conference, and now we have better opportunities for priesthood studies, and I doubt if any would wish to go back to the time before these reorganizations were affected. What do you think about it Bro. Guinand? Bro. Guinand indicated that he would not.

Regular monthly meetings are being held, whereas before they occurred once or twice a year. I venture the assertion there is more priest-hood activity in the two Stakes now than there was in the entire Church before this change was made.

We have also worked out a system of reporting from the ministerial forces in the various fields and districts by which we are brought in touch with the work of the church in general. These reports are expected quarterly; although it is thought by some that they should only be given once every six months, my secretary is of that opinion. However we have quite a variety of reports, some good, some bad, withal our statistics are in better shape. We found by the old method of giving notices for reports through the Herald, that very little attention was paid to them by the brethren.

We have developed maps that show the location of the branches of the Church in all the world, and places where the membership resides outside of branches, and we invite any of you who may be interested to come to the office and see what we have done in this direction. This has required work and not play, as some have thought has been done.

Some time ago I was fortunate in receiving an offer of a fellowship in a prominent place of learning in the East, something that was a surprise to me and very desirable; but I could not see my way clear to accept the offer, because it would involve an expense that I could not conscientiously ask the Church to meet in addition to the regular allowance granted me. The information that I could get from accepting the offer was so valuable that it was difficult for me to give up the idea of getting it, so I wrote to one of our young and successful pastors in the east and told him of the offer made me, and he in turn took into his confidence one of our wealthy brethren, and told him of my situation, who told him I would be acting foolish to turn such a proposition down. and added, that he would take care of the expense required to permit me to take the course open to me, hence I have decided to go, and will leave you in a few days to be away several months with my family, and enter into this field of re-search that will involve the study of the Social Science, or Sociology, also Social Pathology, the development of Economics, its history, etc.

Now I want you to understand me, I am not taking this course because I have a personal liking for it. I am doing so because I feel it is necessary for the purpose of enabling me to perform the work of my office more effectively. I would a thousand times rather study Electrical Engineering, but in doing this I understand I am helping out the rupposes of the Church.

Now a few words in regard to local option, I feel from a study of society, of the causes of poverty and crime, from the present existing state of society, that there should be no compromise on this question, there are no two roads on this proposition we can travel, we cannot consistently avoid voting against the liquor interests at any time. There has been sophistry used by some as a justification for voting "wet." They have said "we will not vote dry because we cannot keep it dry."

The way to enforce law if your town officials will not enforce it, is to appeal to the governor of the state to send down State officials to enforce it. Some time ago in one of our cities where local option prevailed and the town went dry, the city prosecutor refused to enforce the law because he had many friends who were in favor of the nonenforcement of law, and 1200 men signed a petition to the Governor requesting him to send the State officials there to execute it, and the Governor sent word to the city prosecutor that he must proceed to enforce the law or otherwise he would send some one there that would, and the prosecutor saw that it would mean political suicide for him to disregard the demands of the Governor, so he went to work and prosecuted his friends and violators of the law, and the law was enforced.

There is no argument to be offered for the existence of the saloon and if I have any influence with you I want every Latter Day Saint to go to the polls and vote a vote for a dry town in a most emphatic manner. We should be lined up constantly against the saloon.

Some say they are going to steal the vote of the fourth ward if they cannot get it in any other way, but it is for us to see that they don't

So far as the argument that is used that if we go dry we will lose financially is concerned, let me tell you for every dollar we get from the saloon we pay from two dollars to four dollars to care for the consequences.

In conclusion I wish to state there has been no time in my life when I have entered upon my work in the Church with less reservation than I do at the present time.

THE BEAST AND THE SPIDER. By Elder W. A. Sinclair.

One of the peculiar conditions of this world, is the contending powers, or influences, which impregnates and ramifies into every department of life; whether that life be of the natural or spiritual existence. Opposition seems to exist everywhere, the spiritual of the heavenly order when resident in the human, is circumscribed in this natural sphere, and surrounded by the spiritual powers of the evil one.

It is so also with the institutions, for where we find a certain class, the opposite in fundamentals camps alongside to wage a warfare on the first.

This seems to have been the prevailing custom from the very beginning; Yea, before man tabernacled in the flesh, for Satan when a star in the presence of God, conceived and brought into active existence just such an order of things, being an accuser of the brethren, and a disturber of the spirits in the realm in which he existed.

This same power was exhibited in the garden of Eden, spiritual in itself, but pressing into its service the very beasts of the field, and in a subtle way gained the supremicy over the human body, which act necessitated the coming of Christ, and the death and resurrection of the same, in order to undo the one fatal error consummated by his Satanic Majesty in the deceiving of Mother Eve.

We as individuals, and communities of individuals, are supposed to learn by the mistakes of others, avoiding the pitfalls which wrecked their ambitions, and it is for this reason that God has caused the record of former nations and inhabitants to be written.

During the first great period from Adam to Noah, we have a peculiar record of things; there seems to have been two distinct lines. a righteous character, through whom the dealings of God with man were transacted; and through whom the gospel and priesthood were transmitted; and the other, which was in league with the devil, through whom the unrighteous acts were instituted and a knowledge of them transmitted. Jealousy, covetiousness, murder, transmitted. Jealousy, covetiousness, murder, polygamy, and kindred evils. Even the righteous branch became more or less contaminated with this evil influence, until it pleased God to wipe the slate almost clear of the entire creation.

After the flood when people began to multiply on the face of the earth, the same prevailing evils which the antediluvian world committed. became the common practice of the new, or postdiluvian inhabitants. And again the two influences began their work, spreading out over the world in proportion to the increase and expansion of the people.

The gospe! was finally supplanted by laws and ceremonies, to which were added the whims and fancies of scheming men, until when the Christ came upon the stage of action, very little of the original laws remained, and what did remain was misapplied, and misinterpreted, so that its effect was lost. The evil powers had succeeded in stamping out the true church of God, and nothing I gave all dilligence to write unto you of the remained to even remember it by.

The prophets had previously predicted such condition, as they also predicted a re-establishment of the righteousness of God through the Messiah, nor did they cease here, but after the re-establishment, they told of another great power which should arise and destroy the continuance of the Church.

Daniel in the seventh chapter takes up a consideration of what was to take place after the establishment of the church by Christ. He tells us of a beast having eyes like the eyes of man. and a mouth speaking great things. He was bothered concerning this peculiar abnormality, and inquired of God regarding the same, and in the twentieth verse it reads: "And of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell: even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was was more stout than his fellows. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them."

And in the twenty-first verse we read: "And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hands until a time and times and the dividing of times,"

This beast is again referred to in Revelation 17: where it portrays the Roman power, the woman being the city, the people, which constituted the church of Rome, which sitteth on the seven mountains, and she is decked in the royal colors of Rome, as it states in the fourth verse: 'And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication.'

The sixth verse shows this beast to be the same as the one Daniel saw. It reads: "And I saw the women drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martrys of Jesus; and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration."

Daniel says they shall think to change times and laws. And Isaiah gives us a picture of what shall befall, and what the changes will be.

"Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof. And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priests; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him. The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled; for the Lord hath spoken this word. The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do lan-guish. The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgresesd the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned and few men left."-Isaiah 24:1-6.

"They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.' Has the beast-power transgressed the laws? What are the laws? I think we can best get at the facts of the matter by referring to Ecclesiastes 12:13; "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."

The commandments and the law are synonymous. Has the beast-power kept Christ's commandments? Let us see! In Mark 12:29, Jesus What are the laws? I think we can best get at O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord. And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength; this is the first commandment." And in Ephesians 4:5, 6; Paul says there is: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

And yet in the face of this statement, the beast-power says it has the "Holy Father." the Pope. He is also called the Lord God the Pope; and many other names of a similar character. Paul says there is one faith, and Jude in speaking of this same institution says: "Beloved, when common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

This faith was the institution which God framed, through which men might be saved, as is recorded in Ephesians 4:11-14: "And he gave some, Apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the slight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.

Now instead of this saintly institution of which Paul speaks, they have Popes in the place of Apostles; priests of many orders in the place of prophets; and in the place of evangelists and pastors as Paul meant it, they have Cardinals, Bishops, Archibishops, and Monsignors, a prelate of the papal household, equivalent to Lord; teachers are not mentioned at all but Deacons and Archdeacons, with innumerable other subdivisions, which however, have none of the identification marks of the institution of which Christ was the head.

The institution of Christ was to edify the body-congregation, or members-"Till we all (not the ministry only) come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, (in knowledge) unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

The object of the beast-power is just the reverse of this, to keep them in ignorance and without knowledge, that superstition might rule them. How can such keep the admonition of Peter, as is recorded in 1 Peter 3:15; "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

Jesus says in John 14:14; "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." But here we find the beast-power saying; "We are not holy enough to approach Christ, therefore we approach him through his mother, the blessed virgin," and they pray to God through Mary. The Scripture says to ask through Christ; the words of James are not entirely out of harmony here as is recorded in the fourth chapter, third verse; "Ye ask, and receive not because ye ask amiss."

They have changed the ordinance. Peter tells us in Acts 2:38; and 1 Peter 3:21; that baptism is for the remission of sins, and that it is by this method we are saved. The beast-power savs: confess your sins to the priest and pay for indulgences and absolution and he will grant it. And instead of the great flood being a figure of the Christian baptism, they have likened it unto a sunshower. (Sprinkling.)

This is an easy method of dodging the consequences of our misdeeds, and a transgression, or evasion of the law; and too, power was given to the beast, according to Revelation 13:2, 3; by which the nations were deceived: "And the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed; and all the world wondered after the beast."

But Daniel says in the seventh chapter, twentysixth verse: "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." And John in Revelation 18:19, 20; states "And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimston."

You will notice that the beast-power with great ostentation, with broad phylacteries, and lying wonders, and its power was extended to the whole world. "The whole world wondered after the beast." It was a beast in characteristics, and in spirit; rough, ferocious where its interests were not served by any community of people, as Smithfield, and the Tower of London can well testify to. It was blood-thirsty, and as the scripture says: "They were drunken with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus." This power is so great that it necessitates an extraordinary demonstration to be enacted in its destruction; and in the Doctrine and Covenants 85:26, it gives us a little insight as to what shall happen in its downfall.

"And immediately there shall appear a great sign in heaven, and all people shall see it together. And another angel shall sound his trump, saying, That great church, the mother of abominations, that made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, that persecuteth the saints of God, that shed their blood; she who sitteth upon many waters, and upon the islands of the sea; behold, she is the tares of the earth, she is bound in bundles, her bands are made strong, no man can loose them; therefore, she is ready to be burned. And he shall sound his trump both long and loud, and all nations shall hear it."

The spider is more sly and cunning than the beast, and creepeth silently, weaving its web wherever it might trap the unguarded and unthinking. It also substitutes error for righteousness, and professes to have keys which does away with the written word of God; thus allowing an open door for the substitution of the fanciful imaginations of reprobate minds.

In Isaiah 59:4-8; we have a reading which seems to describe the institution somewhat cor-"None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth, they trust in vanity; and speak lies; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity. They hatch Cockatrice's eggs, and weave the spider's web; he that eatcth of their eggs dieth, and that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper. Their webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works; their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands. Their feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood; their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destrution are in their paths. The way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment in their goings; they have made them crooked paths; whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace."

They cannot cover themselves with their works, they are not of the right character, they do not fit in every particular. This is in perfect harmony with the statement of Isaiah in the twenty-eighth chapter, and the twentieth verse: "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it."

This class is of a sly, esoteric character, which outwardly is pleasant to look on, their observable ethics are copied after the similitude of the perfect code, but the underneath, or unseen predilection of their minds, is of an altogether different trend. "For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts."

2 Peter 2:1-3, states: "But there were false

2 Peter 2:1-3, states: "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that brought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you; whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not."

The texts which seem to do duty to this institution very peculiarly suggest the characteristics of the spider, or serpent; they "creep" and "privily" do their damnable practices. They "privily shall bring in damnable heresics." Was this a fact in their particular case? Let us see. We read from the language of Brigham Young, Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, Page 955. "Joseph in his lifetime did not receive everything connected with the doctrine of redemption, but he has left the key with those who understand how to obtain and teach to this great people all that is necessary for their salvation and exhaltation in the celestial kingdom or our God."

And in Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, Page 667.
"As to a person not knowing more than the written word, let me tell you that there are keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will?"

This was but a cunning method of opening up the way to promulgate the dammable heresies of which he was the author; Here is one of them: "Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the Garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is Michael, the Archangel, the Ancient of Days! about whom holy men have written and spoken—He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do." Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, Page 50.

You will note here how this latter apostate body follows in the line of the first, or beast power. They, the beast power, make the Pope equal or greater than God; while the "spider," probably through the old thought that distance lends enchantment, makes Adam our God. Thus they have no God in their institution, and as we will see later, no Christ; therefore, it bespeaks the same power underlying their institution, that John says underlies the beast power, and that power is from the devil.

The above language regarding the "keys" also opens up the way for polygamy, the crime of the Nicolaitanes, which Jesus Christ in his revelation to John said: "which I also hate," and which, through the prophet Jacob he pronounced, "A grosser crime," and "an abomination." After making the way smooth for the presentation of this doctrine he states: "You heard Brother Pratt state, this morning, that a revelation would be read this afternoon, which was given previous to Joseph Smith's death. It contains a doctrine, a small portion of the world is opposed to; but I can deliver a prophecy upon it. Though that doctrine has not been practiced by the elders, this people has believed in it for years.

"The revelation will be read to you. The principle spoken upon by Brother Pratt, this morning, we believe in. And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over, and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world, one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people. Your hearts need not beat; you need not think that a mob is coming here to tread upon the sacred liberty which the constitution of our country guarantees unto us, for it will not be."—Supplement to Millenian Star, 1853 (Vol. 15), page 31.

Peter says there were "false prophets also among the people." Here is an instance of a false prophet, for although he may have felt sanguine as to the outcome, or relied on the seclusion of the mountains to prevent a reversal of the state of things. He made a miscalculation however, and today the facts have stamped him a false prophet.

Another damnable heresy of which he was the author, and which partakes very largely of the spirit which moved Cain against his brother is recorded in the Journal of Discourses, Vol. 4, page 220, and also in the Deseret News, Vol. 6, page 397. It is another web of the spider.

"All mankind love themselves: and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed, would be loving themselves even unto an eternal exhaltation. Will you love your brothers and sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that cannot be atoned for without the shedding of blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? That is what Jesus Christ meant. He never told a man or woman to love their enemies in their wickedness. He never intended any such thing. *** I have known a great many men who have left this church, for whom there is no chance whatever for exhaltation but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them. The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle being in full force; but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force.

"This is loving our neighbors as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; if he wants salvation, and it is necessary to spill his blood upon the ground in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding if blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire. That is the way to love mankind.'

How far removed this doctrine is from the word of God as portrayed in Genesis 9.6; "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God made he man." There is no divine right given for man to shed man's blood, except under this rule, which is the destruction of a murderer.

We read what Peter said concerning this institution: "even denying the Lord that bought them." and Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 6:20; "For ye are bought with a price." and 1 Peter 1:18, 19; says: "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptable things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot."

Then it was Jesus who bought us, and Paul says this "spider" institution will "deny the Lord that bought them." Let us see if they fill the bill. Brigham Young is again the speaker: "I have given you a few leading items upon this subject, but a great deal more remains to be told. New, remember from this time forth, and forever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost." Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, page 51.

Here he denies the Lord, for if the birth of Christ was not as the scripture recorded it, then he was human, and not divine, and the promises fail. But we are assured that the Christ came just as it is recorded, independent of what Brigham Young and his followers affirm. His heart had departed from the Lord, and he had become a law unto himself, a king among a highly superstitious people, and he sought to build up a kingdom in the valley of the mountains, and to increase his numbers, he instituted polygamy.

The Lord through Jeremiah, 17:5, 6, pictures this individual: "Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a sait land and not inhabited."

They are cunning, sly, creepy. Their work is not open to the investigation of the world, only the veneering is exhibited to the view of the people, and this is made as attractive as ingeunity can prescribe. They almost fill the bill to perfection, as presented by Jesus Christ whom they repudiate, wherein he states, relative to the pretentious religionists of his day: Matthew 23:27; "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead man's bones, and of all uncleanliness."

Much more might be written concerning this 'spider-like' institution, of how its spider-like legs are reaching out over the different states, seeking control of the political powers, becoming our law-makers, and the way of truth, of which they were once a part, has been spoken evil of by reason of their misdeeds.

Two great powers sweep our fair land; both dominated by evil influences. The "beast" presumptiously, in loud swelling words, with pomp and sounding of trumpets. The "spider" insidiously, slowly, but nevertheless persistently, and the people of neither organization are between the two great powers.

Thus the "beast" with his mark, and the "spider" with its web, are branding and enmeshing the inhabitants, and drawing the curtain of darkness over the minds of the people, sealing the heavens, and denying assistance to their members, for the one has them all go to Limbo, and the other to a sexual paradise, in which they are gods over their heritage, and where they enjoy the raptures of a polygamous community forever and ever.

From such, may the good Lord deliver us, for God is in neither institution; it is the workshop of his Satanic Majesty, and the heaven of a diseased mind.

"I have only just a minute,
Only sixty seconds in it,
Forced upon me; can't refuse it;
Didn't seek it, didn't choose it;
But it's up to me to use it;
I must suffer if I lose it,
Give account if I abuse it.
Just a tiny little minute—
But Eternity is in it."

PERSISTENCY.

"If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small."

How often it does happen that we become fainthearted when our burden becomes very heavy, and cease to struggle, perhaps just at the crucial moment, when, to have held on would have brought us the victory, and we could have rejoiced in conquering.

Many good workers are lost to the world, because they have laid down their armor a little too soon, and being discouraged because of their defeat, they have nothing to spur them on to further effort, whereas, had nothing to spur them on to further effort, whereas, had they conquered in the first instance, they would have been built up in faith and confidence for further effort. "If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small," is just as true today, in every avenue of life as when the Wise Man uttered it thousands of years ago. It applies to the student in his effort to get knowledge, and in his search after truth; to the business man in his conflict with the world's competition for success in business; to the mother in her endeavor to govern and train her children, and the accomplishment of the multitude of other emergencies that constantly arise in her daily work. In all these conditions, and many more that we migh mention, we often see the disastrous effects of faint mention, we often see the disastrous effects of faint-heartedness. Because we see others accomplishing, with comparative ease, what is so very difficult for us, is no excuse for our becoming disheartened. With the numer-ous records at hand of what others have done by per-sistent effort, we should take Soloman's advice, and if the iron be blunt, put too more strength. The old adage, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again," that used to furnish the copy for our writing lesson, in the days when our teachers used to write our copies, is good to when our teachers used to write our copies, is good to keep before us continually. It seems to be a law of nature, that no worthy purpose is to be attained without persistent effort. Why should we wish it otherwise? We all appreciate more that which costs us effort. We value everything by that which it has cost us. We set little value by that which costs us little. It is soon laid aside and forgotten; but that which has cost us much labor, and it may be anxiety and pain, we rejoice in the possession of and treasure it up with the utmost care.

possession of and treasure it up with the utmost care.

When a schoolgirl, I remember struggling with one of my examples in arithmatic until the late hours of the night, and had to go to bed without solving it, but was awake before daylight in the morning, and instead of going back to sleep again I began to study the problem. I worked at it every minute I could spare from other lessons that day, and again puzzled over it in the night. I was too ambitious to ask for help, and I think it was on the third day that my efforts were rewarded with success. It was a lesson to me to try, try again, on many succeeding occasions. By way of digression—I wonder sometimes, if other people keep in mind the old provberbs and adages as I do; such as, waste not, want not; honesty is the best policy; a stitch in time saves nine; a penny saved is a penny earned; don't cross saves nine; a penny saved is a penny earned; don't cross the bridge until you come to it? They are good to live by if they are old.

We have recently had a striking example of the effective-We have recently had a striking example of the effective-ness of persistent effort, in our Local Option election in Independence. So strong and securely entrenched were the opposing forces, that few of us scarcely daved to be-lieve it possible to route them, though we were willing to make the effort, and determined to make a strong one. Hundreds of women were out working with the local option men from 6:30 in the morning, until nearly 8 o'clock in the evening, and never once during the time did they falter in their efforts; and victory was our re-ward. Had they hecome faithbearted and valved their Had they become fainthearted and relaxed their diligence do you think they would have won?

There have been times in the history of the Auxiliary when the outlook has been very discouraging to those having the work in charge, and it has seemed that those who should have aided and abetted them in their efforts have looked upon them coldly; so that they have been ready to give up the striggie against such odds as they had to meet. Had they yielded in the hour of their discouragement, where would have been now this great arm of the church representing woman's work, that is arm of the church representing woman's work, that is reaching out in the sistens every where endeavoing to draw them into a closer unity, and to help them to become more officient workers in the great cause of humanity? "The battle is not to the strong, nor the race of the swift, but to him that endureth to the end."

Mrs. B. C. Smith.

It may have appeared to some of our readers that the work of the Auxiliary has been moving rather slowly this summer, and while in some instances this may be true, there is abundance of justifiable cause for it.

true, there is abundance of justifiable cause for it.

The work has grown to such magnitude now, that it cannot be grasped in all its bearings, in a few days, so, when we made such a sweeping change in the leading officers of the society last spring, we could not expect to fall right in line and carry on the work as if there had been no change. The wonder is, that things have moved on with so little irregularity as they have, when we consider that the president, secretary and three department superintendents were changed, and most of those who filled their places were inexperienced workers. But we want to tell you now how very much pleased we are with the efficient and earnest way in which these officers have taken up their work. officers have taken up their work.

It is true, two of our department superintendents were late in taking up their work, but what else could we expect, when each was engaged in the absorbing interest of establishing herself in a new home of her own, and the Auxiliary wishes them long life and much happiness in their new relations. Having taken up their work with ability and in a spirit of service, as have also our other superintendents, spirit of service, as have also our other superintendents, we trust that the sisters will not hesitate to write to them for any information they may need to help them in the work of their different departments. You will note that they have requested this and wish your cooperation in their work.

The opportunity is now open to you whereby you may gain much helpful information. Will you avail yourself of it, or will you let it pass, and later regret that you did not improve it. It will take effort on your part, as well as that of the superintendent, but you cannot put forth one effort, thought it be ever so small, toward improvement without being the better for it. It may improvement without being the better for it. It may serve to show you your limitations, but do not forget that, by persistent effort those limitations may be widened out and you will be able to move with greater freedom in your pursuit after knowledge.

Mrs. B. C. S.

IMPROVING OUR SONGS

IMPROVING OUR SONGS
Sabbath school superintendents, teachers and even pastors in many cases are to blame for the lack of "sphrif-filled" hymba and songs in the church and home. They select for prayer and praise services songs that are sentimental and theological trash. The songs which in my own experience have been used of God to help many souls have been those that have held up the life, death and resurrection of him who said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." If we are to have a nation-wide revival, I firmly believe with Rev. Mr. Thompson it must start with a cleaning out of our sentimental, unscriptural, trashy music, and a return to the tural, trashy music, and a return to the standard hymns and gospel songs that will lead souls to Christ and cause them to grow Christian life.—Benjamin Franklin Butts in Christian Herald

TEST OF A GOOD HYMN

A good Gospel hymn is a treasure. The people sing them and remember their teaching when they have entirely forgotton some sermons they have heard. Our church ser-vices would be far more effective if beautiful vices would be far more effective it beautiful Gospel hymns were sung occasionally by choir and congregation. I love the old hymns of the church. The Psalms to are wonderful; but Gospel hymns of the better sort have their place, and nothing can displace them.

We are living in a flippant, irreverent and sensational age. It is not strange that the spirit of the times is found in some of the songs used.

songs used.

I know of only one test as to the value of a Gospel hymn: Does it help the singer or the hearer to know God, to find Christ, and to resolve to be a truer follower of the Master?—J. Wilbur Chapman, in The Christian

THE MUSIC OF THE SPHERES.

Hast thou not heard it, the universal music, The throbbing harmony, the ond eternal rhmye, In the wild billows roaring, In the mad torrent pouring,

And keeping with the stars its beat and march sublime? Hast thou not heard it when the night was silent, And nothing stirred but winds amid the trees, And the star-orbits, strings of harps celestial, Seemed quivering to the rush of melodies?

If in thy soul there pulse not some faint responsive echo Of that supernal everlasting hymn, Thou'rt of the low earth, lowly,

Or livest life unholy,
Or dullest spiritual sense by carnal grossness dim. Hear it, O poet! Hear it, O preacher, give it welcome!

O loving heart, receive it, deep in thine inmost core,

Glory and peace and joy, and love forevermore!

THE MISSION OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.

There is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist. Luke 7:28.

Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet. Luke 7:26.

The magnitude and importance of the work of John the Baptist has been largely overlooked, partly no doubt to the regretable fact that the New Testament gives us so little, historically, of his ministry, but through the little that is given, prophetically as well as historically, our eyes are opened to the grandeur of his work. Christ's estimate of him was high, and he declared there was none greater, and the Lord spoke appreciatingly of his work, and himself continued to build upon the foundation which John had laid. Furthermore John's work seemed to have been appreciated by the masses of the people for "all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed."

What was there in the mission of John which made it so great in the sight of God and man? Surely it was not that he had received great learning from men, or that he was trained in the arts of social refinement. It was not that he came with display of pomp or power, or great wisdom, nor that he came highly recommended by the great men of the earth. His life was the most simple and his early habits of living uninviting to settled society, living in the wilderness, his food being locusts and wild honey. Yet he did a great work.

His birth was by divine appointment. He had been prophecied of long years before as the one to prepare the way of the Lord! his birth came by angelic announcement, by which also it was made known that his coming was in funfillment of the prophecies; he was filled with the Holy Ghost from his birth by which he learned to know the will of Gcd. Under the direction of the Holy Spirit he drank neither wine nor strong drink, and evidently kept himself from the frivilous pleasures of the world and from his birth reserved himself for the work which lay before him.

The work of John was done without ostentation and with earnest simplicity of manner; the message he boxe was given him of God and was de-livered to the people in plainness, free from the embelishments which would detract from its importance. The greatness of his mission was in his message which met the greatest of man, and which when accepted would bring to man the greatest joy in this life and eternal life in the world to come.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, THURSDAY, AUGUST 27, 1914

The Jews had wandered far from God and had lost sight of his law. Even the law of Moses had been made non-effectual because of the traditions of men, and they were following their own ways in opposition to the way God required. Such a policy always leads to ultimate disaster, but God sent John to call upon them to return to God. to forsake the errors and traditions of their fathers and turn from their evil ways; the message he gave them was an exposition of the law of God-the law of life. His father, Zacharias had prophesied that he would "give knowledge of salvation unto his [God's] people by the remission of their sins," and that he would "prepare his ways."

The Preparatory Gospel.

The whole teaching and work of John was preparatory to the work of Jesus Christ. His call to the people was to "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." Surely the people had been going away from God, and by following the traditions and doctrines of men were walking in crooked paths. What was the straight path? It was the one John came to tell. The historian says: "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins * * * and preached, saying, There cometh one mightier than I after me; the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." Herein he pointed out the straight path in which God would have them walk, and God's path does not change, and consequently is the same to all men:-repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, with faith in Jesus Christ by whom cometh the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

Faith.

The nature of John's message made faith necessary, for coming as the forerunner of Christ, and his declaration that Christ was greater than he would complete the work he had begun, made an acceptance of his teachings an acceptance of Christ. Without faith in Christ repentance and bantism would have availed nothing for only through his atonement could remission of sins be granted even in baptism. Paul says "Without faith it is impossible to please him, and any ordinance of the gospel performed without faith in God and Christ is merely a dead form and accomplishes nothing. So it is apparent that John's teachings included faith.

Repentance.

The repentance which John taught was a forsaking of the ways of sin and false doctrine making straight the path of life in accordance with the law of God, and a preparation for the coming of the Lord: A mere profession of repentance did not meet the requirements of his teaching, for he said to some who were willing to follow the multitude of his followers but who had not performed the works of repentance, "Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentand when they asked him what they should do he answered: "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat; let him do likewise."

This work of repentance as taught by John was an active, positive work. It was not merely to stop defrauding, or taking advantage of the poor, but to enter into the performance of active duty in helping those who needed help. That is gospel repentance, and it is the kind that is needed That doctrine applies to the rich who today. have accumulated vast wealth to the impoverishment of the masses; it applies likewise to the man of moderate means and the man who has but little who sees another in need. It is the first step in the great law of life—the law of love which is the motive of the gospel; it strikes at the root of selfishness and greed. It not only prohibited the further acquisition of wealth by unfair means but required that reparation be made for past wrongs and that the poor should be provided for by those who had more than necessary for their needs. Surely the world today needs to make straight the way of the Lord upon this point.

Bantism.

John's baptism was the baptism of repentance: there is no other in the gospel. An effectual baptism is dependent upon repentance, and repentance is made effectual by baptism by which the sins are remitted. Not only is baptism associated with repentance but it is the preliminary step to the baptism of the Holy Ghost which John promised to the people through Christ. John's work was preparatory, his baptism was preparatory but none the less essential; it prepared the individual for the higher baptism to be given by Christ, and is the door into the Church or kingdom of God upon earth. Through that door Jesus entered and through that door he requires all men to enter: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

John baptized "in the river Jordan," and Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water, by which it clearly appears that the method was by immersion. Paul so understood it when he taught regarding it that "we are buried with him by baptism into death."
The door has not been changed nor dispensed with by Christ at any time. It is the only way of entering into the kingdom given in the Scriptures, and though men have sought to dispense with it, or to change it to suit their convenience, not one word has ever come from the Lord directing or authorizing such change. Any other way is man's way, the crooked way, and if the individual would become straight with God he must choose the straight way. Jesus said "Enter ye in at the straight gate," and the world today following as it is crooked paths has need of another John the Baptist to make their way straight.

John was "sent from God." He acted with the authority of God in administering the rite of baptism, an authority which Jesus acknowledged and submitted to, and which God indorced by sending his Holy Spirit from heaven. Jesus gave authority to his ministry by which they might preach the gospel and administer in its ordinances, and the work of the ministry was reserved to those who had been properly called of God and ordained. Such a work could not safely or consistently be left to any or every man to do according to his own will or whim, nor do men have the power to call others to such work, but the call must come from God in such way and Withthrough such channels as he may choose. out such divine call and approval the official acts of no man can be legalized even though the outward form be according to the divine will. Real gospel baptism can be administered by none other than one whom God has called and approved.

This is the preparatory gospel, and the man who has fulfilled these requirements becomes, through the laying on of hands, a candidate for the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which baptism is open to all the same as the baptism of water. Of those baptized the Lord has said in recent revelation, "And whose having faith you shall confirm in my Church, by the laying on of the hands, and I will bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost upon them." This is in full harmony with the statement of John that he [Jesus Christ] should baptize them with the Holy Ghost. With such a promise who should fail to yield obedience and thus come into proper relationship with God and receive his divine blessing by which he may go on unto perfection?

In such a message bearing such possibilities we see the greatness of John, not alone because of the message but because that his life and character were in harmony therewith. Other men may by obedience to the same law share John's greatness, and become heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

INDEPENDENCE ITEMS.

The morning's preaching service was introduced by a musical selection by Bro. J. A. Robinson on a brass instrument, accompanied by Sr. Robinson on the plano. After prayer Bro. G. E. Harrington read for the morning's lesson the 37th Psalm, which contains so many splendid thoughts and fine instruction. Following the anthem by the choir Bro. Roci sang an excellent solo. Bro. Harrington then read the second chapter of Isaiah, in which is the prophetic statement of the time when swords would be beat into ploughshares, and there shall be no more war. The speaker stated that no doubt the congregation would think that from the reading of that chapter he was gong to speak on the subject of the present war that is raging in the cast, but after a few remarks about the The morning's preaching service was introduced by a was gong to speak of the satisfiest of the remarks about the wisdom of not taking sides in the present conflict, he said he was concerned more particularly about God's wisdom of not taking sides in the present commet, he said he was concerned more particularly about God's people in this place—about their spiritual condition. God has provided a place wherein his people should meet together to worship him. Referred to the scripture read wherein it is stated that the children of God went up to the house of the Lord, and that they walked in the paths laid out for them. Those who loved the Lord met together often. There are certain officers in the church whose duty it is to see that the church meet together often. Jesus in the beatitudes impressed upon us the necessity of having a hungering and thirsting after righteousness. The development of the desire for righteousness is what we should cultivate. He spoke of the many meetings held, and that those who felt that it was too much of a tax on them physically and mentally to attend all, should attend such as they felt they received the greater benefit from. All who can should make an effort to attend the prayermeetings. Coming together simply to see each other and to visit does not make a good prayermeeting, but all should come together with hearts consecrated to God and his service. The tencher is the officer who should see that the church meets often. hearts consecrated to God and his service. The teacher is the officer who should see that the church meets often. Not over one-fourth of the membership of the branch of over 2600 were present. We should search ourselves to find out why we are not attending meetings, and if attending to find why we are coming. The Lord wants tending to find why we are coming. The Lord wants the homes of the Saints consecrated to him, and the priests are to visit the house of every member to exhort them to such consecration. Are the priests consecrating themselves to this special work they have been called and ordained to do—feeding the sheep?

and ordanied to do—tecung the sneep!

In the evening Elder L. E. Hills was the preacher, taking for his text Matt. 7:14: "Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Coupled with this he said is a more startling statement in Luke 13:24: "Strive to the the state of the state of the state of the state." meter in at the straight gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." This seems mysterious. There are many mysterious things in the Bible. "Few there be that find it." For 1260 years there was not a man who could open it. What is the gate? It is righteousness. There must be something about this gate that few now understand. Referred to John's baptism. Jesus said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." John was preaching the gate of righteousness. All who would be pure ing the gate of righteodishess. All who would be pur-must enter that gate. Besus asked the elders and chief priests, "The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men?" Baptism is a part of that gate, when from heaven. But the baptism of man is not. Referred to the disciples whom Paul met who had not received the Holy Ghost since they believed, and who claimed they had been baptized with the baptism of claimed they had John. They evidently had been baptized with the baptism John. They evidently had been baptized with the baptism of man, by some one into having authority to baptize or confer the Holy Ghost. Authority has always been on the earth except during the 1260 years when the church was in the wilderness. The church came out of the wilderness in 1830, and was firmly established in 1860. These are a few of the leading thoughts presented in the sermon.

It is with joyous feelings that we make known to our readers abroad that local option has again won a vicreaders abroad that local option has again won a vic-tory, and that Jackson County, Mo., outside of Kansas City, has come "up higher." This following the Indepen-dence victory just a month previous. On the 21st of July the city of Independence went dry and on the 22nd of August the county outside of Independence and Kansas City voted dry by a majority of 546, there being 5976 votes cast, and 3261 were dry and 2715 wet. In 1907 the same territory went wet by 1918 majority, showing a blig change of sentimers in the seven years, due to nevbig change of sentiment in the seven years, due to peristent and hard work. The victory was due to organization and specific plans, it was due to competent and experienced head managers, it was due to public speakers among whom were a number of our brethren, it was due to a mammoth petition of about 2000 women, and it was to a mammoth petition of about 2000 women, and it was due to the splendid work of the women on election day, who were out by hundreds at the polling places from six o'clock in the morning till the polls closed at sundown, with cameras in hand. The wet forces were alert also, and automobiles were kept going from one precinct to another loaded with men. The suspicions of the women were aroused and they would take several snapshots of the crowd, and then take note of the number of the car, then you to a telephone and notify the day forces in other then run to a telephone and notify the dry forces in other precincts to watch for a load of repeaters in a car bear-ing that number. The women were on their job with precincts to water to the women were on their joo wan their tamber. The women were on their joo wan their cameras, thas if they voted in more than one precinct the cameras would show it beyond question, but the would-be repeaters were thus thwarted, being afraid of the tell-tale cameras. We should not fail to note the of the tell-tale cameras. We should not fail to note the good work done by the Kansas City Star. Of the election on Saturday the Sunday Star said, of Jackson County: "It did the biggreat day's work for itself it has done in many a long year." It further said, "It was a case of the saloon against the home—and the home won. *** There isn' a good mother in the county who wont thank God that the temptation of the saloon and the roadhouse is to be kept away from her boys."

Speaking of the change of sentiment from that of the local option election of 1907, the Star says: "The change indicates the transformation of public sentiment that is going on all over Missouri and the United States. The liquor business in this country is doomed. It may last ten years longer. It may last fifteen. But the end is in sight. National prohibition is on the way."

Mt. Washington, a couple of miles west of Independence, is very unfortunately situated. The Mt. Washington precinct contains a population of nearly 3500 of whom 2000 are in Mt. Washington proper outside of the Fairmount district, thus what might be quite a nice little city of 3500 people have been and are without any municipal government of any kind, and the only way they can have police protection or other benefits from such government is by Independence to take that territory in, as no town can be incorporated within three miles of a county seat, nor can they be attached to Kansas City, because that city is now incorporated to the last foot that cause that city is now incorporated to the last foot that it can be towards Independence. One of the unfortunate things is that Mt. Washington is surrounded with wine things is that Mt. Washington is surrounded with wine gardens, six being within a quarter of a mile of each other, and the citizens of that otherwise fine community have no say as to the existence or control of these disreputable places. So it is not strange that the county local option movement was started among the good christian citizens of Mt. Washington. There is a movement on foot now, we understand, to have Mt. Washing-ton annexed to Independence, and in that event it would have to include Englewood and Maywood, and all combined would add to Independence a population of some 7000, making the sum total about 18000.

Park Branch, same having been duly organized, regular sessions are being held.

We have moved our little building on lots purchased where we hope to have a nice church building some day. The lots are beautifully located near the corner of Pearl and Alton Streets; Pearl Street now being improved, will add much to the location.

The Walnut Park Branch is not only growing in num-bers but is progressing in many auxiliaries of the church work. We have found it necessary to add more room to the building, and we fear it will soon be too small.

Several families have lately moved in and are taking hold of the work in a splendid manner. Every one seems to be up and doing; many are keen in arguments and anxious to give reason for the hope they have within.

Bro. Emslee Curtis occupied the morning hour, touching upon the pre-existence of man; he also occupied the evening hour, explaining the different dispensations and earmarks of same. Many were cdified especially at his closing remarks in which he told of his personal interview with Father Whitmer, one of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and of his privilege of hearing Bro. SEATTLE.

The Scattle pulpit was filled Sunday by Bro. Amos Rhodes and A. Gorbett respectively. The Sunday school and Religio held their regular sessions.

A happy wedding occurred at the home of the bride on Wednesday evaning when Bro. Wm. J. Johnson and Miss Pauline F. Claffin were united in happy wednesday wedne lock. A sumptuos dinner was served when the happy young couple sailed away up the sound to Vancouver B. C.

Bro. Johnson is our efficient Religio president. The writer performed the official part. We shall now have an additional worker.

The first time we set foot on foreign soil when we went to Vancouver, B. C., to attend our district conference and conventions, which were held Aug. 13-15. There was a good attendance, being about fifty coming from a distance. The few, but faithful, Saints of Vancouver arranged a community table on the ground floor of Bro. Isrce McMullen's home which was turned into a veritable Latter Day Saint rendezvous. There were 150 partook of the day meal on Sunday. They had tables to seat 44 at one sitting. The order and system was praise-worthy. Bro. and Sr. McMullen did a noble part and were heartify supported by the Saints there and elsewhere. We formed a number of pleasant acquaintances among whom may be mentioned the Hartnell brothers—John and Richard, Joe Muerhead, H. Stade, R. McGuire, F. L. Robins, Bro. Reed, Bro. Milosh and others. The sisters were present and ready for their part. The first time we set foot on foreign soil when sisters were present and ready for their part.

Sr. L. McMasters writes of the healing of her daughter, Edna, who was baptized here some weeks ago. They live at Port Townsend. We rejoice in such news.

Brn. R. D. Davis and Roy S. Budd have been doing tent ork in Vancouver for some time and will continue indefinitely in the same place. Bro. Budd is a young priest just starting in the mission work. We could see it him the elements of success—humility and sobriety, and from Missouri. Bro. Davis has a good help in his new wife who is gifted in music, vocal and instrumental. Juccess to the boys is our wish.

It tooked quite war like in Vancouver to see the soldiers

Dear Ensign:—Don't for a moment think that Uncle John has slipped you from his mind. Oh No, I often think of the world of good you are doing in your noble think of the world of good you are doing in your noble misisonary work.

I left my home in Independence, May 19 with a crazy man from Deer Isle, Maine. I need not tell you of that trying trip. It was my second time to that island that I, had committed to my charge a lunatic. But it was the desire of Bishop Kelley that I should take him home, and so I responded. I contracted a fearful cold on the way, and it has stuck to me all the summer, throwing my stomach and liver out of commission, and of late I have hear a fearful sufface, but I feel year, much improved. stomach and liver out of commission, and of late I have been a fearful sufferer, but I feel very much improved. However it didn't stop my tongue, for since I arrived I have been busy, praching in several places, and have had some fine meetings. I have preached 55 times and confirmed them, [Did you baptize any?] blessed seven children and presided over 21 other meetings and administered to the sick many times.

There is a great need of more help along the coast of Maine. In eastern Maine the church only has one man to represent it, and that is Bro. Ebelin, who preaches at Jonesport every Sunday night, and Sunday afternoon holds forth in Mansepec. I was pleased to learn the High Priest Praacher was liked so well. President W. E. Jonesport every Sunday mgm, ..... holds forth in Mansepec. I was pleased to learn the High Priest Preacher was liked so well. President W. E. Herbert Royers with his beautiful singers just an elder feel fine to preach in Jonesport. But it's alkes an elder feel fine to preach in Jonesport. But it's little surprising how Hinkley and Smith can get a traight tune out of those crooked instruments. The lonely feeling that comes upon me, as I travel bout here, and miss the smiling faces of the aged ones

The lonery recomes about here, and miss the smiling faces of the aged ones that I led into the church many years ago, have passed into the great beyond. But thank the Lord their children are taking their places and the good work goes on.

But a keener blade touches the tender spot in my heart, to know that one who once did a little preaching to the people along the coast of Maine, is now writing to different ones that he has left the church and joined the Baptists, and that he can prove that Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy. He said he didn't want John Foss here in Maine, for he was a black sheep. Well, poor man, I'd rather he a blach sheep in Christ's flock, han a black goat in the devil's flock. He went out from us because he was not of us.

I leave here on Sunday for Machias Port, where I am to solemnize the marriage of Warren S. Foss and Miss Nettie Holmes. I baptized her parents many years ago. I shall attend the Western Maine conference Aug. 29th, then to Vinal Haven and call to see Bro. David S. New Philadelphia, Ohio, Aug. 7.

Dear Ensign:—We reached New Philadelphia, Friday, July 24th, and are now located in our tent, on the side July 24th, and are now located in our tent, on the side of a little hill, with beautiful scenery in evidence every where we look. On one side, the oats are in the shock, on the other side, the corn so green and fresh looking, is waving in the breeze, and on the other, the long row of tents are arranged, making in all, a delightful view from our tent, which is located in a shady spot under a couple of trees location is in Tuscora Park, a small amusement park, which has many advantages, yet also has some things which are not congenial. There are two evenings each week, when dancing is in progress not far from the preaching tent, and that of course interferes some, and on Sunday afternoon, a baseball game is in progress at three o'clock, and this also interdeferes with the quiet, peaceful influence the Saints would otherwise enjoy. We are pleased to say however, that these unavoidable events do not influence our people.

We found our tent in readiness, as Bro. and Sr. Cramer had kindly sent us bedding and writing table, and rockers, which together with a couple of boxes, completes our tenting outfit and we are comfortably settled and are enjoying the camp very much. The first day of reunion, Sunday, Elder Pitt preached the morning ser-mon, Elder Pycock the afternoon, and Apostle Russell the evening sermon. Large audiences attended each

After leaving home, May 28th, we arrived at Toledo and were met by Brn. Hettrick and Atchison. We were made very welcome at the home of Bro. Atkinson where we remained during our stay in Toledo. The Saints there have a nice live Branch, and all seem to be active and each doing their duty. The weather was Samts there have a nice live branch, and all seem to be active and each doing their duty. The weather was so very warm, that we were obliged to remain indoors most of the day, and evening services were held in the hall, with excellent interest.

June 5th we left Toledo for Cleveland, and after the swiftest ride I ever remember having on a train, we reached Cleveland a distance of 123 miles in 125 minutes, including a few stops. We were met by Sr. Irene Top-ping and her sister, who accompanied us to their home where we had supper, and later went to the home of Bro. and Sr Ernest Webbe. We felt at home at once with brother and sister, and greatly enjoyed every minute their pleasant home. Cleveland Branch has a very in their pleasant home. Cleveland Branch has a very nice comfortable Church, in splendid location. On ac-count of the extreme heat it was decided best to post-pone the series of meetings until cooler weather. Services pone the series of meetings until cooler weather. Services were held in the Park one Sunday, with splendid interest. Being so near Kirtland, the place of interest to so many Saints, we accepted the kind invitation of Sr. Alberta Lake to visit her, so we went by trolley to Willoughby, and there Bro. Eben Curry met us with his interest to so auto, and in a few minutes we were in sight of the Temple. The country is beautiful around Kirtland auto, and in a rew minutes we were in signi of the Temple. The country is beautiful around Kirtland— hilly and picturesque. We were made very welcome by Sr. Lake, whom we had last seen in the far away Island of Hao, a little island 600 miles from Papeete, Tahiti, in the Pacific Ocean. It recalled the past, the day we had gone out to sea in a little row boat with Bro. Savage, our American missionary, to greet Sr. and Bro. Lake who had come into the lagoon in a sailing vessel. It brought past memories of he who was absent and who is now past memories of ne who was assent and who is now lying asleep on the lonely island. We spent a very pleasant week with Sr. Lake, and as her mother was arriving from Boston to spend the winter with her, we arriving from Boston to spend the winter with her, we accepted the invitation of Bro. and Sr Eben Curry to spend a week with them. We had a very enjoyable time at their pleasant home, and services were held each evening in the Temple, and were successful in getting many out to hear. Later on meetings are to be advertized and a series held there again, upon our return. We visited the historic grand old Temple, the day after our arrival and as we antered we felt the Spirit of the our arrival, and as we entered, we 'eli the Spirit of the Lord present. We both had to shed tears as we enjoyed the sweet influence, and as we stood in silence, thus meditating, Bro. Thomas said, it is wonderful how many of even the worldly people enter here and feel the sweet peaceful influence to such a degree that they have asked him for an explanation of what they had experienced, and they have tried to account for it upon a scientific basis.

We were greatly surprised to learn the great number of tourists who visit the Temple each year. It ber of tourists who visit the Temple each year. It seemed to us a wonderful opportunity of spreading the gospel, as thousands could learn in this way. Some days, we are told, as many as 240 call. One can readily see that Elder Thomas is kept busy at such times. He has a young boy assisting, and he does splendidly in explaining. We could not refrain from thinking what a splendid we construct the country of the property of the p splendid opportunity for two or three of our best representative men to spread the gospel in story and litera-ture were they stationed at the Temple during the tourist season. We feel satisfied thousands would hear who otherwise might never be reached.

Having promised to return for the series of meetings later, we left for Cleveland to prepare for our trip to Akron on our way to other cities. Upon arrival at Akron, we were met by Bro. Manchester, who kindly took us in his auto to the comfortable home of Bro. and Sr. McCoy. We appreciated their kindness and the hospitality shown us while there. A settin of meetings were held in the very pleasant church of the Saints, in a splendid location, and the members deserve a word of credit for the cation, and the members deserve a word of credit for the way in which they attended each service. Many came way in which they attended each service. Many came long distances, and the weather was so very warm, yet the church was well filled at each service. After a week there, we left for Canton, Ohio. Bro. Manchester always ready and willing to do all he can for the missionaries, ready and willing to do all act an for the missionaries, assisted us greatly in taking us with our heavily packed suit cases to the train. We arrived in Canton after a very pleasant ride, and were made welcome at the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. W. H. Sautters. They have only been members a little more than two years, but are true Saints, who love the gospel. A series of meetings were arranged for in the hall and were well attended. were arranged to it the hall and were well attended. The Saints at Canton are making an effort now to get a more suitable place for worship, and if successful, meetings will be arranged for, and we have promised to return when needed. While in Canton, Bro. Sautters escorted us to the McKinley tomb and monument. There inside, we saw the caskets of the Ex President and his fe. It is a very beautiful tomb.
We are very much in love with the cities of Ohio thus

We are kept very busy at the reunion, but enjoy the work, and are both feeling well. Camping is the ideal life, I think, and all here seem to be thoroughly enjoying themselves. The misisonary force present thus joying themselves. The missionary lorce present thus far, are Elders Russell, Pycock, Baldwin, Mosier, Winegar, McConnoughy, Booker, Burdick, Liston, Neville, and some others whose names I failed to learn. Also Bishop Kelley and Bishop Becker, and Patriarch, F. G. Pitt, are present. The retunion closes Sunday evening, Aug. 9th, after which we will retrace our steps northward.

Best wishes to all the Ensign readers, Your sister, Rosa Parks Pitt. 545 West Marion St., Joliet, Illinois.

Dear Ensign:-We are an isolated band of Saints here, of about twelve in number. We have no preaching here. of about twelve in humber. We have no preacting here, except when one of the missionaries come. Brn. Quick and Silvers gave us some good sermons in May. We are looking for some of them to bring the tent here after looking for some of them to bring the tent here after the reunion, and we hope they wont disappoint us. We have kept our Sunday school going for over three years. Sometimes our numbers have been very small, but by persistent effort of a few faithful ones our Sun-day school is now a good one. The Lord has certainly blessed us in our school. We have as our superintendent Bro. D. F. Minniear, who lives fifteen miles away, but he has an auto, and is always on hand Sunday morning with his family when the weather permits. Ever hop-ing and praying for the success of this great latter day Ever hop work, I remain a sister,

GLEANINGS.

Some idea of present conditions in Scandinavia can be gathered from the following extract from a letter from Elder P. Muceus to Bishop Kelley dated August 8, 1914. "The war has made times harder already, in that thousands of employees at mills, factories and mines have been laid off and the business shut down. All goods bought must be paid for eash down and no loans are obtainable at the banks. Added to this already bad condition comes the rise in prices on all catables from 10 to 50 per cent. No export of anything and import is more difficult. America is about the only country we can expect supplies from. How it will be with our work will depend upon the developments of the war. If nothing can be done we may have to leave for America. The urgent necessity for financial support is seen in the fore-

By Elder R. T. Cooper. Three distinct lines of instruction are open before us, given under varying conditions, to as many different peoples, widely separated by geography and time, yet by the same God, and by associating the leading items of each their oneness is immediately apparent. The first is from the Bible and taught by Jesus Christ through Paul to the saints at Corinth about A. D. 59. The second is from the Book of Mormon, and taught by Jesus Christ to the Nephites through his disciple about A. D. 40. The third is from the Doctrine and Covenants and taught by Jesus Christ to the Latter Day Saints through Joseph A. D. 1831. The Holy Ghost.

C. 46:7.

Concerning these spiritual gifts Paul said (1 Cor. 12) he would not have us to be ignorant and enummerates them, word of wisdom; word of knowledge; faith; gifts of healing; working of miracles; prophecy; discerning of spirits; divers kinds of tongues; interpretation of tongues. "But all these worketh that one and self same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." The books are agreed as to their object, "To minister unto the Church," "For every man's profit" and never to be done away except by unbelief.

A clue to their discernment seems to be furnished in 1 Cor. 12:12: "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, is one body; so also is Christ." The body of Christ we understand to be the Church, in which, these gifts are manifested.

Now there are diversities of gifts but the same Spirit, Verse 4: Differences of administrations but the same Lord, Verse 5: Diversities of operations but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

The Diversities of Gifts are apparent, as enumerated.

The Differences of Administration are (1) Envelopment: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Rev. 1:10. (2) Vision, as was given to Peter, Acts 10:19. (3) Utterances by the Holy Ghost: "Holy men of old spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost." 1 Pet. 1:21. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." 1 Cor. 12:13. (4) By angels: "Yea while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation." Dan. 9:21: 8:15, 17: also Dan. 10:11, 16, 17. (5) Ministering Spirits Sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." Heb. 1:14.

Diversities of Operations: Diversities of Operations: (1) "Thus were the visions of my head in my bed." Nabuchadnezzar's Dream, Dan. 4:10. (2) "Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness." Matt. (3) "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day and heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet," Rev. 1:10. (4) "For thus it whispereth me according to the workings of the Spirit of the Lord which is in me." Words of Mormon 1:3. (5) "After they were come to Mysia they assayed to go into Bithnia, but the Spirit suffered them Acts 16:7. (6) "And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the Eunuch saw him no more." Acts 8:39. (7) "But if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law." Gal. 5:18.

But it is the same God which worketh all in all. Likening these to the body, we have the functions of eating, drinking, dressing, washing, sleeping purging of diseased or worn out cells, selecting food, elevating life by education; beautifying life by accomplishments, creating happiness by association, yet each and every operation or function is for the benefit of the body as a whole, and all these diversities by the same spirit which animates or controls the body, continuing as long as there is life. Whether we tolerate, like or love, dislike, abhor or hate it is the same soul.

Whether the hand shall minister a soothing lotion to a sunburnt skin or burning caustic to a venomous bite, delight the palate with pleasing fruits or eject poison from the stomach with a powerful emetic it is the same head and spirit that directs.

Whether the eye shall wink, the ear hear, the nose smell, the mouth chew, the vocal organs sing, the brain receive, record, or direct, they are but different manifestations of the same mind.

If the feet carry the soldier to battle, the fireman into the burning house, the policeman to a den of thieves, the bride to the altar, the mother to the infant's crib, or the doctor to the patient, it is all the same spirit of man working all in all.

While all these diversified results, manifestations and operations are the expressions of the operators of the same spirit, they may result from. a. A direct instruction of the will to the hand or member, b. A functioning of the members to fill the measure of their creation, for the "power is in them" as the beating of the heart, the focusing of the lens in the eye, or transmission of feel-

c. A semi-voluntary, fruit of training, as the fingers of the violinist or the telegrapher's ear.

ing by the nerves.

Yet the brain, the seat of the intellect, can either allow these voluntary muscles to pursue their acquired abilities, or apply all their skill in any desired channel, and while, to the observer, the contemplated action, or purpose thereof may be unknown until the completed action makes it manifest in a result, still, to the intellect, soul or spirit, enthroned in the intelligence, operating through the mentality producing these various manifestations, is known, the purpose before the

Should a manifestation be so produced by any member, in a well balanced body, certainly that head would know whether the result produced was the product of its direction or sufferance; of some exterior influnce or some adverse power; could recognize its own and detect the other.

So with the workings of the Spirit through the body of Christ, with its diversities of operations differences of administration and diversities of gifts evidenced to us by their manifestations, given to every man to profit withal, yet it is the same God which worketh all in all, and it is evident that God will know even before a result may be manifested to the observer, what he may have willed and the purpose thereof, and no matter what manifestations might be exhibited. He would know whether it were the product of his direction, or sufferance, whether the member was operating by virtue of training or powers already endowed and therefore by the "Power that was in them," or whether by external influence as presumption or by some adverse power.

An acquisition, therefore, of a requisite portion of the Spirit or power of God would seem to solve the secret of the "Discerning of gifts."

The place most common for the manifestation of these gifts is at a sacrament meeting, and in reference to these meetings the word of the Lord is, Sec. 46, Par. 3, "But ye are commanded in all things to ask of God, who giveth liberally, and that which the Spirit testifies unto you, even so I would that you should do in all holiness of heart, walking uprightly before me, considering the end of your salvation, doing all things with prayer and thanksgiving, that ye may not be seduced by evil spirits, or doctrines of devils, or the commandments of men, for some are of men and others of devils." Seduction is not by force but rather by acquiescence.

The importance of this discernment of gifts becomes apparent with the reading of Section 50, paragraph 1 of Doctrine and Covenants.

"Behold, verily I say unto you, that there are many spirits which are false spirits, which have gone forth in the earth, deceiving the world; and also Satan hath sought to deceive you, that he might overthrow you." A glance at history confirms this word of recent revelation.

First apology of Justin Martyr, before the King of Rome about A. D. 95 declares that for God. of the Christians their accusers, presented Jove, the supreme and Father of all gods, for Christ, Mercury; for the Holy Ghost, Aesculapias; born of the virgin Perseus; Moses on the water Kore, Jove's daughter; First born, Minerva; "The devils no sooner heard of this baptism spoken of by the prophet, but they too set up their baptisms,' Kayes, Justin Martyr, pp. 29, 30, 66, 77, 78, 81, 33.

"But though the demons are material, they have not flesh, their composition is spiritual, like that of fire or air. Their bodies consequently cannot be seen, excepting by those who are guarded by the Spirit of God. The sole object of the Demons is to lead men away from the truth; with this view they invented the arts of divination and set up the Oracles."-Ibid, page 148.

"But first I am to caution you against those spirits which I have already accused for practising upon you, that they do not delude and pervert you from reading and under-standing what I am now proposing for your consideration; for, to hold you in slavery and bondage is the prize they contend for, and sometimes, by visions in sleep, sometimes by magical impostures, they make sure of all such as are little concerned about their salvation." Apology, Sec. 17. Page 18.

Titian claims about the same "where" after he has observed that the demons deceive solitary (deserted by the divine Spirit) souls, by visions, adds that, as they have not flesh they do not easily die." "The shortness of man's existence curtails his powers of transgression; whereas the demons, whose existence is infinite, contract an infinite guilt." Ibid, page 148, note.

"The angels therefore who were expelled from heaven, hovering about the air and earth, and no longer able to elevate themselves to heavenly things, and the souls of the giants who are the demons, wandering about the world, excite motions corresponding, some to the substances which the demons assumed, others to the desires which the angels felt." "After which Ibid, page 150. Athenagoras adds: "The powers which draw men to idols are the above mentioned demons who settle upon the victims and such their blood." Ibid Page 151.

"Speaking of the heathen poets, Theophilus says that they were inspired by demons; and in proof of this assertion states that, when men under the influence of a demonical possession were exorcised in the name of the true God, the spirts which seduced them confessed themselves to be demons. With respect to the gods of the heathen, Theophilus affirms repeatedly that they were dead men, he calls them also demons, impure Ibid, page 152.

True Prophecy by Oracles or Demons.

"It must however be confessed that the answer of the oracle was clear and circumstantial, I have related in the history of Croesus, the stratagem he made use of to assure himself of the veracity of the oracle which was to demand of it, by his ambassador, what he was doing at a certain time prefixed. The oracle of Delphos replied, that he was causing a tortoise and a lamb to be dressed in a vessel of brass, which was really so."

"The emperor Trajan made a similar trial of the god at Heliopolis, by sending him a letter sealed up to which he demanded an answer. The oracle made no other return than to command a blank paper, well folded and sealed, to be delivered to him. Trajan upon receipt of it was struck with amazement to see an answer so correspondent with his own letter, in which he knew he had written nothing."

"The wonderful facility with which demons can transfer themselves almost in an instant, from place to place, made it not impossible for them to give the two related answers.

"Admitting it to be true, that some Oracles have been followed precisely by the events fore-told, we may believe, that God, to punish the blind and sacreligious credulity of the pagans, has sometimes permitted demons to have a knowledge of things to come and to foretell them distinctly enough. Which conduct of God though very much above humon comprehension, is frequently attested in the holy Scriptures,"—Rollin's Ancient History, Vol 1, p. 59, 60.

Unclean Animals, Demoniac Affinities.

"And nothing in Moses appears to me more marvelous than what I am about to mention. Because he understands, the different natures of animals and has either learnt from God the facts about them and the demons which have affinity with each, or has by exercising his own wisdom made the discovery, all the animals which he classifies as unclean are those considered by the Egyptians and the rest of mankind to be connected with divination, while those not connected are generally speaking clean animals. Amongst the unclean Moses places the wolf, the fox, the serpent, the hawk and such like. And generally speaking you will find not only in the Law but in the Prophets, that these animals are taken to represent the worst qualities, while there is no instance of a wolf or a fox being mentioned with anything good. There seems to be, then, a fellowship between such kinds of demons and each kind of animals. And as among men some are stronger than others, and not all on account of their moral character; some demons in things indifferent may be stronger than others: and some of them may use certain animals to deceive men, according to the pleasure of him who in the words of the Scriptures is called "the prince of this wrrld" (John 12, 13) Philocalia of Origen, Page 131.

"But if we are to believe that certain men, who have derived their information from the inarticulate cry of the birds, announce beforehand that the birds will go to some place and do this or that, we shall maintain that the information has been given to men by demons through certain signs, for the purpose of men being deceived by demons, and their understanding dragged down from heaven and from God to earth and places lower still." Ibil, Page 135.

Men Demon's Agents.

Eusebius ecclesiastical history page 62, chapter 13, quoting Justin, "And after the ascension of our Lord into heaven, certain men were suborned by demons as their agents, who said that they were gods." Simon a certain Samiritan of the village called Githon was one of the number who in the reign of Claudis Caesar performed many magic rites by the operations of the demons, was considered a god, in your imperial city of Pone and was honored by you with a statue as a god in the river Tiber."

Again, page 112. "But we know that Menander who was a disciple of Simeon, and likewise stimulated by the Demons, came to Antioch and deceived many by his magic arts. He persuaded those that followed him that they should never die." "It was indeed a diabolical artifice by means of such imposters assuming the title of Christians to evince so much zeal in defaming the great my stery of picty by magic arts, and to rend asmider by these means the doctrines of the church respecting the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of the dead."

These records are submitted for just what they may be worth but are the writings of the foremost defenders of the Christian Religion in their day and times and seem to merit conscieentious consederation at least.

Should the claims be considered too sweeping your attention is invited to the language of the recorder of Enoch's vision D. C. 36:5. "And after that Zion was taken up into heaven, Enoch beheld, and lo! All the nations of the earth were before him, and there came generation upon generation, and Enoch was high and lifted up, even in the bosom of the Father and the Son of man; and, behold, the power of Satan was upon all the face of the earth, and he saw angels descending out of heaven, and he heard a loud voice, saying, Woe, woe be unto the inhabitants of the earth! And he beheld Satan, and he had a great chain in his hand, and it veiled the whole face of the earth with darkness, and he looked up and laughed, and his angels rejoiced.

An exaggeration of the fulfillment of that vision would seem impossible.

"For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." Isa. 60:2. The universal result of darkness is sleepiness, and under such conditions it would be no compromise on human intelligence to concede with Soloman, Prov. 14:12, that "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man but the end thereof are the ways of death," which is only a nice way of saying the man was deceived, and that means to have believed what was false.

"And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever," Rev. 20:10. But even that would not deliver nor render happy the victims of the deception. "Nor is deception confined to the devil, "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," 2 Tim. 3:13.

"Discernment of Gifts" therefore becomes a

"The Elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God." D. C. 17:9.

"And again, I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land and goeth forth deceiving the nations; wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances. He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek, and edifieth, the same is of God if he obey mine ordinances. And again, he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise and wisdom, according to the revelations and truths which I have given you."

"And again, he that is overcome and bringeth not forth fruits even according to this pattern, is not of me; wherefore by this pattern ye shall know the spirits in all cases, under the whole heavens." D. C. 52:4, 5.

"Wherefore it shall come to pass, that if you behold a spirit manifested that you cannot understand, and you receive not that spirit, ye shall ask of the Father, in the name of Jesus, and if he give not unto you that spirit, that you may know that it is not of God; and it shall be given unto you power over that spirit, and you shall proclaim against that spirit with a loud voice, that it is not of God; not with railing accusation, that ye be not overcome; neither with boasting, nor rejoicing, lest you be seized therewith: he that receiveth of God let him account it of God, and let him rejoice that he is accounted of God worthy to receive." D. C. 50:7.

"Wherefore, beware, lest ye are deceived, and that ye may not be deceived, seek ye earnestly the best gifts, always remembering for what they are given; for verily I say unto you, they are given for the benefit of those who love me and keep all my commandments." D. C. 46:4.

"And unto the Bishop of the church, and unto such as God shall appoint and ordain to watch over the church, and to be elders unto the church, are to have it given unto them to discern all those gifts, lest there be any among you professing and yet be not of God." D. C. 46:7.

MODERN RELIGION VERSUS DIVINE WISDOM.

We frequently flud people who tell us that there is no difference between so-called Christian orthodox churches of today. They say they are all striving and working for the same end. If that be true, then why not unite all the different denominations into one universal church? It cannot be done, because the religious world, being in a state of apostasy, is divided in its opinions concerning the teachings of Christ. Think you that God is the author of all the various doctrines advocated as the doctrines of Christ? Think you that he has sent these ministers of different churches to teach conflicting doctrines, such as are being taught today? Hear what Paul said, "There is one body (or church), and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Eph. 4:4, 5. Also see 1 Cor. 12:12-14. Christ never taught more than one doctrine, neither did his teachings in any way conflict, as do the doctrines that are taught today. How truly Christ has said, "Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 15:7-9.

Thus the so-called Christian world of today is unconsciously fulfilling Bible prophecy to the very letter, and yet they are drifting farther and farther from the teachings of divine wisdom. In fact if we accept the Bible as being the word of God, which is truth, then we must believe that the world is growing more wicked and will continue to do so until the coming of Christ like as it was in the days of Noah. See Luke 17: 26-37.

If the influence of the so-called Christian orthodox churches is dying, and I believe it is because they are founded on creeds, dogmas, mysticism and paganism which is a barrier to human progress, mental and spiritual growth and development.

According to modern religious teachings we will not be saved by our good character or deeds nor condemned for our bad ones, but for our acception or rejection of some theory concerning Christ.

Divine wisdom teaches: The religion which lays more stress on mere belief or acceptance of theories than it does on the development of character and the cultivation of Christian virtues is a failure, and the person who refrains from doing evil through fear of consequent punishment is a long ways from the kingdom of heaven. Rather should they refrain from evil, not from fear of the Lord, but because he loves to obey the Lord. Christ said to his disciples, "If a man love me he will keep my words." John 14:23. And his disciple John said, "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear." I John 4:18.

According to some modern religious teachings, God is a monster and a tryant, a changeable being, who in ancient times revealed himself to his children but now is silent and indifferent. Divine wisdom teaches that God is wise and good, just and merciful, the same yesterday, today, and forever. Heb. 13:8.

According to modern religious teachings the great majority of the human race will be lost. If this be true, God committed a crime when he created man, for he knew all things from the beginning and is therefore the author of sin and its consequent suffering.

According to modern religious teachings, there is no hope beyond the grave for the sinner or for those who die out of Christ. Divine wisdom teaches that death is but another phase of life, a transition from a lower to a higher plane of action, otherwise all creation would be a miserable mistake and failure; life itself would be inexpressibly sad, and death both unjust and terrible.

The signal weakness of the religious world is its intolerance born of ignorance, and what it needs is intelligent, broad minded, and progressive leaders—men who will not be bound by creeds and dogmas, "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Eph. 4:14.

None are so blind as those who will not see. We are surrounded on every side by modern Pharisees, like those in the days of Christ's mission to earth, who interrogated him after he had healed the blind man, saying, "Are we blind also?" Christ replied, "If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: hut now ye say, We see, therefore your sin remaineth." John 9:41. If they had been without power to comprehend the teachings of the Master, they would have been guiltless; but they understood, as they themselves witnessed by saying, "We see," hence they were not without sin; for, "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." In James 4:17.

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

By J. E. Vanderwood. The great problem of life is of such a nature that all are interested in it, and since the principle of economy is considered in almost every walk and avocation of life, it occurs to us that it should also be considered in life itself. The greatest economic problem is, how to get the largest returns for the smallest outlay, how to obtain the largest possible yield from the soil, how to best conserve energy and direct its expenditure in a way that will bring abundant returns. And so the question of life also becomes an important one.

By what method or means may we attain unto the most complete and perfect life, and conserve the best interests of soul and body? There are a few things we desire to observe here, viz. What is it that constitutes the real essence and value of life? The answer would be, liberty, camfort, happiness, peace, association, knowledge, intellectuality and contentment He that possesses those qualities has at least an excellent possession of life, but the problem now is how can these things be acquired, how can we attain unto that condition in life? Money may buy some parts of the things already named but it will be at the expense of the others so the law of economy would be violated in such an attempt. conditions cannot be obtained by the force of arms; they cannot be acquired by railing at those who are more fortunate than we ourselves seem to have been; we cannot acquire them by complaining and whining about the system under which we live; worry and discontentment will avail us nothing in this matter; and skepticism and doubt will only draw us farther away from the cherished hope of a peaceful life. What are we going to do in this matter?
